Obituary

CORNELIUS VANDERBILT

At a meeting of the Board of Managers of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church, held on Tuesday, September 19th, after suitable devotions, the following minute was adopted:

It was with the profoundest sorrow that the members of the Board of Managers of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society heard of the sudden death, on the morning of the 12th of September, at his home in New York City, of Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt. Although for several years he had been in feeble health, yet without any warning note the summons came at last which took him from our midst. Mr. Vanderbilt was one of the oldest lay members of the Board, and served in that capacity for nearly a quarter of a century. He was first elected a member when the Board itself was constituted, by the General Convention in Boston in 1877. At a meeting held at the Bible House early in November of that year, the membership of the Board was divided into two committees—one for domestic missions and one for foreign missions. Mr. Vanderbilt was placed upon the committee for foreign missions, and served as a member of that committee until 1885, when the present organization of the Board was adopted.

Previous to the year 1879, the trust funds of the society were held by the respective treasurers of the two committees, but in that year a Standing Committee on Trust Funds was formed, of which Mr. Vanderbilt became the secretary, and that office he continued to hold down to the day of his death. During that time, the invested funds of the society were increased tenfold, and to all the details of the business Mr. Vanderbilt gave as much and as careful attention as to his own private affairs, and the great number of details in connection with the bookkeeping of the many separate accounts have at all times received his personal supervision.

All these duties were performed by him most faithfully and conscientiously, not only without any expense to the society, but without the loss of a dollar in principal or interest. His membership in the Board was not a nominal membership, and there is probably no other member who can show a better record of faithful and prompt attendance at its regular monthly meetings. He was one of the largest contributors to the building of the Church Missions House and to the funds of the society. In all of its proceedings he took the deepest interest, and every responsibility which was placed upon him he cheerfully accepted and diligently discharged; and it is not too much to say that the loss of no one else connected with the Board would be more keenly felt or more sincerely regretted.

Resolved; That the foregoing minute be, and hereby is, adopted, as an expression of the appreciation of the Board of the many and valuable services which he rendered to it; that it be spread upon the records of this day's proceedings; that it be published in The Spirit of Missions and in the weekly Church papers, and that an engrossed copy of the same be forwarded to Mr. Vanderbilt's family.

HENRY C. POTTER,
DAVID H. GREER,
J. PIERPONT MORGAN, } Special Committee.

"The Gates of Hell Shall Not Prevail!"

BY MARTHA A. KIDDER

"The gates of hell shall not prevail" alway
Against Thy Church. O Lord, to Thee we pray,
May holy peace upon our souls
Thy Church defend.

No false and hollow peace our spirits seek;
The strong in faith must still protect the weak.
When leaders fail, to Thee, O Lord, we go,
Thy love to know.

The Sacred Scriptures men in vain assail;
The promises of God can never fail.
"Lo here is Christ! lo there!" the sinful cry;
Nor know Thee nigh!

"The just by faith" not vainly seek the Lord,
Forevermore by loving hearts adored.
When Justice seems cast down, and woes increase,
We find Thy peace!

The saints beneath Thine Altar cry: "How long!"
The right at last must triumph over wrong.
Our hearts e'en now the victors' shout may hear:
"Our Lord is near!"

The Church to Thee, O Lord, her voice shall raise;
Above the strife of earth is borne our praise.
O Victor over sin, the cross, the grave,
Thy people save!

SIX great universities have offered to confer their highest degrees upon Herbert Spencer, and several governments have tendered him decorations, but he has consistently declined all such honors. He is now seventy-nine years old, and his fame is world-wide, but he is plain Herbert Spencer.

IN the cemetery of Debrecsin, in Eastern Hungary, stands a tombstone which might well have served as a record in the House of Atreus. We give the inscription in English:

Here rest in the Lord

Joseph Moritz, sen., who died in his sixty-second year. He was shot by his son.

Frau Joseph Moritz, sen., who died in her forty-seventh year. She was shot by her daughter,

Elizabeth Moritz, who died by her own hand in her seventeenth year, after shooting her mother.

Joseph Moritz, who died in prison, aged twenty-seven. He had shot his father.
May Eternal Mercy have pity on their poor sinful souls.

This strange memorial has been erected by a local literary association, to which the last of the Moritz family left about £1,500 for this purpose.

AN Eastern paper says: "Bishop Leighton Coleman returned this morning (Sept. 19) from his annual pedestrian tour through the South. During the trip he had many interesting and amusing experiences. The Bishop on these annual trips travels incognito. He enjoyed excellent health, and covered 220 miles in eleven days. The tramp was in Virginia, and the greatest distance traveled in one day was thirty-two miles. Bishop Coleman wore a rough, dark suit, heavy shoes, and a black felt hat. Some persons thought that he was making the trip to win a wager; others that he had something to sell. At night, the Bishop stopped either at a road-side inn or house, and one night had a lively experience at a farm house. He asked for lodgings, which were granted by the farmer, but when the house was reached the farmer's wife objected; but the Bishop, with his eloquence, eventually convinced the woman that he was a proper person to whom to grant lodging, and she apologized for having first refused him. During the two Sundays in Virginia, he went into the woods, where he erected a rude altar and said the service of the Church.

THE great popularity of certain recent novels has caused discussion in various magazines as to the reasons therefor, with a view to ascertaining the requirements for a successful novel. Maurice Thompson, in The Independent, remarks:

The sound critic can decide correctly upon what, by all the canons of art and life, ought to be the reception given to a book; but what ought to be does not coincide always with what happens. The good book fails, yet not always. The bad book succeeds; but where one succeeds, hundreds that are no worse, and no better, do not. Sometimes it is impossible to discover what it is that makes a novel popular. Two or three years ago, a Southern writer had a story published in book form. It was not a success. He changed the title, and chose another publisher. A hundred thousand copies sold. Recently, a romance that had been declined out of hand, by a number of the best publishers, was accepted and printed at last, and to-day it leads all competitors for popular favor.

IT is said to have been a custom of the late Mr. Spurgeon's to send the theological students under his care into the pulpit with sealed envelopes containing texts which they were required to expound at sight, or themes upon which they were to discourse. On one occasion, a student, on opening his paper, found this subject and direction given him—"Apply the story of Zaccheus to your own circumstances and your call to the ministry." The student promptly delivered himself in the following way: "My brethren, the subject on which I have to address you to-day is a comparison between Zaccheus and myself. Well, the first thing we read about Zaccheus is that he was small in stature, and I never felt so small as I do now. In the second place, we read that he was up a tree, which is very much my position now. And, thirdly, we read that Zaccheus made haste to come down, and in this I gladly and promptly follow his example."

THE following story is told of a gold seeker in Western Australia in 1890: The man had reached the end of his resources without finding a speck of gold. There was nothing to do but to retrace his steps, as best he might, to the nearest port. The despair of that last day's fruitless work left him too weak and exhausted to carry his heavy tools back to the spot they called "camp." So he flung them down, and, as he said, "staggered" over the two or three miles of scrub-covered desert, guided by the smoke of the camp fire. Next morning, early, after a great deal of sleep and very little food, he braced himself up to go back and fetch his tools—his only possessions—which might fetch the price of a meal or two when it came to the last. He railed at his luck, at Fate, at everything, as he stumbled back that hot morning over his tracks of the day before. The way seemed twice as long, for "his heart was too heavy to carry." At last, he saw his barrow and pick standing upon the flat plain a little way off, and was wearily dragging on towards them, when he caught his toe against a stone deeply imbedded in the sand, and fell down. "I felt as if it was too hard altogether to bear. To think that I should go and nearly break my toe against the only stone in the district, and with all those miles to travel back. So I lay there, and cursed God, and wanted to die. After a bit I felt like a passionate child who kicks and breaks the thing which has hurt him, and I had to beat that stone before I could feel quiet. But it was too firm in the sand for my hands to get it up, so in my rage I set off for the pick to break up that stone if it took all my strength. At last I got it up, and here it is—solid gold, and nearly as big as a baby's head. Now, I ask you, did I deserve this?" His impression of the Divine mercy and goodness was greater even than his joy over the astounding discovery.

THE TREE OF LIFE

Plant Patience in the Garden of thy Soul!

The Roots are bitter, but the Fruits are sweet;

And when, at last, it stands a Tree complete,

Beneath its tender Shade the burning Heat

And Burden of the Day shall lose Control—

Plant Patience in the Garden of thy Soul!

—Henry Austin.

HERE are some more odd typographical errors recorded in Harper's Round Table: A foreign editor who wrote that the British lion was "shaking his mane," was edified the next morning with the announcement, on his authority, that the national animal in question was "skating in Maine." A more natural error was that which called "a member of the Legislature," a "member of the liquor-store." One of the Philadelphia morning papers, which formerly gave close attention to marine news, informed its readers on one occasion that the bark "Betsy Jane" had arrived at Honolulu "with an oil-well on board." Investigation proved that there was nothing in the report except "all well on board." An old-time inn named the "Star and Garter Hotel" was once rechristened by a printer as "the Shoe and Gaiter Hotel." A foreign despatch about the war between Russia and Turkey contained an allusion to transports convoyed by gunboats, which was turned into the novel announcement that the transports were "conveyed by goats."

"The Man with the Hoe"

THE carpers have libeled the poet, who is indeed no libeler at all. Mr. Markham does not pity Millet's hoe-man because he wields the hoe. It is not the hoe itself that he weeps over. But it is the brute of a man, of whom this creature of Millet is the type, whose fate Mr. Markham very properly bewails. Not simply the man who plants corn and digs potatoes in the fields, but who toils ceaselessly from morning till night anywhere, in farm or village, or in city street, in factory or furnace or the caverns of the earth. There is nothing ignoble in toil as the poet conceives it. But the taskmasters who grow rich on this toil, who greedily grasp the labor of these men's hands, who bask in the sunshine of the profit they make, but have no regard for the minds of their laborers, and reckon with them as creatures without soul—it is these who are scolded and scored between the lines of Mr. Markham's really fine poem.

The poet does not say this, but there is no thoughtful reader who will doubt that this is just what he means. The critics that carp at him might as well deride Mrs. Browning for her "Cry of the Children," insisting that children as a class are not all to be pitied, and that they are of all human beings the happiest. But while this general fact is conceded, the children for whom Mrs. Browning so dramatically pleaded are of all human kind most miserable—of all, unless it be the larger class of whom the hoe-man is the type; this expressionless, mindless, miserable man with the hoe, who is miserable not because he toils all day with a hoe in his hand, but because the man for whom he toils works him as he works his ox, treats him with less consideration than his dog, and gives to his horse a far tenderer care than to him.

Let the critics carp as they may, let men misunderstand as they will, this man with a hoe has rights of which the upper and middle classes are criminally careless. What he needs is not some other labor. There is no call to take him from his hoe and place in his hands a piano, a typewriter, or a ledger. But there is a loud, imperative, and divine call for the moral and mental uplift of the man with the hoe; for his purer recreation; for his intellectual stimulus; for his religious help. He is now but as a beast of the field. He does so much work for so much fodder. The fact that he has a sentient mind and an immortal spirit, makes no appeal to the rushing public. It is this down-trodden, neglected, abandoned man with a hoe for whom the poet pleads. This is the gospel that Millet by his brush, and Markham by his pen, have so ably preached.—The Herald, Reading, Pa.

Scotch Wit and Stories

THERE have been published a number of books containing specimens of Scottish wit and humor, and some of these specimens are striking and characteristic but contain very little of the fun and jollity which characterize the wit of more genial and impressive people. A hard common-sense seems to underlie them, says The Boston Herald, and they seldom excite a hearty laugh. Among the many volumes published are two by Dr. Ramsey, dean of Edinburgh, from which many of the following anecdotes are taken:

An old shoemaker, of Glasgow, was at one time sitting by the bedside of his wife who was dying. She said: "Weel, Johnny, we're gawin to part. I've been a gude wife to you, John," "O just middling, just middling, Jenny," he replied, fearing that he might commit himself. "John," she continued, "ye maun promise to bury me in the old kirkyard at Stra'ven, beside my mither, I couldna rest in peace among unco folk in the dirt and smoke of Glasgow." "Weel, weel, Jenny," said John, soothingly, "we'll just pit ye in the Gorbals first, and gin ye dinna lie quiet there, we'll try you sine in Stra'ven."

The old ill-feeling existing between England and Scotland is often shown in the Scotch anecdotes. An Englishman was once grumbling about the land o' cakes. Said he: "No man of taste would ever think of remaining any length of time in such a country as Scotland." "Tastes differ," replied a Scotchman; "I'll take ye to a place ca'd Bannockburn, no far frae Stirling, where thretty thousand o' yer countrymen ha' been for five hundred years, and they've nae thought o' leavin' yet."

A north country drover, passing through Carlisle on his return from a rather unprofitable journey, saw a notice stuck up offering a reward of £50 to any one who would act as executioner upon a noted criminal then under death sentence. The drover volunteered his services, hanged the rogue, and got the fee. The mob called him a mean, beggarly Scot who had done for money what no Englishman would do. "I'll hang ye a' at the price," replied Donald with a grin, as he counted the money in his pouch.

A young man, when coming out of church, trod accidentally on the foot of an old gentleman, and he hastened to apologize, saying: "I am very sorry, sir, I beg your pardon." "An' yue've muckle need, sir," was the only response from the old gentleman.

A man went to the house of a neighbor to get him to indorse a note for him. The neighbor refused, saying: "If I was to pit my name till't, ye wad get the siller frae the bank, and when the time came round ye wadna be reedy, and I wad hae to pay 't, sae then you and me wad quarrel; sae we mae just as weel quarrel the noo as lang's the siller's in my pouch."

The childless Duke of Athol encouraged one of his cotters whose wife had just presented him with twins, by saying: "Weel, Donald, ye ken the Almighty never sends bairns without the meat." Donald responded doubtfully: "That may be, your Grace, but whiles I think Providence makes a mistake in thae matter, and sends the bairns to ae hoose and the meat to anither."

A good dame coming up to Edinburgh saw for the first time a water-cart for sprinkling the streets. She cried out to the driver: "Man, ye're spillin' a' the water."

Another young lady who was greatly annoyed at a railway station because her box was not forthcoming, was told to have patience, when her indignant exclamation was: "I can bear any pairtings that may be ca'd for in God's providence, but I canna stan' pairting frae my claes."

An old lady sent for her medical adviser to consult with him concerning a sore throat. "Madam," said the doctor, "I used to be troubled with the same kind of a sore throat, but I allowed my beard and mustache to grow, and have not been troubled since with it." "A weel, weel, that may be sae; but ye maun prescribe some other way for me to get quit o' the sair throat, for you ken, doctor, I canna adopt that cure," replied the old lady.

Many of the most striking sayings belong to those half-witted. "Daft Will Speir" was once discovered by the Earl of Eglinton making a short cut through his grounds. "Come back," said the earl to him; "that's not the road." "Do ye ken whar I'm gaun?" asked Will. "No," replied the earl. "Weel, hoo the de' do you ken whether this be the road or not?"

One winter an old lady lay very ill. A friend was trying to encourage her by expressing the hope that she would soon be better, and in the spring enjoy some of their country spring butter. "Spring butter," exclaimed the invalid, "by that time I shall be buttering in heaven." And when at the point of death, she heard some one say, "Her face has lost its color; it grows like a sheet of paper," "Then I'm sure it maun be broon paper," said the dying woman.

Miss Johnstone was a famous eccentric character of the last century. A tremendous thunder-storm came on when she was dying. She listened to the tempest, and remarked in a quaint manner: "Ech, sirs, what a nicht to be fleelin' through the air."

During the last century, one of the great distinguishing Scotch characteristics was the rigidity with which the observance of the Sabbath was inculcated. An English artist, while making a tour in Scotland, remained in a small town over Sunday, and, to pass the time, walked out in the environs, and seeing the picturesque ruins of an old castle, asked a countryman who was passing to tell him the name of the castle. "It's no the day to be speiring sic things," was the only answer he got.

A lady who had become an Episcopalian, took to church with her one Sunday a favorite servant who was a Presbyterian of the old school. There was a full choral service, and she felt sure her companion would enjoy it. On her return home the lady asked her what she thought of the music. "Oh, it's a' varra bonny, varra bonny," was the response, "but oh, my lady, it's an awful way o' spending the Sabbath."

The obligation to keep the Sabbath holy was held to be incumbent on everything. Lady Macneil had some Dorking fowl, reported to be famous layers. Once upon a time she asked the henwife if they laid many eggs. "Indeed, my leddy," said the servant indignantly, "they lay every day, no excepting the blessed Sabbath."

A lady, on going into her kitchen one Monday morning, found a new roasting jack which had been so constructed as to go constantly without winding up, broken. She asked the cook how it happened. Jenny replied that she did it herself, for, said she: "I was nae gaing ta hae the fule thing clocking and rinning in my kitchen a' the blessed Sabbath."

The reverence for the holy day often took a form one would have hardly anticipated. An old Highlandman said to an English tourist: "They're a God-fearin' set of folks here, 'deed they are, an' I'll give ye an instance o't. Last Sabbath just as the lairk was skailin there was a drover chief frae Dumfries comin' along the road whistlin' an' lookin' as happy as if it was ta muddle o' ta week. Weel, sir, our laads is a God-fearin' set o' laads, an' they yokit upon him an' a'most killed him."

There is a story not unlike this, told of David Hume, the fat philosopher. He had fallen into a mud-hole and stuck fast. He called for assistance to a woman who was passing. She came up to him, looked at him a moment, and said: "Are na ye Hume, the atheist?" "Well, no matter if I am," said Hume, "Christian charity commands you to do good to every one." "Christian charity here, or Christian charity there, I'll do naething for ye till ye turn a Christian yerself. Ye maun repeat the Lord's Prayer and the Creed, or faith, I'll let ye wallow there as I fand ye." The skeptic, really afraid of his life, rehearsed the required formulas, and was thereupon helped out of his unpleasant situation.

Mr. Thirra, a very plain-spoken old clergyman, was greatly annoyed at the finical ways of a young man who preached for him one Sunday morning, and gave way to his annoyance in the prayer after the sermon. He prayed for the young minister as a promising laborer, but wanting much overhauling, and wound up the prayer by saying: "O Lord, please tak an awl and let the wind out o' him."

A clergyman once took to task one of his parishioners who had left him to join some other congregation. Said he: "John, I'm sure ye ken that 'a rollin' stane gathers nae moss!'" "Aye," answered John, "that's true, but ken ye tell me what guid the moss does the stane?"

The sermons were much the same week in and week out, and often had a soporific effect on the congregation, and the clergyman would sometimes publicly reprimand his flock for inattention. One minister called out: "Jeems Robinson, ye're sleepin'; I insist on your waking when God's Word is preached to ye." "Wull, sir, ye may look at your ain seat and ye'll see a sleeper for bye me," said James, pointing to the minister's pew, where the minister's wife was indulging in a nap. The husband called upon her to stand and receive the censure due to her offense, and which was administered in this way: "A body kens that when I got ye for my wife I got nae beauty; your friends ken that I got nae siller, and if I dinna get God's grace, I shall hae a puir bargain indeed."

Book Reviews and Notices

From Compte to Benjamin Kidd. The Appeal to Biology or Evolution for Human Guidance. By Robert Mackintosh, D.D., etc. New York: The Macmillan Company. Price, $1.50.

One feels assured of the author's mastery of his subject, and his fairness in dealing with it, from the start. He not only expresses himself clearly in discussing profound questions, but is also entertaining, so far as such a theme will permit. His range is a very wide one; namely, the history and criticism of sociological systems based upon biology, outlined by Compte, newly defined and emphasized by Darwinism, and stated in the most extreme form logically in Mr. Kidd's "Social Evolution." His conclusion is that "human evolution differs from evolution in the organic world." Reason is the differentiating factor.

The Elements of Sociology. A Text Book for Colleges and Schools. By Franklin Henry Giddings, M. A., Ph.D. New York: The Macmillan Company. Price, $1.10.

This book, we think, fairly meets the aim of the author, and supplies the need of the student who desires an interesting though not technical work on the subject of sociology. It is a study of the nature and laws of human society, of the forms and purposes of social organizations, of the facts and principles of social progress. The author admirably applies and illustrates his principles of stability and progress as dependent upon the likeness and unlikeness of the factors of which society is composed. Evolution continues by conflict, by difference; but community of interests, sympathy, similarity of tastes, altruistic impulse, all tend to promote harmony and stability.

Imperial Democracy. A Study of the Relation of Government by the People, Equality before the Law, and Other Tenets of Democracy, to the Demands of a Vigorous Foreign Policy and other Demands of Imperial Dominion. By David Starr Jordan, President of Leland Stanford, Jr., University. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1899.

We have set forth the title of this book in full because it explains the trend of the author's arguments, with which by this time the public is familiar. It is barely possible that the radical anti-expansionists are wasting a profusion of learned arguments just now, in their anxiety to prevent the government from keeping possession of the Philippines. It may be worse than a waste, it may be a positive injury to their darling position, for they are driving so violently in opposition to "expansion," that they may succeed (such is human nature) in solidifying public opinion in favor of a radical policy of imperialism. It is chiefly from fear of some such result that we hesitate to commend this volume unreservedly. It is interesting reading, but we find ourselves coming to a conclusion different to that which the author attains, and we know that he would not like this if he knew it. Then, besides, he is sometimes rather extravagant in his assertions, deductions, and inferences, and that habit is apt to cause an unpleasant reaction—unpleasant to the author, we mean—in the mind of the reader. After all, when the government of the United States had certain grave responsibilities thrust upon it by the results of a war which it would have gladly avoided, and is now wrestling with these problems which it did not desire to handle, it might be well to "forebear threatening" until such time as more substantial dangers to the Republic develop than are at present apparent.

The Constitutional Authority of Bishops in the Catholic Church. By the Rev. A. Theodore Wirgman, D. D., D. C. L., Vice-Provost of St. Mary's church, Port Elizabeth, South Africa. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Pp. 292. Price, $2.

This is no mere academic discussion. It is a live issue, and involves the most momentous consequences in our day. The Oxford Movement is just now in one of its acutest stages. Its trusted leaders are struggling to re-establish the principle of obedience to episcopal authority, which was so prominent a feature in the early days of that movement, but which has been repudiated by some of the Ritualists of our day. This most timely book will greatly strengthen their hands, and will prove of permanent value to the Church. In it Dr. Wirgman traces with patient care and profound learning the growth of constitutional episcopal authority in the apostolic, sub-apostolic, and conciliar ages, and proves it to be an integral and essential element in ecclesiastical polity. Its powers and limitations are clearly defined and shown to be a legitimate inheritance from the Day of Pentecost. It is shown conclusively that the modern idea of an English bishop as the autocratic persona ecclesiae, who can act independent of his clergy and without taking counsel of his laity, is feudal and mediæval rather than primitive. Thus the real place and power of the episcopate are more solidly established and newly recommended to the practical people of to-day. We thank the learned author for this substantial contribution to our theological literature.

Ethics and Revelation. By Henry S. Nash. New York: The Macmillan Company. Price, $1.50.

These lectures were delivered as the John Bohlen lectures, in Philadelphia. The general purpose is to show the relationship between religion, science, and the history of the human race. The subjects are treated under the heads of: "Ethics and Religion"; "The Spiritual Significance of the Free State"; "Comparative Religion and the Principle of Individuality." "The Church's Conception of Revelation"; "Prophecy and History"; "The Christ and the Creative Good." Mr. Nash is a very close reasoner, and many of the points he makes must be conclusive to the scientist who seeks to reconcile his researches with the Christian religion and Revelation. In the lecture on Comparative Religion, the failure of all other systems is clearly demonstrated. For example, Buddhism is shown to be pessimistic, because it buries itself in resignation to an idealistic Nirvana; Christianity is optimistic because it trains men to battle with the world. Mr. Nash is brilliant in his epigrammatic treatment of the subjects that come under his notice. He attains his highest excellence in argument in the last lecture, where his reasons for the necessity of the Incarnation of Christ are grand and unanswerable. This lecture alone is a most valuable contribution to Christian apologetics, and should be carefully studied.

Having given Mr. Nash's lectures careful perusal, and recognizing their great value, we must yet criticise some of his theories and statements. The first absolutely authentic fact of the Bible, he says, is the Exodus. Does the Rev. Henry S. Nash believe that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were mere mythical characters of folk lore stories? Why not let the Exodus go as well, and be content with the opinions of some critics who think nothing historical previous to the time of Ezra? In another passage Mr. Nash states that the Church disowns emphatically her old claims to infallibility: "The liturgies are not immutable, the creeds are not infallible, the episcopate has no lasting sacredness save such as is given it by a successful appeal to large and abiding usefulness. Abroad, Christianity is entering a mission field where it can achieve final success only by leaving behind it a considerable part of its dogmatic baggage." The decisions of the first four General Councils in matters of Faith are still declared by the whole Church to be infallible. The Creed as found in the Apostles' and Nicene forms, and accepted by the Councils and the whole Church, is still the deposit of faith given once for all. The author's remarks on the episcopate would seem to come with greater grace from a Presbyterian or a Methodist. Some of our bishops have been very lax in admitting men to the ministry who left their first love because of heresy and unbelief. Is it possible that Mr. Nash is helping to make the way into the Church still easier by breaking down all the barriers?

Thaddeus Stevens. By Samuel W. McCall. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. 1899.

Few American statesmen have been more successful, more feared, and more sincerely hated, than Thaddeus Stevens, the leader of the Republican party in the House of Representatives during the period of the Civil War and the beginning of the period of Reconstruction. He was a man of iron will, self-made in a very real sense, of great mental ability, strenuous, aggressive, forceful, unconquerable. Perhaps no member of the Federal Congress has wielded such a lasting influence in shaping the policy of the government during such a brief term of service, only seven years. Although the life, work of Stevens is narrated in a condensed manner in this volume, the character of the man is faithfully and clearly portrayed. His ruling passion was to secure the freedom and equality of all men before the law. He was a radical of the radicals. He scorned all half measures and compromises, and pushed on remorselessly to logical conclusions. He was a profound lawyer, a trenchant speaker, with a keen sense of humor and a caustic tongue. His work as a national legislator was the labor of his old age, and at a period of life when most men have retired from the scene, he made his mark as one of our most gifted statesmen. In the turbulent and trying period of the Civil War, he was a tower of strength to the Union cause, one "who never took a backward step, never even faltered, who embodied upon the floor of the House the genius of war and the genius of victory, and who exercised the power of command with undiminished authority until he died."

"TIVERTON TALES," by Alice Brown, are clever sketches of New England life, a mine that has been well worked for many years, but still yields "handsome returns." The author has smelted the ore of the old mine with remarkable skill, bringing out the humor and pathos and tragedy of the every-day life of plain, common people, with dramatic effect. [Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.50]

FROM the publishing house of Thomas Whitaker, New York, we have a copy of the new organ edition of "Darlington's" Hymnal, heavily bound in blue cloth, 10½ x 7½, superior paper, red edges, cover title gilt. Price, $1.75.

DR. McCONNELL'S "History of the American Episcopal Church," of which seven editions have already been sold, will be published in its eighth impression with twenty-five illustrations. Mr. Thomas Whitaker, the publisher promises the book early in October.

Periodicals

A new development in photography is described in Scribner's Magazine for October, by Dwight L. Elmendorf. Under the title, "Telephotography," he describes the attachment to an ordinary camera by which views are taken at a distance of twenty or thirty miles, as though the instrument were within a few hundred feet of the object. It is the telescope applied to the camera. A series of striking illustrations from the author's own pictures shows the tremendous power of this instrument. Mrs. John Drew, in the last year of her life, wrote a sketch of her stage career for her children and grandchildren. This appears in the October and November numbers, with an introduction by John Drew, her son, and an interesting series of illustrations. "Aunt Minervy Ann's Chronicles," by Joel Chandler Harris, are very clever and entertaining. This issue has one of the famous colored covers designed by Maxfield Parrish; the frontispiece is also a bit of delicate color printing.

The October number of St. Nicholas marks the end of the magazine's six-and-twentieth year, and brings to a close several serials that have been running for six months or more: "Trinity Bells," by Amelia E. Barr; Carolyn Wells' "Story of Betty," and Rupert Hughes' "Dozen from Lakerim." "The Walking Purchase" tells the truth about a deal with the Indians that did no credit to the name of Penn, by whose sons it was carried out in a way to swindle the Delawares of two hundred thousand acres of good land. "The Southern Cross" is described and diagrammed by Miss Mary Proctor, daughter of the popular astronomer. An October magazine without an article on Admiral Dewey would seem anomalous, and St. Nicholas pays due tribute to the hero of Manila through the pen of Tudor Jenks. A portrait accompanies this paper, and almost every article, story, and poem in the number is fully illustrated.

The Atlantic Monthly is always worth spending time over, and more than most other magazines, is worth binding and preserving. In the October issue valuable articles, from an educational point of view, are on "Language as Interpreter of Life," by President Benjamin Ide Wheeler, and "Recent Changes in Secondary Education," by Charles W. Eliot, President of Harvard. H. D. Sedgwick, Jr., appears to hold a brief for the Roman Church, and cherishes the delusion that there is a universal gravitation towards that body which will yet exercise a controlling influence in affairs. He overlooks the fact that the increasing tendency towards toleration and liberality in religious matters is wholly incompatible with the blind subservience to autocratic authority demanded by the Roman Church. Moreover, he clings to the old fable connected with Henry VIII., and with amusing confidence, inquires: "How shall we ask the Church that claims its authority from the Apostle Peter to humble itself before the Church which derives its independence from Henry VIII.?" "Letting in the Light" is the appropriate title given by Jacob Riis to his very interesting description of the results of free parks and playgrounds for the people of the tenement and slum districts. Miss Johnston's powerful serial story is attracting great interest. "The Flaw in our Democracy" is pointed out by J. M. Larned, and the remedies therefor.

The Westminster Review for September is not a very strong number, but some articles are interesting. The disorganization of the once powerful Liberal Party is manifest from the leading article, "The Rallying Point and the Touchstone"—i. e., Home Rule. An imaginary conversation in the nether (?) world between "Parnell and Cromwell," is rather too amusing to be taken seriously. "The Foreign Policy of Italy" is a good article. "What is the Law of the Church?" is worth reading, as showing how many practical difficulties an honest Liberal sees in the present relations between Church and State in England.

Miss Francis H. Low's "A Woman's Criticism of the Women's Congress," in The Living Age for

Sept. 23d, will be read with lively interest by conservative and "advanced" women. Lady Broome's "Colonial Memories" are bright, good-humored, and entertaining in an unusual degree. M. Jules Claretie's recent lecture on "Shakespeare and Moliere," an interesting appreciation and comparison of the two great dramatists, is published in full in The Living Age for Sept. 16th. The story of "Dame Fast and Petter Nord," now running as a serial, gives American readers their first opportunity to become acquainted with the brilliant Swedish writer, Selma Lagerlof, as a writer of short stories.

Opinions of the Press

The Church Times

NOT ROMEWARD.—Dr. Sanday's pamphlet, entitled, "The Catholic Movement and the Archbishops' Decision," bids fair to produce a sensation. It would be impossible to label the writer a Ritualist, and for that reason his opinion, as that of a person detached from the conflict between High and Low ideals, possesses a special weight. We cannot but express our thanks to Dr. Sanday for confirming in so striking and convincing a manner our statement of our position. That statement, when made by ourselves, has always been received with the suspicion of Jesuitry which is ever lurking in the Protestant mind. When put forth by a writer to whom no such suspicion can possibly attach, it may conceivably command the assent of the more reasonable section of English thought. A fortnight ago we quoted the reluctant admission of the Romanist Bishop in Shrewsbury, that the Catholic movement in the Church of England is not in the Romeward direction. Dr. Sanday, approaching the question from an opposite point of view, likewise finds in the history of the last sixty years grounds for the same conclusion. Our object, as he clearly perceives, has been to Catholicize, not to Romanize, the Anglican Communion. That the endeavor is an honest one, should be evident to any thoughtful Churchman who troubles himself to understand the meaning of that phrase in the Creed, so often upon his lips, "the Holy Catholic Church."

The Evangelist (Presbyterian)

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.—Of the duty of every Christian to extend as far as possible the sphere and influence of the Sunday school, there can be no doubt. Even those parents who prefer to keep the religious instruction of their children under their own supervision, recognize that for the majority of children the Sunday school is a religious necessity. In fact, it is precisely this class of parents who, appreciating most deeply the sacredness of the religious rights and needs of children, should be most forward to make sure that those children whose parents cannot, or will not, care for these needs and rights, find a substitute for this care in the Sunday school. There is, in our opinion, considerable reason to doubt whether the twentieth-century movement is the best possible way of meeting the emergencies of the present time, described by Dr. Worden as "a time when the great adversary is sweeping thousands and tens of thousands of young people out of the Sabbath school, alluring them by specious arguments and devices." If the attendance in our schools is decreasing, it may be quite as much in order to inquire what is amiss with the schools, how they may be made better to meet the actual conditions, as to attribute the deficit to the great adversary.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.—Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy, the high priestess of the Christian Scientist superstition, has a hard time of it to appear consistent. While teaching that the body is nothing, and that all bodily ills are foolish imaginations, she yet goes secretly to a physician and submits to medical treatment! While professing to cure these ills by faith, she yet finds the need of something beyond faith—means! By teaching her disciples that they are perfectly free to commit suicide she has reached the topmost peak of her madness, and after her poor, deluded hosts shall have tasted a little more of her superstition, Mrs. Eddy with her system of hallucinations, so utterly anti-Christian and anti-scientific, will tumble into the abyss together—never to be heard of more. It is astonishing and humiliating to think that in a country which boasts of so much enlightenment, the pernicious nonsense she has palmed off on credulous people could be taken seriously by anybody, even for an hour.

Rocky Mountain Christian Advocate

THE MORMON RELIGION.—The vitality of the Mormon religion is of concern not only to the people of Utah, but also to the Christian Church everywhere, and to those who believe in the beneficent influence of the teachings of Christianity. For this strange faith is not held in quietness. It is active and aggressive. Its missionaries are swarming through the East and the South and across the seas to spread its influence and to gain converts. It is a fact that adherents are being gained to Mormonism from the Southern States, from portions of Europe, Scandinavia and rural England in particular, and from certain portions of the Eastern States; and new settlements of these converts are continually being made in Utah, Nevada, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, and other inter-mountain and Western States. Because this is the central point of all this activity, we believe that there is no region in the United States where there is such vital need for earnest, true, aggressive Christianity, as right here in Utah.

The Household

An Allegory

BY SARAH L. HUNTER

Beneath blue skies, in life's bright, early hours,
With heart on simple joys and pastimes bent,
There played a child among the birds and flowers,
Beside the softly flowing Water of Content.
But pausing oft, or resting silently,
He heard a sound far down the quiet river.
He dimly knew 'twas from life's throbbing sea,
To which the river must flow down forever.

He longed with wonder for the unseen ocean,
And setting forth, the Pilot Time his guide, Past Youth's bright shores he sailed with sprightly motion

Where Life's gay blooms grew by the water's side;
And craving for his brow a garland fair,
Plucked flowers of art and wit from sources wise,
And twined among them, sweetly blossoming there,
One flower of Love, whose fragrance never dies.

Within, his heart leaped high. The pilot, Time,
Toward manhood and the river's end still bore him,
And then—how thrilled he at the sight sublime!
Life's ocean of Experience lay before him!
He paused upon the ocean's brink and gazed,
The flowers of life still fresh upon his brow,
And felt, o'er that far stretch, the God he praised
Would help him venture forth, and teach him how.

While yet he looked, before the sun was high,
A storm arose, with fury beyond measure,
And dashed ashore a hapless youth to die,
Who forth had ventured in a craft of pleasure.
Oh, quickly to the rescue sprang the man—
Oh, long and hard to save the life beside him
He strove, and when its slow return began,
What joy he felt to some safe place to guide him!

Oh, many were the storms that raged about,
Oh, many were the victims cast before him—
What terrors in the thought of venturing out,
What pity for the suffering came o'er him!
As years went on, the man, though brave and strong,
Scarce gave a thought to voyaging on the ocean,
But lent his power to save some from the throng
Of venturers shipwrecked in the fierce commotion.

His life of helpfulness, his willing hand,
His heart of love and sympathy and truth,
Won him the best his soul could e'er demand,
Nor mourned he the ambitions of his youth.
And at the last, when life and work were done,
Each flower that crowned him was a noble action,
And sweeter than content had been alone,
Were conscience clear, and duty's satisfaction.

"The Way of the Saints"

BY F. EDITH REEVE

IT was the summer of 1850, early summer in Wisconsin. The newly wakened gladness of spring was in the air, but spring had passed her prime, and a misty haze of heat had settled over everything. Only in the depths of the green forests it was cool, and by the shores of the lakes; the lakes for which Wisconsin is so justly famous. Here, pink, white, and violet wild flowers clustered, and one crushed a world of sweetness at every step. The forest was like a cathedral, dark, with mystical shadows and faint, sweet perfumes, and a solemn atmosphere of worship.

So thought Cyril Armstrong, as he stood at the edge of the forest looking at the lakes that lay before him; two small lakes, twin lakes, called now by some euphonious Indian name, but unnamed then. They glittered in the early morning light like two clear emeralds, green as the grass that grew down to their very brinks, or as the woods that stretched for miles around them.
He was a young man, this Cyril Armstrong, and all on fire with religious enthusiasm;
one of the first apostles that the East sent to the Western wilderness during that great missionary movement of the 50's and 60's.
Young, enthusiastic, intensely spiritual, somewhat of an ascetic perhaps, this world of forest and lake, of bright sunshine, cool breezes, and songs of birds spoke to him with a thousand voices that made joyous and glad his toilsome pilgrimage.

Toilsome it was, this care of souls, and not without danger. On his long walks from village to village, from settlement to settlement, from house to house, his way lay through forests where lurked the white man's bitterest enemy, the Indian. Sometimes in the deep twilight Cyril would fancy that a shadow dogged his footsteps; the snapping of a twig would make his heart throb with a sick fear; the untimely call of a bird would fill him with unspeakable terror.
Brave men are not always those who scoff at death. Cyril did his work with a loyal steadfastness.

To visit each lonely settlement and household, this was his work. To carry comfort to the sick, and the Holy Sacrament to the dying; to bury the dead; to baptize and prepare for Confirmation the children born and brought up in the wilderness; to admonish and preach to the men and women grown careless and indifferent from their long separation from all religious advantages—not an ignoble work. Cyril was a young apostle, but his influence over the scattered sheep that he visited in the wilderness was almost marvelous. In his black cassock, with his thin, eager face shining with religious fervor, he might have been indeed one of the old-time followers of the Christ. In the open air, under the primeval trees, he would gather his congregations around him—sturdy old pioneers, bent and gnarled from their long contest with the soil; eager young fellows, splendid specimens of manhood, strong, sometimes brutal and untamed, but with the first dawn of spiritual awakening in their faces; rosy-cheeked young girls and toddling children. Silent and awed and strangely stirred, they would cluster around him; he could only sow the seed and leave it to be choked by the tares and thorns, or to take root and flourish in the good soil.

His own rule of life was simple. While with his people he was of his people; he shared their good cheer or their poverty, and gave in return the best that his heart knew. But he never stayed long in one place. There was too much ground to go over, and too few to go over it in those early days. But wherever he was, whether in log cabin or on his lonely tramp, there was always one rule observed: by the rising and the setting sun he read the Psalms for the day, and repeated the beautiful prayers that belong to the Catholic Church. Sometimes he did this with his hand on his rifle, lest the shadows that gathered around him should prove to be lurking forms.

Perhaps Cyril was thinking of his strange life as he stood that morning at the edge of the forest looking across the twin lakes, the lakes on whose shores to-day a stately seminary stands. More likely he was allowing the mystical solemnity of the wooded aisles to fill his soul with unconscious worship.
He was utterly alone in the wilderness, alone in a world of silence; a tall, blackrobed figure, with all the vigor of Western life, and all the refinement of Eastern culture shining through his spirituality. Such a man as in the prime of his life he must surely be, could change the world; not the world of business and pleasures, of war and bloodshed, but the loftier worlds of ideas and ideals. Instead—

There was no cry to break the stillness.
By the side of the peaceful lakes, where the shouts of strong, young life ring to-day, the enmity between the two races, the red and the white, found a silent consummation. Call it what you will; martyrdom or a need-less sacrifice.

He was found by a sturdy woodsman, left as the Indian always leaves his victim. Lov-ing friends claimed him, and laid him to rest in an Eastern God's acre, far from the field of his labors. But on the spot where he fell there stands to-day a wooden cross, on which some young man whose heart has been thrilled and saddened by the simple tale, has carved the words:

"Christ! I am Christ's and let that name suffice you,
Yea, for me, too, it greatly hath sufficed;
Lo! with no winning words I would entice you,
I had no master and no friend but Christ."

A Norse Peasant Wedding

THE Norse peasant wedding is by far the grandest affair of its kind in the world. Until recently it used to last from three to five days, but it has of late years been re-duced to two or three. When we consider that here the majority of the inhabitants of a neighborhood are thrown together for festivity and merry-making for several days in succession, perhaps several times a year, we can understand the influence of this cele-bration on the people. Perhaps nothing has tended so much as this to develop, or pre-serve, rather, the democratic spirit of the Norsemen. For, as is well known, the Norse is the most democratic nation of to-day. They are the only people among the Euro-pean nations, besides the Swiss, that have abolished nobility. Still many of the Norse peasants can trace a direct line of ancestors back a thousand years, back to the great earls of saga times.

The Norse wedding celebrations are the most democratic social gatherings in the world, as no class distinctions of any kind are here observed. Each farm has an im-aginary line drawn around it. The district inside of the line is called a grend, allied to grendse—boundary line. Everybody resid-ing within the grend is invited, and it would be considered a serious breach of etiquette not to attend. Of course, the houses of the neighborhood are not deserted; enough peo-ple remain at home to do the chores and take care of the children. Besides the peo-ple of the grend, many from outside the grend are invited, such as relatives and special friends of the bride and groom. In this way the wedding guests often number several hundred, although about a hundred is the number of guests at an average wed-ding.

These weddings are very costly, but they are profitable to the groom and bride, as the guests always pay for their entertainment, not in worthless presents, but in good, hard money. Generally the bride and groom give the wedding, and it is celebrated at their future home. But often the bride's parents defray the expenses, and then their home is the scene of the festivities.

That it may be understood how so many people can be accommodated for days in suc-cession at the home of a Norse farmer, it may be expedient to describe one of these. The home of a Norse farmer is a little village in itself. There may be as many as twenty houses in the cluster. The principal build-ing contains the daily, or sitting-room, which is generally a very large hall, from twenty to thirty feet square, with no up-stairs to it, so that the rafters can be seen. At one end of this building are a bedroom and a hall-way. Near this is the stabbur, or storehouse, a story and a half high. Then there is the so-called parlor building, generally two and a half stories high. Another build-ing is for the use of the old folks, after they have given over the farm to their oldest son. Near the sitting-room building is also the firehouse, or summer kitchen, often quite a large building. It might be added here that during the last thirty years a gradual change has taken place, as many have torn all these houses down and rebuilt them un-der one roof, so that the tourist in Norway of to-day will find the valleys and flats on both sides of the fjords studded with magnificent mansions. Besides the buildings mentioned above there are, of course, a multitude of other buildings necessary on a farm. The last Norse statistics show that the total value of the buildings in the country, outside of the cities, is greater than the total value of the land under cultivation. During the wed-ding festivities, the first story of the parlor building is used for a dancing-hall, and the large sitting-room is used for a dining-hall. From two to five tables, reaching from one end of the room to the other, are placed in here, and they are always, from the first to the last day, loaded with all kinds of cold victuals, besides bottles of brandy and wine, and large mugs of beer, so that one can at any time sit down and eat, if he be hungry.

Before a couple can be married their in-tention must be announced three successive Sundays in church from the pulpit by the pastor of the parish, who adds that "if any-body has any objections to this marriage he shall make them known in time, or later keep his peace."

The invitations are not made in writing, but the bride and groom call at the different houses of the grend, or the one who is to act as the governor of the feast, literally kitchen master, is sent round to do the inviting. This kitchen master has charge of the whole celebration. He is generally a man of great experience in his line, having for years been governor of all the weddings of the parish. He arrives about a week before the first day of the wedding, and immediately takes charge of the cellar, the storehouse, and the kitchen. He figures out how much will be needed of everything, sends the bridegroom to the city to purchase, while he himself

"From the lowest soldier to the highest officer, from the servant to the master, there is not a character in any of Captain King's novels that is not wholly in keeping with ex-pressed sentiments. There is not a movement made on the field, not a break from the ranks, not an offence against the military code of dis-cipline, and hardly a heart-beat that escapes his watchfulness."—Boston Herald.

The guests arrive on the wedding day about 10 o'clock, except those who live a long distance off, who come the evening before. As the guests arrive the governor of the feast receives them, drinking bowl in hand, and bids them welcome in behalf of the bride and bridegroom, and conducts them into the dining-hall, where they all remain, eating and drinking until it is time to start for church.

Meanwhile the bride is being dressed by her mother, aided by the bridesmaids, for the ceremony. The dress of a Norse bride is very beautiful and picturesque. The skirt is of blood-red cashmere, the vest is dark green with black interwoven roses, while the sleeves are generally snowy white. The hair is left flowing down over the head and shoulders. On her head she wears a large gilded silver crown, and round her waist a massive silver belt, while on her breast she has several large silver brooches.

It is an unwritten law among the Norse peasants that this crown can be worn only by a virgin. There are two or three of these crowns and belts in every parish, owned by some of the wealthier farmers, and they are borrowed by the brides for the occasion.

About half-past 11 o'clock the governor of the feast summons the drummer, who beats his drum as a signal that now the bride and groom are ready to start for the church. In the Hardanger fjord, where the most typical Norse peasant weddings are found, the church is mostly reached by water. They therefore proceed down to the sea and embark in several boats. The largest of these is used for the bridal boat. High up in the prow the fiddler takes his station. Next to him sits the drummer and several men with large pistols. Then come the eight oarsmen. In the stern sit the steersman, the bride, and bridegroom, their parents, and other near relatives beside the governor of the feast, and some special friends of families of the contracting parties. The bridal boat generally takes the lead, and the others follow closely after, but sometimes one or two boats proceed immediately ahead of the bridal boat. As they proceed across the fjord the fiddler plays his violin, while those who have pistols fire at regular intervals, and once in a while the drummer beats his drum. At the landing near the church the bridal party is met by the pastor. Thence they march to the church, the governor of the feast heading the procession; he is followed by the drummer, the fiddler playing his violin, and the pastor. Next come the bride and groom, followed by their nearest relatives, and then the rest of the party. At the entrance of the church the drummer and the fiddler remain, one on each side of the door, the drummer beating his drum, the fiddler playing, while the rest enter.

After the ceremony, which lasts about three-quarters of an hour, the bridal party repair to some place near the landing, where refreshments are taken, and then the return trip across the fjord is made in about the same manner as the trip to the church.

These bridal trips on the beautiful fjords of Western Norway in early summer when the fruit trees in the many orchards along the fjords are in full bloom, when the mountain sides are green while their tops are yet covered with snow, and the many streams look like so many silver threads connecting the peaks with the fjord below, and when the air is pregnant with the sweet odor from the blooming orchards, and with the music from the millions of ringing birds, are simply magnificent. A stranger to the country on seeing one would think himself suddenly transplanted to fairyland.

After having arrived at the place of the wedding all assemble in the dining hall. Here the guests are seated at the tables, not according to the wealth or rank of each, but according to age. The bride and bridegroom sit at the end of one of the tables along one side of the hall. Near them are their parents. The other seats around this table are occupied by the older guests. Around the table near the wall, opposite this, the young people are seated, and at the tables between these are the middle-aged folks. This rule is generally followed at the first meal, but only to some extent later. Some of the old folks who want to be young again find some place at the young people's table, while some of the younger get in between the old folks. When everybody is seated the master of the feast, standing in the middle of the floor, calls for attention. When all are quiet he makes a speech, in which he congratulates the bride and bridegroom, and bids all welcome. Next he asks the grace, and sings a verse suited for the occasion. When this is done he bids all help themselves.

This meal lasts about two hours. On the following days there are four regular warm meals a day, at 8 a. m., 12 noon, and at 4 and 8 p. m. In fact, one may say there is only one continuous meal, lasting from the time the party comes back from church till the end of the last day of the wedding, as the tables are always loaded with all kinds of eatables, and there are always some sitting at the tables eating and drinking until the last.

As soon as the first regular meal is over, the dancing commences in the dancing hall, and from now on dancing ceases but a few times until the end of the celebration. The Norse national dance, called the spring dance, is the principal one, although the waltz, the schottische, and the polka are also favorites. No square dance has yet invaded the Norse fjords and valleys, nor do I think they ever will, as the Norse peasants would consider them too mechanical, and, furthermore, they would not like, nor even tolerate the noise connected with the "calling off."

Often the dancing is opened by the bride and bridegroom, or, almost as often, by the bride and her father-in-law. After that the bride remains in the dancing hall for a couple of hours, and, during this time, she has very little rest, as many are they who like to dance with the bride in her queenly attire, although much gallantry is here displayed. Among the Norse peasants everybody, young and old, dances. It is a common occurrence at the weddings to see three generations, grandfather, son, and grandson on the dancing floor at the same time, the first two with their wives, the last with his best girl.

THE question of precedence of guests at the White House is settled by the Bill establishing the succession to the presidency. The order of precedence as based on this Bill is as follows:

1. The President of the United States.
 2. The Vice-President of the United States.
 3. The Ambassadors of foreign governments in the order of their formal recognition by the government of the United States.
- NOTE.—At functions given by officials of foreign governments at the Capital, the Secretary of State takes precedence of Ambassadors, including the Dean of the Diplomatic Corps.
4. The Secretary of State.
 5. Envoys Extraordinary, Ministers Plenipotentiary, and Charges d' Affairs.
 6. The Secretary of the Treasury.
 7. The Secretary of War.
 8. The Attorney-General.
 9. The Postmaster-General.
 10. The Secretary of the Navy.
 11. The Secretary of the Interior.
 12. The Secretary of Agriculture.
 13. The Chief Justice of the United States.
 14. The Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States in the order of their appointment.
 15. Governors in order of admission of States into the Union.
 16. The Senators of the United States in order of their election.
 17. The Speaker of the House of Representatives.
 18. The Major-General commanding the Army.
 19. The Admiral of the Navy.
 20. The Representatives in Congress.
 21. Assistant Secretaries of Executive Departments in the same order as heads of Departments.

The order of precedence for the women of the official circle is the same as that accorded to their husbands. In case of a bachelor or widower, the lady presiding over his household is, by courtesy, given the same precedence his wife would enjoy.—The Saturday Evening Post.

Greater Than Niagara

REFERRING to the Gersoppa Falls on the Sharavatti River in South Kanara, Sir William Hunter says: "These falls surpass any other waterfall in India, and, in the combined attributes of height, volume of water, and picturesque situation, have few rivals in the world." The river is two hundred and fifty yards wide, the clear fall is eight hundred and thirty feet. The Gersoppa Falls, in the rainy season, are incomparably finer than Niagara in every respect; the roar of the falling waters is simply terrific, the whole earth shakes, and the thunder is so great that it completely drowns the human voice. When I visited Niagara and told my American friends about Gersoppa, they replied with polite incredulity: "We never heard of Gersoppa." I replied: "Make your minds easy, the people at Gersoppa have never heard of Niagara." If Niagara could see Gersoppa, she would wrap her head in a mist.—Letter to London Spectator.

THE Rev. Dr. E. Winchester Donald, of Trinity church, Boston, places himself on record as opposed to the higher education of women. In a recent address he said: "Personally I do not like women's colleges. The moment a woman becomes erudite, as she does after the average college course she becomes a bluestocking and apart from the rest of society. And consequently she does not accomplish the good which she might otherwise. These colleges are not good for society." That was the general and sweeping indictment of the clergyman, after which he proceeded to make his remark more specific, declaring that the school at Andover, whose girl graduates he was addressing, does not spoil the young women by making them erudite and bluestockings, thus unfitting them for useful work in the world. The school at Andover, he insisted, was different from Bryn Mawr and Wellesley in this respect. "It trains a woman, and gives her a finish, without doing any harm."

GOOD COFFEE MAKER.

Experience With the Berry.

"I have gained twenty-five pounds since I left off coffee and began drinking Postum Food Coffee in its place.

"I had become very thin in flesh, and suffered tortures with heartburn, was a nervous wreck with headache practically all the time, until one dreadful day when the good doctor told me I must quit drinking coffee, as he had nothing left to try to relieve me.

"I could not drink tea, and had tried everything else, even Postum, but put it by at the first trial, because it was tasteless.

"Forced to it again, I determined to see if it could not be made palatable, and found at once that when I followed directions and boiled it long enough, that I not only liked it, but gave it to my husband for several days without his finding it out. I have the name of making splendid coffee, and we always used the best, but of late I have given Postum to guests many times in place of coffee, and have never been detected yet.

"Our four children have not drunk coffee for three years, and all have gained health and flesh since using Postum. One son, who was always sick, has been greatly benefited by its use, and as above stated, I have gained twenty-five pounds since taking up Postum. I am healthier to-day than I have been for years, and give Postum all the credit. Please do not use my name in public."

Children's Hour

The Scotch Collie

BY FRANCIS D. NEW, A. M.

THE highly intelligent and very useful animal to which the title of "collie" rightly pertains, is the Scottish sheep-dog.

Though long prized in his native country, where he is employed in the care and management of sheep, doing work that a man could not perform so well or so quickly, it is only recently that he has become popular as a pet, or house-dog, albeit "with characteristics that make him invaluable in the family life," as Mrs. Olive Thorne Miller says, "adapting himself perfectly to the family ways, requiring little care in winter or summer, safe in all places and on all occasions, with no inclination to worry cats or other animals, he is really the ideal dog of the household."

Among the "points" of a collie, considering him as a house-pet or companion, merely, beauty of form, color, and coat, count for much. Intelligence, of course, must not be wanting. "To be fashionable," as Mrs. Miller puts it, "he must be black with white markings"; though "Stonehenge" says that "the color is nearly black and tan with little or no white." But this celebrated authority, we may suppose, does not speak of "fashionable" dogs in the meaning of the lady quoted. As a matter of fact, where the collie serves for utility, the color is not of prime importance; intelligence, I would say, and other qualities, as speed and strength, being first considered. The color, said Dr. Mills, is "immateral, but sable and white, black and white, and black and tan are popular."

The collie possesses an elegant form, being constructed to insure fleetness and strength. His outer coat* is thick, hard, and straight. There is an abundance of hair, saving on the head and limbs; the fore-legs having but little feather or fringe, the hind ones none at all below the bend in the leg, or the hock, as it is called. Like fashionables in the days of England's Queen Elizabeth, the collie wears a ruffle around his neck. There must be no scantiness about this frill; it must be ample.

Since the collie has, as we have seen, an overcoat, it must follow, in his case, as the day the night, that he is likewise provided with an undercoat. This inner garment, so to speak, is so very thick and fur-like that it would be difficult to penetrate it. Thus is the animal protected from the cold, wind, snow, rain, and dampness of his native clime.

How tenderly and carefully nature provides for her children!

His tail, or "brush," as it is termed, is long and bushy, with a gentle curve at the end. His whole appearance is an index of his character. The eyes are bright, yet soft; the ears erect, save at the tips, where they are pendulous. The hind legs are provided with one or two dew-claws. In height, the collie varies from twenty-two to twenty-four inches.

Burns, in his poem, "The Twa Dogs," thus describes a ploughman's collie:

"He was a gash an' faithfu' tyke
As ever lap a sheugh or dike,

*Throughout this article the Rough Collie is considered, there being a variety of sheep-dog called the Smooth Collie, differing little from the first, except as to coat. The stories, however, may have reference to one or the other.

His honest, sonsie, baws'nt face
Ay gat him friends in ilka place;
His breast was white, his touzle back
Weel clad wi' coat o' glossy black;
His gowsie tall, wi' upward curl,
Hung owre his hurdies wi' a swirl."

This noble dog is in some respects of more service to the shepherd than a man. "In his own department," some one has said, he is "a perfect miracle of intelligence." His sagacity comprehends gestures, sounds, and looks. He not only gathers together scattered sheep, but separates one or more from the main body, if desired. He drives them wherever he is told, controlling them admirably, and this not so much by his movements as by his voice.

Many stories illustrating the wonderful sagacity of these dogs and their great usefulness where they are employed as shepherds' assistants, and even as shepherds, have been told. James Hogg, the Ettrick shepherd, recounts the marvelous achievement of one called Sirrah. It happened that one night that a flock of lambs, numbering seven hundred, scampered off over the hills in three directions. The shepherd and his assistant, a lad, were powerless. But turning to his dog, "Sirrah, my man," he said, "there'awa." At these words, off went the dog and was soon lost in the darkness. During the entire night, man and boy sought in vain; not a lamb did they find. At dawn they resolved to go home; but, as they were returning, they espied in a ravine Sirrah, keeping guard over a flock of lambs. Thinking that the dog had succeeded in reclaiming only a portion of them, what was their surprise and delight upon reaching the spot, to find that not one of the seven hundred was missing.

"All that I can further say," concludes the shepherd, "is I never felt so grateful to any creature below the sun as I did to my honest Sirrah that morning."

"It is certain," says Mr. G. J. Romanes, in his "Animal Intelligence," "that many of these dogs can be trusted to gather and drive sheep without supervision," as the foregoing, as well as the following, story will prove.

A dealer having bought some sheep, and not having sufficient aid to manage them, a sheep-dog was loaned for the purpose, the agreement being that after the dog had accompanied the flock for a distance of thirty miles, he was to be fed and sent back. As several days passed without the dog's return, his master began to wonder what had happened to him. He did return, however, but not alone, for he came driving before

ST. MARY'S, Knoxville, is one of the oldest institutions in the State, yet up to the times in its appointments and methods. With its superb buildings and equipment, its healthy location, its corps of experienced instructors, its more than thirty years of continuous success, it may fairly claim a place among the leading institutions for the preparatory and higher education of women. The course in music is notably advanced, being under Wm. H. Sherwood, of Chicago, Visiting Director. Daily exercise under the Sargent system of Gymnastics, and in the open air has secured splendid results in physical development. him a larger flock of sheep than he had taken away.

It afterwards was learned that the dishonest dealer, so pleased with the performance of the dog, instead of sending him back, had kept him. After several vain attempts at escape, the faithful animal succeeded in freeing himself; whereupon, going to where the sheep were, he gathered together, not only those he had brought to the place, but others as well, and drove the whole company back to his master.

Sometimes these dogs are the innocent accomplices of unscrupulous masters, as is instanced in this case of a sheep-thief. This man was in the habit of visiting flocks with his dog, and whilst pretending to negotiate honestly, he would in some way indicate to his dog the sheep he desired. That night he would send the dog back, and the wise, if not honest, animal, would separate the marked sheep from its fellows and drive it off to his master.

I may add that the man was hanged. What became of the dog does not appear. We may trust, though, that he secured some more honorable employment for his talents.

Equally intelligent and more praiseworthy was the conduct of another collie. For some reason or other, though doubtless a very good one, this dog had changed his home, taking up his abode with a farmer. On the second evening after his arrival, he accompanied his new master to look after the cattle. When the farmer reached the place where the cattle were, he found that a fence had been broken down and that his animals had become mixed with those of a neighbor. With the dog's aid the cattle were separated, and the fence was repaired. The next evening the farmer again determined to visit his stock; but the dog could not be found. Imagine the surprise and pleasure of the man when, upon reaching the field, he found that the cattle had a second time broken down the fence, and that the dog alone had succeeded in separating them and was keeping guard near the broken rails.

Such a dog was a prize, indeed. That his motive for the transfer of his services was a sufficient one, the next story will tend to show.

It appears that a gentleman being in Scotland was so pleased with the intelligence of collies, that he determined to purchase one, which he did. From Inverness the dog was taken by coach to Glasgow in a crate or box, open only at the top. A night was spent in Glasgow, thence the dog was conveyed via the Clyde to Liverpool, and from there to its destination. Three weeks later he disappeared. Though the occurrence was advertised and rewards offered for his return, the dog was not brought back. He had last been seen wandering around the wharves at Liverpool. After a time, however, a letter arrived from the old shepherd in Scotland from whom he had been bought, stating that the dog had returned to his old master and home.

Recently a collie belonging to Mrs. Thos. F. Bayard, of Wilmington, Del., wife of our late Ambassador to the Court of St. James, achieved notoriety by stopping a runaway horse. The newspaper accounts had it that the dog figured as a hero on two such occasions. As a matter of fact, this sagacious animal, as Mrs. Bayard stated in a letter to the writer, "caught a horse which had broken loose and held him by the bridle until his driver came up, but he did not stop the runaway horse with a carriage full of people," as some of the papers stated.

This noble dog must be indeed, as his mistress says, "highly intelligent and full of spirit."

Latterly, in some parts of Scotland, public trials of skill take place every year. Each dog entering the contest is given a number of sheep—at first only a few—to drive and pen within a short space of time, say ten minutes. The successful ones are then entrusted with a larger number, some of which are to be separated, and these only are to be penned. Those which accomplish their work within the specified time are the winners.

It is "Stonehenge," I believe, who remarks that "only those who have seen one or more of the public sheep-dog trials, or have privately seen these animals at their usual work, can realize the amount of intelligence displayed by them. In these trials, the slightest sign from the shepherd is understood and obeyed, and even the exact amount of driving calculated to make sheep go quietly forward to the pen without breaking away, is regulated to a nicety."

Truly the collie is "a perfect miracle of intelligence."—The Rosary Magazine.

ONE day a little son of the Rev. T. V. Gardiner was playing with some boys who had a cart, and they wanted a dog to draw it. "Papa says we must pray for what we want," said the minister's son, and he knelt down and said: "O Lord, send us a dog to draw our cart." In a little while a big one came along that frightened them, and they began to cry. A second time the boy knelt, but this time he prayed, "O Lord, we don't want a bulldog!"—Chicago Record.

A LITTLE Swedish girl, walking with her father on a starry night, was so attracted by the brilliancy of the sky, all lit up with twinkling stars from one end to the other, that she seemed to be quite lost in her thinking. Her father asked her what she was thinking of so intently. Her answer was: "I was just thinking, if the wrong side of heaven is so glorious, what must the right side be!"

A PECULIAR REMEDY

Something About the New Discovery for Curing Dyspepsia.

(From Mich. Christian Advocate)

The Rev. F. I. Bell, a highly esteemed minister residing in Weedsport, Cayuga Co., N. Y., in a recent letter writes as follows: "There has never been anything that I have taken that has relieved the Dyspepsia from which I have suffered for ten years, except the new remedy called Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. Since taking them, I have had no distress at all after eating, and again, after long years, can sleep well. Rev. F. I. Bell, Weedsport, N. Y., formerly Idalia, Col.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is a remarkable remedy, not only because it is a certain cure for all forms of indigestion, but because it seems to act as thoroughly in old chronic cases of Dyspepsia as well as in mild attacks of indigestion or biliousness. A person has dyspepsia simply because the stomach is overworked; all it wants is a harmless vegetable remedy to digest the food, and thus give it the much needed rest.

This is the secret of the success of this peculiar remedy. No matter how weak or how much disordered the digestion may be, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest the food whether the stomach works or not. New life and energy is given, not only to the stomach, but to every organ and nerve in the body.

A trial of this splendid medicine will convince the most skeptical that Dyspepsia and all stomach troubles can be cured. Send for little book on Stomach, mailed free by addressing F. A. African Railways

RAILROADS in Africa are discussed at considerable length in a monograph, entitled Commercial Africa in 1899, just prepared by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics. It shows that the railways now in operation or under actual construction are nearly 10,000 miles in extent, that about two fifths of the distance from "Cape to Cairo" has already been spanned by railway lines which are being extended from the northern and southern extremities of the continent toward the equator, where they are expected to meet early in the twentieth century. Already railroads run northwardly from Cape Colony about 1,400 miles, and southward from Cairo about 1,100 miles, thus making 2,500 miles of the Cape to Cairo railroad complete, the intermediate distance being about 3,000 miles. Mr. Rhodes whose recent visit to England and Germany in the interest of the proposed through line from the Cape to Cairo is a matter of record, and whose visit to Germany was made necessary by the fact that in order to pass from the southern chain of British territory to the northern chain, he must cross German or Belgian territory, is reported as confident that the through line will be completed by the year 1910. It may reasonably be assumed that a continuous railway line from the southern to the northern end of Africa will be in operation in the early years of the twentieth century. Toward this line, present and prospective, which is to stretch through the eastern part of the continent, lateral lines from either coast are beginning to make their way. A line has already been constructed from Natal on the southeast coast, another from Lourenco Marques, in Portuguese territory, and the gold and diamond fields, another from Beira, also in Portuguese territory, but considerably farther north, and destined to extend to Salisbury in Rhodesia, where it will form a junction with the Cape to Cairo road; still another is projected from Zanzibar to Lake Victoria Nyanza, to connect probably at Tabera with the transcontinental line; another line is under actual construction westward from Pangani just north of Zanzibar, both of these being in German East Africa; another line is being constructed northwardly from Mombasa, in British territory, toward Lake Victoria Nyanza, and is completed more than half the distance, while at the entrance to the Red Sea a road is projected westwardly into Abyssinia, and is expected to pass farther toward the west, and connect with the main line. At Suakim, fronting on the Red Sea, a road is projected to Berber, the present terminus of the line running southwardly from Cairo. On the west of Africa lines have begun to penetrate inward, a short line in the French Soudan running from the head of navigation on the Niger with the ultimate purpose of connecting navigation on these two streams. In the Congo Free State, a railway connects the Upper Congo with the Lower Congo around Livingstone Falls; in Portuguese Angola, a road extends eastwardly from Loanda, the capital, a considerable distance, and others are projected from Benqueala and Mossamedes, with the ultimate purpose of connecting with the "Cape to Cairo" road, and joining with the lines from Portuguese East Africa, which also touch that road, thus making a transcontinental line from east to west, with Portuguese territory at either terminus. Farther south on the western coast, the Germans have projected a road from Walvisch Bay to Windhoek, the capital of German Southwest Africa, and this will probably be extended eastwardly until it connects with the great transcontinental line from Cape to Cairo, which is thus to form the great nerve centre of the system, to be contributed to, and supported by, these branches connecting it with either coast. Another magnificent railway project, which was some years ago suggested by Monsieur Leroy Boileau, has been recently revived, being no less than an east and west transcontinental line through the Soudan region, connecting the Senegal and Niger countries on the west with the Nile Valley and Red Sea on the east, and penetrating a densely populated and extremely productive region, of which less is now known, perhaps, than of any other part of Africa.

The mining interests of Africa, especially the wonderful gold and diamond mines which have attracted so much attention, are the subject of a chapter in the monograph just prepared by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, on Commercial Africa in 1899. Much of the recently rapid development of Africa, especially in the southern part where the greatest rapidity of development has occurred, is due to the discovery and development of extremely valuable mineral deposits. The most valuable of these are gold and diamonds, though incidentally it may be mentioned that iron, coal, and other mineral deposits of South and Southeast Africa give promise of great value when wealth-seeking man has time to turn his attention from the gold mines to those which promise less rapid, but perhaps, equally certain profits.

That the gold and diamond mines of South Africa have been, and still are, wonderfully profitable, however, is beyond question. The Kimberley diamond mines, which are located in British territory, just outside the boundaries of the Orange Free State, and about 600 hundred miles from Cape Town, now supply 98 per cent of the diamonds of commerce, although their existence was unknown prior to 1867, and the mines have thus been in operation about 30 years. It is estimated that 350 million dollars' worth of rough diamonds, worth double that sum after cutting, have been produced from the Kimberley mines since their opening in 1868-9, and this enormous production would have been greatly increased but for the fact that the owners of the various mines in this vicinity formed an agreement by which the annual output was so limited as to meet, but not materially exceed, the annual consumption of the world's diamond markets. So plentiful is the supply and so comparatively inexpensive the work of production, that diamond digging in other parts of the world has almost ceased since the South African mines entered the field, and the result is, as stated above, that they now supply over 98 per cent of the diamonds of commerce.

Equally wonderful and equally promising are the great "Witwatersrand" gold fields of South Africa, located in the South African Republic, better known as the "Johannesburg" mines. The Dutch word "Witwatersrand" means literally "White water Range," and the strip of territory a few hundred miles long and a few miles in width, to which it was applied, was but a few years ago considered a nearly worthless ridge, useful only for the pasturage of cattle and sheep, and for even this comparatively valueless.

25,000 Trial Packages FREE!

Rheumatism Cured by a Simple Remedy that you may Try without spending a cent—Cured many cases of 30 and 40 years standing.

JOHN A. SMITH.

If you have rheumatism, write to me and I will send you free of cost a trial package of a harmless remedy which cured me and thousands of others, among them cases of over 50 years' standing. It is a grand remedy, and in order that every suffering reader may learn about it, I will gladly send them a Trial Package free, even if more than 25,000 invalids should apply. Many a distressing case of rheumatism, among them some which defied Hospital, Drugs, Electricity, and medical skill, were successfully cured. In Denham, Ind., it cured a lady who then cured 15 of her neighbors. In Prosser, Neb., it cured Mrs. C. Morrill who had been afflicted for 52 years. In Fountain City, Wis., it cured Hon. Jacob Sexauer after suffering for 33 years, notwithstanding having employed seven physicians. At 130 Oak St., Vincennes, Ind., this remedy rescued Miss Emma Callendar from a case of rheumatism which her physicians considered fatal. Rev. C. Sund, of Harrisville, Wis., testifies that this remedy cured two members of his congregation, one who had suffered 18, the other 25, years. Thousands of similar instances could be mentioned where this horrible plague has been completely cured. Write at once for a free trial package and other information, for it is an honest remedy that you can test before you part with your money. Address JOHN A. SMITH, 357 Summerfield Church Bldg., Milwaukee, Wis.

AN EVIDENCE OF PROSPERITY.

It is generally conceded by economists who study the commercial situation of the country, that the great arteries of railway travel are a sure indication of its condition. A depression in commercial lines means abandoned business trips and the cancellation of pleasure travel, while a healthy condition of affairs means business trips and an increase of passengers on pleasure bent.

A good evidence that a business revival has gone broadcast over this country is the "Lake Shore Limited," the star train of the Vanderbilt system, between New York and Chicago, which is daily comfortably filled. With a view to taking the best possible care of its patrons, the New York Central has arranged to increase the equipment of this train by placing an additional standard sleeper on the trains every day. To the regular traveler the appointments and comforts of this train are well known, but if you have never made a trip on it, you owe it to yourself to see and enjoy the advance made in comfort and luxury in modern railway travel. Remember the fare is no higher on this train, except between New York and Chicago, while the accommodations and service place this particular train conspicuously at the head of the list, when compared with other lines.—Albany Journal.

Hints to Housekeepers

COMFORTS FOR SERVANTS.—A girl has a right to expect a comfortable bedroom, warm and light. Have two beds in it if both domestics occupy one room. Very often the servants' room is a storehouse for old furniture. As human beings are governed greatly by externals, it is impossible to improve one's finer feelings and principles if one treats them as animals. Many housekeepers allow the girls to sit in the dining-room in the evening, and see that they have papers and magazines. This is not spoiling them, but makes a girl worth having respect herself and her position, and consequently her mistress.

It is customary to allow girls company one evening in the week, and it is wise not to interfere with the girls sitting up occasionally as late as eleven o'clock. When one realizes that the evening is the only time a girl has free from constant duty, it is hard to curtail that, and insist that servants should go up stairs at nine o'clock.

Teach a girl to open the front door with a pleasant though not familiar manner. Nothing makes a better impression upon a visitor than a polite and cheerful servant. Do not allow too loud talking or heavy walking around the house, slamming doors, etc. All these noises are merely bad habits, not necessary evils. A waitress should be careful of her hands, keeping the nails in order, etc., all of which is much in evidence when handing dishes to one. In a servant's former life such amenities were not dreamed of, and they must be taught by a patient, kindly mistress. If not kindly, all the patience in the world will not make a well-trained girl, but with kindness much may be accomplished with a rough diamond; but, as Mark Twain puts it, do not select "one so rough that you cannot find the diamond" when looking for a girl to train. One week will prove if a girl is willing, appreciative, quick to catch on, with a fair memory—for forgetfulness is many a housekeeper's trial—and capable of training; if not, do not attempt the task until a subject worthy of your efforts appears, and then may success crown your attempts.—Indianapolis News.

THE DAMP CLOTH SYSTEM.—Helen Campbell claims, with truth, that sweeping is far less a frequent need than is supposed. Says the authority mentioned: "Put a spoonful of ammonia in half a pail of warm water, and wipe the carpet with a cloth wrung out from this water. The dust is removed, the colors freshened, and every stray moth—a possibility everywhere in these days of furnaces—finds a sudden end. Fluff, insidious and unconquerable, forming itself in mysterious rolls under beds and in corners, is reduced to its lowest terms, sinks into almost impalpable unpleasantness before the damp cloth, instead of sailing triumphantly before the broom. The broom will still be an essential, but as a servant, not monarch, and even where one cannot afford a carpet sweeper, need never again involve the amount of hard work associated with it."

Notes of the World's Progress

NOW THAT VIOLENT ENTHUSIASM over the achievements and return of Admiral Dewey has been given full vent, attention is again turned toward the Philippines and the problems presented. No one man is more familiar with the situation, nor in better position to give good, sound advice, than Admiral Dewey. Possessing the full confidence of the people, and having proven the soundness of his judgment and his ability to do the right thing at the right time and in the right way, the administration can do no better than invite the Admiral to a quiet conference and, laying aside all formality and red tape, get to the bottom of the matter. There are several clouds to be cleared away, and Admiral Dewey can give valuable assistance in the operation. His ideas as to the fitness of General Otis, the wisdom or otherwise of the policy now being pursued, and the capabilities of the Filipinos for self-government, may be relied upon as sound, and his utterances would have a far-reaching effect upon public sentiment.

BEYOND FURNISHING PADDING TO daily papers, little else is likely to result from matter being furnished for the edification of the public, in which Admiral Dewey is boomed for the presidency. The first article of this tenor was published by a prominent yellow journal immediately after the Admiral had sailed from Gibraltar for home, and was therefore beyond reach of interviewers. The yellow journal had a virtual monopoly of the idea, and used it assiduously until the arrival in New York of the distinguished gentleman, when the latter, on hearing of what had been done, was greatly amused, and announced positively there could be nothing in it. In doing so, he remarked he was a sailor, not a politician, and had no desire for any other career.

THE TRIAL OF DEROULEDE AND his colleagues, charged with conspiracy against the Republic, is occupying the centre of the stage in France. The defence is resorting to tactics to gain time by prolonging the trial until a strong effort can be made to overthrow the government. Joseph Menard, acting for the defendants, has announced that he will call 1,900 witnesses. Under the law and established precedents, it is claimed, no limit is placed on the number that may be called. The trial thus far has not been marked by brilliancy on either side. Secret evidence has been concocted, the word of spies has been taken as conclusive, and documents have disappeared, just as in the Dreyfus case. New warrants for arrest are issued frequently, and nobody appears able to predict the outcome. French jurisprudence is so utterly unlike the American code, that proceedings would be amusing were it not for their seriousness.

WITH THE APPROACHING OPENING of the next session of Congress, there is a renewal of agitation against seating Brigham H. Roberts, of Utah. Petitions from women's clubs throughout the country are being forwarded to Washington, protesting that a Polygamist is not a fit person to have a voice in the national executive body. As a matter of fact, there is but one course of action to be taken. Roberts has been a legally elected member of Congress since March 4th, and entitled to draw salary as such. At the forthcoming session, however, the question as to the fitness of Congressman Roberts to hold his seat can be raised, and the House, by deciding against him, can declare his seat vacant. There are several precedents for such action, notably the case of George Q. Cannon. Although an effort was made to prevent, Cannon took the oath of office and assumed his seat. Subsequently he was declared unfit and unworthy to a seat in the House. The conditions under which Cannon was unseated are practically the same as exist in the case of Roberts.

THERE IS FERVENT HOPE THAT sometime in the future the "commission" preliminary work of Nicaraguan canal construction will be concluded, and matters so shaped that the project will assume substantial and definite form. The most recently appointed commission has returned home, having inspected the great canals of England and Germany. Another corps of engineers is making a survey, although by this time certain portions of the proposed routes must be a jumbled and confused mass of engineering stakes, owing to numerous surveys already made. Now another complication is likely to be caused, owing to a conflict of rival canal concessions. According to a decree of the Nicaraguan government, the concession of the Maritime Canal Company has come to an end, the Cragin-Grace syndicate being successors. The former claims that ten revolutions, and a few other obstacles, prolonged the life of their concession, and they will resort to legal measures to enforce their claim.

A YOUNG LADY OF NEW YORK CITY proposes to forge the first link of an endless chain for the purpose of raising a fund to purchase a home for Admiral Schley. Her intention is first to secure the endorsement of President McKinley, then follow the well-worn plan of sending out letters, and requesting each recipient to do likewise. Admiral Schley, the hero of Santiago, is a gallant man, and there are others. We are setting a rapid pace however that may become tiresome before complications in which our army and navy are involved are finally settled. If the plan to present Admiral Schley with a residence is successfully launched, we may expect to hear from other young ladies. There are hosts of worthy heroes who would accept with becoming modesty, any substantial token which admiring friends might offer. And they have performed deeds, which in their relative positions are equal to the achievements of Admirals Dewey and Schley.

—x—

THE DECISION OF THE PARIS TRIBUNAL in the Venezuelan boundary controversy, and the collapse of the revolution in that country, came almost simultaneously. It is a remarkable fact, and worthy of record, that the decision of the commissioners is favorable to both Great Britain and Venezuela. Those of the Republic interested in the matter who attempted to follow the proceedings, were hopelessly dismayed; and the great reading public have shown little attention, evidently considering the incident closed when the United States called the Monroe doctrine into requisition and insisted that arbitration should take the place of coercion. English utterances indicate full and complete satisfaction with the result, and Venezuelans seem equally pleased that the verdict was in their favor.

A SENTIMENT IS GROWING WHICH is not favorable to England in her controversy with the Boers, and should the greater nation proceed to annihilate the weaker, it is not unlikely that the small Republic will find champions among strong and powerful European nations. While British subjects in the Transvaal are certainly entitled to the full measure of protection, it does not necessarily follow that England, in extending such protection, is justified in enforcing suzerainty over a free and independent people without the consent of the latter. The Boers offered to arbitrate, but England holds there can be no arbitration over the question of suzerainty. The clouds hovering over English interests in South Africa are equally dense in the Soudan, where, it is reported, the Khalifa has gathered together an army numbering 12,000 followers, and is likely to cause a great deal of trouble.

FROM ALL ACCOUNTS, THIS HAS been a prosperous season in the Klondike, at least for the transportation companies, restaurant and hotel keepers. As a matter of fact, if potatoes, eggs, and other necessities could be mined, there would be as much of a scramble to locate a potato patch or hen roost, as a placer claim. A great deal of suffering and hardship has finally made the fact pretty well known that wealth is required to operate successfully in the Klondike, and the logical conclusion is that if one has wealth, why go where hardships are unavoidable? At a log-house in Dawson, dignified by the name, "Regina Hotel," the menu bears prices to which those of high-class restaurants are insignificant in comparison. Oyster stew is served at the modest price, $2, and the stew is watery, as cows and Klondike weather do not affiliate. A sirloin steak is $2.50, and pork chops are $3.25 per order. A slice of American cheese is valued at $1.

The Missionary Council

Since we published the programme in our issue of Sept. 30th (under the head of Missouri news), the following changes and additions have been made: All the services except those on Sunday, will be held in St. Peter's church, St. Louis, instead of the cathedral. The address of welcome will be given by Bishop Tuttle, and responded to by Bishop Satterlee. After noon-day prayers on Tuesday and Thursday, the 24th and 26th, the council will be addressed by the Rev. Dr. Edward Abbott, upon his observations of the China and Japan missions. Upon the subject: "How to increase the Lenten offering," the writer will be the Bishop of Oregon; speaker, the Rev. H. L. Dubring. "Missionary education"; writer, the Rev. Everett P. Smith; speaker, the Rev. Richard P. Williams. The closing address of the council will be delivered by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Talbot.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Board of Missions

Western New York Branch Annual Meeting

Was held in St. James' church, Buffalo, Sept. 27-28th. On Wednesday afternoon delegates of the Junior Branch met in the rectory, Mrs. C. H. Boynton, of Geneseo, in the chair, and heard reports read from the various parishes, and planned work for the ensuing year. The president reported the formation of several new branches. The treasurer's report showed $351.86 contributed, all of which had been expended in behalf of missions. The Woman's Auxiliary met at 3 P. M. in the parish hall, when an address to children was made by Miss Marion Taylor, on her work among the Indians in Nevada. This was followed by an exceedingly interesting lecture on missions in China, by the Rev. J. S. Littell, curate of St. Paul's parish. The lecture was illustrated by lantern slides. Mr. Littell has a brother who is a missionary in China, and much of the information contained in the lecture was gleaned from his recent letters. In the evening a well-attended missionary service was held in the church, and addresses were made by Bishop Walker, by the Rev. A. D. Gring, on educational work in Kyoto, Japan, and by the Rev. Dr. Converse. The second day of the meeting began with a celebration of the Holy Communion, the Bishop celebrant. The business session was presided over by Mrs. William L. Halsey, of Rochester. There were present 158 delegates, representing 45 parishes, besides a number of visitors, clerical and lay, from all over the diocese. The treasurer stated that the total receipts for the year were $1,553. At the afternoon session addresses were made by Miss Marion Taylor and the Rev. A. D. Gring. Pledges to the amount of $900 were made for missionary work, including scholarships in DeLancey School, Geneva; King Hall, Washington, and St. Hilda's school in China. The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: Mrs. William L. Halsey, of Rochester, president; Mrs. Charles Adsit, of Hornellsville, 1st vice-president; Mrs. F. E. Gifford, of Jamestown, 2d vice-president; Mrs. James C. Van der Bech, of Rochester, corresponding secretary; Mrs. C. A. Bragdon, of Buffalo, recording secretary; Mrs. D. S. Chamberlain, of Lyons, treasurer. The January sectional meeting will be held in St. John's church, Buffalo, and the next annual meeting will be held in Rochester.

Pittsburgh Branch

The first meeting for the season of 1899-1900, took place at the Church Rooms, Oct. 5th, and was largely attended. Arrangements were considered for the annual meeting in November; the semi-annual gathering of contributions from the mite boxes for the United Offering of 1901 was made, and a most interesting and instructive address was delivered by the Rev. H. L. Marvin, in behalf of the industrial department of St. Augustine's School, at Raleigh, N. C.

Fourth District, Central New York

On Thursday, Oct. 5th, the Auxiliary met in the church of the Good Shepherd, on the Onondaga Indian Reservation. Delegates from the greater part of the district were welcomed by the missionary, the Rev. W. D. Manross, and Mrs. Manross. The Holy Communion was celebrated by the Rev. F. N. Westcott. Lunch was served in the mission house at noon by the women of the mission. In the afternoon, after routine business, addresses were made by the Rev. Ambrose Gring, recently of the Church Mission in China, and the diocesan president, Mrs. E. L. Knickerbocker. Miss Sibyl Carter who has taught the Indian women the art of lace making, gave an interesting address upon that work.

Canada

Diocese of Ontario

The call to the position in the cathedral, Marquette, Mich., has been accepted by the Rev. Hugh S. Stirling. A purse of $50 was presented to the Rev. Mr. Lewis on his departure to take up work in the diocese of Quebec. Mr. Lewis was the incumbent at Tweed.

Electric lights are to be used in Holy Trinity church, Ottawa East, very soon. The Rev. W. J. Southam, at one time curate in St. George's church, Ottawa, has been appointed to the office of general secretary of the Y. M. C. A., Hong Kong, and goes to China at once.

When all the improvements in St. Matthew's, Quebec, are completed, it will be one of the most beautiful churches in Canada. The memorial gifts for the late Robert Hamilton will make a great change in the interior. His family are extending the chancel and rebuilding the interior, at a cost of $5,000. Archdeacon Roe, the Bishop's commissary, has removed to Richmond, Quebec, where correspondence should be addressed to him. Much regret is felt at the continued and serious illness of Principal Adams, of Bishop's College, Lennoxville. He went to England in June, when it was hoped that his health would improve, but it has not done so. Archdeacon Roe makes a strong plea for a young man to serve as missionary on the Labrador coast, "to fill the place of schoolmaster and lay-reader, unexpectedly left vacant," he says.

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

The officers of the diocesan Woman's Auxiliary and its branches held their usual monthly meeting in the Church Club rooms on Thursday, 5th, at noon.

The Clerics met on the afternoon of the 4th, at Winnetka, being entertained, to the number of 25, by the wife of the rector, the Rev. H. Grat-tan Moore, and Mrs. P. C. Wolcott, of Highland Park.

At the recent convocation of Chicago University, the Leiter prize for excellence in debate between the Graduate and Divinity Colleges, was awarded, with special mention, to McDonald D. Downan, of the Western Theological Seminary, who is lay rector in charge of the services in the Harvey mission.

The new St. Paul's church, Kankakee, is now roofed in, and there seems to be no doubt that the expectation of the rector and people, to open on Jan. 1st, will be realized.

The walls of the new St. Paul's, 50th st. and Madison av., are now some 20 ft. above ground.

The Northern Deanery

Met in St. Paul's, Savanna, on Tuesday evening, Oct. 3d. After Evening Prayer, the dean, the Rev. Dr. Fleetwood, introduced the stated speakers; the Rev. F. W. Keator's theme being "The ideal communicant"; the Rev. John Sage, "The school, the home, and the Church"; the Rev. N. H. Heerman's, "The position of the Church in the community." On Wednesday, at 7:30, the dean celebrated Holy Communion; and, after a short business meeting, the convocation adjourned, accepting the Rev. C. A. Cumming's invitation to meet next time in Trinity church, Belvidere.

The Bishop's Acts

The Bishop of Chicago visited the church of Our Saviour, the Rev. J. Herbert Edwards, rector, on the evening of the 4th, the occasion being a well-attended parish reception. On Sunday morning, he preached in St. Peter's, Lake View, in which parish he is now a resident, from the text, "Hallelujah! for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth," dwelling with an emphasis appropriate to Chicago's great anniversary and festival, upon the inroads made by the Anglo-Saxon races on the darkness of heathenism, in advancing civilization, and the spread of Christianity. In fact, the whole service to be on a strongly patriotic tinge here, as in others of our churches.

Presentation to Rev. A. L. Williams

On Thursday evening last some 500 of the parishioners assembled in Christ church, Woodlawn, to participate in the presentation, on behalf of the congregation, by Messrs. A. G. Thielton and J. W. Harrison, of a set of episcopal robes to the retiring rector, the Rev. A. L. Williams, who will officiate as such for the last time next Sunday, prior to his consecration on St. Luke's Day as Bishop-coadjutor of Nebraska. At the same time, Mrs. Coburn presented to Mrs. Williams an antique silver pin, with pearl setting, the parting gift of all the ladies of the parish. Mr. Williams replied for his wife. It may safely be said that no clergyman and his wife ever left a parish carrying with them greater esteem. A further evidence of good will is furnished in the large number of clerics and laymen who have signified their intention to accompany Bishop McLaren and the Bishop-elect to the consecration in Omaha. Mr. Williams' successor at Woodlawn is not yet chosen, but it is understood that the Rev. C. C. Tate will continue the services until the vestry elect a new rector.

Parish Receptions

On the 4th, one was tendered to the Rev. B. F. Matran in the spacious guild rooms of St. Bartholomew's, and to the Rev. Percival McIntire, in those of the church of the Redeemer. On the evening of the 5th, there was a large gathering of parishioners of the Ascension in their recently dedicated parish house, articles made by the ladies' guild being also on sale.

Reduction of Debt at St. Peter's

By paying off on the 9th, $3,000 of the $20,000 debt on St. Peter's, the vestry reduce their annual interest liability by $350, for the rate on the remaining $17,000 is lowered from six to five per cent. A portion of the $3,000 was raised by small loans, $10 and upwards, made by individual members of the congregation, and to be repaid by the Christmas offering. The rector, the Rev. Frank DuMoulin, announces courses of vigorous fall and winter work, not the least important being a strenuous effort to revive interest in the study of the Scriptures. The Rev. Dr. Hall of the Western Theological Seminary will be the instructor on the Wednesday evenings from Oct. 25th to Christmas, his subjects being, "The Old Testament in modern life," "Old Testament inspiration," "The Book of Genesis and science," "The Levitic law and the Gospel," "The prophecies of the Messiah," "The story of sin in Psalm 11," and "The time of waiting." The Junior Auxiliary have recently sent a baptismal font to St. Peter's mission, Walhalla, N. D.

Improvements at Ravenswood

On the 18th Sunday after Trinity, All Saints', Ravenswood, was re-opened with a hearty choral service, after enlargement by the addition of 100 sittings, increased room for choir in the chancel, and a more capacious sanctuary, indeed the whole interior appearance is improved in a marked degree. The Rev. C. E. Bowles who preached at the service has reason to be much encouraged by this response to his faithful ministry in All Saints' during the year or so of his charge.

St. Margaret's, Windsor Park

The Rev. Ed Roland will officiate next Sunday for the last time as priest-in-charge, having accepted the rectorship of St. Paul's, Laporte, Ind., in Bishop White's diocese, a parish having a fine church, seating about 400, with a parish house and a rectory. The Rev. L. C. Rogers who has been absent from the diocese since February, will succeed Mr. Roland at St. Margaret's. He officiated at Harvey last Sunday.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

New York Churchmen's Association

At a meeting held Oct. 2d, the Rev. Messrs. J. H. Knowles and L. H. Schwab, and the Rev. Dr. A. Ulmann, discussed the meaning of the term, "The Word of God."

All Angels' Church, New York City

The Rev. S. De Lancey Townsend, Ph.D., rector, has received a gift from Mrs. J. Van Vechten Olcott, of a brass tablet to be placed at the entrance to the choir, on the north wall of the church, for record of the honor roll of the choristers.

Church of the Transfiguration

Has just received a number of valuable gifts, including a chalice and paten from the family of the rector, the Rev. George C. Houghton, D.D., and a ciborium of his design. The altar vessels are adorned with gems which were family jewels of the Houghton family, to which were added 150 turquoises, the gift of Mrs. J. Campbell Mahin.

Memorial of Rev. John R. Lambert

At All Saints' chapel, Upper Red Hook, the Rev. R. Van Kleeck Harris, rector, a memorial tablet of enamelled brass and oak has just been unveiled in commemoration of the Rev. John R. Lambert, a former rector, who died in 1899. The rector and the Rev. W. G. W. Anthony, of St. Stephen's College, Annandale, conducted the service, a feature of which was the fine rendering of Gaul's "Holy City," by Miss Pratt, of Annandale.

Alumni of Columbia College

The annual meeting of the alumni was held on the evening of Oct. 2d, at Sherry's. There were present about 250 members. President Nicholas Fish occupied the chair, and the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Edward Mitchell, class of '61; vice-president, Julian T. Davies, class of '66; treasurer, Theodore F. Lozier; secretary, Wm. T. Lawson; standing committee, C. H. Mapes, T. L. Chrystie, R. H. Sayre, and F. P. Keppel. The report of last year's work was considered.

Marriage and Divorce

The special committee of the General Convention to draft a canon on the question of marriage and divorce, met in secret session at Trinity chapel, Oct. 4th. It is understood that the only member of the committee absent was the Rev. Dr. F. P. Davenport, of Iowa. The chairman, the Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, presided. The various sub-committees reported, and the questions involved were carefully discussed. Without taking any definite action, the committee adjourned to meet in the same place Feb. 14, 1900.

Columbia University

The first meeting of the trustees after the summer vacation was held Oct. 2d., President W. C. Schermerhorn in the chair. The treasurer of the board presented his report, the notable feature in which was the record of transfer of property to Berkeley School, in exchange for other property, as already noted in the columns of THE LIVING CHURCH. The following recent gifts to the university were reported, through Prof. F. R. Hutton: $1,000 for the purchase of equipments in the department of engineering; Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Avery, $5,000 for the endowment of the Avery Architectural Library; James Loeb, $50 for additions to the library of current literature; $10,000 from friends of the university for the purchase of new books during 1899; $500 also from friends for the support of researches in mathematics; $2,000 for the installation of the new addition to the engineering apparatus. A gift of machinery was also received from F. G. Waller. Prof. H. S. Monroe resigned, and his chair in the faculty of applied science was filled by the election of Prof. F. R. Hutton. The new scholastic year at the university began Oct. 2d, with more than 1,800 students. The opening services were held in the temporary chapel in Schermerhorn Hall, and were conducted by the chaplain, the Rev. George R. Van De Water, D.D. An address was made by President Seth Low, LL.D.

Pennsylvania

Ozi William Whitaker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

It is announced that the Rev. N. S. Thomas, the newly elected rector of the church of the Holy Apostles, Philadelphia, will enter on his duty on the 1st Sunday in Advent.

A handsome window made in London has recently been placed in the church of Our Saviour, Jenkintown, the Rev. Roberts Coles, rector, as a memorial of Mrs. Anne Cox Colton, mother of the second rector of that church, the Rev. R. Francis Colton.

Deaconesses Set Apart

On Wednesday morning, 4th inst., in Trinity church, Southwark, Philadelphia, Miss Henrietta V. Bronson, Miss Annie J. Graham, and Miss Annie H. Pew were set apart as deaconesses of this diocese by Bishop Whitaker, assisted in the office by the Rev. Horace F. Fuller who also preached the sermon. The services closed with a celebration of the Holy Communion.

Pastor Chosen for Epiphany Chapel

The Rev. G. DeWitt Dowling, deacon, and rector's assistant at Calvary church, Germantown, has accepted a call to the new Epiphany chapel, Philadelphia. The chapel, parish house, and Sunday school building are all nearing completion, and occupy the site of the church of the Atonement at 17th and Summer sts. Mr. Dowling entered upon his duties on Sunday, 8th inst.

Evangelistic Musical Services

The autumnal and winter series of special musical services at old St. Andrew's church, Philadelphia, the Rev. Dr. W. F. Paddock, rector, was begun on Sunday evening, 1st inst. These services promise to be unusually attractive; in addition to the regular quartette, there is a large chorus under the direction of Prof. Wm. M. Barnes. Some of the most prominent soloists in the country have been secured for the season.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

A meeting of the Philadelphia local assembly was held on Thursday evening, 5th inst., at the Church House, in preparation for the 14th annual convention to be held at Columbus, Ohio, during the present month. After a brief devotional service, the Rev. Dr. W. B. Bodine delivered an address on the topic, "Why the convention needs us," and was followed by G. Harry Davis, Esq., who spoke on "Why we need the convention." There was a large gathering of Brotherhood men present.

St. Elisabeth's, Philadelphia

The rector, the Rev. Wm. McGarvey, writes: "Permit me to correct a statement in your issue of Oct. 7th, with regard to the work of St. Elisabeth's church. There is no such thing as 'St. Elisabeth's mission' attached to this church. There is simply a mission house within the parochial bounds assigned by the convocation to St. Elisabeth's, where classes for instruction, preachings, and other meetings are held to further the missionary and charitable work required by the diocesan canon. At this house, there are no 'children's services,' nor 'Evensong,' nor any other office of divine service. Persons are expected to attend the church for all such services and for the sacraments."

City Rectors on Marriage and Divorce

Several Philadelphia rectors have been interviewed respecting Bishop Potter's address on the re-marriage of divorced persons, and heartily agree with the views he has taken on the subject. The Rev. G. F. Moffett, of St. Clement's, says: "I have anticipated Bishop Potter in his views on divorce. I would not re-marry a divorced person, nor can a divorced man or woman be married in my parish." The Rev. Dr. Elwood Worcester, rector of St. Stephen's, remarks: "I am entirely in sympathy with Bishop Potter's views regarding the stand that should be taken by the Church against marrying divorced persons." The Rev. F. W. Tomkins, of Holy Trinity, says: "The re-marrying of divorcees should not be recognized by the Church."

The Rev. Dr. Appleton's Farewell

On Sunday, 1st inst., the Rev. Dr. E. W. Appleton closed a rectorate of 32 years at St. Paul's church, Cheltenham, and his farewell to the congregation was extremely pathetic. In his sermon he said in part: "In choosing the text 'And preached unto him Jesus' (Acts viii: 35), I take the text of my first sermon to you, the words of which have been my doctrine through the years of my rectorship, during which 781 persons have been admitted to the Church by Holy Baptism, 610 confirmed, 319 buried, while the marriages have numbered 127." When Dr. Appleton assumed charge of the parish in 1867, there were but 75 persons enrolled as communicants; there are now 266; and the church buildings have been greatly enlarged and beautified. The parish is now in charge of the Rev. J. T. Cole, and the Rev. Dr. Appleton is rector emeritus.

Southern Virginia

Alfred M. Randolph, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Emmanuel Church, Staunton

An unusually large concourse of people gathered on Sunday morning, Sept. 24th, to witness the consecration of the above-named church, an event long looked for by the Church people of that city. It was expected that the Bishop of the diocese would officiate, but illness prevented, and Bishop Gibson, of Virginia, acted in his stead. The rest of the service was conducted by the rector, the Rev. R. C. Jett, assisted by the Rev. Messrs. M. Q. Hullihen, J. C. Wheat, and J. R. Ellis. The consecration sermon was preached by the Rev. John J. Lloyd, D.D. The newly consecrated church is a beautiful piece of ecclesiastical architecture, and is certainly one of the prettiest churches in the Shenandoah Valley. It is built of brick with stone trimmings, and its erection reflects the highest credit on the parish, which has reached such a large measure of prosperity.

Long Island

Abram N. Littlejohn, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The South Side Clericus has resumed its monthly meetings, the first being held at the rectory, Bay Shore. The Rev. Wm. Wiley was essayist.

Farewell to Rev. Dr. H. L. Gilbert

A farewell was tendered by the Young Men's Club, of St. Ann's church on the Heights, Brooklyn, to the Rev. Dr. Henry L. Gilbert, assistant minister, who has accepted a call to St. James' church, Caldwell, Lake George, entering on his work there on Oct. 8th. Geo. Perrin gave selections on the phonograph, after which the rector, the Rev. Dr. Reese F. Alsop, presented to Dr. Gilbert, on behalf of the Young Men's Club, a silk umbrella with a solid silver handle, having his initials engraved upon it. Dr. Gilbert happily responded; spoke of the Christian ministry as a great calling, and particularly emphasized Christian manliness. Robert Ly.

man sang "Calvary," and then the Rev. Dr. R. Marshall Harrison made a speech full of witticisms and good stories, saying that the gift of an umbrella was apropos, as it indicated that Dr. Gilbert would not be a dry preacher. A number of young men from the Trinity Club, of the church of the Holy Trinity, headed by the Rev. D. McConnell Steele, were present. Refreshments were served.

Dinner of the Trinity Club, of Brooklyn

Took place on the evening of Sept. 23d, in the parish house of the church of the Holy Trinity, and was a pleasant event. After dinner, addresses were made by the guests of honor, the Rev. S. D. McConnell, rector of the parish; J. Warren Green, of the vestry; E. W. Marcord, A. B. Davidson, and the Rev. David McC. Steele, and by Corporal A. E. Powers, a member of Troop C. of the Rough Riders. H. W. Mercer gave two recitations; Mr. Namman played a zither solo, and Dr. M. C. Hankinson rendered several vocal solos. The rooms on the third floor of the parish house, which are occupied by the club, were tastefully decorated with American flags and colored incandescent lamps.

Dr. Haskins' Anniversary

A special service of thanksgiving will be held Oct. 15th, in St. Mark's church, at which time the Rev. Dr. Samuel M. Haskins will have completed his 60 years of service in the parish, the day falling on the same date of the month on which he began his labors in 1839. The sermon will be delivered by the Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, of Trinity church, Manhattan.

Improvements in Brooklyn Churches

A number of the churches which have been closed for repairs during the summer, are now open for regular services. The church of the Incarnation, the Rev. Dr. J. G. Bacchus, rector, has been renovated and redecorated. Handsome electric and gas fixtures have been introduced. The parish house has been tinted and otherwise improved. Extensive improvements have been made in St. Luke's church, the Rev. Dr. C. H. Swentzel, rector; at Christ church, the Rev. A. B. Kinsolving, rector, and at Grace church on the Heights, the Rev. Frederick Burgess, rector. Trinity parish, the Rev. S. D. McConnell, rector, has been the recipient of a new concert piano for the lecture room, the gift of Mr. Geo. F. Peabody. The Hall vacation school of this parish held a successful session the past summer, closing Aug. 19th. The average attendance was larger than last year. The school was divided into classes, and basket weaving, clay modeling, chair caning, color work, cooking, kitchen gardening, sewing, games, and kindergarten were taught.

Memorial Service for Mr. Hogan

In St. Peter's church, Brooklyn, the Rev. Dr. Lindsay Parker, rector, a memorial service for the late Mr. Timothy Hogan, for many years a vestryman of St. Peter's, was held on Sunday, Sept. 25th. The address was by the rector, in accordance with the wishes of many friends. In the afternoon of the same day, the Sunday school rally was held. The address was delivered by the Rev. Dr. James M. Farrar, pastor, of the First Reformed Church. In the evening, choral Evensong was rendered. The Rev. Ralph B. Cooke, of the Church of Ireland, was the preacher.

Milwaukee

Isaac Lea Nicholson, D.D., Bishop

Racine College

On the 14th of September the Grammar School of Racine College began its 47th year, with an enrollment of 67 boys. Churchmen throughout the North-west will be gratified at this successful opening. Mr. Robinson has entered upon the duties of the wardenship with enthusiasm. As he still retains the position of headmaster, his relations with the boys are as close as in former years. All of the teaching is under his personal supervision. With this year's marked increase in numbers, Racine looks confidently forward to a successful future.

Ohio

Wm. Andrew Leonard, D.D., Bishop

Christ church, Huron, one of the oldest parishes, has lately made great improvements in the church.

The Rev. Y. P. Morgan, of Christ church, Dayton, formerly dean of Trinity cathedral, Cleveland, has been dangerously ill at his home in Dayton for several weeks. He was about to remove to Cincinnati to become dean of the cathedral there. Prayers for his recovery have been offered daily in the cathedral services in Cleveland, where he is greatly beloved.

The Northwestern Convocation

Held its autumnal session in Christ church, Huron, Sept. 26 and 27th. After opening service, the Rev. W. C. Clapp gave a lantern talk on Sunday school use of the stereopticon. On Wednesday there was Holy Communion, with a sermon by the Rev. R. Heber Hoskin, ably followed by an address by the Rev. Lyman P. McDonald, on "The qualifications of candidates for Confirmation." Nearly every one of the clergy shared in the discussion, which took a wide range. The symposium was closed by further remarks from the Bishop. After the bountiful repast at noon, served by the ladies in the parish house, the Bishop eulogized the late Mrs. McClure who had given the parish house to the Church. At the afternoon business meeting, reports were given of the various missions. Bryan is doing fairly well, having Sunday school regularly, and service twice a month, from the Toledo clergy. Catawba Island is served by the Rev. R. C. Johnson, of Port Clinton; seven have been confirmed, and there are services every Sunday in summer, and twice a month in winter. Clyde will now be served by a Mr. W. A. Grier, from Bexley Hall. Kenton, the Rev. H. William Fortescue Cole in charge, reports several adult Baptisms, daily services, weekly Communion, and new work at Marysville. There 16 communicants have been discovered and organized, and services are provided occasionally by Mr. Cole. Milan has services from the Rev. Ernest V. Shayler, of Sandusky; the attendance at service is encouraging. Napoleon has had services all summer, by Mr. Frank James, a Bexley Hall student. These reports were supplemented by a most interesting address from the Bishop. He told of Sidney where a lot of land admirably located, had been deeded to the Church years ago, and forgotten. The Bishop casually found the deed among Bishop Bedell's old papers, and at once sent the archdeacon to Sidney. There he found a squatter who had for years enjoyed the property without rent, but who gave it up with the buildings he had placed upon it. The Church took possession. Meanwhile, one young married woman from Galion, trained a choir and had the singers duly vested. Services by the Rev. J. W. Thompson, from Bellefontaine, were furnished in a public hall. Afterwards a comely meeting house was secured and rendered church-like, where now there is a large attendance. At the first Confirmation but one candidate appeared, the husband of the woman who trained the choir; then 15; after that, 12. The mission is already nearly self-supporting. Mr. T. R. Hazzard is in charge. Mr. H. C. Johnson, in charge of St. Thomas' church, Port Clinton, reports two missionary collections, 96 communicants, the debt paid off a property worth $6,000, and preparations to become a parish next spring. Due credit was given for the grand work done there by the Rev. T. A. Barkdull in starting this work not five years ago. The Bishop explained the proposed changes in convocation. After Jan. 1, 1900, there will be three. The Cleveland convocation will be all of the diocese east of a line drawn straight south, and starting just west of Cleveland. The Sandusky convocation will be all west of this line as far as a parallel line starting west of Sandusky, and the Toledo convocation is to be also west of that. Each one is to have 16 counties. The Rev. H. C. Johnson gave a vigorous address on the duties of the laity to their home church. The Rev. H. Wm. Fortescue Cole read an exhaustive treatise on foreign missions, and the Rev. E. S. Bark-dull gave an entertaining talk on his late trip to Europe with the purse so handsomely made up for him by the rector and people of Trinity church, Toledo. In the evening there were earnest missionary prayers, rousing missionary hymns, a full house, and able addresses. The Rev. A. A. Abbott, archdeacon, discoursed on diocesan missions, the Rev. T. N. Barkdull, on domestic and foreign, and the Rev. Alsop Leflingwell, on the need of missionary zeal and the cause of the present lack.

Washington

Henry Yates Satterlee, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Bishop of Washington has returned to the city, and officiated at the pro-cathedral on Sunday, Oct. 1st, conducting the ordination service recorded elsewhere.

The new St. Thomas' church was opened for regular services on the first Sunday in October, the Rev. J. A. Aspinwall, rector, officiating.

St. Andrew's parish, the Rev. J. B. Perry, rector, has established mission services some distance north of the church. They are in charge of the Rev. Dr. Sprigg.

Central New York

F. D. Huntington, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

At the regular meeting of the Utica Clerical Union in Grace church parish rooms, Utica, Oct. 2d, the Rev. Wm. R. Holloway read an essay on the subject, "The relation of education to life."

Bishop's Appointments for October

3. Evening, Cape Vincent.
4. A. M., Convocation and Confirmation, Cape Vincent.
5. A. M., Antwerp; P. M., Evans Mills.
11. Syracuse.
15. JorJan, Weedsport, Port Byron.
17. Evening, Slaterville.
18. A. M., Speedsville.
20. Reservation.

St. Andrew's Divinity School, Syracuse

The Bishop announces the appointment of the Rev. Theodore Babcock, D. D., rector of Christ church, Manlius, as dean of St. Andrew's Divinity School, to succeed the Rev. Dr. W. D. Wilson who is incapacitated by infirmity. The dean and students will reside at 109 Waverly av., which will be known as St. Andrew's Hall. The parochial relations of the school will be with the free cathedral church of the Saviour. The year's term opened Oct. 2nd.

Convocation of the Third District

Was held in St. Peter's church, Bainbridge, Sept. 12th and 13th. The Rev. J. H. La Roche was the preacher at the opening service. On Wednesday, the Holy Communion was celebrated by the Rev. G. G. Perrine, and the sermon preached by the Rev. Henry M. Brown. Appropriations and assessments for the ensuing year were made, and reports of missionary work were received. The Bishop was asked to appoint the Rev. G. G. Perrine as dean, to succeed the Rev. R. G. Quennell, resigned, and has since done so for the remainder of the term.

Autumn Convocation of the First District

Was held in St. John's church, Cape Vincent, Oct. 3d and 4th. On Tuesday evening, the Rev. A. J. Reid preached on "The Light of the world." At this service, the rector, the Rev. J. H. Gear, presented a class of 38 persons to the Bishop for Confirmation. On Wednesday morning, a business meeting was held, and the stipends and assessments for the ensuing year were settled. At the morning service, the Bishop was the preacher. He was in excellent health, and his delivery was with his usual vigor. After lunch, served by the ladies of the parish, a meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the district was held, Mrs. A. H. Sawyer, president, in the chair. The Rev. F. P. Winne and Mr. J. M. Tilden were re-elected members of the board of managers for diocesan missions. The following topic was selected for discussion at the next meeting: "The best method of helping weak missions and occupying neglected territory." The convocation closed with Evening Prayer, addresses by the secretary, the Rev. A. J. Brockway, and the Rev. Dr. Mockridge, and reports of the missionaries read by the dean, the Rev. Dr. O. E. Herrick.

Pittsburgh

Cortlandt Whitehead, D.D., Bishop

Sept. 28th the annual harvest home festival was celebrated at the church of the Atonement, Carnegie, which was tastefully decorated with flowers and fruits. The sermon was preached by the Rev. J. W. Burras; other clergy assisting in the service were the Rev. Frank Steed, of the church of the Nativity, Crafton, who has Carnegie under his care, the Rev. Messrs T. J. Daner, H. E. Thompson, and Wm. Thompson. An offering was received for the Building Fund for the erection of a Sunday school room.

Springfield

Geo. F. Seymour, S.T.D., LL.D., Bishop
Chas. R. Hale, D.D., Bishop-coadjutor

Archdeacon Taylor's Anniversary

The last day of September was the 22nd anniversary of the ordination of the archdeacon, Dr. F. W. Taylor, who has ministered in this diocese during 21 of these years. On the Sunday following, Bishop Seymour preached at the pro cathedral, and after his sermon gave a beautiful tribute of appreciation and deserved praise of the good work and influence of the archdeacon. Bishop Seymour had preached the sermon at his ordination, twenty-two years before. In the course of his remarks the Bishop said:

In the building up of this diocese (and I refer to much more than material structure, I mean an intellectual, moral, spiritual, and theological foundation), the Venerable archdeacon has a very large lot to consider as his own personal work. Our diocese is rural. It has no great cities; it is weak in the elements of material greatness, but it has long been a power in the Church. In our General Conventions, Springfield has won for itself an enviable reputation as standing constantly and persistently for sound Church principles and loyalty to the fundamental verities of the Christian Faith, the integrity of Holy Scripture, as the Word of God and the all-sufficient warrant for our belief, and the supreme sovereignty of Christ, Lord of all. For this honorable position among the dioceses of our American Church, Springfield is largely indebted to my beloved archdeacon, your faithful priest and pastor. May God's blessings rest upon him and his, and may the future, as his past has been, be bright with usefulness and honor.

Massachusetts

William Lawrence, D. D., Bishop

Bishop Lawrence, at the first meeting of the Clericus in the diocesan house, Oct. 2d, read a paper on timely topics, and reviewed the Dreyfus incident, the conference at The Hague, and Imperialism.

St. Matthew's, Worcester

Will make a strong effort to liquidate the debt of $9,000 upon the parish house and rectory. The parish feels the strain of this indebtedness every year, and its present work is much hindered by it. A committee has been appointed to consider the matter, and hopes to discharge some of the debt before next year.

Marriage of Rev. Wm. H. Dewart

The Rev. Wm. H. Dewart was married to Miss Elizabeth H. Russell, in the Old South congregational meeting house, Boston, Oct. 4th, by Dr. Gordon, pastor, and the Rev. Dr. E. W. Donald. Mr. Dewart is the curate at Trinity church, Boston.

New Altar for the Mission at Hudson

Has been finished and put in its place. It is the gift of the Misses Holden, of Brooklyn, N.Y. The illuminated panels of Cardovan work are made in green, red, and gold. They are very effective. The new chalice and paten is in memory of the Rev. Franklin Leonard Bush, the first missionary in this field.

St. Paul's, Hopkinton

The church is now in possession of a bell, which has been given by members of the Fay School. After the service of blessing, the rope of the bell was pulled by Master A. L. Baury, great grandson of the Rev. Dr. Baury who was for many years rector of the parish. One thousand dollars is still due upon the church. An effort will be made to pay this Dec. 7th, the first anniversary of the new church building.

Harvest Festival at Haverhill

A harvest festival service was held in Trinity church, the Rev. H. L. Clode Braddon, priest-in-charge, on Sunday, Oct. 1st. Solemn vespers were sung, with procession, and a festal Te Deum at the altar. The chancel and sanctuary were appropriately decorated with the fruits of the harvest. Stainer's "Ye Shall Dwell in the Land," was sung as an offertory anthem. A large congregation was present at the service.

Alabama

Richard Hooker Wilmer, D. D., LL. D., Bishop
H. Melville Jackson, D. D., Bishop-coadjutor

At a meeting of the Standing Committee of the diocese, held at the rectory of Trinity church, Mobile, Oct. 5th, consent was given to the consecration of the Rev. William Loyall Gravatt, to be the Bishop Coadjutor of the diocese of West Virginia.

Arkansas

Henry Niles Pierce, D. D., LL. D., Bishop
Wm. M. Brown, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor

After four months' severe illness, the rector of St. Agnes' church, Morrilton, the Rev. I. M. Merlino Jones, is able to be about. He officiated Sunday morning, the 1st inst., for the first time since the middle of June.

Bishop Pierce's Will

The will of the late Bishop, Dr. Pierce, was offered for probate two weeks ago at Little Rock, and as it is a very brief and interesting document, we publish it in full:

(Dated at Fayetteville, Sept. 3rd, a few days before his death.)

"If I am to die soon, as I think I am, I wish to say I avow that I die in the faith of One, Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church, before the great schism between the East and West. I ask that Bishop Brown will continue the modest ritual which I have established as in harmony with Catholic usage. In regard to my worldly affairs, I leave them at the disposition of my wife, she to be sole executrix, without bonds. This is my last Will and Testament."

Salt Lake

Abiel Leonard, D. D., Bishop

The Deseret Sunday School Union (Mormon), has awarded a gold medal to the Rev. W. D. Scott, of St. Paul's church, Salt Lake, for the best music for their Jubilee Sunday school hymn.

Connecticut

Chauncey B. Brewster, D. D., Bishop

The Junior Clericus of Connecticut

The first literary meeting was held in the Hotel Garde, New Haven, Sept. 25th. The meeting was well attended and the papers were excellent. Two essays were read, one by the Rev. A. J. Gammack, on "Charles Gore," the other by the Rev. C. W. Bispham, on "The ceremonial use of incense." The book reviews were on Dr. Van Dyke's "Gospel for a World of Sin," by the Rev. George H. Robson, and on Canon Curteis' "The Relation of Dissent to the Church of England," by the Rev. R. H. Gesner. Interesting discussions followed each of the papers. The next meeting will be held at the Garde on the last Monday of November, the Rev. George T. Linsley, chairman.

Trinity Church, South Norwalk

The corner-stone of the enlarged and reconstructed church was laid on the 18th Sunday after Trinity by the Bishop, assisted by the rector of the parish, the Rev. F. W. Norris. The old church, erected in 1860, having become too small to accommodate the needs of the parish, has been completely demolished, with the exception of the tower, and a new edifice is now being built, which more than doubles the size of the old one. To the plans as at first contemplated, has been added a recess chancel. This addition was made possible by a generous gift of the Misses Bradley, of this parish, and it will greatly add to the symmetry and convenience of the church. The work is the result of three years' unremitting labor on the part of rector and people, and the gratifying feature of the whole effort is that when the church is completed it will be paid for.

Western New York

Wm. D. Walker, D. D., LL. D., Bishop

The Rev. James H. Herendeen, one of the curates of St. James' parish, Buffalo, was married in the parish church to Miss Nellie Edgerton, Sept. 21st.

Rev. Warren C. Hubbard's Anniversary

Services commemorating the 25th anniversary of the admission to the priesthood of the Rev. Warren C. Hubbard, and of his tenth as rector of the parish, were held in Trinity church, Rochester, on the evening of Sunday, Oct. 1st. The congregation, which filled the church to overflowing, included members of probably every parish in Rochester. The vested choir of Christ church rendered the musical portions of the service with fine effect. In the chancel were the Bishop and the Rev. W. D'O. Doty, D. D., Archdeacon Washburn, the Rev. Messrs. Geo. T. Le Boutillier and E. H. Edson. In the address which followed the service, Dr. Doty, on behalf of his own congregation (Christ church) and himself, presented Mr. Hubbard with chalice and paten of choice workmanship. Bishop Walker spoke of first knowing Mr. Hubbard when the latter was a choir boy in Trinity church, New York, and the Bishop was a young man preparing for the ministry; he recalled the fact that the earnestness, devotion to duty, and tenderness which have characterized the work of Mr. Hubbard throughout his long ministry, were apparent in his boyhood. Mr. Le Boutillier spoke of the ordination of Mr. Hubbard and himself to the diaconate, in Trinity church, Utica, May 1st, 1873, and reviewed the changes that have taken place in certain Church customs since that time. The Ven. Archdeacon Washburn paid a just tribute to the faithful and efficient work of Mr. Hubbard during his ten years' rectorship of Trinity parish. Mr. Hubbard himself was the last speaker. He made the remarkable statement that during his entire ministry of twenty-five years, he had been unable to officiate, through illness, on only six Sundays, and for 17 years never missed being in his place in the church a single Sunday. Mr. Hubbard is about to retire from the responsibility which attaches to parochial labor, and will become select preacher in St. Luke's church, Brooklyn, the Rev. H. C. Swentzel, D. D., rector.

Nebraska

George Worthington, S.T.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Rev. W. R. McKim, missionary-in-charge of Hartington, Randolph, and Niobrara, recently spent a ten days' vacation quietly visiting in Chicago. He assisted at morning service at St. Andrew's church one Sunday during the visit. This is the first vacation trip in eight years for the missionary.

Guild of St. Barnabas for Nurses

The 13th annual convention will be held in St. Paul's church, New Haven, Conn., Nov. 14th and 15th. The convention will open on Tuesday morning at 9:30 with the Holy Communion. The business meeting will follow. An opportunity will be given in the afternoon to visit the hospitals, the university, etc. Tuesday evening the annual sermon will be preached, and a reception will follow. The business will be concluded on Wednesday morning. Bishop Whitehead is chaplain-general of the guild. There are 20 branches of the guild in important cities, with 1,500 members at the last report. The membership is not limited to the Episcopal Church. The chaplains of the branches are Church clergymen.

Editorials and Contributions

Bishop Potter on Marriage and Divorce

NOTHING that has occurred for a long time has given more hope to those who wish to see the Church in this country stand, without compromise or vacillation, for the highest morality, than the recent utterances of Bishop Potter, of New York, on the question of marriage and divorce. The logic of events has converted the Bishop to the position for which we have all along contended in these columns. We have seen reason at different times to dissent very earnestly from Bishop Potter, and have not refrained from expressing our dissent in plain, but we trust always respectful, terms. We have never questioned the importance to the Church at large of the position he may feel called upon to take upon serious questions—an importance arising not only from the pre-eminence of his see, but from his personal strength and his reputation for practical wisdom. It is for this reason, in fact, that we have felt it necessary not to keep silence when his words or acts seemed to us calculated to injure the health and well-being of the general body, or to put the Church in an ambiguous position in the presence of unbelief. For the same reason we hail with unalloyed pleasure the utterances of his recent convention address.

IT is well-known that at the last General Convention the legislation upon the marriage question, which the circumstances of this country, and, we rejoice to believe, the general sentiment of serious-minded Churchmen, so imperatively demanded, was not effected. And this was mainly because the House of Bishops was unable to agree upon the terms of the canon to be enacted. It was understood at the time (we speak under correction), that the Bishop of New York was opposed to a canon of greater stringency than that which we now have. But now, after the interval of a year, with its shocking experiences, the Bishop says: "Meantime, the whole subject has gained a new aspect from events to which I need not more particularly refer here, which have undoubtedly awakened in all sober-minded Christian people a profound sense of alarm; and the consensus of opinion among them as to the necessity of legislation which shall prohibit the remarriage of divorced persons, under any circumstances whatever, has greatly widened and deepened." The Bishop himself is "by no means sure that such a conclusion is not the wisest we may reach at present." He further says: "Here the judgment of eminent publicists and legal authorities concur, and some of them of foremost rank as jurists and Churchmen have agreed that our only safe canon, in view of the tendencies painfully evident among us, is one in which the Church refuses remarriage to persons divorced for any cause arising after marriage [italics ours], absolutely and universally."

WE feel justified, in view of such utterances, in concluding that the Bishop is ready to place himself on the side of the bishops and clergy who, to the number of more than fifteen hundred, have put themselves on record as urging the passage of a canon which shall absolutely prohibit the clergy of this Church from solemnizing the marriages of people who have been divorced, no matter for what cause arising after marriage. It has, as he says, been made more evident, by recent events and multiplied instances, that an evil which has grown to such proportions can only be met by so drastic a remedy. It is clear that the obstacle which has caused many to stop short of this conclusion, is the popular exegesis of St. Matthew xix: 9. But it must be admitted that this exegesis is precarious, and that against this uncertain text we have the positive and unambiguous statements of the other Gospels, and of St. Paul, not to speak of the sub-apostolic Church of the second century.

BUT even granting the validity of the exegesis which makes our Lord allow remarriage in the case of "the innocent party" in a divorce for adultery, it ought to be evident to those who are conversant with facts as they are, that it has become impossible for the Church in this country to arrive at any safe conclusion in the majority of instances, and that to allow divorce with the power of remarriage in this particular case is practically to allow it in all cases. We consider that to forbid the clergy to marry divorced persons will add incalculably to the strength of the Church as a moral force in the community. Nothing could be better for the priest who is called upon to marry such persons, but who does not feel prepared to take a strong line on the basis of his personal convictions, than the existence of such a canon. He is delivered from the necessity of conducting a judicial examination for which his training has not prepared him; or, if he has taken the decree of the civil court as his guide, he is no longer in danger of accepting as an "innocent party" one who has obtained that position of vantage by fraudulent methods. He has but to point to the law of the Church and say, "I cannot."

THE Bishop, indeed, is careful to say that not one remedy alone is sufficient to meet the difficulties with which we have to contend. Earnest and persistent endeavors should go back to the sources from which the depravation of marriage has come. He, perhaps, hints at the revival of something analogous to the bans by which publicity was secured, and the old prohibition of clandestine marriages. It is time the clergy clearly understood that they have no obligation in this matter save to their own parishioners. No priest is under any compulsion to marry unknown people who come to his door, or to make the rectory a Gretna Green for runaways from some neighboring State. If he takes upon his conscience the risks which pertain to such cases, he does so of his own free will. There is great room for reform here, and it were much to be wished that some of the younger clergy, and for that matter, some of the older ones, too, had a better appreciation of their position in this matter. There is no question that clandestine marriages are in many cases marriages which ought not to take place, and are often the precursors of untold misery.

BISHOP POTTER lays chief stress upon the necessity that reform should begin in the life of the home. "The decay of the august sacredness of marriage in our day is not more alarming than the painful tokens which salute us of the disintegration of the home." He thinks, therefore, that the Church's office should first of all be to re-establish and exalt the ancient institution of the home, in which marriage took its rise. But while it is most true, and lamentable as it is true, that home life has largely fallen into decay, it is not so easy to say which comes first in the relation of cause and effect, the degradation of marriage, or the degradation of the home. Certainly, where the marriage is "contrary to God's Word," it is out of the question to look for a true home life as the outcome. We cannot legislate for the exaltation of the home. We can and ought to give "clear and plain teaching from the pulpit," and we can, as Christians, set an example. But this is not a matter that laws can touch. On the other hand, in marriage and divorce, preaching alone, necessary as it is, can never touch the root of the matter. It would be a mistake, therefore, to wait for the reform of the home through preaching, before we attempt the reform of marriage through legislation. That were to postpone all reform to the Greek Kalends. We do not, of course, understand that to be the meaning of the Bishop; rather, that preaching and instruction must go hand in hand with legislation, to produce the best and most lasting results.

"YE shall know them by their fruits." The recrudescence of spiritualism in connection with Mrs. Piper, under the auspices of the Society for Psychological Research and various professors of Eastern colleges, naturally leads one to ask what have been the "fruits" of this alleged commerce with another world. We have, of course, the supposed supernatural manifestations. But miracles are not the "fruits" of which our Lord speaks in the Sermon on the Mount. In the immediate context He Himself repudiates this idea in the case of certain who will claim in His presence that they have "propheesied" and done "many wonderful works." But it is more to the point that it is claimed that Spiritualism is now lifting the veil which conceals the world unseen, and is about to furnish "scientific demonstration" of a continued existence after death. We have read some of the statements of well-known persons who have attended the seances of Mrs. Piper, and, setting aside all question of the genuineness of the manifestations, we still ask, what has this whole business, from the early days of "familiar spirits" and the period of the Greek oracles, down to Mesmerism and Spiritualism, ever done to give substantial aid to the moral or spiritual progress and well-being of those who have had relations with it? What has it done to purify the soul or elevate the minds of its votaries?

RECENTLY one of the Boston members of the inner circle of enthusiasts, announced that he had received numberless communications on the subject of the relations "between man and the Infinite," but the specimens he furnishes are very disappointing. We seem to have heard it all before. There is in it nothing inspiring, nothing elevating. Nor are the statements consistent with each other. We are told, for instance, that there is no such thing as "an individual or personal God," and yet that "earnest, old-fashioned prayer" is efficacious. And this is only one example. It is possible that the promised "scientific demonstration" may give a certain satisfaction to some minds. But to those who have been nourished in the ennobling conceptions of the Christian Faith, it would be a sad descent from the thought of loved ones resting in hope in the blessed presence of the Saviour, to the contemplation of these invisible people calling their earthly friends by jocular nicknames, and manifesting an interest in anything rather than the spiritual life and the eternal destiny of the soul. We look for fruits of righteousness, not for supernatural marvels, or revelations destitute of all spiritual force and helpfulness. We recall the warning words relative to "strong delusions" coming upon those who, having rejected the truth, stand prepared to "believe a lie." Where religion has gone out, superstition is sure to gain an entrance.

A "Ghost Dance"

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE for August opened with an article entitled, "The Ghost Dance of the French," concerned of course with the present appalling state of things in the country which prides itself upon being the centre of enlightenment. According to the testimony of its own writers, it has "gone rabid." Certainly we have before us one of the most confusing scenes in all history. The great difficulty is to discover adequate motives for the fury which seems to inspire the various parties. The motives which lie on the surface and supply the rallying cries seem contemptibly inadequate. We are almost forced to conclude that we are witnessing the fulfilment of one of Carlyle's famous utterances: "When your revolution of pure destruction is completed," he asked, "what will remain? The five unsatiated senses will remain, the sixth insatiable sense of vanity will remain; the whole dæmonic nature of man will remain—hurled forth to rage blindly without rule or rein; savage itself, yet with all the tools and weapons of civilization; a spectacle new in history." This is cited by the writer in Blackwood's as sufficient, and it is confirmed by the view expressed by certain of the French that what is wanted is a cleansing by blood. The idea is the crude and simple one that blood-letting is good for the health. As in the individual so in the nation. It makes little difference whose blood is shed, or what the immediate occasion. Naturally the first victims would be those who happened for any reason to be the present objects of popular displeasure—Jews, for example. But the main point is that blood should be shed, and plenty of it!

MOST likely the real forces at work under the present confusion will be more apparent hereafter than they are now. There can be no doubt that the Socialists and Anarchists will foment the discord for the furtherance of a well-defined programme of their own. But it is the Conservatives who are thought to have gone mad, and who cannot tell what they are fighting for. The Legitimists indeed are attached to a cause so utterly dead, that there truly seems to be no motive in their madness save hatred of the present state of things. According to our writer, Orleansism is not only dead but ridiculous. But it would appear that its advocates do not perceive this. Bonapartism may be only a "name," but it is too much to say that it has no part in the possibilities of the future. "The Generals" present the most extraordinary spectacle of any class involved in this strange Dance of Death. At first sight, their attitude and methods might seem absolutely inexplicable. No high aim, not even any strong and vigorous programme, is apparent to account for the position in which such a number of military chieftains have placed themselves before the world in the Dreyfus case, or for the crucial importance that case, so mean and petty in itself, has been made to assume. We are compelled to conclude that it is the instinct of self-preservation which is at work, and that the real motive at the bottom of all this tangle is the shielding of culprits of higher rank than Dreyfus.

A SAD side of the whole affair is the way in which the Catholic Church of France has been brought into it. It is hard to tell, since most of our evidence comes through channels hostile to religion, how far the Church is really responsible for the present condition of things. It is said that "the Generals" were trained by the Jesuits who must therefore be responsible for the performances of those individuals. It is also asserted that the ecclesiastics as a class are anti-Dreyfus. It is certain that they are Conservatives, which means that they entertain a lingering hope of the downfall of the Republic, under which the Church and even the Christian religion itself has suffered so many disadvantages. This is simply natural, and, though it may be regretted, it is not to be sweepingly condemned, unless we are justified in demanding that all men shall be supremely wise and far-sighted. It is a graver charge, and the author of the article in Blackwood's does not shrink from alleging it, that the Jesuit and the parish cure have fostered the thirst for blood, and first of all, the blood of the Jews. In fact, the sting of his paper is "in the tail," the concluding paragraph, wherein he does not hesitate to arraign "clericalism" and "priestcraft" as at the bottom of the whole business, and to insinuate that results of the same kind may come out of present movements in the Church of England. It is an ungracious fling. No fundamental principle can be detected in the Catholic religion, whether Roman or Anglican, which justifies fraud and violence. Mr. Lecky has made a similar charge, in his "History of Rationalism," against religion in general, so far as it is based on authority, and is, therefore, dogmatic. When the members of Christ's Kingdom allow themselves to compromise that Kingdom with the kingdoms of this world, and adopt the ways of secular politicians, then indeed results may be expected to follow which are dishonoring to the Christian name and profession.

Preparation for Confirmation

FROM CONVENTION ADDRESS OF RT. REV. OZI W. WHITAKER, D.D., LL.D.

NO pastor can fill his parish with confirmed persons whose preparation has been superficial and unreal, without doing them and the Church a lasting injury. Such a course is, in the first place, a great waste of opportunity for those confirmed. The period preceding Confirmation is of all the most favorable to the reception of religious impressions and the deepening of spiritual desires. When this opportunity has been rightly improved, the candidate comes to receive the Laying on of Hands with his conscience quickened as to his duty, and his faith in his Divine Saviour increased, and thus prepared to receive the strengthening grace of the Holy Spirit. In the history of many persons Confirmation marks a crisis, a turning point, when the claims of Christ and the obligations of the Baptismal Covenant first come to be realized, and if it is received stolidly, without an awakening of the spiritual energies, there is reason to fear that such an awakening will never come, but that the whole after life, however punctilious it may be in outward appearance, will be cold and formal, having the form of godliness, but not realizing its power.

And not only is there in such cases a loss of opportunity to the confirmed, but an injury is done to the parish and the Church. Every confirmed person in a congregation contributes either to raise the standard and tone of spiritual living, or to lower it. It is said that Napoleon by rigorous conscription, each succeeding levy sweeping into the army boys of a younger age, lowered the average height of Frenchmen for generations. Something analagous to this has been done in parishes where an over-eagerness for large numbers has led to requiring less and less of qualifications, until a consent to be confirmed was considered sufficient. In one such instance—not, I am happy to say, in this diocese—the rector asking a man to be confirmed, received the reply that he could not be because he did not believe the Apostles' Creed. To which the rector answered: "You may not believe it now, but if you will be confirmed, you will believe it after awhile."

Such standards of fitness make Confirmation meaningless to the unconfirmed, and put stumbling blocks in their way; and they tend to discourage those who are striving to fulfill the obligations resting upon them to live above the prevailing spirit of the world around. The presence in a congregation of numbers of confirmed men or women who are not communicants, or who, if they do come to Communion, give no evidence by their words or manner of life of being under the influence of the Spirit of God, is deadening to its spiritual life. It cannot be too clearly understood that the strength of a Church is not in the number of communicants, but in their character.

It is not possible to state with mathematical exactness what should be required of every one in order to be confirmed. Due account must be taken of the age and past conditions and capacity of every individual. One may be able to say the Creed and the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments, and answer to every question in the catechism, and yet be very unfit. And another may stumble badly in them and yet be most worthy; like the poor, ignorant woman who, confessing her weakness after an examination in which she had failed, though the questioning had been gentle and kind, bursting into tears, said: "I cannot answer the questions, but I love the Lord Jesus Christ, and would die for Him. Can I not be confirmed?"

And this suggests what it seems to me is the central thing in the fitness for being confirmed: A desire to draw near to the Lord Jesus Christ, and to receive from Him help to get free from all sin, and to live an upright and godly life. The prayer in the Laying on of Hands is addressed to Christ, and it is to Him that we look for the strengthening grace we need, ministered to us by the Holy Ghost, the Comforter. And if the candidate for Confirmation cherishes a sincere desire to come into closer personal relationship with Christ, there is reason to hope that under the freshening influence of His Spirit, that desire will be realized, and Christ will be formed in the heart, the hope of glory.

Knowledge and understanding there must be, according to the age and ability of the candidate. Ordinarily that which is set forth in the Address after Baptism is the minimum to be required, and the general description contained in the words, "and is sufficiently instructed in the other parts of the Church catechism," should be adapted to the capacity and circumstances of the individual, the effort being always to secure the highest possible attainment in knowledge and in earnestness of purpose. Moreover, the instruction given to candidates for Confirmation should have regard not merely to personal fitness, but should enforce the fact of membership in the Church, which is the Body of Christ, and all the obligations which follow from that relationship—such as the duty of maintaining the Church, of supporting missions, of obedience to the laws of the Church, and of the fulfillment of duty in all the relations they sustain. Especially should candidates who have been brought up under a different system from ours, be instructed in the fundamental principles and practical methods of the Church into which they are to be received. The importance of such instruction becomes more evident when we consider how large a part of those confirmed come from the Christian bodies around us.

Spiritual Training of the Young

FROM THE POINT OF VIEW OF THE PEDAGOGUE

BY Y. Y. K.

THE Church Sunday school occupies a curiously anomalous position among the instrumentalities for doing the work of the Church. Thoroughly loyal to the Church, it yet exists to do what the Church provides and decrees other means of accomplishing. "Diligently upon Sundays and Holy Days, and on other convenient occasions, openly in the church," the minister of every parish is to instruct and examine the children of his parish in the catechism. "Fathers, mothers, masters, and mistresses shall cause their children, servants, and apprentices who have not learned their catechism, to come to the church at the time appointed, and obediently to hear and to be ordered by the minister."

Such is the direction of the rubric, plain as a guide board, pointing the way. Equally plain the "parts and duties" assigned to the sponsor to whose arms our mother, the Church, returns the new-born child of God to be nursed for the King.

No such high commission can the Sunday school teacher claim; no rubrical direction is his guide, and there are those who would therefore urge that the Church Sunday school has no reason to be.

It is with no such revolutionary sentiments that I ask my fellow-teachers to lend me their ears. The Sunday school has a work to do, and is doing it with a loving zeal that may well put the average sponsor, if not to say the average parent, to blush—often doing more than either parent or sponsor loyally to second the efforts of the parish priest that the child "be virtuously brought up to lead a godly and a Christian life."

I once asked four bright lads, Sunday school boys—all four the children of Church parents, all baptized in infancy—the names of their god-parents. One said "he didn't know what I meant"; a second "guessed he hadn't any" (poor orphan!); the third, that "he could find out for me if I wanted to know;" the fourth answered promptly, "My father and mother and uncle."

Once upon a time a Sunday school convention closed an enthusiastic session with the following resolution: "Resolved, that the Sunday school is the nursery of the Church." It has seemed to me, sometimes, that in view of the fact that the Sunday school is performing duties primarily belonging to other relations, it were well to resolve that the Sunday school is the incubator of the Church. No disparagement intended, dear fellow-teacher. A good incubator is a capital thing when mother hen abdicates her maternal function.

But I would not be understood as asserting that the Sunday school teacher's work is solely to assume duties neglected by others. Duties may be delegated, and as the parent sends the child to school for mental training, so parent and sponsor may delegate some share of the training of the youthful child of God in things heavenly and divine, especially when they delegate it to an instrumentality of which the parish priest, the other factor in the Church-ordained system of religious training, is the guide and head; may advantageously delegate it, since the class relation, wisely used, is a potent instrument for good, spiritually as well as intellectually; and we are not to forget that there is an intellectual side to the religious training of the child who is to serve the Lord with all his mind, as well as with all his soul—in both, with all his strength.

Two suggestions I should like to offer: First, I should like to suggest that the Sunday school get rid of its name. There is no reason why the Christian child should receive on Sunday that part of its training that can best be got by class-work. On the contrary, the command, six days shalt thou labor and do all that thou hast to do, is still binding, at least upon the laity. Doubtless the ideal adjunct to the parish church is the parish school; unfortunately, under present conditions, that must remain for some time, in most of our parishes, an unrealized ideal. But would it not be practicable to have our children and young people meet for religious instruction on other days than Sunday, for instruction that should involve work as obligatory on their part as does their arithmetic, their grammar, their physiology, psychology, biology, and all other ologies in which the public school system so lavishly deals?

It is urged that there is no time, because of the pressure of the public school itself. I note that time is found for the dancing class, to which the careful mother herself oft leads her children's "early feet."

One vastly important element in fruitful teaching, is the respect of the pupil for that which is taught. I can but believe—and I speak as a teacher of many years' experience—I can but believe that the inculcation of religious truth, such aspects of it, at least, as may best be presented in class, would be vastly more efficient, if, as genuine work, it were begun, continued, and ended in the work-a-day life. And so I should rejoice to know that instead of the present system, in which the pupil learns his lesson, "if he has time," or "if he pleases," it could be provided that the child attend on a week day a class for religious instruction, wherein work is expected and can be enforced in a manner not in harmony with the Church ideal of the employment of the day of worship and of rest.

It is a week day—let me remind you in passing—that the Holy Church throughout all the world sets apart for "extraordinary acts and exercises of devotion," into which category Sunday school teaching clearly falls.

I know the practical difficulties in the way of getting Church teaching into the week day; I know the tenacity of the grip of the necessarily godless public school system on the week days; I know the painful indifference that too often characterizes those who must co-operate with parish priest and Church school teacher if religious education is to be respected by the child; I know, too, that under given circumstances we must do the best we can. But the best is always towards ideals; and while I by no means advocate that we abolish our Sunday schools, I would recommend that the Sunday school take a name more exactly defining its aim and scope. This would help toward the placing upon a higher plane our work as teachers in the Church.

Letters to the Editor

TIMES AND SEASONS

To the Editor of The Living Church:

One subject to be discussed at the next Missionary Council is announced to be, "How to increase the interest in the Lenten Offering." This is understood to be "The Children's Offering" for General Missions. We venture humbly to make a plea for the decrease of interest in the "Lenten Offering," that it may be greatly increased in another and proper season; that is, in Advent and Epiphany. A most attractive and commendable feature of the Church is the orderly observance of the Christian Year. It is one of the indelible marks laid upon a divine institution. Very soon again in all our congregations we shall be giving close attention to the Advent appeal and report to be sent out by the Missionary Board in the direct interest of Domestic Missions. Advent is memorial of the coming of the first great missionary, Jesus Christ, to redeem and save the world.

The Lord of heaven and earth, as a man, for one generation, made the world His home, mingling with men and teaching them the true life. Advent is an appropriate season for Christ's disciples specially to learn how best to follow His example in teaching the Gospel to all in the land which is their home. In due season the Epiphany appeal and report will be sent to all congregations, in the direct interest of foreign missions. Epiphany is memorial of the manifestation of the Saviour, Christ, to all nations of the earth, whereunto He was sent. Epiphany is an appropriate season for Christians of each nation to take special interest in all people of the earth, to learn what is their need, and to do all that is possible for the evangelization of the whole world. We shall hear the tidings, feel the glow, offer prayers, sing hymns, and make exhortations, all in keeping with the seasonable subject; and then we shall pay our devotions by giving as we are able of our means.

Is there any cause for the children to be separated from the rest of the congregation in these seasons, to receive no direct messages adapted to their growing capacities, to make no active effort in the special work which is the interest of all at this particular time, and to be carried over to an inappropriate time for unseasonable financial endeavor? Lent is a season for the spiritualizing of the inner life with a lesser attention to the temporalities. The thoughts of all alike are to be turned inward, more subjective than objective. Addresses, discourses, sermons, essays, and exhortations are chiefly aimed to promote abstinence, devotion, discipline, penitence, reformation, self-sacrifice, and all those qualities which strengthen pure love towards God and men. Lent is the season sacredly set apart for the children to learn these great principles as their elders shall teach them and exemplify them. It is not a time to divert either thought or purpose with a money box or a penny pyramid, as the chief object in their view. Yet out of this teaching will come the free-will offering of the heart and mind and soul and strength and money of the child growing to manhood.

If with heroic effort we take these money offerings from the children in Lent, when shall the transfer be made to Advent and Epiphany of standard missionary interest? Where may the line be drawn between adults and children for the common purposes and usages of the Church? The gulfs are already too wide that separate the Sunday schools from the congregation, the Junior Auxiliaries from the council of the organized Church. Let us bridge these chasms so that on common occasions, "young men and maidens, old men and children" may worship and work seasonably and concertedly. If this be in the province of the Missionary Council, let the change be made. If not, let the matter be duly discussed and referred to the General Convention. Let the children's missionary offerings be taken in Advent and Epiphany, about 1901, and thereafter.

W. W. RAYMOND.

A SUGGESTION ABOUT INCENSE

To the Editor of The Living Church:

Without in the least controverting the position taken in the communication of John S. Davenport, in your issue of Sept 23d, allow me to suggest that the worship ordained by Divine command was largely sensuous in the best sense.

There was, and is, just as much reason for incense as for lights, color, and form, or for music.

It is evident that the tabernacle service, as well as its refined reproduction in the Apocalypse, shows that God is to be worshiped by the whole man, and that all his senses, as well as his mind and heart, are to be engaged therein. All our senses are arranged in octaves, and if we could read the gamut of the sense of smell as well as we can that of sound or color, we might find in the composition of incense an exquisite harmony.

DEPOSITION

Be it known, that on the fifteenth day of September, A. D., 1899, in Christ church cathedral, St. Louis, Mo., in the presence of the Rev. Carroll M. Davis and the Rev. Wm. Watson, clergymen, and in accordance with the provisions of Canon 5, Title II., of the Digest, I did depose Henry Tudor, presbyter, from the ministry of this Church, he having declared in writing to me his renunciation of said ministry.

DANIEL L. TUTTLE, Bishop of Missouri.

Ordinations

Oct. 1st, in the pro-cathedral, Washington, D. C. Bishop Satterlee ordained to the diaconate Mr. Friedland Peter, of Georgetown, a member of the last graduating class of the General Theological Seminary. The sermon was preached by the Rev. A. R. Stuart, D. D., rector of Christ church, Georgetown, of which parish Mr. Peter is a member.

Died

CORBIN.—Entered into life, Sept. 16, 1899, Mrs. Katharine Houghton Corbin, widow of the late Horace Corbin, born July 7, 1832, and resident in Plymouth, Ind., from 1885.

"My praise is of Thee in the great congregation."

GREGG.—Fell asleep, on the morning of Sept. 30, 1899, at his home, in Ft. Worth, Tex., in his 45th year, Wilson Gregg, son of the late Rt. Rev. Alexander Gregg, Bishop of Texas.

"Grant him, O Lord, eternal rest, and let light perpetual shine upon him."

NEVIN.—At St. Luke's Hospital, New York, on Wednesday, Sept. 27, 1899, William Wilberforce Nevin, brother of the Rev. Dr. Nevin, rector of St. Paul's church, Rome, Italy, in the 63d year of his age.

Obituary

TRUSLOW.—Entered peacefully into rest, at Summit, N. J., on Sept. 26, 1899, James L. Truslow, Jr., in the 51st year of his age.

At a meeting of the vestry of Calvary church, Summit, N. J., on Sept. 27, 1899, the following minute was unanimously adopted:

In humble submission to the loving will and wisdom of God in withdrawing from our earthly sight our dear friend and associate, Mr. James L. Truslow, Jr., the senior warden of this parish, we desire to place on record for those that come after, our high appreciation of his character.

A devout Christian, an intelligent, loyal and generous Churchman, a true friend, a wise counsellor, Mr. Truslow was all this and much more to us who knew him in the intimacy of private life as well as in the work which was so near to his heart, the advancement of Christ's Church and kingdom here on earth.

Always interested, not only in the work of his parish, but of the diocese, and of the Church at large, Mr. Truslow regarded his position in the parish, in the diocesan convention, and in the Board of Missions not as an honor, but as a sacred trust which demanded his conscientious and whole-souled fulfillment. His services, especially in the construction of the new church were invaluable.

His balanced and careful judgment was always looked for intuitively when any matter of serious import or difficulty was to be decided. His modesty, his gentleness, his unvarying courtesy, his kindness of heart and word, made him not only respected, but beloved by all his associates.

Grieving at our own loss, sympathizing deeply with his family, yet rejoicing that our brother has entered into the well-earned "rest that remaineth to the people of God," we thank God for his good example, and take courage. May he rest in peace, and may the Light that is eternal ever lighten him.

Appeals

(Legal title [for use in making wills]: THE DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.)

New Lives

BY C. M. HALL

"Men may rise on stepping stones
Of their dead selves, to higher things."

It is well for the man who can say
(Being yet in the strength of his years):
"I begin a new life on this day,
And the man of the past is dead.
Forgotten the mad life he lead,
With its follies, its doubts, and its fears.

"I have tasted life's evil, and found
It as bitter as wormwood, at last;
I have gone, of life's pleasures, the round,
And know just how little they give;
And now I am ready to live,
Being wise through the faults of the past.

"The folly of life's sacrifice
To fashion, the goddess of fools:
The mad love of money, which lies
At the root of all earthly wrong,
I renounce; I throw off the strong Hands with which god Mammon rules."

It is well for the man who can find
(Being yet in the strength of his years),
This new life of the soul and the mind;
And rejecting the false and the wrong
Build anew his soul's mansion, which, strong,
Shall endure the length of his years.

REV SAMUEL M. HASKINS whose picture appears on our cover page, will complete on October 15th a rectorship of sixty years in one parish, St. Mark's, Brooklyn. It is proposed to celebrate the event by a special service of thanksgiving next Sunday. One who speaks from personal knowledge, having been a member of St. Mark's vestry for many years, writes: "Of the life work of Dr. Haskins, no human being can give a just account. I might name the many parishes springing from his, the thousands to whom he has ministered in his long service, the more than a score of clergymen, several of them now bishops, who have taken Holy Orders through his teaching; but mere figures can never state the good deeds done, and above all, the immense volume of good influences set in motion by this one venerable priest. Dr. Haskins never imagined himself to be eloquent, never resorted to sensational themes to draw people to church, but as he has often said, he relied solely on the one great theme, Christ, and Him crucified; yet the parish has always flourished, and thousands of the old members in every part of the country look back to the hours spent in St. Mark's as among the happiest and the purest in their lives. A man of sterling character, and endeared to all who have ever met him, through his genial, lovable disposition, he has faithfully plodded on through all these years, striving to do his full duty to his Master, and to the souls entrusted to his care."

Pen-and-Ink-lings

THE Catholic World Magazine takes part in the discussion that is going on over the matter of looting churches in the Philippines, and maintains boldly that such church looting has been going on. In an "open letter" which it publishes in the October issue, it calls on the President to right wrongs that are being perpetrated by some of our soldiers in the Philippines.

MR. W. L. ALDEN writes from London that "David Harum" has reached a second edition there, but can hardly be called popular. He says (in the New York Times): "People apparently buy it to find out why the book has had such a run in America. The dialect and the people of 'David Harum' are too foreign to be appreciated by the English reader. You might as well expect an American to appreciate a story written exclusively in the dialect of Somersetshire."

WE hear of a Congregational minister who says that God made nothing perfect--left man to finish the job. We would like to see that minister try his hand on a water-lily, a spray of arbutus, a scarlet tanager, or the song of wood-thrush. We would like to know what improvement he has to suggest on a native forest, a virgin lake, a rainbow, or a snow crystal. Let us see his specifications for bettering moonlight, or the starry skies, or a blue-eyed girl baby. We suppose that when a man sets himself up to criticise God, he thinks he is standing on the top of the pole of Higher Criticism, and that no man can get as high till some one gives the pole a shake.--The Interior.

HANGING in the room where Bishop and Mrs. Seymour receive their guests, is a painting that has recently been discovered to be one of the masterpieces of modern art. It is the work of Carl Guthertz, and the subject is "Ecce Homo." It was on exhibition at the Philadelphia Centennial, in 1876, and attracted the attention of experts, but for many years its location has not been generally known. Bishop Seymour bought it from the artist, some time in the seventies, and has prized it for its wonderful devotional expression. Since its identification, many visitors have been to see it, and photographs have been made for the European art journals. It is said to rank with the "Angelus" in merit and value.

In fifteen years I never knew a week to pass without a murder in Mulberry Bend; rarely a Sunday. It was the wickedest, as it was the foulest, spot in all the city. In the slum, the two are interchangeable terms, for reasons that are clear enough to me. But I shall not speculate about it, only state the facts. The old houses fairly reeked with outrage and violence. When they were torn down I counted seventeen deeds of blood in that place which I myself remembered, and those I had forgotten probably numbered seven times seventeen. The district attorney connected forty-two murders of his own recollection, with Bottle Alley, the Whyo gang's headquarters. Two years have passed since it was made into a park, and scarce a knife has been drawn, or a shot fired in all that neighborhood. Only twice have I been called as a police reporter to the spot. It is not that the murder has moved to another neighborhood, for there has been no increase of violence in Little Italy, or wherever else the crowd went who moved out. It is that the light has come in and made crime hideous. It is being let in wherever the slum has bred murder and robbery, bred the gang, in the past. Wait, now, another ten years, and let us see what a story there will be to tell.

MR. RIIS gives pen pictures of the keen appreciation of the people:

The other day I watched the children at their play in the new Hester Street Gymnasium. The dusty square was jammed with a mighty multitude. It was not an ideal spot, for it had not rained in weeks, and powdered sand and cinders had taken wing, and floated like a pall over the perspiring crowd. But it was heaven to them. A hundred men and boys stood in line, waiting their turn upon the bridge ladder and the traveling rings that hung full of struggling and squirming humanity, groping madly for the next grip. No failure, no rebuff, discouraged them. Seven boys and girls rode with looks of deep concern--it is their way--upon each end of the seesaw, and two squeezed into each of the forty swings that had room for one, while a hundred counted time and saw that none had too much. It is an article of faith with these children that nothing that is "going" for their benefit is to be missed. The sight of these little ones swarming over a sand heap until scarcely an inch of it was in sight, and gazing in rapt admiration at the poor show of a dozen geraniums and English ivy plants in pots on the window sill of the overseer's cottage, was pathetic in the extreme. They stood for ten minutes at a time resting their eyes upon them. In the crowd were aged women and bearded men with the inevitable Sabbath silk hat who, it seemed, could never get enough of it. They moved slowly, when crowded out, looking back many times at the enchanted spot, as long as it was in sight.

ONCE again we quote: "The words of a little woman whom I met last year in Chicago kept echoing in my ear. She was the 'happiest woman alive,' for she had striven long for a playground for her poor children, and had got it. 'The police like it,' she said. 'They say that it will do more good than all the Sunday schools in Chicago. The mothers say, 'This is good business.' The carpenters that put up the swings and things worked with a will; everybody was glad. The police-lieutenant has had a tree called after him. The boys that did that used to be terrors. Now they take care of the trees. They plead for a low limb that is in the way, that no one may cut it off."

A MALIE KUSSNER, the American artist who has just painted a portrait of the Czar and the Russian Imperial family, is a Western girl who manifested a singular genius for miniature painting when a mere child. Once, at a New York hotel, a chambermaid who had watched her painting a miniature, asked her what a picture like that would cost. Miss Kussner replied that it would bring $200. "Two hundred dollars for a wee little thing like that!" exclaimed the maid. "Say, miss, you are wasting time. If you would only make a big one, as big as that looking-glass, you'd get enough money to buy out this hotel."--Saturday Evening Post.

Put Yourself in His Place

BY CYRUS MENDENHALL

IF we could or would do this, many times we should be prevented from making senseless criticisms and "snap judgments." We are so harsh when some one else falls or fails, and so lenient when we are at fault. I believe a great many people are sent to perdition, and not a few safely landed in the other place by us—in our minds, whom we may find disposed of contrary to our expectations. Was it Wesley who said, when he reached heaven, two things would surprise him; first, that he was there; secondly, "that so many were there whom he supposed would not be"? We judge by externals; God, by internals. The dear Father knows all the struggles, all the difficulties; we know in part, hence our judgment may be wrong.

There are occasions when putting one's self in the place of another would soften many asperities and make life sweeter. Notably, put yourself in the editor's place—not literally, but metaphorically. Especially does the editor of a religious journal have a trying position. He is advised so much and in so many ways, and receives some Christian abuse, withal, which must test his good nature and good principles. Mr. A. sends a long article on a subject already overtreated by others, and wishes it "published at once." A very unreasonable request when you consider the accumulations awaiting their turn. Mr. B. sees something not according to his mind, and on the impulse of the moment sends a severe criticism. Brave a man as an editor may be, he must consider his patrons and the good of his paper. Personal preference must be set aside. What shall he do? Mr. B. is able, is influential, and his contributions are welcome; but this will raise a disturbance for no good, and the sanctum will be flooded with contributions not needed. The editor writes and tells the contributor just how it is; sometimes Mr. B. sees the situation, and all is well, but too often he is angry, and henceforth works against editor and paper. What not to print requires more judgment than what to print.

There are many other trying things, and much censure which is unkind, when presumably a man is doing the best he can. As readers we grow weary of reading a rehash of some good subject, week after week, by some good brethren who feel they must have their say, no matter how often or how well the theme has been treated before. In Church items it does seem a waste of space to tell what good cooking Mrs. C. does, and how soft the beds are at the D's, and a long list of presents to the minister duly set forth with price, etc. Still, it is well not to be too hard on the editor, nor yet on the contributor—perhaps there are those who enjoy such reading. Tastes differ. Sometimes a contribution comes in a jumble, manuscript written on both sides, cross-lined, interlined, and generally incorrect. The contributor sends a nice little note with it, saying he is hurried, dashed it off, etc., hopes the editor will arrange it all right. If the editor is good-natured and more patient than Job, the document may come out after a time, looking so well that another "indiction" is sure to follow.

Put yourself in an office a moment. The editor must read your article, the compositor "set it up," the proof-reader wade through it, then there is the printing, the mailing, and other details, before the public sees it. In view of all this, and more, we should do our part well, and not be too severe on the editor, even if he should sometimes seem to publish poorer productions than our own, and, according to our conceptions, stuff the traditional waste basket with what should have appeared on the front page of his periodical. Be reasonable; be courteous, be patient!

The New France in Literature

THE dark side of France's civilization has been so exploited in the press on account of the Dreyfus case, that it is refreshing to turn to the brighter side. France is undoubtedly a great country, and there are many things to admire in the genius of her people, as well as in the results of their intellectual activities. The Rev. Augustine David Malley, in the Catholic World Magazine for October, tells of the reaction against Zolaism and the Naturalistic School. He says:

"Amidst all this turmoil it is safe to predict that the school of the future will be moral, religious, with a tendency among some toward Pantheism, the effect of Germany, and among others a reaction towards Christianity and the Church. Naturalism was the modern paganism, wishing for the concrete and definite, satisfied with what is seen and touched. Christianity continually urges men and nations towards what has not been realized as yet, and it is this spirit that is fermenting slowly as yet in Paris. Yet it would be wrong to say that there is a general movement towards the Church among the great mass of Frenchmen who are indifferent to all creeds; rather there is a slow conviction growing that what France needs is stronger morality, and that this cannot be obtained without some form of religious belief. The old revolt against religion is deplored, and amazement is expressed that so many in France accepted, and still accept, the flimsy gibe of Voltaire, that religion was an invention of priests to delude mankind. The younger men are serious, and wish to perform some great moral work, heartily endorsing Bourget when he said: 'We must suffer, we must love, we must create. This is all ethics and aesthetics. It is also Life.' France, the rich, the fruitful, with the scars of many battles on her noble brow, now looks sorrowfully on her sons. She stretches out her hands to the youth of the land, crying to them: 'Aid me with tongue and pen; build up my people who are fast hastening towards degeneracy and destruction; ennoble their ideals; bring back what was pure and holy, cast out the weak, foolish, and trivial, or I too must sink into the inferno of nations, where naught is heard but sighs and vain regrets for what might have been!'"

The Philippine Aborigines

THE Negritos are the aborigines of the Philippines. Before the coming of the Malays, they probably occupied all this island group, and many of the numerous islands which lie in the Pacific to the southward. Some of them are found to-day in the peninsula of Malacca and the Andaman Islands. In Java they have recently died out. It is likely that some of them still exist in the forests of Borneo, and in the interior of other large islands. Half-breed Negritos are found from India to New Guinea. Here, the Negritos have amalgamated with the savage tribes of Hindustan: there, with the negro-like Papuans of Malaysia. But everywhere the pure race is dying out. War, bitter and unrelenting, seems to have existed for centuries between them and the invading Malays. The latter have proved the stronger; the Negritos have perished, or been driven to the depths of the forests and the fastnesses of the mountains; and most of the land which once knew them knows them no more. A policy of extermination has prevailed; and few of this once numerous race survive.

What can be said of them as individuals? They have two claims to notice. They are a race of dwarfs, the smallest people on the face of the earth. I intend this statement to include the pygmies of Africa. And 'mentally they are the lowest, or one of the lowest, of the human races; stupid in mind, degraded in condition, forest wanderers scarcely more settled than the apes—"man-apes" they are called in parts of India.

But, if deficient mentally, the Negritos are largely endowed physically. They can run like deer and climb like monkeys. In fact, they approximate to the monkeys in one respect, since they have great powers of movement, and of grasping in the great toe, being able to pick up minute objects with their feet. When on board ship they are as nimble as monkeys, and can descend the rigging head foremost, holding on by the toes alone. Some Negritos are employed as servants by the Filipinos. Most of them, however, dwell in their forest retreats, where they live mainly by hunting; though they also eat the wild fruits of the forest, the roots of the arum, the honey of the wild bees, and other woodland products. Their weapons are simple but effective. They consist of a bamboo lance, a bow of palm-wood, and a quiver of poisoned arrows. It is an interesting fact that the art of poisoning arrows is common to the pygmy races, wherever found. The African dwarfs use arrows, a puncture from which is fatal. The Negritos have another way of getting food, not agreeable to the natives of the open country. They will swoop down upon the valley, steal covertly round a herd of browsing cattle, and drive them off to their strongholds in the hills.

The Negritos—or Aetas, as the Spaniards call them—live in the simplest and most primitive fashion. They wander to and fro, about fifty families in a group, obtaining shelter from a few sloping poles covered with leaves. Sometimes they build rude huts raised on bamboo poles, in the Malay fashion. They have a pretence of farming, scratching the ground with a stick and throwing in a handful of seed; but they seldom remain in one place long enough to gather their slender crop.—RAMON REYES LALA in the September Forum.

"Great" Preaching

WHO is the great preacher? Who is he whom every budding cleric should wish to be? If we are to believe Canon Twells ("Colloquies on Preaching"), the really great sermon is the sermon that holds fastest and longest upon the minds of its hearers. Mr. Twells gives a suggestive illustration. A squire talks over a vill ge rector of the right sort with his guest, and compares him very favorably with the "great" preachers, about whom he entertains mixed views. "Well, I don't much care for your celebrated preachers. It's all very well to listen to the monce and again, but I should be sorry to do it Sunday after Sunday. There is a straining after effect, a 'Now-I'm-going-to-astonish-you' sort of an air, that sets my back up. But few of them preach naturally. Somehow the warmth and energy of their delivery seem forced. They get up steam as deliberately and mechanically as a locomotive. You can almost hear, so to speak, the piling on of the coke and the manipulation of the handles. Now, our rector is different. He just stands up and talks to you. It seems as simple and easy as possible, and yet by and by you find your heart beating and your eyes filling with tears." There can be no pretence that the method here decried is that of any reputedly "great" preacher among ourselves. The squire's "rector" might be Canon Liddon himself. Nothing could be more simple or natural than the style of the Bishop of Ripon. Dr. Boyd Carpenter, like Canon Knox-Little and Dr. Farrar, is rich in glowing periods and fervid utterance, but there is no straining for effect in his style. And nobody will deny that the sermons of these men "hold" fast and long upon the minds of their hearers. The squire may have loved the conversational style; but to others, this style is repulsive. To some preachers, as well as to some hearers, oratory is an essential of the sermon. But it does not follow that the great preacher must be a great orator. The main elements, after all, of great preaching, are these: (1) plenty of solid information, (2) heartfelt earnestness, (3) a sympathetic manner, and (4) an articulate delivery. Were these qualities more general among preachers, there would be no lack of crowded congregations.—Family Churchman.

Book Reviews and Notices

Eighteen Centuries of the Orthodox Greek Church. By the Rev. A. H. Hore, M. A. London: James Parker & Co; New York: E. & J. B. Young & Co. 1899.

The history of the Orthodox Greek Church is not familiar to the vast majority of English-speaking people, but now that we have this excellent narrative of that wonderful history, there should be no further excuse for ignorance of it. No portion of the One Catholic Church has sustained such fearful adversities as the Orthodox Church of the East, and yet with all its losses, persecutions, the crushing oppression of Mohammedanism, and the deadening domination of the State, the Eastern Church can show some marvelous successes. Most wonderful of all is its vitality under such adversities, and its faithful adherence to the Faith as set forth by the General Councils, attested by its long and glorious roll of martyrs and confessors from the first age down to our own generation. And then, even in the days of its deepest depression, the Eastern Church has not been devoid of missionary zeal. The conversion of Russia alone is a crown of glory for the ancient Greek Church, and now her strength in the future will be derived from that great and vigorous national Church, and the ancient patriarchal sees of Eastern Orthodoxy will be rejuvenated from that source. The long conflict with the followers of the false Prophet has not yet exhausted her patience nor paralyzed her energy. The Orthodox Church will wear out her great enemy. The firmness with which she has withstood the un-Catholic claims of Rome from their first promulgation until now deserves the deepest gratitude of all Western Christians who make a like protest and refuse submission to them as does she. The recognition of national Churches has always been a principle of the Orthodox Church, while Rome has steadily encroached upon their autonomy, and has fought against every form of nationalism. In the decade just closing, the patriarchs and bishops of the Eastern Church have rebuked the Pope of Old Rome for demanding their submission to his supreme authority, in terms as vigorous and with arguments as learned and lucid as those employed by any of their predecessors.

The course of the world shows, too, that the Holy Orthodox Church has a great future before it. Its days of humiliation are coming to an end. The opening up of Central Asia and the vast empire of China is being accomplished by the two great powers whose national Churches, having a common Catholicity, are equally despised and condemned by Rome. As the nations which are distinctively Roman in religion are declining in power, Russia and England—to which we must add Germany—are waxing great, and the future of Europe, Asia, and Africa, is in the hands of these growing nations. It is most important, therefore, that the rapidly expanding Anglican Church and the Orthodox Church of the East should come to a thorough understanding of each other. Our author has an eye to this subject all through his work, and at the end he devotes a goodly part of a chapter to it. What he has written cannot fail to be helpful to both Orthodox and Anglican. It is the manifest destiny of these two portions of the Church to come together, and Mr. Hore has done much to further this end by writing this book. The account of the negotiations between the English Nonjurors and the Eastern prelates in the last century is very important.

We are surprised to find so much detailed history in a work that is necessarily a compendium of the subject to which it is devoted. The style is lively and interesting. The author has his subject thoroughly in hand, and his pages are full of information. This work will undoubtedly receive a cordial welcome from Churchmen, and, we trust, from the members of the Greek Churches also.

That such a solid theological work as this should have gone through two editions at the time of its publication, and that now after the lapse of only ten years, a third edition should be demanded, speaks well for its value and proved usefulness. But this testimony is worthy of all credence. There is no better commentary on the Creed from the pen of any modern English theologian, to our mind. It is not a commentary in the sense that it is an exhaustive explication of the articles of the Apostles' Creed, but in the line of a defence of the Christian belief, as setting forth the grounds upon which it rests and the terms on which it is to be received and held, this work occupies a unique place. The treatise of Bishop Pearson belongs, as our author remarks, "to the seventeenth rather than to the nineteenth century." Besides, it was addressed to the faithful believers in Christianity rather than to the thinking world at large. It is an exposition rather than an apologia. Bishop Goodwin's book is just the reverse of this. Its primary object is apologetic. It is not controversial, however, but irenic in tone and structure. The grounds of Christian belief are sought in history, faith, and reason. The thorough and evenly balanced manner in which these three sources of the Creed are handled, constitutes the peculiar excellence of this work. There is a sweet reasonableness in the argument which is convincing to an unprejudiced mind, and disarms opposition. The prominence given to the historical foundation of the Creed, and to the function of reason as well as to that of faith in determining our acceptance of the Christian belief, is in accord with the methods of thought current in our day. "Properly speaking, it may be said that in repeating the Creed we are by the nature of the case, and by the very force of the term used, in the region of faith, and that faith is of necessity the ground of the Creed. It will be obvious, however, that all the articles need not, and a little consideration will show that they do not, rest wholly upon the same foundation. A scientific treatise may be based partly upon observation, partly upon recognized facts, and partly upon mathematical reasoning and deduction. Some chapters in the treatise may rest exclusively upon one or another of these foundations, and some upon two or three combined. The treatise will none the less be essentially mathematical, because some of its chapters do not contain mathematical reasoning; and in like manner, the Apostles' Creed, though resting as regards some important articles upon faith, may also in respect of other articles, rest upon reason; in respect of others upon history, or upon some combination of the three foundations specified." (P. 22)

We would gladly quote large extracts from this work, and attempt to illustrate to some extent the treatment of several important questions which arise in the consideration of such a large subject as the Creed, but as that has been already done upon the appearance of the first edition of this work, we rather reluctantly forbear to add to, or to repeat, what was then said. We must be permitted to say, however, that we know of no better book upon the Creed to put into the hands of thoughtful laymen, and of persons who will give the time and attention to a study of the grounds of the Christian religion which the dignity and supreme importance of the subject demand.

Instructions on the Revelation of St. John the Divine. By the Rev. Cresswell Strange, Honorary Canon of Worcester. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Pp. 331. Price, $2.

The author's object is one with which we are in most hearty sympathy. It is "to make this book more intelligible to the ordinary reader, and so to encourage the study of it." To multitudes of people it is a sealed book. To others, it is a storehouse from which to draw support for wild, fanatical notions and materials for controversy. Rightly interpreted, it is one of the most practically helpful of all the Sacred Books. While we would not commit ourselves to every detail of the author's exposition of its contents, we believe his principles of exegesis to be sound and sensible. He has not undertaken to write a detailed commentary, but rather to put his readers in possession of the principles upon which the book is to be interpreted, and encourage them to study it for themselves. He regards the Revelation as setting forth (1) the conflicts of the Church and of the individual believer; (2) the preservation of the faithful amidst all the changes and chances of this mortal life, and (3) the final triumph of the Church and her members, especially as connected with the manifestation of her Lord in His second advent. His method is to take a passage of a dozen or more verses and treat it in an instruction covering some half a dozen pages. For Bible classes, for the private student, for daily reading and devout meditation, the book is an excellent help. We strongly recommend it for such uses. It will be found more truly helpful than many books of formal meditations.

Phillips Brooks. By M. A. De Wolfe Howe. Boston: Small, Maynard & Co. Price, 75 cts.

This is one of the Beacon Series of Biographies of famous Americans. They are beautifully gotten up in a small pocket edition, well printed, and in every way attractive. Each volume contains a photogravure of the subject of the book. This of Bishop Brooks is an excellent likeness. The editor has given us a very charming, though brief, account of Phillips Brooks. He gives us inside views of the character of the man that reveal all those charming traits that made him loved by those who knew him. The volume is a handy one for busy people.

Personal Work. By S. M. Sayford. New York: The International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association. Price, 75 cts.

While we cannot agree with this writer's theology in all its parts, or accept his methods without qualification, there is yet much in his book that is commendable. With the above qualifications, we consider the book a useful one to place in the hands of members of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Some of the instances given and results accomplished are remarkable.

John and His Friends. By the Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D. New York: Funk & Wagnalls Company. Price, $1.50.

A series of revival sermons similar to other publications by this author. After a perusal of the book the one thought that is impressed on the mind is that Mr. Banks has an endless fund of stories, and that they might be transferred from one address to another without disturbing the sense or changing the argument. There is nothing worthy of particular note in the book. It is evanescent in its teaching, because it has only the foundation of sentiment and the emptiness of revivalism.

The Book of Psalms, Containing the Prayer Book Version, the Authorized Version, and the Revised Version, in parallel columns. New York: James Pott & Co. Price, $1.

A valuable publication, especially for the student of the Old Testament. A glance shows the changes between the authorized and revised translations. It also shows the superiority of the Prayer Book version over both for the use of the choir. There are brief notes. The book should be in every clergyman's library.

Leading Persons and Periods in English Church History. Church Club Lectures delivered in St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Chicago. Milwaukee: The Young Churchman Company. Price, $1.

These lectures were delivered in the winter of 1898-'9 by Bishops Sessums, Seymour, Tuttle, Grafton, and Brown. They cover the Reformation period, the period of Pusey and the Catholic revival, and Seabury and the American period. They were very highly appreciated by those who were privileged to hear them, and the reader will find them full of information in a concise form. Every Churchman should possess a copy. Careful and wide reading would be necessary to gather all the information contained in these lectures.

Music

NOVELLO, EWER & CO., of New York, have prepared and issued a nicely chosen list of anthems and services, by the recognized masters in English Church music, and numbering nigh on to a thousand, all of which, as classified in this catalogue, the house intends henceforward to sell uniformly at five cents a copy—a boon indeed to choirmasters. They are printed on good paper and in open score, from the original Novello plates.

Periodicals

Appleton's Popular Science for October is an unusually interesting number of this valuable monthly. Applied charity and its problems has either direct or indirect consideration in a number of articles. "The Help that Harms," by Bishop Potter, is the leading paper. The discussion of "Best Methods of Taxation," by the late Hon. David A. Wells, is concluded. [New York: $3 per annum.]

The Sanitarian gives good advice about climate and sea voyages for tuberculosis. Many invalids blunder woefully in seeking relief by change, running into more dangers than they escape; and not many physicians are reliable authority on this point. The article in The Sanitarian is by Sir Herman Weber, M. D., F. R. C. P. His references are all to European and Oriental resorts. His suggestions, however, apply to all countries, and here in America we have every possible variety of climate and condition which the distinguished writer recommends. [Dr. A. N. Bell, 337 Clinton st., Brooklyn, N. Y. $4 a year.]

The largest issue of Harper's Weekly ever published is the Dewey Memorial Number, ready Sept. 28th. Between its ornamental covers, printed in colors, are fifty-six pages, devoted almost entirely to Admiral George Dewey and the eventful incidents in his career. Rudyard Kipling contributes a poem appropriately entitled, "Let Us Now Praise Famous Men." A history of the Dewey family and a sketch of the Admiral's life is contributed by the Hon. John Barrett. The number contains, also, an important article on the United States navy, by Henry Loomis Nelson, and special articles on Dewey and the Manila campaign, illustrated with many hitherto unpublished portraits and with superb drawings of naval scenes.

G. W. Steevens, the war correspondent, shows, in a thoughtful article in the October number of Harper's Magazine, the debasing effect of the Dreyfus affair on France. An article by Hon. John Barrett, late United States Minister to Siam, and for ten months war correspondent at Manila, gives an admirable representation of the character and personality of Admiral Dewey. Sir Martin Conway, the greatest mountain climber in the world, opens the number with the story of his ascent of Illimani, one of the highest and most inaccessible peaks of the Bolivian Andes. Part second of "The First American: His Homes and His Households," by Leila Herbert, gives an interesting description of Washington's life in New York. Short stories are contributed by Seumas MacManus, I. Zangwill, Mary Hartwell Catherwood, and Stephen Crane.

The Cosmopolitan for October presents a variety of articles. Mark Twain has a clever one on "Christian Science and the Book of Mrs. Eddy." The frontispiece is a beautiful picture, entitled "The Young Mother." Sixteen portraits of "English Court Beauties" follow, with a description of the Queen's "drawing-rooms." "Zinc-Mining," "The Grape Gatherers," and "The Stage in Mexico and its Favorites," are sufficiently diverse to attract different readers, while "The Care of Young Children" will appeal specially to mothers and those having charge of the little ones. Frank Stockton has an extraordinary story based on hypnotism. "The Bonapartes of To-day," illustrated, and "Candy-Making at Home," still further indicate the variety of choice the reader has in this issue of the magazine.

Our assertion that Pure White Lead made by the "old Dutch process" of slow corrosion is far superior to White Lead made by patent or quick processes, has been demonstrated by the experience of competent, practical painters everywhere. and industrial conditions and problems of the moment. The Hon. Thomas L. James, formerly Postmaster-General of the United States, and now president of the Lincoln National Bank in New York, writes on "The New Era of Prosperity," presenting important statistical data bearing on the recent remarkable increase in our export trade, the appreciation of prices, and other phenomena in our commercial and industrial life as a nation. Dr. E. Benjamin Andrews, of Chicago, gives an economist's impressions of the recent conference in that city on the subject of "trusts," while the presiding officer of that gathering, the Hon. William Wirt Howe, of New Orleans, states the conclusions to be drawn from the deliberations of the conference as to desirable legislation. The editor also treats this topic in "The Progress of the World." There is a brief article on the National Export Exposition now in progress in Philadelphia, and Mr. Corry M. Stadden reviews our diplomatic relations with Nicaragua, with reference to the prospective canal and other commercial developments.

The frontispiece of the October Century is a portrait, drawn by John W. Alexander, of the Hon. John Morley, M. P., whose historical study of Cromwell is to begin next month. A study of Mr. Morley himself, by an anonymous M. P., accompanies the portrait. The number opens with an illustrated paper on "Fascinating Cairo," by Frederic C. Penfield, late Diplomatic Agent, and author of "Present-Day Egypt." From the pages of his well-filled diary, the Hon. John Bigelow has extracted a series of passages relative to the German statesman, Von Bunsen, his friend and correspondent for many years, and to the group of celebrities to which Von Bunsen belonged. A picturesque view of "The Streets of Peking" is given by Miss Scidmore, with reproductions of many photographs. Special literary interest attaches to the announcement of the winners of the Century prizes for the best poem, story, and essay by recent graduates of American colleges. Last year, women graduates of Eastern colleges won all the prizes. This year, all three are won by Westerners, the prize poet only being a woman. Closing as it does, the magazine's fifty-eighth volume, this number contains the final installments of several series, such as Paul L. Ford's "Many-Sided Franklin," Marion Crawford's "Via Crucis," and Prof. Wheeler's "Alexander the Great."

Opinions of the Press

Cumberland Presbyterian

DYING RICH—There is a half truth in Mr. Andrew Carnegie's utterance—if he really made it—"To die rich is to die disgraced." To get riches for selfish gratification and to hold them until one's dying fingers must relinquish their greedy grasp, is indeed a sin; and this was what Mr. Carnegie probably meant. He is certainly to be commended for using his own millions in benevolence while he lives, just as every other rich man ought to do. Bequests are well enough in their way, and the cause of philanthropy and the enterprises of religion need many of them, but gifts come with better grace, and greater blessing to the giver, from living hands than from dead ones. Mr. John D. Rockefeller's creed is not far from correct: "I hold that it is every man's duty to make as much as he can, and to give away as much as he can to good purpose. I have always been interested in Church work, and conceive it to be my first duty to give to religious enterprises. Next to that, the cause of education appeals to me. If a man has any duties, beyond those of his fellows, in a country like this, whose stability depends upon the intelligence and moral character of its citizens, it is to help toward the moral and intellectual betterment of those who lack advantages or opportunities."

Christian Intelligencer (Ref.)

COMMON SENSE AND THE SCIENTIFIC METHOD.—A great deal is said in these times about the scientific method and the necessity for its application to various departments of investigation.

That is all very well so long as the scientific method is characterized by common-sense. For example, evidences of intelligence and other mental qualities, when reached in the course of investigation, are to be acknowledged. If they are not, the method of investigation or the investigator is defective, because lacking in common-sense. When biologists say that they reach an infinite and eternal energy at the end of their research, and fail to say that it is evidently endowed with intelligence, wisdom, and goodness and righteousness, they exhibit a want of common-sense, or, what is worse, a lack of common honesty. The mass of men, though tending towards skepticism or, as the Bible calls it, unbelief, in everything in which one living and true God and righteous Ruler is concerned, will continue to exercise common-sense, and when they shall attain a knowledge of the adaptation of one thing to another, as revealed by scientific scrutiny, will exercise common-sense and maintain an intelligent, wise, good, and righteous energy in a Person, a divine Person who, in the common speech of all men, is called God.

New York Observer

CRITICAL CANT.—A good deal of critical cant is indulged in by good, but uncultured, writers on the subject of homiletics, who fail to understand that what does not suit their own particular taste in the matter of pulpit work may be just the thing that will appeal to other classes of Christians. A homiletic monthly, for example, quotes the superficial remark of somebody who declared that after hearing Joseph Parker, of London, the natural thought was, "What a wonderful preacher!" while the natural comment after hearing Spurgeon was, "What a wonderful Saviour!" This simply means that the impression made by the personality of the one man upon a given hearer differed from that made by the other. Both had been speaking God's truth, in different vocabularies, to practically different audiences. The style of cheap criticism referred to above is not new. The same thing has been said of Beecher. In fact, the preaching of any man of great gifts who happens to be somewhat eccentric in his speech or mannerisms is liable to be contrasted unfavorably by the unskillful critic, with the plainer deliverances of some other man whose earnestness takes a more ordinary and conventional form. There are, indeed, men of prominence as speakers who unduly exalt themselves; but simply because a man is profound, brilliant, or famous as an orator, it does not follow that he is emphasizing himself rather than his Saviour.

THE DISTINGUISHING CHARACTERISTIC OF THE VOCALION IS ITS EXQUISITE TONE

ORGANS BUILT on the Vocalion system are pre-eminently fitted for church services. They have a full, rich, diapason tone and a peculiar delicacy in the string registers, which make them of inestimable value as an accompaniment to the human voice.

The method of tone production is radically different from all others. It gives the pitch as a fixed quality, free reeds being used for the purpose. In connection with each reed there is a pipe or chamber through which the tone passes and which determines its quality. By this means the reed is given a smooth, fluty quality of tone as well as resonance and remarkable power.

The distinctive features of the Vocalion are

Tonal superiority;
Compactness of form in proportion to capacity.
Variety of registration;
And price.

We wish to call the attention of all church societies contemplating the purchase of an organ to our Style 22, a full description of which we shall be glad to furnish upon application. Send for Catalogue G.

A Storm on the Sea

IT had been close and oppressive all day; no wind had stirred the leaves, and the tide had come in heavily, without the joyful little ripples which usually attend it; even the children had tired of play in such an atmosphere, and the beach was nearly deserted. All day there had been a curious haze, and now murky, copper-hued clouds were gathering, and the silence was almost painful; nature seemed to be waiting in breathless suspense; birds had taken shelter, boats had come in, and the heavy clouds were very near the hushed sea. Then suddenly the darkness was rent by a great flash of lightning, followed almost directly by a close, heavy peal of thunder, then again there was silence.

"That was pretty near," exclaimed a sailor who had just come onto the beach; he was speaking to himself, and started when an answer came:

"Yes; from all appearance it will be a bad storm."

Old Will Slater peered through the darkness, and saw, standing beside him, a man in the dress of a priest who had been staying in Seacombe for the last few days. It was too dark now to see his face, but Will remembered it as worn and harassed-looking, with lines of care round the eyes, and the hair more white than gray, though the form was still that of a young man, and the step vigorous enough. On the visitors' list he appeared as the Rev. Charles Harper, vicar of Ashcreek Magna, a place which Will thought must be in the country.

"It's coming," said the old man, as he turned back again to look out to sea. So still it was that they distinctly heard the crunch of the beach beneath the feet of a man who, some long way off, was hastening homewards; but there began to be a curious moan and stir in the air which Mr. Harper did not understand.

"It's the wind coming," said Will; and come it did, gathering vigor on its journey, lashing the sea into waves, and sweeping on in triumphant strength. Then, again, the clouds were rent with flame, and the thunder roared deafeningly.

"Grand, ain't it?" said Will who now had to shout to make himself heard.

"Yes," said his companion, "very grand, yet very terrible," and he shivered a little.

"Your hat," called out Will; but it was too late. Mr. Harper's hat had been caught by the wind, and whirled out of sight before they had time to try after it.

"There now, you'd best go back," Will said; "you can't stay here with ne'er a hat."

"I don't mind," panted the other, whose breath had been taken by the wind. "I wouldn't loose the sight for anything—here comes the rain."

And come it did, a regular deluge, hissing in their ears, lashing their faces, running down their necks.

"Here, sir," called Will, and he led the way to a little shanty which, niched in under a low part of the cliffs, was well sheltered. There the two men stood, unable to do more than shout a word or two to each other through the shrieking storm.

The heavy rain only came fitfully, but the waves were high and terrible, rearing their white crests threateningly, then falling with a crash that rivaled the thunder. Mr. Harper's face saddened as he looked out and thought that his parish was like that—rent with storms of evil passions, careless as to ruin. For Ashcreek Magna was in the Black Country, and the miners were a particularly hardened set; they had been so long neglected that they could not understand how much the new vicar really cared for them and had their good at heart.

There was a little lull in the storm, and both men drew breaths of relief. "Sit down, sir, won't you?" said Will, dragging forward an old box, "you look pretty well wore out."

"Yet one would not miss such a sight," said Mr. Harper, taking the offered seat.

"No," said Will, "yet many a time in a storm it's struck me how curious it would be if suddenly one could go down ever so far."

"Why?" asked Mr. Harper.

"Because underneath we should find the sea just calm and peaceful, not a bit upset by all the storms, and the fishes as happy as could be—I guess they know enough to go deeper when they see the storm coming."

"I did not know that, and never thought of it," said Mr. Harper, startled. "I wish we could do that in the storms of life."

"Seems to me we can," said the old man slowly and reverently, "for they ain't allowed to be more than we can bear. Our Lord says to them: 'Thus far, and no farther'; only I've often thought there's them as bears the storm when they might just go deeper and be in peace."

"Launch out into the deep," said Mr. Harper thoughtfully.

"Aye, that's it," said Will; "often when I've been alone on deck things have seemed to speak and to come clear, and there don't seem to be any place like the sea for telling about Him; but there, I'm preaching to a parson, and the storm has gone down a bit. Please excuse an old salt, sir."

"Thank you very much," Mr. Harper said. He grasped the old man's hand heartily, then turned homeward, thinking much as he went.—The Church Review.

Winter Lullaby

BY KATHLEEN CARMAN

Good-night, dear heart, and happy dreams.
Though in the sky no faint star beams,
Though field and road with snow are white,
Thou shalt sleep safe in warmth and light.

Oh, out of doors, the night is wild,
The wind moans like a lonely child:
Hark! how the storm beats high at the door,—
The fierce waves howl upon the shore!

But peacefully the cradle swings,
Low through the gloaming mother sings,
And softly still the firelight gleams.—
Good-night, dear heart, and happy dreams.

America's Great Admiral

REAR-ADMIRAL WILLIAM T. SAM-PSON, U. S. N., pays a hearty tribute to Admiral Dewey in the October Century.

In asking me for some words upon Admiral Dewey, he says, the editor of The Century has called for a congenial task which has one great element of ease—that of saying nothing but what is good. The old Roman adage need not be called up in this case hereafter: "The picture of his life is all lights and no shadow."

The country has so frankly recognized the great qualities he has displayed, and its debt of gratitude to him, that no argument of mine need be added to convince them.
The names of three great admirals will stand out conspicuously in modern history, each of whom rendered transcendent service to his country. Nelson, the real victor of Napoleon and establisher of European peace; Farragut, the far-reaching effect of whose services in the Civil War has yet to be recognized by the general public; and Dewey whose attack was as bold as that of Farragut at Mobile Bay (and I can use no higher praise), as successful as Washington's Trenton victory, and whose diplomacy and tact, after his destruction of the Spanish squadron, make a shining page which will not be the least in his glorious record.

Dewey, like Farragut, is one of the men of the service whose life has been in the steady treadmill of duty, without any conspicuous events to bring him before the public, except those of the Civil War. His fine career in this has been known to the service, where in our long and intimate intercourse we come to know and estimate one another in a way hardly possible in any other community. His gallantry and ability were thoroughly known; neither could have had a better test than in the lurid episode of the destruction of the "Mississippi," when she grounded under the batteries at Port Hudson, and had to be abandoned and burned. He was then but a young fellow of twenty-five, the first lieutenant of his ship, already a trusted man. His services upon this occasion truly deserve to be described as brilliant and distinguished. The preparation of the ship for thorough destruction by burning had to be carried on under a heavy fire of the enemy. The range was short, and the enemy, by means of bonfires on the bank, had thoroughly illuminated the doomed ship. Dewey proceeded with his work with a vigor and energy rarely seen, and an imperturbability which, when coupled with such energy, is, by the world's consent, called heroic. His presence at the capture of New Orleans, at Port Hudson, and in the two attacks at Fort Fisher, had given him a fuller experience of battle than falls to the lot of most naval men, however long, their lives, and he led his squadron into action at Manila, no doubt, with a feeling of emulating his gallant and conspicuous experience under our other great admiral now nearly forty years ago.

The service knows Dewey as an ideal head of a fleet. Perfectly courageous, of thoroughly balanced judgment, and quick of decision, he has the qualities which carry one to fame, if opportunity be given. The man and the hour fortunately came together, and the country is richer in another brilliant page of history and another heroic figure.

Dewey in this light stands for far more than the brilliant victor in a famous fight, or as the author of a proud page of history.
His career has given a lofty impetus to the young which will bear noble fruit in nobler aspiration. He has become one of the most valued possessions which a nation can have —a national hero. After all, the Romans read more deeply into the human heart, and into the impalpable causes which sway humanity, when they apotheosized their great men, than we are apt to grant. Washington, Nelson, Farragut, and the others on the long list of men of heroic deeds, stand for aspiration and noble planes of life and thought. Every name added is the world's gain, and to such a list we add the name of Dewey.

CAUGHT A NURSE.

Didn't Know Old King Coffee Had Her.

"The duties of professional nurses call them among a great many different people, and it is surprising to know how many are suffering from the use of coffee, which is the primary cause of the majority of many nervous disorders. My own experience has been such that I feel that I can speak with some knowledge of the subject.

"For about ten years I was afflicted with a severe nervous disorder, which was so great that sleep became an unknown thing to me without the use of opiates. I was a confirmed coffee-drinker at this time, but had never thought that had anything to do with the difficulty.

"After coming to Chicago to live, I was told by an acquaintance, who had been a similar sufferer from nervousness, that he discovered it was caused by the use of coffee, and when he made that discovery gave up the coffee and took up the use of Postum
Food Coffee, and was completely restored.
His argument sounded so logical, I was determined to make the experiment, and to my surprise, upon leaving off the coffee habit, I commenced to improve. This improvement has continued, until now I am in complete health, and sleep well and naturally. I always advise patients suffering from nervous trouble to abandon the use of coffee and use Postum, for I know what I am talking about on that subject.

"Occasionally private families do not prepare Postum well; that is, they fail to allow a sufficient amount of time for boiling. It requires more boiling than coffee, but the care well repays, for the beverage is delightful to the taste and wonderfully nourishing." Maggie F. Church, No. 2 E. 33d

(CONCLUDED)

After supper on the first day, the guests naturally divide themselves into three divisions. The dancers occupy the dancing hall, the married women, especially the older, find their way to the building known as the old folks', where they entertain themselves with coffee and gossip, while the men form small groups of from two to ten, or more, round the tables in the dining hall. Here some of them will sit all night and, perhaps, part of next day, talking over old times or new; about fishing trips made thirty, forty, or even seventy-five years ago; about the hard times during the war at the beginning of the century, etc., etc. Then national or commercial politics will be discussed, or the outlook for the season, either as to farming or fishing. Then, again, stories will be told or songs will be sung by some one in the party. Thus the old men will spend most of the time during these days of festivity, going from one group to another. But it is not only the old men who entertain themselves in this manner. There are always many of the younger sitting around listening to these tales, although out of respect they seldom put in a word themselves; and here intimate acquaintances and friendships for life are made. There is always something very fascinating in these companies, and in these reviews of old times. They learn that their fathers, when they were young, had the same joys and sorrows and struggles as they themselves are now experiencing. They hear them relate about their grandfathers and great-grandfathers, how they, in the same manner as these now, had told their youthful experiences. Then they have the history of the grend for a century or two reviewed. They feel that they themselves shall sometimes sit thus and talk over old times, while their children and grandchildren will be the listeners.

There is always a strong feeling of kinship among them, as they know that their forefathers for more than thirty generations have shared the fate of their common country, and that they, during all this time, have been friends and neighbors, have been living in the same grend together. Of this they can feel more sure in Norway than in any other country, as there the farm always passes from father to son, and, if there be no son, it passes to the nearest of kin, according to the directions of the so-called adel's law, the only law of its kind in the world.

Between four and seven o'clock in the morning it is generally very quiet at the weddings. Almost everybody except the cooks are then having a few hours' sleep, the women in the old folks' building, the men in the two upper stories of the parlor building. Others have their sleeping apartments assigned at some of the neighboring farmhouses. There is much joking and good-natured fun connected with arousing the sleepers in time for breakfast in the morning. The governor of the feast summons the drummer to his side, and together they make a round of all the sleeping apartments. Often they enter a room quietly, and the drummer places his drum on the breast of some unsuspecting sleeper and then begins to beat it violently. This always has the desired effect. The object of the joke will be so startled that he can sleep no more, while the others will laugh their sleepiness away.

The second day is the servant girl's day at the weddings. Between nine and ten o'clock in the morning they arrive from all the neighboring farms, each bringing a large can of the morning's milk, and they stay until it is time to go home and do the milking in the evening. If there be small children where she works, that cannot be left alone, then her mistress generally goes home and changes with her that day, that she may not be prevented from having her share of the festivity.

Several times during the second and following days, there is a change of programme in the dancing hall. Some one is called upon to tell a story. A table is brought in onto the middle of the floor, and on top of this is placed a chair. Here the story-teller takes his position. The stories related on these occasions are often symbolical, and are told in such a manner that only one of the listeners will understand their real and full meaning, and that one is always a young lady. This the story-teller can easily do by weaving into his story some incidents known only to him and the young lady, or parts of conversations that have passed between them before. The symbolic characters that figure in these stories are generally trolls and fairies, while the real hero and heroine are, of course, the story-teller and the young lady of his choice. It is not an uncommon occurrence that a young man will use an occasion like this to propose to one of his lady listeners before a large audience, and as far as is known, those who have the courage and adventurous spirit to do so in this extraordinary manner, are invariably accepted when the two afterward meet.

Another very beautiful and strictly Norse custom and form of amusement, is the so-called stevjing. This consists of alternate impromptu stanzas sung by two of the party, generally a young man and a young woman. The young man will begin by singing a stanza, wherein he asks some questions or describes his feelings. As soon as he ceases, some young woman in the crowd, with downcast eyes and blushing cheeks, takes up the thread of thought by answering his questions, and often winds up the stanza by asking another. Thus they keep on till each has sung six or eight stanzas. Love is generally the theme, and it is often of their own personal feeling that they sing. This stevjing is difficult, as the rhyme and meter

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

Springs 1 & 2

A Blood Food and Nutrient

Far more effective than extemporaneous preparation of the Lithia Salts.

In the N. Y. Medical Journal of July 22d.

Dr. John V. Shoemaker, M.D., L.L.D., Professor of Materia Medica and Therapeutics in the Medico-Chirurgical College of Philadelphia, etc.

"The peculiar virtues of the BUFFALO LITHIA WATER appear to be owing to the mixture of salts which they contain, and as regards Spring No. 2, to the proportionately large quantity of the Bicarbonate of Potassium. They are likewise due to the perfect solution in which the salts are held, and consequently to the complete absorption and assimilation which results. In the alembic of Nature more effective solutions are produced than the laboratory of the chemist can always prepare.

"An additional advantage and extremely important reason for the peculiar efficacy of the BUFFALO LITHIA WATER lies in the fact that its composition approximates that of the serum of the blood; therefore it is admirably fitted for absorption into the blood current and immediate incorporation with the watery portions of the nutrient fluid. It becomes at once identical with the blood serum. These are qualities which far surpass those possessed by any extemporaneous solution of a single chemical preparation, as when a lithia tablet, e. g., is dissolved in water for immediate administration. When we speak of a dose, it is of a quantity altogether relative, and what the physician emphatically desires in a dose is therapeutic efficiency. This we have in the BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

"Those who have made use of this water and carefully noted its effects have often been surprised at the results obtained from amounts so small, according to chemical analysis, of lithia and the accompanying salts. The explanation of this extraordinary activity is doubtless to be found in the conditions just adduced."

Both of these Waters are powerfully NERVE TONIC and EXHILARANT. Number 1 is also a Potent BLOOD TONIC and is especially indicated in NERVOUS INDIGESTION and in all cases where there is poverty or deficiency of the blood, indicated by a pallid, bloodless appearance, or where there is extreme exhaustion. In the absence of these symptoms No. 2 is to be preferred.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER is for sale by Grocers and Druggists generally.

Testimonials which defy all imputation or questions sent to any address, must be perfect, and one must follow the thread of thought laid down by one's opponent in the foregoing stanzas. It is surprising what poetic genius is sometimes displayed on these occasions.

Thus the festive days pass by. Everybody has put aside his everyday cares and troubles for the time being, and is making the most out of these days of festivity. And there is everything to aid him in this. There he has all the best the country can offer to eat and drink, there he has all kinds of amusement, and, above all, there he sees, in whichever way he turns, friends and smiling faces.

Toward evening on the last day, a dish is brought on the tables called the bride pudding. This is a signal that now the festivities are at an end. The bride who has not worn the crown since the first day, now again appears with it on her head as she and the bridegroom take their places at the table.

After the repast the bridal couple repair to the storehouse, where they receive the guests as they come to bid good-by, and give them presents, which, as mentioned before, consist of cash. The bride receives the money, which she, according to the custom, pretends not to want, while the bridegroom gives the donor a glass of wine. Within a couple of hours all the guests are on their way to their respective homes, and the scene of so much festivity again assumes its every-day attire.—The Inter-Ocean.

"Lady Help"

IN many parts of the Eastern States, an effort is in progress to solve the servant girl problem by the employment of educated and cultured young ladies as domestics. It is claimed that a number of such have been found who "prefer to eat and sit in the kitchen, and be called by their Christian names."

There may be a few educated young ladies with such preferences, but we do not believe there will ever be a large enough number to settle this much-vexed question. It is much more probable that the difficulty will be overcome by an alteration in the conditions of domestic service.

The status of the house servant can be changed just as that of the nurse has been. When nurses were all ignorant creatures of the Sairey Gamp type, no woman who could avoid it would be a nurse. Now that a regular course of training is taken, and a nurse's diploma means that the possessor is a woman of good general education, with especial professional qualifications, young women of every rank of life become nurses.

If schools of domestic science were established where a woman could obtain a thorough training as cook, housemaid, or general servant, and receive a diploma when graduated, a different standing would be given to domestic service, and doubtless a superior class of women would be attracted to it.

They would be treated as nurses—as equals having a strictly business relation to the family. They need neither "sit in the kitchen," nor "be called by their Christian names." Suitable rooms would be assigned them, and they could be addressed as other young ladies are.

There is nothing inherently degrading in housework, but domestic service has been made objectionable. Change the conditions, and plenty of bright, capable, educated young women will be ready to enter it.—New York Journal.

The American Oak in St. Petersburg

THE newspapers recently stated the fact of the presence of an American oak in the imperial gardens at St. Petersburg. Concerning this tree a curious story was told many years ago, apparently with absolute verification. When Mr. Dallas, afterwards vice-president, was in St. Petersburg as American Minister, he was one day visited by a tall, awkward Yankee who, being requested to state his business, immediately said that he wanted to see the Emperor. He was assured that obtaining an interview with the Emperor was no easy task, but not being disposed to take a refusal, he was requested to leave his name and return in about a fortnight, when his application would probably be considered and determined.

A week or two later the American Minister was surprised by a visit from the tall Yankee, and beginning to assure his visitor that an interview with the Emperor could not be obtained, the Yankee responded that he had already seen the Emperor, and had just called in at the Embassy for the purpose of saying good by, as he was on his way home. Mr. Dallas was dumbfounded, and inquired into the particulars, when he found that the man actually had, by sheer force of brass, succeeded in passing the guards at the palace and seeing the Emperor.

"I gave him a present, too."

"What was it?" inquired Mr. Dallas.

"An acorn from Mt. Vernon from a tree that grew over Washington's tomb. The Emperor planted it in the garden with his own hands. I followed him out and saw him plant it."

Strange as the story was, it was true, and the oak now growing in the imperial gardens at St. Petersburg sprang from the acorn carried thither as a present to the Emperor by the long, awkward American.—Pittsburgh Despatch.

THE Galesburg Republican Register gives an interesting account of a lady residing in Victoria, Ill., who will shortly complete her century of life. Mrs. Leah Robinson was born in North Carolina, in January, 1800. She is still in good health, lively and cheerful. It seems strange, says the writer, to be talking with one whose father and uncles took part in the Revolutionary War, who remembers the stories of hardship and privation they told, endured while scouting in South Carolina; who recalls, as clearly as if they occurred yesterday, her parents' accounts of the raid made on the inhabitants of the State by loyalists and royalists, Tories, and Whigs, British invaders and rebel defenders of that harassed region. She remembers with special distinctness how many of her kin took part with Jackson in his forays with the Indians in Georgia, and his subsequent glorious defense of New Orleans—of his regard for the welfare of his common soldiers, his care for their comfort when well, and their nursing when sick and wounded. She recalls the enthusiasm of their support when Old Hickory ran for president. She has always been kindly and cheerful, and loved and respected by her many descendants. She lost a brother, years ago, who died at the age of 104. With her present health and strength, it will surprise none of those who know her if she lives to a still more advanced age.

A SCIENTIST says: "If the earth was flattened the sea would be two miles deep all over the world." After meditating, a Kansas editor gives out the following: "If any man is caught flattening out the earth, shoot him on the spot, and don't be too particular what spot. Children's Hour

Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations,
That is known as the Children's hour.

A Great Dane Dog

BY CHARLOTTE WHITCOMB

THIS is a true story, and it all happened during this very last Christmastide. There was to be a big house-party a few miles out of the city, to which the fathers and mothers were going. The house-party was to last three days, and by means of it a large sum was to be raised for the benefit of a children's hospital.

Felice and many of her playmates were to spend the first day of their fathers and mothers' absence with Alice Henshaw. It was to be a day of merry-making. First, there were to be games of romps, then luncheon; then there was to be a dolls' party, followed by games, and after an early dinner, a real grandpa was going to tell them stories; Felice was sure that stories told by a grandpa would be even nicer than stories read by a governess. It was good sleighing, and Felice was to be driven in the big sleigh, with her family of dolls, to Mrs. Henshaw's, and when the party was over, she would have another sleigh-ride to the home of some cousins, where she was expected to spend two days.

The little girl was very happy when she found herself seated under the warm sleigh-ropes and saw the horses toss their heads, glad to be out in the keen, bright air, and heard the merry jingle of the bells. Lars, the Swedish coachman, drove through some business streets, as he had to leave an order at a florist's, and Felice enjoyed seeing the street sights, the gay shop windows, and the merry, moving crowds on the walks.

When they drove up to the florist's, Lars jumped out and ran into the shop without hitching the team, but the door had hardly closed behind him when Felice noticed a neighbor, Mr. Forest, and beside him a huge yellow dog, which she knew he had bought two days before. The dog was whining and acting very uneasy. Mr. Forest said: "What ails you, Luth? Be quiet, sir!" But Luth only licked his master's hand and whined the more. Then Mr. Forest patted his head and said: "It's all right, old fellow!"

At that, the big dog came trotting up to the horses' heads, and seizing the bridle in his teeth, stood holding them like an hostler until Lars came out. Then Mr. Forest said: "You should not leave your team unhitched, Lars. It's against the law, but my new dog thought he would save you from paying a fine."

Lars touched his cap and said: "I tank these hosses very safe in daylight, but I leave them unhitched not any more."

As they drove on, Lars told Felice that Luth was what is called a Great Dane dog; that he weighed one hundred and fifty pounds, and that he was wise and kind as well as strong, and that he had been trained to hold a standing team.

As this story is to tell about Felice and the dog more than about Felice and the party, I will only say that the little girls had a very happy day at Mrs. Henshaw's; the dolls behaved properly, the supper was nice, and the stories told by Grandpa Henshaw were the very best stories Felice had ever heard.

Lars came for Felice at six o'clock, and two little girls were to be taken to their homes in the sleigh with her. They made a merry party; each child had a doll in her arms or placed primly on the seat beside her. They chatted and laughed and petted their dolls and listened quite awed to the great chimes in the courthouse tower, which seemed almost over their heads as they drew up to the florist's, where Lars had to call for the flowers he had ordered in the morning.

This time he hitched the team by slipping the hook of the hitching strap into the ring of the granite block on the curbstone; or he thought he had done so, but he was in a hurry and the hook did not catch at all.

It was so nearly dark that the pavement and street were all alive with moving shadows of people and teams. Now what happened would probably not have happened if the horses had been without blinders, but Lars knowing them to be shy of shadows, thought they would be easier managed with blinders on, and so when a man with a screaming parrot came along and began playing on a barrel organ just behind them, they started and trembled with fright, and when, at the same moment, the shadow of a team of goats came in sight, the horses lost control of themselves and, plunging into the roadway, went off down the street at a mad gallop.

The little girls screamed and tried to stand up, but they went pell-mell off their seats, and dolls, robes, and all were huddled in a heap on the sleigh floor. Felice cried: "Whoa!" with all her might, but the horses seemed to plunge on all the faster.

Teams cleared the way, dogs barked, terrified ladies and children scampered into shop doors, men and boys shouted: "Runaway!" "Runaway!" policemen blew their whistles, but no one attempted to stop the frantic horses, and they ran on in the midst of the din to where, half a block ahead, Mr. Forest and Luth were standing under an electric light.

Luth darted into the street and ran the same way the horses were running, and when the team came up with him he seized the nearest horse by the bits, and dragging on it with his whole weight and great strength, soon brought the team to a stand-

Baby's Teeth

The process of dentition should no more be painful than the growing of the nails or hair; that infants suffer when teething is due in many cases to the fact that they have not had a food that contained the material necessary for building up the teeth. Mellin's Food not only contains material for the flesh and muscles but contains the phosphatic salts for the bones and teeth.

Mellin's Food

I send you a picture of our boy, taken when he was 9 months old. He has been raised altogether on Mellin's Food and used it until he was 18 months old, taking scarcely anything else, and a healthier child I have never seen. He is now 21 months and has 18 teeth, cut them all with very little trouble, all owing to the use of Mellin's Food. I feel that I want to recommend it to all mothers. Mrs. J. S. Allen, McIntosh, Fla.

still, and held them until Mr. Forest came up.

There was great cheering on the street for Luth, but the noble dog seemed to care only for the approval of his master. He wagged his tail and ran up to Mr. Forest, leaning his big head on his arm and looked up as if to say: "Was it done right?"

Mr. Forest let Lars take the steaming horses home, put the children into his own sleigh, and took each one where she was to go.

If you happen to be on a certain avenue in Minneapolis, on most any pleasant afternoon, you may see several little girls playing with a very large yellow dog. The dog wears a handsome link collar of silver about his neck, with a clasp bearing the words: "Luth from Felice," and every one who knows Luth says he is a Great Dane in more ways than one.

How Harold Disobeyed

I WANT you to go down to the Lower Fold Harold, and fasten up all the chicken coops and the hen-house door. Jem is away at market with your father, and Jane is busy. Be sure you do it properly and come straight back; baby seems so poorly to-night."

And Mrs. Hayes turned in her weary walk to and fro, and began again to sing the old cradle song with which she was trying to soothe May to sleep.

Harold dearly loved his little sister, and kissed her soft fingers now as he went out, saying cheerily:

"All right, mother, I'll see the little chick-abiddies to bed in no time."

He crossed the farm-yard, then through the orchard into the lane. But there he found several boys waiting.

"Here, Harold, we were just looking for you! We are going to sail our boats down at Brook Hollow."

"But I can't come," said Harold regretfully. "I've got the chickens to see to, and mother told me not to be long. Baby May isn't well."

"Well, you can get back in a jiffy. We can get there in a quarter of an hour, have some fun, and be home by eight. The chickens can wait."

"Perhaps it doesn't matter for half an hour," said Harold, hesitating. "Only mother said—"

"Matter? Of course not!" broke in Ned, rudely. "Come along; you're not a nurse-maid to be tied down like that!"

Fear of ridicule swept away Harold's misgivings, and soon all four boys were hurrying to the Hollow a mile away. There, in the fascination of playing in the brook, more than three hours went by.

But the deepening darkness warned them of home and supper time, and Harold's conscience now woke up in good earnest.

"Look here, boys, I'm off for home, and I'm sorry I came." And Harold darted away, followed by the mocking laughter of his comrades.

"I wont stop to go for a lantern and see to the chickens now," he said as he crossed the yard; "it doesn't matter if they are left for once!"

There was a bright light in his mother's room, and on the stairs he overtook Jane toiling up with a heavy pail of hot water.

"Oh, Master Harold, where have you been? Missus is in such a way, for baby's in a fit. And I'm all strange to the place and don't know where the doctor lives, and master and Jem ain't home yet. Oh dear, dear!"

Before she had finished her incoherent tale, Harold was at his mother's side. And he never knew afterwards which hurt him most—the reproach and grief on his mother's white face, or the sight of his baby sister in the agony of convulsions.

"Run for the doctor at once, Harold! Oh, how could you be so long?"

Cut to the heart, Harold flew down the lane and across the meadows to the doctor's house. Fortunately he was at home and came at once. The warm bath had relieved the worst symptoms; but it was hours before baby was out of danger. And nobody slept much that night. Just as Harold and his father were sitting down to an early breakfast next morning, Jane came in with the coffee, and said:

"You never fastened up them fowls last night, Master Harold; and Jem says the rats have been and killed seven out of the eight Leghorn chicks your mother set such store by."

Then the whole story of Harold's disobedience came out, and very grieved his father looked.

"Let it teach you a lesson, Harold, that will last you a lifetime. Never say again about the smallest duty, 'it doesn't matter.'"—The Child's Companion.

How to Make Nervous People.

"America has become a land of nervous emotionalists, largely owing to our sins against the dietetic health laws of nature.

"Only outdoor exercise in a cold climate would enable vigorous individuals of our species to digest the viands forced upon alimentary organs enfeebled by sedentary occupations," writes Dr. Felix Oswald.

Brain workers must have different food than day laborers, because brain work uses up parts of the brain and nerve centres, while physical labor uses up other parts of the body. A food for brain workers has been prepared by scientific food makers, and called Grape-Nuts. It is a pure, natural food made from selected parts of field grains known to contain the natural phosphate of potash and other elements used by the system in rebuilding and repairing the brain and nerve centres. This food is skillfully cooked at the factory, and is ready to be served instantly, either cold with cream or as a hot breakfast dish with hot milk or cream poured over it. All first-class grocers sell Grape-Nuts, and the Postum Co., at Battle Creek, Mich., manufacture the food.

Finance and Commerce

THE bank statement of the New York banks last week was again unfavorable, showing a further shrinkage all around. The financial situation, if not sensational, is at least unusual. Not only are high rates of interest prevailing in Wall street, and to a less degree throughout the country, but in London, Paris, and Berlin as well. The Bank of England advanced their discount rate to five per cent. the past week, and did it in a manner which was a practical declaration that an emergency exists. It is altogether likely that the South African controversy was the actual cause, as gold in large quantities is being drawn that way from England and Australia, but while the Bank of England has a comparatively fair supply of gold on hand, it has been running down of late, and the possibility of a further drain to the United States causes uneasiness. The Imperial Bank of Germany advanced its rate of discount to six per cent., and its last weekly statement shows that while its circulation has been increased 255,000,000 marks, yet its cash on hand has decreased 115,000,000 marks. All this wide-spread stringency in money comes after a period of large gold production, during which time the world's stock of gold must have increased largely. It is hardly likely that so small an affair as a war with the Boers could fundamentally effect the whole financial situation of Europe. In fact, the long continued tension in Germany denies it. Tight money in our country accompanies a period of unprecedented activity and prosperity. Is it not likely that the fundamental cause is alike both there and here? We know pretty well that scarcity of money in this country means scarcity of credit in the form of bank notes. The issue of bank notes is limited, and while they are redundant in periods of dullness, they get scarce in time of business activity. An amount that will do the work at one time will not do it at another. In a way this is true all over the so-called civilized world. The issuing of promises to pay in the form of bank notes is almost everywhere limited and controlled by law, and usually the government reserves that right to itself. As a result, there is no more circulating medium to be had when you need it than there is when you don't need it, and periods of money redundancy and of money famine are aggravated and intensified thereby. Manifestly something more flexible and adjustable is needed.

There should be nothing particularly alarming to us in the money situation. The unequal flow from the centre to the interior will soon be over, and its counter movement will set in. In the meantime general activities can get what accommodations are necessary, and a fairly stiff rate of interest will do no harm.

Wall street may suffer a little, but elsewhere five and six per cent. money is the rule, and business is so prosperous it can stand it. The grain and provision markets continue fairly steady. Wheat and provisions lost a trifle during the week, and corn ruled firm. Cotton has shown much activity, and has advanced sharply at times. In manufacturing and general merchandizing there is no charge to note. Business is everywhere good.

THE exportation of manufactures in the eight months ending with August is forty-five million dollars greater than in the corresponding months of last year, an increase of 22 per cent. During the eight months of 1899, the export of manufactures has averaged more than one million dollars per day, including Sundays and holidays, the total for the 243 days being $246,228,916, while in the same months of last year the total export of manufactures was $201,444,606

AN EVIDENCE OF PROSPERITY.

It is generally conceded by economists who study the commercial situation of the country, that the great arteries of railway travel are a sure indication of its condition. A depression in commercial lines means abandoned business trips and the cancellation of pleasure travel, while a healthy condition of affairs means business trips and an increase of passengers on pleasure bent.

A good evidence that a business revival has gone broadcast over this country is the "Lake Shore Limited," the star train of the Vanderbilt system, between New York and Chicago, which is daily comfortably filled. With a view to taking the best possible care of its patrons, the New York Central has arranged to increase the equipment of this train by placing an additional standard sleeper on the trains every day. To the regular traveler the appointments and comforts of this train are well known, but if you have never made a trip on it, you owe it to yourself to see and enjoy the advance made in comfort and luxury in modern railway travel. Remember the fare is no higher on this train, except between New York and Chicago, while the accommodations and service place this particular train conspicuously at the head of the list, when compared with other lines.—Albany Journal.

School Luncheons

THE subject of luncheons for the little ones attending school is not generally given the thought and care it deserves. In "putting up" the lunch, aim at variety. Use more fruit and less meat, is a good rule for most lunches, especially for the children. Rich cakes, pies, and puddings should be used sparingly, although plain sponge cake, ginger bread, or cookies, and cornstarch-pudding, custard, and tapioca, may be used daily.

The greater part of the preparation for the lunch should be made the day before. Meats should be cooked, cooled, chopped, and seasoned; if to be taken in slices, a very sharp knife should be used, and the thinly sliced meat wrapped in a damp napkin. If the start is for any reason to be a very early one, the sandwiches may also be made up the night before and similarly wrapped to prevent drying.

A pretty basket or box should be provided for carrying the lunch, and waxed or paraffine paper is the best for wrapping, as it is impervious to odors. Articles with a pronounced odor should be wrapped in two thicknesses; it may be procured in bulk from wholesale paper houses, and dealers in confectioners' supplies, or it can be bought by the sheet from any confectioner, but the latter is by far the most expensive plan. Have on hand a supply of paper napkins, and the little porcelain egg cups with tops that screw on, are just the thing in which to carry stewed fruit, jams, custards, or little puddings. Fasten to the under side of the cover of the box or basket, a couple of folded paper napkins, also line the box with one, and wrap each article carefully by itself in the waxed paper. The fruit should be put in the bottom of the box, then the light dessert in paper boxes or cups, with the tarts, cakes, or cookies. Separate the dessert from the hearty courses by means of a bit of pasteboard, on which place the salad (if any) in glasses, accompanied by the crackers or wafers and pickles—the last named should be sent but rarely. Lastly, arrange the biscuits bread, or sandwiches, with the meat or hard boiled eggs, olives, and celery. Cover the whole with a piece of waxed paper, and fasten down the lid securely.—Good Housekeeping.

"ORGAN EDITION"

—OF—

Darlington's Hymnal

The publisher of Darlington's Hymnal with Music announces the publication of an "Organ Edition," handsomely printed and substantially bound. Price, $1.75 net.

A number of organists who favor this Hymnal on its musical merits have repeatedly urged the preparation of an organ edition, and to meet the demand the publisher now issues a beautiful double-page oblong volume, printed on good paper, and so arranged that each hymn tune can be played without turning over a leaf. The pleasure and convenience of this special edition will add greatly to the popularity of Darlington's Hymnal, which has been pronounced the only genuine "congregational" tune book in our Church.

The latest edition of Darlington's Hymnal has an appendix containing the complete musical score of the Choral Service, the Litany, and the Holy Communion.

Oblong, 10 1/2 x 7 x 1 inch; cloth binding, red edges. Price, $1.75 net.

Regular edition, cloth, red edges. Price, 75 cents.

Notes of the World's Progress

BY REFUSING TO ACCEPT THE Boer ultimatum, England placed the former in the position of either striking before Great Britain was prepared, or postponing the struggle until the latter had mobilized a large army, and accumulated a vast amount of war material. The Boers chose the former alternative, and England now has something more than a semblance of right in the bitter struggle which will ensue. There is no doubt that England will eventually triumph, whether right or wrong, and the Boers must then accept whatever terms are offered. In the statement of President Kruger that "the war will either make South Africa free, or make it the white man's grave," there is a grave menace, as it implies that he will arouse the bloodthirsty savage tribes if it be seen that the Boers are being overpowered. The proportion of blacks to whites in South Africa is twelve to one, and should President Kruger be able to carry out his implied threat, the consequences are too terrible to contemplate. The present contest is not so much Great Britain, as the financiers, against the people of South Africa.

latter were convicted by most shameful and unjust methods. Russia and Austria have shown official disapproval of the proceedings, and the end is not yet.

IT IS ANNOUNCED OFFICIALLY that a temporary agreement has been effected in the matter of the Alaskan boundary dispute, which difficulty proved an effectual impediment in the proceedings of the Joint High Commission in framing a new treaty between the United States and Canada. The settlement is not prepared, but will stand until an agreement is finally reached. But little attention would have been attracted had it not been for gold discoveries in the Alaskan regions. Nobody appeared to care for the ownership of a frozen and well-nigh inaccessible strip of territory, until it was found that these same strips possessed immense riches beneath its unattractive covering. As Canada exacts a royalty on all mining operations, it became vitally necessary to arrange a temporary settlement, in order to prevent trouble among miners.

IN A SPEECH DELIVERED RECENTLY in Chicago, Secretary of War Root expressed in a convincing manner our relations to the Philippine Islands, and the reasons why the campaign is being prosecuted. Secretary Root holds that there is no Filipino nation, there being, on the contrary, over sixty nationalities occupying several hundred islands, and of these races, but one in opposition to American occupation. According to Mr. Root, the practically unanimous declaration of men who have studied the subject is, that the people are not fit for self-government, and they themselves do not want it, except under the protection of the United States. The struggle against the United States is prompted by the selfish ambition of a military dictator, who has gathered together all the forces of disorder, and with his hands occupies one-half the Island of Luzon. There is nothing more comforting than this optimistic view.

SERVIA, AN UNIMPORTANT, WEAK little Balkan State, has shown itself to be on the same level as ex-King Milan, its whilom ruler, who has made himself a notorious European character. While France has had a Dreyfus case, Serbia has had a case even more disgraceful. Some months ago a man attempted to assassinate ex-King Milan. He was at once arrested, but not brought to trial, as the authorities believed he represented a revolutionary movement, and they desired through him to become fully cognizant of the plot. Belgrade became the scene of political strife so heated that martial law was declared. On the opening of the trial the would-be assassin became one of the principal witnesses, and implicated men of all types, some of exceptionally high character and standing. The

THE SEASON JUST CLOSING HAS been one of unsurpassed prosperity for lake carriers. The extraordinary activity in iron and steel and their kindred industries, created a demand for vessels far exceeding the available tonnage, and the result was an advance in rates which has made the ownership of vessels exceedingly profitable, a condition which for some years has not existed. Ore has been carried this season on a basis of sixty cents per ton, and charters have already been made for next season on a basis of one dollar and twenty-five cents. This means that iron ore will be at least two dollars higher next year in Eastern markets.

THERE WAS HELD IN CHICAGO THIS week a convention of anti-imperialists, called for the purpose of forming a national association, having as its object united and vigorous opposition to the Philippine policy of the administration. While the honesty of leaders of the opposition may not be questioned, and although they may be sincere in their desire to save the country from what they believe to be the mistake of imperialism, it is nevertheless questionable as to whether such action as is proposed is in good taste as matters stand at present. Until a permanent policy is decided upon, it cannot be known what cause really exists for opposition, and any action antagonistic to the present policy cannot but encourage the Filipinos to further and more determined resistance, particularly if it be thought that a majority of the people of the United States are favorable to Filipino independence. Until the Filipinos lay down their arms, the question cannot be decided, hence discussion as to a final disposition of the islands is premature.

ADVICES FROM WASHINGTON ARE in effect that the question of establishing a parcels post will receive serious attention at the hands of Congress during the forthcoming session. It is believed such an innovation would not only be possible, particularly if certain second-class privileges now in effect were restricted, but would greatly result to the public good. At present the limit is four pounds and the rate of postage sixteen cents per pound. If a parcels post were established, the weight limit would be ten pounds, and the rates considerably less than those now existing. The Pacific coast would be greatly benefited, for while the express companies compete with the government on short hauls, they do not do so in the case of long distances.

IN HIS ANNUAL REPORT, WHICH IS now being prepared, and which will shortly be presented, T. V. Powderly, Commissioner of Immigration, will recommend more stringent laws to reduce the number of undesirable immigrants. Although laws now in force have accomplished desirable results, it is felt there is still room for improvement, as, in spite of safeguards, many immigrants succeed in entering the country who are likely eventually to become public charges. Immigration from some countries is on the increase, the number thus far this year being 300,000, as against 200,000 the whole of last year. Steamship companies are said to be growing careless, and a law will be recommended providing a fine of $1,000 in the case of each immigrant brought to this country in violation of law. Falling off in Irish immigration is due to improved conditions in that country through laws which afford better opportunities to the poor, particularly as to the ownership of land. Land can be purchased from the government, and paid for in installments, covering a period of thirty-five years.

CONSIDERABLE INTEREST ATTACHES to efforts now being made to push the Hanna-Payne shipping bill at the forthcoming session of Congress. Figures prepared by the Bureau of Navigation show that subsidies paid by the United States are small, compared to the amount which other countries contribute toward the upbuilding of their merchant marine. Friends of the bill claim there will be enough votes to assure its passage, but there are many who consider a subsidy system unnecessary, and that even if it were, it would be fully covered by the provisions of the Elkins bill, which proposes to achieve the same result by levying discriminating duties on all goods not imported in American ships. It is held that direct subsidies are an inevitable source of scandal, and that in the cases of certain great corporations they would be given a premium for running steamers to perpetuate their own monopolies. Under the provisions of the Elkins bill, there would be no discrimination as to owners of American ships, and all would share equally in benefits.

The Nineteenth Church Congress

THE nineteenth Church Congress held its meetings in St. Paul, Minn., Oct. 10-13th. On the evening previous to the opening of its sessions, the Minnesota Church Club held its Trinitide meeting at the Hotel Ryan. About 100 persons sat down to dinner. Bishop Whipple referred to the 40th anniversary of his consecration as occurring Friday, Oct. 13th, and to be commemorated at St. Paul's church, St. Paul. Dr. C. C. Tiffany, general chairman of the Church Congress, spoke of the opposition which the initial meeting had met, but Bishop Whipple, "the fearless Bishop of Minnesota," had boldly fostered the Congress, and had administered the Holy Communion at that first meeting in Calvary church.

SERMON BY BISHOP WHITE

On Tuesday the Holy Eucharist was celebrated at Christ church, Bishop Whipple being the celebrant, and Bishop White, of Michigan City, preaching the sermon. His theme was, "Unity in variety," having origin in God, expressed in nature and in grace, and seeking utterance in this Church Congress.

I am reminded, he said, as I stand here, of the words of the Bishop of Lincoln as he rose to speak to the people at Lambeth Conference, and said that he spoke with diffidence for the knowledge which he possessed he had had from the books which the men before him had written. I find myself addressing men who are studying what is needed, men who are trying to determine the methods under which the work of Christ may be successfully carried on under our existing conditions. I do not fear study, nor do I fear discussion, for the Word of God could not be God's Word did it not court examination and inquiry.

I am anxious that the Church should present a united front to the world. We are talking much of unity. Indeed, we boast a little of what we ourselves have done to bring about a reunion of a somewhat hostile, broken, and jealous Christendom. But I ask, is the Church united within herself? There is no conflict in God. There is absolute harmony in the divine thought and purpose and plan. Is there not a danger that we, drawing variable conclusions from differing conditions under which we live, may forget that the remedy for sin is one devised by God?

What are we doing with the Epiphany gift that made us disciples? Are we pleasing ourselves? Unless we bend low to the poor and blind and ignorant, and lift them up, unless we bear the infirmities of the weak, the weak will overthrow the strong. The Church must be a missionary. It cannot confine itself to the aristocratic pew, to glittering altars and beautiful singing, else social disorder will submerge the Church. I ask whether that type of Christian belief which we call independent, exhibits more positively the vigor of Christian service as ordered by God, than that which we call historical? I ask if there is a reluctance on the part of historical Christianity to incur the hardships which such missionary work would lay upon it? If there is, may it not be traceable to some doubt injected into our lives?

Let us not have so much controversial theology, and more of the unalterable Word of God.

In the afternoon the guests were given a drive around the city, after which they received the Church people of St. Paul, at the Hotel Ryan. The guest of honor, Bishop Potter, was on his way to Honolulu to arrange for the transfer of the Church there from English to American jurisdiction.

ADDRESS OF WELCOME

In the evening the sessions were held in the People's church. After prayer and music, Bishop Whipple made the address of welcome.

He referred to a meeting 28 years ago in the study of Grace church, New York, summoned by Dr. Potter, where many leaders of the Church, responsive to a like movement in the Church of England, assembled in the belief that the Church had never graver problems to solve, and that they could be solved only by the application of the Gospel; that there was no question, social or civil, affecting the welfare of a Christian State, in which the Church had not a deep and abiding interest.

It was in this spirit the Church Congress was founded, in the belief that out of fraternal intercourse and discussion would come clearer views of truth and closer union. This 19th session meets when grave questions again loom on the horizon. No branch of the Church had ever a more glorious mission or faced graver problems. The whole heathen world lies open for evangelization, and the Church must be in the forefront of missionary work. 'mid the strife of tongues it must hold up the olive branch of God's peace. Hearts cannot be reached by platitudes. Our tongues must be on fire with the Holy Ghost, and then men will believe. The outlook is not dark. Hands and hearts were never so busy as now in caring for suffering humanity. What is true of the Church's progress anywhere is true of the Church in America.

"DOES NATIONAL EXPANSION INVOLVE IMPERIALISM?"

Bishop Potter on rising to read his paper, on the above-named topic, was given an ovation.

After speaking of the apparent improbability that a nation which has delivered itself from the rule of kings and the rights of the few as against the disabilities of the many, will—being, moreover, a people that has adopted the principle of universal suffrage—revert to a system which takes away that privilege and remits the government to the will of an individual, which is substantially the imperial idea, he showed that whatever may be improbable, nothing is more entirely possible than that a nation which still preserves the form of democratic government may in time subordinate itself to methods of its administration, which, sooner or later, will bring the substance of imperialism along with them. We will suppose that a great trans-maritime power has acquired on these shores a large group of islands. These have come into its hands, we will say, not by conquest, but by purchase. This foreign power has thus acquired a great group of islands of which, practically, it knows nothing. They are very numerous, of very diverse populations, and of very dissimilar grades of civilization. The distant owner of them under this new dispensation is a republic, and their governments so far as they have had any, have rested upon monarchical and ecclesiastical traditions wholly alien to the republican ideas. Some of them, however, have been maintaining a long and heroic struggle for freedom, and have fondly hoped that their purchase by a republic will be simply the prelude to the achievement of that end.

Now it would seem at least reasonable that the conquering or purchasing republic, whichever you choose to call it, should inaugurate its relations to its new possessions by some conference with its dominant peoples. But no, its first word is subjection, its first demand, surrender, its first, second, and third conditions are: We will recognize nobody, we will treat with nobody, we alone will dictate all the terms. The policy does not work happily. These pestiferous wards of the nation will not lay down their arms; and these alien communities, instead of hailing the Stars and Stripes with a wild delight, are actually insolent enough to intimate that they would rather salute a flag of their own.

What strange stupidity, what exasperating obstinacy! True enough, when we turn back to the history of 1776 we find something curiously like it; but then the Declaration of Independence is a "back number," and "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" are the right only of the most favored nations.

Let us suppose, however, that the time comes when this foreign republic has crushed out the last ember of rebellion, and stifled every faintest note of protest. Unfortunately such a condition in conquered territories will not always "stay put." The old revolutionary idea survives, the old passion for freedom wakes anew (we never realized until now, when we see it in somebody else, what a naughty thing it was!) and so the new possessions must be vigorously, which, in fact, means rigorously, governed. There must be hosts of troops and scores of governors, and the organization of armies and staffs and military courts for nobody knows just how many islands.

How are these governments to be constituted? Who are to choose the governors? By what laws are they themselves to be governed? They have power, e. g., to inflict the death penalty. By whom is it to be adjudged—a drum-head court-martial? Who are to determine the revenues, and how are they to be administered? The sovereign authority, in the final sense of that term, is some thousands of miles away. How is it to regulate the appointment of governors, satraps, and the rest? Who is to decide as to their competency and fitness? The taxes are to be assessed and collected, and expenditures to be regulated. How is the chief ruler of the distant republic, in whom, as it happens, there is invested, at any rate for the time being, really despotic power, to attend to all these matters? * * * * Now when you take the question of government out of highly civilized communities such as ours, and transfer it to some semi-civilized islands, thousands of miles away, the question is not what expansion of that kind theoretically implies, but what is it likely, practically, to involve? It is, of course, conceivable that in the persons of those to whom these distant governments shall be committed, we shall find only the highest ideals, and only the most incorruptible integrity. But what are the probabilities in the case? What is the likelihood that there, any more than anywhere else, the stream will rise higher than the source? . . . Now, it would seem as if you could not easily find a situation more analogous to that of India than that which exists to-day, e. g., in the Philippines. There are the same diversities of race, condition, religion, tribal traditions, and the like, and in the case of these insular communities there is no binding interest whatever. To undertake to super-impose upon them our free institutions would seem to be an utterly hopeless task, and, in such a situation, what is the alternative but a form of government which, while not nominally, yet practically, in its essential absolutism, is imperial? The name may be absent, but the thing must be there, because it must be.

Yes, it may be answered at this point, perhaps this is so, but it cannot come to pass without our own consent. What is it, I would ask, which makes that impossible? Already we have seen how easy it is to drift into imperial methods, which are simply the methods of paternalism, in this very connection. A cardinal principle of "government of the people, by the people, for the people," is that the people shall not be treated like children and kept in the dark. A sound public opinion, we say, is the great bulwark of a republic, the foundation stone on which its popularity and prosperity must needs rest. Yes, but how are you going to get it if the public is kept in ignorance, in any particular case, of the facts? In war, it is true that military plans and movements may be concealed, lest we should give aid and comfort to the enemy. But in governing one of our own dependencies the suppression of the facts in the case, the concealment of what has actually happened, is just as vicious in principle with reference to the insurgents in Manila as it would be with reference to the strikers in Pittsburgh. In both these cases you and I and our fellow-citizens are entitled to know all that has transpired, in order that we may assist in reaching a conclusion as to what ought to be done in a matter in which, after all, the burdens are ours. and the final responsibility is ours no less. In this connection, the searching of the mails, the proscription of certain publications, and the stifling of correspondence is one of the most intolerable outrages which a free people has ever suffered, and it is significant most of all of the development of a tendency which foreshadows that, whether, as I have said, we are likely to have imperialism in our distant possessions, in form we already have it at home in fact.

The thing that destroyed Rome was the loss of her homogeneity. Her various tribes and races became at last too diverse and mutually hostile to be harmonized in any orderly and harmonious whole, and peoples incapable of self-government turned at length to imperious Cæsar with inexpressible relief.

It is the reaction that waits always upon that territorial expansion which imports into the political problem communities that cannot be converted to a higher civilization save by war, and that cannot be ruled save by arms. Our strength to-day consists in the triumph of those great civic ideals which are the property alone of Anglo Saxon civilization. But if we persist in diluting that civilization too largely, the result needs no prophet to forecast. We may have territorial expansion and material prosperity, and, for a time, it may be, have possession which in the mere dream of it has begun to inflame our people with a strange inebriety—I mean world-wide supremacy—but in the winning of it we shall have lost every distinguishing characteristic of a free and self-governing people.

I end as I began, by asking, Is it worth while? And if you ask me what to-day is an honorable alternative, I answer that a gracious Providence, as I believe, has just now given it to us in an ever-memorable achievement consummated last July at the Hague. Our native fire-eater who is generally half loafer and half army beef contractor, has attempted to treat the recent international peace conference with a fine scorn, which can only react on himself. For myself, I do not hesitate to describe it as one of the most memorable and pregnant events in human history. It has no legal force, you say, and no compulsory authority? That, an intelligent mind ought to see, is one of its noblest distinctions. For it has, and it will have more and more, behind it, that mightiest of all forces, which is moral force, and which finally is the one constraining power which determines the deliberate actions, whether of nations or of men.

It may, indeed, be suggested that any action which looks to the reversal of our present policy in the Philippines would be tantamount to an acknowledgment that that policy had been wrong. The objection is one which always reminds me of an experience of a professional friend of mind who for some years practiced medicine in Russia. On one occasion he was called upon to attend a lady of high rank residing in one of the southern provinces, who was suffering from a severe cold in the head. "I would advise your highness," he said, "to remove your shoes and stockings, and place your feet in a bucket of water, and afterwards rub them briskly with a coarse towel." "But," she exclaimed in dismay, "that would be washing my feet." "True, your highness," answered the doctor, "the prescription is open to that objection." To submit to an international court, representing the best wisdom of the best peoples, the question of the best disposition and future administration of the Philippines, may be to admit that as a nation we are not infallible, but, then, surely, a great nation can afford to leave that claim to the somewhat Pickwickian maintenance of it at present, afforded under alien skies and remote and un-American traditions.

The Rev. Rufus W. Clark, of Detroit, recounted the experiences of the United States in its first attempt at expansion in the conquering of the Northwest Territory:

The Indian chiefs had heard of our Declaration of Independence; but they did not want that, they wanted their own. After a prospect of the withdrawal of the British rule, some were pleased, as some had fought on the American side, but they did not want the British rule substituted by that of the United States. Thus, at the very outset of our history, the question which has constantly recurred was raised as to whether government without the consent of the governed must always hold, and without condition.

The American government evidently does not rest without qualification upon the principles of personal liberty. It rests upon the principle of the largest good to the largest number. This was clearly defined in its struggle with the supposed or actual rights of the colonies between themselves. Over federalism as opposed to provincialism there was a bitter contest; for federalism sacrifices had to be made. On this soil of the Northwest Territory there were hardships for the victor as well as for the vanquished; hardships for the soldier in his warfare of occupation. For the Indian also there was hardship, for a double reason; not only because the individual had to give way before the many, but a lower order had to give way before a higher social order. As to the particulars in which the law of progress works to individual inconvenience and loss, it is not always easy to determine.

Our meeting here, in the presence of a civilized and well-disposed people who generally listen to what we have to say, is in proof of the futility of much which once was very kindly but very firmly alleged against the expansion policy for the United States, being subversive of freedom, a policy dominated by public injustice, rapacity, despotism, and wrong.

Nor during the century of national expansion has there been any great modification of our government or divergence from the faith of the Fathers.

Other historical instances were given in the admission to the Union of Louisiana and Oregon, and the dire results foretold.

Among those who speak against expansion as involving imperialism, one class tells us of the degraded peoples we promise to annex, and the contagion of contact, of our incapacity to elevate and fit them for freedom. They speak slightly of a benevolent assimilation policy. We have certainly at hand those who by their changes in manners and in language and in knowledge are adequate to refute these aspersions—the French creole of the Mississippi, the Mexican upon our border, the Hibernians, Teutons, and Poles of our cities. In their tutelage we have not been altogether unsuccessful. Some of those who have fearlessly stood by the Indians as their advocates, will to-day admit mitigating circumstances in their present condition, in spite of the misfortunes and wrongs under which they have suffered. They have been protected from torturing and killing and eating each other. Their children have the privileges of government schools. Some, more fortunate and thrifty, have the right of franchise in local government. Some have been trained in, and accepted, the Christian religion. Among those who have stood as the advocates of the black man, there are those who do not deny that there is a process of elevation fairly under way, and that he is better off under our government, and that he has more privileges accorded to him than would be possible under most governments.

Then there is the other class who dwell upon the bad influences we are likely to exert upon an already educated and enlightened people, more especially those who are said to be in the Philippines, and who are alleged to be capable of working out their own salvation. As to this latter class, we allege that if our government, national, State, and municipal, is as hopelessly bad and rotten as it is represented to be, there should not only be no expansion, but no republic. If, with our bosses and ward politics to follow our laws; and trusts and the dram seller and the gambler to follow our soldiers, there are to be no compensating and correcting influences to follow as well, then let us call back Odys. Our government is not perfect; our schools and charities and morals have their faults, but they are the best the world knows.

Col. Bradley M. Thompson, of Ann Arbor, maintained that no strange powers were involved in the present problems. He said, in part:

The question under consideration has reference solely to the necessary effect upon this government of our recent territorial acquisition, not the possible, nor even the probable, effect. . . . The Act organizing the Territory of Michigan, substantially the same as all the others, provided for the appointment of a governor and three judges, and those officers were clothed with powers that my friends over here would term imperialistic. The governor and judges constituted a legislative council, with power to enact all territorial legislation. The governor was authorized to appoint all executive and minor judicial officers under the statutes which the council enacted, and the judges sat as a judicial tribunal to interpret the laws which they themselves had helped to make. The inhabitants of the Territory, the governed, had no voice whatever in enacting the laws under which they would live, or in selecting the officers who should see that those laws were executed, or the judges who interpreted those laws. And, as strange as it may seem, no provision was made for obtaining the consent of the governed. Was that government imperialistic? If so, it is imperialism of the Constitution, and its exercise has continued for more than a century, for essentially the same form of government exists in Alaska until now.

It is claimed, however, that these recent acquisitions involve imperialism for the reason that our new territory is distant. Our opponents intimate that if Puerto Rico and the Philippine Islands were snuggling up to us, there would be no particular objection in the nation throwing its arm around and embracing them. What they object to particularly is courtship at a distance.

When gentlemen speak of the Philippines as distant they omit from the problem the essential element of time. If we measure distance by time, Manila to-day is nearer New York city, the commercial heart of the nation, than was any other city acquired by the country at the time of its acquisition. When the Louisiana purchase was made, New Orleans could not be garrisoned as quickly as Manila can be to-day. When California was acquired from Mexico, it took three months to send a regiment from New York to San Francisco. A regiment can be sent from New York to Manila in half the time, and at half the expense.

There is another consideration of even greater importance, and that is the ability of the government to communicate easily and speedily with its representatives and officers in our new possessions. Now, so far as communication is concerned, space has been practically annihilated, and the President can at any moment whisper, as it were, to Gen. Otis at Manila.

Why, then, do you say that the Philippines are distant? Distance with us is a thing of the past, and survives only among barbarians. It is as rare as the divine right of kings, which is found this day in only one spot in Europe, unter den Linden.

Let me add this further argument: That expansion, our acquisition of Puerto Rico and the Philippine Islands, would not necessitate an increase of the army or navy; that they add materially to our national defences, and that, if they do, such increase would not endanger our liberties. It is true that in case of war we should be compelled to defend these new possessions, but what of that? Who ever claimed that while a chess player must guard all his pieces, the more he had to defend the greater his danger of losing the game? And upon the second point I desire to call attention to the example of England. She was never so free as this day. Her subjects never before enjoyed such complete personal liberty, and that liberty has kept step through the last century with an increase of both her army and navy.

Col. Thompson retired amid great applause.

The Rev. W. C. Pope, of St. Paul, continued the argument for national expansion. He said:

De Tocqueville has spoken of the valley of the Mississippi as being the most magnificent abode made by God for man. However magnificent it is, it would not have been a comfortable place for us had the views of the anti expansionists of 1803 prevailed. If they had, our guests looking across the river, instead of seeing the flourishing sixth ward, would see an impassable morass, with dense forests beyond. Those of our guests entertained in the luxurious homes of Minneapolis could only have been accommodated in log houses and pine shanties.

He cited President Jefferson's acknowledgment of extra constitutionality of the Louisiana purchase, and the revolutionary utterances of Josiah Quincy in regard to its effect upon the Union.

There are two sorts of imperialism, that of Rome and France and that of England. National expansion in the United States does not involve the imperialism of Rome; it does involve the imperialism of England. India knows the advantages of British imperialism. Millions of dollars were spent by England for the relief of the starving people of India. All the colonies of England acknowledge that it is to their advantage to belong to the British Empire.

The devil spoke more truthfully than is his wont when he claimed as his own all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them. All heathen rule is marked by cruelty and lust. But the kingdoms of the world are becoming the kingdoms of the Lord and His Christ. Eighty-four per cent. of the earth's area is now possessed by the Christian nations, while the events of the last eighteen months indicate that of Christian nations, those only are to rule which carry with them an open Bible.

The Rev. Charles Lester, of Milwaukee, said:

It is a question of God and responsibility. Do we ever think how Providence was at work when the people of the United States were moved to abolish the power of royalty and to transfer the Philippines to this nation? We are often warned of the terrible example of the Roman imperialism. But it is only the fate of all empires to do their work and then to fade away as a flower, so that they may give way to other nations with a greater sense of responsibility.

And shall we say that the people of the United States are not to be trusted? The question is less what we shall do with the Philippines, than what the Philippines will do to us? It must be remembered that the Christian religion and the United States are both founded on confidence in human nature, in the long run. We may certainly trust our government to do justice to the Philippines. We must look at things in a larger, grander way, trusting that God is always a Mediator in the affairs of humanity. We have thus to help on His plans, that His Name may be glorified and His kingdom come throughout all the nations of the earth.

Wednesday, Oct. 11th, on account of the rain, the audience numbered not more than 500. Bishop Whipple presided. Bishop Gilbert injected, as is his wont, the proper enthusiasm, and Archdeacon Tiffany gave the notices. The meeting was opened with prayer, and singing, "Onward, Christian soldiers." The topic was

THE SUNDAY QUESTION

The Very Rev. Dr. Campbell Fair, of Omaha, read in part, as follows:

There are two hundred passages in Holy Scripture bearing upon one day in seven as a day of rest and worship. May we not ask: Is all this Scripture merely dead history, or is the principle it contains a living issue, a social problem and a high religious duty?

What was given in Eden must not be lost in America. We need reverence, the rest day will promote it; we need ceremonial, the rest day will give it scope; we need morality, the rest day will teach it; we need religion, the rest day will uphold it; we need worship, the rest day will maintain it; we need rest—blessed, happy rest—the rest day will secure it. Nature supports revelation in giving humanity a weekly rest day, and is, next to Holy Scripture, the authority for its observance.

What prevents our having America's Sunday as it ought to be? What are the hindrances to a loyal, cheerful, consistent observance of the day, its import and obligations?

One of the hindrances is the Sunday newspaper, but I have no objection to a Sunday paper printed on Saturday, circulated and read on Monday.

How can we preserve the true American Sunday? We must maintain its God-given authority—it is God's day. It is the Church's day, and the Church has power to make it a day of obligation. It is the Republic's day. Sunday laws are all over the Union to keep it differently from the other six days. We must call it what it is, the Lord's Day. We must speak of it as what God made it, blessed, holy, sanctified, and hallowed. We should have a Saturday preparation for Sunday observance. We must adopt the God-given principle of a "Sabbath Day's journey." The Church should give the people attractive services to draw them to the house of prayer. The family in the house must recognize the Lord's Day in the home life. The laws of Church and State regarding Sunday should be read, published, and made known. The press must be our ally to secure a calm and reverent Sunday. The pulpit should speak in love and earnestness to preserve for God His own day. A strong and healthy sentiment must be aroused and maintained in favor of the day as a real rest. City observance and State recognition should be secured. The Saturday half-holiday and early closing must be worked for, and by all means the nation must be educated that if Sunday is lost the desolation has come; in the words of Emerson, "No greater calamity can befall a people than its loss of worship."

The Jews had a precept, "Whatever can be done on the day before or deferred until the day after, ought not to be done on the Sabbath."

The Rev. Henry Tatlock, of Ann Arbor, Mich., read the next paper. We quote in part:

The Sunday question is not a simple, but a compound, question. There is the question concerning the origin and authority of Sunday, and the question as to the proper mode of keeping the day. For us in this country at present, unfortunately, there is another. We are confronted with the question, not why we should keep Sunday, or how we should keep it, but whether we are to have any Sunday to keep at all. The institution is openly assailed by greed, by leisure, and by irreligion; and the question of the hour is, How shall we ward off these assaults and preserve for ourselves and the generations to come after us this costly franchise and ancient charter of our religion?

First, this is pre-eminently a cause in which union is strength. If we are to win this fight, we must get together. We must adopt a war cry which will rally to our standard all, of every name, who value the weekly day of rest. The ground upon which all the friends of Sunday may thus unite in common effort for its defence contains four impregnable positions:

Sunday is needed as a day of rest. The weekly day of release from labor is required for man's physical health; for his mental efficiency; for his social development; for the realization of his personal liberty, and for the maintenance of family life.

Sunday is needed as a day of religious observance. A weekly day set free for religious uses is demanded for man's moral health and for his spiritual growth. Without Sunday kept as a holy day, neither virtue or religion can be maintained.

Sunday, as a day of rest and as a day of religious observance, is required for the welfare of the State. What affects the physical, mental, social, moral, and spiritual condition of the individual, affects society, affects the commonwealth. The stability of the State rests upon the capacity and virtue of its citizens. Sunday properly kept gives play to the highest powers of man's constitution and elevates his whole manhood; it increases his efficiency as a worker and supplies him with the motive and the power of self-government.

Sunday as a day of rest and as a day of religious observance, is an American institution. It is here. It was introduced by the fathers of our political existence, and it has been maintained through all the changes of our history. It is recognized by the laws of the nation and by the laws of every State. It is a custom of the people, and the people have a right to demand that their customs shall be protected.

Multitudes of our people are in need of enlightenment and guidance in this matter. The people as a whole do not understand the subject. A campaign of education is necessary. When the mind of the American people is awakened to the moral issues of a cause, and the way to keep the right or to win the right is made plain to it, I believe that their conscience can be trusted to lead them in that way.

There is another cause inherently involved in the Sunday problem; it is the cause of shorter hours on the six working days of the week. To win the cause of Sunday in any real sense, we must contend for saner living on the other days of the week. What we have to attack and drive off the field is the cause, and that cause is the determination of men to use themselves and their fellows primarily or solely for the accomplishment of purposes which find their issue and fulfillment in the carnal life. This is the principle which leads men to impose upon themselves, and to demand from others, so much work that both they and their servants are completely exhausted in body and mind at the week's end, and have no energy left to use their Sunday for any purpose higher than mere animal existence.

The law cannot be invoked to protect a man against himself for the preservation of his life, but it is possible to protect others against his over-reaching greed. It is possible to compel every employer to allow his workmen opportunity to live as men. The Sunday problem is largely the workingman's problem, and if we are to have a real Sunday in this country, we must take up the workingman's cause and save him from the influences which are converting him into a mere machine for the production of wealth and the purveyance of pleasure.

What I have suggested looks to action; and to action through organization; but within the organization is the individual, and back of action lies the motive. Sunday is necessary for the welfare of the citizen, and therefore for the welfare of the State. But the State did not institute Sunday, neither can the State maintain it. Sunday is the offspring of religion, and only religion can maintain it alive. Behind all regulations of society for the preservation of the day, which organized effort may secure, there must be in the hearts of the people the motive of religion.

The Rev. W. S. Rainsford, of New York, said:

One pre-eminent danger appeals us to day. It is the growing disregard of law. Underlying the importance of the observations of the Lord's Day is the disregard of the law. The method of enforcement is too often the mistaken one, especially with the Episcopal Church. The mere assertion of an outward authority is not going to help us a bit. Christ turned to the masses of men when on earth. The world of men is the same as in early days. Man wants to be guided, and on this broad basis there is every reason to believe we shall guide them. There should be a larger use of the Lord's Day. A wise, liberal policy followed by the clergy will have the right effect.

The Rev. E. M. Stires, of Grace church, Chicago, was the next speaker.

He said that the problem might conveniently be divided into two questions: Why should we keep Sunday? and how can we make it what it should be? In answering the first question, he stated that it should be kept, first, for physiological reasons, and showed how heavily the stress of life bears upon all classes of men, and how great is the need of regular and periodic rest; and that failure to obtain it brings punishment swift and severe.

The second reason was industrial. He declared that much of the labor problem was involved in the proper observance of the weekly rest day; that long hours and seven days a week of toil meant short seasons and cheap labor. Unremitting toil is brutalizing; labor should be moral and intelligent; it could be neither without time for rest and reflection.

The third reason for Sunday observance was moral or social. A man's value to the community might be measured by his responsiveness to right and duty; but incessant toil makes his moral development impossible. National prosperity and stability depend on high social, intellectual, and religious ideals; these are formed in the family, and the character of a nation may be determined by the character of its homes. We might go farther, and say that the character of the family may largely be determined by the way in which it keeps its Sunday.

A fourth reason was political. No one questions the right of the State to determine the length of a working day; why should we deny its right to regulate the length of a working week? The State makes no attempt to enforce the religious observance of Sunday, but simply protects the day for the benefit of the community.

A fifth reason for Sunday observance, and with us, weightiest of all, was its religious character. No Christian land could remain truly Christian without the observance of a thoroughly Christian Sunday.

How can we make Sunday what it should be? He advised our using influence to enforce such wise laws as have been already enacted; to endeavor to obtain more effective legislation where the laws are inadequate. He urged the substitution of wholesome and innocent forms of recreation for those which are harmful; the best way to drive out that which was wrong and bad was the introduction of that which was right and good. One who speaks with authority for organized labor recently declared: "We have inscribed upon our standard, 'Eight hours for work, eight hours for recreation, eight hours for sleep,' and we also desire a Sunday in which to learn our responsibility to God and man."

He spoke of the influence we should bring to bear upon the well-to-do, the "society" people who give fashionable Sunday dinners and are addicted to Sunday golf. Another means of influence he mentioned was the clergy; they should remove all hindrances to the marvelously attractive and persuasive power of the services of the Church, see that they were rendered heartily and intelligently, that the sermons were practical, firm, gentle, direct.

The Rev. Dr. Beverly E. Warner, of New Orleans, a transplanted New Englander, as he described himself, said that Sunday legislation should not be enacted on religious grounds:

The law of one day's remission of labor is written deep in human experience. We note that man is not merchandise, to be handled as a bale of goods, nor a machine with only a material structure. His life may not be all toil, all grind. He must not be endlessly upon a strain, or he will break down, not as a Christian, but as a man. The law of Sunday observance is a recognition of the fundamental rights of man, that he shall not always bend over the desk, nor stoop at his work bench, nor delve in the trenches; but that he shall run and laugh, and dance and sing, a free creature in the realm of God, who is his Father on earth as in heaven. When the French revolutionists legislated the day out of existence, they could not legislate the necessity for the day out of the life of mankind. A day of rest is not a human suggestion as to what man wants, it is God's word as to what he needs. When men dispute this, and linger with their business cares in the borders of the rest day, snatching from it hours that they think are wasted else, because "time is money," they will have to settle accounts not with the parson, but with the outraged laws of nature.

There are three classes in our modern civilization to whom Sunday observance is of the profoundest importance. First, the workingman, whether in the mill, the shop, the field or the factory. The working people are often told by agitators that the Church, in her insistence upon Sunday observance, is their enemy. There could hardly be a more audacious falsehood.

Sunday legislation in the past may have been good or bad, wise or foolish—usually it is both—but Sunday legislation of some sort is the only barrier against a secularism that will in time make our working men and women victims of an intolerable slavery. But legislation as to how people shall use the day is quite another thing. We may exhort and teach and instruct, but we may not command. How to "keep Sunday" is a question for the individual conscience.

The second class to whom, as it seems to me, Sunday legislation is of the last importance is that large and eminently respectable part of the community who worship God, as they say, in the woods and fields, on the bicycle, on the golf links—who, in a word, give the whole day up to amusements. They have fair and specious standing ground. There are many good men who spend their Sundays as though there were no such thing as a church in existence. In many individual cases it is very difficult not to admit their argument. But to them we may say, suppose there were no churches in existence? You would be obliged at the same time to eliminate Christian civilization. History is our warrant for claiming that religion, its practice, its ideals, and its institutions, have given us the civilization we enjoy. If it is valuable to men, men are bound to maintain it in one way or another. The Turk, the infidel, agnostic, heretic, has the same privilege as the Christian under the Christian civilization. It behooves him as one who receives its benefits, to acknowledge responsibilities. One of these is the maintenance of an institution and a day which have done so much for the best life of the world, and are the only organized good against the mass of organized evil.

I do not mean to say that a man should not take any recreation he pleases on Sunday that is legitimate on any other day of the week. Indeed, I think that for people who toil, Sunday ought to be a recreation day, but in a way that will build up manhood and womanhood, and ennobles, not debauch, a community.

The third class interested in Sunday observance is composed of those who believe and call themselves Christians. That there is a laxity from Puritan methods of Sunday keeping is acknowledged, and, by some of us, with great joy. The painful rigidity of a mechanical observance of twenty-four hours is mercifully relaxed. But for all this, if you will closely scan the history of the American people, you will find that from those communities where men have been brought up in a religious, God-fearing way, with Sunday observance as a rallying point, have gone forth a manhood and womanhood which has been the backbone of our civilization.

For to the man whose vision is not bound by the earthly horizon, the Sunday is something more than a rest day from legitimate toil. It recalls to us in the midst of the world's business and anxieties, that we are more than children of the world and time; that there are higher things, and of greater importance to think upon, than the affairs that take a man to his office from Monday to Saturday. Sunday, in its past history and its present spiritual ideal, stands for the first fact that, in its analysis, a man's life is not to be written in terms of money or of commercial or professional success, but in terms of character as children of the Heavenly Father. But no mechanical rule for the day's observance will hold. What may be wise and good for one may not be for another. I feel sure that recreation has a large part to do with the proper keeping of the day.

Jesus acknowledged the divine command, for, as a man, He knew the divine meaning of it. But he lifted it out of its mechanical observance, and breathing the breath of life through the old formulas, showed that the divine intention had never been to impose a burden, but to confer a privilege.

THE BEARING OF THE NEWSPAPER ON INTELLECTUAL AND MORAL LIFE

Wednesday evening, the Rev. Cameron Mann, D. D., of Kansas City, was the first writer:

The thing to be remembered at the outset is that a newspaper is not a charity, a reform organization, a society for the diffusing of useful knowledge, but a commercial enterprise, just as much as a railroad or a dry-goods store. It is published to make money. The manager's eye is ever upon the subscription list and the advertising page. It is by them that the policy of the paper is controlled. "No man," once said to me the owner and manager of a great daily, "no man prints his ideal paper; he prints the best that he thinks will secure enough readers." And the simple fact is that most people do not care for that extent and accuracy of information, that sobriety of tone, that fairness of discussion, that anxiety for upliftment, which are the qualities which theoretically should make the successful journal. When such a one as Robert Louis Stevenson—having no grudge to avenge, no sourness of disposition to vent—could say, as he did say in the frank privacy of a letter to a friend, "To me the press is the mouth of a sewer, whose lying is professed as from a university chair, and everything prurient and ignoble and essentially dull finds its abode and pulpit"—when such a man could say this there is certainly a long and black indictment possible.

As everybody knows, there is another side. It is simple history that the newspapers, with all their faults, have done more to improve political life than any other agency. In our disgust at campaign lies and vindictive partisanship, we often regret those golden days, ere we were born, when the strife had to be carried on by occasional pamphlets and stump speeches, when it was not in some penny-a-liner's power to put foul aspersions of a fine character and malignant misconstructions of an honest career upon every breakfast table from Maine to Oregon. Nevertheless, in those days the lies were told and the abuse was showered. The newspapers do not make these things; they simply give in print what used to go in manuscript or by word of mouth.

The work done by the newspaper in civic life is more extended and effective. Enabling us to express ourselves together with our fellows, it makes us confident and aggressive; it stimulates, draws, drives us on. In such work I believe the bearing of the newspaper on life to be nearly as wholesome as it is strong. I believe there is more of intellect, more of morality, in our present general politics than there was a hundred or fifty years ago; and that this is due to a press which does make existing conditions clear, and does mean to insist upon justice and mercy.

But there is a vast tract of its columns devoted to other things than politics.

The news of the day—how much of it is worth knowing? How much of it instructs or purifies or exalts? What possible good can come from hearing them, and instantly forgetting them? Is the man who went off for his month's vacation in the wilderness, whither no mails come, at any serious disadvantage when he returns to town and meets the people who have been bolting their ten and twenty columns a day?

It would be an immense loss were we never to take a square look at this world. Never to peruse a newspaper would be to impoverish the brain, and to narrow the heart, and to chill the conscience. We ought to know that outside the steady business routine and the quiet, comfortable home, prowl the tramps and toughs and criminals.

In their direct advice the newspapers generally champion wholesome action and high ideals; in their lucubrations on social and domestic life, they are as fierce for virtue as are those melodramas where the curtain falls with the foot of innocence upon the villain's neck.

But indirectly the papers undo much of their advice and exhortation. The advertisements are constantly giving the lie to the rest of the sheet. Those quacks and scoundrels who prey upon human folly and guilt are derided and denounced on one page, but on the next the compositor sets up their brazen assertions, their lying puffs, their cunning snares. The frightful damage done by much of this advertising is beyond calculation.

The experiment of an "endowed newspaper" is well worth trying. It seems to me no more absurd than an endowed university. If such a paper does arise, and is successful, it will have a host of followers. The present great journals will in some way endow themselves, and rivalries will not show in sensational headlines or swarming columns, but in accuracy, cleanliness, and brilliancy.

In the meantime we shall best promote our best moral and intellectual life by leaving nine-tenths of the contents of our daily paper unread.

The Rev. Dr. Mackay-Smith, of Washington, was the second writer:

The average American newspaper, whatever may be its qualities, is probably of as high a type as its readers either desire or deserve. In so far as the majority of newspapers teach boastfulness, pretence, and exaggeration, they by this means hinder the intellectual growth of the nation. The mental currency is debased.

As a whole, our newspaper press stands for morality, and few are the editors who would deliberately "sell the truth to save the hour, or palter with Almighty God for power," but, nevertheless, there is, in the case of almost every paper, an unconscious tendency to make vice attractive and virtue repellant, by the way it depicts crime.

Of course there is another side to all this. Our newspapers are not all so black as they are printed. They generally stand for justice and fair dealing between man and man; and they have their other great virtues.

The Rev. David H. Greer, of New York, said:

Looking then at the newspaper as it exists to-day in our American society, we find that it is a power which is both bad and good. It is a sword that cuts both ways. It has its noble qualities and the ignoble defects of its qualities. The "newspaper habit," the stimulating newspaper habit seems to have so fixed itself upon some people to-day that while there is a literature of the best and purest sort around them on every hand, within their easy reach, it is not sufficiently stimulating for them to take and read.

The fault in that case, however, is not with the newspaper; the fault is with the people who so exclusively or excessively use it that they have lost their taste for anything but the newspaper. It is not the newspaper, but the "newspaper habit" that does the hurt. Looking for, living in, and feeding on, sensations is not the kind of process that contributes most effectually to moral growth and advancement. The greatest moral Teacher that the world has ever seen—to claim for Him nothing else or nothing more than that—did not lift up His voice or cry aloud on the streets; and when the people asked Him for wonders and for signs, told them in reply that no signs should be given them. And the people who live to-day by wonders and by signs, by the stimulating signs and wonders such as it is the business of the newspapers to give them, and who have so acquired the newspaper habit that they cannot live without them, cannot hope to appreciate the beauty and the truth of that greatest moral picture which has ever been portrayed on the canvas of human life. And yet however bad the sensational habit of the newspaper may be, one thing is worse, and that is to try to overcome the sluggish moral method which has helped to produce it. For that would be to exaggerate the very thing which it deprecates, and in trying thus to remove the barrier, it would only build it bigger.

Let me then in a sentence sum up what I have said: Take the best newspapers, and take them in moderation.

Prof. C. N. Gregory, University of Wisconsin, said:

There are about 5,000 newspapers in the world, of which practically one-half are printed in the United States. Over 600 papers are printed here in our own State of Minnesota. Five are published in Alaska. The newspaper is everywhere.

The newspaper reflects its subscribers' taste. I think that is a generally recognized fact; and for that very reason I should be unwilling to condemn the American press, for in so doing I should feel that I was also condemning the American people.

It was Matthew Arnold who first pointed out the great good to be gained through studying the opinion of a nation, or a national institution, held by foreigners. He referred to it, you remember, as the "opinion of contemporaneous posterity." I know of no more effective standard by which to judge our press; and, candidly, I think that the judgment of the world is that our press is not so good as the press of some other countries.

In closing, Mr. Gregory called attention to the fact that no special training was required of the newspaper man, such as is necessary in the other professions, and gave it as his opinion that much good work would result if editors detected in venality in connection with their work, could be disbarred from the field of journalism, just as a lawyer would be prevented from practicing after he had been found guilty of some piece of professional rascality.

Dr. Flavel S. Luther, of Hartford, Conn., considered the newspapers responsible in no slight degree for the present standard of living had by the American laboring classes, and while he admitted that they frequently printed stories of vice and degradation, he yet maintained that it was the secret crime that was most to be feared, and argued that the publicity accorded misdoings by the papers acted as a strong preventive of crime.

It is manifest to me that the average intelligence and refinement of a community varies directly with the number of newspapers which enter it. There are fewer lynchings where there are more newspapers. Subscription lists are small from towns with few and poor schools.

Recently, foreign investigators have become interested to learn the cause of the acknowledged superiority of the American workmen. At least one distinguished observer was impressed by the, to him, surprising fact that they all read the papers. It is fair, is it not, to judge the paper as we judge schools and churches—by the character of those who patronize them most extensively?

But the average newspaper does much besides opening and keeping open the mind of the average citizen. We complain of their intrusion into private affairs. Generally, not always, but generally, these private affairs, this private business, ought to be intruded into. Our modern civilization is so complex that individual privacy, whether we like it or not, must be restricted to a narrower range than in the time of our fathers. Most of us have been more than once held back from folly in word and deed by the sure knowledge that "it would get into the papers."

The last speaker of the evening was the Rev. William Wilkinson, of Minneapolis, who announced at the very outset of his remarks that he intended to champion the cause of the newspapers.

"You gentlemen who preceded me," he said, "have made the mistake of confusing size with importance. You see a two-column account of a Dakota divorce case in the papers, and neglect to read the statement of a great benefaction published on the same page. Gentlemen, a diamond doesn't fill as much space as a brick, but it's more important."

Continuing in the same strain, Mr. Wilkinson expressed his thorough belief in the newspaper, and in newspaper men.

IS NATURE CHRISTIAN?

The above was Thursday morning's topic. The Rev. Frederick Palmer, of Andover, changed it to "Is God in Nature?" and then treated of it in part, as follows:

It is assumed by many people that nature authentically represents God, and that therefore such matters as are most generally associated with nature, as, for instance, the weather, are direct indications of His will. It follows from such reasoning that the state of things as it is, comes to be regarded as sacred. Such reasoning causes opposition to the use of anaesthetics in surgery. God had established pain as the necessary result of the knife; was not the prevention of pain a violation of natural, and therefore divine, conditions? In this way, conditions which are primitive come to be regarded as more divine than subsequent ones. "Let us discover," says the ecclesiast, "what was the primitive condition of the Church and re-establish it." In reality, the fact that a condition was primitive is presumption against its desirability. God's method is a series of steps each in advance of the preceding. The natural comes first, the spiritual follows later. Nature is that which is; the Kingdom of God is that which ought to be; and between the two there is a great gulf fixed. Nature is not Christian; see her indifference to pain, her waste, her lack of sympathy.

If there is an element in nature which is divine, how can we find it? How can we distinguish it from that which is the mere stuff of the spiritual? By training in ourselves spiritual perceptions. We must know what is spiritual when we see it. If God dwells apart from and outside the world, it will be true that whatever is human is non-divine. But if God dwells, through His Spirit, in the plan of nature and in the better side of humanity, then nature, in its largest sense, has a Christian element.

Our answer to the question with which we started will therefore depend upon the meaning we give to the word "nature." If it means the condition of things without man's stamp, the current course of events, that which is, apart from the spiritual element in it, we may say that it is not Christian—then it is merely stuff to be worked over into spirituality. But if we claim a larger meaning for the word, if nature is not only the sum, but the soul of all things, then we must triumphantly declare that we recognize through it all a plan, a spiritual element, a presence of God, which in its highest manifestation is Christian. Then we shall gladly contemplate the incarnation of Christ as something perfectly natural.

The Rev. Joseph Hutcheson, of New York, took the ground that nature was not Christian, but in a profound sense was deeply antagonistic to man's higher life:

Man by nature is not bad. Man's nature is divine creation. It cannot be called good or bad; no more than the moon or stars. Man must create his own character and happiness. He is not born a complete Christian. The history of civilization obeys the law of evolution. Within this movement there is a moral force which struggles and seeks to make perfection possible. That which makes Christianity possible is the conflict going on between nature and the higher life. He who surrenders to nature ruins himself. Our nature becomes Christian, as by struggling with it we are able to become God-like. Here is the history of civilization, which obeys the great law of evolution, which shows a spiritual power struggling to make itself felt.

The Rev. Frank W. Baker, of New Haven, Conn.:

It is apparent to all that the forces of nature are the pulsing of God's power through the universe. If this be true then the forces of nature must give us imperfect revelations of God. The laws of nature are so much as we have discovered of God's work in the universe. Nature stands for definite relationship in the universe to God. The most perfect fruit of nature is man. Man is created in God's image. The answer to the question depends upon what we call Christian. I must believe nature is Christian.

The Rev. Charles Olmsted, S. T. D., of Bala, Pa.:

Nature is not the universe, but a very small mechanical part of it. There is a middle term between God and nature. Nature is Christian if Jesus Christ created it. Nature is not God, but simply something He creates. God is beyond the creation. Nature is an organism, not a mechanism. Nature has physical but not moral evil. If there is no moral evil in nature what are we to infer? Simply that the soul must progress. And if a man wants to be a Christian he must follow out toward this state of final perfection. A great mistake is made in turning means into ends. If we say nature is God do we not turn means into ends? Nature is an instrument in the hands of God for His children and His own glory.

The Rev. Charles J. Wood, of York, Pa.:

Jesus Christ is the revelation and manifestation of the unseen God. Does nature reveal the same God that Jesus Christ reveals? It is not possible then that the world would be antagonistic to Jesus Christ. Law prevails in the whole of nature, all is subject to divine will. As soon as we come to this conclusion, we are confronted with a specter. We look out and see a great amount of evil and we say, can God be a God of evil? If the world is the manifestation of God, how can this be? Nature is Christian, it does reveal the God of love and goodness.

Dr. Rainsford:

It is absolutely vital to the well being of the Church, that we may not be misunderstood. I believe that to-day we must stand before men and say we believe in a universe in which there is above all, in all, and through all, a God or no God at all. In discussions of this kind people remember your qualifications but not your principles. Nature is God's from top to bottom, from the croak of the frog to the voice of the archangel.

The Rev. David H. Greer, D. D., of New York:

If I did not believe nature is Christian through and through I would never speak from a Christian pulpit again. Man stands today upon creation's summit as though some voice had spoken and said: Go in the name of the Son of Man. The scientists have agreed that no force can be lost and that physical force as such cannot persist. There must be something beyond the physical force, and science is retreating from its stand. I believe that nature's God is the God of Jesus Christ.

The Rev. B. W. R. Tayler, rector of St. John's church, Los Angeles, said:

There is a great deal of truth in the theory of an immanent God in the universe. I believe that not a leaf falls fluttering to earth but subserves some higher purpose. I believe that God moves behind all the phenomena of the world. And yet I believe also that there are many things in the world which are foreign to God, and which are not of God. Nature is essentially cruel and inexorable, and in these senses it cannot be Christian in spirit or in fact. In spite of the deification of nature as we have heard it to day, I am still old-fashioned enough to believe in the old theology that whereas God created all things and created them good, yet evil has been in some way and at some time introduced into the world, how and where does not now enter into the question. I still believe that the fall of man was downward and not upward, and that man is trying to climb back to his original righteousness. I still believe in a kingdom of sin and a kingdom of grace, and that Christ came into the world to call us out of one into the other. For if there is no kingdom of sin what let me ask was the purpose of Christ's mission? Why should we pray for the breaking down of the kingdom of sin, Satan, and death? I did not intend to speak on this subject, but in the face of what has gone before I have felt it my duty. Let me ask those who believe that nature is Christian, whether they ever teach their Sunday school children the catechism which tells them that by Baptism they are brought out of one kingdom into another; which tells them that "being by nature born in sin, they are hereby (i. e. in Baptism) made the children of grace?"

LESSONS OF THE RITUAL CONTEST IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND

This was the topic discussed on Thursday evening. The Rev. John H. Elliott, S. T. D., of Washington, D. C., distinguished between the "Ritualists" and the "Anglo-Catholics." He said:

That the ritual contest marked a re-action against the declension in the Church of England from the stately services provided for at the Reformation—the result of Puritanism and of the coldness of the Georgian era. This re-action is both religious and aesthetic, but it has come in "like a flood," and threatens to submerge the doctrine and ritual of the Church of England. This extreme tendency has received a check through the recent action of the Archbishops. The "Declaration of the English Church Union," made in February last, spoke for 40,000 communicants, and has been compared with Magna Charta. This document, the speaker proceeded to criticize. In it we read that "the rulers of England in the 16th century declared that nothing was to be taught except what could be collected from the Catholic fathers and ancient bishops." This is from a canon of 1571, but is not an exact quotation. As given in the "Declaration," it would seem to countenance the idea that tradition, written or oral, was the rule of faith in the Church of England. But this is contradicted by the 39 Articles made authoritative at that very time, wherein (Article 6) the Holy Scriptures are made the rule of faith. The Canon really required that nothing should be taught as de fide "but what is agreeable to the doctrine of the Old and New Testaments, and has been collected out of that very doctrine by the Catholic fathers and ancient bishops." This puts the matter in quite a different light. The same canon of 1571 enacts that the 39 articles must be subscribed to by the clergy, and hence that they must accept the statement of Article 28, that "the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was not by Christ's ordinance, reserved," etc.

The speaker then took up the reference in the Declaration to Canon 80 of 1604, wherein is expressed the purpose of not "forsaking or rejecting the Churches of Italy, France, Spain, Germany," and others, except where those Churches "were fallen, both from themselves in their ancient integrity, and from the Apostolical Churches which were their first founders." But such statements must be taken with others in the same body of Canons, which prescribe the Prayer Book and its ceremonies as the exclusive use of the Church of England. The two principal statements of the Declaration, therefore, fail to sustain the ritualistic position. The tendency of the Ritualistic party is to confirm the impression that no Church can be Catholic without being Roman Catholic. Some have openly avowed this. This would wipe out Anglo-Catholicism, destroy the mediating position of the Church of England, and imperil that Church in her own home.

Dr Hall of the Western Theological Seminary, Chicago, gave a resume of the Ritual Contest, in which he showed that the present so-called "crisis" is but a passing phase in a conflict which has been going on for many years.

Two principal issues are at stake; (a) the right of the Church of England to govern herself in spiritual matters, and to adjudicate her own spiritual causes; (b) certain doctrines of the English Church which have been re-emphasized by the Tractarian Movement after a century of neglect.

The speaker showed that the Reformation Settlement, as it is called, of Henry VIII's reign expressly reserved to the Church her spiritual autonomy, although that autonomy has been in practice frequently violated since by the State. The assumption of jurisdiction in spiritual causes by the Privy Council, and the passage of the Public Worship Regulation Act of 1874, were usurpations on the part of the State. In disregarding the authority thus claimed, the Ritualists have not been lawless, but have been fighting the battles of the Church. The recent "Opinion" of the Archbishops, that the ceremonial use of incense is unlawful, was shown to be mistaken, and without legal force. It has been received in a loyal temper by the Ritualists, although they have not in every instance conformed their practice to its terms. The problem of expediency is involved.

Dr. Hall deduced three lessons: (a) the real loyalty of the ritualistic movement, considered as a whole; (b) the lawfulness of the ritual in dispute, at least in its general features; (c) the importance of the movement as involving constitutional questions of the gravest nature, and doctrines which are vital. The Ritualists do not contend for mere millinery. He did not pretend to assert that no mistakes had been made. The movement has been too large to avoid all instances of folly.

The Rev. Louis S. Osborne, Newark, N. J., was the next speaker. The local press made the following comment in connection with his address:

The Ritualists were, on the whole, the more polite and considerate party in the debate. They were not aggravating in their manner of speech nor its substance unless, indeed, their general views of the Church's method might be construed as an aggravation. One of them made a word of sharp retort, but it was only a word and went no farther.

On the other hand the "Broad Church" side was aggravating in one of its champions, the Rev. Mr. Osborne. He was irritating because he was witty and even flippant, and toyed with the Ritualists in the most unceremonious fashion. He told a funny story or two, told them very well, to show how unimportant the Ritualists were, and how they confounded noise with importance and strength.

Mr. Osborne told his hearers that he had been engaged in missionary work in the far West during a part of his career, and had found that good beginnings could always be made with the Prayer Book. The young clergyman starting in the rough West could invariably meet with success with the Prayer Book only, but the young man who came as a Ritualist, and expurgated from and added to the Prayer Book invariably made a failure. The people loved the Prayer Book; they did not love the Ritualists.

The Rev. John A. Staunton described himself as Ritualist and Rationalist:

There were now, he said, two parties, the Broad Church party and the Ritualists or Catholic party. As the divergence grew, the danger increased. Each party possessed its peculiar truths. The Ritualist thought he had the Catholic truth, and the Broad Church party was courting the "Higher Criticism." Each side had its faults. The vice of the Ritualist was intolerance. He was always looking within. The Broad Churchman seemed to be ashamed of the past; the Ritualist was afraid of the future. To talk of a Reformation settlement was foolish; such a settlement would annihilate the Church. He believed that both sides should study confidence, tolerance, unity, and all would be well, for both had the truth.

The Rev. Lewis Cameron, of South Orange, N. J., maintained

That the contest between Ritualism and anti-Ritualism was but a surface indication of underlying principles that, in the nature of humanity, have always been antagonistic to each other. He was glad that the English struggled boldly for their opinions, thus purifying the Church. For England, as has been said, is a country "where faith is not afraid to reason, where reason is not ashamed to adore." Mr. Cameron protested against the waging of religious contests through newspapers—always shallow and sensational.

The Rev. W. C. Pope, St. Paul, Minn.:

The ritual contest does not affect the Church so much as is supposed. Thousands of churches are going on in the even tenor of their ways regardless of any contest. "A single cricket under a gate will make more noise under a gate than five fat oxen grazing." They have two crickets in England, Mr. Kensit, and Sir Vernon Harcourt. We in this country have "Liberty" stamped upon our hearts and upon our coins. We are a free people because we resisted tyranny at the time of the revolution. The English are a free people because the barons of England, under the leadership of Stephen Langton, Archbishop of Canterbury, wrung from King John the Magna Charta, the provisions of which have been carried out in all respects, except in the case of its first Article. That Article is "The Church of England shall be free." The right of legislation has been taken away from the Church, as has also the right of election of its bishops. That is enslavement of the Church.

In some of the churches incense is used. The Archbishop of Canterbury has recently given it as his opinion, that its use should be given up. Not because it is wrong in itself. He is careful to state that. Moses saw it used in heaven, as 1,500 years afterwards did St. John. The Archbishop grounds his opinion on an Act of Parliament 300 years old, which he thinks indicates that it should not be used. Archbishop Temple has made a great and good name for himself, but he has nothing of the spirit of Stephen Langton. The opinion of Archbishop Temple is a warning to us to hold fast to the advice of the father of his country about entangling alliances, lest we find ourselves condemned by an Act of Parliament 300 years old.

The Rev. D. W. Rhodes, D. D., of St. Paul, asked:

Is this to be the Church of priestcraft or of individual Christians? Shall man surrender his conscience to another? Or is man to stand on his own feet, answerable for his conscience and his conduct to God alone? The English are disturbed with good cause. They feel that the aim of the Ritualists is to sweep the nation back into that heritage from which its fathers delivered it. The English apprehend that the confessional, with all its infamous history in the past, is to repeat its records through the centuries of the future. "We want no guide behind the screen of the confessional, no guide who gets his inspiration from the banks of the Tiber."

Friday morning, Oct. 13, brought Topic VI.

Before the discussion began Archdeacon Tiffany, of New York city, said a graceful l'envoy. He noted the warm, sympathetic greeting from the senior bishop of the diocese of Minnesota, the staunch friend of the Congress, who stands for unity in the midst of that diversity which reflects a vigorous life. With his strivings for this unity he has never appeared as the opponent of legitimate divergence. With grace the dean thanked every one excepting the press. An omission corrected later by Bishop Whipple. The music deserved the kind things said of it. The organist, Mr. Normington, and the precentor, Mr. Phillips, handled the music with skill. The audiences had displayed intellectual apprehension and sympathetic attention.

THE PRAYER BOOK IN THE LIFE OF THE PEOPLE.

Warden Butler, of Seabury Hall, Fari-bault, Minn., read the first paper in part as follows:

The Prayer Book is the human record of God's truth interpreted by the devotional life of God's people in all ages. Outside of a man's own heart the most powerful influences on the earth to mould his character and shape his life are God's truth and human experience, and these are the two factors which enter into and make up the Book of Common Prayer.

Note how closely the Prayer Book touches and enters into life from its beginning to its end, not to narrow or repress it, but to lift it towards heaven. In the will of God the sanctuary of earth is the family. Into it comes the first born. How can he be kept "unspotted from the world?" He is dedicated to that and bound to Christ in Holy Baptism. He is taught God's truth in God's house, that it may forever be lifted above all other truth. He is confirmed that his struggling soul may be strengthened by the Holy Spirit. He enters into the communion of saints that he may partake of their heavenly food and live their heavenly lives. He is called to bring his bride to God's house that his marriage may be blessed to the end of his life and for the endlessness of the time to come. Amid all the changes and chances of life the Prayer Book calls him to prayer and praise that he may consecrate the earthly event to an heavenly end. And at last he hears life's end, as he began it, as one dedicated to God, as one who can say, "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

The Rev. B. W. Tayler, of Los Angeles, Cal., was the next speaker. He said:

If the Anglican Church had done nothing more for the cause of Christ than having given to the world the incomparable treasury of devotion known as the Book of Common Prayer, she would justly have earned the gratitude of Christendom, and won for herself an immortal name in the annals of Christianity.

If we trace the history of liturgical development from the simple Eucharists of primitive Christianity to our own times, we shall find a never failing trend towards enrichment and adaptability. The public devotions of the Church have steadily and constantly been brought more and more within the realm and reach of the people. The Prayer Book is the people's book. It is a Book of Common Prayer, common alike to priesthood and laity; but the share of the people has constantly grown and increased. It is a holy book in which clergy and laity, with or without each other, may reverently approach their God; but its sweetness and fullness and richness are only discovered when conjointly the priest at the altar and the faithful in the pews unite in orderly, intelligent and reverent worship of the Majesty on High. * * * Should the demands and occasion arise, we may be prepared to see still further necessary and useful changes in the Prayer Book; not in its structural beauty, not in its authoritative pronouncements, not in its undeviating fidelity to the Faith once delivered to the saints, but in its adaptability to the varying needs of the people called by God into the unity of His glorious kingdom, His Church.

For, after all, why is the Prayer Book so dearly loved by the devout Churchman? Because it, as no other book does, voices his best yearnings and aspirations God-ward. Because it brings before him the imperfections of his sinful nature, and makes for him a highway of approach to his Maker. Because it faithfully reproduces the devotional spirit of that book so dear to all of us, the Holy Bible. Because in it he sees the fruit of the Church's splendid struggle for four centuries against unwarranted usurpations of a foreign ecclesiastic. Because to him it stands as firm as a rock between a spurious Catholicity and a narrow sectarianism. Because its rubrics, its offices, its preface, tell him of the brave struggles of brave men against the attempt to pollute the well-springs of the Church's devotional life. Because it is to him not only a book of devotions and prayers and praise, but a book of theology, a book of ecclesiastical history, a book of Church law. Because it demands his obedience to lawful authority, in the home, in the Church, in the State. Because it blesses him at the font, instructs him in youth and manhood, provides for his every spiritual need and necessity in life, and when he is laid reverently in the grave, it provides a way for the faithful to plead before God that he, with all those who are departed in the true faith of God's Holy Name, may have their perfect consummation and bliss in God's everlasting kingdom.

It is said that the art of writing a prayer equal to the splendid suffrages of the Prayer Book, is a lost art. So much greater reason then for holding fast to our priceless heritage. So much greater reason for loving this book above all other manuals of devotion. For there towers above them all in the sublimity of those supplications with which the people of God approach the presence chamber of the Divine Majesty, this glorious achievement of consecrated and intelligent worship, the Book of Common Prayer of the English-speaking people.

The Rev. H. W. Jones, D. D., of Gambier, Ohio:

Much of its decided effect may arise because it is liturgical! Its quality of courage, of conviction, arises no doubt from the fact that it puts aside all hypocrisy. It shows a quality of wisdom in its reference to practical matters, and in its reference to conduct and life. This is the wisdom of the saints. This is a characteristic of the Prayer Book. He noted its inspiration—this might mean much or little, but it certainly meant an inspiration of vigor. The book contains defects. It might be improved, but no liturgy composed "on the spot" could improve it, for the book is the growth of ages.

The Rev. N. S. Thomas, son of Bishop Thomas, of Kansas, who was at one time rector of St. Paul's church, St. Paul, surprised and delighted his friends.

He concluded his address by saying he was called to the bedside of a dying Methodist, when he said the 51st Psalm as a prayer. To his astonishment, the whole family united with him in saying the psalm, according to the Prayer Book version.

The Rev. Dr. Frances J. Hall, Chicago:

The Prayer Book helps us to come in touch with Almighty God. It is the ripe fruit of the ages. In it may be found offices of penitence, adoration, praise, thanksgiving, and petition. It contains the devotional skill of devout men of all ages. He believed there were depths in the Prayer Book yet unsounded.

The Rev. W. H. Knowlton, Redwood Falls, Minn., went to hear Mr. Moody:

The minister who made the opening prayer, took it mostly from the Prayer Book. As the people went out, they praised, not the sermon, but the prayer.

Bishop Whipple made a few remarks:

He referred, in his impressive way, to the early days of his consecration by Kemper and his associates. Then he had resolved that love should be the bond that should bind him to his brethren, and it had been returned to him in full measure; love, too, from the clergymen of other Churches, to whom he had always bidden God-speed in every venture made for Christ. He spoke of the high intellectual merits of the Congress, and the loyalty to Christ displayed by the clergy in attendance.

Then came the Gloria and the benediction, and the congress was closed.

The News of the Church

The Board of Missions

The Board of Managers met at the Church Missions House on Oct. 10th, the Bishop of Albany (vice-president), in the chair. There were present nine bishops, 12 presbyters, and six laymen.

Election of a General Secretary

The Rev. Arthur S. Lloyd, rector of St. Luke's church, Norfolk, Va., was elected to the office of general secretary. The Bishop of Washington and the Rev. Dr. Eccleston were appointed a committee to notify Mr. Lloyd of his election.

Domestic Missions

Communications from 11 bishops having domestic missionary work within their jurisdiction were considered, and, in cases where necessary, favorable action was reached. Under the Woman's Auxiliary United Offering of 1898 provision was made for the continued training of Miss Josephine Peterson and Miss Elizabeth W. Morgan in the Deaconess House at St. Paul, Minn. Miss Nellie Lees, on the nomination of the Bishop of Salt Lake, was appointed a missionary worker, and Miss Elizabeth D. Lyon, upon the nomination of the Bishop of Spokane, in the room of Mrs. Folsom, who did not enter upon duty. The following resolution was adopted:

That, inasmuch as the Bishop of Arkansas guarantees to raise an additional $4,500 from the congregations of his diocese and from his friends outside of the diocese, to put into the mission work in Arkansas, and inasmuch as the Board approves the plan of work which he has laid before it, that an additional appropriation at the rate of $3,000 per annum be made, to take effect on Dec. 1st next, at which time the present appropriation for the late Bishop's salary terminates.

Foreign Work

Letters were at hand from three foreign bishops. In response to an appeal from the Rev. F. E. Lund, endorsed by the Bishop of Shanghai, $1,850 was appropriated for a missionary residence in Wuhu, and the Rev. Mr. Ingle was requested to devote attention to raising money for the purchase of land, and the building of a church at the same station. The missionary there is at present occupying two rooms in a rented Chinese house on very low ground, which house also contains a chapel and guest room. The Jane Bohlen house at Wuchang will hereafter be occupied by a day school, the boarding department being removed to the new St. Hilda's Hall, to which, with the permission of contributors, the existing scholarships will be transferred. The Bishop took the name of St. Hilda for the new institution, because it is difficult to explain the use of family names for buildings, etc., to the Chinese, and because St. Hilda was a great missionary and a sturdy Anglo-Saxon. The Bishop of Tokyo's appointment of the Rev. Geo. Wallace, of San Mateo, Cal., to succeed the Rev. Dr. Davis in the Trinity Divinity School in Tokyo, was approved, and the necessary appropriations made. The Bishop of Cape Palmas enclosed a proclamation of the Liberian government imposing a fine of $2,000 upon the Cape Palmas Greboes for individual losses, and $1,500 on the Barrake people for the spoliation of the mission property, and cutting off their communication with Harper and with the sea until the fines were paid. This proclamation was drawn out in consequence of the destruction of the Eliza F. Drury station, and the great damage done at Hoffman station. Word was received that in July Mr. Momolu Massaquoi, at present in charge of St. John's School, Cape Mount, "was crowned Prince of Gallinos in the court of the native chief and commissioners." The crown is described as of solid silver, Spanish make, and more than 100 years old. Miss Woodruff writes: "His father having died in December, 1896, he would naturally have been made chief, but, thinking it would interfere with his work, he refused the honor which his people wished to confer upon him. . . . Doubtless his counsel prevented much harm when they were incited to rebellion by what seemed to them an unreasonable tax by the authorities of Sierra Leone." Measures were taken to reach an appointment of a presbyter for Cape Mount, which, it is hoped, will be consummated directly. Three applications had recently been received for the position.

The Auxiliaries in Toledo, Ohio

Met on Oct. 4th, in St. Mark's church, with nearly the usual number. The Rev. Dr. McDonald, the rector, presided and conducted the devotions. Reports from the different branches were very meagre, as in summer, almost nothing has been done. Trinity, however, reports a flourishing junior branch, making dolls for the Christmas market, and St. Mark's has now 35 members in the senior branch. At the last United Offering Trinity gave $153, and St. Mark's, $50. Miss Miller wrote, and in her absence Mrs. Strong read, a valuable paper on Alaska. Mrs. Bolles said that out West all the mission stations have auxiliaries. She urged a large attendance at Mrs. Twing's reception in Trinity parlors, Oct. 18th.

The Chicago Branch

The first monthly meeting of officers and members for the new year was held Oct. 5th in the Church Club rooms. There were about 42 members present. After noonday prayers by the Bishop, the president, Mrs. Lyman, welcomed the ladies to a new year of work, and urged a faithful devotion to all our missionary interests. Under the last changes in the constitution by which five vice-presidents were elected to the diocesan committee, the president had made the following divisions of the Auxiliary work: Miss Arnold to be Auxiliary at large, Miss Stahl to have charge of the Junior Auxiliary, Mrs. Fullerton, of Domestic Missions, including Indian and colored, Mrs. Hopkins, of Foreign Missions, and Mrs. Street, of Diocesan Missions. Mrs. Fullerton and Miss Stahl were also appointed to secure an interest in the Auxiliary among country members. One monthly meeting will be devoted to each division of the work in turn, and will be in charge of the vice-president of that division. The president gave out the following notices: All branches using mite chests for the United Offering will have the funds collected this month, and sent to the diocesan treasurer; the semi-annual meeting of the Auxiliary will be held in Grace church on Tuesday, Oct. 31st, and the annual meeting of May, 1900, will be held in Trinity church. The subject for the monthly November meeting will be Domestic Missions. Mrs. Street spoke a few words on our Diocesan Missions, and presented Miss Prophet, who spoke on city missionary work. While most of us had pleasant memories of the summer, she had been with many to whom summer has no meaning but suffering and sorrow, but the trying days had been blessed from the ministrations the Auxiliary had enabled her to give. Her work is specially in need of a relief fund, from which she may give occasional small sums to worthy people, thus enabling them to take the step toward leading a better life. Sometimes a soul can be saved by expending a few dollars. The Bishop followed with a few words about city missionary work; there is work for three or four women like Miss Prophet. He wishes the Auxiliary to realize they are founding a great and abiding system of charitable work which should be supported and enlarged. The Bishop introduced the Rt. Rev. Dr. Gray, Bishop of S. Florida. His address aroused an interest in his work which should bring him the help he needs. He has to be general missionary as well as bishop, and tries to bring the ministrations of the Church to every class without distinction, whites, blacks, Indians and Cubans. He has great need of more missionaries and of money. His Church Home and Hospital at Orlando needs specially to be supported, that it may continue to minister to the sick and lonely ones who seek their health in Florida's warmer climate. The president followed with an appeal to the Auxiliary to help Bishop Gray, to take his words home and send some tangible assistance. A letter was read from the Rev. F. W. Merrill, of Oneida mission, diocese of Fond du Lac, and it was announced that a meeting might be arranged where he could give a lecture to the Auxiliary in behalf of the mission hospital at Oneida. The roll call showed that 16 branches were represented. The offering was devoted to Miss Prophet's relief fund in the city missionary work.

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

The Bishop went on Monday evening, with Bishop elect Williams, to Omaha, where on St. Luke's Day he was to be preacher at the consecration of the Bishop Coadjutor of Nebraska. On his way back he will attend the Missionary Council in St. Peter's church, St. Louis, on the 24th, and following days.

The Daughters of the King announce their annual meeting to be held on the 18th, in St. Peter's, Lake View, the Rev. John Henry Hopkins being preacher.

Death of Mr. Jas. M. Hills

The church of Our Saviour mourns the loss of its senior warden, Mr. James M. Hills. For a period of 25 years the regularity of his attendance at the Church services has been marked. He had been connected with the parish from its early years, and gave his time, advice, and service, even up to that period of life when such could be rendered only at a cost of greater personal effort and strength than is often willingly given.

The semi-annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary to be held in Grace church on Oct. 31st, will be, it is hoped, of interest to all members of the auxiliary. Interesting speakers will be invited for both the afternoon and evening meetings, and the rector and ladies of Grace parish will extend a cordial welcome to all. The Auxiliary is pleased to have their devoted president back with them again after her summer abroad. Mr. and Mrs. Lyman reached home Oct. 4th.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The 40th anniversary of St. John's church, New Rochelle, was commemorated Oct. 12th.

At the chapel of the Church Missions House a farewell service was held on St. Luke's Day, on the departure of Dr. Edmund Lee Woodward, as a medical missionary to China.

Actors' Church Alliance

At St. Chrysostom's chapel, of Trinity parish, was held Sunday, Oct. 15th, the first of a series of monthly religious services under the auspices of the Actors' Church Alliance. The preacher was the Rev. Geo. M. Christian, D.D.

Deposition of Dr. De Costa

On Sunday, Oct. 8th, at a service held at Christ church, Poughkeepsie, Bishop Potter canonically deposed from the priesthood the Rev. Benjamin F. De Costa, D.D., late rector of the church of St. John the Evangelist, New York, at the request of that clergyman.

Arrival of the Dean of Ely Cathedral

There arrived in New York Oct. 14th, by the Cunard steamship "Lucania," the Very Rev. Charles Wm. Stubbs, D.D., dean of Ely cathedral, England, who comes to make a lecture tour in the principal cities of the United States, and expects to be a preacher in several of our churches.

Memorial of Rev. T. McKee Brown

At the church of St. Mary the Virgin, the clay design has been put on exhibition, in one of the chapels, of the proposed altar tomb, with recumbent effigy of the late rector, the Rev. Fr. Brown. The tomb will be placed near the church portal, and be of Caen stone.

General Theological Seminary

The senior class have elected as president, Arthur P. Hunt; vice-president and treasurer, J. F. Ward; secretary, Geo. Green; historian, J. P. Gibson. A feature of the new year is a sermon on missionary knowledge, conducted by Dr. Roper. There are about 40 men in the new entering class.

Bishop Potter's Trip to Hawaii

The Bishop as a member of the committee on Increased Responsibilities of the General Convention, will start for Honolulu on the steamer "Gaelic," from San Francisco, Oct. 23d. His purpose is to acquire information as to Church conditions and needs in Hawaii. It is understood that he will later go to the Philippine Islands on a tour of ecclesiastical investigation.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

The New York Local Council met Oct. 10th, in St. Paul's chapel, of Trinity parish. A leading feature of the proceedings was an address on his experiences in the Philippines, by Mr. John H. Peyton, army secretary of the brotherhood, just returned from Manila. On motion of Mr. Geo. W. Van Sicler, a committee was appointed to raise funds to send out a force of clergy for work among natives.

Death of the Rev. Chas. R. Treat

The rector of St. Stephen's church, who died last week, was much worn as a result of the toil associated with the removal of the parish from the old to its new site, and it is believed that this hastened his death. He was born in Newark, N. J., in 1842, his father being a Presbyterian preacher. He graduated from Williams College in the class of 1863, and for a time was a member of the college faculty. Studying theology at Andover, Mass., he served in several Congregational appointments, and spent some time in Europe, finally taking holy orders in the Church. He was rector of the church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, for five years, resigning in 1888 to enter upon the curacy of St. Thomas' church, New York. He was in charge of the church of the Archangel at its beginning, and had been rector of St. Stephen's church from 1892. The funeral services were conducted at the church, by the Rev. Drs. Peters, Brown, Houghton and Lubeck, and in the presence of a large body of the clergy. The interment was in Trinity cemetery. He leaves a son in the priesthood.

Church Workers Among Colored People

The 15th annual conference, held at St. Philip's church, Oct. 3-6th, was opened with a sermon by the Rev. G. Alexander McGuire. On Wednesday morning the Eucharistic address was made by the Rev. J. W. Johnson. In the afternoon the "Higher education of colored youth" was discussed, and a paper read by the Rev. H. L. Phillips, on "The Church and the saloon," which gave rise to a temperance discussion. On Thursday night the theme was "Clerical support." On Friday the Rev. Wm. V. Tunnell preached on "The opportunities afforded us for the uplifting of humanity." Miss Julia C. Emery made an address to colored women, and reports were considered of woman's work for missions. A paper was read which had been prepared and sent by Mrs. M. E. Lambert, of Detroit, on "The true missionary spirit needed in woman's work for the Church." Mrs. L. B. Henderson read a paper on "The life of service," and Miss Julia L. Smith, one on "women as workers in the mission field." The closing session was held Friday night, with addresses by the Ven. Archdeacon Pollard, and the Rev. Messrs. Thomas

W. Cain and Geo. F. Bragg, there being a large attendance. On Thursday the members of the conference visited St. Philip's House in a body, and on Friday were hospitably received by the Very Rev. Dean Hoffman, D. D., D. C. L., at the General Theological Seminary.

Pennsylvania

Ozi William Whitaker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

On Tuesday evening, 10th inst., the parishioners of the memorial church of St. Paul, Overbrook, gave a reception to the Rev. C. T. Brady and Mrs. Brady, which was largely attended.

St. Barnabas' Church, Kensington

The vacancy in the rectorship of this large and important parish, has been filled by the election of the Rev. Edward L. Ogilby, of the church of the Advent, Nashville, Tenn., who has accepted the unanimous call of the vestry, and will take immediate charge of the work. St. Barnabas' is a free church, with sittings for 800; the communicants enrolled number 570; and in the Sunday school are (including 54 teachers) 792 souls. It has a parish and school building, a rectory, and in the tower a fine peal of four bells.

Death of Rev. John P. Hubbard

Rector emeritus of St. Matthew's church, Francisville, occurred late on Thursday night, 12th inst., at his residence in Germantown, of heart disease. He was born in England about 80 years ago, and came to America when a youth; graduated from Yale University, whence, in 1851, he received his second degree, M. A. In the same year, he was ordered deacon by Bishop Meade, of Virginia, and served a part of his diaconate as missionary in Shanghai, China. On his return to America, he was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Eastburn, of Massachusetts, and became rector of St. John's church, Northampton, in that diocese. He was successively rector of Christ church, Bay Ridge, L. I.; Christ church, Westerly, R. I.; church of the Strangers, Washington, D. C.; Trinity church, Shepherdstown, Va. In 1880, he became rector of St. Matthew's, Philadelphia, retired from active service in 1892, and was made rector emeritus. The funeral service was held in Calvary church, Germantown, after Evensong on Sunday, 15th inst., and the interment was in Forest Hill cemetery, Jamaica Plain, Boston, Mass. His widow, a son, and three daughters, survive him.

Consecration of Holy Nativity, Rockledge

This elegant edifice was duly consecrated by Bishop Whitaker, on the 9th inst., in the presence of more than 75 clergymen and a large congregation. The rector's warden, Mr. N. A. Stockton, read the request to consecrate, and the rector, the Rev. F. H. Argo, the sentence of consecration. The sermon was preached by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Talbot, Bishop of Central Pennsylvania, and at its conclusion, Bishop Whitaker celebrated the Holy Eucharist. The choral service was rendered by the combined vested choirs of the church of the Saviour, West Philadelphia, and of the Holy Nativity. In 1893, mission work was begun in Rockledge by the Rev. H. A. F. Hoyt, then rector of Trinity church, Oxford. In accordance with certain provisions contained in the will of the late R. W. Ryerss, a parish was duly organized, and the name given to it as requested by him, and then the legacy of $30,000 for its erection became available. To this sum, Mrs. Mary A. Ryerss, widow of decedent, added $25,000 more, for the interior work and furniture. One-fourth of the residuary estate of Mr. Ryerss is bequeathed to the corporation, the income to be used in paying the rector's salary, providing the music, and for other work in the parish. The church is a one storied Gothic structure, and cruciform in shape. The exterior is faced with Port Deposit granite, laid in broken range, and trimmed with Indiana limestone. The clerestory is supported by arches springing from pillars, the shafts of which are polished Vermont marble. The nave and side aisle floors are laid in mosaic; and the side walls faced with marble 4 ft. high. The furnishings and east window in the chancel were additional gifts of Mrs. Ryerss; the window, a special study, is in three sections, representing the Holy Nativity, the Presentation in the Temple, and the Christ before the Doctors. The altar and reredos are of white marble and onyx; a bas-relief of "The Last Supper," is the central feature of the latter. In the vestibule is a marble tablet with this inscription:

To the glory of God and in loving memory of Joseph Walu Ryerss, Susanna Walu Ryerss, and Annie Walu Ryerss. And to the memory of Robert Walu Ryerss, born March 8, 1831, died Feb. 16, 1896, by whose generosity this parish was founded and endowed, and these buildings erected.

The whole interior wood finish, including the choir stalls and sittings, is quartered oak. At the south east end of the church, opposite the organ chamber, is the Lady chapel, beautifully furnished and decorated. At the conclusion of the services, Mrs. Ryerss entertained the clergy and others on the grounds. Mrs. Ryerss had prepared at great cost a set of altar cloths, probably unsurpassed in America. They are of ecclesiastical silk, embroidered in gold and silk, and set with iridescent opals, rubies, and cut crystals, mounted in gold. Owing, however, to the inability of the rector and vestry to provide suitable care for such priceless ornaments, it was deemed expedient to withhold their presentation.

Washington

Henry Yates Satterlee, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

On the Sunday after Admiral Dewey's welcome to Washington, he attended service at St. John's church, and gave thanks for his safe return home. As there was no announcement of his coming, he was able to walk quietly over to the church with his son, unmolested by any demonstration.

St. Andrew's church re-opened

For service on Sunday, Oct. 8th, after having been closed for repairs and decoration during the summer, regular services being held in the parish building. The rector, the Rev. J. B. Perry, celebrated the Holy Communion at the early service, and preached at the later. In the evening, the sermon was delivered by the Bishop of Delaware.

Institution of Rev. E. D. Johnson

On Sunday, Oct. 8th, the Bishop of Washington instituted the Rev. Edward D. Johnson as rector of Grace church, Georgetown. Morning Prayer was said by the Rev. E. M. Thompson, the father of the new rector, Mr. John O. Johnson, reading the lessons, and the sermon was by the Rev. Dr. Devries. The Rev. Mr. Johnson is a graduate of the General Theological Seminary, spent his diaconate at the pro cathedral, and was ordained to the priesthood last Trinity Sunday.

Michigan

Thomas F. Davies, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

St. Paul's Church, St. Clair

On Sunday, Sept. 24th, the Bishop paid his annual visit to this parish, and administered Confirmation to nine candidates. An interesting fact in connection with this parish, is the noteworthy proportion of candidates entering the Communion of the Church in recent years, through Confirmation, from the denominations. The religious antecedents of four of the candidates of this year were: One Presbyterian, two Methodists, and one Roman Catholic. In the evening the Bishop visited St. Mark's church, Marine City. This church has been under the charge of the rector of St. Clair, the Rev. A. Corbett, for some months past, while the congregation has been freeing itself from financial incumbrance. A rector is now about to be elected to the parish.

The Southern Convocation

The October meeting was held in Dexter. It was one of the most interesting meetings the clergy have held since the formation of this body. The preacher, in the morning, was the Rev. R. B. Balcom, and the speakers at the evening missionary meeting, the Rev. Wm. Gardam and Archdeacon Sayres. The paper in the afternoon session was read by the dean of the convocation, the Rev. C. H. Channer: topic, "The practical value of pastoral visitation. A very complimentary vote of thanks was extended the writer, in which it was suggested the paper be published in the Church periodicals.

Delaware

Leighton Coleman, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Lawn Fete at Bishopstead

A very successful lawn fete, in aid of the day nursery and hospital for babies, was held at Bishopstead, from three o'clock till ten on Sept. 21st. There was a very large attendance, and the various stalls and tables were well patronized. The house and grounds were beautifully illuminated, conspicuous among which was the Bishop's new Church flag, and over the front door, the word "Welcome" in electric lights. The proceeds have reached $940 so far.

The Clerical Brotherhood

Met at Bishopstead on Tuesday, Oct. 3d, when a paper was read by the Rev. Henry Ward Cunningham, on "The Apocrypha, its place in the Bible and use in the Church." Besides the clergy of the diocese, there was present the Rev. Dr. R. Holland Taylor, rector of St. Thomas', Homestead, Baltimore, who took part in the discussion.

Quincy

Alexander Burgess, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Bishop hopes, our Lord favoring, to return to his diocese, at least for a visit, as early as Oct. 20th, and may be addressed at St. Mary's School, Knoxville, Ill. He desires his clergy to send word to him there, if any episcopal service is needed at this season.

The Swedish Mission

On Tuesday of last week the president of the Standing Committee visited Woodhull, to complete the transfer of the valuable church property, from the Free Lutheran Society to our Swedish mission. The deed is made to the Bishop of Quincy, and his successors in office. The Bishop loaned the money which was needed, and presented the note and mortgage to the Trustees of Funds and Property of the diocese. In the evening a service was held in the Swedish language, the Evening Prayer of the Swedish Church being "said and sung." Dr. Leffingwell made an address, being introduced by the Rev. Carl Nybladh, rector of St. John's church, Galesburg, and priest-in-charge of Swedish missions in the vicinity. Mr. Brunner, a candidate for orders, is rendering most helpful service as lay-reader in this mission. The prospects for a successful and growing work are good.

Long Island

Abram N. Littlejohn, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The members of the church of the Nativity, of Mineola, are discussing the best means and ways to build a new edifice, to cost about $2,500. Subscriptions are already being received.

Change of Rectors

On Sunday, Oct. 8th, the Rev. William W. Bellinger officiated for the last time as rector of St. Mary's. He will take charge of his new parish in Utica, on the 15th. On the same day, the Rev. Dr. J. Clarence Jones will begin his duties as rector of St. Mary's, and the Rev. James T. Russell, now of St. Matthias' church, Sheepshead Bay, will take up his duties as rector of St. Thomas' church. The Rev. F. H. Church, lately of Tacoma, Wash., has been chosen to fill temporarily the position of assistant minister at the church of the Incarnation, made vacant by the transfer of the Rev. W. H. K. Stafford to St. Mary's church, where he succeeds the Rev. Charles Donohue. A free kindergarten is held in the parish house of this church, and has a large attendance.

The Southern Archdeaconry of Brooklyn

The regular meeting was held in Grace church on the Heights, the Rev. Frederick Burgess, rector, on the 17th. A business meeting was held at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and dinner served at 6:30. In the evening, addresses were made by Archdeacon A. B. Kinsolving and the Rev. T. G. Jackson.

Minnesota

Henry B. Whipple, D.D., LL.D., Bishop
M. N. Gilbert, D.D., LL.D., Bishop-coadjutor

The Sunday School Institute

The 12th annual gathering met at the church of the Messiah. The session opened with a celebration of the Holy Eucharist. At the business meeting, Bishop Gilbert presided. The following papers were then read: "How to make the scholar an active Church worker," speakers, the Rev. C. C. Camp, the Rev. D. W. Rhodes, D. D.; "How to grade the school," the Rev. J. J. Faude, D. D., the Rev. C. E. Haupt, Miss Stella Cole; "Child study," Prof. D. E. Woodbridge, the Rev. A. K. Glover, Miss S. C. Brooks. Infant class—Mrs. George Anderson. The papers were well prepared, and elicited much discussion by both clergy and laity. In the evening, Bishop Edsall delivered an interesting address upon "Qualifications of a Sunday school teacher." The ladies of the parish furnished luncheon at noon.

Ohio

Wm. Andrew Leonard, D.D., Bishop

The Bishop's Tenth Anniversary.

The anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Leonard was celebrated Oct. 12th, by a service at Trinity cathedral at 11 a. m., beginning with the Holy Communion, Bishop Leonard, celebrant. About sixty of the clergy of the diocese were present. The Bishop gave an address, the same that he delivered in St. Paul's church, Cleveland, the first Sunday after his consecration, supplementing it by words of gratitude for the happy and hopeful work of the 10 years past, and for the cordial relations that have always held between himself and the clergy and laity of the diocese. Bishop Leonard was consecrated in St. Thomas' church, New York, by Bishop Williams, who had ordained him both to the diaconate and the priesthood, and was the first bishop ever consecrated by Bishop Williams. The same Epistle and Gospel were read as at the service 10 years ago. At the close the clergy were invited to dine with the Bishop at the Hollenden. In an after-dinner speech the Rev. E. W. Worthington gave some interesting data in regard to the growth of the diocese within the decade. The clergy have increased in number from 63 to 97; parishes, missions, and chapels from 93 to 121; communicants from 8,000 to 15,000. Approximately 10,000 persons have been confirmed. The offerings of the diocese have exceeded $2,000,000. Relatively the Diocese of Ohio during these 10 years has made greater progress than any other diocese in the United States. Of the 97 clergymen canonically connected with it, 15 only were here 10 years ago. Of the 15, seven only are in parochial life. Of the seven, three only are in charge of the same parishes they served 10 years ago; 18 of the clergy have passed to their reward. The names of these were read, the clergy present all rising to their feet, and remaining standing.

The Northeast Convocation

Held its autumn meeting at Trinity church, Jefferson, Oct. 2nd and 3d. Monday, at 7 p. m., Evening Prayer was said, and an address made by the Ven. A. A. Abbott, on the revised convocation system, and the missionary work of the diocese. Tuesday, 9:30 a. m., Morning Prayer was followed by the celebration of the Holy Communion, by Dean Frazer and the Rev. Howard M. Ingham. At the business session 12 clergymen were present. Reports were heard from the clergymen in charge of the missions at Ashtabula Harbor, Conneaut, East Plymouth, Boardman, Niles, Jefferson, and Kinsman. The Rev. W. W. Corbyn read an excellent paper on "Giving of our best," and in the discussion which followed, the Rev. Messrs. Frazer, Cooke, and Avery took part. At 12 m., the usual Mission Prayers were said. At 2 p. m., the Rev. Robt. Kell made an address on the topic assigned him: "How my Daughters of the King work, and what are the results," which elicited much interest and many questions. The next subject was, "What progress the Church in this convocation ought to make during the coming year, financially, numerically, spiritually, and some suggestions towards doing it." The Rev. Messrs. Frazer, Ingham and Cooke, spoke on the first division, the "financial"; the Rev. Messrs. Ingham, Kell, and Allen followed with addresses on the second—"numerically," and the Rev. W. Fred Allen read an excellent paper on the last, the "spiritual." The Dean closed with appropriate collects, etc.

Reception to the Rev. H. L. Gaylord.

On Thursday evening, Oct. 12th, a reception was given in the Cathedral House, by the Dean and Mrs. Williams, to the Rev. H. L. Gaylord and his bride. The Bishop and Mrs. Leonard, with the clergy of the cathedral staff and their wives, assisted in receiving, and a large number of the members of the parish gave cordial greeting to the curate and his wife.

West Virginia

George W. Peterkin, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The consecration of the Rev. William L. Gravatt as Bishop-coadjutor of the diocese, will take place in Zion church, Charlestown, Mr. Gravatt's parish church, and the changes that the church is undergoing are being hastened with that in view. The side galleries are being removed, and the interior is to be beautifully decorated by a Baltimore firm.

The Kanawha Convocation

Met in Christ church, Point Pleasant, Oct. 4th and 5th. Preliminary services were held Oct. 3d, at 7:30 p. m., with a sermon by the Rev. Gerald Cord. The convocation opened with Morning Prayer and sermon by the dean, the Rev. J. S. Gibson. A business meeting was held, after which papers were read by the Rev. Gerald Cord, on "Holy Baptism," and the Rev. C. M. Campbell, on "The Holy Bible." Evening service was held, with sermon by the Rev. R. D. Roller, D. D. Oct. 5th, morning service with Holy Communion was held, the convocation sermon being preached by the Rev. J. R. Joyner. A business meeting with informal reports, and a paper by the Rev. J. S. Gibson who took for his subject "Christian Science," occupied the afternoon. The convocation closed with a missionary service at 7:30 p. m., at which the Rev. Gerald Cord made a short address on diocesan missions, the Rev. R. D. Roller, on domestic missions, and the Rev. J. S. Gibson on foreign missions.

North Carolina

Joseph Blount Cheshire, Jr., D.D., Bishop

Convocation of Charlotte

Held in All Saints' church, Concord, Oct. 3d and 4th. Morning Prayer, with sermon by the Rev. C. L. Hoffmann, was followed by a celebration of the Holy Communion. A paper was read by the Rev. Chas. Fetter, on "Missionary work in the diocese, and its support." Evening Prayer was said, with a sermon by the Rev. H. C. Parkman. Oct. 4th there was an early Celebration and Morning Prayer, with sermon by the Rev. Royal Shannonhouse. A paper was read by the Rev. H. T. Gregory, on "Missionary work in the convocation, and its support." At 8 p. m., convocation closed with Evening Prayer, sermon by the Rev. Charles Fetter. Special services were held by appointment for the colored people, the Rev. Messrs. P. P. Alston and T. B. Bailey taking charge.

Editorials and Contributions

A "CHURCH CONGRESS" has been meeting in London at the same time with the session at St. Paul of the American assemblage of the same name. Some items of news have been waited over the wires, though we must, of course, await the arrival of the Church papers for an adequate account of the proceedings. Many subjects of importance were on the programme, but the present condition of affairs would inevitably cause the most interest to centre about questions relating to ceremonies of public worship. It is to be remembered also, that the Congress meets for the first time in London, the very centre and focus of ecclesiastical life and activity. Excitement reached its height when the Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe made a speech attacking "Ritualism" in violent terms. The Archbishops are of opinion that incense is not "an unsuitable or undesirable accompaniment of divine worship," and consider that "the instructions for its use by divine authority in the Jewish Church would alone forbid any such conclusion." But Mr. Webb-Peploe does not agree with the Archbishops. On the contrary, according to the cablegrams, he compared Ritualism to "the fetich worship of barbarians," and of incense in particular he said that it was "another form of savagery in worship." At this the excitement was so great that the audience for a time became uncontrollable. These remarks were greeted with a storm of hisses and cries of "shame." According to one account, "the Congress literally rose at" the speaker, and it required the utmost effort on the part of the Bishop of London to calm the excitement. If we may rely upon the truth of these reports, it seems evident that the Congress as a whole is not of the Kensit and Harcourt way of thinking.

THE Interior (Presbyterian) expresses doubt as to some evangelistic methods in vogue, and is of opinion that unless they can be reformed in certain directions they will have to be "reformed altogether," and dropped out of use. There is much too much made of bigness, for one thing. The evangelist must be big, the auditorium big, the crowd big, and when the bills come in they are appallingly big.

Only a few of the more wealthy churches can meet the sums required, which run from $200 to $500, or even $1,000, a week, the last-named sum being necessary when the meetings are held in buildings specially rented or erected for the purpose. Sincerity and simplicity are instinctively regarded as twin virtues, and it does not give one the right sort of feeling to find the conductor of a revival demand for himself and assistant a suite of apartments at the best hotel, such a suite as few millionaires would venture to engage for their own use. And yet we have known just that demand made by a brother preaching the gospel of self-denial, and in one case, where we were called in to audit the bills, found that the expense was run still higher by the requirement that his meals should be served in his private apartments. Others travel accompanied by singers and private secretaries, until one is tempted to inquire whether "the work of an evangelist," as Paul conceived it, required the staff of a major-general and the cuisine of a bishop.

"CUISINE of a Bishop" is a delicious bit of Presbyterian irony, and will be especially enjoyed by Western "Episcopalians." (Bishops are Episcopalians, since they are members of the episcopate.) Whatever may be the luxury of the Episcopal cuisine in the East, we know not; here in the mid-West and beyond, they trouble themselves with gastronomic economy about as little as with astrology. Their late dinners too often consist of a doughnut and a piece of cold pie at a railroad lunch counter; and in their visitations we fancy they have as little to say about the "cuisine" as they have about the family sewing. When they are at home—well, perhaps it is not best to pursue the subject. We fancy they live about as the other clergy do, and that not very high. They do not have suites of rooms and private dining-rooms, as a rule, at the hotels, though they might be glad to get away from the crowd sometimes, if they could.

"Out of the Eater Came Forth Meat"

M. DE BLOCH is the author of a work on war and armaments which is said to have had a profound effect upon the Czar, and to have prompted the famous peace circular. M. de Bloch contends that great wars have become practically impossible. Modern resources and methods have brought things to such a pass that war on a really great scale must well-nigh prove the ruin of both sides which engage in it. But, asks this writer, if nations cannot fight on the large scale, and the appalling results which stare them in the face must deter them from even trying the experiment, what is the use of these great armies and navies? According to trustworthy statistics, over a billion and a quarter dollars are being wasted every year in preparing for war, which can only be waged at the price of national suicide. Why not give up these useless armaments, and spend this money in "ameliorating the condition of the people"? But it is the existence of these armaments, the perfection of their organization, the destructiveness of their weapons of warfare, which have, according to his own showing, rendered war impossible. Take away or reduce the armaments, and exclude the most deadly and widely destructive weapons, and we merely return to the former condition of things. Wars become possible again, and the spirit of ambition and national aggressiveness will shortly make them seem desirable. The great nations seem helplessly entangled in the meshes of "militarism." No conferences or international understandings can overcome the force of circumstances. Armies and navies will go on increasing in number, and in deadly efficiency, and there is no escape; for, so far as can now be seen, in this direction, and this direction alone, lies peace. But the support of the vast organizations, and the drain of the industrial population in the flower of life to keep the armies replenished, seems an enormous price to pay even for the maintenance of peace. Peace may indeed be maintained, but the world is deprived of many of its blessings. What, then, is to be done?

MR. SIDNEY LOW, in the September Nineteenth Century, suggests an answer. Even as things are, the existence of a great army is not an unmixed evil. Attention is drawn to the extreme value of the training and discipline of the army to a large proportion of the rank and file. In Germany, where the system has reached the highest degree of efficiency, it is recognized very fully that the two or three years passed in the army are advantageous, physically and mentally, to the bulk of the population. This, then, is Mr. Low's suggestion: That the army be recognized as a "national school for the training of character," and that the system be developed under the guidance of this ruling idea. Thus, though it continues to be necessary to maintain an army in order to perpetuate peace, it would be possible to introduce, in addition to the merely military drill, many kinds of work which may return the men, after the period of service, far better equipped for the future business of their lives than would have been the case if they had been left to themselves. There are hopeful possibilities in this view of things. Instead of a gigantic incubus, to be viewed as an unmixed evil, the permanent military organization may thus be transformed into an instrument of good, and an "economical people" have reason to feel that the war premium is being laid out to the best advantage. The scheme may not find favor, and no doubt is beset with difficulties, but it does not seem altogether impracticable. The thought arises that the Peace Conference at The Hague might well have given some attention to such ideas, and, on these lines, have offered a programme more immediately helpful and hopeful than that which attempts to impose upon great and powerful nations an impossible self-denial.

A Non-Partisan View

PROFESSOR SANDAY, of Oxford, is known as a moderate man of cautious temperament. He has never been a party man, but we believe his earlier traditions were those of the Evangelical school. He is sometimes classed as a Broad Churchman. He is a man of profound learning, and through his published works enjoys a wide reputation. To find such a man taking part in the discussion over the Archbishops' "Opinion" comes as a surprise. That he should convert the position taken in that document is still more surprising. Yet this is precisely what has taken place. In a pamphlet recently printed, he administers a blow from which the "Opinion" can hardly recover. He questions both the historical positions of the Archbishops and the method which they have pursued. Of the former, he says, for instance, that "it would be precarious to say that incense was not in use for even two hundred years after apostolic times." The Archbishops had stated that it "was not in use in the Church for at least three hundred years from apostolic times."

BUT the most important portion of this pamphlet is that in which it is shown that the Archbishops have actually taken as the basis of their decision an Act of Uniformity which no longer has any authority! It is not the Act of 1559, but that of 1662 which is now in force, and this does not contain the phrase upon which the Archbishops chiefly rely. That the Act of 1662 is the only one now recognized in English law, is clear from the express statement of the Act of 1872, providing for "additional services," in which we read as follows: "In this Act, the term 'Act of Uniformity' means the Act of the fourteenth year of the reign of Charles the II., chapter four, intitled 'An Act for the Uniformity,' etc. It seems almost incredible that on such an occasion, a mistake of this radical character could have been made. But the plain facts of the case bear out the contention of Professor Sanday.

THE Professor deplores the narrowness of the "Opinion," as compared with Archbishop Benson's judgment in the Lincoln case. "The exact interpretation of documents and careful study of evidence which characterized the earlier judgment, are absent from the later. In this, their place is taken by an apparent short-cut, which examination has shown to be delusive. Hence, while the one judgment carried with it conviction all along the line, the other carries with it no conviction at all." He doubts whether it will in any respect "give permanent satisfaction." Nevertheless he has no question "that whether it is right or wrong in the nature of things, the decision ought to be obeyed," and deprecates the sophistry of the arguments put forward in favor of disobedience. He considers, however, that the position of affairs shows the crying need of recovering for the Church the power of legislating more effectively for itself.

IN drawing attention to this pamphlet, The Church Times expresses the hope that it may have an effect which nothing coming from the High Church side, however able, could possibly produce. Everything from that side at present is greeted with the suspicion of "Jesuitry." But Dr. Sanday is described as "a person detached from the conflict between High and Low ideals," and for that reason is more secure of an unprejudiced hearing. It is interesting and important to note that a scholar and observer of this type, a man familiar with history, and one whose "moderation is known unto all men," repudiates the idea that the Catholic movement is in the Romeward direction. He is as familiar as any man with the rise and progress of that movement, and has known some of the great and saintly men who originated and carried it onward in its wonderful course; men of whom Dean Church said that they were "the salt of their generation," "the promise of the coming time," "men of singular purity of life and purpose, who raised the tone of living round them," and recalled, first, Oxford, and then the Church, to a truer sense of their responsibilities. He wrote his work on the Oxford Movement because "he did not like" that the remembrance of such men should pass away like a dream. The memory of these men has lately been assailed with obloquy, and their names have been hissed as traitors and secret conspirators, at Protestant meetings, on the ground that they were Romanizers and Jesuits in disguise. All this Professor Sanday sweeps aside, and in a few words vindicates the true character of the movement, when he says that the English nation is in danger of committing a serious injustice, owing to the fact that through ignorance, the English people, accustomed as they are to use the two words "Roman Catholic" together, are unable to separate what is Catholic from what is Roman. It is a difficulty which is not peculiar to England. In spite of the fact that our people continually say in the Creed, "I believe in the Catholic Church," too many seem still to regard themselves as the members of a Protestant sect. Had this not been the case, the unfortunate name under which the American Church still labors would long ago have been changed.

The Foundation of Apostles and Prophets

FROM A SERMON BY THE REV. JOHN WILLIAMS, M. A.

I AM guilty of no exaggeration when I say that there has been no period in the history of the Church of God when there was greater need to emphasize apostolic teaching in regard to fundamentals than there is to-day. We have now gotten to a point where we believe it possible for any man or woman who has a new idea in regard to religion to establish a Church upon that particular idea, and to dignify it by the name of the Church of Christ, or Christian Disciples, or what not. This particular idea may be the practical denial of the body, as it is with Christian Science; the identification of body and soul, as it is with some of the Adventists; the denial of baptismal grace, as it is with some people; the non-necessity of sacraments, as it is with others, or whatever it may be;—the point is, that any man or woman is entitled to start a new Church, based upon any kind of idea, and to call it after his or her own name.

And often people will flock to it, and support it, and will show the greatest enthusiasm in its service until the time comes when they discover the utter uselessness of it all, and learn that they have been devoting themselves to mere theoretical speculations instead of vital truths which teach them how to live in this present world, and how to prepare for the next. It is a curious thing how these new religious fads have generally nothing to say about the reality of sin, about God's free grace, about the meaning of sacraments, about the importance of worship, about the necessity of prayer, about strength in temptation, about comfort in sorrow, about hope in despair, or life in death. They do not touch those things which really mean most to us.

When my body is racked with pain or wasted by disease, I do not want to hear trite aphorisms on the beautiful in life, or to be told that my sufferings are imaginary. What I want to know then is: Is there a God who cares for me and loves me, and can help me to endure this suffering? When fortune has left me stranded, and I stand helpless and alone, I do not want to read graceful essays on the idealty of friendship. What I want to know then is: Is there One in whom I can trust, and who will never forsake me? When my conscience is aroused, and the reality and enormity of sin is forced home upon me, I do not want to hear logical explanations of the weakness of human nature, and its tendency to follow the line of least resistance. What I want to know then is: Is there forgiveness for me? When I stand beside the open grave and lay away the bodies of those whom I loved dearest and best, I do not want to hear worn-out platitudes about the common lot of all men, that it is a natural and inevitable event, and that we must all come to it. What I want is an answer to my question: Is this all? Is there a life after this, or is there not? And for all these questions, or for any of them, there is generally no answer. Why? Because these modern religious systems, societies, or whatever they may call themselves, are not built upon the foundation of Apostles and Prophets.

To begin with, they are most exceedingly modern; they are creatures of to-day; they have no history, to say nothing of historical continuity; they are the ephemera of the moment, and then, despite their claim to liberality, they are excessively narrow; they give their allegiance only to that particular fetich which is their shibboleth; their harp has only one string, and they are perpetually giving us variations of the one theme. Now the Church of God is not a metaphysical subtlety, but a living organism—a living body, definite and concrete. Its birth was on that great day of Pentecost, when the Holy Ghost was given to the waiting band of disciples, and three thousand were admitted into its membership. It began its life with a definite mission before it—to preach the Gospel to every creature. It had clear and distinct rites for the initiation of new members, and a life-giving Sacrament to support them in the fullness of their faith. Its foundation was Jesus Christ and the teachings of Apostles and Prophets regarding His life and work. If it had one particular dogma, it was "Christ, and Him Crucified"; and around that dogma clustered all its teachings regarding the sinfulness of man, his salvation through Christ, his relation to God, and his duty toward his fellow-men. From that time to the present, the teachings of the Church in regard to these essential things, have been those of the Apostles and Prophets, and by maintaining them to-day, the Church is simply vindicating her history, Catholicity, and unity; her history, because there is not a link missing in the chain which binds her to the past—which binds the Church in America to the Church in Jerusalem; her Catholicity (1), because her mission is to all the world; and (2) because she brings out the full body of the truth, and not any one particular part of it; her unity, because all her members are living stones in the great temple of God; they are one in Christ, and acknowledge, amid all their diversities of opinion—and they are many—that they have but "one Lord, one Faith, and one Baptism." That is why we preach Baptism, Confirmation, and Holy Communion as essentials to a Christian life. That is why we maintain the sacredness of marriage and the authority of the Ten Commandments. That is why we uphold the Holy Scriptures as the Word of God, and stand by the threefold order of the ministry; that is why we preach the forgiveness of sins, the communion of saints, and the life everlasting, because we are built upon the foundation of Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner-stone, and we must proclaim to-day, in this age and generation, exactly the same teachings which our blessed Lord and His Apostles proclaimed at the beginning.

Spiritual Training of the Young

FROM THE POINT OF VIEW OF THE PEDAGOGUE

BY Y. Y. K.

II.

Second: Sunday schools, so called, where shall they meet? Permit me to say, not in the house of God. The church is not the place for class work, even though that work be the study of holy things. Nothing that the child thus learns is worth—I firmly believe—as much as the truth that the church is the very gate of heaven, the Loving Father's house. That truth must enter the mind of the child largely through an object lesson. In that sacred place he should either feel the sanctuary's hush, or hear but the voices of prayer and praise—should learn to recognize within the recesses of his soul that the place whereon he stands is holy ground. Into his consciousness should come naught incompatible with worship, while in the dimly-lighted nave, he sees before him chancel and altar, the Presence-chamber of the King of Kings—not that the proper place for hearing and reciting lessons, even well-prepared ones, which the average Sunday school lesson is not.

But not every parish can provide itself with a room suitable for class and school purposes. Why could not the classes meet at places and times independent of each other?—Bible and Prayer Book classes, classes in Church history and in Church music, in Church symbolism and ritual, classes preparatory to the minister's "Openly in the church" on Sundays, and—I quote the rubric—and Holy Days and other convenient occasions. A veritable parish university we are thus evolving from the Sunday school, some of these forms of activity reaching, happily, those who deem themselves too big for Sunday school, asserting superciliously that it is "good enough for kids."

But shall we not gather the children on the Lord's Day and in the Lord's house? Yes: But for worship, not for work. By precept and example let the children be taught the sweet ways, the etiquette, so to speak, of holy church, of holy places, of holy things.

An excellent use exists in some parishes in this relation. On the Sundays when the mid-day service is the Celebration, Morning Prayer is said or sung earlier, the children taking a prominent part.

Children's Evensongs! Have you ever attended them? If not, when next you go to Denver visit St. Mark's, what time the children of that parish are singing their Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis. Would that we "grown-ups" entered so heartily into our worship as do they! Not singers alone, but players on instruments are these white-robed boy violinists, as well as white-robed boy choristers; and their strains, to canticle and hymn, are a soul-uplifting evening sacrifice, which, when I saw and heard, and listened to the ringing, yet tender, words of the priest to the young of his flock gathered around him, I thought, and said: "It is good to be here!"

Children's Evensongs are more desirable than children's Matins would be, not only because the office is a shorter and more flexible one, but because at the morning service it is more generally practicable that parents and children go up to the house of God in company; and that is best of all—best that in the great congregation both old men and maidens, young men and children, praise the Name of the Lord. But the natural gregariousness of childhood may wisely, I think, be turned to account in teaching the child how to worship in the use of the Church's hallowed forms of prayer and praise. Rectors who have adopted the use of children's Lenten services know the value of such means of grace, value not only to the young, but also to their elders who, I have noticed, thus are helped to become as little children.

Children's Matins and Evensongs! Shall our children have no relation to the Divine Liturgy—the one divinely instituted service for the Lord's Day? Shall we teach them the lesson of the font and not of the altar? May not some of the grace that flows from the altar be for the little ones of the flock, even though, for reasons the wisdom of which we are not to dispute, the reception of the Holy Communion be deferred?

Children's services have come to be recognized as of immense value in teaching the children what some have sadly, but not wholly with truth, we hope, called the lost art of worship. What doth hinder that that service be sometimes Eucharistic? Cannot the child be taught to bring to the altar his gifts of alms, of thanksgiving, of adoration—to ask before the altar as do we, we children of only a larger growth, the supply of all needs? We plead for definiteness of teaching. What better definiteness can we inculcate than that of faith in the Real Presence, leaving to the negations of Protestantism a belief in the real absence? Do we, even when it is not our purpose to receive the Blessed Sacrament, take to the church our aspirations for holiness for ourselves, our longings for souls, our needs, which may be as little in the sight of higher intelligences as to us are the cries of children? And shall not the little one's come too, with their acts of faith, of hope, of contrition, and of love?

"Lo such the child whose early feet
The paths of peace have trod,
Whose secret heart, by influence sweet,
Is upward borne to God."

And so we may be glad that among children's services, not only Matins and Evensongs, but children's Eucharists are finding place; and we may not doubt but that while the lips of children make sweet hosannas ring, He who said: "Suffer little children and forbid them not to come unto Me," will accept their praises as we humbly trust He does ours, when our imperfect Trisagions mingle with those of the heavenly host.

Let me but add that wherever and whenever we do our peculiar work for Christ and His Church for Christ and His little ones, may all our teaching be in the spirit of the sacramental system of the Church. Thus shall we help to train up a generation of robust Churchmen who, believing in the Holy Catholic Church, lend a willing, a loyal ear to her teachings, knowing that Christ who died for them is in His Church to the end of time.

Churchmen thus "knit up" will not leave the parish church because they do not like the minister, or because the choir flats, nor will they commit the sin of schism because the minister has not called on them. Churchmen thus "knit up" will "hear the Church" on fast day as well as feast, on Friday as well as on Sunday, glad to go up unto the house of the Lord, be it on Sunday or a week day, whenever the "Church says now." Churchmen thus "knit up" will make the Church respected because they will be able to give a reason for the hope that is in them, and filled with a burning zeal for the spread of the Gospel of the Kingdom, will rejoice to give of their substance, nay, themselves, for the cause in which God graciously permits them to be fellow-workers with Him.

Letters to the Editor

COLORED DIVINITY SCHOOLS

To the Editor of The Living Church:

It is not at all necessary that I should further notice the comment of the Rev. Alfred Poole Grint. His last letter in THE LIVING CHURCH evinces the fact that color cuts no figure with him. But it is due the other correspondents, in that issue, on the subject of colored divinity schools, that I should say a word or so. I thank God for all the good and strong colored presbyters that have come forth from the Bishop Payne Divinity School. But that does not settle the point at issue. Is there any real need for "colored" divinity schools in the Church? I answer, emphatically, no. The man, white or colored, who has the necessary literary qualifications to study for the priesthood, can be accommodated in the existing seminaries. Especially do colored students need the many advantages of such institutions. The able faculties and libraries, as well as the direct contact with the other students, constitute a most important help for men who are to do an extraordinary work.

There is absolutely no force whatever in the statement that to do successful work among the colored race, colored men must be educated in the South, and that apart from other students. Among some of the most successful colored priests now laboring, or who have labored in the South, are: The Rev. Messrs. Richard Bright, Savannah, Ga.; Owen M. Waller, Washington; H. C. Bishop, New York; W. V. Tunnell, Washington, all of whom are graduates of the General Theological Seminary; M. F. Duty and P. A. Morgan, New Orleans, graduates of the Philadelphia School; E. R. Bennet, Wilmington, N. C., from Nashotah; T. J. Brown, Louisville, Ky., from Seabury; D. L. Mitchell, Washington, from Cambridge. Now here is something in the concrete. Let those investigate who will, and they will find that the culture, refinement, and many other aids which these men derived by association and contact with members of the other race in our well equipped seminaries, have contributed largely to the successfulness of their work. So far as colored men themselves are concerned, they always invariably select such institutions, unless they are overpowered and forced in the "Jim Crow" annex.

We simply contend that if the authorities of either Virginia or Tennessee, on account of not being able to receive colored men in the existing seminaries of such dioceses, establish "colored" schools, they ought to support them, and not ask the general Church to do it. True, it may be a little, but the fact still remains that I contribute money to the Domestic Missionary Society of the Church, and the Church Commission for Work among the Colored People vote a certain portion annually to maintain a "colored" institution, while such an institution is not only, as I see it, wrong in principle, but wholly unnecessary. PRESBYTER.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

To the Editor of The Living Church:

The question of "marriage and divorce" will not down, until the Church has passed a canon prohibiting the re-marriage of all divorced persons.

The only question which seems to cause delay is, "How shall the canon be worded?" It would seem most desirable as Bishop Potter stated in his convention address, that some other provision should be made beside the mere prohibition of re-marriage, and it has occurred to me that the most natural and consistent thing would be, to make the publishing of the bans for three consecutive Sundays before the solemnization of all marriages, absolutely compulsory, and such requirement should be incorporated in the canon. The great objection to publicity in such matters is significant, and I believe would have a salutary effect on hasty marriages.

A COMMENDATION OF LITURGICAL FORMS

To the Editor of The Living Church:

The Rev. G. S. Barrett, D. D., who was chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales in 1894—the highest office in the gift of the denomination—preaching at Haverhill recently, at the opening of a new organ, in the course of his sermon suggested several ways in which he thought the form of Congregational worship could be improved. The sermon might sometimes be appropriately followed by the singing of the last hymn kneeling, while litanies ought always to be sung kneeling. The final Amen gained greatly in impressiveness when softly sung by the congregation. He believed that to do away with free prayer from Congregational churches would destroy them altogether within fifty years, but he did not see why it should not be possible to combine a liturgy with free prayer. If he were asked as to what form of liturgy he preferred, he should say that he knew of no public intercessions so copious in extent, so rich in music, and so bound up with the memory of the past, as the liturgy of the Book of Common Prayer. He saw no reason why it should not be used in their public worship. After pointing out the ethical value of the repetition of the commandment of Christ, Dr. Barrett said that he should like to see those who were about to partake of Holy Communion rise in their places, and recite their common faith in one of the "ancient and glorious creeds of the Christian Church."

Br. Barrett is one of the leaders of his denomination in England, and a strong man. A straw indicates the flow of the tide. C.

PRIVATE BAPTISM OF CHILDREN

To the Editor of The Living Church:

A late correspondent of yours mentions three offices of the Book of Common Prayer that are rarely used in the Church. Might not to this be added the Office, in its entirety, for the Private Baptism of Children? A large part of that office is occupied with what is to be done, "if the child which is after this sort baptized do afterward live." "It is expedient"—so runs the rubric—"that the child be brought into the Church," not to be christened again, but to be received "as one of the flock of true Christian people."

It is in this part of the Office that the vows to be assumed by the sponsors for the child are to be found, and the beautiful signing with the sign of the Cross, as the child is "received into the congregation of Christ's flock."

"It is expedient." And why? "That the congregation"—so the rubric goes on to explain—"may be certified of the true form of Baptism privately administered." It would seem to be the mind of the Church that there is a relation between the congregation and each Baptism, to be publicly recognized, when "for great cause and necessity the Baptism has been in private," a relation implying the right of the congregation to a certification of the validity thereof.

I do not assert that the office is seldom used in its entirety, but merely question concerning its use, having seen but once a child so received, while I have known of a number of private Baptisms where "the child did afterwards live." In case that the child so baptized, and afterwards living, is not thus brought into the Church, it might be interesting to know when and where the sponsors assume the vows for the child, or whether the child "after this sort baptized" goes without sponsors. Obituary

GOLDSBOROUGH.—The death of the late George R. Goldsborough brought sincere sorrow to those who knew him as the writer did, and the simple tribute here offered does but justice to his memory. He was the son of the Hon. Robert H. Goldsborough, of Myrtle Grove, Talbot Co., and was a worthy representative of an old and honored family in the history of the State. His life was a quiet and unobtrusive one, and was devoted to agricultural pursuits in his native county, the last thirty-five years having been passed upon his estate, called Ashby, upon Miles river, where he delighted to receive and entertain his friends with the hospitality of the old school of gentlemen who constituted the landed proprietors of Maryland; and those who knew what this hospitality was before the social sceptre passed from the plantation, know that its charms have never been equaled. He sought no political honors.

"His was a soul whose master bias leans
To home-felt pleasures and to gentle scenes."

In his relations with friends and neighbors he preserved and illustrated the best traditions of the earlier years of the country, and he will be best remembered for that.

"Best portion of a good man's life—
His little nameless unremembered acts
Of kindness and of love."

He was a sincere Christian and a faithful Churchman. From the time of the organization of the diocese of Easton, in 1888, he was its steadfast friend and liberal supporter. Until disabled by infirmity, he was always the representative of All Saints' parish in the diocesan convention and also of the diocese in the General Convention, and was among the foremost in zeal for the spiritual and material interest of the Church in Maryland. The passing away of such a man cannot but be felt as a public loss, but most of all must he be mourned by the friends he leaves behind him. JAMES A. PEARCE.

What, then, is Indian Summer? Is it the full change of the green leaf to the infinite hues of October? Is it in the November month that it comes like a plumed and painted warrior? or is it far beyond this period, even in the bleak December that this most poetical of seasons appears with magic touch to spread a halo over our American landscapes?—*F. BY CONSTANCE BRENT AVERILL

Grudge not thy grief!

God sendeth sun and sendeth shower.
On the parched barrens, bare of flower,
Where thy dry roots lie withering,
His rains descends, till lo! they spring
To fresher life.

Guard not thy grief!

God sendeth shower and sendeth sun.
When the dark thunder-burst is done
Lift up thine eyes and greet the light,
Thankful to Him that skies are bright
And storms are brief.

THE question may deserve consideration whether a plethora of Church meetings in October is desirable. The Brotherhood Council, the Church Congress, and the Missionary Council are all occasions of interest, and many Churchmen would like to attend them all. If once in three years the entire month must be devoted to the General Convention, it would seem that the "off years" should be more varied. One may spare two or three days from business or parish, at one time or another, but few can keep up with such a procession as we are now having.

BLIND people, it is generally supposed, are comparatively helpless. But the American Association for the Blind has proved that when opportunity is given them, they are wonderfully capable. In the Industrial Home for the Blind, at Hartford, Conn., friendless young women are feeding power presses running at the same speed that seeing people use; printing on hand presses, binding pamphlets, using the wire stitcher, and operating a typewriter. Those anxious to help so good a work should subscribe for the magazine printed at the institution. Send 25 cents to the American Association for the Blind, 3124 14th street, Washington, D. C., with name and post-office address, for a three months' trial subscription.

RECENT experiments conducted by Professor Edward Thorndike, are fairly conclusive that the average mental work performed by our children in school is not injurious or exhaustive. The assertion has often been made that they are forced at a killing pace. He finds that with scarcely an exception, in the several hundred tests made, the pupils were able to do better work near the close of the school hours than at the beginning. At the same time, he seems to admit that as a rule they do not do as well in the later hours as in the earlier. This may be accounted for by the fact that they are beginning then to think of getting out, and their interest is diverted. Frequent change of position and mental occupation is needed. With adequate nourishment at mid-day, children can work for three hours afternoon, as well as three hours before noon. That is doubtless better than one long session.

Pen-and-Ink-lings

A FACETIOUS correspondent of the (Baptist) Standard submits this literary query and witty reply: "Which was the most industrious writer, Charles Dickens, Bulwer Lytton, or Samuel Warren?"

"Dickens, for he wrote 'All the Year Round,' while Lytton wrote 'Night and Morning,' and Warren wrote 'Now and Then.'"

True. But, in justice to the latter gentleman, it should be remembered that, while Dickens wrote some novels, Warren wrote "Ten Thousand a Year."

JOHN CHIPPERFIELD, the original of "Lamps of Mugby Junction," in "All the Year Round," recently died in his eighty-fourth year. He was born in Dartford in 1816, and was first a baker, but in 1854 he became a "lampman" at Tilbury terminus. He subsequently rose to the dignity of a "lamp inspectorship." During the forty-five years of his railway career he lived in the same cottage at Tilbury. Charles Dickens, who was a frequent traveler on the London, Tilbury, and Southend railway, made his acquaintance, and spent many an hour in the lamp-room at Tilbury, listening to the wit and wisdom, the anecdotes and arguments of Chipperfield. The result was the sketch of "Lamps of Mugby Junction."

WAS it not Richelieu, asks a writer in The International, who said: "If it is versatility you seek, go find an architect. He must be an artist, or his buildings will offend the eye; an engineer, or they will crumble; a lawyer, or he will get his patrons into trouble; a doctor, or his buildings will be hygienically unfit to live in; and last, but not least, he must be a gentleman, or we will have nothing to do with him."

C. S. BATTERMAN, one of the best-known mining men in the Rocky Mountain States, was on the stand as an expert in an important mining case in Nevada, and was under cross-examination by a rather young and "smart" attorney. The question related to the form that the ore was found in, generally described as "kidney lumps." "Now, Mr. Batterman," said the attorney, "how large are these lumps—you say they are oblong—are they as long as my head?" "Yes," replied Mr. Batterman, "but not as thick." The attorney subsided, and even the judge could not help smiling.—Argonaut.

BISHOP COLEMAN has just had placed in the centre of the floor of the chapel of the Good Shepherd at Bishopstead, a mosaic of stones forming a collection probably without equal in interest in this country. The fourth, sixth, fourteenth and seventeenth centuries are represented, and British, Celtic, English and American Christianity come together in the twenty-two inch square of cement in which the stones are laid. British Christianity is represented by a Roman brick from St. Martin's church, Canterbury, built probably in the fourth century. This was sent by Canon Routledge, the great antiquarian of Canterbury, England, and a high authority on matters Cantuarian; Celtic (or to be more accurate Scotto-Celtic), by two stones from the old cathedral church at Iona, also by two pebbles picked up at the spot on the beach where St. Columba landed in 565; these were sent by the Duke of Argyll. Anglican Christianity is represented in a stone from the old monastery church of St. Augustine, Canterbury, built in the fourteenth century, also sent by Canon Routledge; and lastly, a brick from Old Swedes' church, Wilmington, consecrated in 1699, speaks for the "old Faith in the new land."

THE real reason of the decline of Presbyterianism in New York," says The Sun, "is simply a decline of faith both in the pulpit and the pews. The movement for a revision of the Westminster Confession showed the growing indifference to doctrine once stoutly held, and then came the theological assault on the old belief in the Bible. The second may have affected the clergy more than the laity, but its destructive influence on a Church like the Presbyterian whose life is altogether in its doctrine, aided by socially disruptive tendencies, goes on with increasing force. The only remedy is a revival of genuine and profound faith in the doctrines which once made the Presbyterian denomination the most powerful in New York."

IN San Francisco lately, Mr. Edwin Markham offered his own solution of the problem suggested by his famous poem. The report of his words is taken from Signs of the Times:

I have been asked to say a few words about "The Man With the Hoe," and my solution of that problem. I have no new solution. The problem is as old as humanity. The men who built the pyramids struggled with that problem. The men who are building London are struggling with it to-day. I have but one solution—that is the application of the Golden Rule. We have committed the Golden Rule to heart; now let us commit it to life. [Applause.] That is the only solution.

DURING the winter months the little colony of sixty or seventy English people at Teheran organize concerts for one another's amusement. When the weather is cold, of course there is skating. Skating is the greatest marvel of all to the Persians. A few years ago the late Shah, Nasr-i-Din, saw twenty skaters twirling and curling and spinning gracefully on the ice. He was amused; he thought it wonderful. The next day he sent to the legation and borrowed a dozen pairs of skates. These he made his ministers put on and attempt to skate on the lake in the palace grounds. The poor ministers were terribly discomfited, but it was twice as much as their heads were worth to refuse. His majesty was more amused than ever, and he nearly had a fit from laughing.

Boston Correspondence

BISHOP LAWRENCE opened the meeting of the Monday clericus, on Oct. 2d, by reading a timely paper upon a few of the national issues. The Hague Conference, the Dreyfus verdict, and a few of the problems confronting our government, were treated with good judgment and skill. The clergy, as is the custom at these meetings, discussed the matters afterwards, and had a most interesting gathering. It seems a hard problem to popularize these Monday meetings, and the committee having them in charge have already selected a number of writers and topics, which are likely to increase the interest.

The coming of Father Osborne to Boston means much to the Church. Besides his devotion to charitable and philanthropic work, where his judgment is always eagerly sought, he is a fearless advocate of the teachings of pure Christianity. He cannot be moved by the waves of fluctuating theology, and it seems at times as if these waves were working havoc upon the old foundations of belief. This does not imply that others, not to be mentioned, have failed, but it does imply that Father Osborne carries an influence, where others cannot hope for this distinction. After all, what would Boston do without the Cowley Fathers? Their quiet, devoted lives are an inspiration to all Christians. The West End, where their street processions were very impressive, has been touched and controlled by their self-sacrifice and their faithfulness. Even the Unitarians are occasionally drawn to praise the noble works of these priests, and to recognize their power for good in the community. Father Benson contemplates a visit to England, and will leave the diocese in a short time for this trip. No priest is more respected than he, and none will be more missed from diocesan gatherings.

Emmanuel church has a reredos. The late Dr. Vinton who was the first rector of this church, once inveighed against this sort of thing. Ecclesiastical art has triumphed, however, over these old objections, and conquered where no other argument could avail. This addition certainly makes for beauty and dignity around the chancel. If Emmanuel church can tolerate the inroads of ecclesiastical art, why not Trinity, where the artist could, with grand effect, display his ability in the same direction?

Everyone was perplexed at the way which the President of Harvard took to show his feelings against ritual, in his speech before the great Congregational Council, held here the latter part of September. "Congregational churches have always needed," he said, "from the beginning, highly trained, intellectual men for ministers, whereas the Churches which rely chiefly on ritual ceremonial, musical and emotional exhortation, can get along comfortably without any priests or ministers capable of close thinking and able to give their thoughts convincing logical expression."

An utterance like this attracts because of its source. It is anything but fair, and assumes too much. It is a strange way to knock Ritualism, because, with few exceptions, the Ritualists, so-called, have been the men who have given their thoughts convincing, logical expression. Some modern types of Congregational worship are certainly ritualistic and extremely ceremonial in their way. It would be a very difficult matter to prove the Ritualists deficient in the manner here alluded to, and altogether this reference glares with an inconsistency which could be pardoned in the speech of a weaker man.

There is greater need every year of a larger diocesan house. The present one is poorly arranged, and with a new building, upon modern plans of making it support itself largely through rentals, there would be a noticeable advance in the right direction. The Christian denominations around have learned, in part, the secret of making these buildings pay for themselves. We can emulate their example. All we need is activity. The money is a secondary consideration.

One of our daily papers, always dignified, but very Broad in theology, was caught napping a few weeks ago. In its editorial columns, it has posed as a strong defender of these liberal tendencies which surge around us here in Boston, yet in its news columns it inserts, from a High Church source, a good article upon the topic, "The Church before the Bible." Let me quote the conclusion of this article:

It is not the Bible, but the Church, which is the pillar and ground of the truth; it is not the Bible that has given us the Church, but the Church that has given us the Bible.

Mr. Oscar Fay Adams has just published a book, called "The Archbishop's Unguarded Moment." It tells about the trials of a retired bishop who begins an unofficial visitation of the various churches of his faith in Cambridge, Mass. After visiting St. Philip's, he came unto St. John's, where the simpler ritual was much to his mind. His experience is described thus:

On the present occasion, the sermon was preached by one of the broadest, most rationalistic men in the Church, and the Bishop grew red with indignation as he listened. Once he half rose in his seat with an indignant manner of protest, but his wife pulled at his coat in season to prevent that. At last, after what seemed to him a particularly daring utterance of the preacher, the Bishop's patience gave way entirely, and he rose up, to the crimson mortification of his wife, and the secret delight of a half-dozen theological students in the pew behind him. The preacher made a brief pause, and the Bishop took advantage of this. "When such damnable heresies as these are uttered in my presence," he began, "I should be recreant to the faith I profess, unmindful of my duty to my God, and disloyal to the Church in which I have so long held office, if I did not rise to protest against them," and having thus delivered himself, he left the church.

The story goes on to tell that the Bishop broke off an impending engagement between his daughter and a Roman Catholic gentleman, and she finally marries a young man whom her father has been much pleased with, supposing him to be a student at the Episcopal theological school, but who turns out to be a radical Unitarian. This is, of course, all fiction, written in an entertaining manner, and affords the reader a great deal of amusement for its local interest and criticisms upon the Church in Cambridge.

BOSTONIAN.

MANY people will learn with surprise that the daughter of the famous Reginald Heber is still alive, more than seventy years having elapsed since her father died in India, not long after he had reluctantly accepted the See of Calcutta, which was a great sacrifice, as he would certainly have been made a bishop at home. Miss Heber who inherited a large family estate in Shropshire, married Mr. Percy, a cousin of the late Duke of Northumberland, in 1829, and they have just celebrated their diamond wedding at Hodnet, their beautiful old place in Shropshire.

Book Reviews and Notices

Catholic Faith and Practice. A Manual of Theology. Part II. By the Rev. Alfred G. Mortimer, D. D., Rector of St. Mark's, Philadelphia. New York: Longman's, Green & Co. Pp 519. Price, $2.50.

The completion of Dr. Mortimer's "Manual of Theology" is an important event in the American Church. The need of a systematic study of theology, which he so strongly expresses in his closing chapter, is a very real need. It is very true, as he says, that "while our clergy have, of course, views more or less accurate in regard to the principal doctrines of the Church, they are, as a rule, not co-ordinated, some doctrines being given undue scope, while others are scarcely grasped at all; and of theology as a system, as a science, of the Catholic Faith in the due proportion of its component parts, but few have any clear conception." There can be no doubt that we greatly need full and reliable treatises of dogmatic theology in English, from which our clergy and students may learn the analogy of the Faith. Dr. Mortimer's effort to supply this need is of great interest. It has, in this second volume, far outgrown its original limits as a manual of instruction for candidates for Confirmation, and is now a practically complete system of theology. The ground covered by this second part is of extreme interest, including such important subjects as Marriage and Divorce, Anglican Orders (with a vindication from Roman objections), the Limits of Theological Speculation (dealing especially with Kenoticism), Holy Scripture (involving an examination of the "Higher Criticism") and the whole field of Eschatology (including Death, Judgment, the Intermediate State, Purgatory, Prayers for the Dead, Invocation of Saints, Hell and Heaven). Under these heads naturally fall most of the burning theological questions of the day. Dr. Mortimer's treatment of them is always scholarly and lucid, and sometimes singularly helpful (as in the chapters on Matrimony and Orders), although we regret to find that at other points (notably in his treatment of the Kenotic Theory and the "Higher Criticism") he steps down from the theologian's chair and takes his place as a controversialist. This change of tone we regard as a serious blemish upon his generally judicious work.

Another ground for regret is found in his exaggerated reverence for Roman theologians. It is quite true, as he says, that there are but few general treatises of theology in English, but the Church of England has produced great theologians whose writings are authoritative upon the subjects with which they deal. We should expect in such a work as this to find them quoted freely, or at least referred to, when the doctrine of the Church is to be defined. But not so. The names of Andrewes, Hooker, Bull, Pearson, Forbes, Keble, Pusey, and Liddon, are conspicuous by their absence from these pages, while those of Peter Lombard, Scotus, Bonaventura, Durandus, Aquinas, Suarez, Vasquez, etc., are brought forward frequently. This deliberate neglect of Anglican theologians is one of the most significant features of the book, and will do much to weaken its hold upon American Churchmen. We are deeply pained to find that Dr. Mortimer not only ignores some of our greatest Anglican theologians, but goes out of his way to discredit them. In his eagerness to bind the Roman doctrine of purgatory upon the Anglican Church, he permits himself to impugn the motives of the great leaders of the Oxford Movement in a way which we regard as most serious. Here are his words:

In the dense ignorance of the early days of the Catholic Revival there was great need to plead for the recognition of an intermediate state in which there was some sort of purification or development. In order, however, to avoid offence and to gain adherents to such a doctrine, it was important to make it differ as much as possible from the teaching of the Church of Rome, and hence the distinction was loudly insisted upon—that it was not the doctrine of Purgatory, but of Paradise, which was taught, and that the word "Paradise" was to be found in the Bible, although, as we have shown, not quite in the sense in which it is used by the advocates of this theory.

We take the most emphatic exception to this statement. Pusey, Keble, and Liddon were the trusted leaders of the Catholic revival. They lent the full weight of their authority to this doctrine, which Dr. Mortimer stigmatizes as "the teaching of only a comparatively small body of men, headed by Pope John XXII," and maintained this position consistently to the end of their lives. The insinuation made above, that they did so from motives of expediency, and wrested Holy Scripture from its right meaning for their support, is a gratuitous insult to the memory of these great defenders of the Faith. Such aspersions upon the motives of men, and such attempts to prejudice the teachings of reputable theologians as that in which the author strives to identify the Anglican teachings as to an intermediate state with the disreputable John XXII, are unworthy of a place in a theological book.

The most interesting and important part of this volume is the seven chapters which deal with the subject of Eschatology. It would be impossible within the limits of this review to attempt any detailed criticism of these chapters. We can only say that the views presented in them are identically the same as those which are taught by the more moderate theologians of the Church of Rome, while those which have commonly been held by Anglican theologians are treated with but scant courtesy. The Roman teaching as to Purgatory, Prayers for the Dead, and Invocation of Saints, is set forth, not as a permissible opinion, but as the authoritative doctrine of the Catholic Church. In particular it is insisted upon à de fide that all the saints who die in a state of grace are at once admitted to the enjoyment of the Beatific Vision. That such a belief is permissible, we do not deny, though we regard it as doubtful whether any soul at the hour of death is pure enough to see God; but that it is an article of the Catholic Faith we should not think any one would dare to assert. While we have no sympathy with Protestant notions of Eschatology, we do think that Dr. Mortimer has undertaken to bind upon the consciences of our people burdens which will prove too great for them to bear, and has gone perilously near to some of those Roman errors which have done so much to bring about the divisions of Christendom. We do not know of a single Anglican divine whose teaching upon Eschatology agrees with that which the author so confidently sets forth as "the teaching of the Church."

Memories of Half a Century. By Richard W. Hiley, D. D., Vicar of Wighill, Yorkshire, England. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Price, $5.

This is an entertaining book. Its author who modestly confesses that he himself has not been a man of great mark, has been thrown, in the course of his long and useful life, into contact with prominent Churchmen, and he gives us a wealth of anecdote and description relating to them. At Oxford, in Liverpool, and during a long ministry in Yorkshire, he knew many of the foremost men of his time. Scattered through his book are life-like descriptions which are of exceeding interest. He saw Dr. Pusey frequently during his Oxford career, and heard him preach when he was at the height of his powers. He heard the famous sermon preached just after Pusey's suspension had expired, and describes it as follows:

There was an enormous crowd of men, and as soon as the cathedral doors were opened it was filled in every part. In due time there ascended the pulpit a spare, ascetic-looking man, pale as death, with a piercing eye and an equally piercing voice. His subject was "The entire absolution of the penitent;" the sermon was long, exhibiting an immense amount of patristic reading, and was full of quotations therefrom. But for the excitement that previous events had created, there would have been little in the sermon to attract the large body of men there congregated. Yet there was much in Pusey to fascinate. His countenance, though bearing outward signs of great abstemiousness and habits of fasting, showed him to be a man of most studious habits, and he had a very benevolent expression. I heard him once preach in a parish church a sermon of simple, earnest persuasiveness, on the text, "Do all for the Lord Jesus," that deserved to be printed in letters of gold.

His description of Dr. Newman is equally interesting:

Had any one met Newman walking in the streets of a large town, he would have passed along without attracting attention. A spare, ascetic looking man, there was otherwise nothing striking in his appearance. His rooms in Oriel were small and simple, books piled here and there. And yet that unobtrusive figure, from that small laboratory, set afloat a literature and enrolled an army of followers that shook the English Church to an extent not known since the Reformation. Some of my contemporaries had often heard him preach when vicar of St. Mary's. He was small and spare, his voice clear, but his delivery a monotone; he never raised his eyes from his manuscript, not the slightest action or gesture, nor was there anything attractive in his style, no rhetorical arts; his language was simply good Saxon English. And yet eight hundred young men would be listening in rapt attention.

Of Dean Stanley he says:

Any one walking in the streets of Oxford might perhaps encounter an M. A. in cap and gown, of very diminutive stature, toddling along very modestly, not attracting observation in a general way; yet if a stranger did but observe his face, there was an intellectual expression unmistakable. Such was my impression before I knew it was Stanley. Perhaps I should not be wrong in saying that the leading feature of his character was earnestness. He was in earnest as a lecturer, in earnest as a preacher, in earnest as a writer.

We have room for but one more of these character sketches:

Edwin Arnold was an undergraduate of University College in my time. He was a man of promise, which his subsequent career has justified, but this was somewhat marred by eccentricities that appeared ludicrous. He formed a Fez Club, and the members would meet in each other's rooms wearing a fez, and clad in Armenian costume. As no one but actual members were present, their employment when so mustered was only conjectured, but generally thought to be smoking chibouks and drinking coffee. Arnold won the Newdigate prize for English verse. When it came to his turn to recite his poem in the Sheldonian Theatre, the scene was most amusing. He had evidently practiced in his rooms a rehearsal of a delivery which was to produce a great sensation. Accordingly, he commenced in a most grandiloquent tone, which ere ten lines were completed provoked a general titter. Quickly perceiving that this would not do, he became more natural in delivery, and the rest of his poem secured a good hearing. At the end his weak point leaked out again, for he had seated himself, but on receiving applause he rose and bowed, like an actor who has been called before the curtain, with a most self-complacent expression.

Dr. Hiley's book is valuable not only for its personal sketches and reminiscences, but still more for its pictures of university, school, and village life a generation ago. They are vivid and instructive, and very helpful towards an understanding of present day life in England.

New Testament Churchmanship and the Principles upon which it was Founded. By the Rt. Rev. Henry Y. Satterlee, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of Washington, D. C. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Pp. 280. Price, $1.50.

This book demands the consideration of all intelligent American Churchmen, both clerical and lay. Its subject-matter is of extreme interest and of fundamental importance. The issues raised in it are vital; they involve the well-being and, perhaps, the very being, of the Church. They may be set forth in a few sentences gathered from different pages of the book:

Western Christendom, through the dominating influences of the Church of Rome, during the past thousand years has witnessed the gradual substitution of another type of Christianity for that of apostolic days. In the Apostolic Church itself, a true balance was preserved between the inward or subjective, and the outward or objective, religious life of the Church. This is a fundamental principle of the religion of Christ. The inward and outward are so bound together in His Incarnation that they are mutually dependent upon one another; nor can the highest spiritual life, which is life in Christ, be fully attained save through their union. Each, without the other, gives rise to an abnormal, one-sided development of religion; and this has been the error into which the Roman Church has fallen. By unduly exaggerating the outward at the expense of the inward, she not only lost that which St. Paul calls the proportion or analogy of the Faith, but also acquired an untrue, unspiritualized conception of the outward. But if the Roman Church has gone too far in one direction, Protestantism, not even excepting the Anglican Communion, has gone too far in the other. The Protestants, in their intense desire to recover the spiritual, lost the true meaning of the outward in relation to the inward, and then fell into the error of making their own subjective impressions the ultimate criterion of the objective truths of Revelation. This book is an humble attempt to differentiate between Church principles as set forth in the New Testament itself, and Church principles as they appeared at the time of the Reformation, in the mediæval setting and interpretation of the Church of Rome.

It will be seen that this is a very serious undertaking, upon which important issues hang. It is carried out very effectively. While we cannot agree with the author in all particulars we feel that his main contention is proved, and that in establishing it, he has done a most important service to the Church. The chapter on "Public Worship in New Testament Days" is of especial interest. We commend it to the serious consideration of the clergy. There are some statements scattered throughout the book to which we should take exceptions; as, for instance, where the author states that the Epistles (and not the Acts of the Apostles) are the continuation of the Revelation so abruptly broken off at the end of the Gospels. Or, again, when he asserts that worship in the early days of Christianity was of puritanical simplicity. We think it could easily be shown that the worship of the Primitive Church, formed, as it was, upon Jewish models, was from the first of a much more elaborate character than is commonly supposed. But the main line of his argument is so sound and strong as to suffer little from these superficial weaknesses. We commend it to the careful study of all thoughtful Churchmen, with the assurance that it will be found one of the most stimulating and helpful books of the year.

Corner-Stones of Faith, or the Origin and Characteristics of the Christian Denominations of the United States. By the Rev. Charles H. Small. New York: E. B. Treat & Co. Pp. 470. Price, 82.

In this book the curious reader may find a complete catalogue of all the sects and isms in our sect-ridden country, from the Romanists down to the Salvation Army, the Mormons and the Christian Scientists, with more or less information about the history and peculiarities of each. Each of the larger bodies is given an historical and descriptive sketch, followed by a statement of its distinctive principles by one of its leading divines. This rather doubtful honor is assigned to Dr. Huntington on behalf of "the P. E. Church," and is made use of by him to set forth skillfully his peculiar notions as to Church polity and Christian unity. The editor of the volume undoubtedly intended to give a fair and frank statement of the doctrinal and historical position of the various religious bodies which fall under review, but his zeal has greatly outrun his knowledge. He unconsciously treats us to many statements which, to say the least, are surprising and amusing. Here are a few of them: "At the beginning of Christian discipleship there was no Church. The Churches of apostolic times were not made; they grew, they developed as required." "At first each Church was independent." "The worship of the early Christians was very simple." "For several centuries English Christians were part of the Roman Catholic Church." "We find the beginning of the Episcopal Church in the time of Henry VIII." "The Episcopal Church in America and the Church of England are not identical." "There are no archbishops in the Protestant Episcopal Church." "Her doctrinal statement is in the Thirty-nine Articles, which are Calvinistic in their theology." "A person approaching the portals of this Church, the officer on duty is instructed to ask him two questions, and is not permitted to ask any more: First, 'Do you believe all the articles of the Christian Faith as contained in the Apostles' Creed?' Second, 'Do you promise, by the help of God, to lead a sober, righteous, and godly life?' 'The government of the Church is vested in the clergy.'" These statements taken at random, indicate how difficult it is for an outsider, unless deeply learned, to give accurate information about the Church. We doubt not that others have fared as badly at his hands. This looseness of statement and narrowness of view detract seriously from the value of the work, good as its intentions are.

Most of these sermons, so the preface says, have been preached in the chapel of Yale University. Hence they appeal to young men especially. They are subjective and ethical in their teaching. The preacher deals with Christianity on the broad basis of the religion of Christ, and not from the standpoint of the Church to which he belongs. This was an essential consideration. Hence the sermons, which contain a great deal of valuable truth, are appropriate for any gathering of Christians, and will prove helpful to the general reader. Dr. Dwight's many opportunities for the examination of character have given him a power in delineation of life and its purposes that is fully and carefully used in these sermons. The cultivation of the inner life is too much neglected in this age. A contribution like this book is the more welcome because its author is so well known in connection with Yale University.

whole denomination into an endorsement of their unproved hypotheses. But that Congregationalism in the main still stands for something definite in doctrine, and rectilinear in morals, we would fain believe. Whatever may be true of some of the younger ministers who have not lived long enough in the active life of the world to get a simple and solid system of doctrine that is preachable, we are of the opinion that the rank and file of the Congregational ministry and laity are in substantial accord with the fundamentals of the evangelical Faith as generally received among us. If this is so, what is needed is the sounding out of this positive note in Congregationalism. The conviction is there—let it assert itself. There is no reason why a minority of radicals should pose before the world as typical representatives of Congregationalism as a whole.

Christian Advocate (Methodist)

THE CHURCH'S MISSION.—Does not careful observation prove that much less attention is being devoted to the conversion of sinners now than in former years, and that conversions are not so frequent as they formerly were? Is it not possible that Christians are losing interest in the conversion of sinners? Many interests now engage the attention of ministers and Churches. We are building and endowing educational institutions. We have several great publishing houses, from which we are sending out millions of pages of religious literature every year to bless the world. We have many strong organizations for the collection and disbursement of millions annually for religious purposes. We have an immense young people's organization, into which many thousand young men and women are being gathered for discipline and training for future usefulness. To all these Christian institutions and enterprises we say, God speed! But it is possible that these may divert the attention of the Church from the chief object of its mission. The early Christians devoted their energies almost exclusively to the one aim of winning souls to Christ. The early Methodist Church sought one thing, the conversion of sinners. Those heroic ministers and laymen did not think of pleasing men or building a colossal ecclesiastical structure for their own glory. They preached, exhorted, sang, prayed, traveled, and toiled for the conversion of sinners. We cannot throw off the new burdens and responsibilities of these later days, but we must not lose sight of the conversion of souls.

Two old favorites will be re-issued shortly in binding and letter press of the style of to-day. They are "Salad for the Solitary and Social," and "Evenings with the Sacred Poets," which is an anthology for hymn lovers. The author of both, Mr. Frederick Saunders, now in his ninety-second year, was librarian of the Astor Library for nearly forty years. In these volumes he gathered the essence of his wide knowledge of books, and, in the spirit of a gracious "book-worm," he imparts to others the results of his literary borings. The publisher is Mr. Thomas Whittaker.

Opinions of the Press

The Young Churchman

DR. SPRIGG.—The Southern Churchman has changed hands, and the Rev. Dr. Sprigg, who has been the editor for forty-four years, retires. That means the end of the Southern Churchman as its old friends have known it. The old name will be retained, and it may be better than of old, but never the same. The good Lord, in the process of creation, so provided that many men with varying types of character should constitute the human race; but in all the millions who have come and gone, there was but one Dr. Sprigg. No other man could write such quaint English. His pen will be missed from Church journalism. His like will never be seen again in defence of Protestantism. "A good man always wrong," might well be written for his epitaph when the world knows him no more; but we trust that may be many years hence. We shall open the paper with a sense of loss for a long time. His dropping out will leave a large hole, but we trust that through the opening thus made, the light of Catholic truth may shine, and illuminate the dark corners of the sanctum, from which has come forth the ghosts that ever danced before the good man's eyes. May the remaining days of the aged servant of God be full of joy and peace; and may the ghosts and goblins of ritualism never more disturb his mind.

THE FAITH OF CONGREGATIONALISM.—There was a time when Congregationalism stood for something. We believe that it stands for something to-day. Yet there has been apparent for some time in certain quarters a laxity in belief which has caused serious anxiety in the minds of all well-wishers of that noble denomination. This laxity has been, in numbers of instances, we think, more apparent than real; that is, the clamor of the radical element has been so loud, and the silence of many faint-hearted advocates of orthodoxy so continuous, as to make it appear that the "liberals," so-called, have swept the

John Ward's Burial

BY THE REV. MARCUS LANE

WE were returning home from the annual diocesan convention, that had been held at a stirring town in the eastern part of the diocese. We had finished our business at the morning session (an unusual thing with us) and were speeding towards our homes on the one railway that passed through the town.

This was before the days of a cathedral city, and it was the custom in that diocese to wander around in annual conventions from parish to parish, in a strangely uncertain fashion, according as we had received an invitation from some parish "that wanted the convention."

All had gone well with us, but two or three of the leading debaters had been absent, and the routine work had been done more promptly than usual, so that a little after midday we were on our homeward way in a special train provided for us by the kindness of the superintendent of that railway, who had been with us as a member of the convention. He was on the train—one of us—one of the Church's brotherhood in the fullest sense.

There were between forty and fifty clergymen, and almost as many laymen, and a goodly sprinkling of ladies who had accompanied their husbands and fathers to the convention. Most of us, with light hearts and easy consciences, were satisfied to make a social use of the present opportunity, and so the quip and the merry jest went freely round, for we knew that we were going back to the treadmill tasks of parish duties, and to the enforced restraints of a clergyman's home life. We were, as one good lady expressed it, "for all the world just like boys let out from school."

We had been an hour or more on the road, and were rapidly approaching a junction where we would lose two or three of our number. My seat was next behind the Bishop's who had been given a seat by himself, into which various of the clergy had intruded briefly, as each had some business or trouble to confide to his fatherly care.

The last one had gone away, and the Bishop leaned back with a heavy sigh, and a look of sadness came upon his face. Just then the superintendent came up, and placing his hand upon the back of the seat, said indly: "Bishop, you look grave. I would like to know what makes you sad, when all the rest are merry, and all has gone so well."

The Bishop looked up. A kindly, but not a merry, smile seemed to illumine his somewhat rugged features as he replied: "I am not sad, as you would mean it, but I was remembering that our dear brother, Ward, who has been with us at nearly every convention for nearly fifty years, is now lying dead at his home in Hillside, but two or three miles from this on the branch road. In less than an hour he will be borne to his burial. I have missed him sadly all convention time, and I have longed to go to his burial, but it was not to be! It could not be!"

"It shall be, if you wish it," said the superintendent. Reaching to the bell-cord, he gave it one quick jerk. At once the train came to a stand. "You have but to say the word, and we will all go," said the man in authority.

"I will bless you all my life for it," said he. "And I will thank God for the wish He gasplanted in your heart," and a tear rolled unheeded down the rugged cheek.

The conductor came hurrying in, received a brief order, and in a few minutes we were upon the branch road, backing rapidly toward Hillside. Looks of surprise and the few questions asked, were all hushed by the answer: "We are going to John Ward's funeral."

I turned to the Bishop who was already putting on his robes, and asked him if we should put on our vestments.

He hesitated a moment, then said: "It is not necessary." Then his voice rang out strong and clearly: "No vestments, brethren, but take your Prayer Books and Hymnals."

In a few minutes more we were there. The railroad ran close to the grounds of St. Ann's church, which lay in the midst of a little cemetery. As we stepped to the ground, two of the clergy motioned us into line, so that the procession was formed at once, and began its march, almost without a spoken word. As we began to move, the rich, strong voice of Henry St. John began the hymn:

"Oh! Paradise! oh! Paradise!
Who doth not crave for rest?"

It thrilled me through and through, as I am sure it did the others, and all joined in the hymn. Thus, singing of that Paradise of God, which John Ward had entered—with beating hearts and solemn song—we drew near to the doors of old St. Ann's, into which the coffin was just being borne. The bearers paused at the door and waited until the Bishop had taken his place, and then the service began. While this was being done I had time to note the scene before me.

St. Ann's was an old, old church in our diocese—so old that it counted more than a century of years. It had plain, high-backed pews and two aisles, lengthways, ending in a cross aisle at the front, at the ends of which were two square pews, with the queerest shaped chancel possible beyond. Between the two pews, in the cross aisle and directly in front of the shallow chancel, the coffin was placed, the very best that the skill of a country carpenter could make.

I had time to note all this; and then, seemed strangely carried out of, and beyond, myself. I shut my eyes until I but peeped through my eyelids. The scene changed as if by magic. The humble country church was gone, and in its place was something grand and magnificent—not a cathedral with its central altar, and its graceful arches, and vaulted roof, but something grander still, and far more sublime. I felt that I stood in God's great temple—that temple not made with hands, vast as God's being, and a part of It. I was still looking upon the Bishop's form as he started up the aisle, but just in front was another Presence, leading us on. I felt that it was the Lord Jesus, and yet I was half ashamed to feel that, somehow, whether for my sins or for my infirmities, I was catching but a glimpse of that Dear Form.

When the Bishop began the service, in some strange way the voice was changed. It was no longer the Bishop's voice, but the Lord's, and Oh! the exultation and the triumph with which He said again: "I am the Resurrection and the Life; he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die."

I was all the surer that it was the Lord's voice, because I remembered that He had said: "Where two or three are gathered together in My Name, there am I in the midst of them."

Eagerly did I strive to see Him, closer and nearer; but, as I strove, the Form vanished, and it was the Bishop's voice that I heard: "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth."

Yes, I knew it, too, as well as Job, but until I die no one shall be able to convince me that I had not seen my Master in the flesh, as He once stood among men, and as He walks among the churches. And that voice, and the music of it! I shall hear it again, and, until I do, I shall rejoice in that memory. "And His voice was as the sound of many waters." Never before did I rightly understand the meaning of that passage of Holy Writ.

On, the procession of the clergy swept, up to, and past, the coffin, filling the chancel and the space around. I was one of those for whom there was no seat. As I came out of my dream, I found myself standing at the door of the square pew wherein were the family of the deceased. They had risen to their feet, and in front of all was the widow of the dead priest, leaning heavily with both hands upon a cane whose head made, with the shaft, the shape of a Tau, one of the ancient and honored forms of the Cross. She was looking intently at the Bishop, with a rapt, ecstatic look upon her face, such as I might imagine to be the look of some holy saint gazing in ecstasy upon holy things in their glory and beauty.

The service went on. The tender, loving voice of Henry St. John began the chant: "Lord, let me know my end, and the number of my days," and we responded, verse by verse. Then came the reading of the lesson—read as few can read it; but grandest of all, like the triumphant appeal of an organ, came the exultant close. The reader had asked Death for his sting, and the grave for its victory. He declared that the sting of Death was sin, but he did not give to the grave the victory; "Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ." My heart answered back the strong assertion: "Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory." Then for a moment I saw again that shadowy Form, a little clearer, a little more distinct, but a dim, shadowy Form, after all.

There was a hymn sung—no matter what, followed by a few collects and a notice from the Bishop: "The remainder of the service will be at the grave." The Bishop stepped aside, and, leaning against the chancel rail, made signs, one by one, to six of the eldest and most honored presbyters of the diocese. They came forward and took up the coffin.

For the first time the eyes of the aged widow left the Bishop's face, and were fixed on something above and beyond him, and I heard her speaking in a low voice to herself; she was saying the Nunc Dimittis: "Lord! Now lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace, according to Thy word; for mine eyes have seen Thy salvation, which Thou hast prepared before the face of all people."

Down the aisles, and out from the church doors, the procession went, and as we passed through the door, Henry St. John began a chant, "The Lord is my Shepherd, therefore can I lack nothing." For a moment I thought it to be a strange chant for a burial, but as I looked beyond our little gathering,

"Keep to Your Place and Your Place will Keep You."

and saw the rich meadows, and a thread of silver water flowing through them, I recognized the appropriateness of the next words: "He shall feed me in a green pasture, and lead me forth beside the waters of comfort."

And so we went to the grave. First the Bishop, followed by the clergy, then the coffin and the family; then the remainder of our people, and then the good folks of St. Ann's and the neighborhood.

There was nothing unusual except that the Bishop and clergy took all the duties, even from the undertaker. When the time came, the Bishop motioned to one of the clergy—the eldest left in the diocese. He grasped in his hand a handful of mold and, very tenderly, just as if he were sowing seed for some coming harvest, yes, for the great harvest of humanity, he scattered it lovingly upon the coffin, "Earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust."

Our part of the procession was re-formed, and we went to the train singing that grand old hymn:

"Hark! Hark! My soul! Angelic songs are swelling, O'er earth's green fields and ocean's wave-beat shore."

Soon we were in our seats and the train moved on, just as a gentle shower began to fall. It brought to my mind that old saying of our English forefathers: "Happy are the dead whom the rain rains on."

It was the strangest burial that I ever attended, in one respect. There was absolutely nothing to mar the solemnity and beauty of the services. As the train started back to the junction the superintendent asked the Bishop: "Did you like it? And is all well?"

"All is well with him, and next to God, I thank you for the privilege of depositing this precious charge in the Master's keeping, waiting for the spring-time of the Resurrection."

It was but a few years later that I stood within a new St. Ann's. Old St. Ann's had passed away, and a new St. Ann's stood upon its site, and the people were gathered together for a round of celebrations. That evening I met John Ward's granddaughter, now become a young lady, and the belle of that countryside. Something that was said told me of the relationship, and I said to her: "I wonder if you are the young girl whom I saw at Father Ward's funeral?"

"Yes, I was there, and I remember seeing you."

"Then tell me what you thought of us as we came marching in unannounced. I have often wondered."

"No matter what I thought, but I will tell you what my grandmother thought. She said that it seemed to her as if the angels of God had come in the garb of men, to do honor to her dead husband, and she always said that she had seen the Lord Jesus there. She saw a Form, that at first was a mere shadow. It was different from all the rest, both in dress and appearance, and as the service closed, it became distinct. It was the Lord Jesus, much as she had seen Him represented in the old pictures. His head was uncovered. Long locks fell almost to His shoulders in golden waves, and He had upon Him what she called a glittering robe—not dazzling—but only glittering—not like anything else that she had ever seen, but it was a color that it did the eye good to look upon. As the service closed, she said to herself a little passage of Scripture; what it was, I know not [Yes, but I knew], and as she was saying it to herself, all at once He stood beside her, and He said to her, in gentle, kindly tones: 'Daughter, weep not! Wait yet a little while.' And so, until her death, she did not mourn for her husband. 'For,' she said, 'he has passed into God's keeping, and soon the Lord will be coming back for me.' He had told her to wait, and she was content to wait, biding His good time. It would be soon enough."

She had not long to wait. It was but a little while. Then the Lord Jesus came, and into His hands she commended her spirit.

A Philadelphia Parrot

A CONFECTIONER came into possession of a parrot three or four months ago. The bird had a fair-sized vocabulary, but it lacked one accomplishment. It couldn't count. Now, in the estimation of the confectioner, a parrot unable to count is almost as bad as no parrot at all, so he at once proceeded to instruct the bird in that line. The means adopted consisted of a pan of water and a whisk broom. When lesson time arrived the confectioner would dip the broom in the water, give it a shake in the direction of the parrot, flinging several drops of the fluid on its head, and then say, "One." With the next shake of the broom, and consequent descent of water upon the bird's head, he would exclaim "Two," and so on up to ten. In spite of all the confectioner did, however, the bird refused absolutely to count, although it was nearly drowned in several of the lessons. Finally the parrot's owner gave up in despair, and put the whisk broom and pan of water away for good. That was a couple of weeks ago, and the lessons had almost passed out of the confectioner's memory, when the other day as the parrot was hanging out of doors in its cage, the rain suddenly began to fall in great drops. The confectioner went to the door to bring in the bird, when he was startled to hear it exclaim: "One." The next instant, as another of the drops evidently struck it on the head, it called out, "Two." Then it shouted, "Three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten," in rapid succession. The rain kept coming down harder and harder, however, much to the parrot's astonishment. It looked sideways, then down, then up, evidently getting madder with each drop. Finally it could stand the insult no longer. Pitching its voice to the shrillest key it yelled: "Stop it, stop it, that's all I know, that's all I know, — it, that's all I know!"

The Land of Easy Tasks

BY REBECCA BARRETT

"OH dear," grumbled Bobby Scott, as he threw his arithmetic aside, "it's nothing but hard sums all the time, and no one to help me. These fractions won't come right, and what's the use of trying any more? I wish I could go where there's nothing hard in all the world. If a fellow wants to play a game of ball, his garden must be weeded first. And if there's a circus coming to town, as there is next week, he's got to earn the money for his ticket. If things came easy, I know I'd be perfectly happy, but I'd just about as soon go without if they've got to be worked for."

Bobby had hardly finished saying this when the page in fractions began to grow very dim, and suddenly one of the ciphers resolved itself into a big balloon, and Bobby found himself sailing away in it. Presently there was a bump, and the balloon landed. Bobby got out of the thing and looked around bewildered. He thought himself in the land of the Arabian Nights, or some such place, for everything was so wonderful and queer.

Beautiful flowers kept springing up as if by magic. But the little people who stood around, did not seem to notice them or to care to pick them. Bobby ran eagerly and gathered a bouquet, but immediately the flowers lost their charm, and he found himself throwing them down again.

Scattered all about the streets were gold and silver coins. Bobby's eyes stuck out with excitement when he saw them. Now, he thought, he could pick up enough to go to circuses the rest of his life. "Was there ever such luck?" he exclaimed. "Why, it is the next thing to finding Captain Kidd's treasure." He eagerly seized the glittering pieces and began to fill his pockets. But no sooner did he possess them than their value was gone and he cared no more about them.

"What does this mean, where am I?" Bobby inquired of one of the little people who had gathered around to see the newcomer. "Why don't all these things please me?"

"Because you are in the Land of Easy Tasks. Nobody has to work for anything here, and nobody prizes anything."

"How strange," answered Bobby. "I thought the easier a thing came, the more fun a fellow got out of it."

"You'll see you're all wrong if you stay here long enough," replied the little man.

"Don't you have to plant seeds in your gardens and weed them?" inquired Bobby curiously.

"Goodness no, boy, all you have to do is to wish for flowers, and they grow and blossom."

"And isn't the money ever earned here, and is nobody paid wages?"

"Of course not. We don't know what you mean by such questions. I tell you, you are in the Land of Easy Tasks."

The next place Bobby visited was a school. The arithmetics used here had the problems all worked out in them, the geographies were mere picture books, and as for the spellers, they were the queerest of all. The teacher simply pronounced from them, and immediately the letters would fly from the book, and spell out the word for the pupil.

Bobby was greatly entertained. "Oh, how I wish I could take some of these text-books back with me! Are not the children very happy here with such easy lessons?"

"Oh, my no," answered the teacher, "they are always crying because there is never anything hard to do, no lessons to learn and no problems to be solved. They can't enjoy their play ever, for the reason that they haven't worked first."

"I never thought of that before," said Bobby seriously. He looked around at the dull, unhappy faces of the children, and was convinced that the teacher had spoken truly. Bobby now began to think that this Land of Easy Tasks was not a very nice place to live in after all, and to wonder how he were going to get back to his own home again.

That evening Bobby was invited to go to a circus. It was the biggest one he had ever attended. There were such lots of horses, an enormous menagerie, and a half dozen clowns. Now, thought he, people cannot help having a good time. But far from it. As the entertainment was free, none seemed to appreciate what they saw at all. Half the people went out before the performance was over, and those who did stay looked bored and tired.

Bobby was more puzzled over this than anything he'd seen. "You people in this Land of Easy Tasks are the luckiest in the world," he remarked to his companion as they were coming off from the grounds, "and yet you seem the least contented."

"I can tell you why," answered the little man, who was quite a philosopher, if he did go to circuses. "There is nothing truer than that old proverb, 'Lightly come by, lightly held.' They say there is a country where everything has to be worked for, and everybody values what he gets accordingly. How happy I'd be if I could live in such a place!"

Bobby did not make any reply. He felt too ashamed to tell the little man that that was the very land he himself came from. He hung his head guiltily as he remembered his numerous complaints. But while he was thinking about it, the figure before him began gradually to diminish in size, and finally faded away altogether. Suddenly Bobby's head gave a jerk.

"Why, you've been asleep, haven't you Bobby?" said his mother. "You had better get up early to-morrow morning and do your sums, you are too tired to-night."

And Bobby trudged off to bed, but quite a different Bobby from the one who had sat down to his arithmetic lesson only an hour or two before.

A Wise Elephant

IN my opinion the elephant is the most intelligent of all animals. He thinks for himself, and no matter in what position he may be placed, nor what emergencies he may be called upon to meet, he seems to be endowed with enough common sense to be equal to all occasions. He has also a strong sense of humor, which at times is so marked as to be almost human. This sense of the humorous was unusually well developed in an elephant I knew in the Jardin des Plantes in Paris. He was kept in a great enclosure out in the open air, so that he had plenty of room to roam about. In the same enclosure was a very large hippopotamus, for whose comfort and amusement a great stone basin had been built and filled with water, and the hippopotamus in turn furnished amusement for the elephant. It was quite early one morning—before the hour for admitting the public to the garden—when I noticed the elephant walking around on the edge of the basin, curiously watching the hippopotamus, which was completely under water. I felt quite sure that the elephant was up to some prank, and I was not mistaken; for, just as soon as the ears of the hippopotamus came into view, the elephant quickly seized one of them with his trunk and gave it a sudden pull. The enraged hippopotamus lifted his ponderous head clear out of the water and snorted and blew; but every time he rose to take breath the elephant would recommence his antics. Around and around the great quadruped would go, keeping a sharp lookout for the little ears of the hippopotamus, which he would instantly seize the moment they appeared. His evident delight in teasing his huge neighbor was very comical, and there could be no doubt that he thoroughly enjoyed it. Again one day the keeper placed some food for the hippopotamus in a corner of the enclosure, and at once the hippopotamus began to leave the water to get it, but the elephant slowly ambled over to the same corner, and arriving there first, he placed his four feet over the favorite food in such a way that the hippopotamus could not get it, gently swayed his trunk back and forth, and acted altogether as though he were there quite accidentally, until the garden was thrown open to the public and he went forward to receive the daily contributions of bread, cake, pie, etc., which were always offered him by his hosts of admirers.

Elephants appear to take much enjoyment in life, and exhibit a good-natured spirit even while at work. In the animals' quarters at Bridgeport, some time ago, two little elephants showed evident pleasure in the tasks that were set them. Even in their stable, when no trainer was about, one little elephant would stand on its head just as it was used to do in the circus, and the other would look anxiously on until its own turn came to stand on its head and to be admired by the other.

In his native clime, during the hot hours of the day, the elephant usually seeks the friendly shade of a grove of trees, so as to shield himself from the burning rays of the sun. Some time ago in Central Park, the elephants in summer were kept in an open enclosure where there were no trees nor shade of any kind, and during the hot days when the mercury was well up in the nineties, the heat in the neighborhood of that enclosure was almost unbearable. Intently watching the elephants there was always a number of persons carrying sunshades or umbrellas, to protect themselves from the sun's fierce rays. I wonder how many of those onlookers realized that the elephants were carrying sunshades too? For such was really the case. On the very hot days the great quadrupeds would take the hay which was given them, or, when they could get it, the newly mown grass, and completely thatch their backs with it to shield themselves from the sun. They will sometimes do this same thing in fly time to protect themselves from being bitten, for, strange as it may seem, the elephant's skin is very sensitive.

In Africa there grows a tree called the Heglik tree, which bears fruit known by the name of lolobes. Now the elephant is very fond of lolobes, but it happens that the fruit grows so high up as to be quite out of the animal's reach. Of course that fact does not deter the elephant from trying to get it. True, he cannot climb a tree, but he has a big bump of ingenuity, and we may rest assured that he gets that fruit by some means or other. Sir Samuel Baker, the great African traveler, was fortunate enough one day to see an elephant in the very act of getting the fruit. The elephant would retire a short distance from the tree and then rush at the trunk at full speed, striking his head against it with such force as to make the tree tremble in every limb, and to shake down the fruit, repeating the charge again and again, until enough lolobes had fallen to satisfy his appetite.—MEREDITH NUGENT in Our Animal Friends.

Coffee Makes Many Dyspeptics.

"Coffee and I had quite a tussle. Two years ago I was advised by the doctor to quit the use of coffee, for I had a chronic case of dyspepsia and serious nervous troubles which did not yield to treatment. I was so addicted to coffee that it seemed an impossibility to quit, but when I was put on Postum Cereal Food Coffee, there was no trouble in making the change, and to-day I am a well woman.

"One of the lady teachers in our public schools was sick and nervous. Frequently the only thing she took for breakfast was a cup of coffee; I urged her to try leaving off the coffee, and use Postum instead. Went so far as to send her a sample from my box, and give her directions. She now uses nothing but Postum Food Coffee, and told me a short time ago that she was perfectly well.

"It is easy to make good Postum, once a person becomes accustomed to it. I put four heaping teaspoons to the pint of water, and put the Postum in thin, muslin bags, drop the bag into the water, and after it comes up to a boil, see that from that time on it boils fifteen or twenty minutes, then use good cream, and you have a drink that would be relished by the Queen." Mrs. Lizzie Whittaker, Kidder, Mo. Postum is sold by all first-class grocers at 15 and 25 cents per package.

A PECULIAR REMEDY

Something About the New Discovery for Curing Dyspepsia.

The Rev. F. I. Bell, a highly esteemed minister residing in Weedsport, Cayuga Co., N. Y., in a recent letter writes as follows: "There has never been anything that I have taken that has relieved the Dyspepsia from which I have suffered for ten years, except the new remedy called Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. Since taking them, I have had no distress at all after eating, and again, after long years, can sleep well. Rev. F. I. Bell, Weedsport, N. Y., formerly Idalia, Col.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is a remarkable remedy, not only because it is a certain cure for all forms of indigestion, but because it seems to act as thoroughly in old chronic cases of Dyspepsia as well as in mild attacks of indigestion or biliousness. A person has dyspepsia simply because the stomach is overworked; all it wants is a harmless vegetable remedy to digest the food, and thus give it the much-needed rest.

This is the secret of the success of this peculiar remedy. No matter how weak or how much disordered the digestion may be, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest the food, whether the stomach works or not. New life and energy is given, not only to the stomach, but to every organ and nerve in the body.

A trial of this splendid medicine will convince the most skeptical that Dyspepsia and all stomach troubles can be cured. Send for little book on Stomach, mailed free, by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. So popular has the remedy become, that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can now be obtained at any drug store at 50c. per package.

DURING the last week public apprehension as to the political situation in South Africa has been quieted by the commencement of hostilities. We say quieted because the war of itself confined to the English and the Boers, is a matter of little consequence so far as international commerce is concerned, and only the uncertainty as to its possible financial effect in London gave rise to a feeling of caution in the financial centre. War has been declared and fighting has begun, and as might have reasonably been expected matters have resumed in London and elsewhere their former security. The high rates of discount prevailing in London, and on the continent, partly in consequence of the war, has made further importations of gold into the United States at this time unlikely, and in fact there has been some conjecture as to the probability of gold being exported to a moderate degree. In New York while there is very little change shown by the last bank statement, money is more freely offered, and interest rates are much lower. This has been partly brought about by the offer of the Secretary of the Treasury to anticipate the interest on the government debt up to June 30th, 1900. If this offer were universally accepted, the amount to put afloat would be about 26 million dollars, but the small discount which the government exacts for this favor, will deter many holders of bonds from accepting it. However, the moral effect so far has been beneficial. Notwithstanding the easier money market and the seeming re-establishment of confidence in London, the stock market has shown but little animation, and prices are hardly more than steady.

Railway earnings and bank clearings leave nothing to be desired. Transportation facilities of every kind are taxed to their capacity. In the matter of east bound freight, lack of cars, alike on roads running from the west into Chicago, and to the seaboard, seriously hinders business, and this, too, at a time when the carrying capacity of all the roads is greater than ever before. Bank clearings for the country at large continue steadily at above 25 per cent over the corresponding period last year. These two items, bank clearings and transportation, fairly reflect the volume of the country's business. In every department of production and distribution there is activity, and in practically all, prices are firm. In some staples, for instance iron and leather, on account of the advanced prices, buyers are but little disposed to contract ahead, but demand for current use is large. As an example, notwithstanding the weekly output of iron has been increased 11,000 tons, and is now 278,000 tons, actual consumptive demand reduced unsold stock last month 27,000 tons. In woolen and cotton fabrics, the demand is good. In cotton the demand is so large that prices have steadily advanced for weeks past. The grain and provision markets, if they share in the general prosperity, do not exhibit it by advancing prices. Wheat is selling around 70 cents. This is a fair price under normal conditions, and when we consider that the world's wheat crops the past five years have been about 600 million bushels more than the crops of the two preceding years, and far in excess of the estimated world's consumption, and that the stocks of wheat in every position all over the world are liberal, perhaps we owe it to prosperity that the price is as high as it is.

Trade with the Transvaal

SOME indication of the prospective effect of the Transvaal war upon the commerce of the United States with South Africa is found in facts recently presented by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics in its monograph, entitled Commercial Africa in 1899. This shows that the imports of the Transvaal in 1897 were, according to the best estimates, over 100 million dollars, of which about 85 millions were from Great Britain, 13 million, 500 thousand from the United States, 5 millions from Germany, and the remainder from Belgium, Holland, and France. All of these importations reach the Republic, which has no seaports, through the ports of Cape Town, Port Elizabeth, Port Alfred, and East London, in Cape Colony; Durban, in Natal, and Lourenco Marquez in Portuguese East Africa. The direct importations into the Transvaal through Cape Colony, in 1897, were $20,363,572, and through the other ports of Cape Colony probably an equally large amount; those through Durban and other ports in Natal, $11,339,042, and those through Lourenco Marquez in Portuguese territory, $12,936,237. In addition to this, large quantities of goods imported into Cape Colony, Natal, and Portuguese East Africa, for consumption in those colonies, were afterwards sold for consumption in the Transvaal, thus making up the grand total of over 100 million dollars. It will be observed from this statement that up to the present time the importation of goods into the Transvaal has largely passed through the British ports of Cape Colony and Natal, which will now be closed against commerce for that State, thus temporarily changing the course of the supplies, which the large population there located must continue to have. The closing of these ports will compel the Boers either to obtain their supplies of imports through Portuguese territory, or else live upon what they can obtain from their own territory and that of the colonies which they may invade, since both the South African Republic and the Orange Free State are surrounded by British territory on every side, except at the east, where Portuguese East Africa intervenes between the Boer States and the Indian Ocean. The total value of goods in transit for the South African Republic and the Orange Free State, passing through Portuguese East Africa in 1897, was in round terms, 14 million dollars, and the exports from the United States to Portuguese East Africa amounted in 1897 to $1,800,000, and in 1898 to $2,897,000.

As already indicated, the Transvaal has up to this time taken a large share of its imports from and through the British colonies of Cape Colony and Natal. Imports into the Cape of Good Hope from the United States in 1897 amounted to over 10 million dollars, out of a total of 86 millions, and of this probably one-half was intended for consumption in the Transvaal. The imports into Natal from the United States in 1897 amounted to $3,200,000, out of a total of 30 millions, and it is probable that a considerable share of this was destined for the Transvaal, since the rail distance from the chief port of Natal to the Transvaal is much less than that through the ports of Cape Colony.

Suggestions for School Lunches

THE following is an arrangement for one week

Monday.—Cold tongue, "patty" cakes, bread and butter, fresh fruit.

Tuesday.—Cheese Sandwich, cake, custard, bread and butter.

Wednesday.—Egg sandwich, canned fruit, wafers, tea cakes.

Thursday, meet sandwich, buttered crackers, Graham bread, fruit.

Friday.—Sliced meat, bread and butter, pickles, cookies, custard. To each of the above add a small flask of milk.

The "patty" cakes are made by mixing together one egg, well beaten, one cup of sugar, one tablespoonful of butter, one and one half teaspoonfuls of baking powder, two cups of flour, and one half cup of water. Flavor to taste and bake in muffin molds.

The cheese sandwich is simply grated cheese, with the bread prepared as for any sandwich. The children would relish any of the following sandwiches:

Egg Sandwich—Chop the whites of hard boiled eggs very fine, and rub the yolks through a sieve; to each yolk allow a saltspoonful of warm butter, mix well, and add the whites of the eggs, season with salt and pepper, then spread on nicely buttered bread.

Peanut Sandwich—Pound the nuts to a paste, spread on thin slices of buttered bread, dust with salt and grated cheese, cover with a slice of bread, and press firmly together.

Salmon Sandwich—Remove all the skin and bones from canned salmon, and with the fingers work to a smooth paste, adding enough mayonnaise to make it spread nicely. Squeeze over a little lemon juice and spread on unbuttered bread.

Celery Sandwich—Chop the celery very fine, and spread a thin layer on nicely buttered bread, dust with salt, and cover with another slice of buttered bread, pressing the two firmly together.

Chicken or Turkey Sandwich—The meat on a drumstick left from the roast or stew should be chopped fine, moistened with a little gravy or warm butter, seasoned, and spread between thin slices of buttered bread.—Good Housekeeping.

FROM PENNSYLVANIA.—The LIVING CHURCH is a good paper. I enjoy its weekly visits. Send it on!

NOVEMBER CENTURY

Cover by Ernest Haskell.

Beginning a New Volume with First Chapters of The Cromwell History, "The Biography of a Grizzly," "The Autobiography of a Quack," and with contributions from Mark Twain, Theodore Roosevelt, and many other well-known writers.

JOHN MORLEY.

First Chapters of the New LIFE OF OLIVER CROMWELL,

By the Right Hon. John Morley, M. P.

THE conductors of The Century have great pleasure in announcing as the most important historical feature of the year, Mr. Morley's new life of Cromwell, undertaken on the invitation of the editor of The Century. No man is more competent than John Morley to treat Cromwell in the spirit of the end of the nineteenth century. His work as a historian, as seen in the biographies of Edmund Burke and Richard Cobden, is well known. He is now engaged on the authorized biography of Gladstone.

The illustrations of the Cromwell series will be remarkable. Besides original drawings by well-known English and American artists, permission to reproduce valuable unpublished portraits has been given by Her Majesty Queen Victoria and by the owners of the greatest Cromwell collections in Europe.

DR. S. WEIR MITCHELL.

First Chapters of THE BIOGRAPHY OF A GRIZZLY, By Ernest Seton-Thompson.

THE author of "Wild Animals I Have Known" here writes his longest and most important story. It is a most original and dramatic study of animal life, so intimate that it seems almost as if it were written by another grizzly. It is strikingly illustrated by the author, the pictures printed in black and tints.

ERNEST SETON-THOMPSON.

A Chapter from MARK TWAIN'S ABANDONED AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

IT was current newspaper report a few months ago that Mark Twain had written an autobiography which would not be published for a hundred years. This idea, if it ever existed in the mind of the author, has been given up, but an autobiography was begun, and this is one of the chapters, entitled "My Début as a Literary Person."

MARK TWAIN.

THREE UNUSUALLY STRONG STORIES

appear in this number of The Century, all of them illustrated, and there are notable poems, including one by James Russell Lowell on Shakspeare, and a poem by John Burroughs.

THE ART WORK IN THE NOVEMBER CENTURY

is especially attractive. Besides the pictures printed in color, there are three exquisite full-page wood-engravings by Timothy Cole, the acknowledged leader of the world's wood-engravers. Other full-page pictures include a beautiful portrait of Mrs. Harrison Gray Otis by Gilbert Stuart.

First Chapters of THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A QUACK, A Serial Story

By Dr. S. Weir Mitchell.

EVERYBODY has read Dr. Mitchell's great novel of the American Revolution, "Hugh Wynne," and will want to read what may be called his doctor story, which The Century will print in three numbers, beginning in November. It is a curious and entertaining psychological study, full of humor.

CAPTAIN JOSHUA SLOCUM.

SAILING ALONE AROUND THE WORLD.

THE personal experiences of Captain Joshua Slocum in the voyage of 46,000 miles in a forty-foot boat, is one of the most entertaining and notable narratives of adventure ever printed in the magazine. In this November instalment Captain Slocum tells of his calls at Juan Fernandez and at Samoa.

GOVERNOR ROOSEVELT AND PRESIDENT ELIOT

are contributors to this November Century, Governor Roosevelt writing an important paper on "Military Preparedness and Unpreparedness," and President Eliot of Harvard on "The Forgotten Millions." There are a number of important illustrated articles in the number, including one on "Wagner from Behind the Scenes," by Gustav Kobbé, with most entertaining illustrations which describe "scenery that acts." Another illustrated article reproduces Robert Blum's paintings for the Mendelssohn Glee Club house of New York.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

The November Century is the most attractive number of the magazine ever issued. Buy it on any news-stand (price 35 cents), or BEGIN A YEAR'S SUBSCRIPTION WITH THIS NUMBER (price $4.00), which opens a new volume, and in which the new serials begin. Notes of the World's Progress

OWING TO THE STRICT CENSORSHIP maintained in South Africa, no news of importance concerning the struggle now in progress is obtainable, except from virtually English sources. This does not imply that reports are colored, but rather that England does not intend to let over-zealous correspondents tell of plans and proposed moves, the publication of which would be of advantage to the Boers. While battles are in progress, efforts are still making to settle differences by arbitration, although there seems to be little likelihood that a settlement can be reached by other than the arbitrament of arms, unless the Boers agree to unconditional surrender. European correspondents are "seeing things," and are cabling voluminous dispatches concerning the "possibilities" of European interference. Of course such interference is possible, but highly improbable. The cables also advise us that as Emperor William is to visit his grandmother, Queen Victoria, he will not participate in any plans for interference. It is kind of Emperor William to take the correspondents into his confidence.

—X—

DISPATCHES FROM CARACAS, VENEZUELA, are in effect that the revolution against President Andrade, which at one time seemed to be suppressed, has finally succeeded, and that General Castro, the insurgent leader, has entered the capital city triumphantly. President Andrade has disappeared, and with him several gunboats and other movable government property. He has not abdicated, nor been defeated, but seems to have departed for less turbulent scenes. He is possessed of considerable wealth, but was unable to transfer his property into cash before leaving Caracas. It is not known who will be the new Venezuelan president, but there will likely be little difficulty in securing some one of prominence to accept the honor. And when according to the ideas of another aspirant, the incumbent has occupied the presidential chair a sufficient time, another revolution will be launched. It will be interesting to learn whether the new government will bear the expense of the arbitration tribunal. There are several heavy bills to meet, one estimated at $250,000, being the fee of ex-President Harrison.

INDICATIONS ARE THAT ALL WILL not go well with the bicycle trust, and that next season, and for many seasons thereafter, bicycles will not be cornered. The formation of the great company took in many of the leading manufacturers, who contrived a majority of patents, but left out several hundred small makers who have now organized to save their existence. They have formed a corporation with a capital of $100,000, and this amount will be used as a fund to resist any legal steps the trust may take to stifle competition. As the demand for bicycles grows less, competition will naturally be more keen, and prices take a downward tendency. And there is no doubt the bicycle craze has passed its meridian. Hence the public views with greater apathy the trust in wheels than would have been the case five years ago. The demand now-a-days is for a machine whose propulsion is not by an expenditure of muscular force.

IN BUILDING THE NEW SOUTH, EFFORTS have been made to combat old traditions, and demonstrate that the country could be made to yield more wealth if greater attention were paid to other things than cotton raising. The prevailing low price of that commodity has made its production much less profitable than in former years. With the development of mineral resources, however, and enlargement of agricultural pursuits, a vast industrial improvement has resulted, and the prospects of the South were never brighter than at present. Tea may become an important industrial factor in the South. The Department of Agriculture has issued a report upon the experiment of raising this product in South Carolina, by Dr. C. M. Shepard, special agent in charge of tea culture investigations. Dr. Shepard, in charge of Pinehurst plantation at Summerville, has demonstrated that the cultivation of tea can be made very profitable. From a plantation of fifty acres, the plants, when full bearing, will yield fully 10,000 pounds of high grade tea.

—X—

IT IS OFFICIALLY ANNOUNCED THAT the Wagner sleeping car company has been absorbed by the Pullman company, the latter relinquishing certain stocks which will give the Vanderbilt interests control of the railway situation in New England. The merging of these interests into a corporation with a capital of $74,000,000, will make little difference to the public. The only competition between the two companies has been for contracts with railroads, and owing to palace tariffs, dividends have been most gratifying. In spite of agitation which has been carried on for years, representatives of sleeping car companies have singularly been able to convince legislatures that rates ought not to be reduced by law, and this, too, at a time when the companies were reaping fortunes. The public should be gainers by the consolidation, because with a reduction of expenses, the earning capacity will be proportionately increased. But until the law shall step in, the public will pay as much for an upper berth as a lower, and make up to the porter that part of his wages which the Pullman company will not pay, lest by so doing dividends and surplus be slightly decreased.

—X—

FOLLOWING IN THE WAKE OF DECISIONS in Missouri and Indiana, the Illinois Supreme Court has handed down a decision unfavorable to the trust industry.

The case in question was brought by one of the stockholders, to test the validity of the transfer of property at Peoria to the corporation known as the "Glucose Trust," on the ground that it was illegal and an attempt to limit the sale of glucose in the State of Illinois, in violation of the anti-trust law. As the "trust" form of organization is illegal, the method is to organize a company which purchases the plants of existing companies, corporation lawyers having held that the right of sale and purchase is inviolate. But Missouri, Indiana, and Illinois have held that these purchases are a sham, and that a company organized to purchase other companies, is to all respects and purposes a trust.

—X—

TWO RECENT HAPPENINGS HAVE well illustrated a prevailing sentiment that the army and navy departments would command more respect if less effort were expended in pushing favorites, and more attention paid to the recognition of worth, ability, and achievement. In a speech at St. Paul, Secretary of the Navy Long attributed the success of the Santiago engagement to Admiral Sampson. The speaker was loudly interrupted by cries of "Schley," and thereupon remarked there was credit sufficient for all. While speaking at a banquet tendered to Captain Chadwick, Admiral Sampson created surprise by stating that Captain Chadwick, not General Shafter, indicted the letter to the Spanish commander which resulted in the surrender of Santiago. General Shafter, comfortably ensconced in the Presidio at San Francisco, arises in print long enough to remark that he does not care to engage in a mud-throwing contest with Admiral Sampson. The latter had the same opportunity at Santiago as Dewey had at Manila. All credit to Dewey and Schley who were beyond reach of "admirable tacticians," and therefore accomplished their objects.

FOR ONCE "LIPTON'S LUCK" HAS failed. Although patriotic Americans hoped to see the International Cup retained on this side of the water, and therefore pinned their hopes on Columbia, yet Sir Thomas Lipton, by his uniform courtesy and gentlemanly bearing, won hosts of friends who, if the cup were to have been lost, would have preferred to see Sir Thomas take it in preference to any other competitor. The demeanor of the representative of the Royal Ulster Yacht Club has been in strong contrast to those who in recent years have attempted to wrest the cup from American hands. His effort has cost him in the neighborhood of $1,000,000, and the fact that no expense was spared in the building and equipment of the Shamrock, furnishes strong proof that in the construction of yachts up to the present time, America is superior to England. It is announced that next season England will make another trial.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew Annual Convention

WHEN the Brotherhood Council decided to hold the 14th annual convention at some point in the Middle West, perhaps the most important consideration in selecting Columbus, in the diocese of Southern Ohio, was that the Church in that part is striving more than ever to justify its claim to recognition as a factor in moulding the national life, and needed the convention; needed the inspiration, the encouragement, and the enthusiasm which such a body of men can always impart. Bishop Vincent emphasized this by issuing a strong appeal to the men of his diocese to attend the convention. The local committees left no room for criticism or complaint. The Board of Trade Auditorium, which was used as the convention hall, has a seating capacity of about 1,500, and on two occasions was filled to overflowing. It is about two minutes' walk from Trinity parish house, where the sectional conferences were held, and half that distance from Trinity church. The decorations of the hall were simple, but effective. All of the singing in the convention hall, was kept in good time and harmony, by the aid of a pipe organ and two cornets.

THE CHARGE BY BISHOP JOHNSTON

Trinity church, in which all the devotional services were held, will seat comfortably about 600 people. At the hour appointed for the opening service on Thursday morning, Oct. 19th, the church was well filled, and the deep diapason of several hundred male voices rose in the strains of "Onward, Christian soldiers." The Creed and prayers were followed by the hymn, "Jesus calls us." Bishop Vincent was to have delivered the charge to the convention, but was called to Cleveland to officiate at the funeral of the Rev. Y. P. Morgan. Bishop Johnston, of Western Texas, kindly took his place. He said in part:

There is need of definite purpose in every life that has any prospect of success. As St. James says: "A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways." What are we in the world for? Most of those brought up in the Church and in the knowledge of its catechism, would answer: "To learn and labor truly to get mine own living, and to do my duty in that state of life into which it has pleased God to call me." Most men would consider that a high answer, that that was the most one could do. And it is a high answer. Doing of duty is what makes us men; we feel that to be false to duty is to violate our inmost nature and to be unworthy of a place in the world in which we live. This sense of responsibility of conduct is one of the most fundamental instincts of the race. But high as this is, there is something higher, and the higher the ideal, the higher the attainment. We can only rise to the higher by dissatisfaction with the lower. It is the dissatisfied people who have made the world progress. By the dissatisfied he did not mean the grumblers, but those men who looking into themselves were dissatisfied with what they found there, and who, seeing what God had made possible for them, wished to fulfill His purpose. He illustrated his meaning by speaking of several dissatisfied men. He quoted Prof. Hyde: "The worst enemy of the better is the average good."

How then are we to achieve this new ideal? In answer he gave first these words of King David: "Lo, I come to do Thy will, O God." And then the words of a higher than David, "great David's greater Son": "My meat and drink is to do the will of Him that sent me." So we must consciously as sons of God try to do God's will, and to help Him have it done. But what is God's will? This is the will of God concerning you, that you should be sanctified, made holy, free from sin like Jesus, the one man absolutely without sin in the whole world. But must we be holy before God accepts us or takes an interest in us? I think not; that would be a very discouraging view. He thought that God who knew us through and through, not only knowing our achievements, but our attempts and even our desires, when He knew that we even wanted to be good, must then take an immense interest in us. He believed that God would then be working with us. But how is this state of sanctification to be brought about? He answered this by the story of one of our bishops who was talking one day with a noted infidel, and in the course of the conversation asked him: "If you were not what you would like to be, what would you do?" and the other replied: "I would choose the life of the best man I knew and strive to imitate it." The bishop said: "You have answered that question well. Now one more: Whose life would you choose?" And the man answered: "Jesus Christ. Judged by all standards, He is the best man who ever lived, and any one who imitates Him is bound to become a better man." Bishop Johnston again quoted Prof. Hyde: "We speak most truly and in accordance with the real nature of things when we characterize the absolute in terms of the best we know." Christ is the best we know, therefore He is the revelation and incarnation of God to us, else God will be to our thinking but a mere name. He said, however, that he would choose another word than "imitation." Don't imitate anybody, be yourself, but your best and highest self. What we need to seek is not imitation of Christ, but to get His Spirit in us, and then we shall grow into His likeness. We shall be ourselves but ourselves with Christ in us.

But to what purpose is this sanctification? Is it merely to hang ourselves up in a picture gallery for our own and others' admiration? Nothing would be more un-Christlike. No, after He has worked His will in us, we must help Him work in others. We must go and impart these truths to others. This is the highest and most essential duty of a Christian man. The prayer that our Lord Himself told us to say—that probably most men who pray at all, say once a day at least—contains the words, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," and the Lord's own prayer will be answered. It would be blasphemy to doubt it. It is being answered now, but the reason there is no earlier answer, is because God is waiting for you and me to help Him. He honors us by asking us to be co-workers with Him, that we may share in the glory, and the only sure sign of our salvation is our willingness to help others; "not to be ministered unto, but to minister."

The necessary thing in this world for a man is not success in business, not happiness at home, not realized ambition; all these things are good, but their great good is to give us opportunities to help God get His will done on earth. That is our part: To do the will of God here, and let God take care of us when the battle is over.

I hope I have made clear what is the purpose of our presence in this world. What we need now is the power to accomplish. How shall we get it? Let me answer by an illustration. In an electrical power-house some of the dynamos are instinct with life, and giving life and motion to many things; others are helpless, motionless, dead. What makes the difference? Those that are in action are geared onto the main shaft, and so it is with us. We want to be geared onto Christ, and then we will be as strong as He is. We will be able, like St. Paul, to "do all things within the line of our calling." We must get into Jesus Christ and get Him into us. This is the life principle by which we must be guided.

How are we to do this? By faith, not about Him, but in Him. We do not have to understand—fortunately for us—all about the Incarnation and the Atonement; our part is to believe in Jesus Christ as the Son of God, to say with St. Thomas: "My Lord and my God."

The Bishop spoke of Dewey and the great welcome given him—all the time and money and strength spent to do him honor. He did not begrudge him any of it, but he thought: Why is it that followers of Jesus Christ cannot have some of the same enthusiasm for the great Captain of their salvation who has made this world what it is?

My charge is that you pray for faith and that you get into Christ, and get Him into you, and do His will.

ORGANIZATION

At 2:30 P. M., after the hymn, "O God, our help in ages past," Mr. Silas McBee called the convention to order. Addresses of welcome were made by Gov. Bushnell, the Rev. J. W. Atwood, rector of Trinity church, and Mr. W. G. Benham, of Columbus, council member for Ohio, to which Mr. McBee responded. The general secretary, Mr. John Wood, read the names of all members who had died during the past year, and Bishop Talbot said prayers.

The officers elected were: Chairman, D. W. English, of Calvary church, Pittsburgh; vice-chairmen, W. G. Benham, of Trinity, Columbus, G. F. Shelby, of St. John's cathedral, Denver, C. B. McCarthy, of St. Matthew's, Philadelphia; secretaries, H. T. Young, Chicago, H. F. Hunker, New York city, W. Terry Benton, Louisville, Ky.

The treasurer's report followed, showing a deficit of about $10,000. Commenting on this report, a member asked why the Self-Denial Fund was so small, and others dwelt, in answer, upon the point that it was not properly explained to the chapters, and therefore not understood.

At 4:30 the convention adjourned, and the members went in a body to the State House, where the governor received them informally. About 300 members registered the first day.

THE COUNCIL REPORT

From the annual report of the council we give the following items:

During the year 43 new chapters have been enrolled, and 18 chapters which had previously surrendered their charters, have asked for their re-issue. But this gain of 61 chapters is more than offset by the 122 chapters whose charters have been withdrawn because of failure on the part of their members to maintain the work which, as Brotherhood men, they had agreed to do. The net decrease in the number of chapters is, therefore, 61. There are now 1,187 chapters whose charters are still in force. Some of these, it must be admitted, are not doing aggressive work, but expect shortly to deserve a place among the ranks of the active chapters.

Professor Frank E. Wood, as the Brotherhood's representative, has concluded another year of quiet and useful work on behalf of the young men of Japan. He has been transferred from Tokyo to an important place in the school at Nara, where the Brotherhood's first representative, Charles H. Evans, began his work. A young lawyer of Calvary chapter, New York, and a university student of St. Mark's chapter, Berkeley, Cal., have during the year taken service as lay missionaries under the Bishop of Alaska, and are now doing faithful work among the thousands of men of our own country, who are gathered in the many camps of the Klondike region.

The contributions to the Self-Denial Fund fell considerably short of what the Brotherhood has done in the past. The amount given is $2,002.85, as compared with $3,145.17, given in 1895. This year's contributions have been received from 366 senior and 40 junior chapters. Only about one-third of the chapters have thus shared in this general effort for the maintenance and extension of the Brotherhood at home and abroad. Individual members and friends of the Brotherhood contributed $3,600 for general missionary work, through the "Extension Fund." In addition, there has been received through the army committee, $3,800, contributed almost entirely by individuals outside of our own membership. The council has thus been entrusted with the disbursement of over $9,000, on account of missionary work of several kinds both at home and abroad.

The junior department gives numerous evidences of useful and permanent growth. During the year 71 chapters have been chartered. The total active enrollment is over 300 chapters, with about 3,200 members. An increasing number of juniors are being transferred to senior chapters. Almost without exception they have shown themselves to be zealous and intelligent workers.

The object of the Brotherhood cannot be achieved by the mere doing of pious things. It is easier to be busied by the many petty details of Brotherhood mechanism than to strive calmly and steadily by prayer, thought, and deed to realize the Brotherhood's ideal. We urge Brotherhood men to give themselves more fully to the higher and the harder service. God demands the service of our souls and our minds as well as of our hearts and hands. We cannot by doing something for Him release ourselves from the duty of being something for Him. Men who are to endure the strain of constant service must be men who are daily becoming stronger in soul and mind. We are profoundly convinced that our thought-to-day should be turned from the effort to discover ingenious schemes of work, and should be fixed upon the development of a reverent and intelligent Churchmanship. We therefore recommend that chapter meetings be used less for the discussion of the trivial details of routine, and more as opportunities for prayer, conference, and study concerning the things of the Kingdom of God. If we are to do real work for men through the Church we must be better informed about her history and teaching, and realize more fully the divine character of her commission. Men who worship together will not fail to work together. Men who are inspired by the Church's past will not fail to serve her in the present. Men who study the triumphs of the Gospel in non-Christian lands will be the more zealous in their work at home, and will not be daunted by any obstacles to the Kingdom's progress. We ask you to apply the fruits of both worship and study to the varied problems of human life, that men may see that you approach them as those who have a Gospel to announce as wide as the needs of humanity and higher than its highest hopes.

Special attention was called by various speakers to the counsel given in the sentences we have quoted.

ADDRESS BY THE REV. A. S. LLOYD, D.D.

The service on Thursday evening in preparation for the Holy Communion, conducted by the Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D.D., of Norfolk, Va., was perhaps the most soul-stirring of the entire session. After the hymn, "O Sion, haste," the Nicene Creed, the Lord's Prayer, and the Ten Commandments were recited; Dr. Lloyd then began his address without announcing a text.

Whatever else may be discerned in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, two verities are there witnessed to which must be recognized if men would live in Christ Jesus and share His friendship. The first, of course, is that of which it is primarily the divine token, that the life of the soul made alive by the Word of God Incarnate must be nourished and sustained by feeding on the Body and Blood of Christ. Secondly, we may look upon the feast as the fulfillment of our Master's promise to meet with His friends, and by communion with them reveal more and more clearly the vital relation between Him and them; thus teaching them to understand more fully what manner of men those must be whom He has made members of His Body, and partakers of His Life. As I believe the world will never acknowledge our Master as its Lord and King until His servants cease from thinking of themselves and what they may get from the Christ, and fixing their thoughts on His glory and majesty, strive to learn what they may do for Him, I have ventured to adopt the second of these for our thought, and ask you to consider the influences that ought to give direction to the life of those upon whom the Son of God has conferred the divine prerogative of sharing His life and fulfilling His work. Every man who is baptized in the Name of Christ is enjoined by His Lord and Saviour to regard men and the world from His Master's standpoint, and to be ready to give his life to the world just as Messiah gave His life, and for the same purpose, that in those whom Christ has named, the world may have ever before it living interpretations of the Father's mind; and thus be taught how to fashion its life according to that tremendous postulate revealed by Christ, that the source of human life is God, and the sphere of human endeavor is to do the work of God.

While we live in the flesh our lives will be subject to the laws that rule in the physical universe; and a man to live must eat. Certainly the compelling spur in labor of all kinds is the need for bread. Yet the man who regards his body's maintenance as a more important consideration than his integrity, has forfeited his character, for he has debauched his manhood by setting a higher value on his body than on himself. What should be servant, he has made master, and what should be master he has put in bondage. Excuse is so defiant that it is almost regarded as vindication. "A man must live," we hear it said, as though to eat were the chief purpose of man's creation. But we find nothing of this in the teaching of our Master. He nowhere tells us that we must get bread, honestly if we can, but by any means get bread. And yet that is what men in the present time tell us. At the very beginning of His public life the Master refused to accept wages from the God of this world, choosing deliberately to depend on His Father for bread. He did not set Himself against the world and its methods. He simply did right Himself. The great Carey put the Christian's obligation in one sentence when he said: "My business is to build up the Kingdom of God, and I make shoes to pay expenses."

When we read those words, "Thine is the Kingdom, and the Power, and the Glory forever," we discover the principle by which the Master intends us to estimate the worthiness of all enterprises that invite our co-operation. The only reason that makes any enterprise worthy of a man's endeavor is the quality of permanence attached to it. But the idea of permanence to-day is the same that controlled men in the old days that we call pagan. Then men sought immortality in the monuments they built. But Christ teaches that the only test of permanence is the worthiness of men's work to stand in that new Kingdom wherein dwelleth righteousness.

The work we are called to do can have no ending, because it is the work of God, through Christ, for the world. We all are tempted to draw sharp distinction between the work that we must establish and the Kingdom that our Lord will establish. We utter the words our Lord put on our lips, thinking of His glory in some other world than this, devoting lives that we of deliberate choice have consecrated to His service, to building what can be completed while we live in this body. Our aim must be now to learn how to make our lives count for something in the Master's Kingdom. The life of the Church in our generation, as in the past, is sharply in contrast with our Lord's ideal. And if the work is to be done, and not still drag on its slow and painful way, it must be because some have deliberately purposed to translate in their lives the revelation of the love of God, without regard to the cost to themselves. And who may be so reasonably expected to do this as this organization which has been honored with the proud designation of the Bodyguard of the Church of Christ?

CELEBRATION OF THE HOLY COMMUNION

At 7 A. M., Friday, at Trinity church. Bishop Whitehead, of Pittsburgh, was the celebrant. At 10 A. M., the Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent opened the meeting with appropriate prayers and collects, and then expressed his regret at his enforced absence Thursday.

BROTHERHOOD WORK IN THE ARMY

The general secretary, Mr. Wood, who is also secretary of the committee on Brotherhood work in the army, read the report of that committee:

It was organized in October, 1898, and had done much work. Mr. John Howe Peyton, the Brotherhood representative, had begun 14 chapters, all regularly endowed with charters, but these chapters have since become extinct by the mustering out of our earlier volunteer forces. In April one of their members left with three other men, two priests and a layman, for Manila, where the work has since been vigorously carried on, and a number of chapters organized. Much more work is needed, especially among the 20 new regiments which have no chaplains, and more money is also needed. He asked the help of the Brotherhood in this and all ways, to try to help our far-away men, and to give them all the safeguards it is in our power to supply. His report was accepted.

The report of the committee on work in colleges and universities was presented, showing excellent work. There are now chapters of the Brotherhood at, or in close touch with, the following institutions: Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Pennsylvania, and many others.

Cathedral chapter, of Denver, Colo., offered a resolution protesting against Sunday desecration, and asking Brotherhood men to help stem the tide of such desecration.

The Rev. Edward Cope, of Philadelphia, presented the report of the committee on Bible class lessons, showing that a series of lessons have been prepared for several years to come.

ADDRESS BY REV. J. ADDISON INGLE, OF CHINA

Mr. Ingle spoke most interestingly of his work in Hankow, China; of the hospitals, remarkably successful in spite of the scarcity of doctors; of the schools, and the growing need for more of them.

China was apparently to be melted down and made over again, and great was the opportunity and the need for good work and good men. He told the story of one poor Chinese boy who had come into our Church, and who had suffered many things for his Faith. His family, after trying by every means to bring him back to their religion, had finally cast him off and adopted another son, to say their funeral prayer. Mr. Ingle appealed to the Brotherhood for help in the Chinese mission, and closed with the quotation, "The soul that gives is the soul that lives," and the prayer that the help he asked would be given, "not for duty nor reward, but for the sake of the love with which He has loved us, that we may work for the extension of His Church on earth, and for the salvation of men."

MEN MUST BE WON FOR THE CHURCH

After the hymn "Fling out the banner," the general conference on the subject, "Men must be won for the Church—some familiar methods, and how they can be bettered," was opened by a very interesting paper from Mr. Clifton R. Wardwell, of the church of St. Michael and all Angels, Baltimore, on "Visiting," followed by another on "Hospitality at the Church service," by Mr. Frank Hardy, of St. Andrew's church, Louisville. Discussion of the subjects followed.

On the subject of "Visiting," there seemed to be general accord, but the discussion with regard to "Hospitality," was both interesting and spirited. There was no question as to its desirability, but the opinion as to when and how hospitality should be shown, varied with every speaker.

A delegate said that one man said to him: "The Brotherhood of St. Andrew is the only organization that knows that traveling men have souls." Many advocated meeting strangers at the church door, and showing them attention in various ways afterward. Charles G. Reade, of Dayton, protested strongly against carrying this too far, for fear men would resent too much care being taken of them. Another told of a boy who killed himself in sheer despair at his loneliness in a strange city.

The question of Bible study was also brought up—how to arouse interest in the study. Various accounts of success and non-success were given. The Rev. J. O. S. Huntington, O. H. C., came forward, and was received with acclamation. He gave some experiences of his own, and urged the need for interesting classes for Bible study. A clergyman from Louisville spoke of a specially successful Bible class in his parish. The teacher of it, Mr. Robinson, was asked to conduct the Bible class on Sunday afternoon.

Telegrams and letters of greeting were read from various places, Manila among them, and the meeting closed with the benediction from the Rt. Rev. C. H. Hall, Bishop of Vermont.

ADDRESS BY BISHOP VINCENT

Friday afternoon, by request of the Council, Bishop Vincent delivered part of the address he was to have given the day before. He said, in part:

We welcome you because we feel that we need you. For reasons, for most of which we of this generation are not chiefly responsible, the Church has never been so strong in this Middle West as in some other parts of the country. Had the Church east of the Allegheny Mountains, a hundred years ago, when this territory was first being opened up to settlement, been able to do for it in a missionary way what is being done in these days for the Far West, the story would probably have been very different. But the Church in the East and South just then, after the Revolutionary War, was itself almost in the throes of dissolution; and that great opportunity was lost to us. Meanwhile, Scotch-Irish Presbyterianism swarmed over the border into Ohio from Western Pennsylvania; Methodism, in the heyday of its youth and enthusiasm, sent in its circuit-rider with every wagon-load of settlers; New England Congregationalism took possession, with its own people, of North-eastern Ohio; and later, Roman Catholicism came in like a flood by immigration from Europe. Ohio is to-day the great stronghold of American Methodism; it is one of the bulwarks of Presbyterianism. These are some of the reasons which have kept this branch of the Church relatively weak in numbers in Southern Ohio, and the Brotherhood of St. Andrew correspondingly so; though in proportion to our numbers, and in point of zeal and fidelity, the work of our men will bear comparison with that of other brotherhoods almost anywhere.

The Brotherhood was needed also, he said, because its true strength and influence were not in its numbers, great and encouraging as these were, but in its ideal.

THE WORLD NEEDS THE BROTHERHOOD OF CHRIST

Mr. E. C. Denton, of Christ church, Rochester, N. Y., described the present state of society as bad, though not as bad as when our Lord came into the world. The brotherhood He founded in the first disciples, was strengthened and enlarged to include empires under the operation of the Holy Spirit poured out at Pentecost. Relying upon the grace of the Sacraments, the Brotherhood of Christ is still powerful to purge the world of evil.

The Hon. William J. Diehl, Mayor of Pittsburgh, in answer to the question, "How may we supply the need," said:

The finest product of humanity is the true Christian gentleman who is made such by exemplifying the character of Christ. We must make right thinking and right living the rule of life, manifest our interest in others, and exercise the privileges of citizenship in the spirit of the Master.

The Rev. Frank Du Moulin, of St. Peter's, Chicago, said:

There are many well defined heart-hungers which it is our duty to find out. One great hunger is the spirit of brotherhood. Truth wrapped in personality is the thing wanted. The world is not asking for miracles or signs from heaven, but signs from earth. Personality is the pre-eminent factor which brotherhood men can supply. Each life is a silent propaganda. There is no greater sermon than that which comes from a life. The world will not accept a message from any man whose Christianity is not interpreted by his personality. The Brotherhood is waking to the fact that all men must be evangelized; not only all men, but the whole man. For this reason, the 19th century is the greatest of all. We want the influence of Brotherhood men in the home as well as in trade and politics. This is an age of hope. Hope is on the horizon, spelling out the relation of man to man, and God is behind all, bringing all closer together.

THE JUNIOR DEPARTMENT

The report of the secretary showed that it was composed of 312 chapters, with from 12 to 15 members each.

The department has a membership of 3,800 boys, ranging in years from 10 to 15. The condition of the department is encouraging. The department had outgrown the experimental stage. Cases of failure of chapters to maintain membership in the department were traceable to the indisposition of seniors to aid the parish clergymen in caring for and instructing the boys as members of chapters. The brotherhood of seniors could not hope to perpetuate itself without perpetuating the junior chapters and continuing work among young men. Thirty-seven junior chapters had been converted into senior chapters during the year, in accordance with an increase in the age of the boys. The junior department fits the boys for membership in the senior, and has come to be nearly an indispensable adjunct of brotherhood work.

THE CHURCH FOR MEN

Friday, 8 P. M., on the above topic, Mr. John W. Wood said in substance:

The Church is for men, because men need the Church. The Church trains the whole life, the man himself, the man made in the image of God. But to have a Church for men, we must have a Church of men, a Church throbbing with the life of men, gradually elevating men to its level, and demanding something of men. No true man will care to receive from the Church and give it nothing in return.

This Church offers men the accumulated wealth of nineteen centuries, a place in its work and a share in its victories and rewards. It offers the riches of its saintly lives, its liturgy, its noble traditions, its heroic deeds, the spirit of love; nineteen centuries of unbroken life, teaching and uplifting the neediest of the sons of men.

It offers a definite faith. Some object to creed. As we cannot have geography without a map and a survey, so we cannot have a Church without a definite faith. The Incarnation is the central point of faith. In giving to men this fact, it gives them principles to guide conscience, and is willing to trust men to apply the principles laid down by the Church. Such a democratic Church ought to appeal to every American. It gives men a place in its administration and the fullest share in worship. In the worship of other Communions, the people are dependent upon the minister. Our Prayer Book is not a Book of Common Prayer for the Protestant Episcopal Church, but the Book of Common Prayer for all people. The Church offers men help to do their duty and to be true men—offers this chiefly through the Blessed Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. The Church is at once the rallying point and power-house of righteousness.

Mr. W. R. Stirling, of Grace, Chicago, said:

The United States are the biggest combine of which he knew, and its citizens are members of a great corporation who have a craze for making laws, but no craze for putting them in operation. But the Church is an army whose members are soldiers enlisted for life—not as short term volunteers. The laws are already made for them, and they can not change them. Every man in an army wanted a chance to make a mark, and the Church offers every man a chance as a standard bearer to make a mark for eternity. Soldiers must be loyal, and loyalty costs. It meant offering ourselves. Many chances are not taken advantage of. In the matter of hospitality, the stranger away from home might be invited to dinner on Sunday, or to the Bible class, or during the week to the chapter meeting. The kind of work wanted must be persistent, consistent, and consecrated. The Church gives men a chance to mind their own affairs, and not to be too much concerned about the orthodoxy of those whom they would serve.

Speaking on the topic, "What the Church asks of men," Bishop Hall, of Vermont, created a profound impression. He said:

What the Church asks of men is their manhood, in personal, family, and public life. Man is by nature made for communion with God. The religious man is the true man. If it were objected that religion had to do with the supernatural, and that the Church asks for the sacrifice of reason. No, the supernatural is not above the natural faith, is not mere believing, but reason illuminated by the spirit of Almighty God, and reason is the voice of Almighty God in every man, in Africa and in a Christian nation. The doctrines of the Real Presence in the elements used in the Holy Communion, of the Trinity, and of the Incarnation, are not opposed to reason.

The Bishop explained these doctrines by reference to natural phenomena which the senses accept. When he came to speak of the Church's demand for all the powers and influence of men as men, in family and in public life, he stirred to the depths the hearts of his hearers who gave vent to their feelings in frequent applause. Among other things he said, What God is Jesus was, and what Jesus was man ought to be. A man endowed with spiritual power and grace is supplied with the power of self-control, and therefore, whether in the married or single state, able to sustain relations to man and woman which would satisfy God's purpose in his creation. There was no such thing as applied Christianity. Christianity is a gift of the Holy Spirit which men receive to reveal to others.

On Saturday morning, there was celebration of the Holy Communion at 7 A. M. At 10 A. M., the Rev. A. W. Mann, the faithful deaf-mute missionary, was introduced, and the Rev. Mr. Atwood read his address, urging the Brotherhood to work among the children of silence.

THE CHAPTER IN THE SMALL TOWN

In answer to the question, "Why does it fail, what can we do?" Mr. Edward C. Marshall, of St. John's, Keokuk, Ia., spoke for the West; Mr. Horatio B. Lewis, of St. Paul's, Elk Rapids, Mich., for the North; Mr. M. N. Clark, of Grace chapter, Lockport, N. Y., for the East, and Mr. Pearson, of Grace, Morganton, N. C., for the South. The latter said: The Brotherhood is largely among the white people who, being very poor, are much drawn within themselves. The Church in many ways is strange to them, but a Brotherhood chapter popularizes the Church.

COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTIONS

In the afternoon the report of the committee on resolutions brought out much spirited discussion. The recommendations of the committee to leave to local chapters the matter of uttering and publishing protests against indecent advertising pictures on bill-boards; to set aside a day at the next convention for discussing ways and means of preventing the desecration of Sunday, and to publish in pamphlet form the address of Bishop Hall, were adopted. But action on the report of the committee on re-statement of rules, which proposed to alter the rule of service, and to strike out the word "young" in the statement as to the object of the Brotherhood, was postponed to the next annual meeting.

Mr. W. R. Stirling appealed for the support of St. Andrew's Cross.

Mayor Diehl, of Pittsburgh, presented the Very Rev. Charles Stubbs, dean of Ely cathedral, England, who was enthusiastically welcomed. In acknowledging the welcome, the dean begged the men before him to keep young always in their enthusiasm, never to be ashamed of earnestness, nor even of romantic ideals.

ELECTION OF COUNCIL

The members of the council elected for the ensuing year were:

James L. Houghteling, Chicago.
G. Harry Davis, Germantown.
Silas McBea, Sewanee, Tenn.
John P. Faure, New York.
John W. Wood, New York.
W. R. Stirling, Chicago.
John E. Baird, Philadelphia.
Hector Baxter, Minneapolis.
William C. Sturgis, New Haven.
Ewing L. Miller, Philadelphia.
Robert H. Gardiner, Gardiner, Me.
Edmund Billings, Boston.
Samuel S. Nash, Tarboro, N. C.
J. C. Loomis, Louisville.
H. C. Trumbull, Jr., Towson, Md.
John Seely Ward, Jr., New York.
Frank J. Weber, Detroit.
Eugene C. Denton, Rochester.
H. P. Bradin, Berkeley, Cal.
H. D. W. English, Pittsburgh.
Rathbone Gardner, Providence.
John H. Peyton, Charleston, W. Va.
Piereson L. Halsey, Milwaukee.
William G. Benham, Columbus, Ohio.
James Laidlow, Portland, Ore.
F. H. Holmes, West Orange, N. J.
Edward S. Elliott, Savannah, Ga.
T. C. Ruffin, Barton Heights, Va.
A. L. Fellows, Denver, Colo.
Colonel Cecil Clay, Washington.
Hugh Dallas, Nashville.
W. A. Gallup, North Adams, Mass.

The registration showed 600 delegates in attendance, from Maine to Texas, and from Minnesota to Georgia, and the majority of them had never before attended a national convention. There was a comparatively small number of delegates from the region the holding of the convention in Columbus was intended to benefit.

Discussion on the general subject, "The Future," brought out few points that had not already been made in previous addresses.

NEED OF WORK IN THE PHILIPPINES

Mr. John Howe Peyton who had spent three months in the Philippine Islands, made an interesting address on the conditions existing in the islands. He spoke of the beliefs of the native population—of their primitive intellects—and said that among the half million people he saw there was not a drunken man, but there was much gambling. The army was composed of men of noble character, but they were without spiritual guidance. There were only five chaplains among them, and the men were exposed to terrible temptations. Two of the chaplains are Roman Catholic priests, and one is assigned to secular work. The speaker made a stirring appeal in behalf of remedying the conditions.

FATHER HUNTINGTON'S SERMON

On Sunday morning, the anniversary sermon was delivered by the Rev. James O. S. Huntington, O. H. C. His text was Ephes. iv: 13, 15, 16.

The spirit and aspirations, and the hope of the Brotherhood are expressed in these words: "Till we all come, in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ," etc. The ideal Brotherhood life came from Christ. God made men capable of eternal union with Himself. Long before we were born the Word had been made flesh, and in Holy Baptism gave Himself to be the living principle of our lives—the Soul of our souls. God did not then put us on probation, but trusted us entirely as though He said to each: "You let Me make you the man you ought to be."

In the first wrong-doing we disappointed Him, but He did not turn away. In Confirmation again He trusted us, and gave us the seven-fold gifts of the Spirit. In our first Communion He gave us His life within us. What have you done with that grace?

God did not save a man all by himself, but as a living part of the body of which He was the Head. The ideal set before us was of social, not of individual, perfection. And the purpose of God was that each reproduce, not copy, the character of Christ.

The speaker felt as never before that the Corporate Communion had been the heart and core of the gathering this year, and charged the brethren to "put on the whole armor of God." They were here in this world, not to gain a prize, or a reward, or even God, but to glorify Jesus Christ, and to truly say of Him, "Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory." God was a just God, and the Eternal Son could not suffer as He did without meriting a reward. Something was due to the manhood of Christ, and His reward was the power to communicate His life to their souls. You are the fruits of His passion, the spoils of His victory.

The Church is not to realize her ideals in this world, but in the next. The earth is but the quarry from which the stones are drawn, and as each stone in an earthly building, is marked and numbered to be fitted to its place according to the architect's design, so each soul on earth ought to be marked with the sign of the Cross, to take its place according to the plan of the Heavenly Architect, in the building whose foundation is Christ.

Go on to the battle of life, to the battle of your King, and strive to grow into the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ, the Perfect Man.

THE SOCIAL MISSION OF THE CHURCH

Sunday afternoon, the topic discussed was "The Social Mission of the Church—to present Christ in Practical Life as the Living Master and King, the Enemy of Wrong and Selfishness, the Power of Righteousness and Love." The first address was by Mr. N. B. W. Gallwey, of Grace chapter, New York:

It is not clear that the Church of God is quite willing to take Christ through and through for what He stands to-day, Christianity is becoming altogether too complex. Let us take rather Jesus Christ Himself. The Church to-day is an organism so diversified, and with so many relations and ramifications that we scarcely any longer know exactly what She is. To try Christianity as a religion in disposing of the social problems confronting us means nothing more or less than to try any of the one thousand and one different Christian methods. I for one prefer to go back to Christ, and one who goes back to Him must concede first that all truth has been revealed and found out. Truth rose from the dead with Christ and in Him. Truth cannot be bandaged and bound, and Christ cannot be buried and embalmed. Let our watchword be, "On with Christ and on to Christ!" Let us follow Him and go to Him! He is waiting for us. He wants us and has pleaded and prayed for us. The divinest calling ever uttered by human lips was this by Christ: "Come help Me to help men!" In answering the summons, we must lay ourselves down and give ourselves up in service and usefulness to Jesus. To lay down the physical life is cheap, and the call of Christianity always meant the taking up and not the laying down of physical life. It means a via dolorosa, a going uphill, at the top of which stands a cross, on which we may be crucified. This is what the Kingship and the Kingdom of Christ means. I need only remind you of the outlook of the world to-day in order to assure you that the strongest moral courage and sacrifices are requisite if we are not to crucify again a Master and a King.

Prof. Walter A. Wyckoff, of Princeton University, and author of "The Workers," followed.

His observations, while gathering material for "The Workers," has taught him in brief that the Protestant churches of any and all denominations are fast losing their hold on the wage-earning classes of men. Our brethren, the Roman Catholics, he said, have been singularly successful with the wage-earning classes, and he experienced a keen and peculiar pleasure on entering Roman churches in the garb of a wage-earner, and finding there the rich and the poor on equal footing. The contrast in this regard, he stated, was a very striking one. The revolutionary forces regard the Church as simply one of many institutions, as a means of keeping the wage-earners and the poor in line, and protecting the rich from their threatened assaults. He had been in gangs of men where the Church was scorned and scoffed, and where the name of Christ was greeted with reverence and fear, as if the men regard one as a friend, and the other as a foe; not because they believed in Christ's divinity, but because He maintained and gave expression to the truth that all men are brothers. The attitude which we have to meet is one of antagonism to the Church, and the position which we must assume is that of brothers and brethren with crossed hands. The task which Christ had given was no easy one to perform, and in concluding he pleaded for a revival of Christian chivalry in our own lives.

The Very Rev. Chas. W. Stubbs, Dean of Ely cathedral, England, read a paper.

He pleaded for faith in an ultimate social ideal. He quoted Omar Khayam, the Persian poet, and disagreed with him that this is a sorry scheme of things which we would dash to pieces and make over again to our heart's desire had we but the power. He urged that the principles of the Augustinian Fathers, which have all too long dominated the Protestant Episcopal Church, be laid aside, and that the Church adopt in their stead the doctrines of the early Greek Fathers of the Church.

Christ, he claimed, was all that we call best in modern society and modern civilization, and evolution is but a correlation of the doctrine of the Incarnation. He then proffered a creed of which he was the author, of which some of the tenets were: That we believe in God, in Jesus Christ, in the doctrine of the Incarnation, that Christ, by His Incarnation, exalted human nature and consecrated human relations; that Christ founded not only a philosophy and a religion, but a Church as well, and a society, an ideal kingdom, and a storehouse of redemption; that the object of the Church is to reorganize and reconstitute society, as well as to effect the salvation and deliverance of the individual; that Jesus Christ revealed a divine order of things; that in the New Testament the eternal principles of the divine plan and laws of heaven are revealed in part; that the Will of God is a motor of civilization; that eternal revelation is ceaselessly descending from heaven; that revelation is found in the facts of every-day life, and that each day is a page of an eternal Bible or Scripture, and that we cannot, dare not, say brother on earth unless we may say Father in Heaven. Another tenet of the creed was that competition has been assimilated into warfare, and that it therefore stands self-condemned. Another was that "we believe in service, and not competition."

MISSIONS—THEIR NECESSITY TO THE CHURCH AT HOME

At the evening session and final meeting, Secretary Wood read a communication from Prof. Wood, the Brotherhood representative in Japan.

Five chapters of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew thrive there, with more than that number of probationary chapters. The rulers of Japan are antagonistic to Christianity, and as a consequence of their bitterness towards it, many of the Christian schools there are being closed. The Japanese, however, are susceptible to Christianity and those who have been taken into the fold are as good, if not better Christians, than some Church members in this country.

The Rev. Anson B. Graves, Bishop of Laramie, spoke on foreign missions and the responsibility of the Church for them.

While he praised the missionary work being carried on abroad, he lamented that more of it was not undertaken right here at home. He had found missionary work prolific of great and good results in the great West, and he believed some of it ought to be done here in Ohio. For instance, he cited the case of a young man admitted to the communion of the Church at one of the missionary meetings he had held in a small town in Wyoming, who had since become a school teacher, and was now employed in a town of 10,000 inhabitants in Ohio. He had talked with this young man only the other day, he having come a distance of 40 miles to this city for the purpose of shaking hands with the bishop, to whom he related that no Protestant Episcopal Church existed in his town, and that no one there had ever so much as heard of such a faith! This indicated to the Bishop of Laramie that missionary work here was one of the crying needs of the hour. The Bishop also pleaded that the objects and scope of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew be extended. Unless they are, the Brotherhood will stand in the way of other societies that would form were it not claiming so much of the time and attention of young men in the Church, and so much of the Church's manhood. As the Brotherhood now stands, the rule of service is to bring one man into the church each Sunday of the year. "Don't go to the end of the world for missionary fields when you have them at your finger tips."

The Dean of Ely said that in the cathedral at Ely he and others prayed once a week an intercessory prayer for the foreign missionaries, and that the "county of Ohio" had never been included in the foreign missionary field in such prayers as the Bishop of Laramie indicated it should. He suggested that the protest that the clergy stood too much aloof from the people might be timely enough, and he proffered as advice that the clergymen should never let any one know where the man left off and where the parson began.

A brief devotional service followed, after which the convention adjourned, to meet at a time and place yet to be named by the council of the brotherhood.

The council organized by electing officers for the ensuing year as follows: President, James L. Houghteling, Chicago; first vice-president, G. Harry Davis, Philadelphia; second vice-president, Silas McBee, Sevanee, Tenn.; secretary, John W. Wood, New York; treasurer, John P. Faure, New York. Executive committee—five officers and John E. Baird, Philadelphia; John Seely Ward, Jr., New York; Francis H. Holmes, Orange, N. J.; William C. Sturgis, New Haven; H. C. Turnbull, Jr., Baltimore.

Deaf Mute Work

The Rev. Job Turner, missionary to deaf-mutes in the Southern dioceses, has just completed a tour of mission work among deaf-mutes in the dioceses of Georgia, North Carolina, Tennessee, West Virginia, Virginia, and Southern Virginia. The activity of Mr. Turner, notwithstanding his four-score years, is something wonderful. To-day he may be preaching to the deaf-mutes in Richmond, and a few days later will find him presenting the Gospel to similarly afflicted ones in Galveston, Texas.

Consecration of a Bishop Coadjutor for Nebraska

The Rev. Arthur Llewellyn Williams, late rector of Christ church, Woodlawn, Chicago, was consecrated to this high office, in Trinity cathedral, Omaha, Oct. 18th.

The procession entered the church at 10 A. M., in four divisions, each headed by a crucifer. The Rev. C. H. Young was master of ceremonies, assisted by the Rev. W. H. McKim. Arriving at the chancel, the introit was sung as the bishops took their seats. Morning Prayer having already been said, Bishop Worthington began the service of Holy Communion, assisted by Bishop Graves, of Laramie, as epistoler, and Bishop Spalding, of Colorado, as gospeler. The sermon was delivered by Bishop Morrison, of Iowa, from the text, Heb. xii: 18. The subject was the presence of God in and with the Church.

Said He not, "I will be with my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against her?" We are here to-day not to follow a prescribed ritual, not to do certain things because the Prayer Book says so, but as men belonging to that "Power in the world," and we will say awful words, words that would be blasphemy if what I have said is not true. We have swung away from the materialism of thirty years ago because man as a child of God cannot accept it. Christian Science has swept millions into its fold simply because it teaches an immediately present God. If we would present this truth of the presence of God in the Catholic Church multitudes would gladly hear. Shall the faith live on? What Jesus said and did has been perpetuated in His Church, and we to-day carry with us the future of Christianity.

Bishop Morrison's remarks to the Coadjutor-elect were beautiful and touching. As Mr. Williams arose he said:

You and I but yesterday were priests together, and I can say little to you, except that out of long acquaintance I have learned to love you as this people soon will learn to do. I know nothing yet of the wearying cares of the episcopate. It is yet dawn of day with me. Noon will come with the weariness and the heaviness. Evening shadows of disappointed hopes lie far westward still. But I know this—it is no idle thing we do to-day. The Holy Ghost will be given you in this ceremony. The world will consider this an honor to you, but as you go up and down these broad prairies, the servant of servants, you will be one of that apostolic band to whom the Lord said: "Follow me." The episcopate means this—to be with the Lord, serving as he served, and, if it be God's will, die as he died, for your people's sake.

People, believe God sends this man to you, and pray for and love him. He comes with the one purpose in his heart, to love and serve you.

After the sermon and the singing of the hymn, "Our Blest Redeemer ere He breathed His tender last farewell," the Bishop-elect, vested with his rochet, was presented to the presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. George Worthington, D. D., by Bishop Edsall, of North Dakota, and Bishop Morrison, of Iowa. The certificate of election was read by Dean Fair, chairman of the Standing Committee; the certificate of the Presiding Bishop of the Church, by Bishop Nicholson of Milwaukee, and the commission of the consecrators, by Bishop Millsbaugh, of Kansas. While the Bishop-elect was being vested with the rest of the episcopal habit by the attending presbyters, the choir of 60 voices sang the beautiful anthem from "St. Paul," by Mendelssohn. The Bishop-elect then knelt at the entrance of the sanctuary, and the Veni Creator Spiritus was sung, Bishops Spalding, of Colorado, Graves of Laramie, Millsbaugh of Kansas, Atwill of Western Missouri, Edsall of North Dakota, and Nicholson of Milwaukee, uniting in the laying on of hands. The choir sang the grand anthem from the "Creation," "The heavens are telling," as an offertory. The celebration of the Eucharist followed, none but the bishops and vested clergy communicating, the congregation having received at the two earlier Celebrations at 7 and 9 o'clock. The procession returned to the parish house in reverse order, the choir singing, "The Son of God goes forth to war."

This was the second consecration which has been held in Trinity—the first one being that of Dean Garrett, who was made Bishop of Texas.

There were several incidents in the service which were particularly appropriate. The consecrator was the Bishop of Nebraska, whose assistant and successor Bishop Williams will be. He was presented by the recently elected Bishops of North Dakota and Iowa, both of whom were associated with him in Chicago. One of his co-consecrators was the bishop who confirmed and ord'ained him to the priesthood.

The Sunday School

A new system of instruction has just been introduced into the Sunday school of St. James' church, Zanesville, S. Ohio. Its author is the rector, the Rev. Frank W. Bope, who has been working upon it nearly ten years. It teaches the Bible and the Prayer Book by an attractive inductive method, which aims to be free from some of the defects of the ordinary Sunday school leaflet.

Trained Teachers

At the church of the Holy Communion, New York city, the Rev. Dr. Mottet, rector, a movement is on foot having for its object the establishment of an institution for training teachers for the Sunday school work of the parish in the future. It is contemplated making the institution an incorporated trust.

Public Lectures in New York

Under the auspices of the New York Sunday School Commission, two courses of public lectures for Sunday school workers have been arranged. The first was begun at St. Bartholomew's church, Oct. 14th, by Prof. Nicholas Murray Butler, of Columbia University, who discussed "Religious instruction, and its relation to education as a whole." On Saturday afternoon, Oct. 21st, at 3 o'clock, in the same church, Prof. Chas. De Garmo presented "The present status of religious instruction in England, France, Germany, and the United States." This will be followed on subsequent Saturdays by Prof. Richard G. Moulton, of the University of Chicago, on "The Bible as literature," and by similar themes, discussed by Bishop Doane, of Albany; Bishop Hall, of Vermont; Dean Hodges of the Cambridge Divinity School; Prof. Chas. J. Kent, of Brown University; Prof. G. Stanley Hall, of Clark University, and Dr. Walter L. Herve, of the Department of Education of this city. A special course on "The Four Gospels" will be held at St. Michael's church, and one on "St. Paul's life and work," at St. Andrew's church.

Days of Intercession for Sunday Schools

Were held in several of the churches of Philadelphia and suburbs, on Sunday, 15th inst. At St. David's church, Manayunk, the Rev. J. P. Tyler preached on "Sunday schools, and the religious training of the young." In Christ church, Germantown, the Rev. C. H. Arndt, rector, preached on "Sunday school work and opportunities." A special service for teachers, scholars, and all interested in Sunday school work was held on Sunday evening, 15th inst., at St. Peter's church, Germantown. On Monday evening, 16th inst., in the same church, there was a special service for the diocese of Pennsylvania, Bishop Whitaker presiding. The church was well filled with clergymen, superintendents, teachers, workers, and friends of the Sunday school. Addresses were made by the Rev. Messrs. R. A. Mayo, R. W. Forsyth, and H. L. Duhring, D. D.

Sunday School Institute of Washington

On St. Luke's Day, the annual convention was held in St. Andrew's church, Washington, D. C. The Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion, after which he gave an informal address of welcome to the convention, in the parish building, with practical suggestions for Sunday school teaching. Delegates were present from nearly all parishes in the city, and several in the counties. The secretary and treasurer, the Rev. Louis G. Wood, read his annual report, showing increased interest in the Institute, as manifested in the monthly meetings held last winter and the immense gathering of children at the general service in May. At the suggestion of the Bishop, the convention, by a rising vote, expressed its sense of the valuable services of the secretar, to whose untiring efforts is mainly due the successful establishment of the Sunday School Institute in Washington. The Rev. Messrs. Alfred Harding and Louis G. Wood were unanimously re-elected 1st vice-president and secretary and treasurer respectively, and Mr. J. Holdsworth Gordon was chosen second vice-president. After recess for luncheon, the convention re-assembled. The first topic, "How to teach the Prayer Book, and not neglect Scripture study," was discussed in an admirable paper by the Rev. R. P. Williams, followed more briefly by Messrs. John O. Johnson, J. H. Gibson, and W. B. Dent. These all agreed that the Prayer Book cannot be taught properly without teaching the Bible, and that the best kind of Scripture study for Sunday Schools is through the Prayer Book. A brief and interesting discussion followed, in which stress was laid on practical instruction in using the Prayer Book. The second topic, "Right methods of teaching the life of Christ to advanced classes," was discussed by Mr. W. R. Bushby, Mr. R. W. Test, Mr. P. Melbourne, and the Rev. Frank H. Barton. On "The adaptability of kindergarten methods to infant classes," papers were read by the Rev. A. M. Hilliker, Mr. J. H. Gordon, and Miss Mary W. Burr. In the evening, there was a public service at St. Andrew's church, when an excellent sermon, bearing on the subject of the day's discussions, was delivered by the Rev. Wm. A. Barr, of Richmond, Va.

The Kansas Branch

The annual meeting was recently held in St. John's church, Wichita, and it was of more than ordinary interest. The officers and members were greatly encouraged by the action of the clergy and delegates at the diocesan convention, in adopting the following resolution:

That hereafter there shall be a branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions in every parish and mission in the diocese.

This is a step in the right direction, and the Woman's Auxiliary of Kansas is to be congratulated upon the co-operation it receives from the clergy.

Minnesota Branch

Held its annual gathering at St. John the Evangelist's church, St. Paul. The meeting began with a celebration of the Holy Eucharist, Bishop Gilbert, celebrant. The Rev. Dudley Rhodes, rector, delivered the address of welcome. The business session was opened with Mrs. Wm. B. Folds in the chair. The roll was called, 187 delegates responding. The treasurer reported that during the year, $2,690.81 was sent to the general secretary, and $54 from the mite boxes was divided among the foreign, the domestic, and the diocesan missions. An extra offering yielded $228.47. The Junior Auxiliaries, according to Miss Catherine Sleppey, raised $59. Of the morning offering, $25 was voted to Bishop Edsall. Among the appropriations were: For Miss Sybil Carter, $100; for the Rev. Geo. B. Pratt, formerly of Hastings, and now a missionary in the Philippines, $50; Deaconess' Home, $100; and other sums were voted for Bishop Gilbert's work and for Mr. Stevens' work in the South. The Mrs. Brunson scholarship was added to the Whipple and the Gilbert scholarships. Elected for ensuing year: President, Mrs. Hector Baxter, of Minneapolis; vice-presidents, Mrs. C. B. Brunson, of New York, Mrs. William B. Folds, of Minneapolis, Mrs. Denis Follet, of St. Paul, Mrs. L. D. Frost, of Winona; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. Judson W. Bishop, of St. Paul. At the afternoon session, Bishop Gilbert made an address on "The missionary spirit," the Rev. C. E. Haupt, on the Deaconess Home, and Mrs. Stevens, of Rushford, "Work among the negroes in the South." At the evening session, the Rev. C. E. Haupt spoke on "Mission work in the diocese" and Bishop Edsall's mission work in North Dakota.

Daughters of The King

The national convention to be held in Atlanta Nov. 15th, 16th, 17th, will be the first convention of the Order ever held in a Southern diocese. The preparations for the convention are well in hand. The religious services will be held in St. Luke's church, and an effort will be made to secure the rooms of the Symphony Club, which are near by, for the business sessions.

Local Assembly of Long Island

The 8th semi-annual gathering was held Oct. 12th, at St. Thomas' church, Brooklyn. At 11 o'clock, there was a celebration of the Holy Eucharist, and an address by the Rev. Dr. Jas. Clarence Jones. Luncheon was served in the parish house by the members of St. Thomas' chapter. A business session, over which Mrs. W. H. Barnes, of College Point, presided, was held at two o'clock. Reports were presented from various chapters, and routine business disposed of. The presentation of an excellent paper, on "What it means to be a Daughter of the King," by Mrs. J. W. Martin, of St. Ann's chapter, was followed by a conference, led by Mrs. J. H. Shirley, of St. Thomas' chapter, on the subject, "How we can make chapter meetings interesting and helpful." A question box closed the session. In the evening, there were addresses by the Rev. Dr. Alsop and the Rev. Messrs. G. W. Davenport and Charles A. Hamilton. There are 16 chapters of the Order in this diocese, and there was an excellent representation from all of them.

Chicago Diocesan Assembly

The annual meeting of the diocesan assembly was held in St. Peter's, Lake View, on the 18th. At Morning Prayer, the rector of Epiphany preached from the text, "The King's daughter is all glorious within, and her raiment of wrought gold." Mr. Hopkins emphasized the importance of an assurance of our loyalty, and of action becoming the daughters of royalty, who should also practice contrition, for a truly royal person is humble and contrite. It is not what we do, so much as what we are, that is regarded by the All-Wise. There were about 100 communicants at the 11 A. M. service, the Rev. Dr. Rushton being celebrant, assisted by the Rev. F. DuMoulin, rector. After luncheon, provided by the ladies of St. Peter's, the following were elected as officers for the year: President, Mrs. Louise B. Kilbourne, of St. Mark's branch; Vice-President, Mrs. James Nicol, of St. Peter's; Secretary-Treasurer, Miss L. C. Starr, of St. Mark's, re-elected. There were present, representatives of most of the parishes having chapters of the Daughters. On behalf of St. Paul's, Kenwood, the Rev. D. W. Howard extended an invitation, which was accepted, to hold the January quarterly meeting in that parish. The retiring president, Mrs. McGregor, who has so endeared herself to all by her devotion to the work, and whose declining re-election was necessitated by domestic duties, was chosen delegate to the annual convention, which meets in Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 16th to 18th. The co-delegate will be Mrs. Hannon, of the St. Peter's chapter. Addresses were made by the Rev. Dr. Wilson, J. M. D. Davidson, D. W. Howard, F. DuMoulin, F. E. Brandt, and Dr. Rushton.

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

A new contract has just been made by the vestry of St. Paul's, Kenwood, which will carry the walls to their full height.

At Emmanuel, La Grange, on the 16th, was held a Sunday school conference, which was addressed by the Rev. John Henry Hopkins, of Epiphany.

The Rev. C. C. Tate who has for many months been acting as chaplain at Kemper Hall, Kenosha, Wis., is in temporary charge of Christ church, Woodlawn.

It has been decided to do no more work on the new Grace church, Oak Park, until the spring. This will leave the parish undisturbed in their temporary quarters on the new site for at least half a year.

Rev. Mr. Keator goes to Iowa

The Rev. F. W. Keator, for four years rector of Grace church, Freeport, has accepted the unanimous call to St. John's, Dubuque, Iowa, which was tendered him a month ago, and regretfully severs his connection with this diocese, from which he will be much missed. His future field, a parish with 300 communicants, is in every way a wider one than his present cure.

Bible Study at St. James'

The Rev. Dr. Stone preached in St. James' last Sunday morning a sermon on "The parting of the ways," or "Has the Church given up the Bible?" He firmly believes that the sacred Scriptures, as the Word of God, will stand any test that science may apply to their interpretation, and come out of the ordeal more deeply rooted than ever in the confidence and affections of the man who sincerely wishes to know the truth. He commences on Friday morning next at 11 A. M., a weekly Bible study for women, to which all are cordially invited.

An Historic Event

In connection with the recent commemoration in St. James' of Chicago's great calamity, the fire of Oct. 9th, 1871, there was a certain propriety in the rector's sermon on "The Foundations of the city," for the fire-marked tower of this "mother church" is the only masonry standing to-day that withstood the terrible ordeal. It is said of the three congregations that met under the shadow of that mute monitor on the Sunday following the conflagration that had swept away their residences on the North Side, they registered a vow after the brief service by their rector, the present Bishop of Mississippi, that they would rebuild the house of God before they did their own private homes.

Church of the Epiphany

On Wednesday afternoon, Oct. 3d, a service for the women workers of the parish was held in the church, after which the various societies for women met in the parish house and organized for the fall and winter work. On the evening of the 21st Sunday after Trinity, the students of the various medical and dental colleges of the West Side, were invited to the church, and Dr. Daniel R. Brower, of Epiphany vestry, delivered a valuable address on "A great physician of the first century," St. Luke. The church was crowded by the students and their friends, and copies of the Gospel according to St. Luke were distributed to the students in the name of the Brotherhood chapter, after the service.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

New York Churchmen's Association

At last week's meeting the Rev. Drs. Geo. M. Christian and Thomas Gallaudet discussed "Spiritual direction" and private confession from opposite points of view.

Church of the Archangel, New York

Has received through its rector, the Rev. Geo. S. Pratt, a pledge of $5,000 toward purchase of ground for its needed church edifice, on condition that a like sum be raised.

Marriage of the Rev. J. J. R. Spong

On Oct. 7th, at St. Mark's church, Philadelphia, the Rev. John James Rowan Spong was married to Miss Virginia Grosholz, daughter of the late William Grosholz. The Bishop of Milwaukee officiated.

City Mission Society

At the services during the past few weeks, nearly 18,000 persons have been in attendance. During the same time the visits made by the staff of missionary workers to public institutions, numbered nearly 10,000.

St. Andrew's Church, Yonkers

Will be enlarged so as to have a seating capacity of 800, with a choir seating in the chancel of 40. Ground for the purpose has just been secured, and building operations will be immediately begun. A new organ will be put in.

Manhattan Clerical Club

Held its 16th annual meeting at the Hotel Tuxedo, and elected the following officers: President, the Rev. Canon Knowles; vice-president, the Rev. W. N. Dunnell, D. D.; secretary, the Rev. H. R. Hulse; treasurer, the Rev. John Williams. The subject for discussion was, "Vacation experiences."

St. Stephen's College, Annandale

To set at rest sundry rumors to the effect that St. Stephen's might be united with Hobart College, the trustees of St. Stephen's, at a recent meeting unanimously adopted a resolution stating that there is no intention of consolidating with any other institution of learning, and that the college is to be placed on a more vigorous plane than ever, in so far as that is possible. The new warden, the Rev. Lawrence T. Cole, as undertaken a new advance already.

The Catholic Club of the State of New York

Including priests from Albany, and Central and Western New York, held its autumn conference in Zion church, Fulton, Oct. 17-18th. Five new members were enrolled since the last meeting; there was a sermon to the clergy, expounding the creedenda of the club, i. e., those of the Clerical Union for the Maintenance and Defence of Catholic Principles, of which the club is a local branch; and an essay. The club will re-assemble in February. The Bishop of Milwaukee is president of the general society.

Home for Indigent Christian Females

The chapel was formally dedicated Oct. 18th. In the absence of Bishop Potter, the ceremony was conducted by the Rev. Dr. John Wesley Brown, vice-president of the institution. The Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix was preacher. The chapel, which is 60 by 20 ft. in size, will seat 70 persons. It is a memorial to the founder, the Rev. Dr. Isaac H. Tuttle. A marble altar to his memory will soon be placed in the chancel. All the furnishings of the chapel have been given as memorials.

Death of Mr. Wm. H. Appleton

Mr. Wm. H. Appleton, senior member of the publishing firm of D. Appleton & Co., and long senior warden of St. Bartholomew's church, died at his home at Riverdale, in his 86th year, Oct. 19th. He was the founder of his firm, and its active director for more than 60 years. He was one of the principal promoters of international copyright, and was the first president of the American Publishers' Copyright League. For nearly 50 years he was a trustee of the New York Life Insurance Company, and was also a trusted officer of other important bodies. He erected and endowed the Appleton Church Home for Orphan Girls, at Macon, Ga. The burial service took place at Christ church, Riverdale, Oct. 21st.

Pennsylvania

Music at St. Matthias' Church

Great improvement has been made in the musical part of the service. A choir of 30 voices is now under the direction of Prof. Aaron Taylor, for many years first basso of St. Stephen's; and the members show the result of the careful training given them.

Holy Trinity Church, Westchester, Unsafe

This handsome church, erected about 30 years ago, has officially been pronounced unsafe, and until extensive repairs have been completed, services will be regularly held in the parish building. An entire new roof will be put on the church at a cost of $6,000.

Church of the Holy Apostles, Philadelphia.

Improvements have been begun, which it is hoped will be completed when the new rector, the Rev. N. S. Thomas, takes charge in December. The centre and side aisles are to be tiled, the spaces between the rafters under the roof will be wainscoted, and six ventilators placed in the roof. These improvements will cost about $2,500.

Holy Trinity, Philadelphia

A Sunday night service will be held at this church, the Rev. F. W. Tomkins, rector. It is designed to make this service very attractive. It began on the 15th inst., at 7:30 P. M., with an organ recital by Ralph Kinder, organist. Commencing on Monday, 16th inst., the church is to be opened during the day, with Matins at 9 A. M., and Evensong at 5 P. M.

Evangelical Education Society

The 37th annual meeting was held on the 19th inst., at the Church House, Philadelphia. The following managers were elected to serve three years: The Rev. Drs. J. E. Grammer, F. James, J. B. Falkner, R. A. Mayo, the Rev. C. C. Walker, Dr. John Ashhurst, Jr., Dr. Horace Y. Evans, and Harold Goodwin. The president, general secretary, and treasurer, were re-elected for one year.

Church of the Good Shepherd, Kensington

The Sunday school celebrated its 31st anniversary on the 15th inst. The principal address was made by the Rev. W. S. Baer whose topic was "Success." Addresses were also made by Mr. F. Pierce Buckley, superintendent of the school, and the Rev. John A. Goodfellow, rector. The annual report stated that the contributions for the year amounted to about $400, an excess over the previous year; and the scholars have considerably increased in number.

Seamen's Mission

At the annual meeting of the contributors to the "Churchmen's Missionary Association for Seamen in the port of Philadelphia," held at the Church House on the 17th inst., vice-president James S. Biddle was in the chair. Encouraging reports of the work done during the year just ending were received. The treasurer's report showed: Receipts, $3,131.67; balance, $339.42. Two clergymen and five laymen were elected to serve three years as members of the board of managers.

A Mission at Somerton

Mr. John C. Lewis, a prominent member of St. Luke's memorial church, Bustleton, removed to Somerton in 1897, was appointed lay-reader, and held services in a private house. A lot, valued at $1,000, was offered one year ago to St. Luke's, provided a chapel should be erected upon it, and now a contract has been made to build a one story frame chapel, 12 ft. high, and to measure 20x40 ft., on the south side of New st., west of the Bustleton and Somerton pike. The building will have a shingle roof, and be heated with hot air. The estimated cost is $1,200. Mr. Lewis, the lay-reader, is a candidate in this diocese for the order of perpetual deacon.

Emmanuel Church, Holmesburg

The corner-stone of the new chancel, sacristy, and choir room was laid on Monday afternoon, 16th inst., by the Rev. Dr. D. C. Millett, rector emeritus. The clergy, churchwardens, and vestrymen, preceded by the combined vested choirs of Emmanuel and the church of the Good Shepherd, Kensington, marched from the parish house, singing the processional, to the spot where the ceremony took place. The Rev. Messrs. John A. Goodfellow and L. R. F. Davis took part in the service, the Rev. Dr. Millett pronouncing the benediction. The walls will be constructed of Trenton sandstone. The choir stalls and wainscoting will be of red oak with Gothic panels, and the ceiling of the chancel, yellow pine. The choir and chancel floor will be tiled, and the steps of the chancel will be of Belleville brown stone. The cost of the new addition is given as $5,000.

The South-west Convocation

Held a meeting on the 16th inst., in the chapel of the Prince of Peace. The Rev. G. Woolsey Hodge, dean, presided. The Rev. Wm. McGarvey delivered an address, and said the diocese of Pennsylvania must be missionary, and so should every parish. All around us are people who know not Christ. The chief end of the Church is to bring men in, so that they may be saved from perishing. The Rev. F. W. Tomkins said he thought all the churches are doing their best to save men. The work is really Church extension, and the great responsibility is to reach out in every direction. Every one that brings in a new Sunday school scholar is doing Church extension work. We must cause the impression to be made on others that the churches are God's houses. The Church must emphasize it by frequent services and by inviting men in.

Convocation of Germantown

Held a stated meeting on the 17th inst. in St. Andrew's church, Yardley. The Holy Communion was celebrated, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. C. L. Fulforth. At the business meeting, a letter was read from Bishop Whitaker who made the following appointments: The Rev. Joseph Woods, Jr., minister in charge of St. Andrew's, Yardley, and missionary of St. James', Eden; the Rev. Joseph T. Wright, Grace church, Hulmeville; the Rev. L. R. F. Davis, Holy Innocents, Tacony; the Rev. John Totty, St. George's, Port Richmond; the Rev. Henry C. Mayer, Christ church, Franklinville, and the mission stations of St. Ambrose and St. Faith. At the public missionary meeting, held in the evening, the Rev. Messrs. Lyman P. Powell and Charles H. Arndt delivered addresses.

Grace church, Philadelphia

Extensive alterations and repairs have been made in the interior of the edifice during the past summer. The Sunday school room was entirely re-decorated and re-furnished, with stained glass windows put in, and a fine organ presented to the Sunday school as a memorial of a daughter of one of the vestrymen. The ceiling and walls of the church have been re-decorated in white and gold, the pews newly upholstered, the chancel, aisles, and floors re-carpeted, the entire building has been lighted by electricity, the heating apparatus enlarged, and the organ has received some additions. A large gilt runic cross has been placed on one of the towers. These improvements have cost over $6,000, and are all paid for. With special services, the church was re-opened on Sunday, Oct. 22nd, the rector, the Rev. Dr. H. Richard Harris, officiating.

West Philadelphia Convocation

The 44th regular meeting was held at Calvary Monumental church on the 19th inst. The missionary committee reported encouraging progress at St. Titus' mission, and urged financial support of a mission for colored persons at 36th and Ludlow sts. Mr. W. J. Peale, of St. Andrew's, announced that he took upon himself payment of the rent of this mission house. The Rev. A. J. P. McClure presented the claims of the General Clergy Relief Association, and suggested that special attention be paid to the collection on Quinquagesima Sunday. After listening to an essay on "The authority of Christ," by the Rev. Wm. M. Groton, convocation adjourned. Supper was served at 6 P. M., followed later by a public missionary meeting, in which the Rev. Messrs. C. M. Armstrong, W. H. Brown, S. L. Gilbertson, Chas. A. Maisson, D. D., and Alden Welling, participated.

Central New York

F. D. Huntington, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Rev. P. N. Meade, rector of Christ church, Oswego, and dean of the fourth district, is suffering from ill health, and has been ordered by his physician to seek rest and recuperation away from his parish. He is spending a few weeks at his former home in Maryland.

Many friends and former parishioners learn with regret of the illness of the Rev. C. H. Tindell, rector of Trinity church, Canastota, who is at St. Luke's hospital, New York city. There is little hope of recovery.

Convocation of the Fourth District

Held in St. James' church, Skaneateles, Oct. 10th and 11th. Owing to the absence of Dean Meade, through illness, the Rev. W. DeL. Wilson presided at the services and business sessions. At the opening service addresses were made by the Rev. Messrs. Karl Swartz, E. W. Saphore, C. N. C. Brown, and F. W. Maccaud. On Wednesday morning there were two celebrations of the Eucharist, the Rev. J. A. Skinner preaching at the later service. After the transaction of routine business and a bountiful lunch, the convocation listened to an address on "The use of Church papers, parish papers, tracts, etc., by the Rev. John Arthur. The venerable Judge Marvin, author of the work, "Authorship of the Four Gospels," now 92 years of age, a devoted Churchman, and attendant at the early Sunday Eucharist, lunched with the convocation. After the usual vote of thanks, adjournment was made sine die.

Massachusetts

William Lawrence, D. D., Bishop

St. James', Cambridge, has paid its debt of $12,000, and will soon be consecrated.

The school board of Boston have voted to name the new grammar school house on Quincy and Perth sts., Dorchester, after Bishop Phillips Brooks.

The church of the Messiah, Auburndale, has purchased a new organ, costing nearly $2,000.

St. Luke's church, Fall River, has been given an organ, valued at $1,000, by Mrs. Frank S. Stevens.

A fine organ of excellent tone and quality, costing $5,000, has been given to the church of our Saviour, Longwood.

Mr. and Mrs. W. V. Keller have given $100 to the City Missions. Mrs. M. D. Spaulding has also given $100 to the same cause.

A reception was tendered the Rev. W. S. W. Raymond, in charge of Grace church, South Boston, Oct. 18th, by his parishioners.

Mr. Russell Sturgis, a prominent Churchman of Boston, was buried from St. Paul's church, Oct. 19th. The Rev. Dr. Lindsay read the service, assisted by the Rev. G. J. Prescott.

The services at Holy Cross mission, Ashmont, have been discontinued. Three years' experience in this work has confirmed the rector of All Saints', the Rev. C. T. Whittemore, who has had charge, that Rockwell st. is too near All Saints' for the establishment of mission work. Those living in that locality are within easy access of the parish church.

The Cambridge Theological School

Has 16 new men, five of them are graduates from Harvard, and the others are graduates from Trinity, Hobart, Princeton, Columbia, University of Minnesota, and University of Pennsylvania.

St. Mark's Mission, Leominster

Has received the gift of a rectory from Mrs. M. C. Crocker, of Fitchburg. The house is commodious, and contains a large guild room. It is colonial in style of architecture.

The 25th Anniversary of Rev. G. J. Prescott

As rector of the church of the Good Shepherd, Boston, was observed with special services on Sunday, Oct. 8th. Bishop Lawrence preached at the morning service. He paid a high tribute to the ministerial services of the rector, and his faithful parishioners. Mr. Prescott preached in the evening. On the Monday following, a reception was held in the guild rooms. Mr. Joseph W. Woods, secretary of the board of trustees, gave a history of the church, which was started by Emmanuel parish as a mission chapel, under the care of the Rev. Dr. Huntington, now Bishop of Central New York. It was consecrated April 2nd, 1868, by Bishop Eastman. During its early life the church was under the charge at different times of the Rev. Messrs. S. S. Holmes, C. H. Learoyd, W. R. Huntington, T. E. Patterson, and Edward H. Krans. In 1872, the Huntington House adjoining the church was built, and the 21 tenements rented there have yielded always a good income for the support of the church. The parishioners presented a large mahogany writing desk, with a purse of money, to the Rev. and Mrs. G. J. Prescott.

The Clericus

The Rev. William T. Thayer, master of St. Mark's, Southborough, read a helpful paper upon the methods of education before the clericus, Oct. 16th. The discussion brought out the topic of family prayer, and the clergy present referred to its decline, but emphasized its necessity.

New Altar and Reredos in Emmanuel, Boston

These are fine specimens of ecclesiastical art. They are the gift of Mrs. Winthrop Sargent, in loving memory of Benjamin Smith Rotch, and Annie Bigelow Rotch, and of their children, Edith Rotch and Arthur Rotch. The reredos is of Caen stone, and the altar is of marble. The extreme width of the reredos is 18 ft., and its height, 28 ft. Rising from the altar and retable is a panel about 3 ft. high, with an arched decoration, in front of which are two small figures of children holding a ribbon bearing this inscription: "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty." The central feature of the reredos is a large bas-relief of the Lord's Supper, after Leonardo de Vinci, but with some modifications. Flanking this panel in the wings on either side, are four statues in niches, representing St. Peter and St. Mary (of Bethany), St. Mary the Virgin, and St. John, surmounted by elaborately carved canopies with spires. The central bas-relief has a canopied roof, under which stands the figure of Jesus with outstretched hands, in the pose of welcome. On either side adoring angels are represented kneeling. The Caen stone is exquisitely contrasted with the cooler tone of the limesone wall behind it, and the light from the hidden incandescent lamps within the arch of the chancel produce a soft impression. Another window, a memorial of Howard Payson Arnold, has been placed upon the north wall, and measures 30 ft. by 15. The artist, Mr. Frederick Crowninshield, has taken the design from "Pilgrim's Progress," and represents Christian ascending the Hill Difficulty, and arriving at a stately palace called Beautiful, where he was welcomed by four virgins, Discretion, Prudence, Piety, and Charity. The work is commendable in every way, and the landscape, sky, and figures, stand out in excellent proportions, and are alike interesting and original.

St. John's Mission, Saugus

This work is being carried on by Mr. Charles W. G. Lyon, a lay-reader, who took charge in September a year ago. The congregations at the Sunday services through the heated season have averaged 30, and often as many as 65. The Sunday school, which received the personal instruction of Mr. Lyon through the summer, is now in an encouraging condition, and has been reorganized for the winter months, with a superintendent and a staff of teachers. A class for Confirmation is being prepared for the Bishop who makes his visitation Dec. 22d.

Tennessee

Thomas Frank Gallor, D.D., Bishop

The Harriman Missions

On the 18th Sunday after Trinity, the Diocese visited St. Andrew's, Harriman. In the morning there was litany and the Holy Communion, the Bishop preaching. At Evensong, adult Baptism and Confirmation were administered, after which, driving five miles into the country, a sick man and his daughter were confirmed, and received the Blessed Sacrament. On Monday night in the Quintard Memorial church, Glen Mary, at Evensong, infant Baptism and Confirmation were administered, the Bishop preaching to a large congregation of the miners who completely filled the church. This mission, begun during the last years of the late Bishop, and in which he was so much interested, has been named for him, as an abiding memorial. Tuesday morning the Holy Eucharist was celebrated, the Bishop giving an Eucharistic meditation from the words, "This do for my memorial." The mission is now practically free from debt, but lacking in furnishings, which, it is to be hoped, will soon be provided, so the church can be consecrated. Tuesday night in Christ church, Rugby, Evensong was said, the Bishop preaching a stirring sermon. On Wednesday morning there was an early Celebration of the Holy Eucharist, and also a later Celebration with sermon, the Bishop giving an Eucharistic meditation.

Georgia

Cleland Kinlock Nelson, D.D., Bishop

The Rev. M. C. Stryker, rector of Grace church, Waycross, has been seriously ill with typhoid fever. His vestry have given him a leave of absence, which he is enjoying at Tallulah Falls, in the mountains of North Georgia.

The Rev. Allard Bornwell is critically ill at his home in Atlanta.

Gift to St. Luke's, Atlanta

Miss Charley Warwick who is sent as a missionary to China by the "Daughters of the King," to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Miss Lily Funston Ward, has recently presented to St. Luke's church, Atlanta, a beautiful Communion service of silver gilt. She has also given St. Luke's a set of altar and pulpit hangings, and a supply of altar linen. The hangings are of white silk, and the whole are made of the finest and most costly material, the embroidery, the work of the giver, being exquisite.

Minnesota

Henry B. Whipple, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

M. N. Gilbert, D.D., LL.D., Bishop-coadjutor

Church Club Banquet

Held at Hotel Ryan, St. Paul, Monday evening, Oct. 9th; covers were laid for about 125 guests. Judge Nelson acted as toastmaster, and in a few appropriate words welcomed the members of the Church Congress to the hospitality of the Church Club. He paid a high tribute to Bishop Whipple on the 45th anniversary of his episcopate. Bishop Whipple gave a vivid description of the early days of the Church, her struggles and hardships, paid a glowing tribute to the first clergy and laity for their endurance and faithfulness under very peculiar and trying circumstances. He spoke of the loyalty and faithfulness of the present staff of clergy in the diocese. The Rev. Dr. Tiffany responded on behalf of the Church Congress. He spoke of its usefulness in bringing the different schools of thought together for discussion and enlightenment on various subjects pertaining to the Church's welfare. The Rev. Dr. Cameron Mann responded in a humorous vein for Kansas and Missouri; the Rev. Mr. Thomas, of Los Angeles, for California. He hoped the Church Congress would some day wend its way out West, and not rest satisfied with coming East to Minnesota. The Rev. Dr. Fair responded for Nebraska. Bishop Gilbert congratulated the members of the Church Congress, bade them Godspeed in their coming deliberations. His speech bristled with humor. At the conclusion, Bishop Whipple pronounced the apostolic benediction. The gathering was a notable one in many respects.

Marriage of the Rev. H. K. Streeter

The Rev. H. K. Streeter, rector of St. John in the Wilderness, White Bear Lake, was married Oct. 17th to Miss Anna G. Selby. Bishop Gilbert officiated.

Bishop Whipple's Anniversary

Oct. 18th, the 45th anniversary of Bishop Whipple's episcopate was commemorated at St. Paul's church, St. Paul, with full choral Evensong and festal music. The church was beautifully decorated, the attendance very large, and the music by some 60 voices was rendered in excellent good taste. Addresses were delivered by Bishops Whipple, Gilbert, and Potter, and the Rev. Messrs. Tiffany, Thomas, and others. On Sunday, Oct. 15th, Bishop Potter preached in the morning at St. John's church, St. Paul. In the afternoon he addressed an immense audience of workmen at the Peoples' church, upon labor topics, and his experience in New York city as arbitrator in several strikes. Previous to the address Bishop Gilbert conducted a short service, consisting of the Lord's Prayer, a few suitable collects, and the singing of "America," in which the whole congregation joined.

Boise

James B. Funsten, Bishop

Church Work at American Falls

Some two years ago, the Rev. P. H. Murphy, D. D., rector of Pocatello, Idaho, who has been a mainstay of the Church during the long vacancy in the episcopate, began religious services at American Falls, a small but growing place, 26 miles west of Pocatello. It is a place with great future possibilities, consequent upon its possession of some wonderful Snake River falls, adapted by nature to be a great water power at this railroad point. As there is no denominational church as yet, Churchmen feel justified in considering the advisability of building a small but attractive rock edifice. Thanks to the generosity of Frank Campbell, an old resident, and C. B. Randall, an aggressive young Churchman, five lots in the centre of the little town have been deeded to the Bishop for ecclesiastical purposes, and several substantial subscriptions of money and work have already been offered. Services were held in the school house, on Oct. 2d, by the Bishop and the Rev. Mr. Murphy, and at their close a business meeting, which was also well attended. Too much praise cannot be given to the Rev. Mr. Murphy by Church people for his energy in this matter, nor to the Bishop, as yet somewhat of a stranger to the needs of his diocese, but a personal subscriber of a handsome amount to the proposed building fund. At American Falls, eventually, the Boys' Boarding School, of a high-class nature for the diocese, may be located, and Mr. W. H. Philbreck, a prominent citizen, is disposed to offer sufficient land, with necessary irrigation, and another generous-hearted man has started the school building fund with an offer of $500. Bishop Funsten is much encouraged.

Long Island

Abram N. Littlejohn, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Queens and Suffolk County Clericus held its monthly meeting at All Saints' church, Great Neck, on Oct. 10th. The Rev. Edmund M. McGuffy was the essayist.

St. Philip's chapel, Brooklyn, a new mission established last May, is doing good and successful work among the colored population of the upper wards. The mission is under the immediate charge of the Rev. W. L. Stetcher, rector of St. Timothy's, who is assisted by the Rev. Dr. S. D. Townsend and by Mr. Christopher Moore, lay-reader.

Church of the Incarnation, Brooklyn

Three new memorial windows will, within the next few weeks, be placed in the chancel, which has nine windows in pointed Gothic, each representing some incident in the life of Christ. The subjects of the three new windows are, "The Annunciation," "Christ among the doctors in the temple," these two being in memory of James Clinton Bower, given by his widow; and "The Presentation of Christ in the temple," this last being the gift of Mrs. E. T. Tucker, in memory of her mother. A recent beautiful gift to the church, also a memorial, is a chair of old oak, handsomely carved and canopied and upholstered in crimson and gold. It is in memory of Miss Julia Johnston, and was presented by her sister.

Presentation to Rev. Chas. Donohue

The Boys' Guild of St. Mary's Brooklyn, at its first meeting for the season, presented to the Rev. Charles Donohue a handsome watch fob, with a gold cross pendant, in recognition of the years he has worked in that society as organizer and director. On Sunday, Sept. 24th, the officers, teachers, and pupils of the Sunday school presented, through the lay-superintendent, Mr. W. C. Briggs, a handsome gold watch to Mr. Donohue, his long and faithful connection with St. Mary's closing on that day.

The Clerical League

On Monday, Oct. 2d, held its first meeting after the summer recess, at the Montauk Club. The essayist was John McDonnell Leavitt, D. D., LL. D., his subject being "Hyper-Criticism: a review of the subject of Holy Scripture." The officers chosen for the coming year are: The Rev. Charles Herter, president; the Rev. C. L. Twing, secretary; the Rev. George F. Breed, treasurer.

The South Side Clericus

Met at the Doming House, Bay Shore. The Rev. Ralph L. Brydges opened the discussion on "The mission of the Church," and was followed by other clergymen. The Rt. Rev. A. Du Moulin, D. D., Bishop of Niagara, was present as a guest of the Rev. Mr. Brydges. Eight other clergy were present.

West Missouri

Edward R. Atwill, D.D., Bishop

Corner-Stone Laid at Monett

On Wednesday afternoon, Oct. 4th, of the new St. Stephen's church. At 3 P. M., a large gathering of the members of the mission and prominent citizens were on the ground. The scholars of the city schools, with their teachers, marched in procession to the church lot. The Monett lodge A. F. and A. M. had been invited to lay the corner-stone according to the Masonic ritual. The Rev. J. S. Moody, archdeacon of West Missouri, in the absence of Bishop Atwill who was prevented from coming by other duties, had charge of the programme, assisted by the Rev. Walter S. Trowbridge, of Springfield, and the Rev. John Gray, of Kansas City. The clergy led the procession of Masons to the platform erected over the foundation, reciting Psalm cxxii. A few verses were read responsively by the assembly and officiating clergyman. The archdeacon read a list of the articles put in the tin box to be deposited in the corner-stone. It included a copy of THE LIVING CHURCH. The stone was blessed by the archdeacon, and the service then turned over to the Masons who proceeded to lay the stone according to their ritual. A volunteer choir of ladies led the singing of a few familiar hymns. The Nicene Creed was then recited by the clergy and people, and the Rev. J. S. Moody delivered a short introductory address. The Rev. Mr. Gray followed, in the principal address. The Rev. Mr. Trowbridge as representing the parish formerly under the rectorship of the Rev. M. M. Moore, of Springfield, gave a short and encouraging talk upon the subject, "The day of small things." An offering was received, a few prayers said, and the people dispersed. Architect W. S. Mathews, late of Kansas City, has followed in its chief outlines the church at West Plains, which is built cruciform. The nave, 22x40 ft., will seat comfortably about 200 people. The first public service of the Church, so far as can be accurately learned, was held in Westbay Hall, April, 1894, by Archdeacon Gate, of the diocese of West Missouri. Lay services were held in the hall for over a year by Mr. R. Van Gieson, and a Sunday school was organized, which flourished for more than a year. The Rev. Mr. Brooks, of Neosho, and the Rev. John Wilkinson, of Lebanon, Mo., officiated during this period once or twice a month. In January, 1898, the Rev. M. M. Moore, of Springfield, held a service in the Presbyterian church, and a mission was formally organized, under the temporary name of St. John's. In May, 1898, the Rev. J. S. Moody began to give semi-monthly services, various churches being used till the autumn of 1898, when the building of the old Monett bank was rented and fitted up for regular services. The parish guild resolved to raise money for the purchase of suitable lots, which were purchased in February, 1899, at a cost of $800. In May, $700 were subscribed by members of the mission and citizens of the town, and a building committee was appointed.

West Virginia

George W. Peterkin, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

A new choir room for Christ church, Wellsburg, has been completed.

The Rev. John Tilton Marley who recently underwent an operation for appendicitis, has recovered, and is again at his work.

The Rev. James N. Deaver, rector of St. Philip's church for colored people, Charlestown, has secured the old Charlestown Academy, which he will make use of for developing industrial and educational work among his people.

Trinity church, Parkersburg, has just been presented with the photographs of all the rectors who have been in charge of this parish; among them is the Rt. Rev. Robert A. Gibson, coadjutor of Virginia. These photographs are beautifully framed in gilt, and have been hung in the vestry room of the church.

Sheltering Arms Hospital

The annual report just received is very gratifying. This is a diocesan institution, located at Point Creek, Kanawha Co., and was organized for the purpose of treating the sick and injured, especially of the New River and Kanawha mining districts. Considering the nature of the cases treated—largely severe accidents—the mortality record of something less than ten per cent, is very small. A majority of the deaths occur within a few hours after the admission of the patient. The hospital is now prepared to care for 30 patients; five new beds have been added, and hot water heating apparatus put in, at a cost of $1,200. The buildings have been remodeled, and are now very complete. The hospital is supported chiefly by a contribution from each miner, and help is also given by the churches and private individuals.

Ohio

Wm. Andrew Leonard, D.D., Bishop

Kenyon College

The Bishop of Ripon having been prevented from making his expected trip to the United States this year, the Bedell Lectures, which he was to have delivered before Kenyon College on All Saints' Day, have been postponed for a year. The Rev. Dr. Dix has accepted the appointment as lecturer in 1900. Extensive repairs have been going on in several of the college buildings during the summer vacation. Ascension Hall has a new steam-heating plant, for which Mr. Samuel Mather, of Cleveland, one of the trustees of the college, gave $2,500. The same system will supply Rosse Hall. Bexley Hall, the Theological Seminary, is also to be supplied with steam heat by the gift of Mr. Mather. Bishop and Mrs. Leonard are remodeling and enlarging the chapel of the Theological Seminary. Some time ago the Bishop put in beautiful oak stalls, and he is now having the walls decorated, and making other changes which will add greatly to the beauty of the little chapel.

Services for Deaf-Mutes

The deaf-mutes for Hancock and adjoining counties met at Trinity church, Findlay, on Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 7th and 8th, when services in visible sign language were conducted by the Rev. A. W. Mann. In the afternoon of the latter day, a child was baptized. In the evening Bishop Leonard administered Confirmation to four deaf-mutes. They were presented by the rector, the Rev. Mr. Clarke, Mr. Mann acting as interpreter.

Easton

Wm. Forbes Adams, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

The rectory of St. Luke's church, Wye Mills, Queen Anne's Co., was recently totally destroyed by fire. It is occupied by Mr. Wm. H. Dolby. The building was insured for $1,000, but there was no insurance on the furniture.

The Northern Convocation

The fall session was held in Shrewsbury parish, Kent Co. All the clerical members were present, excepting the Rev. Messrs. Alexander M. Rich and William Schouler who are absent in Europe. The opening service was held at 7:30 P. M., in St. Andrew's chapel, Galena. On the morning of the second day divine service, with the celebration of the Holy Communion, was offered in the old church at Shrewsbury, with sermon by the Rev. Dr. Grammer, and after a well prepared and enjoyable collation on the lawn, the people assembled in the church to join in the evening devotions, and to listen to a series of addresses on the theme of missions, the Rev. J. Addison Ingle presenting the subject in relation to the work in China, the Rev. Mr. Grammer, in its more general aspects, and Mrs. Sioussat and Mrs. Physick, as bearing more particularly upon the purposes of the Woman's Auxiliary. On the third day, the sermon in the morning was preached by the Rev. K. J. Hammond, on "The Fatherhood of God in Jesus Christ." The sessions closed in the afternoon with Evening Prayer, and a discussion upon lessons in the life of St. Matthew, by the Rev. Messrs. S. C. Roberts, D.D., K. J. Hammond, and C. T. Denroche.

All Saints' Parish, Longwood

At a recent special meeting of the vestry, appropriate resolutions were passed relative to the death of Mr. J. Thomas Kirby who has been a trustee and vestryman of All Saints from its inception, in 1872. Mr. Kirby had also represented the parish in the diocesan convention since 1894.

Southern Virginia

Alfred M. Randolph, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Marriage of the Rev. F. L. LeMosy

On Monday, Oct. 9th, the Rev. Frederick Lyttleton LeMosy was married by Bishop Randolph to Miss Marian Willoughby Brockenbrough, in St. Stephen's church, Forest, of which Mr. LeMosy is the rector. The bride is the daughter of Major John Boyer Brockenbrough, of Bedford.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

On Sunday, Oct. 1st, a general conference for Norfolk and Portsmouth was held in St. Luke's church, Norfolk. The subject, "Our next convention, and how to obtain the most good from it," was discussed at length. As an effort is being made to have the next annual convention held in Richmond, a resolution was passed pledging the support of the Norfolk assembly.

South Dakota

William Hobart Hare D.D., Bishop

Convocation of Niobrara Deanery

Met at the call of the Bishop, at Yankton Agency, Sept. 15th. The Indian delegations arrived from the other reservations the day before, and camped about a mile from the Agency, on ground which had been laid out by the Yanktons in the form of an oblong square. About 1,200 Indians attended, 227 of whom were delegates. The opening service began Friday morning at 9 o'clock with a celebration of the Holy Communion, the Bishop being celebrant and preacher. As always, his words were full of wisdom, and were listened to with close attention. The Rev. E. Ashley, rural dean, interpreted. There was a large number of communicants. The offering, which was for the Convocation fund, was large. After services, the Yankton women gave dinner. At 2 P. M., convocation was called to order by the Bishop. The Rev. W. Holmes was elected secretary, and the Rev. E. Ashley, dean of convocation. Saturday morning, after Morning Prayer, the Woman's Auxiliary assembled, in their annual meeting, to render their reports and present their offerings. They laid before the Bishop in cash, nearly $1,700. This, with what had been expended at home for local needs, showed that the good women had raised during the year about $5,000. The convocation spent the morning and afternoon in discussing matters in connection with the work. Sunday morning there was a celebration of the Holy Communion at 7 o'clock, Dean Ashley being celebrant. At 9 o'clock, a Celebration by the Bishop. The Rev. A. B. Clark, of the Rosebud mission, was the preacher. Again there was a large number of communicants. In the afternoon, there was held a general service, after which the Woman's Auxiliary assembled for Bible work by Miss J. B. Dickson. A service for men was held, at which addresses were made by some of the native deacons who spoke words of wisdom to their people. Monday morning, convocation again assembled for business, with Dean Ashley presiding, while the Bishop was at the meeting of the women. The closing service was held in the afternoon, when the men's societies and guilds brought in their offerings. They presented $226, of which amount $172 was given to the native clergy fund. The Cheyenne River mission was chosen as the next place of meeting. At the final service, the Bishop spoke a few farewell words, and urged the people to remember what he had tried to impress upon them; viz: "That when God had a great work to do, he generally chose a few to do it. The delegates to convocation, men and women, were the chosen few. They had their spiritual meetings, and he hoped they would return to their homes and work, not merely in religious things, but in improving their homes, their farms, and stock." After the blessing by the Bishop, all crowded about him and the clergy for a last hand-shake and a hearty "good-by."

Quincy

Alexander Burgess, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The rector of Grace church, Galesburg, the Rev. E. F. Gee, has been holding an encouraging Mission at Canton, giving a series of addresses on the parables, illustrated by stereopticon. In Galesburg, plans are being made for a new church and parish house.

Return of the Bishop

The Bishop has returned to the diocese, arriving at Knoxville on last Saturday, accompanied by his daughter. He was strengthened by the journey rather than fatigued, and is in better health than for many months past. On Sunday he attended services in the church, and in the evening was able to meet socially the ladies of St. Mary's. He hopes to visit other places in the diocese, and if his strength is sufficient, will respond to calls for official duty.

Southern Ohio

Thomas A. Jaggar, D.D., Bishop
Boyd Vincent, D.D., Bishop Coadjutor

St. James, Piqua

On Oct. 3rd, there was laid the corner-stone of the new church, to be built of stone, and to cost about $20,000. The services were conducted by the rector, the Rev. Abdiel Ramsey, assisted by the Rev. James H. Young and the Rev. Charles H. Lee, Jr. The corner-stone of the old church, which was of brick, was laid in 1846, and some of those composing the choir at that time took part in the musical portion of the service on this occasion also.

Anniversary of Rev. John Boyd, D.D.

A unique service was held in St. Luke's church, Marietta, on the 49th anniversary of the rectorship of the Rev. John Boyd, D.D. Dr. Boyd announced before the sermon that the same service, word for word, had been used as on the 2nd Sunday of Sept., 1850, the same hymns had been sung, and that he should preach from the same text, 1 Cor. 2: ii: "For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." St. Luke's is Dr. Boyd's first and only parish, he having come to Marietta on the completion of his theological studies at Gambier, in 1850, and ministered to the people of St. Luke's in spiritual things ever since.

St. James' Church, Zanesville

The Daughters of the King have painted and frescoed the north choir vestryroom, most of the work being done by their own hands. On Sunday, Oct. 8th, several hundred representatives of organized labor attended the church in a body, and listened to a special sermon by the rector. It was the first time in the history of Zanesville that the labor organizations had expressed a desire to attend any church in this way. On Sunday evenings, in November and December, the rector expects to deliver a course of sermons on "The Church and the social problem," "Organized labor," "Secret societies," "The saloon," etc.

Death of Rev. Y. Peyton Morgan, Ph. D.

The Rev. Y. Peyton Morgan, rector of Christ church, Dayton, and formerly dean of Trinity cathedral, Cleveland, died at his home in Dayton, on Monday, Oct. 16th, after a painful illness of several weeks. The funeral service was held in Christ church, Dayton, conducted by Bishop Vincent. He had been appointed dean of St. Paul's cathedral, Cincinnati, and at the time he was taken ill, all his household goods were packed ready for removal to his new home, Sept. 1st. The remains were taken to Cleveland for burial, accompanied by his wife and daughter, and five members of the vestry of Christ church. An impressive service was held in Trinity cathedral Oct. 18th, at 4 P. M., conducted by Bishop Leonard, Bishop Vincent, of Southern Ohio, and Bishop Brown, of Arkansas. A large number of the clergy were present, with members of Troop A and of the Scottish Rite Masons, of which order he was a member. On account of the lateness of the hour, the remains were taken to the Cathedral House, and lay in state at the foot of the altar in the chapel, guarded during the night by five charter members of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew who had been with Dean Morgan in his early work at Trinity. At 9 A. M., Thursday, the last rites were held at Lake View cemetery, where the committal was said by the Bishop of Southern Ohio, attended by the Bishop of Ohio, and several of the clergy of Ohio and Southern Ohio, and by a concourse of people representative of both dioceses. Dr. Morgan was a native of Baltimore, Md., and came into the Church from the ministry of the Methodist Church in 1881. In 1882 he was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Littlejohn. Dr. Morgan's first work was at St. Ann's, Brooklyn, in 1881; from 1882 to 1891 he was dean of Trinity cathedral, Cleveland, O.; rector of St. John's church, St. Paul, Minn., from 1891 to 1895; Christ church, Dayton, 1895 to Sept. 1899.

North Carolina

Joseph Blount Cheshire, Jr., D.D., Bishop
Industrial School for Colored Pupils

Just on the outskirts of Littleton, Halifax Co., is located the "Farming, Industrial, and Training School," a Church institution, the aim of which is the moral, intellectual, and religious uplifting of its colored pupils. It owns a tract of 40 acres, on which are two large two-story buildings. Instruction is given in cooking, sewing, housekeeping, farming, carpentry, shoe-making, and other mechanical work. The cost to the pupil is $7 per month, of which $4 is in cash and $3 in work, covering board, tuition, washing, and fuel. This training school and the "Church mission" in the same town have been recently consolidated.

Editorials and Contributions

A COMMITTEE was appointed at the recent diocesan convention in New York to consider that portion of Bishop Potter's address which related to marriage and divorce. The report of this committee contained a strong statement of the evils which have come out of the present laxity. Most significant of all is the glaring fact that the offenders "are permitted to retain their place in the circles in which they move; their actions, though criminal in the eye of the law and the judgment of the courts, are condoned in society, and they are accepted as in good standing and beyond reproach." It is this deterioration of morals in the leading circles of society which emphasizes the necessity that the Church, at least, should speak upon the subject with no uncertain voice. It is for the Church to set the standard of good morals. She cannot allow society to lay down the law for her. The New York Evening Post says: "If these charges are only partly true, there should be no doubt concerning the attitude of the Church. Civil marriage is open to divorced persons, and that is all that they can reasonably ask. In fact, the sanction of the Church is sought by divorced persons as a relief from a social stigma. Marriage by a clergyman rehabilitates them, and enables them to hold up their heads in society." These are words of truth and soberness.

DR. ANDREWS, superintendent of the Chicago public schools, is of opinion that Kipling's "Recessional" ought not to be taught to the pupils, because it recognizes the existence of God, and of man's dependence upon Him. The consistent application of such a principle would have strange consequences in the department of English literature. Most of the great English writers, from Shakespeare down to the present time, take this great fundamental belief for granted. If the literature studied in schools is to be so sifted as to eliminate even the postulates of natural religion, what will be left? The result would be like pouring away the wine and leaving the dregs. The literary culture obtained in this way would be hopelessly narrow and uninteresting. It has been suggested that if the "Recessional" is to be excluded on such grounds, "America" must go with it, and likewise Mrs. Julia Ward Howe's "Battle Hymn of the Republic." In fact, in this, as in most nations, the greatest and most inspiring patriotic poetry and song is almost sure to contain some recognition of God as ruling with His invincible might in the affairs of His creatures. Those who propose to trim everything in education to suit the views of atheists and agnostics, have a hard task before them, if they hope to include in their notion of "education" any degree of that culture which imparts the truest breadth and liberality.

PROFESSOR SANDAY, of Oxford, whose pamphlet on the Archbishops' opinion on incense and processional lights, has attracted so much attention, had been asked to sign a set of resolutions set forth by a "Conference of Churchmen" some time ago. These resolutions condemn the tenets of High Churchmen, after defining some of those tenets in language which would certainly not be accepted by those to whom they are attributed.

In reply, the Professor expresses his inability to endorse the resolutions as they stand, and concludes by laying down what may well be regarded as a golden rule of controversy: "I confess that these resolutions remind me forcibly of what I would conclude, by urging, the solemn duty which we owe alike to God and man—a duty at no time more imperative than at the present—to use the utmost care in ascribing to others such opinions only as are really theirs." It is to be remembered that Dr. Sanday has never been associated with the High Church party. Of evangelical antecedents, he has of late been classed as a mild type of the "Broad Church." In reality, it is probably an injustice to connect him with any distinct party. He is known on all hands as a man of judicial mind, who often carries impartiality so far that he has been accused of inability to arrive at a positive conclusion. When a man of such characteristics, respected for his profound learning, does feel called upon to express a strong conviction, his words are sure to carry unusual weight.

Those In Bright Array

IT is well that we have one day in the Christian Year devoted to the loved and lost, and it is well that it is "a holy day of obligation." The tendency in a strongly commercialized age and country is to neglect these churchyard walks; not indeed so far as bronze or marble is concerned, for in such things we may be sumptuous enough, but in real heart and soul communion with those who have preceded us over Death's moaning bar.

This may not be exactly the age for Baxter's "Saints' Rest," or Hervey's "Meditations Among the Tombs," or "Gray's Elegy;" but the busier, the more rasping and grinding the age is in its exactions, the more surely should "our hearts be fixed where true joys are to be found." And this is the highest meaning and ministry of All Saints' Day. It is a witness and reminder of the great mystical body of which we are very members incorporate on earth, together with that innumerable throng of the released and victorious, who seem to shine with angelic radiance on the dim, dark ways of our life; even as the glints of the earliest November sun stray through the red ivied oriels, till they fall on the chancel and wreath the altar during the holy hour. The dead are with us there; and the morning light struggling through mottled skies, and falling upon the thick piled leaves of the churchyard with a tender glow, is typical, not of the splendor and beauty in which they shall stand around the throne, but of our mortal view of death, half expectant, half shivering. As Toplady or some other poet expresses it:

Is it a father, mother, sister, brother, wife, child, or dear friend whose face we miss now, and for whom we keep the vacant chair? Since last All Saints' morn has a great sorrow passed over the household? Or possibly do we mourn a loyal and devoted priest who has broken for us the Bread of Life, and offered the rich libation of the Redeemer's Blood? Or again, as happens every year in the American Episcopate, has some beloved bishop laid down his staff and crozier, and fallen to sleep in the arms of the Good Shepherd? No matter who it is, or why so dear, does not All Saints' morn rally the whole group—not a phantom band, but ministering spirits,

"Transformed to stars, and fixed in heaven?"

How can we over-estimate the importance of All Saints' Day? Even when its octave has come we find new faces of the loved and lost looming up over the great mortal divide and beckoning to us from the bowers of Paradise. One short week is all too short for a man or woman, even of middle age, to remember all the vanished faces—of childhood companions, of schoolmates, of young friendship, of the maturing devotion of older and less fickle years. They all come back now as we kneel at the Father's board, and heaven seems near indeed on the morn of All Saints' Day. This day at least gives us a good excuse for turning from the madding crowd and sordid pursuits of our worldly environment, and living again the ancient history of loves which death cannot sever, while we view with yearning eyes the far land of rest and peace into which death has led them, the ministering spirits of our chequered, earthly day!

"Stealing a Church"

A WRITER in The Episcopal Recorder, the organ of the Reformed Episcopalians, accuses the authorities of the diocese of Michigan of "stealing a church." The reference is to the case of Trinity church, Detroit, which was transferred some time ago by those who seemed to have the right to take such action, from the Reformed Episcopal connection to the jurisdiction of Bishop Davies. The writer not only denies the proper legality of the proceedings, but alleges deceit and fraud on the part of the Bishop and Standing Committee. The Recorder, as might be expected from the gentlemen who conduct it, dismisses at once all such charges. It considers the present bitterness and exasperation as due to misunderstanding on both sides. The Church authorities appear to have supposed that the people of Trinity had undergone a change of heart and were eager to return, like the prodigal son, to their old home. The Trinity people, on the other hand, thought it was the old Church which had experienced the change, and that it was coming to the Reformed Episcopal position. It is claimed that it was the document of 1886, commonly called the "Quadrilateral," which was at the bottom of the mischief. This celebrated document, put forth by the House of Bishops, was never intended as a statement of the terms of union, but it was a statement of terms which must be accepted as preliminary to any discussion of the subject.

IN certain quarters, however, it has been persistently maintained that the "four points" embraced everything which this Church intended henceforth to require of any Christian body which might desire to come into union with her. Since nothing was said about worship, it was assumed that that important subject was to be left out of the account. The strenuous contention of Anglican theologians, from the great work of Hooker down to the present day, in defence of the Catholic forms of worship as contained in the Prayer Book, is suddenly dropped, and the whole matter is dismissed as of no importance. This is the essence of a movement which has, in different forms, been brought forward at the last three General Conventions, and urged with eloquence and persistency. It is a movement which assumes that the manner and method of divine worship is a thing completely indifferent, and involves, in principle, the setting aside of the Prayer Book, or its modification to suit the ideas of congregations. Incidentally, it substitutes a sort of Congregationalism for the present system of the Church.

HERE is the rock upon which our "Reformed" friends in Detroit have split. Accepting an interpretation of the "Quadrilateral" which it was never meant to bear, and perhaps supposing that the movement above described had already obtained official endorsement, they desired to put themselves, in a general way, under the "episcopal supervision" of Bishop Davies, reserving the right to use such services as they pleased and in such manner as they preferred. Evidently they, or some of them, did not expect to be obliged to use the Prayer Book as it stands. The authorities of the Church, on the other hand, were sanguine enough to imagine that in the overtures made to them, there was some real love for the "old Church," and a yearning to be at one with her. There might be an inadequate apprehension of the position and the requirements of the Church, but there must be assumed some desire or willingness to be informed. The Bishop would naturally be inclined to bear with people who were in such a mind, and might readily undertake that the services should be of a plain and simple type, not too far removed from those to which they had been accustomed.

IF we are correct in this view of things, it is evident, as The Recorder says, that "in the effort at conciliation, the matter was not clearly understood by either party." The Bishop might be more than willing to allow the service to be of the "Low Church" type. But the lowest type of Churchmanship consistent with Church order was insufferably "High" to those who did not expect to submit to that order. Hence the present distress and these very regrettable charges of deceit and dishonesty. Apart from the hope of bringing back to the fold a body of people who had gone astray, it is not to be supposed that the mere acquisition of a church edifice could cut any figure, especially when, in view of its situation relative to other churches, it would, if deserted by the former congregation, be nothing else than a "white elephant."

BUT the main point in this little history is the object lesson it affords. We see here the inevitable result of all attempts at external unity without interior oneness of conviction. If the movement to "side track" the Prayer Book and to allow various methods or directories of worship, according to the fancy of congregations, could be successful, the opportunities for misunderstanding would be as numerous as the congregations concerned. The method or form of worship to be used must still have the sanction of the Bishop, and woe to him if he declines to sanction in every particular what is demanded in any case. It would shortly be seen what was conceived to be meant when such congregations put themselves under "episcopal jurisdiction." We hold, now as ever, that if the claims of the Church are true even when minimized to the utmost, there can be no unity without submission to those claims. Nor will it ever hold true that a body of people brought into the unity of the Church without knowing what such a step involves, will remain content, and willingly submit themselves when they wake up to the apprehension of the position in which they have been placed. It is rare that an individual thus taken unawares will afterwards be willing to submit himself, and in the case of a body of people, it is a sheer impossibility.

The Missionary Spirit

A CONVOCATION PAPER
BY THE REV. JOHN K. BURLESON
I.

WE hear frequently, and from many different sources, the complaint that the people of the Church are not awake to the importance of missionary work; that they do not care about it as they should. If this is true—and many things seem to show that it is—if it is true, then the first and the greatest fault, the chief responsibility for this state of things, lies upon the clergy of the Church. I would not seem to criticise, to malign our order, but whatever excuse or palliation we may have to offer, these facts remain, and we must meet them. If a priest is determined to interest his people in any particular subject or cause, he can always do so. The people—in spite of absolute vestries and lay popes, nineteenth century ideas of liberty, and all other forms and degrees of tyranny—in spite of it all the people do look to the clergy for leadership in most of the things which concern Church life and activity. We meet this fact constantly in our ministrations among the people, and to say that we are responsible for the coldness and indifference of our people in any special direction, is only to state this fact of our common experience in another way. We are responsible, and we cannot escape the responsibility.

It is true, however, that the priest often fails to teach or to interest, not through negligence, but through ignorance. He has himself never been taught. The subject of missions has no part—or at best only a very incidental part—in the usual theological course. It seems to have been the idea that a knowledge of missions, and interest in them, would come by absorption; though how the absorption could take place from an atmosphere so thinly charged with missionary spirit, one is at a loss to say. Be this as it may, we, in our daily work, have to meet the deficiency as best we can.

We have all known those who tried to do their duty as priests of God apart and alone; not realizing that the priesthood is not an aggregation, but a unit. It is not a number of separate personal possessions, but one great trust fund, of which we are all executors, each responsible for the use of all, and all responsible for the using of each, even as the ordinal reminds us that it is "to the same office and ministry" that we are called. We must not, then, try to escape the duty of knowing how this, our joint trust, is administered; where its power is most needed; how those needs may be best supplied. But this last requirement can be met only by means of that material help which it is the privilege and glory of the laity to bestow; this they cannot be expected to do unless we bring to them a knowledge of the needs; and he who would teach must first learn.

The first step in the presentation of missions is to have something to present, but this is only the first requisite. I would appeal to the personal experience of each one of you with the average missionary sermon. Of course I mean the sermons of other men, not your own. You listen to an address which begins with—say—the missionary activity of St. Paul and the first Christian centuries. It passes on down until it reaches the Board of Missions and its work. A touching picture is drawn of the heathen world and its great needs. A list of statistics is read to prove the utter inadequacy of the attempts so far to meet the great demands, and an earnest appeal is made to the sense of Christian duty and of Christian charity. I have tried to make this a true sketch, and think that most will recognize it as such, even though it might be eloquently spoken; after you had listened to all this, did you wonder that the surest way to keep people away from church is to announce a missionary address! It was all true, terribly true, some of it. But oh! the barrenness of it. No touch of a single needy human hand, no cry of a single human voice, to rouse that strong, overflowing human sympathy and love which lies so near the surface in the hearts of all. It is like reading the list of the injured in some accident, or of those who have starved to death in some distant place. We read, we shudder; and turn quickly to more pleasant thoughts. But should we see actually before us one of those poor wounded bodies; should we really hear the sickening moan of a single child famishing for bread, nothing could stop us until, as far as in us lay, the need was relieved, the suffering eased.

The presentation of missions merely in a statistical or historical way, can do but little good. All that figures can do is to help to keep alive an interest which is already enthusiastic. They are called cold facts, and cold facts make an excellent wet blanket. Moreover, as far as preacher or hearers are concerned, cold facts are very apt to become dead facts. We are wasting valuable time when we talk to our congregations about the millions of heathen at home and abroad, the hundreds of shepherdless flocks, the thousands of needy shepherds, and point out the Christian duty of trying to relieve all this. The people will know that it is all true, they will realize that it is their duty, but sad experience teaches us that it by no means follows that they will act upon their knowledge. If, on the other hand, we can make them actually see and know one of our faithful but struggling mission congregations, or one missionary brave and unfaltering in the face of privation, danger, and death, if we can show them one poor brother hungering for the bread of life and stretching out beseeching hands to them, hands which will not be filled unless they do it, then we will have accomplished something. For after the stream of sympathy and love has begun to flow from the heart, it will be easy to lead that heart to see that this one is only one, one little part of a great need, a need which must be supplied, of a great and noble work, a work which belongs to them. It will be easy to make them see that when we use the word "missions," we are declaring that each one of us is sent; that we have a deep personal responsibility for every particular soul which lives or dies in darkness; a responsibility to that other Brother, that Master, that Lord who ever stretches out His hands to say: "Come unto Me, all ye that are heavy laden;" and that to try to escape, or to neglect that responsibility, is to deny Him.

For it will do little good to try to impress the subject of missions upon any mind unless you establish it at the same time in the heart. And in order to get it into the hearts of our fellow-men, we must first have it in our own. This, after all, must be the great fault. We do not love missions as we should. We pray, "Thy Kingdom come, Thy Will be done, on earth as it is in heaven," pray this, knowing that it is only our efforts as God's fellow-workers, which will hasten that Kingdom or bring the knowledge of that Will to all the world; we hear the knocking of Him who stands at the door, and know that to millions that sound is but the remorseless beating of a cold, inexorable fate; we hear the echo of those voices "from beneath the altar"—voices, some of them, perhaps, the voices of those whom we "have loved long since, and lost awhile"—which cry, and cry in vain, because of us. We know all this, we see and hear, and yet we are not stirred to the depths of our natures, we do not feel within us a love, a longing for that work, that only work which will bring the time when "the glory of God shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea." We do not love missions.

And so when we would speak of this to others, though glowing rhetoric and harmonious diction, and every art of oratory, may adorn our words, yes, "though we speak with the tongue of men and of angels," yet because we have not charity, that charity which goes out in eager love to all because Christ has called them, "it profiteth us" and those who hear us "nothing." A heartless and soulless call can bring only an equally heartless and soulless reply.

Brethren, it is time that the Church became alive to the fact that if she is to take the place which is rightly hers, as the One, Catholic, and Apostolic Church of the Anglo-Saxon race, she must, as one of our bishops has said, "manifest the truth in her life as well as in her faith." She must be apostolic in act as well as in profession; Catholic in work as well as in belief. When this has come about, the question of name will settle itself. But if she is to do this, her children must not only give for missions, they must also give themselves to missions, in alms, in self-sacrifice, in work, and in prayer. For history tells us that this realization of the Church's truest life and power has come only with the recognition of the fact that she is a missionary Church; and so it will come when she is made so in reality, by a priesthood and a laity full of love and zeal for this greatest work of Christ.

Letters to the Editor

ENGLAND AND THE TRANSVAAL

To the Editor of The Living Church:

IN THE LIVING CHURCH of Oct. 14th, a reference was made on the first page to the (supposed) "sentiment which is growing not favorable to England in her controversy with the Boers"; and you go on to say that should "the greater nation proceed to annihilate the weaker, it is not unlikely that the small republic will find champions among the strong and powerful European nations."

We who are citizens of the British Empire do not understand why so many of you well educated and well-informed Americans should be ever making the mistake that Great Britain has no right to deal in a business-like manner with her own affairs like any other nation. And certainly American interference with Cuban affairs was impertinence itself compared with British interference in Africa. To specify England's rights in the present controversy, let me say that on the 12th of April, 1877, the Transvaal was annexed to the empire. The Boers were accorded "home rule"; i. e., they were permitted to manage internal affairs, but external relationships were wholly reserved to the guidance of Britain. In 1880 the Boers grew dissatisfied at the progressive policy and enterprise of the British, and through the vacillating policy and unstatesmanlike conduct of the Gladstone government, the disgraceful reverse of Majuba Hill was inflicted. The London convention of 1884 quieted matters apparently, when British suzerainty was acknowledged. But the subsequent strides made by the "dominant race" have been a hateful panorama passing before the face of Paul Kruger and his antediluvian statesmen; hence the present difficulties which must be settled by the arbitrament of arms. As Britons, therefore, we of the empire stand by the old colors, and we maintain that we have at least as good a right to a place on God's footstool as any other nation under heaven. All of which we have been bold to maintain in the past; and, God helping us, we shall maintain the same in the future, or die at our guns.

The Unseen Visitants

BY W. B. CHISHOLM

Days of the withered leaves,
Days of the golden sheaves,
Days of the mottled skies,
Days of the beam that dies,—
Dear lingering days, farewell!
Like pæan, after knell,
O'er this late sunny morn,
E'en mid the gardens lorn,
E'en from the leafless glen,
E'en from the sobbing main,
One sweet word comes to me,—
"With all the company
Of heaven," this morn we meet.
There is no vacant seat
Around our Father's board.
Oh, ye, so long deplored!
Ye whom our yearning eyes
Have vainly sought! arise,
A host in bright array,
On morn of this dear day!

Where is thy sting, O Death?
O, grave, thy victory where?
There is to-day no weeping eye,
There is no vacant chair.
Unseen to mortal eyes,
Yet hovering, bright-robed, here,
They come again, though leaves are dead,
In the fast-waning year.

All Saints, 1899.

Pen-and-Ink-lings

THE following, from Tid-bits, will be especially enjoyed by speakers who have been called out after the audience has been tired by several long speeches: "A lecturer was invited to speak at a local gathering, and being nobody in particular, he was placed last on the list of speakers. The chairman also introduced several speakers whose names were not on the list, and the audience was fired out when he said, introducing the lecturer, 'Mr. Bones will now give us his address.' 'My address,' said Mr. Bones, rising, 'is 551 Park Villas, S. W., and I wish you all good night.'"

MISS ONOTO WATANNA, of Chicago, is the only Japanese woman writer of fiction in this country. Miss Watanna is an Oriental by birth, twenty-one years of age, and for the past three years has resided in different cities of America. In Cincinnati she published her first story of Japanese life, in The Commercial-Tribune, the editor of which journal predicted great success for the young writer whom he had discovered. Her stories have since found acceptance with leading magazines, and have given pleasure to thousands of readers. Even her fellow-countrymen have so far overcome their prejudice against women writers as to read her contributions to the Kokumin-no-Toni and the Hansei Zasshi, two magazines published in Tokyo. Onoto is one of a large and talented family, one sister being an artist, another a writer, and a third occupying a position of trust in British West India.

IN the presence of a large congregation, the Bishop of Ripon unveiled recently a memorial window to the late poet-laureate,

Lord Alfred Tennyson. The window was placed in the parish church of Haslemere by the friends and neighbors of the poet who lived for many years and died at Aldworth, in the immediate vicinity. The design of the window represents Sir Galahad at the little chapel where he first receives the vision of the Holy Grail. The inscription states that the memorial is erected "in thankfulness for the music of the poet's words, and for that more excellent gift whereby, being himself schooled by love and sorrow, he had power to confirm the hearts of many in their faith in things that are not seen and their hope of immortality." The Bishop of Ripon, in an excellent sermon, spoke of Tennyson as having attained to a leadership of men seldom held by poets in their own day:

It was because he had made it more easy for men to grasp by faith things that are not seen, because he lifted men out of the atmosphere which lowers and corrupts human powers, that it was not unfitting that a memorial of his life and work should find place in a Christian church. The whole idea of his "Knights of the Round Table" was the idea of men dedicated to a life of service, redressing human wrong, "to know no scandal nor listen to it," to break down the heathen and to uphold Christ. His constant thought was life was too noble a thing to be frittered away, a gift of God too splendid to be used otherwise than with reverence.

Bishop Boyd Carpenter said they would not have welcomed that window there if it were merely to express the idea of human greatness. But he whom the window commemorated had shown that he himself shared, and had helped others to share, the spirit of Christ.

HAVING many chances at success proves often a disadvantage. General W. F. Molyneux, a fighter in the Transvaal, tells in "Campaigning in South Africa and Egypt" about going to the house of a Boer, upon the latter's invitation to become his guest on a deer hunt. The General arrived on horseback, accompanied by one servant. Dismounting, he carried into the house a bag containing what would measure a peck or so of common cartridges. The Boer looked at the bag in astonishment, and exclaimed: "You Englishmen must be very rich. Cartridges cost sixpence each here."

Rather mystified, and declaring that there are poor Englishmen, General Molyneux asked: "Where are your cartridges?"

"In this," replied the Boer, tapping his double-barrel.

"Then you don't intend to do much shooting?"

"Well, two spring-buck are as much as I can carry."

"Suppose you miss?"

"Nobody misses when a cartridge costs sixpence."

The sequel was that the Boer got his two deer, one for each cartridge, while the General fired five shots and got one.—Harper's Round Table.

"THE SPECTATOR" in The Outlook records an incident connected with Washington's picture which an American traveler found hanging over the mantel in a room in Oxford, England. As she manifested her delight in finding it there, her hostess said: "I am pleased that you like it.

We got it because we admired the face so much, but we have never been able to find out who it is. Do you know?"

WHAT is said to be the "only Christian daily newspaper in the world" is to be found in Montreal, says The Literary Digest, where it was established over half a century before the author of "In His Steps" painted the imaginary difficulties of such a journal. The Christian Commonwealth, London, thus speaks of it:

The Montreal Witness has been in existence for fifty-four years, and has now a constituency of 200,000 readers. It has from the first refused advertisements of strong drink, tobacco, theatres, and quack medicines, and thus sacrifices at least £10,000 a year. And yet it is a splendid success. The paper was originated as The Weekly Witness by a sturdy Scotch Christian and temperance advocate, Mr. John Dougall. His son, John Redpath Dougall, persuaded him to convert it into an evening halfpenny organ. This son has carried on the traditions of his father. He refuses all business alliances with Belial, and allows no space to theatre and sporting gossip. He has made foes in plenty, and attempts have been made to blow up his works with dynamite. To his sturdy character is ascribed the fact that none of the Canadian dailies issue Sunday editions.

An Interesting Biblical Discovery

BY WILLIAM COPLEY WINSLOW, PH.D., D.D.

THE discovery by the Egypt Exploration Fund of a fragment of St. John's Gospel, far antedating all our previously known texts, is of the highest importance to the Christian public. The papyrus from Behnesa in Egypt, is from one hundred to one hundred and fifty years older than any other extant text. Messrs. Grenfell and Hunt have completed their critical study of the papyrus, and a facsimile of it (with other reproductions) will soon appear in our volume for 1899, with many other very interesting documents of the first century translated.* The volume with other valuable printed matter, goes to all subscribers of but five dollars to our explorations.

The value of such a discovery is enhanced by the fact that the papyrus contains the very significant Chapter I, and the Chapter XX in part. One gives us the facts of the Word made flesh; the other, incidents relating to the Resurrection in flesh of that Word.

The papyrus of St. Matthew I, which dated 150 A.D., and the Logia ("Sayings of Christ"), and now this additional papyrus, are in book form. This is important; for it has been assumed that the form of writing in a book or codex began with the introduction of vellum. But these discoveries by the Fund show that Christian literature of the earliest times appeared in book form.

The St. Matthew and Logia fragments are in single leaves, but this papyrus of St. John is on a sheet, and is written upon both sides. Upon the first leaf is the first chapter, which is one of the outer sheets of a large quire, between which and Chapter XX were the intervening eighteen chapters. The entire book consisted of some fifty pages.

*Among the fragments will be St. Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians and the spurious Gospel to the Egyptians. There will be much of an unknown play by Menander; a treatise on metre, and on the Twenty-first Book of the Iliad; portions of a lost epic poem, of a comedy, history, orations, etc. Euripides, Plato, Xenophon, etc., will be represented. But not least, the social, municipal, legal documents translated, will bring the reader into close human touch with the people of the first and second centuries.

The text is a small uncial, and resembles that of the Codex Sinaiticus, although having its own variants. The usual contractions for words like God, Christ, Jesus, Spirit, are used, which shows that such abbreviations were familiar in the second and third centuries, and must have been introduced earlier. They tend to prove that a Christian literature existed as early as one hundred years after the birth of our Saviour.

Old Testament rites are identified by us, and inscriptions throw a flood of light upon Old Testament history. Now it is the New Testament's turn, and the papyri are richly disclosing to us the life people led in the first centuries of our era, and their own New Testament, like ours in every word. Has Biblical archaeology no mission? Is it not worthy of support?

Commemoration of Martyrs

BY MARY ANN THOMSON

For all Thy servants who laid down
Their lives for Thee, in days of yore,
We bless Thee, Saviour, who dost crown
Each martyr's brow when death is o'er.

We bless Thee for their faith, expressed
In deeds of love while here below,
And for their present blissful rest,
And all the joys they yet shall know.

Should persecution's fiery sword,
Unsheathed again, Thy servants try,
Unshrinking may we meet it, Lord,
And, if Thou wilt, as martyrs die.

And if we are not called to death
By sword or flame, for Thy dear sake,
Long as we draw this fleeting breath,
Life's ills in patience may we take;

The Faith delivered once for all
May we confess in woe or weal;
In readiness if Thou shouldst call
Our witness with our blood to seal.

So at the last may we be crowned
With those Thou shalt to glory lead;
Soldiers and servants faithful found,
Martyrs in will if not in deed.

Book Reviews and Notices

Royal Manhood. By the Rev. James I. Vance, D. D. New York and Chicago: Fleming H. Revell Company.

This is an inspiring book, a strong, forcible, eloquent presentation of the characteristics of true manhood. The writer's heart is in his work, and the possibilities and powers of Royal Manhood will be a revelation and inspiration to many. While the various chapters are prefaced by mottoes taken from the great masters of literature, yet the book has a distinctly religious character, and makes royal manhood to come from and through our Lord Jesus Christ. The author's power of "putting things" is very great, as notice these out of many instances. Speaking of gentleness, he says: "Gentleness is God's way of making the bad good, the sad glad, the wretched happy, and the wayward upright. All the destructive forces of the world—war, robbery, dynamite, gunpowder, hatred—are violent. All the constructive forces—light, heat, love, peace—are gentle. When God wanted to destroy the world He sent a deluge; when He would refresh it He sends the dew-drop or a summer shower." And again: "The great thing about man is soul. He is great in proportion to soul development. It is the grandeur of the soul that makes the grandeur of manhood. Not the biceps of forearm, nor the color in cheek, not faultless form nor lordly stature, but princely, peerless, majestic soul makes a man. * * * Christianity deifies spiritual life." In our day, when manhood so frequently seeks its fulfillment in material success, this would be a good book to place in the hands of those entering on manhood. The book is appropriately dressed in royal purple.

Reconciliation by Incarnation. The Reconciliation of God and Man by the Incarnation of the Divine Word. By D. W. Simon, D. D., Principal of the United College, Bradford. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. 1898.

In spite of many brilliant passages, and statements vitalized by an evangelic fervor, this is a book which must be read with considerable caution and discrimination. A Churchman reading this treatise feels continually the lack of restraint and guidance under which the author suffers; from a loyal adherence to the Creed he might have derived that principle of conservatism in his theological conceptions that would have saved him, perhaps, from taking several positions which are widely divergent from the Catholic Faith; e. g., the close affinity between his view of the Person of Christ and the heresy of Apollinaris, which he admits (p. 329) and defends. But the fact appears to be that the author depends much more implicitly upon the evolution theory as applied to the Incarnation and to the Person of Christ, than upon the unbroken faith of the Church. Hence we must not be surprised if his statements sometimes cause us considerable distress. Thus, on the subject of the Kenosis and the knowledge of our Lord, we feel constrained to differ from Dr. Simon at almost every point. And in regard to the significance of our Lord's death, and especially of His Death upon the cross, we are bound to say that the author minimizes and pares down the meaning of our Lord's ministry of reconciliation just where the Gospels expand and emphasize it. "It was the death of the Son of God that was a necessity—a necessity as an integral part of His work—but not any one particular mode of death; not even a death of special cruelty and violence." And he quotes St. Paul's "Obedient unto death, yea, even the death of the cross," in order to substantiate this position. Whereas, what the Apostle was emphasizing is the profound mystery of our redemption by the death of the cross. It is needless to remark again that this is what the Gospels emphasize also. Nevertheless, that our Lord offered Himself up for us a sacrifice to God to make satisfaction or amends for the dishonor done to the Name of God on account of sin, is clearly stated subsequently. By His sacrifice, our Lord "glorified God, positively, by manifesting and demonstrating, as had never been done before, the essential and infinite excellence, purity, loveliness, and goodness of God; and negatively, by laying the ax at the root of all the dishonor done to His Name by the distrust and errors and alienation of the human mind. He Himself, in every beat of His pulse, every throb of His heart, every breath He drew; He Himself, in every organ and movement of His being, in every stirring of intellect, affection, and emotion, in every inclination and purpose, in every word and deed, was a living, self-consistent, faultless demonstration that God is at once absolute holiness and perfect love; that the divine goodness and righteousness were essentially one; and that the awful fact of evil everywhere dogging the steps of sin is a necessity alike of the moral nature of God, and of the realization of the divine idea of man. God and His ways were thus vindicated, though the vindication was essentially ethical, not merely legal. . . . God and the law of the world—the law for nature, the law for man—were seen in Christ to be one; and both alike were seen to be essential goodness." (Pp. 368-9.)

Modern Problems and Christian Ethics. By W. J. Hocking, Vicar of All Saints, Tuffnell Park, N. London: Willis Gardner, Darton & Co. 2d Edition.

We are glad to have the opportunity to invite attention to this volume of sermons. Modern problems are herein dealt with in a spirit of freedom from old prejudices, and yet of loyalty to the abiding truths of the everlasting Gospel, which must gain a respectful recognition for the author's views. He sometimes takes a radical position, but he defends it stoutly and manfully. He handles living topics in a lively way, but with thoughtfulness, sympathy, and charity. We heartily commend the book.

Jack, the Young Ranchman; or A Boy's Adventures in the Rockies. By George Bird Grinnell. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company.

Mr. Grinnell is sure of a welcome for this new book of his, even though it is his first essay in the field of juvenile literature. He is one of those who have found an inspiration in the West of the early days, before the passing of the buffalo and the wild Indian. He is well known to us as the author of certain most interesting books, across whose pages run the trail of deer and moccasin, and that are instinct with the vitality of the Western prairies. The present story is not a story at all; one who knows needs not enter the realm of fiction to insure interest in a tale that has to do with life in the Rockies in the early days. Here incident and adventure crowd each other sufficiently to satisfy the most exacting boy reader, and all are but the every Between Heathenism and Christianity: Being a translation of Seneca's "De Providentia" and Plutarch's "De Sera Numinis Vindicta," together with notes, additional extracts from these writers, and two essays on Græco-Roman life in the first century after Christ. By Charles W. Super, Ph. D., LL.D. Chicago, New York, Toronto: Fleming H. Revell Company. 1899.

The aim of the author is to present a sketch of the condition of heathen society, and especially of its philosophic thought at the period when the Church went forth with its message to convert the world. There is no vain attempt to prove that the stoicism of such thinkers as Seneca and Plutarch stood upon the same level with Christianity. The author's point of view can best be appreciated from the following quotation: "Notwithstanding the many points of contact between the doctrines of the New Testament and the teachings of Seneca, no competent judge now holds that he was a Christian. The wonder is that there should ever have arisen any serious controversy on the subject. The very fact that Seneca's faith underwent no change from first to last ought to be decisive. He did not pass through the experience of conversion; he shows no vicissitudes of intellectual or moral growth; he never wavered in his faith in philosophy, and in the power of man to attain the supreme good by mere force of will. Yet Seneca is, to the Christian, the most interesting personality that heathen antiquity has produced. His philosophy and morality show, in a striking way, that a man can approach very close to the boundary of Christianity without crossing it—without even knowing what is before him. The best thought of the age clearly proves that Greek philosophy had, in a sense, prepared a few noble minds for the reception of the ethical and altruistic precepts of the Gospel; but it was in no sense the harbinger of its spiritual doctrines." (P. 55.)

The author's position appears to be sound. His essays on the two philosophers mentioned are well written and full of instruction. The translation of the two treatises selected is smooth and graceful.

White and Black under the Old Regime. By Victoria V. Clayton. With Introduction by Frederic Cook Morehouse. Milwaukee: The Young Churchman Company. London: Sampson, Low, Marston & Co. Price, $1.

Before many pages of this transcript from real life have been read, one realizes the absolute sincerity and truthfulness of the writer. The style is simple and modest, well adapted to the author's purpose, which is to record accurately the impressions and experience of one who lived in and loved the days of the "Old South." From such records as these one may learn to appreciate the nature of the problems which had to be solved. The author, like many others, thought slavery a curse to the land, but believed it to be a duty to make the best of existing conditions. The love and trust that existed between master and bond servant, in this particular homestead, are exemplified in various incidents. A sweet spirit of devotion to duty, of love for God and man, fills this unpretentious book. It will serve as one more link, by the juster judgments it helps to form, between the people of the North and of the South who know how to appreciate a life "rich in love and sweet humanity." The publishers are to be congratulated on making the book so pretty and attractive at so low a price.

Questions for the Catechism of First Communion and Perseverance. Compiled by Rev. Francis H. Stubbs, rector of St. John's church, Baltimore. Part I. The Christian Covenant. To be obtained from the author. Price, 3 cents.

The particular merit of this compilation is, that by applying the Sulpician method to the Church Catechism, the real meaning of that most admirable and most important formulary is drawn out and made clear to the catechumen. The questions and answers in this little manual are framed with simplicity, and hence it is most useful for the purpose desired; for with all due respect for the learned divines who wrote the Church Catechism, an experience of many years in teaching it to children has convinced us that simplicity and lucidity are qualities which are sometimes wanting in its answers. The Rev. Mr. Stubbs' explanatory questions and answers are upon thoroughly Catholic lines.

"What Women Can Earn." By Grace H. Dodge, Thomas Hunder, Mrs. Mary J. Lincoln, S. S. Packard, Mrs. A. M. Palmer, Major J. B. Pond, Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster, Mrs. Candace Wheeler, Mary E. Wilkins, Helen M. Winslow, and others. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company.

The sub-title indicates clearly the scope of this work. The essays are by able men and women who have shown their ability in the leading trades and professions in America. Among the contributors are Mary E. Wilkins and Margaret E. Sangster who treat of the problems of authorship; dramatic art is discussed by Mrs. Palmer, herself a theatrical manager, and the wife of one; the leading article on domestic science is by Mrs. Lincoln. There is a long list of names, distinguished in special callings, and of national fame. The book is practical and comprehensive, and will be found a useful guide for the beginner, as well as for the one struggling in mid-career.

There is nothing particularly striking in this book, and so far as we can gather, the same methods of exposition and statement may be heard in any pulpit in Christendom every Sunday. There are the usual revivalistic stories, and the indefinite invitations to accept religion that have been reiterated so often. We find nothing in the book that is not more fully and satisfactorily explained in scores of manuals for Churchmen.

Sunday School Lessons

(Uniform Scheme of Diocesan Committees.)

SUBJECT—Advent, 1898, to Trinity, 1899—

"THE LIFE OF OUR LORD

AS TOLD BY ST. LUKE."

SEVEN POINTS OF EXCELLENCE.

Demonstrated by Twenty Years of Practical Experience.

1. The Lessons are studied every week by more than 300,000 children in our Sunday-Schools, three-quarters of the total number.
2. They give a UNIFORM series of lessons for Sunday study throughout the Church.
3. The scheme is heartily endorsed by nearly all the Bishops and Diocesan S. S. Committees.
4. The periodicals published in connection with the lessons are properly graded and adapted to the various ages of the scholars.
5. The subject of the lessons, for the sake of variety and interest, is changed every six months.
6. The cost per annum is much less than any other system that gives a full year's course.
7. The helps for the teacher are carefully prepared, and aid directly in the teaching of the lessons.

The Diocesan Committees have decided on a Five Years' Definite "Course," to begin at Advent, with lessons on "The Life of Our Lord." This decision is the result of twenty years' work, and represents the ripest knowledge and best judgment of the requirements in Sunday-school instruction.

Free specimen copies, for examination, of "Picture Lessons," "The Lesson Book," "The Bible-Class Manual," and "The Teacher's Assistant," all edited by the Rev. George W. Shinn, D.D., will be mailed on application. These are the best known quarterly publications on the Diocesan Committees' lessons.

THE DISTINGUISHING CHARACTERISTIC OF THE VOCALION IS ITS EXQUISITE TONE

ORGANS BUILT on the Vocalion system are pre-eminently fitted for church services. They have a full, rich, diapason tone and a peculiar delicacy in the string registers which make them of inestimable value as an accompaniment to the human voice.

The method of tone production is radically different from all others. It gives the pitch as a fixed quality, free reeds being used for the purpose. In connection with each reed there is a pipe or chamber through which the tone passes and which determines its quality. By this means the reed is given a smooth, flute quality of tone as well as resonance and remarkable power.

The distinctive features of the Vocalion are

- Tonal superiority;
- Compactness of form in proportion to capacity.
- Variety of registration;
- And price.

We wish to call the attention of all church societies contemplating the purchase of an organ to our Style 22, a full description of which we shall be glad to furnish upon application. Send for Catalogue G.

Vocalions range in price from $275 upward.

An Obstinate Maid. Translated from the German by Mary E. Ireland. Illustrated by Ida Waugh. Philadelphia: George W. Jacobs & Co. Price, $1.25.

Very interesting to most girls will be found this story of life in a German household and in a German boarding-school. Else, the heroine, is a spoiled child who goes most reluctantly to a pension. The incidents of her life there, the gradual change effected in her ideas, are brightly and sympathetically described. Mrs. Ireland, known for her numerous translations from the German, has again been fortunate in her selection of an admirable story, one both attractive and sound in its instruction.

The Problem of Human Suffering. By Vernon C. Harrington. New York and Chicago: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, $1.

The writer of this book has contributed a valuable addition to writings of this class. The chapters consist of the Statement of the Problem, the Ground of the Solution, the Causes of Suffering, Death, and Immortality, and Compensation for Suffering. The argument is well sustained, and the comfort and helpfulness afforded suffers will do much good. It is a very useful antidote to Christian Science.

"BITS OF ORE FROM RICH MINES" is the title of an attractive series of little books from the press of Fords, Howard & Hulbert, New York. Among the late issues are "Patriotic Nuggets," including excerpts from the letters and writings of Franklin, Washington, Jefferson, Webster, Lincoln, and Beecher. One is rather surprised to see the latter's name in such a combination. He may have well deserved the place, and we are not disposed to challenge his right. These selections are gathered by John R. Howard. Another of the series is entitled, "Educational Nuggets," being paragraphs gathered by the same editor from the writings of Plato, Aristotle, Rousseau, Herbert Spencer, Harris, Butler, and Eliot. These books are bound in flexible cloth, gilt top, 40 cents each.

Opinions of the Press

The Churchman

PSYCHICAL RESEARCH.—No Christian has the slightest fear of any "results" of psychical research. On the contrary, he welcomes every contribution that adds true worth and dignity to his idea of God, the soul and the future life. But it must be remembered that "disclosures" of the ordinary type, that is, through "mediums," with their silly jargon and futile mysteriousness, can never promote the cause of true religion. Humanity has an infinitely higher ground for its belief in immortality—a ground not only different in kind, but endowed with a spiritual power (unintelligible to Spiritualism) that has been able to possess and transform the life of the whole Christian world. It is inconceivable that Spiritualism can add to our Lord's supreme gift of the power of the Resurrection.

The Church Times

USE OF INCENSE.—The fact that "Dr. — has been wearing his new violet hood on recent Sundays in — Presbyterian Church," is of such importance as to have secured for itself a separate paragraph in the British Weekly. Which makes it appear all the odder that the same journal should quote with approval some sarcastic allusions of Dr. Clifford's to the Archbishop's hearing. For once we are quite in agreement with the learned doctor in his condemnation of the paltriness of considering whether incense is to be used for fumigation, or as an accessory of worship. For we imagine that no one would care two straws for the permission to use it for the former purpose. But Dr. Clifford was somewhat less fortunate in his remark, that Our Lord, if He had come to Lambeth, would have said concerning incense, "Rubbish, rubbish, rubbish." Nowhere in the New Testament, unless it has escaped our notice, is there a single word of condemnation for the use of incense in the Temple worship. If it is "rubbish" now, it was "rubbish" in the first ages of the Church; but if there is one fact certain, it is that the earliest Christians in Jerusalem, following their Master's example, attended the highly ritualistic services of the Temple, and revered the offering of incense as a sacred symbol. The word "rubbish" was not applied, at any rate, by apostolic lips to that decent ceremony. And to put it on the lowest grounds, incense is distinctly less trivial than Dr. So-and-So's new violet hood.

The Advance

REBUKE POLYGAMY.—It is evident that the question is a much greater one than merely the seating or unseating of Mr. Roberts. The large following of this polygamist is ready to repudiate the pledges given to the nation as to the abolition of polygamy. Mr. Robert's case is a test case to discover whether Congress will sanction this treachery to their plighted word. Those most competent to judge are confident that the seating of a polygamist Roberts will be followed by a new outbreak of polygamistic debauchery in the State, and by the virtual, if not actual, repeal of the law which Mr. Roberts declares is already a dead letter. What do Christian people propose to do about it? A united and vigorous protest will brand this perfidy as it ought to be branded, and give pause to those who are only waiting for the easy-going indifference of the people, to plunge into their old abominations. The Salt Lake Ministerial Association, including in its membership the Methodist, Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian, Episcopalian, and Lutheran ministers of Salt Lake City and vicinity, asks that all the pulpits of the land take up this subject on the last Sunday in October, and that mass meetings be held in each county the following week. It is a case where a new impulse to immorality is imminent, not only in Utah, but in adjoining States, and if the smouldering flame is stamped out now it will prevent a great blaze in the future.

The Doctrine of St. John: AN ESSAY IN BIBLICAL THEOLOGY.

By WALTER LOWRIE, M. A., Mission Priest in the City Mission, Philadelphia. Crown, 8vo, pp. xx.-216, cloth, $1.50.

"This essay aims at interpreting the theology of St. John as a whole. There is an abundance of detailed exegetical studies of St. John's writings; there are also many valuable studies of the several component parts of St. John's theology; but it appears as if no one had seriously undertaken to do for St. John what has in a measure been accomplished in the case of St. Paul; to give such an exposition of his thought as shall comprise, not only all of his theology—in the sense that every topic of his theology is discussed between the covers of a single book—but his theology as a whole, as a system."—PREFACE.

The Book Sales of Mr. Peters

IT will require a drastic course of training, I fear, to open the eyes of the public to the fact that even generosity can be overdone, and I must disclaim any desire to superintend the process of securing their awakening, for it is an ungrateful task to criticise even a mistakenly generous person; and man being by nature prone to thoughtless judgments, the critic of a philanthropist who spends a million of dollars to provide tortoise shell combs for bald beggars would shortly find himself in hot water. Therefore let us discuss not the causes, but some of the results of the system which has placed upon suburban shoulders such seemingly hopeless philanthropic burdens. At Dumfries Corners the book sales of Mr. Peters, one of the vestrymen, were one of these results. There were two sales. The first, like all book sales for charity, consisted largely of the vending of ice cream and cake. The second was different; but I shall not deal with that until I have described the first.

The first had been given at Mr. Peter's house, with the cheerful consent of Mrs. Peters. The object was to raise seventy-five dollars, the sum needed to repair the roof of Mr. Peter's church. In ordinary times the congregation could have advanced the seventy-five dollars necessary to keep the rain from trickling through the roof and leaking in a steady stream upon the pew of Mrs. Bumpkin, a lady too useful in knitting sweaters for the heathen in South Africa to be ignored. But in that year of grace, 1897, there had been so many demands upon everybody, from the St. William's Hospital for Trolley Victims, from the Mistletoe Inn, a club for workmen which was in its initial stages, and most worthily appealed to the public purse, and for the University Extension Society, whose ten-cent lectures were attended by the swellest people in Dumfries Corners and their daughters—and so on—that the collections of St. George's had necessarily fallen off to such an extent that plumbers' bills were almost as much of a burden to the rector as the needs of missionaries in Borneo for dress suits and golf clubs. In this emergency, Mr. Peters whose account at his bank had been overdrawn by his check, which had paid for painting the Sunday school room pink, in order that the young religious idea might be taught to shoot under more roseate circumstances than the blue walls would permit, and so could not well offer to have the roof repaired at his own expense, suggested a book sale.

"We can get a lot of books on sale from publishers," he said, "and I haven't any doubt that Mrs. Peters will be glad to have the affair at our house. We can surely raise seventy-five dollars in this way. Besides, it will draw the ladies in the congregation together."

The offer was accepted. Mrs. Peters acquiesced. Peters and his co-workers asked favors, and got them, from friends in the publishing world. The day came. The books arrived, and the net results to the Roofing Fund of St. George's were gratifying. The vestry had asked for seventy-five dollars, and the sale actually cleared eighty-three! To be sure, Mr. Wiggins spent fifty dollars at the sale. And Mrs. Thompson spent forty-nine. And the cake table took in thirty-eight. And the ice cream was sold, thanks to the voracity of the children, for nineteen dollars. And some pictures which had been donated by Mrs. Bumpkin sold for thirty-one dollars, and the gambling cakes, with rings and gold dollars in them, cleared fifteen. Still, when it was all reckoned up, eighty-three dollars stood to the credit of the roof! In affairs of this kind, results, not expenses, are considered.

Surely the venture was a success. Although from the point of view of bringing the ladies of the congregation together—well, the less said about that the better. In any event, parts of Dumfries Corners were cooler the following summer than they had ever been before.

And then, in the natural sequence of events, the next year came. The hospital and the inn and the various other institutions of the city indorsed by prominent names, but void of resources, as usual, left the church so poor that something had to be done to repair the cellar of St. George's by outside effort, water leaking in from the street. The matter was discussed, and the amount needed was settled upon. This time St. George's needed ninety dollars. It didn't really need so much, but it was thought well to ask for more than was needed, "because then, you know, you're more likely to get it."

The Book-Cake-and-Cream Sale of the year before had been so successful that everybody said: "By all means let us have another literary afternoon at Mr. Peter's."

"All right!" said Peters calmly, when the project was suggested. "Certainly! Of course! Have anything you please at my house. Not that I am running a casino, but that I really enjoy turning my house inside out in a good cause once in a while," he added with a smile, which those about him believed to be sincere. "Only," said he, "kindly make me master of ceremonies on this occasion."

"Certainly!" replied the vestry. "If this

AN EVIDENCE OF PROSPERITY.

It is generally conceded by economists who study the commercial situation of the country, that the great arteries of railway travel are a sure indication of its condition. A depression in commercial lines means abandoned business trips and the cancellation of pleasure travel, while a healthy condition of affairs means business trips and an increase of passengers on pleasure bent.

A good evidence that a business revival has gone broadcast over this country is the "Lake Shore Limited," the star train of the Vanderbilt system, between New York and Chicago, which is daily comfortably filled. With a view to taking the best possible care of its patrons, the New York Central has arranged to increase the equipment of this train by placing an additional standard sleeper on the trains every day. To the regular traveler the appointments and comforts of this train are well known, but if you have never made a trip on it, you owe it to yourself to see and enjoy the advance made in comfort and luxury in modern railway travel. Remember the fare is no higher on this train, except between New York and Chicago, while the accommodations and service place this particular train conspicuously at the head of the list, when compared with other lines.—Albany Journal.

SINGER SEWING-MACHINES.

Every American warship carries a sewing-machine as a part of its regular equipment; besides this there are usually one or more sailors on each vessel who purchase hand machines and act as "ship's tailor," thereby earning a tidy sum by making or repairing clothing for their mates. Here, as in every other occupation using a sewing-machine, The Singer has the preference over all others because of its simplicity, its reliable construction, and its good work under all conditions. While powerful warships and great guns are good things for the Nation at some times, Singer Sewing-Machines are essential to its people all the time, whether afloat or ashore.

thing is to be in your house you ought to have everything to say about it."

"I ask for control," said Peters, "not because I am fond of power, but because experience has taught me that somebody should control affairs of this sort."

"Certainly," was the reply again, and Peters was made a committee of one, with power to run the sale in his own way, and the vestry settled down in that calm and contented frame of mind which goes with the consciousness of solvency.

Three months elapsed, and nothing was done. No cards were issued from the home of Peters announcing a sale of any kind, cake, cream, or books, and the literary afternoon seemed to have sunk into oblivion. The chairman of the Committee on Supplies, however, having gone into the cellar one morning to inspect the coal reserve, found himself obliged either to wade knee deep in water or to neglect his duty—and of course, being a sensible man, he chose the latter course. He knew that in impecunious churches willing candidates for vestry honors were rare, and he, therefore, properly saved himself for future use. Wading in water might have brought on pneumonia, and he was aware that there really isn't any reason why a man should die for a cause if there is a reasonable excuse for his living in the same behalf. But he went home angry.

"That cellar isn't repaired yet," he said to his wife. "You'd think from the quantity of water there that ours was a Baptist church instead of the Church of England."

"It's a shame!" ejaculated his wife who, having that morning finished embroidering a centrepiece for the dinner table of the missionaries in Madagascar, was full of conscious rectitude. "A perfect shame; who's to blame, dear?"

"Peters," replied the chairman. "Same old story. He makes all sorts of promises, and never carries 'em out. He thinks that just because he pays a few bills we haven't anything to say. But he'll find out his mistake, I'll call him down. I'll write him a letter he won't forget in a hurry. If he wasn't willing to attend to the matter he had no business to accept the responsibility. I'll write and tell him so."

And then the righteous wrath of the chairman of the Committee on Supplies having expended itself in this explosion at his own dinner table, that good gentleman forgot all about it, did not write the letter, and in fact never thought of the matter again until the next meeting of the vestry, when he suavely and jokingly inquired if the Committee on Leaks and Book Sales had any report to make. To his surprise, Mr. Peters responded at once.

"Yes, gentleman," he said, taking a check out of his pocket, and handing it to the treasurer. "The Committee on Leaks, Literature, and Lemonade reports that the leak is still in excellent condition, and is progressing daily, while the literature and lemonade have produced the very gratifying sum of one hundred and thirty-seven dollars and sixty-three cents, a check for which I have just handed the treasurer."

Even the rector looked surprised.

"Pretty good results eh?" said Peters. "You ask for ninety dollars, and get one hundred and thirty-seven dollars and sixty-three cents. You can spend a hundred dollars now on the leak, and make a perfect leak of it, and have a balance of thirty-seven dollars and sixty-three cents to buy books for the Hottentots, or to invest in picture books for the blind asylum library."

"Ah—Mr. Peters," said the chairman of the Committee on Supplies, "I—ah—I was not aware that you'd had the sale. I—ah—I didn't receive any notice."

"Oh, yes—we had it," said Peters, rubbing his hands together buoyantly. "We had it last night, and it went off superbly."

"I am sorry," said the chairman of the Committee on Supplies. "I should like to have been there."

"I didn't know of it myself, Mr. Peters," said the rector, "but I am glad it was so successful. Were there many present?"

"Well—no," said Peters. "Not many. Fact is, Mrs. Peters and the treasurer here and I were the only persons present, gentlemen. But the results sought were more than accomplished."

"I don't see exactly how, unless we are to regard this check as a gift," observed the chairman of the Committee on Supplies coldly.

"Well, I'll tell you how," said Peters. "The check isn't a gift at all. Last year you had a book sale at my house, and this year you voted to have another. I couldn't very well object—didn't want to, in fact. Very glad to have it. But last year we cleared up a bare eighty dollars. This year we have cleared up one hundred and thirty-seven dollars and sixty-three cents. Last year's book sale cost me one hundred and twenty-five dollars. The children who attended, aided and abetted by my own, spilled so much ice cream on my dining-room rug that Mrs. Peters was forced to send it to the cleaners. A very charming young woman whose name I shall not mention, placed a chocolate eclair upon my library sofa while she inspected a volume of Gibson's drawings. Another equally charming young woman sat down upon it, and, whatever it did to her dress, that eclair effectually ruined the covering of my sofa. Then, as you may remember, the sale of books took place in my library, and I had the pleasure of seeing, too late, one of our sweetest little saleswomen replenishing her stock from my shelves. She had sold out all the books that had been provided, and in a mad moment of enthusiasm for the cause, parted with a volume I had secured after much difficulty in London, to complete a set of some rarity, for about seven dollars less than the book had cost."

"Why did you not object?" demanded the chairman of the Committee on Supplies.

"My dear sir," said Mr. Peters, "I never object to anything my guests may do, particularly if they are charming and enthusiastic young women engaged in Church work. But I learned a lesson, and last night's book sale was the result. If the chairman of the Committee on Supplies demands it, here is a full account of receipts."

Mr. Peters handed over a memorandum which read as follows:

wear and tear on a house is required to raise eighty dollars for the heathen."

"That," said the chairman of the Finance Committee, "will not be necessary—though —," and he added this wholly jocularly, "though I don't think Mr. Peters should have charged for his time; fifty dollars is a good deal of money."

"He didn't charge for his time," murmured the treasurer. "In this statement he has paid for it!"

"Still," said he of Supplies, "the social end of it has been wiped out."

"Of course it has," retorted Mr. Peters. "And a very good thing it has been, too. Did you ever know of a Church function that did not arouse animosities among the women, Mr. Squills?"

The gentleman, in the presence of men of truth, had to admit that he never knew of such a thing.

"Then what's the matter with my book sale?" demanded Peters. "It has raised more money than last year; has cost me no more—and there won't be any social volcanoes for the vestry to sit over during the coming year."

A dead silence came over all.

"I move," said Mr. Jones, at whose house the meeting was held, "that we go into executive session. Mrs. Jones has provided some cold birds, and a—ah—salad."

Mr. Jones' motion was carried, and before the meeting finally adjourned, under the genial influence of good fellowship and pleasant converse, Mr. Peters' second book sale was voted to have been of the best quality.—JOHN KENDRICK BANGS, in Ladies' Home Journal.

Convicts' Strange Employments

A NEGRO named Cannon, who is in jail at Russellville, in the United States, was always very musical, and quite an accomplished player on the guitar, which he sorely missed when he became confined within the prison walls. He did not despair, however, but found a very ingenious way of satisfying his craving for music. He took the tin pan in which his daily meal was brought, and converted it into the head of a banjo. Then, by some means or other, he got hold of a rough piece of poplar and smoothed it with an old broken-bladed knife, and this became the neck and pegs of the instrument. Then came the difficulty of the strings; but this also was successfully surmounted, for he happened to have twelve cents belonging to him, and the officials were persuaded to buy him five strings with them, and then the banjo was complete, and was at once made to give forth music. One of the jailors says that the negro really manages to play with wonderful sweetness on this instrument so strangely made.

One of the most daring occupations in which convicts ever engaged was surely that of two men, Coyne and Brown, incarcerated in the State prison at Folsom, Cal., who actually went in for making counterfeit coin while the guests of their country, for use, of course, when such hospitality was no longer afforded them. A complete counterfeiting plant was discovered in the engine-room of the prison, and when the officers who discovered it rushed in, the convicts leaped through a window and threw their dies and crucibles into a canal. How they got them into the prison was a mystery. A large number of well-executed five-cent pieces, which would easily have passed, were found. Only nickel coins were made, presumably because silver could not be obtained, and the metal had been taken from the engines which ran through the prison grounds for the purpose of hauling rock from the quarries.

Convicts, however, may sometimes help other people besides themselves, for they possess a quantity of expert knowledge which may on occasion be of the greatest assistance. For instance, not long ago, the Victoria Penal Department was in a great fix, for the keys of the big safe which held its books, accounts, and money, had been lost, and all attempts to open it completely failed. The officials were in a quandary; but, at length, they wisely decided to cast all red-tape customs to the winds, and to adopt a very unusual plan by which the safe might be opened. A quiet, confidential message was sent to the governor of the nearest prison, which was at Pentridge, and that official was instructed to send at once the best pick-lock he had in his charge. In due course, the man arrived in charge of wardens, and was told to get inside the safe as quickly as possible. He looked at it for a moment, brought one of his instruments to bear upon it, and in a very short space of time, and without any bungling or damaging of the safe whatever, he had the door open. Then he was marched back to prison.—Tit-Bits.

THE MINISTER'S COFFEE.

Hurt Him Worse Than the Devil Did.

"I used the old-fashioned coffee from my babyhood, and, like many others, thought I could not live without it. Was in the army four years during the Rebellion, and came out very much broken in health. I was compelled to quit the active work of the ministry for more than a year at a time, suffering terribly from stomach and intestinal troubles and torpid liver, with the consequent nervous headache and prostration, lumbago, and rheumatism.

"Four years ago, being confined to bed with these troubles and ulceration of the liver, my physician positively forbade the use of coffee, and brought me some Postum Cereal Food Coffee. Since that time, myself and family have used no other coffee. All my intestinal trouble has been greatly relieved, and I no longer suffer from rheumatism, and very little from torpid liver or biliousness.

"I am fully convinced that coffee is very largely responsible for the greater part of all stomach, intestinal, and liver troubles from which people suffer. I am now 58 years old, and my health has been so much improved that I do as much work as I ever did, and with about as much comfort. I can conscientiously attribute it chiefly to the use of Postum Cereal Food Coffee. There are several friends who have had valuable experience with the leaving off of coffee and the use of Postum Food Coffee. It gives me pleasure to add my testimony to help humanity to understand that the very general cause of sickness is, I consider, largely attributable to mistakes in the use of food and drink." Rev. J. A. Flickinger, Pastor of the Lutheran Church, Ray's Hill, Pa. Grocers sell Postum Coffee, and Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., make it at Battle Creek, Mich.

Children's Hour

Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations,
That is known as the Children's hour.

Little Tad's Hallow E'en

BY BELLE V. CHISHOLM

ONE gloomy October day in the autumn of 1863, "Little Tad" came into his father's home office looking very glum. The President-father was very busy, as he always was in those sad war-days, but seeing the sad expression on his little boy's face, he smiled pleasantly, and laying down his quill, asked: "What is the matter with my little sunshine man to-day?"

"I wish I wasn't the President's boy on Fourth of Julys and Hallow E'ens," Tad grumbled without looking up.

"And what hardships has the President's boy to undergo that other people's boys escape?" asked the President with a merry twinkle in his honest eyes.

"Presidents' boys can't go out and make pumpkin-ghosts, dummy scare crows, to frighten folks, like the Ellis boys are going to do," returned Tad. "And they don't have boys to play with, you know."

"They have as good right to their sport as other boys, Tad," and with a mist dimming his eyes as he thought of little Willie, Tad's brother-playmate, who had died since they became "White House boys," he added: "If you don't care for playing with a big, long-legged fellow like me, I'll be a boy awhile again and let the President rest."

"Oh, goody, goody!" exclaimed Little Tad in great glee. "Where can we get the pumpkins to begin?"

"May be we can find something else to make a Hallow E'en out of, if the pumpkin is missing," laughed Mr. Lincoln. "Suppose we take a drive and look up our sport while we're spinning along the street now full of busy people."

"All right," Tad cried excitedly, and soon, the jolly ride over, he was following his father through the big field-hospital, where the sick and wounded were crowded, many of whom were very near death. He overheard one of the nurses telling some person that they were in sore need for delicacies for the sufferers, and that many of them would die for want of them if a new store did not soon arrive.

"Well, will we buy a big pumpkin for to-morrow night's display?" asked his father as they drove homeward.

"Yes"; returned Tad, to his father's surprise, for he had hoped the little lad's sympathies would be enlisted in the sights he had seen, and that his boy-heart would go out to the poor sufferers in a way to suggest a Hallow E'en more in keeping with the needs and heart-aches of the country. But remembering that the "little lad" was only a child, he bought the desired pumpkin, and promised to cut the ghost-features to-morrow, whenever the owner of the pumpkin should call upon him.

Tad did not forget the promise, and to his father's surprise, brought forth a whole family of smaller pumpkins of all sizes—some of which he insisted must have smiling faces, as there was to be a show, and he wanted all the variety imaginable.

For his services, the President-father was given a ticket of admission, and urged to be present, as the entertainment was an important one, and the President's presence would attract a crowd.

At the appointed time, the great man, laying aside, for the time, the heavy responsibilities pressing upon him, descended to the basement, where an expectant crowd, mostly of servants and neighborhood boy-acquaintances, awaited his coming. A few of the dignitaries who had not forgotten their own boyish pranks, were present and occupied seats of honor with the President.

There were pumpkins in all shapes and sizes—a pumpkin parade, a pumpkin dance, pumpkin actors and musicians, and the pumpkin entertainment wound up with a treat in the form of pumpkin pie—genuine cream and pumpkin pies, prepared under the superintendence of the housekeeper herself who had taken her orders direct from her mistress—Mrs. Lincoln—the first lady in the land.

The pie was delicious, well worth the price demanded, and, in connection with the admission fee, yielded a nice little sum, which, as announced by one of the honored guests present, was to be applied to procuring dainties for the sick and wounded soldiers.

"It is better than frightening people, isn't it daddy?" said Little Tad, after the meeting was over and the guests had taken their departure. "Didn't you pity those poor soldiers yesterday, daddy?"

"Indeed I did, my boy; and I am very glad that my Little Tad thinks more about their comfort than his own pleasure," said Mr. Lincoln.

"We'll go together to-morrow to see them enjoy it," Tad declared. "Mother said I could order as many dainties from the housekeeper's store as I chose. I'm going to tell the nurse to buy a barrel of oranges and to order enough lemonade and ice cream to treat all the soldiers in the hospital."

According to his arrangement, he went with his father to visit the same hospital the next morning, and with his own hand lavished the delicacies he had brought upon the grateful patients.

He said nothing about his pumpkin show, but somehow it leaked out, and the story reaching the soldiers' ears, he became quite a hero in their eyes.

Poor Little Tad! He and "daddy," the pet name applied to his father, were the best of friends, "chums" in boys' parlance, and the cruel bullet that laid his father low in death, shattered his young life, and left him only a shadow of his former bright, happy self. He lived on a few years, a sufferer, but though nothing that human love or human skill could suggest or invent for his healing was left untried, he continued to fail year by year, month by month, until at last worn out with his sorrow, he went to meet the dear father in the better home beyond the skies, where parting never comes.

"Died of a broken heart," was the verdict of the doctors who had exhausted their skill in a faithful effort to ward off the foe of all mankind—death.

Children In Japan

THE children of Japan are without doubt the most amusing and charming little beings in the whole world. Their sweetness, good temper and pretty ways are proverbial. They are never angry, cry but seldom, and seem to be ignorant of the very meaning of the words dispute, quarrel or fight, but are sweet natured, amiable and gay.

The life of a Japanese baby before it can use its feet is not a very happy one, for it practically spends the first two years of its life tied to some one's back. It's little legs are tied tightly down, and a string is passed under its arms and then around the neck of the person who carries it, thus allowing its arms and head free play. As the poor mite's only amusement is sleeping, and it has no pillow or other support, the little head hangs first on one side and then on the other, unless it falls straight back, and you wonder every time you see it why its neck does not break.

But it does not, and after sleeping thus for a time baby will suddenly wake up and begin looking around in a perfectly contented and even happy way. Of course they cry sometimes, but it is generally because they are hungry, or the string has become too tight. Considering that they have so little amusement, and are always tied up, I think Japanese babies cry less than any other babies in the world.

In Japan children are dressed in a fashion quite different from the children in America. Their clothing consists of a long robe called a kimono, which falls to their ankles. It is open in front, but is lapped across and held in place by a sash, which is folded softly and knotted around the waist. Their feet are generally bare, but a few wear a species of Japanese wooden shoes or sandals of straw. The kimonos worn by the children are made of rich silk, often of very brilliant colors, and most magnificently embroidered with strange Japanese characters and signs, which we cannot understand, or else with birds, flowers, or human figures, in various gay colors. In winter, when snow or rain is falling, the children put on, in addition, overcoats made of long pieces of straw, which are absolutely impenetrable, and at the same time very light in weight.

One very strange custom is that the hair of the children is never allowed to grow long. Their heads are shaved from infancy, although often a little tuft of hair, shaped like a crown is left on the top, or else two little patches, one on each side, which give to the wearer an exceedingly droll appearance. After they are about five or six years old, the hair of the boys is allowed to grow a little; but, because it has been shaved so often, it is wiry, and more like a brush with very stiff bristles than anything else. At about the same age, the hair of the girls is allowed to grow long, and is dressed in a most complicated manner, and ornamented with fancy pins of all colors, with birds, etc. The work of arranging the hair, indeed, is so difficult that it is done only once a week, and the Japanese girls are not allowed to use pillows like ours, lest they should disarrange the elaborate structure upon their heads, but rest their poor little necks instead upon tiny wooden blocks or benches, which prevent the head from touching the floor.—Pleasant Hours.

A LITTLE boy declared that he loved his mother "with all his strength." He was asked to explain what he meant by "with all his strength." He said, "Well, I'll tell you. You see we live on the fourth floor of this tenement; and there's no elevator, and the coal is kept down in the basement. Mother is dreadfully busy all the time, and she isn't very strong; so I see to it that the coal hod is never empty. I lug the coal up four flights of stairs all by myself. And it's a pretty big hod. It takes all my strength to get it up here. Now isn't that loving my mother with all my strength?"

FROM KENTUCKY:—In these days of theological unrest, I am only too glad to do what I can to promote such an enterprise as THE LIVING CHURCH. It behooves all defenders of the Faith to be loyal to one another.

Irritating Food
TRY
Grape-Nuts

"Chinese dogs are taught to subsist upon boiled rice with a little milk, and become so placid that they will not even bark," says Dr. Oswald.

This seems to demonstrate the fact that a largely vegetable diet inclines to quiet the nervous system, where, on the contrary, a diet composed largely of flesh is ultimately irritating, particularly to one confined mostly to mental work.

Grape-Nuts was placed on the market for the use of brain-workers. It is a concentrated nourishing food, containing in its make-up minute particles of phosphate of potash obtained from the field grains. This, when combined, as nature combines it in the human body, with albumen, makes the gray matter of the brain and the nerve centres; therefore, the use of Grape-Nuts supplies the brain-worker with steady renewal of the daily losses from his employment. Grape-Nuts do build brains, as can be demonstrated by ten days' or two weeks' use. There comes a steady, sturdy feeling of independence and strength.

The question of properly selected food is the question of the day, and the individuals who give this question their care and attention will become best fitted to make a success of life. Grocers sell Grape-Nuts food.

What to Do in Emergencies

IN case of burns, pour on sweet-oil and lime-water, or vaseline should be dropped on. Put it on instantly, to keep out the air, and then send for the doctor; but remember that to exclude the air is the first thing to be done. For a sprain, keep the injured part in water just as hot as it can be endured, and after that keep the part covered with hot flannels just as hot as they can possibly be handled and borne on the flesh. To wring out flannels in hot water, drop the flannel in a towel as it is taken out of the water—and it can be "fished" out with a large spoon or a fork—then twist the ends of the towel until the flannel is wrung dry. This is an easy way, and, strange to say, not always known.

It may be well to state here that many women will persist in cleaning gloves on their hands with benzine, or some other inflammable stuff, in a room artificially lighted or warmed. Every one should be made to realize that it is by no means necessary to bring the stuff into actual contact with flame to cause it to ignite, but that the fumes will ignite if there is a light or fire in the room. Some authorities state that it is not even safe to use benzine in a room where there is a radiator or a register, and certainly not where there is a fire of any sort, even shut up tight in a stove. Benzine should never be allowed to stand in the bottle or in anything where hot sunshine strikes upon it; for not long ago a dwelling house in a country town was burned to the ground from that cause.

Another thing that it is well to know is that cases of intense nausea may be very often relieved, when all other means fail, by putting directly upon the stomach a bit of flannel wrung out in the very coldest water possible, then, with a towel folded, cover the stomach and abdomen. The moment the towel becomes dry, change it for a fresh one, and never allow the flannel to become warm, but keep another piece ready to replace it. It is a simple remedy, and has relieved nausea that no other means reached.

A small baby pillow, three or four linen cases for it, a good-sized pair of soft crib blankets, are very useful things to keep on hand and ready for illness. The little pillow slips in under the tired, aching head at just the right angle, where a large pillow cannot be crowded or coaxed to stay, and the soft small blankets fill a thousand needs, too many to be mentioned. These are hints born of experience and the need of an emergency closet; for it is experience alone that teaches. Nor should any one forget to have at hand that friend in need—a hot water bag.—Harper's Bazar.

A MOQUETTE carpet was recently saved from ruin by the prompt action of a woman who had just tipped over the contents of a large inkstand upon its delicate surface. She rushed to the kitchen and snatched from the table a pint bowl filled with milk. This was instantly poured over the spot without stopping to take up the ink. By the time the whole was wiped up, the stain had almost disappeared. A little rubbing with soap and water to take off the grease left from the milk was all that was needed to obliterate the last vestige of the ink.—N. Y. Evening Post.

POEM—All Saints' Day. By Louisa A. Nash.....	615	HOUSEHOLD HINTS.....	628

AN ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Study of the Bible, and the Study of Social Problems

The universal interest in the critical study of the Bible and social problems creates a demand from every Churchman for authoritative information on these subjects. In order to do our part in supplying this information, we are arranging for a series of papers on the Bible and another on Social Subjects. We are endeavoring to secure the ablest writers, not only in America but in England for this work, and the names given below are an earnest of what we propose to do. All of these papers are written expressly for THE CHURCHMAN, and will be copyrighted.

The opening paper is a general introduction to the two series, written by the Rt. Rev. BROOKE FOSS WESTCOTT, D. D., D. C. L., Lord Bishop of Durham.

The Introduction to the Series on Social Subjects will be by the Rt. Rev. HENRY C. POTTER, D. D., D. C. L., Bishop of New York.

THE BIBLE

"THE VALUE OF THE CRITICAL STUDY OF THE BIBLE FOR ITS DEVOTIONAL USE, by the REV. R. L. OTTLEY, M. A., Vicar of Winterbourne Bassett, late Principal of Pusey House, Oxford, Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, and Bampton Lecturer.

"PERMANENT ELEMENTS IN THE BIBLE," by the REV. CHARLES W. E. BODY, D. D. (Ho.), D. C. L. (T. C. T.), Professor of Old Testament Literature and Interpretation, General Theological Seminary.

"SOME METHODS OF NEW TESTAMENT STUDY," by the REV. JOHN HUMPHREY BARBOUR, D. D., Professor of Literature and Interpretation of the New Testament, Berkeley Divinity School.

"THE INCARNATION AND MODERN STUDY OF THE BIBLE," by the REV. JOHN P. PETERS, D. D. (Ya.), Ph. D. (Ya.), Sc. D. (Un. of Pa.), rector of St. Michael's Church, New York City.

"THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE AS THE WORD OF GOD," by the REV. WILLIAM J. GOLD, D. D. (Rac.), Warden of the Western Theological Seminary.

Dr. Talbot, the Lord Bishop of Rochester, and other eminent scholars at home and abroad, who will write for these series, will announce their subjects later.

SOCIAL SUBJECTS

"THE CHURCH AND PUBLIC OPINION," by the REV. H. SCOTT HOLLAND, M. A. (Oxford), Canon of St. Paul's, London.

"THE KINGDOM OF GOD ON EARTH," by the VERY REV. CHARLES W. STUBBS, D. D., Dean of Ely.

"THE CHRISTIAN VIEW OF THE STATE," by the REV. HASTINGS RASHALL, M. A. (Oxford), D. D. (Durham), Fellow of New College, Oxford, and preacher at Lincoln's Inn.

"THE CHURCH AND TEMPERANCE WORK," by the REV. T. C. FRY, D. D. (Cambridge), Headmaster of Berkhamsted School.

"THE CHURCH AND PHILANTHROPY," by the REV. J. O. S. HUNTINGTON, O. H. C.

Father Huntington will also write three papers on "THE CALL TO THE MINISTRY."

Subscription, $3.50; the Clergy, $3.00. Single copies of any issue sent free upon request.

DRAWN FROM THE PORTRAIT OF CROMWELL BY SAMUEL COOPER, IN SIDNEY SUSSEX COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE, ENGLAND.

CAN you tell, offhand, in just what century Cromwell was born? Can you even tell how he died?

Reading history is delightful when it can be taken as a recreation. The Century Magazine has printed some of the greatest histories of our time, and in 1900 it will follow them with a superbly illustrated life of Oliver Cromwell, written by the Right Hon. John Morley, M.P., than whom there is no one more competent to treat Cromwell in the spirit of the end of the nineteenth century. Mr. Morley is the authorized biographer of Gladstone, and his work as a historian is well known.

The illustrations of the history will be remarkable. Besides original drawings by well-known artists, there will be valuable unpublished portraits, permission to reproduce which has been given by Her Majesty the Queen, and by the owners of some of the most famous collections in Europe.

Why not make this your serious reading for 1900, remembering, too, that it is only one of scores of good things in The Century?

Begin your subscription with November.

The November Century

in which the Cromwell history opens, is one of the most beautiful numbers of a magazine ever issued, printed in colors, the cover designed by Ernest Haskell.

It contains the first instalment of "The Biography of a Grizzly," the most important work of Ernest Seton-Thompson, the author of "Wild Animals I Have Known," strikingly illustrated by the author.

"The Autobiography of a Quack," the serial story by Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, begins in this issue, a curious psychological study, full of humor and entertainment.

Mark Twain furnishes a chapter from the autobiography which it was said recently he was working on and would hold back for a hundred years.

Captain Joshua Slocum's "Sailing Alone Around the World" is one of the hits of the magazine year. In the November Century Captain Slocum describes his call at Juan Fernandez and his visit with the family of Robert Louis Stevenson at Samoa.

Governor Theodore Roosevelt contributes an article on "Military Preparedness and Unpreparedness," and President Eliot of Harvard writes of "The Forgotten Millions." There are three unusually strong stories (all of them illustrated), and a most entertaining article, illustrated, on "Wagner from Behind the Scenes," describing "scenery that acts."

Buy it on any news-stand (price 35 cents), or begin a year's subscription with this November number, remitting $4.00 to the publishers, THE CENTURY CO., Union Square, New York.

Notes of the World's Progress

HAVING VOTED AN APPROPRIATION to cover expenses of the South African campaign, Parliament has been prorogued, and the English War Office will proceed to clear the atmosphere as soon as possible. Troops are reaching the scene of the trouble in such numbers that resistance to British authority can be crushed by sheer weight. Loss of life on both sides has been heavy, particularly of British officers, there being in the English army an unwritten law which bars leaders from taking the same precautions for their safety which are afforded the rank and file. Nothing has transpired to lead to the belief that there will be any outside interference in the struggle, neither will the opportunity be seized upon as favorable for creating entanglements in the Far East which would involve Great Britain. The activity in military and naval circles, however, indicates an intention on the part of England to be prepared for any emergency.

FOLLOWING THE LEAD OF MORE advanced countries, German manufacturers have, within the past year, paid more attention to industrial combination. There now exist what in the United States would be called trusts, controlling the manufacture of iron, wire goods, woolen goods, textiles, wall paper, etc. With few exceptions, combinations have been effected with little opposition, and dividends have been increased. There exists a contest between producers and consumers, the former to keep up the tariff and increase it if possible, and the latter to bring about a reduction.

ACCORDING TO LATEST MAIL ADVICES, China is subject to inner as well as outer demolition, having in progress three distinct and well developed rebellions at the present time. In Chekiang the disturbance is owing to religious differences. The punishment of the leader, Ying, recently captured, is asked by Church authorities, and his release is asked by the people. The Szechuan rebels are virtually in control in several districts, and the Manchurian rebels are making things lively along the great wall, 250 miles from Tientsin, robbing natives and looting small towns. Their proximity to Peking makes their depredations particularly dangerous, as showing the weakness of the government. Serious differences between the commanding officers threaten at any time to divide the imperial army into opposing factions.

FROM ARTICLES IN SCIENTIFIC AND mechanical journals, it may be questioned if wonderful results expected from liquid air will ever be attained. The contention of Prof. Trigler that he had discovered a means of liquifying air which, by the economy of production, would make the use of the frigid fluid for many purposes, commercially possible and profitable, is disputed by scientific men. While there is no question as to the wonderful properties of liquid air, its commercial application involves problems which have not yet been solved. It may be that some time in the future one gallon of liquid air per day, delivered at one's home, will furnish heat, light, and refrigeration, for twenty-four hours, but until the matter has passed the experimental stage, and demonstration taken the place of assertion, the public will continue to pay coal, gas, and ice bills.

BECAUSE OF ITS MAGNITUDE, CONSIDERABLE interest attaches to the disposition of the fortune left by the late Cornelius Vanderbilt. Speculation as to succession to the bulk of the property is set at rest by the official announcement that Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, the second son, a young man who but recently attained his majority, will be responsible for its direction. Because of his marriage, bitterly opposed by his parents, and which resulted in alienating father and son, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., is, figuratively speaking, cut off, although the million and a half he will receive would to any one but a multi-millionaire be considered a magnificent fortune. To prevent a contest and avoid hard feeling, Alfred Gwynne, in a burst of brotherly feeling, presents the disinherited eldest son with six millions, which amount, with what he already possesses, will give him a pretty fair start and nourish his independent spirit. There are numerous instances of the purchase of titled husbands, but in the present case Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., gave up thirty-five millions rather than his bride, nor does the public think less of him for doing so.

ADMIRAL DEWEY HAS HUNG UP HIS hat, and taken possession of the home in Washington presented to him by 43,000 admiring American friends. When first the project of the presentation was broached, the Admiral stated he would decline the gift were it from a few, but being in the nature of a tribute, he could do nothing but accept with thanks. The home is admirably located, and cost, furnished, about $50,000. An added reason for acceptance of the gift may be found in the announcement of the betrothal of Admiral Dewey to the widow of the late General Hazen. The chain-letter scheme by which an enthusiast proposed to raise a fund for a home for Rear-Admiral Schley, will likely be supplanted by the the Women's League, which has announced its intentions. At first the Rear-Admiral demurred, then signified his willingness to accept the gift of a home if the ladies wished to present it.

THE MAJORITY OF THE READING public had probably lost sight of the fact that the United States has a claim against Russia, but attention is again drawn to the matter by the announcement that the case will be submitted to arbitration, on lines similar to that of the Venezuelan boundary dispute. Something over eight years ago Russian authorities seized off the coast of Siberia three American sailing vessels, and the hardships which the crews were obliged to endure formed the basis of a claim for damages in the sum of $150,000. The ships were seized within seven miles from the Asiatic coast, and the American contention is that they were on the high seas, outside Russian jurisdiction. The fact that Russia has agreed to arbitration, emphasizes the strong friendship between the two countries, although the claim may be small in comparison with the expense of a heavy-weight arbitration tribunal.

HEALTH OFFICERS OF SEVERAL large cities are confronted with a serious problem. Nearly every well regulated community is governed by laws, precautionary measures, by which the public health is guarded against the ravages of contagion and disease. In the enforcement of these laws, which are for the common good, the authorities naturally look to the public to second their efforts, and if this assistance be not forthcoming, the public health is menaced. Practicing physicians are required promptly to report any case of infectious or contagious disease, which enables the authorities to take precautionary measures. Some contagious cases reported in the daily press which are causing trouble, are the result of treatment by Christian Science and divine healing, and are not made known to the authorities as required by State Boards of Health. The right of a patient to be treated by methods in accord with his belief is not questioned, unless such so-called treatment exposes others to contagion.

AN ECHO OF THE GREAT RAILROAD strike of 1894 was produced last week in Illinois, being a decision by the Superior court in one of the resulting blacklist cases. The decision is one of great importance, as defining the relation of employer and employee. The plaintiff, who was in the employ of the Northwestern road prior to the strike, alleged that owing to his participation he had been blacklisted, and since then had been unable to secure employment, hence the suit for damages. The defendant denied the existence of a blacklist, showed that several former strikers were employed, and asserted the right to look into the records of men before employing them. A strike not being illegal, there is no prejudice against workmen who keep within the bounds of the law, but such strikers as resort to force, destruction of property, and lawlessness, cannot be considered as desirable employees. The court held that the plaintiff had no grievance.

The Ninth Missionary Council

THE 21st Sunday after Trinity, Oct. 22nd, was "Missionary Sunday" in St. Louis, and a notable day in the Church life of the city. Sermons on missions were delivered before crowded congregations in many of the churches. Bishop Hall preached at the cathedral; Bishop Nelson, at All Saints'; Bishop Scarborough, at St. Andrew's; Bishop Gray, at Trinity; Bishop Dudley, at St. Peter's; Bishop Talbot, at St. George's; Bishop Millsbaugh, at St. James; Bishop Brown, at Grace. In the afternoon an enthusiastic mass meeting of the Sunday school children was held in Music Hall, more than 3,000 persons thronging the building and crowding its utmost capacity. It was impressive and inspiring to see the great hall, brilliant with banners and bright with the eager faces of the children. Interesting and forceful addresses were made by the Bishop of Missouri and the Rev. J. Addison Ingle, of our China mission.

The Rev. H. L. Duhring said that "we have in round numbers 6,000 Sunday schools in this country, with 60,000 teachers and 600,000 scholars. Two years ago the Sunday schools' Lenten offering for missions was $81,000. Last year it was $88,000. Next year we hope for $100,000." The closing address was by Bishop Hare who told of mission work among the Indians.

In the evening the cathedral was crowded in every nook and corner, at a missionary service, the noble Gothic edifice re-echoing with the Church's grand missionary hymns. Eloquent addresses were made by the Rev. Dr. Henry C. Swentzel, of St. Luke's, Brooklyn, L. I., the Rev. Dr. J. J. Faude, of Minneapolis, and Bishop Gailor.

Every one felt as this Lord's Day closed, that the week of the Missionary Council had commenced with a Sunday of most uplifting worship and stirring exhortation.

THE OPENING SERVICE

The attendance at the council was unusually large, and it was one of the most successful and helpful missionary gatherings ever held by the American Church. Between 200 and 300 delegates were in the city in time for the Celebration, at 10:30 A. M., Tuesday, Oct. 24th, in the cathedral. The Bishop of Minnesota was celebrant, the Bishop of Albany epistoler, and the Bishop of Missouri gospeler. The sermon, by the Bishop of Kentucky, was from Psalm li: 12 and 13. It was a profound and earnest appeal for a deeper spiritual life among all Church people.

Nothing but this deepened religious life can restore to us our early missionary vigor. In appealing simply for more money and for more men for missionary work, we are beginning at the wrong end. We are searching for fruit where we ought to be searching for the condition of the roots. Missionary zeal, flaming, enduring, overwhelming, can be the product of but one power, the Holy Spirit. It must spring from penitent faith, mighty as a giant for the pulling down of strongholds, because born of the Holy Spirit. This is a message of comfort and hope. We must admit that we have not in any adequate degree arisen to our missionary duty. Our achievements are considered worthy of but scant mention in the latest reviews of world-wide missionary activities. We are proportionately greater in wealth than any body of American Christians, and equal in intelligence to any, but in giving, and in work for missions, we are pitifully unworthy of our apostolic lineage and responsibilities.

Though no tinge of pessimism should darken our thoughts, it is yet remarkable to note how the Church grew in the early days, 80 years ago, when the first missionary enthusiasm began. In 1823, when the total receipts for missions were but $5,723.00, we had already sent a missionary to West Africa, though he was requested to raise the money to build his own school. The growing sense of duty resulted in 1835 in a new departure, and the Church was declared to be a missionary society. Within three years afterwards, the number of domestic missionaries had risen from 36 to 60, and the number of missions from 39 to 114, while we were carrying on foreign work in Greece, Syria, Crete, Persia, China, and West Africa, and the receipts for the first three years were $157,000. Great has been the increase during these 65 years; at the last General Convention we had 4,842 clergy, and 688,000 communicants, yet these figures would be much larger had not our missionary zeal been so largely quenched. Last year, out of 6,724 parishes and missions, only 3,722 gave anything to general missions. This lack is not due to insufficient machinery, or lack of organization, but to the need of fire—the fire of personal devotion. We must not hesitate to realize the laxity of the present day in church attendance and in family prayers, the prevalence of divorce, the unreadiness of parents to lead their sons towards the holy ministry, so that we now have only one clergyman to 141 communicants, instead of one to 53 as in 1838. We must contrast all these sad features of our modern life with the stricter and more reverent customs that obtained two generations ago. We must consider the flimsiness of many popular excuses for these conditions, dealing severely with such as a recent and widely advertised experiment in securing $1,000 and a rectory parishes for applying clergy, and with those who suppose that "sacerdotalism" is responsible for our diminished proportion of candidates for Holy Orders.

The concluding portion of this truly superb sermon was a stirring appeal to the clergy to follow the Apostolic example of those who said: "We cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard," concerning our Blessed Lord and Saviour.

There were thirty-five bishops in the procession. A large number of persons, fully 500, received at the Celebration.

ORGANIZATION

At 3:30 P. M., the council met in St. Peter's church. Bishop Whipple, as senior bishop, presided, and the Rev. Dr. Henry Anstice was re-elected secretary. Bishop Tuttle welcomed the delegates, assuring them of the boundless hospitality of their St. Louis hosts:

"If there be anything lacking in the cheer or the warmth, I beg you to put it to the account of the awkwardness of our manners, and not the promptings of our hearts."

Bishop Satterlee, of Washington, responded to Bishop Tuttle's happy address. The routine reports of the various boards, all of which were printed, were submitted to the proper committees. A message of greeting was sent, on motion of Bishop Hall, of Vermont, to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, which will hold its fourth golden jubilee from June, 1900 to June, 1901. A resolution was also adopted, striking all subjects from the programme which were not on strictly missionary subjects.

THE BOARD OF MANAGERS REPORT

Was read. It was encouraging.

Total receipts for the fiscal year ending Aug. 31, 1899, including "specials," were $866,858.59. Of this sum, $388,092.25 were in contributions, and $114,598.95 in legacies. The total sum available for appropriations was $502,691.30. The total contributions show an increase of more than $30,000 over those of two years ago, though a decrease of $14,488.39, as compared with last year's contributions. The number of parishes and missions contributing was 3,746, being 24 more than last year, and more than ever before; and the total contributions are more than in any previous year save last year. The total amount appropriated in May and June, 1899, for the year was $525,000.

OUR INCREASED MISSIONARY RESPONSIBILITIES—THE PHILIPPINES.

One of the most interesting features of the afternoon was the discussion on the Philippines, opened by Bishop Doane, of Albany, who came out squarely in support of the policy of the administration in taking the Philippines under national protection.

I think of the question as the Philippine quadrilateral. To my mind, there were but four unalterable alternatives. We were obliged either to leave the islands under Spanish control, for a renewal of hostilities; we were obliged to leave them to destroy themselves in internecine strife; we could have left them to be fought over by European nations; or we could have assumed the position of protectors of the islands. I see no other conclusion, and the fourth alternative was the only one which ought to have been taken. We did take it, and this great trust must be administered. Our prayers now should be for wisdom and counsel rather than even for peace.

The Bishop read a letter which had been received from a Filipino, in which the statement was made that many of the Filipinos, estranged from the established Church of the island, had already come into the Episcopal Church, and found it all that they desired. If an hundredth part of the stories which are current concerning the lamentable results of Roman Catholic religion in the Philippines is true, their need of a pure Catholicism is great. We have the same stories from Mexico and Brazil, and all countries under the undisputed sway of Rome.

The Bishop made an eloquent plea for missionary equipment in the Philippines. What was necessary immediately, was a church building in Manila, a parish building; and three priests, at least; a school for boys and a school for girls, and a small band of earnest women.

The work of Chaplain Pierce at Manila was most highly commended by the Bishop. He is faithful, careful, indefatigable. He has not only fulfilled his expected duty as an army chaplain, but has organized a Church mission in Manila, where he has celebrated the weekly Holy Eucharist since Christmas Day, 1898.

The next speaker was Sergt. John H. Peyton who had just returned from a three months' tour in the Philippines, visiting Manila and many points in five of the larger islands.

Here are three great tribes, and 60 languages and dialects. The real conqueror of the islands has been the Roman Catholic hierarchy. The Archbishop of Manila was the real governor general of the archipelago. For 300 years the people have been gradually Romanized.

Speaking of the Filipinos, Sergt. Peyton told of the devotion of the people to the Roman Catholic Church. The churches were always crowded with the natives, even where the conditions were unfavorable, where the army occupied the villages. There are practically no seats in the churches, and the service lasts from one to one and a half hours. I never saw one person leave the church during service. I never saw one speak to another during the service. I believe they are, in their ignorance, in their blindness, as deeply religious as it is possible for a simple, childlike people to be. They have been terribly oppressed by the Church, but with all this oppression there was no deviation from their religion. There is no sectarianism. These people have every one been taught the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments and the catechism. They have every one in infancy been baptized into the Body of Christ. I do not know that on the earth there is a people so cleanly, so moral, so temperate and so devout as they are. What they need, in my opinion, is the Bible to remove from them the errors under which they are struggling. In a market, one day, as I stood there, 70 Bibles were sold in three hours. The people are bright—not of any great depth of mind, I should judge—but are apt to learn.

Intense interest was manifested by the council as Sergt. Peyton ably and eloquently spoke, and many questions were asked him at the close of his address, especially concerning a statement that had been attributed to him that the army in the Philippines was corrupt and immoral. He said that he had been incorrectly quoted, and that some of the noblest men he had ever known were in the army. He deplored, however, the many temptations of army life in a distant land, and most earnestly urged the sending of more clergymen to look after the spiritual welfare of the soldiers. The omission by Congress to provide sufficient chaplains for the new regiments was declared to have been an unintentional oversight. There are now only five chaplains to 40,000 men at present in the islands.

PUERTO RICO.

The evening session was of absorbing interest, St. Peter's spacious church being filled by an eager congregation. Cuba and Puerto Rico were the subjects discussed. Several papers were read by missionaries who had visited or resided in these islands, and after each paper there was a short discussion. The result of these discussions was the conclusion that the Church should send a bishop to Puerto Rico, and a committee was appointed to bring in a resolution to this effect. The committee comprises Bishop M. N. Gilbert, Rev. Dr. Henry W. Nelson, and Mr. W. H. Boniface.

The Rev. Geo. B. Pratt, our missionary at San Juan, Puerto Rico, the appointed writer on this branch of the topic, was unable to attend the council. His admirable paper was therefore read by one of the secretaries.

After speaking of the recent hurricane and its effects, he said:

The missionary field remains the same as before wind and flood. Human souls are still there. If anything, there is a riper harvest to reap, for, as the people have been deprived of their sustenance, they are more in condition to receive the glad and recuperative tidings of our ever prolific Gospel of the centuries. Missionaries in the true spirit of Christ are the more urgently called. There is not a hamlet of slim houses or tumble-down shacks but what the largest room, or spot under a tree, would be crowded and filled with eager and hungry listeners. Curiosity at first would cut some figure, but the result would be as with the school children in the Deserted Village: Those who came to scoff would remain to pray. There would be realized untold conversions, repentances, and cultures of character. An awakening and stirring-up are needed; first, because there are scores of callous, indifferent, and ignorant souls. They have lost religion and its blessed teachings and results.

The present condition of Church work in Puerto Rico is centred at two points—San Juan and Ponce. There is not a single spot outside of these two places, upon an island 90 by 40 miles, where the Episcopal Church missions have been planted. For eight months, a good congregation, with a communicant list of 40 members, has assembled each Lord's Day at San Juan, under the organized name of the church of St. John the Baptist, with due authority and sanction of the Bishop of Chicago, under whose pastoral care Puerto Rico is now assigned and administered. Of the prominent religious bodies of the States, this is, at the present writing, the only organization upon distinct Church lines, except the Roman Catholics in San Juan proper. The congregation consists of the military, white citizens, and a few colored people of the city. There have been many changes in the composition of the congregation since it first assembled; but progress, not decay, is noted everywhere.

In Ponce, the hurricane nearly demolished our church, which is a building holding 200 persons. We have weekly Holy Eucharist, and 50 communicants. The Sunday morning congregations are about 80, and in the evening, about 200. We need at once a new church, with a new site, at Ponce, and two men who can journey from town to town as missionaries. Traveling rates are very high. We need mission schools at San Juan and Ponce. Only one tenth of the people can read and write. We need more hospital work. A prominent army officer lately said of St. Luke's Hospital: "It is the best gift the Episcopal Church has made to Puerto Rico."

Chaplain Henry A. Brown, of the "Rough Riders," was the speaker about Puerto Rico, and in a very entertaining and forcible address, he described its attractiveness, the great needs and opportunities, and the wonderful future which will surely come to this fertile and beautiful island.

He spoke of Puerto Rico physically, socially, and spiritually, extolling the scenery, the comfortable and salubrious climate, the wonderful crops of every tropical and temperate growth, with harvests every month. Of the 1,000,000 population, some 550,000 are pure Spanish, 400,000 are a mixture of Spanish and native Indians, and 50,000 are of various classes, including a few negroes. The ruling classes are highly educated, having studied in the United States or Europe. They are refined, courteous. The majority of the islanders are poor, discouraged, oppressed, half starved. Their illiteracy is due to Spanish rule, not to their lack of natural intelligence. They are kind, generous, and warm-hearted, and not naturally lazy, for a tropical climate. They are eager for American customs. Spiritually, the conditions are not so encouraging. A well-known Jesuit priest has said that they are (Roman) "Catholic without religion." The Romanists of the United States are ashamed of the failure of Rome in Puerto Rico, after 400 years' experiment. They are lax in morals, and care nothing for religion, as they understand religion. We are the ones who can help them. Our opportunity is here and now. We have a better chance in Puerto Rico than even in Cuba.

Many volunteer speakers followed Chaplain Brown, including Mr. Parker, Dr. Nelson, Bishop Gilbert, Bishop Whipple, Dr. Blanchard, and Mr. Boniface, and others, all emphasizing the need of the hour, and many suggesting that a bishop be at once sent to Puerto Rico. One speaker said that—

Such a bishop would also have charge of the splendid congregations of Church people in Vera Cruz, where there are 3,000 communicants, one parish alone having 1,500 communicants. These parishes are now cared for by the nearest Anglican bishop, at great cost of effort, and they have been cared for in this way for many years.

IN CUBA

A powerful description of the conditions and needs was read by the Rev. W. Dudley Powers, D. D., of Havana. He said in part:

We can establish churches in the small towns at small cost, and do excellent and gratifying work. But we can not stop here. We need to be established in the centre of Cuban life—Havana. In this city our influence must be felt, and here we should fix our central home, from which should radiate our missionary enterprises and force. And here we find other conditions which make our purpose more difficult of execution. Havana is a large city. The normal value of property there is high. It is compactly built. There is little unused ground, and little desirable property is on the market. If we buy we must expect to pay quite as large a price as we would in cities of the same size in the United States, perhaps more. There is nothing cheap in Havana. An upper room, or a small, cheap chapel on a distant or unattractive street, will never invite or persuade the Cuban people. With them, things stand for things. The upper room is the cheap abode of a little society, and they wish nothing of that kind. It may be that in the course of years, with our rented halls and upper rooms, we could win our way to their hearts and minds, but long before we shall have won many, history will have repeated itself, and the other denominations—full of faith and generosity and sacrifice—will have pre-empted the territory and secured the affection of the masses of the people, leaving us in the consciousness of duty's demand, struggling to maintain a little work to save our reputation and to protect our conceit. Already the Baptists have spent $65,000 for their Church in Havana, and the Methodists have taken a $30,000 option on a lot for theirs. We are waiting. But we, too, must buy, and establish ourselves before these people. There must be in Havana something which will stand for the dignity, strength, worth, and intention of this Church. This should be a church or an orphanage, with its attached chapel, or, better still, both.

The least desirable representatives of our civilization are crowding into Cuba. They bear with them the evils of our American society. Even those high in authority, from whom we rightfully expect much, are not always Christian aids. I note the meeting of the Jockey Club, ordered for and held last Sunday, and its president is an American general, and among its vice-presidents are other American generals.

In order to make sure of the foregoing statements in regard to the meeting of the Jockey Club, Dr. Powers cabled to Havana and asked for the facts. He received an answer to the effect that, on account of rain, the meeting had been postponed until the next Sunday.

Dr. Powers was followed by the Bishop of Pennsylvania, in an address glowing with earnestness and enthusiasm:

God gave the United States the opportunity to come to the civil and political relief of Cuba. Not less has God given to the Church the opportunity to come to the religious relief of Cuba. Twenty-five years ago, Bishop Whipple was asked by spiritually minded men in Havana who were weary of Rome, who longed for a pure religion, if he would not establish a mission in Cuba. Bishop Whipple, at one time, confirmed 116 in this mission, which thus was started from within Cuba, and there soon were in Havana six stations, with 325 confirmed persons. He begged for help from our Foreign Missionary Committee, and in 1884 there was an appropriation of $1,000 a year voted for this Cuban work. Prominent Cubans said there were at that time 1,500,000 persons waiting and longing for the Church in Cuba. But we had no money. We missed that glorious opportunity. Bishop Young, of Florida, took hold of this work, but grew disheartened at the apathy he met in the United States, concerning this unprecedented opportunity. One man and his lay-helper stood by the work, however, for a while, in spite of lagging support, until finally the Baptists made him a cash proposition. They bought a $68,000 theatre, holding 1,000 people, and, disheartened by the Church's coldness and indifference, he became a Baptist, and took most of his people with him. These Cubans much prefer our Church. They like our liturgy. They long for our Prayer Book. They don't like a bald Protestantism. The question now is for us to decide whether we will also lose this second great opportunity as we lost the first one. It is a tremendous responsibility. Dare we ignore it?

Bishop Whipple followed, with some intensely interesting personal reminiscences of that early Cuban work.

An adjournment was then taken until the next morning at 9 A. M.

The second day of the council opened Oct. 25th with Morning Prayer and Litany, read by the Rev. Wm. Short, rector of St. Peter's, assisted by the Rev. Dr. Hart. At the close of this service a number of resolutions were introduced, discussed, and adopted. The attendance throughout the entire day and evening was very large, every one taking the keenest interest in the papers and addresses. It was universally declared to be a day of the ablest and most brilliant missionary discussion ever held by the American Church.

HOW TO INCREASE INTEREST IN THE LENTEN OFFERING

A paper by Bishop Morris, of Oregon, read by the Rev. Mr. Potwine, one of the Oregon clergymen, opened the discussion:

An interesting comparison was made between the present contributions of the children and those of more than 20 years ago. If that worthy layman, Mr. John Marston, of Philadelphia, who devised this plan concerning the children, had been told that in 21 years from that time it would have been put into operation in every diocese of the country, bringing in more than $80,000 in one year for our missionary treasury, he would have received the prophecy with the utmost incredulity. Yet such is the case. In 1878 there were 300 contributing Sunday schools; in 1899 there are 3,118. The placing of a missionary box in the house of every family connected with the Church was strongly advocated.

An address by the Rev. Dr. H. L. Duhring, of Philadelphia:

The Lenten Offering was not what it should be, and for the reason stated by the Bishop of Oregon, lamentable ignorance of the mission work of the Church on the part of both clergy and people. He urged, therefore, that the greatest effort possible be put forth to keep the people thoroughly informed as to all progress, both in the home and in the foreign field.

Many volunteer speakers took the floor at the close of these spirited addresses. Bishop Talbot, of Central Pennsylvania, spoke of the fact that in England a mite-box was to be seen in the home of every Churchman all the year round:

An earnest address was made by Bishop Gilbert, of Minnesota. His diocese stands fifth in rank of missionary contributions of all the dioceses in the country.

Bishop Gilbert also offered a resolution, which was adopted, expressing the gratification of the council over the large gift which had this year been made by the children. But before the resolution was voted upon, Bishop Tuttle said there was a danger lurking in the resolution; viz: That it might tend to put the men of the Church asleep. He further said that clergymen were spiritual "drummers," and that it was their business to push the Lenten Offering upon the adult membership as well as upon the children. He then seconded the motion, and it was unanimously adopted.

Bishop Whipple was asked to state some of the working methods of the great English missionary societies, and he replied in a very impressive address, replete with incident and suggestion.

He spoke of the mammoth meeting at the centenary of the C. M. S., when Exeter Hall was thronged to the doors three times in one day, one of the meetings being for men only, and attended by 5,000 men, while Albert Hall and St. James' Hall were both crowded at the same time by the overflow, and in every large town in England, enthusiastic missionary meetings were held at the same hours. This system reaches every home, and the entire membership is enthusiastic on the subject of missions; the Church Missionary Society, and the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, have representatives in every diocese, many of whom are working without salary. The Bishop spoke of addressing a company of 500 laboring men who were deeply interested in missions. He also affirmed it as his conviction that the secret of all this revival in missionary zeal was due to the fact that the Anglican Church was depending solely upon the Holy Spirit for guidance.

Bishop Dudley, of Kentucky, said:

The way to awaken permanent interest in the Lenten offering, is to cultivate the spiritual life of the children. He declared that he did not indorse the sentiment expressed by a prominent Eastern clergyman, that the Sunday school was an unmixed evil. He said that what the Sunday schools of the Church needed was a directing power, and that this should be the rector. True, it might require some sacrifice, but it was worth all the sacrifice it would cost.

Bishop Tuttle stated

That the diocese of Montana led the Church in the matter of Lenten offerings, having given $1,070, which was the highest percentage; the Oregon diocese stood next. He also said that the diocese of Pennsylvania gave the largest amount, $17,000, and the diocese of New York stood next, with $8,000.

The Rev. Dr. George H. McKnight, of Elmira, N. Y.,

Introduced a resolution which was passed, indorsing the attitude of Dr. Hoffman, dean of the theological seminary in New York, in providing missionary instruction for candidates for Holy Orders.

At noon, prayers were offered for missions, and the All Saints' Day collect was said. Just before the noon hour, while the council stood, the names of the members of the Board of Managers who had entered Paradise during the year were read.

THE CHURCH IN CHINA

The next address on the programme was by the Rev. Dr. Edward Abbott, and was a concise and succinct description of the Church's missionary work in China.

Dr. Abbott could not overestimate the splendid work now being done by our China mission. He said there was union of effort, and very little of a discouraging character. He had visited every bit of mission property belonging to the Church mission there, and was gratified to see the excellent business tact that had been exercised in planting of missions. He was also impressed with the representative character of the work. Much credit was due Bishop Graves for his marked leadership. The Chinese laundrymen whom you see here are no more representatives of the best people in the north of China, then the Eskimo is representative of the Canadian. The Chinese laundryman is a Cantonese. He cannot understand the language of the Chinese in the other parts of the country, and they cannot understand him. The chief difficulties in the work are due to the uncertain political conditions in China; the Emperor favors progress, but the Empress Dowager will have none of it. On the whole, however, Dr. Abbott was much encouraged with the outlook. "It is hard rowing up a strong current, but perfectly plain sailing."

THE MISSIONARY POWER OF THE PRAYER BOOK

The afternoon session opened with devotional exercises conducted by Bishop Whipple. A vote of thanks was tendered George C. Thomas, treasurer of the Foreign and Domestic Board, for having closed the year without any deficit, the first time in years.

The Rev. Dr. Samuel Hart, secretary of the House of Bishops, read a paper on the above topic. He took the position that its influence along this line could scarcely be overestimated, gave many reasons for his position, and illustrated it in many ways.

The Rev. Dr. George Hodges urged a higher appreciation of the Prayer Book on the part of the people, and greater loyalty to it on the part of the clergy.

The Rev. Dr. John Wright said that in his opinion it stood next to the Bible itself, and was its best interpreter.

Testimonies from personal experiences, illustrating its spiritual power, were given by the Bishop of Kansas, the Bishop of Southern Florida, the Rev. Dr. Gray, and Bishop Whipple.

At this juncture Bishop Whipple read a telegram, which stated that the Rt. Rev. Henry Adams Neeley, Bishop of Maine, was rapidly sinking, and was liable to pass away any moment. At the close of the reading, Bishop Whipple read the Commendatory Prayer and others from the Visitation Office. A telegram of affectionate regard was ordered sent to the Bishop.

THE PARTITION OF CHINA—WHAT WILL BE THE EFFECT ON CHRISTIAN MISSIONS?

This topic was of the utmost interest, and both the papers were masterly in their analysis of the remarkable and critical situation in China.

Dr. Bunn's paper was read by Bishop Gilbert, and the council listened with rapt attention.

It opened with brief history of the operations in China up to the present time by the different European nations. At present the outlook seemed to forebode the near partition of the great Eastern Empire, with Russia, Great Britain, Germany, and France playing the leading roles. The cause of missions would suffer greatly in such case. With the disintegration of the empire would perish the hope of its ever acquiring a national religion. Furthermore, it was extremely doubtful whether the partition could come about without a destructive war, in which China and someone of the European Powers would be allied against a combination of European Powers. Such a conflict would result in the immediate death of the missionary movement in China.

Dr. Bunn advocated the "open-door" policy for China, declaring that the cause of religion would suffer beyond repair by the partition of the country's vast territory among the rival Powers of Europe. It was the duty of the United States, he maintained, to insist upon China's remaining intact, and the continuance and improvement of the "open-door" policy. The writer insisted that the great question confronting this country to day was not the Philippine question, but the one dealing with the future of China. The commercial interest which this country has in the empire should awaken the officials to the fact that it is incumbent upon them to discourage any movement looking to the partition of the great Mongolian Empire.

The Rev. J. Addison Ingle, of the China mission, was the next speaker.

He also declared against the partition of China. He argued that France's motive in wanting to acquire portions of the empire was more political than commercial; so was Russia's; the motives of Great Britain, Germany, and Japan were purely commercial. He emphatically declared that if these five countries were allowed to carry out their ideas in regard to the dividing of China, the cause of missions would suffer irreparably. France's possessions would immediately fall under the Roman Catholic influence, to the exclusion of all other religious bodies. The provinces of Japan and Russia would fare little better, from a religious standpoint. The English and German possessions would alone be the gainers, in so far as missionary work went.

An informal discussion of the Chinese question called forth remarks from several bishops and clergymen. All declared against the partition of the empire.

MISSIONARY EDUCATION

Was the next theme presented to the council, and both of the leading papers showed the great care and thorough system with which this vast and vital subject of mission work is being studied in many quarters. The first paper, by the Rev. Everett P. Smith Gave a graphic account of the manner in which a certain parish had deepened in its missionary study during the past two years, beginning with simple talks to a communicant class just after their Confirmation, and continuing until the Sunday school, the Woman's Auxiliary, the Junior Auxiliary, and the Junior Brotherhood chapter were all hard at work writing their own papers for their frequent meetings, and giving stereopticon lectures on missions. The parish library was enriched by books on missions. At the end of the first year there were 48 volumes. In another twelve month there were 188, and the public library of the city had bought over a dozen more. The great difficulty was the lack of accessible literature concerning our own mission work, both at home and abroad. What is needed is biographical works, with much local coloring and many details. The works of the Student Volunteer Movement were found most valuable, but they do not give much information concerning our American Church's mission work. This education of the parish concerning missions is absolutely necessary. The strong point was made that this education should be given first, and appeals for money should follow. It is injurious to the cause to beg first and to let the imparting of the inspiring facts go by the board, or take second place. The better way is to educate the people concerning the grand work accomplished by missionaries, and the money would follow as a matter of course. Most rectors merely requested contributions for carrying on mission work, without endeavoring to elicit the sympathy of their congregations in the cause. So long as this condition of things prevailed, just so long would the cause of missions languish.

An address by the Rev. Richard P. Williams followed, emphasizing these points.

The speaker declared that the clergy are canonically obligated to provide instruction for their people concerning missions. He outlined an extensive plan, commencing with biographical accounts of the earliest missionaries, and proceeding down the ages, with such names as Ulphilas, Columba, Xavier, Carey, Heber, Patterson, Livingstone, Hannington, and, in our own Church's work, Chase, Kemper, Kip, Williams, Boone, Schereschewsky, Whipple, Hare, and all the others. He advocated the plan of monthly sermons on the biographies of these great men, and on a following week night, a lecture on the people and the country where the missionary thus described had labored. These lectures should be illustrated by pictures, or, still better, by lantern slides.

There should be a quarterly conference on missions held in every diocese, and all the clergy should be obligated to attend, for purposes of study. The best book on missions is by Dr. Dennis, on "Christian Missions and Social Progress."

Much interest was manifested in each of these addresses, and the speakers were plied with questions after the adjournment, which immediately followed.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

The evening session began promptly at 8 o'clock, with hymn and collect, Bishop Tuttle conducting the service. The session was devoted entirely to the consideration of the reports on the previous day.

After thorough discussion, the following resolutions were heartily adopted, to be presented by Bishop Doane to the Board of Managers. There were two sets of resolutions concerning "Our increased responsibilities," one proposed by the committee, and the other by the Rev. Dr. Faude, of Minnesota. Both sets were adopted. The committee's resolutions were as follows:

Resolved: That, in the judgment of this Council, the Island of Puerto Rico should be made a missionary district of this Church as soon as it can conveniently be done, and that the House of Bishops be requested, in the meantime, to provide episcopal supervision for the island.

Resolved: That this Council recommends to the Board of Managers a generous consideration of the reports of the Commission on Increased Responsibilities, trusting and believing that the Church will rise and respond to any courageous recognition of the openings and opportunities which God is presenting to her; and hoping that liberal encouragement may be given to the clergy and lay workers who are rendering real service to the spiritual and physical needs of the people in Cuba, and in the Philippine Islands, where, for the time being, there is certainly a pressing call for the ministrations of the Church.

The Rev. Dr. Faude's were as follows:

Resolved: That in the judgment of the Council the time has come for the Church to realize that every opportunity for the spread of Christ's Kingdom lays upon her the duty of immediately taking up the work.

Resolved: That it is the belief of this Council that every new work undertaken by the Board of Managers will be supported by the Church.

Resolved: That this Missionary Council hereby recommends to the Board of Managers of the Board of Missions the sending at the earliest practicable day of a bishop of this Church to inaugurate and foster the laying of the foundation of the Church in each of our new possessions and responsibilities until such time as the General Convention may establish missionary districts therein.

Resolved: That the Board of Managers be requested to issue a special appeal to the Church for the funds necessary for this work.

The Rev. Dr. E. S. Lines read the report of the committee on the Annual Report of the Board of Managers. Much thankfulness was expressed for the many unusual features of the year's encouragement and growth, and it was urged that in reaching forth to grasp the new responsibilities, we must not forget our duty to the work already in hand. Special stress was laid upon the need of increased work among the colored people. The general treasury should not suffer because of many "specials." Many suggestions were made concerning increased instruction at diocesan conventions, as well as at divinity and deaconess schools, concerning missions.

After accepting the report, the session adjourned till Thursday morning.

Thursday, Oct. 26th, Morning Prayer was read at 9 A. M., in St. Peter's church.

The morning was devoted mainly to reports and resolutions. Among the latter, was one suggesting more accurate plans regarding concerted prayers for missions, and the wider distribution of missionary literature.

The report of the commission on missions to the colored people was read and discussed. The appropriated sum of $62,000 was declared quite inadequate. The suggestion that a field secretary be appointed, with general supervision, was adopted. The report of the Committee on the American Church Missionary Society's report was read by Bishop Peterkin, and that concerning the American Church Building Fund Commission read by Bishop Talbot, and thoroughly discussed.

THE CHURCH'S MISSION IN JAPAN

After the mid-day prayers for missions, the Rev. Dr. Edward Abbott addressed the Council, giving much valuable information gathered during his recent visit to Japan.

Japan has leaped to a conclusion, but has reached it without the discipline of intellectual labor. Currents of popular thought are uncertain, and the shoals are shifting. In some directions, fog is closing down over the future. Wise observers are on the look out for squalls. Everything that the Chinese character is, the Japanese is not. The Chinese are more like the English, the Japanese like the French. The government attitude towards education is that religion and education are two entirely different things. The unreliability of the Japanese character makes it as "unstable as water."

The encouraging features are many. The Church is organized nationally, our American mission working in connection with that of the

S. P. G. The missionary spirit is at work among Japanese Christians, for they are already sending missionaries to Formosa. It is probable that the coming language in Japan is the Anglo-Saxon. Everyone who can is studying English. A glowing tribute was paid to the venerable Bishop Schereschewsky.

After several other resolutions, the Council adjourned till 8 o'clock in the evening.

The House of Bishops met in the afternoon, and elected the Rev. Sidney C. Partridge, of Wuchang, China, missionary bishop of Kyoto, in Japan. The bishops also requested the Presiding Bishop to correspond with the Archbishop of Canterbury, concerning the oversight of the Church in the Hawaiian Islands.

The final service came at 8 o'clock Thursday evening, at St. Peter's church, and was marked by the same large and interested attendance as all the other services and sessions of the council. There was no abatement of the deep enthusiasm which had been so freely shown during the week.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Board of Missions

No report of the meeting in connection with the Missionary Council would be complete without mention of the deep and abiding sadness caused by the death of Mrs. Tuttle. To meet in St. Louis, her home city, without the warmth of her greeting and the help of her wise counsel, was a trial to every member of the Auxiliary who knew and loved her. Although kept in the background in deference to what was felt would be her wish, it was the absorbing thought on Wednesday when, in the dim, gray light of early morning, nearly 50 diocesan officers met in St. George's church for the corporate celebration of the Holy Communion. The Bishop of Missouri was celebrant, assisted by the Bishop of Kansas. At the close, adjournment was made to the parish house, where breakfast was served by the gracious hospitality of Mrs. Simmons, acting president of the Missouri Branch. At 9:30, all assembled in the church for the meeting of the officers, Mrs. Simmons, of Missouri, in the chair. Officers from 20 dioceses were present, and visitors from two others. Resolutions were read, showing, in some small degree, the lasting impress left by Mrs. Tuttle's life and work.

Miss Emery called attention to the annual report, giving the cheering news that the aggregate of money and boxes during the past year has reached a larger total than ever before, and this increase has been largely in money. Twenty-five thousand United Offering boxes have been distributed for the offering of 1901, and 40 women workers have been sent into the Mission field, or are to be sent, the result of the United Offering of '98, at the last General Convention.

Mrs. Irving called attention to new methods, asking for hints from club women, that the mission classes and literary work of the Auxiliary may be made attractive and up to date. She spoke of the "Missionary Week" to be held in New York the first week in Advent, comprising a Quiet Day, addresses on missions, and a missionary exhibit. One interesting feature will be a "model missionary box," showing the ideal box that should be sent to a missionary and his family.

The report of the committee on systematic giving was read by Miss Emery, and was replete with useful suggestion. It was followed by a protracted discussion.

The report of the committee on missionary study was read by Mrs. Baxter, of Minnesota. Active and deepening interest is taken in this important study, and every effort is now made to extend more widely an accurate knowledge of Church matters. In this connection, the subject of a "Woman's Auxiliary Calendar" was touched upon, each leaf to give a text from the Bible, or a sentence from the writings of the true heroes of the Church and of the world.

The report of the committee on missionary workers was read by Miss Stuart, of Virginia. An excellent point brought out was the need of judicious selection of workers; one of the most important duties of those having the matter at heart is to discourage those who have not the religious consecration or the natural endowments to fit them to be successful workers in the mission field. Some of the missionary bishops have sent, when requested, long letters, giving the qualifications they deem essential in successful workers. One of these letters has been published as a leaflet by the Girls' Friendly Society.

The report of the committee on the Junior Auxiliary was read by Mrs. Morrison, of Duluth. It advocated the active pushing of this work, speaking with enthusiasm of the value of The Young Christian Soldier in arousing interest among adults as well as children. This fact was insisted upon, that the Junior Auxiliary can never attain its highest success until the Woman's Auxiliary realizes its sense of motherhood, and takes the younger organization under its active guidance.

The reading of the reports was followed by a discussion about methods, that showed how deep was the interest aroused.

A large public meeting was held at the church of the Holy Communion at 8:30 on Thursday afternoon, representatives from 30 dioceses being present, while the Missouri branch reported 47 delegates from parishes. An address was given by the Rev. J. Addison Ingle, on "Woman's Work in China." He said:

The men largely outnumber the women in the congregation at Hankow. It is impossible for men to work among Chinese women, as they seldom see men, and are very shy, as well as slow and stupid. They are so suspicious of male missionaries that we must depend largely on the services of those trained carefully by native clergy. There are great difficulties in the way that prevent Chinese women from attending service. It is wellnigh impossible for them to leave their children at home. I have had children play in the aisles during service, I have had almost to scream to make myself heard. When the women do appear on the streets, they are often hooted at and called vile names. Thus, they dread to go to church, as they are reviled for violating their code. Women are going to Hankow as missionaries. One leaves Oct. 28th from Connecticut, for which we are very thankful.

The Rev. Mr. Irving spoke on Japan, saying:

The work is exactly the opposite of China. The civilization attained by the Japanese, has elevated women. They are bright and versatile, and form a large proportion of our congregations. I am to talk to-day of the necessity of building a new church in Sendai, a city of 77,000 inhabitants. Mr. Jeffreys has been there for a long time, and does what he can, but his house is not large enough to be used longer for service. The idea of the Japanese is right, that the church is for worship, not for entertainment, and I would plead for a rectory and parish house, as well as a church, that there may be an opportunity for the Japanese, who are a very social people, to meet often in a social way. Japan needs the best, and if given that at first, will soon be self-supporting.

An address was made by Miss Stuart, of the Virginia branch, showing how to stimulate the work of the Auxiliary in weak places. It was an earnest and inspiring plea for greater consecration of self and for more intimate knowledge of the mission field.

Miss Elliott, of Moab, Utah, addressed those present, speaking of the blight of Mormonism that has settled upon Utah. She said:

Every man is great in proportion to his family, their size and number regulating his position in the celestial kingdom. This is so firmly believed by the Mormon woman that she gladly welcomes the many celestial marriages, that her husband's position in the celestial kingdom may be secure. Our school and hospital in Salt Lake City are doing a noble work. We have one woman worker outside Salt Lake City, but what is that compared with the 2,000 Mormon missionaries sent out every year?

"Church schools for colored people," was eloquently presented by the Rev. Mr. Hunter, principal of St. Augustine's School, Raleigh, N. C. The address was necessarily short, owing to the lateness of the hour.

The offering for missions amounted to $78.

The Cleveland, Ohio, Branch

At the call of Mrs. W. A. Leonard, president, an enthusiastic missionary meeting was held at the Cathedral House, Oct. 17th, attended by representatives from nearly every parish in the city. Mrs. Twing, of New York city, who has recently completed a journey round the world for the purpose of studying the missions of foreign lands, made an address full of interest. Bishop Talbot gave a stirring appeal for work among the Indians and the people in the Far West, particularly in Wyoming and Idaho, his former field of labor. At the close of the service a social cup of tea was served in the parlors above the chapel.

The Sunday School

Sunday School Commission of Long Island

The first convention was held in Christ church, Brooklyn, on the afternoon of Oct. 24th. The object of the commission is to arrange for, and secure uniform service, organization, and instruction in all the Sunday schools in the diocese, and to increase in them an interest in the missionary and charitable work of the Church. The Rev. Frederick Burgess was called to the chair. The Rev. William Wiley gave a report on the work of the commission. The growth of the Sunday school has not kept pace numerically with the growth of the population, or the growth of the Church. He spoke of the lack of interest in this vital work of the Church, as evinced by the fact that in ten years past not one word in relation to it has been uttered on the floor of the diocesan convention, and that in the parochial reports, further than statistics regarding number of teachers and pupils, no mention is made of the work. The committee has been urged by bishops, presbyters, and lay-deputies, to use their best efforts to secure uniformity of service and grading and instruction in the schools. Their aim was not to interfere with rector or priest, in the discharge of his duty as the teacher of the young within his cure, but rather to assist him in the giving of such definite and thorough training as will prepare the children for being openly catechised in church. The need is, more interest in the work and better instructed teachers. For the furtherance of the latter, a course of instruction was proposed, the study of the following books being suggested: Sadler's "Doctrine and Bible Truth," Little's "Reasons for being a Churchman," "The Teacher's Prayer Book," and Vernon Staley's "The Catholic Religion." It is the intention of the committee to provide by a careful correspondence, or through clergymen selected for the purpose, instruction in the subjects named, and times and places for examination. The teachers present were asked to register for this instruction, and also to send to the commission an outline of what, in the opinion of each, should constitute a course of systematic and thorough instruction for the Sunday school. The Rev. Robert Rogers opened a discussion on "Infant class methods." In Christ church chapel he teaches an infant class numbering from 300 to 400. Mrs. Crause, of Grace church Sunday school, read a paper on "The education of the young Churchman." The Rev. James H. Darlington spoke on "Main school and adult class methods." In his opinion, Sunday school work could be much better carried on if buildings similar to public school buildings could be secured. With black boards and rooms to accommodate 30 or 40 pupils, and with a competent teacher, things would be greatly benefited. Dr. Darlington told of an invisible system of grading now being tried in Chicago, which he believed might be used in Brooklyn satisfactorily. He suggested that to stimulate missionary work classes might be named after missionary bishops. The Rev. Messrs. Ralph Brydges, Charles E. Cragg, and Alexander Vance, took part in the discussion which followed. The Rev. Dr. Lindsay Parker spoke on "Methods and motives of our work." The Rev. Frederick P. Swezey closed the afternoon session with an address on "The work as a clerical superintendent sees it." At the evening session, the Rev. Dr. Henry Mottet delivered an address on "Sunday school organization." The Rev. Pascal Harrower spoke on the advisability of using a uniform series of lessons, approving of the International series, and adding that the Sunday School Institute was an admirable institution.

The American Church Building Fund Commission.

The 19th annual report has just been issued. Note is made of the fact that four of those prominently connected with the work have died the past year: Bishop Williams, its president; the Rev. Dr. Malcom, for many years its corresponding secretary; the Rev. Dr. Cooper, and Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, members of the board of trustees. The report says: "Perhaps the most important change the past year is the lessened call for loans, and the increasing demand for small gifts. This is, in part, due to better times, and we believe is a more normal condition of things with respect to our fund, which was established to provide an income which could be donated to aid in erecting churches; the permission to loan parts of the principal on bond and mortgage, under certain well defined conditions, to churches in course of erection, being subsidiary to the main purpose." Fourteen applications for loans have been granted amounting to $13,225. Thirty-two applications for gifts, of small amounts, have been granted, amounting to $5,050. Of this amount, $300 was given to Bishop McKim to build a chapel at Kurvana, Japan. During the 19 years of the existence of this Commission, it has made 366 loans amounting to $419,957.96; and 158 gifts amounting to $28,036.33. Contributions to Sept. 1st have amounted to $349,277.15. The Commission has taken title to seven churches which have been unable to meet their payments, and the property in each case has been surrendered to the Commission, with the approval of the Bishop.

The trustees remind the clergy that November 12th, the second Sunday in November, is "Church Building Fund Sunday," at which time the annual collection should be taken.

Addresses on "Family prayer" and "Private prayer," were given at the quarterly meeting of the deanery of Lincoln and Welland. The Bishop consecrated St. James' church, Rothsay, Sept. 21st. The seating capacity of Christ church cathedral, Hamilton, was 1,000, but since the new font was put in, this number has been slightly reduced. One of the improvements to be made to the church in the village of Arthur is a steeple.

The 11th annual conference of the Montreal Diocesan Theological College was opened Oct. 12th. There was an early celebration of the Holy Communion in the college chapel. A number of able papers were read, dealing with the functions and limitations of the ministry, as bishop, priest, and deacon. The latest gift to St. George's church is a beautiful new clock and chimes, presented by Mr. A. F. Gault. It is said that the chiming or "carillon machine" as it is called, will be the first of the kind erected in Canada. It is hoped that the bells may be in position by Christmas, but the machine for chiming will not be ready till next summer. There are to be 28 tunes in all. Reports of the recent convention of St. Andrew's Brotherhood at St. John, New Brunswick, were presented at the meeting of the local chapter, by the delegates in St. Mary's church, Hochelaga. Thank-giving services were arranged for in the city churches on the day appointed by the government for public Thanksgiving, Oct. 19th.

Diocese of Huron

A plan for improving the parish work, which need not interfere with existing societies, was unanimously adopted by the congregation of Memorial church, London, at a meeting held in the end of September, to discuss the best methods of work for the coming winter. The new plan provides that the members of the congregation shall appoint from their own number committees to have oversight of the several departments of work entered upon, and progress in work shall be reported upon at regular congregational meetings. A children's floral service was held in Memorial church on the afternoon of Sept. 24th. Bishop and Mrs. Baldwin attended a Woman's Auxiliary missionary conference in St. James' church, Ingersoll, Oct. 4th. A new church is to be built at Tilbury, and the work to be begun this fall. The Bishop consecrated St. Stephen's church of Gorrie lately, and St. James' of Wroxeter. Among the improvements to Trinity church, Hordwich, during the past summer, are a fine new tower and cast steel bell.

The Diocesan Sunday School Association held the opening service for the season, Oct. 16th, in St. James' cathedral, this being one of the days appointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury for intercession for Sunday schools. Bishop Sweatman returned home from England the first week in October. The Quiet Day for the Alumni Association of Wycliffe College, Oct. 8d, was conducted by the Rev. Osborne Troop, of St. Martin's church, Montreal. A very warm reception was given the Rev. Mr. Sanson, rector of Trinity church, East Toronto. The venerable rector is now the oldest Anglican clergyman in Canada, being in his 81st year, and he has been 40 years in charge of Trinity parish. He has just returned from a three months' visit to his birthplace in Edinburgh. At the October meeting of the rural deanery of Toronto, the Rev. John Lantry, rector of St. Luke's church, was elected rural dean, to succeed Canon Sweeny, of St. Philip's. At the rural-decanal meeting of the chapter of East Simcoe at Shanty Bay, it was decided to endeavor to have a conference of all the deaneries in the county of Simcoe soon, to be held at Barrie. It has been arranged to hold the conference of the archdeaconry of Peterborough, Nov. 14th and 15th. A very good programme has been prepared of subjects to be discussed, of grave import to the Church.

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

Bishop McLaren, who was prevented by illness from preaching, and acting as co-consecrator at the consecration of Bishop Williams, at Omaha, is improving.

The Bishop of New Hampshire was a recent visitor to Chicago, and preached in Grace church on the morning of the 22nd.

On Wednesday evening, to an attentive and numerically good audience, Prof. Francis Hall delivered the first of a series of weekly lectures on the Scriptures. The subject of the inspiration of the Bible was treated in the doctor's usual lucid style.

Last week the Rev. H. R. Neely was called to Maine; his uncle, the Bishop of that diocese being at the point of death.

The mission at Harvey is now in charge of the Rev. Mr. White, resident chaplain of St. Luke's hospital.

The Rev. Harold E. Addison, late superintendent of St. James' Sunday school, is taking a post-graduate course at Harvard, for which he won a scholarship, his place at St. John's, Clybourne ave., being supplied by Mr. Lathrop, a seminarian.

Among other gatherings marking the fall and winter work not the least interesting are the organ recitals now being given in several of the city churches. A well attended one was that of Mr. Frank Smith, son of the rector of St. Luke's, Evanston, which was given on the evening of Oct. 19th.

Vested Choir at St. Matthew's, N. Evanston

Was introduced Sunday, Oct. 29th. It is composed of 12 boys, 4 men. Henry W. Hunt is choir-master. The ladies have made the cassocks and cottas. The Rev. Mr. Granger is priest in charge. A choir room was built on this summer. The processional cross used is a memorial of the late E. O. Harriss.

A Visit from Bishop Edsall

Bishop Edsall in St. Peter's last Sunday, gave an account of missionary work in his jurisdiction of North Dakota, and was given by his late parishioners the offering at morning service amounting to $110. In the evening he preached in the church of Our Saviour, Fullerton Boulevard.

Church of the Epiphany

A new club has just been organized for the choir boys of the parish, called the Choir Club. It is a secret society, with initiation, obligation, grip, pass-word, regalia, etc. It meets on Wednesday evenings in the parish house. The first free organ recital of this season was given by Professor Francis J. Hemington, the organist, on Oct. 19th. The attendance was large, and the brilliant programme was played in a masterly manner. These free recitals are to be given on the first and third Monday evenings of the month until Lent. The choir provides special festival services on the evening of the first Sunday in each month. The October festival was largely attended.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

During Bishop Potter's absence in the Pacific, Bishop Hare, of South Dakota, and other bishops, will attend to the spiritual ministrations in this diocese.

It is announced that Dr. B. F. DeCosta who was lately deposed from the priesthood by Bishop Potter, has definitely abandoned the communion of the Church.

Grace church has just purchased for $30,000 property adjoining Grace chapel, the object being to acquire land so as to provide for future enlargement of Grace settlement, as may be needed.

At St. Thomas' chapel, the Rev. Dr. Pott, vicar, a new stained glass window has been unveiled. It is the gift of the Workingmen's Club of this congregation, and is of fine design and execution.

In the new memorial chapel of St. Luke's House for Indigent Christian Females, have been placed stained glass windows, commemorating a former inmate of the institution, Miss Waite, and the late Rev. Chas. De Witt Bridgman, D. D.

Study of Church History

Under the direction of the Sisters of the Order of St. John the Baptist, a class of ladies will be held on Thursday afternoons during the winter at the sisterhood house, for the study of Church History.

The Church Club

At a meeting Oct. 25th, the subject considered was the "Holy Scriptures." The position taken by the Higher Criticism was in some degree defended by the Rev. L. W. Batten, Ph. D., and the Rev. John P. Peters, D. D., Ph. D.

Another Tea Saloon Opened

In connection with St. James' church, the Church Army opened on All Saints' Day, a third tea saloon, modeled on those already existing. A coffee bar and cocoa room are added, and the house, which is located in 3d ave., near 76th st., will be a center of evangelistic, as well as temperance, work. It will have in the basement a bowling alley for boys. The two other tea saloons established have become self supporting.

Cathedral of St. John the Divine

Has reached the completion of the first great arch of the choir, which now stands a prominent object on Cathedral Heights. The vastness of the future building seems for the first time to have impressed the public. The present arch is 85 ft., 6 inches in span, and the spans of the three other arches which will soon join it are to be the same. The stones used in building each weigh about three and a half tons, and have dimensions of a yard and a half, facts which give forcible idea of the massiveness of the construction. Those forming the outer surface are of Frontenac limestone from the West. The arch proper is carried over from pier to pier on a skeleton of timber. Seventy ft. of this were used, and the total of timber work alone supporting the stones weighed 100 tons. Under the arch in the choir there will eventually stand either four or six huge interior columns, decorative in their effect, weighing each 135 tons. It is hoped to have this portion of the cathedral completed and ready for use by the autumn of 1903, but as the rate of progress is necessarily somewhat slow, that date may be exceeded. By a recent decision in the case of the will of the late Elizabeth U. Coles, the residuary portion of the estate is likely to be considerably increased, resulting in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine eventually receiving more than $500,000.

The trustees met at the See House Oct. 24th. Routine business was transacted, and it was announced that the services in the crypt will be continued during the coming winter.

Will of the Late Cornelius Vanderbilt

Disposes of an estate estimated at over $75,000,000. Mr. Vanderbilt's house for railroad men is endowed with a gift of $100,000. His rector, the Rev. Dr. David H. Greer, receives a personal gift of $50,000, and $10,000 is bestowed upon the estate of the Rev. Dr. Wm. S. Langford, late secretary of the Board of Missions. To Yale University is devoted $100,000; St. Luke's Hospital, $50,000; the Redwood Library, Newport, R. I., $10,000; the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Church, $50,000; the trustees of Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn., $50,000; the Newport Hospital, $10,000; the Christian Home for Intemperate Men, New York, $10,000; the Manhattan Working Girls' Society of the City of New York, $10,000; the New York Bible and Common Prayer Book Society, $10,000. The executors are directed to pay to the Society of St. Johnland annually the sum of $2,000, pursuant to certain arrangements previously made, and a bequest of $10,000 is made to the same society. The Society for Seamen of the City and Port of New York is given a bequest of $10,000, and $200,000 is given to the rector, churchwardens, and vestrymen of St. Bartholomew's church, to be kept invested, and the annual income to be applied by them to the missionary work of the parish. A further bequest of $200,000 is made to the church for the erection of a building for Church purposes in the parish, contingent upon its not having been erected prior to the testator's death. And in a codicil, an additional legacy of $200,000, making $600,000 in all, is given to the church to increase the endowment for its missionary work. This is understood to apply to St. Bartholomew's parish house, the work which the testator and his mother, in conjunction with Dr. Greer, were chiefly instrumental in creating.

Pennsylvania

Ozi William Whitaker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

St. Alban's mission church, Olney, is under the direction of the Rev. Dr. Samuel Upjohn, rector of St. Luke's church, Germantown, by appointment of the Bishop. The Rev. A. C. Knowles, junior curate of St. Luke's, has just been placed in charge of St. Alban's.

St. Timothy's Hospital, Roxboro, has received $250, the net proceeds of a benefit game of baseball played Sept. 30th, between local clubs of that suburb.

Reception to the Rev. E. L. Ogilby

The congregation of St. Barnabas' church, Kensington, tendered on the 26th ult., a reception to the new rector, the Rev. Edward L. Ogilby, and Mrs. Ogilby, the attendance being very large. The introductory remarks were made by the former rector, the Rev. J. R. L. Nisbett, and among those present were the Rev. Messrs. W. W. Taylor and Edgar Cope.

Chimes for Christ Church, Germantown,

In memory of Colonel Edwin M. Jeffries, for over 25 years a vestryman of Christ church, Germantown, his widow, Mrs. Jeffries, has donated a chime of 10 bells, to cost $6,000, which are now being cast. In making this handsome gift, Mrs. Jeffries is carrying out a frequently expressed idea of her husband, that Christ church should have a chime of bells.

Kensington Hospital for Women

At the annual meeting of the board of directors, held on the 9th inst., Bishop Whitaker was re-elected president, as were also the officers and directors. The past year has been the most active in the history of this institution, 692 patients having been treated, being 79 more than the year previous; and 866 operations performed, of which 226 were major operations. Ten nurses were graduated during the year, and 12 are at present under training. Although the hospital is "unsectarian," it is mainly under the management of Church people.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

A convention echo meeting was held at the Church House, Philadelphia, on the 26th ult., J. Lee Patton presiding. The Rev. L. N. Caley offered prayer, and then gave his impressions of the Columbus convention. Taken as a whole, the convention seemed to be on a high spiritual plane. Pennsylvania had by far the largest delegation of any State. M. N. Kline, of the church of the Saviour, C. L. Filbert, of St. Andrew's church, and Edward H. Bonsall, gave then the result of their observations. John W. Wood, general secretary, said there were 621 delegates in attendance; a very considerable number of them were men under 30. There is probably something in the assertion that there is danger of the Brotherhood becoming a great mutual admiration society. The convention addresses were marked by a combination of spirituality, deep thought, and practical usefulness.

Convocation of Norristown

The autumnal meeting was held on the 26th ult. in St. John's church, Norristown. The opening service was conducted by the rector, the Rev. H. S. Fisher, assisted by the Rev. Herbert J. Cook. Resolutions were adopted recommending that the congregations reduce the mortgage on Epiphany mission chapel at Royersford. Reports were received from various clergymen who are in charge of mission stations, all of an encouraging character. The Rev. J. H. Converse stated that the church of the Messiah, Gwynned, is no longer dependent on convocation support, having become a self-sustaining parish. The Rev. A. J. Barrow reported for Evansburg and Royersford, saying the former was reviving, and that a parish building is among the early probabilities. The Rev. W. H. Burr stated that the new Trinity Memorial church, Ambler, would be ready for services at Christmas.

The North East Convocation

Met on the 24th ult. in the church of the Resurrection, the Rev. Dr. H. Richard Harris, Dean, presiding. Of the 17 parishes comprising the convocation, nearly all were represented. After a brief devotional service, the treasurer's report was presented, which showed receipts $388.78; present balance, $32.28. Encouraging reports were read of the work achieved by the Messiah and Galilee missions. The Rev. C. L. Fulforth, of the Messiah, asked the convocation to appropriate $100 towards paying a female Church visitor, which request was referred to the committee on appropriations to consider and report at the January meeting, which will be held at the church of the Nativity. The Rev. A. J. P. McClure, financial agent of the General Clergy Relief, addressed the Convocation on the importance of regularly contributing to its fund. Resolutions were adopted, congratulating the rector and vestrymen of St. Jude's church, on the completion of the first half century of its history. At the public missionary services in the evening, addresses on diocesan missions were made by the Rev. Messrs. McClure and Fulforth, and Mr. Henry L. Butler.

Long Island

Abram N. Littlejohn, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

On Sunday, Oct. 22nd, the Bishop confirmed a class of 15 at St. Peter's church, Bay Shore, the Rev. John Charles Stephenson, rector.

Statistics of Dr. Haskins' Rectorate

In an address made by the Rev. Dr. Samuel Haskins, on the occasion of the celebration of the 60th anniversary of his rectorship of St. Mark's church, he gave the following statistics of his work: Baptisms, 3,280; prepared for Confirmation, 1,490; officiated at 2,705 funerals, and celebrated the Holy Eucharist 3,190 times.

New Edifice for Christ Chapel, Brooklyn

The old edifice has been removed to make way for the new building, the corner-stone of which was laid during the past summer. It is to be of brick, with a seating capacity of 500, and will cost about $30,000. Towards meeting this outlay, Christ church, Clinton av., the Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, rector, has largely subscribed. The new chapel is expected to be completed early in the coming year. Under the administration of the Rev. Robert Rodgers, Ph. D., Christ chapel has rapidly advanced. It now numbers 500 families, with a Sunday school of 1,200.

Gifts to Church of the Holy Trinity

Re-opened on Sunday, the 22d, after having been closed for the greater part of the summer for the placing therein of memorial gifts. An organ has been given by George Foster Peabody, a reredos in memory of her husband, by Mrs. Samuel E. Howard; a pulpit in memory of her parents, by Countess Von Francken Sierstorff; an altar in memory of his father, by William A. Reed, and an altar rail in memory of Margaret Eleanor Connell, by James S. Connell. The 46-stop organ, built by Hutchinson, of Boston, is one of the most perfect of its kind. It has brilliancy, sweetness, and resonance. Mr. Dudley Buck resides at this splendid instrument. The reredos of gray white Caen stone is about 25 ft. long by 28 in height, and is perpendicular Gothic in style; the centre space contains sculpture in high relief by Karl Bitter, after the picture of "The Last Supper," by Leonardo da Vinci. The altar is of Sienna marble. Its font is divided into three panels, each ornamented with conventional design in mosaic. Mosaic likewise, appears on the chancel floor, a broad path of it extending from the steps to the altar. The new pulpit consists of an oaken floor elevated on 10 columns of Mexican onyx, and supported on a platform of Caen stone, bordered with heads of cherubs. In place of the customary box there is a handsome brass rail, artistically consistent with the rail of the chancel, and edged with oak. The reading desk is merely a ledge on this oaken border.

St. George's Church, Brooklyn

The 30th anniversary celebration began on Sunday, the 22d. There was on Sunday a celebration of the Holy Eucharist, the rector, the Rev. W. A. Wasson, being celebrant. On Monday evening there were historical addresses by former rectors, and the remaining evenings of the week-services and sermons by visiting clergy, among them were the Rev. Dr. S. D. McConnell, George R. Van De Water, W. R. Hunt-ton, and Charles A. Briggs.

Massachusetts

William Lawrence, D.D., Bishop

Services are now held regularly in Winchendon, at 6:30 p. m., and on the last Sunday the Sacrament will be celebrated at 10:30 a. m. The Rev. J. E. Johnson, of West Gardner, has charge of the work.

Grace church, Lawrence, has received the gift of a chalice, paten, and cruet, in memory of Mary Jane Saunders.

Church Built at Washington

Among the Berkshire Hills, a church building of native field stone, English Gothic, with a large square tower, is in course of erection. It is on the site of the dwelling occupied by the minister of the old Congregational church. It is called St. Andrew's, and will be a memorial of the Rev. Dr. Andrew Oliver and his wife, formerly professor of Greek in St. Stephen's College, Annandale, N. Y., and later a professor of Old Testament exegesis in the General Seminary.

St. Luke's Home for Convalescents, Roxbury

Had its annual sale Oct. 18th. A large number of visitors brought substantial donations of goods. The tables were under the charge of representative Churchwomen who attended to the sale, and contributed largely towards its success. The Home is a Church institution, and has accommodations for 26 persons. The house is large and airy, and has the restful atmosphere of a cultured home. There is a Quiet Hour every day among the inmates from two to three, when no one is allowed to speak. All are free to read or sew, but quietness is the point sought. Many a weary mother and overworked school teacher, as well as tired-out servant, have found this place of comfort and refinement, a great blessing.

Work Among Sailors

The religious work among sailors has in Boston received unusual attention by a convention of workers, which held many sessions during a period of four days last week. The side of the Church work among this class was ably represented by clergymen from Philadelphia and New York. The Rev. W. T. Crocker, of East Boston, the Rev. F. B. Allen, and Mr. Staunton H. King, of Charlestown, made addresses.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

The local council in the city of Boston held a service in the church of the Advent, Oct. 26th. It was well attended. In the parish rooms reports were made of the late convention at Columbus by two delegates. The matter of visiting the hotels on Sunday mornings was urged upon members by the committee in charge. An attempt was made to secularize the meetings of the Brotherhood, which was generally discussed with the conclusion that more spirituality was needed. St. Paul's, Newburyport, has given up its charter. The chapters in the locality of South Boston are engaged in a series of services every Sunday afternoon, which the chairman of the meeting, Mr. Robert H. Gardiner, heartily commended to all members present.

The Episcopalian Club

At the first meeting after the warm months, held in Hotel Brunswick, Oct. 23d, the topic of Church and State was discussed by several speakers. Captain Mahan, U. S. N., read a thoughtful paper, in which he declared for the common interest of Church and State maintaining the best citizenship, and the best spiritual welfare of the country. Our duty to the State is derived from our duty to God. The Rev. Dr. Parks spoke of the visit he had recently paid to England and said that if we looked at the purposes of the Established Church we find that there was to be a rearrangement of the old religious life, so that the Church would be a home for every Englishman. The Rev. Leverett Bradley spoke entertainingly of the relations of Church to State in foreign countries.

Central Pennsylvania

Ethelbert Talbot, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

New Church at Lewistown

This is now practically completed, after many discouragements. It is as pretty an example of a small church as could be desired. It consists of nave 60x30, with an ample chancel 25x20, and is constructed of stone. The interior is in sand-finished plaster, the nave being tinted green, and the chancel a warm red. The roof is of open timber framing, in yellow pine oiled, the beams resting on yellow corbels. Most of the windows will be memorials, a circular chancel window of Tiffany glass being the gift of Mr. H. J. Culberson; the central window of the south side of the nave presented by Mrs. A. W. Norris, in memory of her son, Capt. A. Wilson Norris, Jr., and another, the gift of the Sunday school, in memory of Miss Brosius. Among other gifts may be noticed a very handsomely wrought Communion, service given by Mr. James Mann; the pulpit desk of brass, by Miss Culbertson, and the altar service book by an anonymous donor. The chancel woodwork, including a handsome altar, raised seven steps above the nave, is of quartered oak, and was the work of a neighboring firm, the Newport Planing Mill. The font will be a memorial of Mr. R. H. Lee, a former officer of the parish, given by the Sunday school and his friends. It is hoped that a pipe organ can be shortly placed in the chamber in the chancel provided for it. The seating capacity of the church is 300, and the total cost, including the heating by hot water of the church and chapel, about $10,000, of which the larger part has been already provided.

Archdeaconry of Harrisburg

The fall meeting met in St. Mark's church, Lewistown, Oct. 10, 11th. It was of more than usual interest, as its first service was made the occasion for the informal opening of the new church. At 7:30 p. m., Tuesday, almost all of the clergy were present, as well as the Bishop. The service was choral, and the sermon, an admirable doctrinal presentation of the Holy Communion, preached by the Rev. W. F. Shero. The Bishop tendered a few words of hearty congratulation to the rector and his people in the successful completion of their work, and closed the service with prayer and benediction. The Archdeaconry met in business session Wednesday morning at 9:30, when reports of missionaries showed a healthy and vigorous state of the work in this section. At 10:30, the Holy Communion was celebrated by the rector, the Rev. F. T. Eastment. The sermon was preached by the Rev. William Dorwart. On reconvening at 2:30 p. m., an interesting paper, on "The Indian Problem," was read by the Rev. Dr. Foster, followed by an exegesis on I St. John v: 7, given by the Rev. Ernest V. Collins, which elicited an interesting discussion. Resolutions of regret at the departure of the Rev. Dr. Robert Hope, and of regard and esteem for his work, were unanimously adopted, as was also one of sympathy with the Rev. Jas. M. Blackwell in the domestic sorrow and anxiety which had prevented his presence. Tyrone was selected as the next place of meeting. After a brief service, at 7:30 p. m., conducted by the Rev. R. L. Chittenden, addresses were made by the Rev. Dr. Angell, on "What are diocesan missions?" the Rev. Alex. McMillan, on "What are their needs?" and the Rev. Dr. Hope, on "How may these needs be met?" The Rev. L. F. Baker, the archdeacon, spoke a few earnest words on the practical application to diocesan requirements of the truths brought forward, and closed the service with prayer and benediction.

Church work in Lewistown is evidently going forward under most encouraging conditions, and many evidences as to the regard in which the rector is held were given. After the closing service, a largely attended reception for the visiting clergy was given by the ladies of the congregation.

Maryland

William Paret, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Return of the Bishop

Bishop Paret, with his daughter, Miss Paret, returned to Baltimore, Oct. 12th, after an absence of nearly three months, much improved in health. He spent most of the time in Southern France, visiting the city of Breve, where the Bishop's grandfather and several generations of his family lived. He also made short stays in other cities including Paris.

Chapel of St. Michael and All Angels

The Rev. George J. G. Kromer, for five years stationed at Cape May Point church, preached his first sermon as rector of the chapel of St. Michael and All Angels', Baltimore, on Sunday morning, Oct. 15th. St. Michael and All Angels' chapel has been organized for two years, and has been supplied by the Rev. C. Ernest Smith, rector of the church of St. Michael and All Angels', and other clergymen. The Rev. Mr. Kromer is the first rector to be appointed.

Dedication of Parish Building

On Sunday, Oct. 22d, Bishop Paret visited Severn parish, near Annapolis, in Anne Arundel Co., where he administered the rite of Confirmation to a class of 14 persons, preached, and dedicated the new parish building, which has recently been completed, and was erected through the generosity Mr. James T. Woodward, of New York, as a memorial of his daughter, Miss Edith Woodward. Bishop Seymour, of Springfield, and the Rev. J. W. Bond, of New York, also delivered addresses. The large gathering from the surrounding country was augmented by a number of persons who went thither from Baltimore, Washington and New York city. Mr. Woodward, the donor of the building, was born and reared in Severn parish.

Thomas F. Davies, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Tenth Anniversary of Rev. J. H. Eichbaum

The occasion was observed at All Saints', Brooklyn, Oct. 1st. During the decade, the number of families increased from 40 to 50, number of souls from 160 to 200; communicants, from 44 to 90. In other words, the communicant list has more than doubled during the decade. The financial total receipts for 1889 were $517, and for 1899 were $950, a gain of $433 in annual offerings. Baptisms, 114; Confirmations, 76; marriages, 22; burials, 58; Sunday services, 844; week-day services, 813; sermons and addresses, 1,227. The purchase of the parish house, adjoining the church, gives pleasant and highly appreciated headquarters for church work. The introduction of the vested choir also occurred during the decade; the increase of the parochial endowment to the sum of $2,500, by the munificent gifts of Mrs. Charlotte Cook, Miss Ann Eliza Cook, and Mr. Walker B. Sherman; the placing of rich windows and other memorials in the church; the increase in the total valuation of the church property from $6,400 in 1889 to $7,850 in 1899, to which add the endowment, making a total of $10,350, a gain of $3,950. The total annual offerings of the parish for Church work have steadily increased from $517 in 1889 to $950 in 1899, giving a total for the ten years of $9,800.

Pittsburgh

Cortlandt Whitehead, D.D., Bishop

Trinity church, Braddock, has been placed under the care of the Rev. George Rogers, temporarily; that is, up to April 1st, 1900.

St. Barnabas' church, Tarentum, and the church of Our Saviour, New Kensington, have been united in a new missionary circuit, and after Nov. 1st, will be under the pastoral charge of the Rev. J. L. Taylor.

Laymen's Missionary League

October 16th, Bishop Whitehead tendered a reception to the Rev. J. R. Wightman and the members, to give them opportunity to meet in a social way. Mr. Wightman has just assumed the chaplaincy of the League, and will have under his direction for the present the following missions: All Saints', Allegheny; St. Augustine's mission for colored people, Pittsburgh; Knoxville, Beltzhoover, and Sharpsburg.

The Clerical Union

The first meeting for the season occurred Oct. 9th, at the Hotel Henry. Luncheon was served at one o'clock, and was followed by an appeal in behalf of St. Augustine's School for Colored People, Raleigh, N. C., by one of the instructors in that institution, the Rev. H. L. Marvin.

Fund for a Chapel at Sheraden

October 20th there was a "jug-breaking" at the mission at Sheraden. The money thus collected amounted to $90, which will be applied to the building fund of the congregation. Refreshments were served, and a very profitable and pleasant evening was enjoyed by all those present. Sheraden is a mission organized within a few years by the Rev. Mr. Steed, of the neighboring parish at Crafton. There is not a large congregation, but already a lot has been purchased, and it is hoped soon to erect a building to be used temporarily as a Sunday school room and chapel.

Presentation to Rev. Robert Meech

The Rev. Robert Meech has completed the 25th year of his rectorship of Christ church, Allegheny, and the event was fittingly celebrated by a reception tendered to him by the congregation, on Oct. 20th, in the parish rooms, at which time a gold watch and chain were presented to Mr. Meech in token of the loving esteem in which he is held by his parishioners.

South Carolina

Ellison Capers, D.D., Bishop

By recent appointments the Bishop has filled all the vacant missions within the bounds of the Greenville convocation. There are from 30 to 50 places in this convocation with a population numbering between 300 and 1,000 which the Church has barely touched.

Connecticut

Chauncey B. Brewster, D.D., Bishop

The Church Army has added to its already efficient work by instituting a new post at 130 Bradley st., under the auspices and guidance of the Rev. Stewart Means, rector of St. John's church. This makes the third post in New Haven and vicinity. Capt. Stansfield is pushing the good work along with both zeal and discretion, and much good has already resulted.

Church of the Transfiguration, Norfolk

Church services are maintained in this beautiful summer resort during July, August, and September; for the first two months this summer they were in charge of the Rev. R. H. Gesner, rector of Christ church, West Haven, and during September in charge of the Rev. A. Sprague Ashley, of St. Peter's church, Albany. The attendance has been very large, and the offerings correspondingly gratifying. A handsome bishop's chair of quartered oak was given by Mr. and Mrs. Stoeckel who, though not members of our Communion, have displayed a generous interest in all matters connected with the advancement of the Church. The same kind friends have signified their wish to present a chime of bells and an organ. Earnest efforts are being made to raise sufficient funds to complete the church in accordance with the original design.

Maine

Henry Adams Neely, D.D., Bishop

The Rev. Dr. James C. Quinn, of Winn, conducted the first Church services in Millinocket, Sunday afternoon and evening. Dr. Quinn has carried on mission work in the valley of the Penobscot with the best of success. His next visit to Millinocket will be on Nov. 19th.

Editorials and Contributions

AN extraordinary development is making its appearance in the very bosom of Protestantism. This is nothing less than the practice of prayer to the saints, only the "saints" in this instance are not the Apostles and martyrs, or the heroes of Faith whom the Church has placed in her calendar, but the departed friends or relatives of the devotees. Dr. George Adam Smith, in his "Life of Henry Drummond," mentions as a fact within his knowledge, that certain persons habitually address prayers to Henry Drummond. Dr. Joseph Parker, of the City Temple, London (not the Temple church), a doughty adversary of "Popery and Prelacy," has openly declared that he prayed to his departed wife every day. He said that he never came to the City Temple to preach without asking her to come with him, and, furthermore, he knew that she did come. Nor does he hold this as a mere sentiment applicable only to his own individual case, but alluding to a friend who had lost his wife, he says: "I encourage my friend to pray to his wife, and to pray to God to ask her to come to his help. She will be more to him than twelve legions of unknown angels." Dr. Parker evidently has no use for the "ministering spirits sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation." Well may the Protestant paper from which we cull these instances say: "All this is simply petrifying!" It mentions a Roman litany to the saints, and asks: "Is this what we are going to come to in our Protestant Churches?"

Dr. De Costa and the Church

NO doubt the Church has evils to contend with in this age as it has had in every age. No doubt, also, these evils must be steadily faced. They must not be condoned or let alone. All who recognize them are called upon to contend against them with unflinching courage and persistence until they are put down or excluded. To pursue this course, and to do what can be done to urge all true Churchmen to contend earnestly for the Faith once delivered to the Saints, is not pessimism, so long as such warfare is conducted in unshaken hope and confidence that the truth will in the end prevail. If we do our part, God will do His. The results of our struggles on behalf of the Kingdom of God may not be seen in our day. All things may not be shaped precisely as we would have them. But God will not desert His Church, or any part of it, so long as the earnest striving to maintain the truth of God unimpaired still goes on. Doubtless in ancient days "candle-sticks" might be removed even from Churches of Apostolic foundation, but it could not be until they had departed from the ways of Christ and grieved His Holy Spirit beyond the possibility of repentance and reform.

FOR those who deplore evil tendencies allowed to go on unchecked by the appointed guardians of the Church, dangerous teachings unrebuked, worldliness coming in like a flood, there are two courses which are inadmissible. The first is to sit supine, as who should say: "The foundations are cast down, and what shall the righteous do?" It is the attitude of those who seem to think it right to say: "Let God take care of His own, He has no need of our efforts." They would make no move, for instance, to guard the ministry or the episcopate against the admission of unfit men, and appeal to cases where those whose teachings were at variance with the Faith of the Church were thus admitted, and yet, by the mercy of God, no harm ensued. There is a promise that the gates of hell shall not prevail against the Church, but this promise does not ensure the permanence of any particular portion of the Church or division of Christianity. There are regions of the world where the Christian religion once prevailed and flourished for awhile, but afterward withered away. Each member of the Church, therefore, is bound in the state of life to which he is called, whether bishop, priest, or layman, to vindicate by word and example the priceless truths and obligations of Christ's holy religion. It is a matter in which there can be no compromise with the world, and no weak tolerance of error. Nor must there be faint-heartedness and discouragement if effort seem vain and false teaching and weak-kneed morality gain their triumphs from time to time.

THE other course which is inadmissible, is desertion in the time of trial. A sad example has been afforded of this just now by the defection of Dr. De Costa. It is the soldier deserting the field of battle in the midst of the conflict. The cause of truth can win no battles on such terms as these. The often cited case of St. Athanasius is a standing rebuke to the faint-hearted. The grand figure of this great Father of the Church looms large and strong through the mists of time, and in the smoke and confusion of the countless conflicts of the Church, stands calm and invincible. The thought of forsaking the field never crossed his mind. Even when all seemed against him the idea of failure was to him impossible. In courage and confidence few have been his equals. Even though he had himself been called to suffer martyrdom, and that at the moment when Arianism was at the height of its power and to the ordinary vision seemed destined to dominate the Church forever, it is certain that his indomitable hopefulness would never have been clouded for a moment. It is this union of active contention for the truth of God with unflinching hope, resolute battle with error, along with unshaken trust in God and His Church, that is needed among us in these days, when not only the great truths for which the Church stands are in question, but the very foundations of supernatural religion. As faithful Churchmen, we cannot stand still and let things take their course; but while not hesitating to draw attention to existing tendencies, and not ceasing to resist the evil, we are also bound to say to ourselves and to others, nil desperandum. The Apostles toiled all night without avail, but in the brightness of the morning Jesus stood on the shore, and in a moment their labors were rewarded beyond all hope.

IT is too sadly evident that Dr. De Costa has not conducted his part in this warfare in this spirit of faith and hope. For several years he has brooded over the evils which he has seemed to see existing in the Episcopal Church. He has drawn up formidable lists of many serious things, which have been sent to the bishops and clergy throughout the Church. In so far as the indictment was true, it was a call, certainly, to vigilance and to active and untiring effort, but it gave no cause for despair. If one-half of it was well-grounded, it should have been evident that such a state of things would require a long time to cure. Hardly in one generation could so many evils be set right. No man has a right to enumerate what he conceives to be the corruptions of the existing Church, and then put himself in the attitude of saying: "If these are not reformed by such a date the Church will cease to enjoy any longer the favor or the forbearance of God." Optimism, not pessimism, is the true spirit of the servant of God; not a sentimental optimism which causes him to ignore evils which really exist, but the optimism which consists in unshaken faith in the promises of God, while he fulfills to the utmost the plain duties which lie before him.

NEVER must it be forgotten, also, that there is a bright side as well as a dark side. And this bright side is not simply that which we contemplate in the vision of faith. It is not reserved for the time of the final triumph of the Kingdom of God. All along through the history of the Church the light and shadow appear side by side. There is no age in which formidable evils do not appear within the very bosom of the Church. There is no age in which the Church ceases to fulfill her mission of great good. It is so now, both in the Anglican Church and in the Episcopal Church of our own country. There are many faithful and earnest bishops, there are hundreds of orthodox and self-denying priests, there are thousands of devout lay-people. There is work being done on every hand which cannot be lost. Whatever may be true of individuals, this Church has not forsaken or compromised the Faith. During the period of the revision of the Prayer Book, there were those who hoped to make the book more comprehensive, even to the extent of obscuring or compromising principles which are bound up with the distinctive claims of the Church; but the result was that the Prayer Book today is a stronger witness than ever to the ancient Faith. The Pastoral of the House of Bishops in 1894, re-affirmed in 1895, speaks with no uncertain sound of the great verities of our holy religion. Dr. De Costa is very far adrift when he speaks of "the Church" as approving the shipwreck of faith which some have made. No single formula has as yet been touched so as to be in the slightest degree depraved, and the voice of the collective episcopate is clear.

THE difficulties with which we have to deal are not such as arise from ambiguity in the authorized formularies of the Church, or from failure to provide safeguards against the admission to the ministry of unbelieving or unfit men. Rather they are of a practical kind. The Church may provide that men shall sign certificates of their belief that the Bible is the "Word of God." She may compel them to take the most explicit vows at ordination. But how shall she meet the case of those who persuade themselves somehow that they may sign such certificates, though they do not believe what they put their hands to, or who will, at one of the most solemn moments of their lives, make vows, to which, if they attach any meaning, it is certainly not one which has ever been attributed to them before, or which a plain man can understand? If, under our present restrictions, an acknowledged Unitarian can enter the priesthood, or another who denies that the Prayer Book is a proper standard of doctrine, it is hard to see what forms of words could be devised by which the Church can protect herself. It is a condition of things which even a quarter of a century ago would have been accounted impossible. It could not have been anticipated. It is not wonderful, therefore, that in the presence of such a phenomenon the Church should, for a time, stand confounded, hardly knowing how to find a remedy. But who, in view of the past history of the Church, and her present efficiency in so many ways, has a right to doubt that a remedy will be found?

ONE feature on the brighter side of things is the recent unexpected turn of affairs in reference to marriage and divorce. At the last General Convention it came to light that fifteen hundred clergymen, priests and bishops, were in favor of a stringent canon which should set this Church at once before the world, without compromise or faltering, on the side of absolute morality. Many people, within and without the Church, looked for decisive action. Many supposed that the General Convention had met for that very purpose. But the Convention passed and nothing was effected, and people said: "The Episcopal Church is always worldly—she will do nothing"; and Churchmen were also tempted to think it vain to hope for any effective legislation from such a body. And now, beyond expectation, the diocese of New York, with its Bishop, has given renewed life to this great movement. The Bishop of Kentucky has declared his adhesion to it, manfully acknowledging that he was among those who opposed a stringent canon on this subject. It can not be doubted that more will follow. We can feel almost certain that two years hence, when the General Convention again comes together, the House of Bishops, at least, will be at one on this pressing question. Such a prospect ought to give new hope to those who are inclined to be most despondent. And if, on such a matter as this, in the face of the strongest influences the world can bring to bear, the Church shall dare to set herself right, who can doubt that on other points, less clear, she will also in the end assert herself, in practice as well as in profession? "The foundations" are very far from being "cast down." The old motto of the Oxford Movement is one for all Churchmen, however clear their view of the evils of the times, to take to heart to-day: "In quietness and confidence shall be your strength."

THE Church Times closes an admirable article on "verts," with these words: "In sober earnest there is one insuperable argument against abandoning the English for the Roman Communion. It is drawn from the effects of the change on those who have made the passage. The good are no better for the change, the bad are unspeakably worse."

The Missionary Spirit

A CONVOCATION PAPER

BY THE REV. JOHN K. BURLISON

II.

TURNING from the consideration of these great and inspiring truths, let us glance briefly at one or two of the practical difficulties and discouragements which we always meet in any attempt to instill into those souls for which we must give an account a knowledge and love of this greatest Christian work.

We have already glanced at the blighting effect of ignorance, and so can turn to the consideration of that trouble, equally great, which arises from the feeling that the work of missions is something external, foreign to the life, spiritual and material, of the person or the parish. As long as this impression exists we can do nothing. To meet it, we have not only to interest the human sympathy, as already suggested, but also to point out the fact that all aggressive Church work and life, even in the oldest parish or diocese, is a purely missionary work. By missionary work we mean an organized effort to strengthen Christ's Kingdom among men. So the fact of the need of guilds and other organizations in our parishes, is an evidence of the missionary character of their work. In short, any Church work, whether in mission field, in diocese, in parish, or in individual, must, if it is to be really alive, bear the missionary stamp; must be a part in one great whole.

Ninety-nine times in every one hundred, when this is made plain, the reply will come: "Then we need all that we have for our home mission work. Our needs are great. Let us see to our own first. Charity begins at home." And the hardest part of this is, that it is so largely true. The parish priest knows it only too well. The needs are great, he cannot deny it; and the danger is that there the matter will end.

But we need to look only a little further to see that our own necessities, instead of preventing our giving, should cause us to give. The fact that we need the help ourselves is the very reason why we should give it away. In the parish established for years, with so much of what is necessary for active parochial work, with the outside respect and consideration which its history and life gives; here the needs are great, are pressing, are imperative. What, then, must be the desperate need, the need which cries aloud for help, of those weak, struggling congregations, new to the life and power of the Church, fighting for life against prejudice and hostility, and poor in everything but faith. The charity, so long since begun at home, which can stay at home in the face of needs like this, is not charity.

The real difficulty lies deeper. Our people disregard or deny the claims of others because they have a false understanding of the life of the Church. Through the fault of some one who should have taught them better, they make the parish the unit of Church life. They say "I believe in the Holy, Catholic Church, the communion of saints," and then try to narrow down that communion to the limits of their own parish. This is congregationalism, individualism, selfishness. If the communion of saints means anything at all, then there can be but one unit, and that is the Catholic Church.

Brethren, it is this spirit of egotism, this narrow congregationalism, which has killed many a soul, has ruined many a parish, and which, if it is not checked, will threaten the very life of the Church. Christ said to that Church, "Lo, I am with you always," but before that he had said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." The promise was to those who obeyed, and if we "do it not," then it matters not what our history, our organization, or our claims may be, that Divine Presence will pass from us and be given to others. "For he that hath, to him shall be given; and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath." So when a man or a parish declares, by word or deed, that it will have no part in the work of missions, such an one is but publishing to the world his spiritual darkness and destitution. It matters not though the place of worship may be rich with the gems of art and architecture; though the worship be replete with all that can dignify and elevate. In doing this we must not omit the weightier matters of the law—justice, mercy, and truth. Spiritual life and selfishness cannot dwell together.

There is an old epitaph which says: "What I spent on self I wasted; what I hoarded, that I lost; what I gave, that I have." And when we see the costly memorials reared in many a church "to the glory of God" in very small letters, "and in memory of" some name which can be read almost from the farthest part of the church, and then think of souls and congregations without the Bread of Life, without a place of worship which they can call their own, we cannot but wonder how it looks to Him who said: "That they all may be one, as Thou, Father, art in Me and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may know that Thou hast sent Me." Is this condition to the glory of God, or the glory of man?

Dear brethren, one other word in this connection. This part of our work, to teach a true self-denial to our people, even in that which concerns the glory of God, is the hardest part—hardest, perhaps, because it is the most vital. There is one help in this which we can each utilize, if we will. Every priest knows that the clergy give to the full extent of their means. But this is seldom known to others. The rule, "Let not your right hand know," is almost always observed. May not this rule be carried too far? It is infinitely pleasanter to do our alms in secret. But when it comes to the cause of missions, what better sermon can the pastor give his people than that of his own example? We know how often, in order that God's work may be done, we must admit some soul into that sacred sanctuary which is within us. We have promised to make ourselves wholesome examples and patterns to the flock of Christ. The hidden example, the unknown pattern, is useless. Should we not, in this work, "Let our light so shine before men that they may see our good works, and glorify our Father which is in heaven."

The last pastoral letter reminded us most solemnly that Christ's advent waits upon our efforts. This is no place for personal reminiscences, but I am constrained to say that twenty-five years of life as child and man, as layman, deacon, and priest, in the mission field North and South, East and West, among the white man and the red, has impressed this truth ever more deeply upon my heart. Christ's kingdom in the souls of men, and hence in the Church Triumphant, for we all recognize the fact that this second can only follow after the first, depends upon us. In other words, the work of bringing men to Christ and of bringing the knowledge of Christ to men, is not the duty of the person, it is not the duty of the parish, it is not the duty of the Church—it is the life. In my experience, without a single exception, the person or parish fullest of missionary zeal is the person or parish fullest of spiritual life. So when we present the cause of missions as a duty only, we do both the cause and our hearers a grievous wrong. It is so much more than duty, so much beyond duty, that the statement becomes almost a mis-statement. If we try to present the cause only from a sense of duty, or as a duty, we may be sure that we are not presenting it, but misrepresenting it.

All this leads us up to one great crowning fact. The missionary spirit is God the Holy Ghost. He is the Spirit of the heart, who will not let that heart be content until it has shared with every creature the knowledge of the love of Christ. He is the Spirit who will indeed cause the heart to embody its love and reverence to God in wreathed pillar and flowered capital, in vaulted roof and glowing tracery, in molten metal and in pictured window, but who, before and above all this, will lead the heart to spend and be spent even to the uttermost, that the message of the Bethlehem angels may be spread "even to the ends of the world." The missionary spirit is God the Holy Ghost. He who appeared in the fiery tongues of Pentecost reiterated the missionary commission of the Ascension Mount, in that the first good gift which He brought to men was that "they began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance." And thus He proclaimed Himself the great Spirit of Missions.

Bearing this great truth in mind, we must in all our work strive not for definite results alone, but for permanent. It is not enough that a missionary address is followed by a larger offering, unless its effects go on into a larger living. It is not enough to have an enthusiastic missionary service or meeting, unless this is followed by a consistent missionary being. The Spirit of Missions is also the Spirit of Life, so what is joined in God let not man try to dis sever. We build God's visible temples, so far as we may, for all time. This greater temple which we strive to raise in the hearts of our people must have a foundation no less strong, a structure no less enduring.

The first question of those whose hearts were touched by the first missionary sermon was, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" It was the work and the mark of the Spirit of Missions and of Life, and His work, my brethren, if it is His work, must bear the same mark to day.

"What can we do to work God's work, to prosper and increase
The brotherhood of all mankind—the reign of the Prince of Peace?
What can we do to hasten the time, the time that shall surely be,
When the earth shall be full of the glory of God, as the waters cover the sea?"

"March we forth in the strength of God, with the banner of Christ unfurled,
That the light of the glorious Gospel of Truth may shine throughout the world.
Fight we the fight with sorrow and sin, to set their captives free,
That the earth may be filled with the glory of God, as the waters cover the sea."

Letters to the Editor

SUNDAY EVENING SERVICES

To the Editor of The Living Church:

If some experienced of your readers would kindly set forth what constitutes success at the evening service, I am quite sure that a little army of us would be more than grateful. This parish has a population of 6,000, the morning service is well attended, and in the evening less than half the number, but with few exceptions, those present are the same as in the morning. To prepare, say, 104 Sunday sermons, and the holy day addresses, besides the regular week evening sermon, and all the Lenten extra sermons, all this in the space of a year, and year after year, means far more work than any bishop is ever called upon to do, and more than the average parish priest can do, doing justice to himself or his flock. I have attempted to read concise pages from the ripest divinity scholars on subjects of vital interest, that every member of Christ's Body should delight to know, but alas, I presume they lack the amusing feature, and thus are not acceptable. We seem to have drifted into a queer position, for while only a remnant attend, they desire a double best effort for their special benefit; selfishly never taking into account and consideration that their priest has already officiated at three services—one Celebration, one Sunday school service and Bible class, delivered one sermon at the morning service, conducted another service and preached, and not infrequently administered the sacrament of Baptism in the afternoon, besides the fatigue of travel to and from the out-station. In all that is reasonable, is it to be expected that a second sermon at the evening service can be delivered, full of the composer's zeal and personality? The denominations try attractions, in the advertising of catchy topics, lectures on such subjects as Dickens, with lime-light effects.

In setting forth this question I may not have added a new thought, but I set forth a difficulty that I am confronted with, and I am asking a word of cheer from some who have been enabled to overcome similar conditions. I am voicing the desideratum of many a faithful priest.

DIVINITY SCHOOLS FOR COLORED MEN

To the Editor of The Living Church:

I have been interested in the letter written by "Presbyter," on the subject of "Colored Divinity Schools," and like Dr. Grint I have wondered why he does not sign his name. I hope that he is not a colored man, for the Commission for Work Among Colored People might be pained to have a negro speak of King Hall as a "Jim Crow annex." However, my concern in this matter is with the last paragraph in "Presbyter's" letter, where he advises the General Church not to support "colored" schools in Virginia or Tennessee. Why Tennessee? Tennessee has no colored divinity school, and the Sewanee Seminary belongs to 18 dioceses. Tennessee is trying to give a solid Church training to a number of colored men pursuing university studies in Fisk University, but it does not in any way restrict the choice as to seminary of those who desire to take a theological education. Tennessee is all right.

"WHY I AM A CHURCHMAN"

To the Editor of The Living Church:

All interested in the growth and prosperity of the Church in the United States must recognize that nothing of greater importance and weight has ever been set forth than may be found in the answers to the above question in the Living Church Quarterly for 1899. How natural, then, the wish to have these published in pamphlet form and sent broadcast all over the land. Some years ago three bishops and one presbyter (the latter having since been added to the apostolic company) treated each a consecutive section of the Episcopal Encyclical on Reunion. The Church Unity Society appealed for funds to circulate these articles in pamphlet form among those ministering in the various denominations, which project, it is understood, was a failure. Those who have secured these replies for the Quarterly have already rendered great service to the Church, not only in the ability and fairness of the writers, but in their judicious selection; and yet it does seem as if greater service, and more abiding, could still be rendered if the articles were to be published in pamphlet form, which, unless all human calculations are at fault, would have a greater circulation among our own members than any other Church document ever published, and yield an adequate profit.

The reverend clergy, with the lay co-operation that they could secure, would no doubt then be responsible for the circulation of the pamphlet among the Dissenting ministers in their cures. The early Methodist preachers were thus utilized in the circulation of their denominational literature, this telling almost as much as did their strong episcopal regimen in the upbuilding of their system in America.

When the greatest Church book of the age was published, the then Presiding Bishop, Dr. John Williams, congratulated the gifted author on his effort, as tending to make Churchmen from principle rather than from sentiment, and this is what seems to run all through the answers to the question in the Quarterly—the need of being not primarily Episcopalians from preference, but Churchmen from conviction, and the Church of the United States needs to inculcate this true type of Churchmanship more to-day than ever before; hence a pamphlet of this kind seems to me most timely. If we are above all things Churchmen, as the most of these replies indicate, because thus best we may understand and follow the mind and will that was in Christ, it is axiomatic, and will become so the sooner to our brothers of the separation (as dear Bishop Coxe called them), that we can be nothing else.

"IN GOD WE TRUST"

To the Editor of The Living Church:

May I express the hope that Dr. Andrews' tender consideration for the views of certain of his fellow-citizens and, at the same time, a worthy desire to be consistent in his own position, will cause him indignantly to refuse to accept any portion of his salary, as superintendent of the public schools of Chicago, in U. S. coin which carries upon its face the obnoxious words, "In God we trust."

Of course, he ought also to instruct the teachers in the schools to take similar action. If, through exigency of circumstances, such coin should be in his possession, let him be careful to enquire, before passing it out to the tradesmen with whom he may have dealings, whether the tender of such payment will be painful to their "religious" feelings.

Education and Religion

THE necessity for combining religious instruction with the scholarship of the universities and schools, if we are to develop the highest and best citizenship, was elaborated with much powerful and persuasive argument by Bishop Spalding (R. C.), of Peoria, in his address to the students at the thirteenth convocation of the University of Chicago.

The scholarly prelate declared, what is plainly obvious to those who have given more than superficial attention to the schools, that the whole question of educational reform and progress is simply a question of employing good, and removing poor, teachers. Neither a fund of erudition, nor the most advanced methods of teaching, can supply the indispensable pedagogical requisite—"the awakened mind, the quick and comprehensive view." The true teacher must be an inspirer and a leader, and in order to mold character and develop the higher attributes of those who come within the range of his influence, he must have an immovable and unshaken faith in the basic principles of Christianity.

Rules and laws are of little use to those who have not been brought up to desire and love the guidance of law, and mere scholarship will not make a good citizen, unless his inner conscience has been touched by the strong appeal of Christian example, and he has learned to have abiding faith in the principle of law.

Religion appeals to something more than the emotional and imaginative in man. It supplies the basis of our present civilized ideas of correct human conduct. But in order to make these ideas effective in conduct, there must be continuous appeal to the emotional nature—the soul—of man, and up to this time in the development of the human race, nothing has been devised that can take the place of religion in appealing to the soul side of man's nature.

"How shall the teacher be a builder of character, a former of men, if he be not illumined and strengthened by divine faith?" is the question which Bishop Spaulding puts to those who decry the employment of religion in appealing to the "moral sensibilities" of the students of our schools and universities. But it cannot be taught in books. Religious instruction depends for its success upon the character and personality of teachers.—Chicago Times-Herald.

All Saints' Day

BY LOUISA A'HMUTY NASH

Our saints!

In rainbow-glories bright our thought impaints

Them where they are,
Reflecting, like a star,

God's brightness near and far.

The saints of olden days, with haloed head,

The patriarch and prophet-seers who tread

The courts of heaven, and martyrs who through fire were led.

My saints!

Whom I have loved; and then with bitter plaints

Have seen them go
With ne'er returning tides that flow
From earth to heaven, and so,

They wait upon that radiantly illumined height,

While mists of earth's deep valleys shade them like the night.

Do they yet see me, with some wondrous sense of spirit sight?

Our saints!

Are still around us, though with earthly taints;

God's servants true
The kingdom self subdue,
And take a wider view,

For His dear sake, of duties that belong.

Some champion the right, and others fight the wrong,
All bless the troubled with help both sweet and strong.

My saints!

Are here. They bless my home with dear restraints,

With bonds of love
And ministry sweet that prove
They are in heart with saints above

One blest communion, there of saints, and here!

How does it fill the soul with holy cheer;

How does it make of earth a heavenly sphere!

Commemoration of Holy Women

BY MARY ANN THOMSON

O Christ our Lord, of woman born,
By women tended here,
Who didst upon Thy rising morn
To women first appear!

The gifts of grace, as years go round,
The Church adoring owns
In sainted daughters, steadfast found
As polished corner-stones.

We bless Thee, Lord, for her whose name
The Church recalls to-day,
And all who passed to saintly fame
Along the narrow way;

In Thine atoning blood they lav'd
Their robes and made them white;
hen walked, from sin and darkness saved,
As children of the light;

Some wore their royal crowns on earth,
And some were poor while here,
But all with crowns of priceless worth
In glory shall appear.

O King of Saints! to Thee we cry
To cleanse our hearts from sin;
Grant us the lures of ill to fly,
The crown of life to win.

Philadelphia, Oct., 1899.

IN our last issue we presented a portrait of the new Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Arthur Llewellyn Williams, but owing to the pressure on our space, were unable at that time to give the following items of interest regarding his personal history: Mr. Williams was born at Owen Sound, Ontario, Can., Jan. 30, 1856, but removed to the Sault Ste. Marie with his father, the Rev. Richard J. Williams, a Presbyterian minister of culture and learning, who preached for years among the Indian tribes. The son was educated partly by his accomplished father, and partly at the Collegiate Institute of East Greenwich, Rhode Island. In early manhood Mr. A. L. Williams took service in Colorado, with the Denver, Utah, & Pacific Railway, and was thus intimately associated with it at its inception and building. After six years of this life he was brought into the Church, and then confirmed by Bishop Spalding. When it was decided that he should enter Holy Orders, he came to Chicago in January, 1886, and took in the Western Theological Seminary a course of two and a half years' reading, which he completed in 1888. He was ordered to the diaconate in St. John's cathedral, Denver, by the Bishop, and subsequently advanced to the priesthood. He was the first clergyman of the Church in the Old Ute Reservation, his field covering an area of 13,000 square miles, or rather more than that of the kingdom of Holland. After a term of three years in this pioneer work (involving much horseback and buck-board riding), in which he built at Meeker, Colo., a stone-church costing $6,000, he was called to St. Paul's, Denver, where he built a fine rectory, and paid off a large debt on the church, which was then consecrated. In 1892 he became rector of Christ church, Woodlawn, Chicago, where the growth under his administration has been notable. May 17, 1899, he was elected Bishop-coadjutor of Nebraska, being consecrated Oct. 18th.

THE young people who were interested in the bright story by Miss Forrester, "The Girls of St. Dorothy" (the boys were not left out of the story, by any means), will be glad to read the sequel beginning in this week's issue of THE LIVING CHURCH. It is called "Virginia's Air Castle," and both the girls of St. Dorothy and the boys of the Excelsior Club help to build it.

THE Rev. Chas. A. Briggs, D. D., has resumed his work of preparing students for the Presbyterian ministry, as a professor in the Union Theological Seminary. He has also begun an open agitation of his position on biblical criticism, by preaching on the subject in the church of the Holy Communion, Sunday, Oct. 22nd. The sermon denounced in no mild terms those who oppose his views.

Pen-and-Ink-lings

IN a report of a recent convocation in South-west Virginia, a daily paper stated that the topic for consideration was, "How to bring the destructive features of the Protestant Episcopal Church to the thankful consideration of the people!"

NOT satisfied with cobble-stones and wood, the city of Lyons has been experimenting with glass as a street pavement. Since last November the Rue de la Republique has been paved with devitrified glass. This new product is obtained from broken glass heated to a temperature of 1,250 degrees, and compressed in matrices by hydraulic force. The glass pavement is laid in the form of blocks eight inches square, each block containing sixteen parts in the form of checkers. These blocks are so closely fitted together that water cannot pass between them, and the whole pavement looks like one gigantic checker-board. As a pavement it is said to have greater resistance than stone; it is a poor conductor of cold, and ice will not form on it readily; dirt does not accumulate upon it so easily as upon stone, and it will not retain microbes. It is more durable than stone, and just as cheap.

THE present Archbishop of Canterbury is a most determined character; one of the old sort of prelates given to fighting, and fighting hard, and who insists on having his way, no matter who tries to obstruct. He has the reputation of treating his clergy rather brusquely, and of saying what he means in few words and short. When Bishop of London he was, of course, besieged almost daily by a host of clergy who wanted something, and as he sat at work in his large study these applicants and supplicants were marshaled one by one into his presence. The Bishop, almost without exception, continued to work on without once looking up, heard what his visitor had to say, delivered his answer, and the man was then shown out. It happened that a Detroit clergyman reached England with an introduction to the Bishop, which the Detrouiter had reason to know would insure him a kindly welcome. He forwarded the introduction, and asked for an interview. By return of post he received from the Bishop a warm, friendly letter, saying that his lordship would be delighted to see him at a certain o'clock. At the certain o'clock the Detrouiter was on hand. The procession had been filing through, and the truculent Bishop had forgotten, or rather did not notice, what time it was. So when the Detroit clergyman was ushered in, instead of being met with outstretched arms, there sat the Bishop writing busily. There was a long and ominous wait. Presently the Bishop, without glancing up, and in his rasping, thunderous voice, bellowed out: "Well, sir, I can give you two minutes."

For a second the Detrouiter was nearly knocked off his feet, but immediately pulled himself together, and said: "And, sir, I can give you all eternity!"

The Bishop jumped to his feet when he heard the Yankee accent, rushed forward, shook both the visitor's hands, apologized, and sat down in his chair, roaring with laughter.—Saturday Evening Post.

PROFESSOR GOTTHEIL, in an article on Zionism in the North American Review, declares that it is not purely a religious movement, nor purely an economic one; its first work has been to find a common ground on which a new Jewish nation can be built. He claims that the Palestine of the future is not to be the Palestine of missionary reports. Mesopotamia will awake from its lethargy with the completion of the Euphrates Valley Railroad, and "when that country once more supports a teeming population, as it did in the times of the old Babylonian and Assyrian kings, the hour for a new Palestine will have struck. The nearest outlet for Asia, Europewards, is the borderland of the Mediterranean Sea. That inland ocean will once again be covered with merchantmen, as it was in the days of the Italian Republics. In that upbuilding work the Jewish people in Palestine will find an occasion to use those powers which have been generated in their midst during the long centuries of exile."

Wanted, for a sober family, a man of light weight, who fears the Lor and can drive a pair of horses. He must occasionally wait at table, join the household prayer, look after the horses and read a chapter of the Bible. He must, God willing, arise at 7 o'clock in the morning, and obey his master and mistress in all lawful commands; if he can dress hair, sing psalms, and play at cribbage, the more agreeable. Wages 15 guineas a year.

A WRITER in the August Atlantic, speaking of the progress of our American Indians in recent years, says:

Bishop Hare who has devoted his life to the uplifting of the Indian in the diocese of the two Dakotas, tells of a dozen Indian clergymen, and more than fifty deacons and catechists, engaged in missionary work among the Sioux alone, and 1,600 Indian communicants in the Episcopal Church. The Indian women in his diocese contributed in one year $2,000 for missionary purposes.

BY act of the last Legislature the circulating library has become one of the State institutions of New Jersey. Twenty libraries of fifty books each will be bought by the Library Commission and sent out to communities on application. Preference will be given to communities too small to support public libraries. Each must provide a trustee and librarian, pay five dollars annually for the use of the books, and guarantee to replace all books lost or destroyed. All the libraries are exchanged once in six months.

The Women's Congress

FROM The Nineteenth Century

IT seems justifiable, in the midst of the eulogy and triumph which are sounding on every side, for the critic to raise an inquiry as to the value of a conference consisting of an overwhelming preponderance of women, which modestly undertakes, within the space of ten days, to discuss the principal problems affecting the human race. The radical defect of such a conference, which included a heterogeneous mass of opinions, will be discerned at a glance, when it is understood that theories of a most startling nature, practically overthrowing present social conditions, were propounded from a purely feminine standpoint, and subjected, in many instances, to no sort of criticism or correction, each woman speaking her own words—sense in some instances, crotchets, crude ideas, and philosophical nonsense in others—and giving her own suffrage to what seemed best in her own eyes, without any reference to what had gone before, or was to come five minutes later. There may be discussions which confuse the human mind, throw it out of its bearings, and even for a time impede it in the employment of means for the ascertaining of conclusions and principles, without which the social fabric, largely built up through the sound work of old-fashioned women now slumbering in churchyards, cannot exist; and if we examine in detail much of what was said at this Congress, we cannot, I think, if we are reasoning beings, accustomed to weighing arguments, escape from the conviction that the majority of discussions were of this futile kind, characterized by wild notions, cast about, not by enthusiastic young men who have naturally and properly a rooted distrust of the fixed order of things, but by mature women.

The first impression which a person habituated to reducing, or to endeavoring to reduce, his ideas into some sort of unity, derived from this conference, was its complete and fatal want of any central principles, without which all discussions are as idle as a lever without a fulcrum. I do not mean that we must demand a unity of opinion, or even of conclusion, but that surely there are certain propositions and facts which either are or are not—they cannot be both; and the single value in this interchange of contradictory theories is to emphasize the truths underlying them, which are important and essential, and bring them into relationship and unity. If any person found himself able to discover the fundamental principles (and by fundamental principles I do not mean the feminist bias exhibited by a large number of the speakers) of the Congress, he was more fortunate than the writer of these lines. You went into one section and heard that "Home-making" was the most beautiful and noble of functions for women, expounded, it must be admitted, in charming, but wholly vague and meaningless language; you heard five minutes later, in the same section, the singular statement that in the homes of the future (as arranged by female American orators), "thanks to evolution, household duties would be no more a part of a woman's concern than they would be a man's. The woman, like the man, would be set free from household duties for higher things." You went into one room and you heard how women had been kept down by men for centuries, not allowed to "develop" themselves or "express" themselves, had been "veiled and sleeping," according to one imaginative lady; and you went into another room and heard of the wonderful achievements of women in literature since the days of Sappho. You were frequently told, as one of the strongest arguments for the admission of women into public life, of their altruism and their disinterestedness and self-sacrifice; and you had papers sketching the ideal family life of the future, when the wife was to be paid for every service rendered to her husband and child; and a series of practical maxims from an experienced lady journalist who maintained that woman reporters wishing to be successful, must pursue their work upon the same "high plane" as the male reporter, who had no fine ideas of elevating his illiterate public. These instances might be multiplied to any degree, and they will suffice to show the irreconcilable standpoint of the members of the Congress. Indeed, it was difficult to free oneself from the belief that the single point of agreement seemed to be in the universal satisfaction felt that women may now take part in the struggle for existence, and fight and starve on precisely the same conditions as men!

Let the average person of sense, to say nothing of the sense of humor, read this nonsense and ask himself whether women's congresses are not a lamentable waste of energy and a painful exhibition of ignorance and folly. And a second speaker, after purring about the nice career of journalism for women, had the coolness and ignorance to declare that newspapers owed their lightness of tone to women; before they appeared on the scene, papers had been "weighty and dull!" I do not know if the speaker had ever heard tell of one Addison; but, if not, she may be recommended to a course of the "Tatler," where she will learn it is possible to be lively without being vulgar and silly and illiterate.

I do not deny that there were many useful and even admirable contributions to the programme of the Congress. The words of the president were set in a high key, and one wonders with how much satisfaction, pleasure, and sympathy she can have listened to the reading of a large number of papers. In the handicrafts section there were some useful practical papers, one specially valuable from Mrs. Lethaby; and, I think, no one can have listened to Mrs. Sidney Webb's admirably and moderately expressed arguments upon restrictions in women's labor—in singular contrast to the prejudiced views of some other speakers upon this question—without a feeling of gratification in her sense, judgment, and expert knowledge. But these admissions do not, I think, in any way affect my unfavorable estimate of the Congress. The general effect of the Congress was misleading and mischievous, because it was not representative and impartial; in the professions, the experiences of successful women only were given; the life of the average journalist or actress, with its struggles, its sordid anxieties, its overwork and underpay, was never referred to, there being a universal conspiracy to represent woman's wage-earning work as wholly desirable and beneficial. Because, also, large statements about woman's equality, equal pay, and so forth, mean nothing at all, unless they are carried to their logical conclusion, and tested by their practical and permanent effect upon society. So that to know whether wage-earning is desirable for married working women, we ought to have the joint testimony of working men and women, as to whether present experiments in wage-earning of this kind are satisfactory; and to know where the practical difficulties of the servant question lie, we ought to have the views of persons actually concerned—of fathers of the working class who prefer their daughters going into factories, of servants themselves, and of middle-class householders of small means.

The tendency of such congresses is to foster an enmity between two sexes who are part of the human race, and who, with peculiar qualities and characteristics fitting each for diverse service in the world, have hopes and feelings and aspirations which are common to both, making their interests and happiness interdependent on one another, and identical with each other; and any attempt to achieve the welfare of one, without regard to the race at large, is mischievous. And furthermore, their main tendency to rate the worth and value of a woman's services to the world according to the market rate of wages she earns, to confound the art of living with "earning a living," to exaggerate the importance of a woman's work in activities which are adequately accomplished by men, and to underrate all the simple homely duties which have been dignified and rendered lovely by myriads of noble and cultured women, and instinctively consecrated by the wisdom of generations, is wanting in breadth, insight, and loftiness, and productive of unnecessary confusion and chaos.—FRANCES H. LOW.

Book Reviews and Notices

God's Education of Man. By William Dewitt Hyde, President of Bowdoin College. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

Any book from President Hyde, and especially on this subject, would deserve attention, for as a thinker and college president he occupies a prominent place amongst American thinkers. While not a large volume, it deals with a great subject; viz., the restatement of the Christian faith. As an earnest thinker and a religious man, he sees the dangers which threaten modern Protestantism, and is anxious to ward them off. There are many things in his book which will make Churchmen thankful for the blessings coming through the possession of the living, historic Faith "once-for all delivered." While in our age, as in every age, the Faith must be adapted to the need of the times, it cannot be altered or "reorganized." Yet this is the task President Hyde has set before him. He speaks of "the reorganization of our faith." "The new faith will not be a mechanical fraction of the old, whether large or small." It will, however, be a "reproduction of the essential features of the old, in fresh, vigorous functional relationship." From his point of view there is little room for the principle of authority. He is subjective, and makes much use of "insight." The articles of the new faith are "rooted in a central spiritual insight." The Trinity, e. g., is a matter of insight, and apparently has no objective reality. The new life which is necessary in order to please God, comes through conversion, and apart from Baptism. This, with Confirmation and Holy Communion, may be useful, but is not essential. For he says: "It matters little.

* * * whether the Lord's Supper be observed with bread and wine, or with bread and water, or with bread alone; whether Baptism be with little water or with much; * * * whether the creed be old or modern." Throughout, however, President Hyde is certainly loyal to the Person of Jesus Christ. "For man or Church, the measure of devotion and love and worship to Jesus Christ, is the accurate and infallible measure of practical power" (p. 28). "To call this man Jesus less than divine, or quarrel with His title, Son of God, is to empty the very name of God of all the historic associations and concrete content that give it worth and make it worshipful" (p. 30).

Churchmen will differ from the author in many things, but they will find his book stimulating, and in it much with which they can sympathize; e. g., this mark of true service: "To do right, out of a tender and loving regard for the persons who are affected by our action; so to live that no man may be the poorer, no woman may be the sadder, no child may be more wretched for aught that we have done or left undone; so to live, that through our words and deeds men may see the truth and enjoy the beautiful, and reverence the pure, and honor the noble, and possess the means of material and social satisfaction—this is to share the life and love and blessedness of God" (p. 20).

The concluding chapter is an interesting discussion of abstract and concrete idealism in philosophy, art, literature, and religion, and its application to the conditions of our age. The conclusion reached is, that abstract idealism has so prepared the way that concrete idealism, as found in the Saviour, will be the great force in the twentieth century world.

The Blue and the Gray—on Land. An Undivided Union. By Oliver Optic. Completed by Edward Stratemeyer. Boston: Lee & Shepherd. Price, $1.50.

This is the sixth and last volume of the "Blue and Gray—On Land" series. It is the last book which will bear upon its title page the familiar name of "Oliver Optic." This uncompleted work of the well-known writer of juvenile stories has been finished, in accordance with the outline left by the author at his death two years ago, by Mr. Edward Stratemeyer, who is himself well known as a teller of tales for boys. Mr. Stratemeyer, in the completion of this work, has been at great pains to make it, from an historical standpoint, as accurate as possible. He has consulted all available authorities, including the government records, records of the Army of the Cumberland, and biographies of the principal generals who took part in the various operations described. The story is told very interestingly, and the many dangers and perils with which the romance is interwoven are vividly pictured. It is gratifying that this unfinished work of a man who has been so good a friend to boy readers for so many years, has now been so well presented to the public.

The Roman Primacy. By the Rev. Luke Rivington, D. D. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Pp. 405. Price, $2.50.

Since this book was published, its author has been called away from the troubled scenes of his earthly life beyond the reach of controversy and the strife of tongues. As a member of the Cowley Order he gained almost world-wide fame as a powerful preacher. Upon his secession to the Roman Communion, he at once sank to the lower level of a controversial writer of the most ultramontane type. Like others who had gone before him, he seemed to lose the use of his highest powers upon his submission to Rome. He had also the misfortune to be pitted against writers for whom in learning and literary ability he was no match. This, his latest work, is largely a reply to Canon Bright's masterly study of "The Roman See in the Early Church." His method of combating the conclusions established by the learned Canon, is to take a brief period of ancient Church history, and examine it minutely, with a view to determine what views of the Papacy then prevailed. The period chosen (430 to 451) is a crucial one, including (as it does) three councils of the Church, two of them General Councils. His line of treatment may be gathered from the following quotation:

Everything that is going on round about us at this moment in the intellectual and religious world seems to point to the necessity of answering one crucial question: If there is a body of truth revealed by Christ for the permanent welfare of our race, where is its guardian? And to answer this question it will naturally be asked, where was its guardian in the past? The councils of Ephesus and Chalcedon give a clear, emphatic answer to that question. The guardianship of the Faith was entrusted to the episcopate of the Catholic Church, of which the head was the successor of St. Peter in the see of Rome—and this by divine institution. The relationships of that see to the universal Church cannot be seen anywhere more clearly than in the records of the council of Ephesus in 431, and the Council of Chalcedon in 451.

How well the writer sustains this contention we shall leave any who are interested in the subject to judge for themselves. His examination of the period chosen is thorough and painstaking, but is conducted rather in the spirit of a special pleader than that of a judge. We find in it none of the calm, judicial temper which distinguishes the genuine historical student.

Christ Our Creditor. By U. L. Rigley, A. M. Second Edition. Chicago and New York: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, 50 cts.

This is an argument for the tithe, and it is well carried out. The writer considers the subject from all standpoints, and his conclusions are very strong. It seems strange that such a book should be necessary for Christians. Our advantages and privileges far exceed those of the Jews, yet we have lost the art of giving according to system. The Church would be benefited if Christians would read this book and carry out the divine law it enunciates.

The Kingdom of Heaven, Here and Hereafter. By Rayner Winterbotham, Canon of St. Mary's Cathedral, Edinburgh. London: Methuen & Co. Pp. 266. Price, $1.25.

This volume forms a part of the Churchman's Library, edited by the Rev. John Henry Burn. It is concerned with the parables of the Kingdom. The author's idea is to give a brief and popular exposition of each of them, thus bringing out the many-sided teaching of our Lord about His Church. "The parables of the Kingdom," he says, "are like pictures or photographs of some great edifice, taken from points of view so various that they bear almost no resemblance to one another. Any one or two, taken apart from the rest, would be erroneous, because factually incomplete. And yet each is absolutely true in itself, and its truth is substantiated by Christian history and Christian experience, so far as these have gone. What we have to do, therefore, if we wish to understand the Kingdom of Heaven as our Lord thought of it, is to take all these parables as they are, to place ourselves at their varying standpoints, and to realize that aspect of the Kingdom which is presented in each." Proceeding upon these principles

The Saving of Money

by the use of Royal

Baking Powder is considerable. Royal is economical, because it possesses more leavening power and goes further.

Royal saves also because it always makes fine, light, sweet food; never wastes good flour; butter and eggs.

More important still is the saving in health. Royal Baking Powder adds anti-dyspeptic qualities to the food.

There is no baking powder so economical in practical use, no matter how little others may cost, as the Royal ples, the author makes a study of these fifteen parables, which proves fresh, interesting, and profitable. We recommend it to Christian preachers and teachers as well worth having.

Imitation baking powders almost invariably contain alum. Alum makes the food unwholesome.

Leaves from the Golden Legend. Chosen by H. D. Madge, LL. M. With illustrations by C. M. Watts. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. Price, $1.25

The extracts from the lives of the saints given in this volume, are not, for the most part strictly historical, but they are, says Renan, "marvelously instructive as regards the period to which they belong, and its manners." The Golden Legend was the favorite manual of the most popular literature of the middle ages. Its author, Jacobus de Voragine, besides being a theologian and a statesman, was devoted to study. He was noted, during his life, for his virtue, his charity, his untiring efforts in the promotion of peace among the quarrelsome Genoese. He rose to the position of Provincial of the Dominicans, in Lombardy, and for the seven years preceeding his death, in 1298, he was Archbishop of Genoa. Of the nine works which historians ascribe to him, The Golden Legend is the one by which he is best known. After three centuries of fame, it fell into great obscurity, and is now rarely seen. The forty-four legends included in this volume illustrate the fanciful aspects of the literature relating to the lives of the Saints. In its outward appearance, the little book is exceedingly attractive, bound in blue, with an appropriate cover design in darker blue and gold.

The Spirit of Watchfulness, and Other Sermons. By T. T. Carter, Warden of Clewer and Canon of Oxford. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Pp. 286. Price, $1.75.

This newest volume from his pen will be warmly welcomed by all who know Canon Carter's other works. The Church of England has produced no more deeply spiritual writer than he. What Dr. Neale was to the last generation Canon Carter is to this. Each of them has vastly enriched the devotional literature of the Church. This book of sermons, like all which Canon Carter has written, is of solid and permanent value. The sermons are short, widely varied in subject, and full of food for thought. There is nothing rhetorical about them; they are calm, sober, and chastened in spirit. They embody the results of profound experience, and exhibit the most penetrating insight. To all who would learn the secrets of the spiritual life, they will be extremely helpful. They form really a book of devotion, suitable for daily or occasional reading, and worthy of a place in the most carefully chosen library.

A RECENT issue of Appleton's "Home Reading Books" is "Our Navy in Time of War," by Franklin Matthews. The period to which the book relates is from 1861 to 1898, and the evolution from the old naval methods to the new battleship, is illustrated in the text and by numerous pictures. A colored plate is given showing the dress of sailors and officers connected with the navy. This book will be a popular addition to a popular series.

DEAN STUBBS of Ely, who is now visiting this country, is well-known as a specialist in social questions, having made that subject his chief study. Mr. Thomas Whittaker has introduced in this country one of his principal works, entitled, "Christ and Economics," (price $1.50), in which, through a series of discourses on the Sermon on the Mount, he ably supports the proposition that in the principles of Christ lies the true solution of our gravest modern problems.

The first issue of The American Art Annual has been published by The Macmillan Company, New York, edited by Florence N. Levy. It is a full and authentic compilation and record of the progress of art in America, without attempt at criticism. We hope that the work so happily begun will be continued, and that we may have each year an increasingly helpful and attractive book. It is requested that clubs, museums, schools, and societies interested shall send their reports, circulars, etc., to the editor before September of each year. It is not too late to attend to this

Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster who for over ten years has been the editor of Harper's Bazar, has resigned that position and joined the editorial corps of The Ladies' Home Journal, in which magazine she will hereafter conduct a prominent department. The new "Dooley" character, the new serial, "Molly Donahue," by the author of "Mr. Dooley," is announced to begin in the Christmas number.

Archdeacon Sinclair, in the course of a vigorous address in the November Quiver, urges the duty of contentment. "Some Remarkable Church Trees," is the title of an illustrated article, in which the writer deals with a number of instances of curiously-placed trees and shrubs, including the two famous trees to be found inside Ross church. They lived long enough in their strange surroundings to grow right up into the roof, and regularly put forth leaves, but they have now been dead six or seven years. The trunks are still suffered to remain in the old church, and in the summer months are covered with a Virginia creeper which has been placed in a stone trough set at the foot of the trees. There are several stories, a new hymn tune by Wm. Ellis, F. R. C. O., A Roll of Heroic Deeds, Temperance Notes, etc.

President Hadley, of Yale College, one of the best authorities on the subject in the country, has written an article in the November Scribner's, on "The Formation and Control of Trusts." "He considers that State ownership of industrial enterprises, instead of becoming an acute national issue, as so many now expect, will tend rather to become relatively unimportant, and may not improbably be removed altogether from the field of party politics." In his article on "Pictorial Photography," Alfred Steiglitz, the amateur whose pictures have won prizes in all the great capitals of Europe, gives his ideas of the true motives that should govern artistic photography, and tells how he arrives at some of his most admired effects. The far-reaching effects and many incidents of stirring human interest connected with "The great November storm of 1898," are told by Sylvester Baxter. The pictures by H. W. Ditzler are vivid realizations of some of the scenes along the shore. A poem by Richard Henry Stoddard, "The Cricket Song—Japanese," has been beautifully illustrated in color in the Japanese manner, by Harvey Ellis. Mrs. John Drew's "Autobiographical Sketch" contains a number of personal impressions of some of the most famous actors of the century, including Booth, Wallack, Jefferson, Florence, Murdoch, Macready, and others.

Opinions of the Press

The Observer (Pres.)

"THE LARGER CHRIST."—We hear not infrequently in these days of "the larger Christ." The expression has to some minds an attractive sound. It seems to make more of Christ; it appears to promise more for Christianity. But in the interests of clear thought the phrase should be challenged. What does it mean? Is there a fact behind it? If so, what is the fact? These are important questions, and it may be that some of those who glibly use the expression "the larger Christ," would be puzzled distinctly to afford an answer to them. If Jesus Christ now is divine, as we take for granted, He must be the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. A divine Christ can be no larger to-day than He was in Galilee, nor will He be any greater in the next century than He is in this. Divinity does not admit such terms of comparison; in its essential being it cannot expand nor contract as the years go by. And it is contained in the notion of divinity also that it is wholly free from error and oversight. Whatever God said in the first century must be as true now as it was then. Truth never becomes obsolete. The facts of mathematics, for example, have a meaning for every generation of men, and do not vary with the passing phenomena of nature. Two and two have always made four, and must in this or in any other world. The man who says that in any world two and two make five has yet to prove his case. Until he does, we are safe in following the dictates of human consciousness in the matter.

The Household

Through Trial to Strength

BY FRANK H. SWEET

"LINDA, Linda!" The woman's voice was full of reproach, of pain—but the girl only threw out her arms wearily.

"I can't he'p hit, maw—I don't want to he'p hit!" she cried bitterly. "What's the use o' sech livin'? Oh, if on'y I was a man!"

"Why?"

"Why! So I could go off an' learn things. So I needn't be ign'rant an' no 'count." Her voice was low in its intensity, and on her face rested a wistful, almost pitiful expression. "Hit's good to be up here in the mountain, of course," she went on after a moment's pause, as her eyes swept down the valley to where the pinnacles and peaks of Otter were just visible through a bank of leaden mist, "but hit's awful to know of the worl' o' knowledge jes' outside, an' we all a hungerin' here and can't get to hit. Aun' Linda, as was here las' winter, 'lowed to get me a place in a music school—or conservator, as she called hit—but seems like she wa'n't able. She said as some girls was 'lowed to work for schoolin', an' that I would live 'long o' her. She said I had a gif for music"—then she added bitterly, "but hit's wastin' time to hone for schoolin' when I can't even get books to learn from. I 'low I'd better stop lookin' for a letter from Aun' Linda an' go to piecin' a Job's trouble bed quilt like the rest o' the mountain girls."

At the mention of letter the woman started. "Why, Jake done fetched a letter this mornin'," she exclaimed, apologetically, an' I put hit in my pocket. I cl'ar I'd clean forgot till you spoke. Mebbe hit's the one you're wishin' for. I'm might sorry."

But the girl scarcely heard. With trembling fingers and bright eyes she was opening the envelope. As she took out the letter a small slip of paper fluttered to the ground, which her mother recognized as a check. She picked it up and waited for the girl to finish reading—this was a matter of slow accomplishment, but at last she had spelled her way through, then she raised her eyes. But what a change! All the bitterness and discontent had gone out of her face. Even the lips had lost their penciled lines and were parted in a half smile.

"Hit's all come," she said, in an awed voice, "every thing I wisht for, and better. Hit was wicked in me to misdoubt the Good Lord. He's sen' me more'n I ever ast for. Aun' Linda writes her husband's doin' well, an' she can do more for me 'n she 'lowed at firs'. I need't work—on'y jest study an' learn. She says they've bought a new house and a gran' pianner, an' that I can have all the books—an' music—an' everything—I wish—for—"

Her voice had become broken, and suddenly she threw her apron over her face and rushed into the cabin.

Her mother looked after her wistfully. It was the first time she remembered to have seen the girl cry, then she followed slowly.

After a time Linda returned to her tub under the tree. When the washing was finished she went into the edge of the forest to gather firewood. As she was returning to the cabin with her arms full of dry branches, she was suddenly conscious of a hurried footstep behind her. Turning quickly, she saw a small black boy who lived in the neighborhood.

"Oh, Missy Linda, Missy Linda!" he gasped, his eyes showing white in their terror, "yo paw done smash 'issef—done kill 'issef dade, an' sont me for he'p to get him cl'ar!"

He was about to rush past when she caught him by the shoulder.

"Stop!" she commanded, sharply, "now think an' tell me slow. Speak sof' so't maw can't hear."

"Hit's jes' lak I done tole yo'," he persisted, earnestly. "Mist' Grin'l foun' a honey tree, an' was gwan chop hit w'en hit bruk squar' an' cotched him. He's plumb smash dade."

"We'll go an' see. Wait till I get some things," and leaving him standing near the edge of the clearing, she sped toward the cabin. Presently she returned with a small bundle and a bottle.

"Now-run!" she said, and, with the black boy in advance, she hurried into the forest. For half an hour they went on at a rapid pace, then the boy suddenly paused.

"Dar," and he pointed to where a large tree had fallen across the path.

Linda sprang forward with a sharp cry. Almost at her very feet a man lay pinned to the earth, his face pressed in the grass and his hands convulsively clinging to the bushes on either side.

"Oh, paw!" she cried, as she flung herself on the ground beside him, "are you much hurt?"

"I—can't—stir," came in stifled tones from the grass, "an' I'm smotherin'. If—if—you can—cl'ar—away—the stuff—from—my face—so't I'n—breathe."

With fierce energy she tore away great handfuls of roots and grass from beneath his face, and soon had a small excavation. He drew a long breath.

"Hit smells good," he said, gratefully. "I don't min' the pain much, now't I'n breathe. Hit was tur'ble."

"But what'll I do nex', paw?" she asked, looking with horror at the great mass of wood lying across him.

He tried to raise his face, but the movement caused such agony that he fell back with a groan.

"I 'low you can't do nothin' 'cep' go for men to cut the tree. Arter hit's cut they'n move hit offen me."

"But hit's seven miles to where the Biggses live—an' they're the neares'," she said slowly. "Hit 'd be long pas' dark 'fore we could be roun'."

"Hit can't be he'ped. I reckon I ain't much hurted, 'cep'n the laigs. The tree mus' a ketched. If hit hadn't, I'd a been smasht plumb flat."

At this moment the sound of distant thunder was heard. A new look of terror crept into the girl's face.

"I can't go, paw," she said, decidedly. "If a shower'd come 'fore I get back the water'd run into the holler an—an' you'd be drowned. I'll cut the tree myse'f."

There was a moment's silence, then he said slowly:

"I reckon you're right, Linda. But I mis-doubt you cuttin' the tree. Hit's tough, and would be a plumb stiff job for a man. However, you'n try."

The ax lay on the ground where it had fallen when the tree struck him. Grasping it, Linda threw off her bonnet and went vigorously to work. She was strong and muscular and had almost the endurance of a man. Clear and sharp the strokes rang through the forest, every stroke telling, in spite of her inexperience. Gradually a deep seam appeared in the surface of the massive trunk. Every moment it deepened and widened, and at last, when she paused to take breath, it had reached nearly to the centre. Dropping the ax for a moment, she went to her father. He had fainted. Telling the black boy to bring some water from the brook and bathe his head, she hurried back to her work. In the position her father was lying, it was impossible to apply ordinary restoratives.

Not a second did she pause in the work. Back and forth flew the ax, sending great chips into the forest. Perspiration streamed down her face and trickled to the ground. Her breath came in quick, short pants, and on her white face was a look of growing terror and despair. A dark stain of blood was slowly spreading over the under lip where the clinched teeth had penetrated.

But at last the tree was divided. Then she quickly cut and trimmed a strong sapling to be used as a lever. A convenient stump made a good fulcrum. Placing the lever in position, she threw her whole weight upon it. But the tree did not stir. Again and again she tried it, and at last had the satisfaction of seeing it move a few inches. Then she cut some blocks to be used as wedges, and placed the boy near the tree. As she raised it a few inches, he deftly slipped one of the blocks under. At length she went to her father and found that she could draw him from beneath the tree. Turning him over, she forced a few drops from the bottle between his lips. Then she sent the boy to the cabin for the mule and a small drag that was used to move stones. While he was gone, she washed and dressed the wounds as well as she knew how. As her father had surmised, he did not seem to be much injured except in the legs. One of these was badly crushed.

When the boy returned, she made a rough bed of leaves on the drag, and with much difficulty placed her father on it, then sat down and took his head in her lap.

"If on'y we'd a kyart," she thought, as she directed the boy to lead the mule as slowly and cautiously as possible.

She was almost glad that her father had not recovered consciousness. He would be spared the agony of the journey.

Overhead the sky had grown inky black. The boy and mule had almost to feel their way through the woods. Occasionally vivid flashes of lightning helped them to keep their course. Before they had covered half the distance to the cabin, the rain was coming down in torrents. It was terrible, and, for the first time in her life, Linda was thoroughly frightened. Would they never reach home? If only her father could have been spared it! If only she could be sure his deathly faintness was but temporary. At last they saw a light in the distance, and guided by it, were enabled to move more rapidly. When they reached the cabin, they found Mrs. Grinnell standing in the doorway with a lantern.

As soon as her father had been placed on a bed, Linda once more went out into the darkness. Her mother went with her to the door.

"Hit's an awful night, Linda," she said, tremulously, "an' hit's a long, long way to the doctor's. Ye'll shorely be los'."

"I don't keer for the night, maw, if—if on'y paw'll come out all right. I can fin' my way, an' I'll take the mule."

But it was a night she never forgot. Through miles of dark forest, where she had to bend low over the saddle to keep from being swept off by the limbs; down black ravines and along the banks of rushing streams, where a single misstep would have sent her into the whirling waters below. Often she had to wait for a flash of lightning to assist her in passing a dangerous point. Frequently she had to turn back in search of the way she had lost. But at length the clouds began to break away and the moon appeared. Soon after, the village came in sight. It was after daybreak when she returned to the cabin.

"Doctor'll soon be here," she said, in answer to her mother's look of inquiry. "How's paw?"

"He's kem to, but seems sort o' wan'erin' in his min'."

An hour later the doctor came, and the wounds were examined and dressed. Then the doctor sat down by the bedside. For a long time he remained there, watching the patient's face and listening to his wandering talk. He arose and went to the door.

"The wounds are not dangerous," he said to Mrs. Grinnell who followed him anxiously. "No bones broken. A few weeks and he will be able to walk."

But as he went out he made a slight motion for Linda to follow him. When they reached the hitching bar where his horse was tied, he said abruptly:

"You seem strong and capable; when your father gets better, you must be with him as much as possible. Keep him cheerful and interested in something. Never let him wander off by himself. Watch him as you would a child."

"To Err is Human."

But to err all the time is criminal or idiotic. Don't continue the mistake of neglecting your blood. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla now. It will make pure, live blood, and put you in good health.

All Gone—"Had no appetite or strength, could not sleep or get rested, was completely run down. Two bottles Hood's Sarsaparilla cured the tired feeling and I do my own work." Mrs. A. Dick, Millville, N. J.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; the non-irritating and only cathartic to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"But—but you told maw he was not dangerous," she said, wonderingly.

"Nor is he, physically. But his mind is in a bad way. It must have been affected for years. You can do more for him, now, than all the doctors in the country. If he wants to go fishing, you must want to go fishing, too. When he prefers hunting, you must prefer hunting. It may be a little irksome at first, but you can soon accustom yourself to it."

She watched him as he rode out of sight, and then returned to the cabin. After the morning's work was done, and her father made as comfortable as possible, she once more went out. It was scarcely yet noon, but already the sun was nearing the tops of the lofty mountains. Another hour, and it would begin to creep over, and then a long shadow would slowly descend to the little clearing.

As she stood there, she suddenly remembered the letter. The events of the night and morning had crowded it from her mind. Now it returned in its full significance. A quick wave of exultation swept over her. She could go out into the world and battle for her equality. But even with the thought came another—her conversation with the doctor. A look of terror crept into her eyes. She could not do it—could not, would not. Her father was all right, "except his mind," and that had troubled him for years. It would be time enough to attend to it when she returned. And the next few years meant so much to her, life, hope, everything! Would it be right to give it all up?

Unconsciously she was clasping and unclasping her fingers. All the exultation had gone out of her eyes, all the buoyancy out of her step.

"I reckon I'll go up the mountain," she said at last, wearily.

Far up on the mountain's side was a broad ledge that overlooked ranges and peaks and hills innumerable. This was where she came when sorely tried. Here she sought strength.

It was a long climb, and when she reached the ledge the color had returned to her face, but the trouble had not left.

Far above, the peak still towered, as grand and gloomy as ever, but the valley had settled down among the shadows, and the clearing was but a little bare spot on the mountain side.

Between the mountain ranges were beautiful, quiet valleys, dotted with farms, and traversed by winding roads and sparkling streams. To the east and southeast the foothills faded away into the plains of the Atlantic slope. Almost at her very feet was a dizzy precipice. Below, a narrow gorge zigzagged its way down the mountain side.

The sun had long since moved behind the line of the mountain, but far down the valley she could trace the shadow as it crept away to the east. As she watched the grand line of its march, over hill and valley, past the dots and lines that represented farms and rivers, her own affairs grew small and commonplace. Amid these strong works of God, should she not also be strong?

At length she arose and walked to the edge of the precipice; taking the letter and check from her pocket, she rolled them into a small, hard ball and dropped it over. Then she walked down the path; her step was firm and elastic, and the last vestige of shadow had disappeared from her eyes.

CHAPTER I.

IN THE NEST

IT was very quiet in the nest. On the pillow-piled divan lay Virginia, half awake and half asleep, and opposite her before the warm, bright glow of the grate, sat Madge in a deep, cosy arm chair. There was a book lying open on her lap, but she was not reading. With her chin propped on one hand, she watched the flames curl up around the plump pine log, licking up the resin with angry hisses, and transforming it into strange, weird forms of castled steep and wild, black gorges, where streams of fire spouted through.

It was a cold winter day in the latter half of February. The frost was thick on the windows, even with the warmth of the fire in the room, and altogether it seemed far pleasanter in doors than out, when suddenly in the midst of the quiet dreaming, the door bell rang, and there was a quick laugh below, and the hurry of feet on the stairs, and Mollie Gray bust into the room, her cheeks red as roses, her skates over her shoulder.

"Dear, dear, I knew that I'd find you two curled up like a couple of cats beside the fire this glorious day," she exclaimed, taking off Dave's sealskin cap that she was wearing, and knocking a little flurry of snow from it. "The skating is great, and the boys have got their ice-boats out, and they sail like birds under this wind. Mr. Hardy was down this noon to watch the fun, and he said that I was to come after you, and whisk you off to get a breath of fresh air."

Virginia opened her eyes sleepily and shook her head.

"Not I," she said laughingly. "I don't like that kind of fun. And you make me shiver, coming in with your blue nose and snow storms. I always wish that I were a bear or something that creeps off and cuddles down to sleep all winter in some warm hole underground. You go, Madge."

"Is Tony there?" asked Madge, glancing from the fire, her brown eyes wide and dreamy.

"That's always it," said Mollie severely, "Is Tony there? Talk about my caring for my brothers. I'm not their shadow anyway. I am able to make an independent move now and then without first finding out whether they will do so, too, but I never knew Madge to go anywhere unless she wants to know if Tony will be there. No, ma'am, Tony will not be there. Tony went across the river in Mr. Hardy's cutter to take some things to Miss Pugsley, and see how the prize turkey was coming on. But everybody else is there, and you had better come. Tease her, Virgine."

"I think," returned Virginia slowly, "that you'd better take off your cloak and cap, and sit down here and be thawed out, and we'll have some hot chocolate and some of Lena's fresh cookies."

"There it is again," and Mollie sighed deeply, as she suffered herself to be snugly ensconced in a chair before the fire. "I come up here brimful of good resolutions, and love of winter, and just as soon as I get inside the nest, I have to snuggle down and get toasted. But it is a dear little place, the cosiest nest in town. Do you remember when we first fixed it up for the S. D. S. room, and none of the boys knew a thing about it, and they used to wonder where on earth we held our meetings last summer?"

Madge had gone downstairs to coax Lena for cookies and chocolate, and the two girls were alone. It was, as Mollie said, a dear little place, this nest of Virgine's. One came up the broad oak staircase, and the hall branched off in two directions at the top; but just at the side, in a haphazard angle of the house, there was this little, odd room. Before its discovery and appropriation by the sisterhood, it had been Mr. Hardy's smoking den, and after some parley, he withdrew his claims, for the good of the cause, and left them in full possession.

There was a long, low bookcase on one side of the room, the kind before which you had to sit down on the floor before you could see its treasures. And such treasures! Downstairs in the large dignified library there were many books—proper, well-behaved books—arranged in perfect order along the shelves, their handsome bindings as imposing as the titles they bore; but up in this bookcase they were a very different crowd, a jolly, dog-eared, out at the elbows crowd, who jostled each other along on the shelves, and stood in uneven rows like the soldiers of the awkward squad, without regard for law or order.

There were no glass doors to save from the ravages of time, such as protected their stately cousins downstairs, only a curtain of dark, red denim with sprawling, cross-eyed griffins on it, that absolutely refused to hang in straight folds from its brass rod. And along the broad top of the bookcase there were no dainty, fragile statuettes or bric-a-brac, but piles of old magazines teasing to be glanced at, and hosts of odd volumes whose titles made you smile and reach out a hand to welcome old friends, and renew their acquaintance.

Then there were two affairs dignified by the name of divans. Rumor had it that the foundations were cracker boxes, and that the home of each St. Dorothy's girl had been despoiled of a pillow to make the couches downy. At all events, they were delightful places to sink down upon when you were tired, and they were both covered with two faded Persian table spreads that Mrs. Hardy had devoted to the adornment of the nest.

Evelyn had brought a desk as her share, a pretty, carved rosewood one that looked somehow like herself, so dainty and proper it was; and Laura had produced a perfect deluge of tidies and paper flowers, all her own handiwork, and in her eyes, at least, beautiful. There were strings of pale sweet peas that were always sliding down unexpectedly from their stems, and great crumpled yellow squash flowers dangled from the mirror over the mantle. Virginia said to put them all in because Laura made them, so they all came, violets and morning glories, and roses that looked as if they were scared out of their wits, and Laura smiled happily whenever she saw them.

Mollie had brought something that Dave had made with his wonderful tools. It was peculiar, but very handy. It was made of several wooden boxes of different sizes nailed one on top of the other, so as to form a kind of cabinet, and then there was heavy red cloth tacked all over with little brass tacks that looked pretty; and there were lots of little pigeon holes and drawers of all sorts and sizes, that were just the place to keep all manner of stray things in.

There were many other things. Whenever one of the girls found anything that pleased her especially, she brought it as a votive offering to the nest, and there was hardly a bare spot on the walls. On the floor was a great, soft bearskin rug, rich deep brown in color, with the long, curved claws still on it, and the great threatening head with its staring eyes and yawning jaws. That had been in the nest when it was Mr. Hardy's smoking room, and at Virginia's earnest request, it had been left for her den.

To-day Mollie looked from one treasured object to another with contented admiration. "It is ever so much nicer than the boys' assembly room," she said. "The snow drifted in, and its so cold up in the barn that they can't hold their meetings there, and they have almost given up the club until summer comes. Most of them are in high school this year, so it makes it hard for them. No time to play."

"And the girls, too," Virginia rejoined, "there is only Madge and I who are out in the cold. I wish I could go, but I can't, and Madge said she would rather stay at home and study with me, you know."

"Of course, so would any one if they had the chance," said Mollie. "Only I think when you go to school with all the rest you are more ambitious. I know the boys are, anyway. They're all planning to be something when they're grown up. Dave wants to be a civil engineer, and travel all around the world, and build bridges and things, and Art wants to be a lawyer like papa; and Jerry Edsall says he is going to be an inventor, just because he invented some crazy thing for a bicycle, and all the boys say its great. Then Lloyd will be a doctor like his father, and Bobbie—goodness knows what Bobbie will be. He doesn't care for anything except to hunt beetles and all kinds of bugs and snakes, and to know all about birds and squirrels, and things. Bobbie isn't good for anything, I guess."

"And Tony?" asked Virginia curiously. "Neither of them heard the soft footfall up the carpeted staircase, as Madge paused an instant at the door."

"Tony Ferrall is the best of all," Mollie said enthusiastically. "Why, Virgine, he's the funniest little chap, the boys all say. He ditched in and got ahead of them in so many things, and still he always helps them out if they're stuck. But he won't tell what he wants to be; only one day when they were talking about the flag and the great generals, you know, Tony said he would rather be a soldier and defend his country, than anything-else in the world."

"Lena wants to know whether you would rather have sugar cookies or ginger, Virgine," said a gentle voice at the door, and the girls started at the sound.

"Oh, both, Madge, dear," Virginia said, and she added thoughtfully when they were alone. "I hope she did not hear. If Tony ever went away as a soldier, I don't know what she would do."

"There's her mother," Mollie replied encouragingly. For herself she liked the idea of a soldier's life. There was such a splendid chance to rush ahead and be a hero, and win fame, and Mollie liked any kind of a good thing that you did not have to wait for, that came quickly and unexpectedly.

"Yes, there's her mother," repeated Virginia softly, her large gray eyes watching the burning log, "if she ever comes home."

And there was something in her tone, an undercurrent of sadness, that silenced the words on Mollie's tongue, and made her, too, still and dreamy, thinking of what might come to pass, until Madge came upstairs again, bringing the chocolate and cookies, and they all settled down for a good chat and feast around the glow of the firelight.

"MOTHER'S NOTIONS"

Good for Young People to Follow.

"My little grandson often comes up to show me how large the muscles of his arms are."

"He was a delicate child, but has developed into a strong, healthy boy, and Postum Cereal Food Coffee has been the principal factor."

"I was induced to give him the Postum coffee because of my own experience with it."

"I am sixty years old, and have been a victim of nervous dyspepsia for many years. Have tried all sorts of patent medicines and had treatment from many physicians, but no permanent relief came. I believe nervous dyspeptics suffer more than other sick people, as they are affected mentally as well as physically."

"I used to read the Postum Cereal advertisements every week in our paper. At first I gave but little attention to them, thinking it was a fraud, like so many I had tried, but finally something was said in one of the advertisements that made me conclude to try it. I was very particular to have it prepared strictly according to directions, and use good, rich cream. It was very nice indeed, and about bedtime I said to the members of the family that I believed I felt better. One of them laughed and said, 'That's another of mother's notions,' but the notion has not left me yet."

"I continued to improve right along after leaving off coffee and taking Postum Cereal Food Coffee, and now, after three years' use, I feel so well that I am almost young again. I know Postum was the cause of the change in my health, and I cannot say too much in its favor. I wish I could persuade all nervous people to use it. I have no objections to your using my name, if it will do good to even one sufferer." Mrs. M. L. Turner, 2619 Capitol Ave., Omaha, Neb.

IT CAN'T BE DONE.

No One Can Remain Well, No Chronic Disease Can be Cured, Unless the Stomach is First Made Strong and Vigorous.

This is plain, because every organ in the body depends on the stomach for its nourishment. Nerve, bone, sinew, blood are made from the food which the stomach converts to our use.

How useless to treat disease with this, that, and the other remedy, and neglect the most important of all, the stomach.

The earliest symptoms of indigestion are sour risings, bad taste in the mouth, gas in stomach and bowels, palpitation, all-gone feeling, faintness, headaches, constipation; later comes loss of flesh, consumption, liver and heart troubles, kidney diseases, nervous prostration, all of which are the indirect result of poor nutrition.

Any person suffering from indigestion should make it a practice to take after each meal one of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, allowing it to dissolve in the mouth, and thus mingle with the saliva and enter the stomach in the most natural way. These tablets are highly recommended by Dr. Jenkinson, because they are composed of the natural digestive acids and fruit essences, which assist the stomach in digesting all wholesome food before it has time to ferment and sour.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold by druggists, full-sized packages at 50 cents. They are also excellent for invalids and children. A book on stomach diseases and thousands of testimonials of genuine cures sent free, by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

Trial Package Free!

If any reader, suffering from rheumatism, will write to me, I will send them free of cost a trial Package of a simple and harmless remedy which cured me and thousands of others, among them cases of over 40 years' standing. This is an honest remedy that you can test before you part with your money. Address: JOHN A. SMITH, 203 Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

Finance and Commerce

THE monotony of activity continues throughout the whole field of business. Perhaps the most notable thing about this continuation of prosperity is that, after more than a year of phenomenal activity, during which every factor of production has been crowded to its utmost limit, in no quarter is there yet signs of over production. So far all changes in price are toward higher price. War is usually considered the most drastic influence it is possible to have. Yet with two wars raging, affecting immediately the interests of two of the largest producing nations of the world, hardly a ripple of effect upon business can be traced to this influence. International commerce has had to endure an advance in ocean freights, due to the chartering of about 100 transport ships by Great Britain, but the advance thus quickly established is now being slowly lost. The war in South Africa is likely to reduce the world's production of gold if continued, but even that is likely to be only a sentimental effect, unless long continued. This war has also seemed to be the cause of a greater activity among the navies of several European powers, but without disclosing so far any intention or likelihood of participation by other nations, and so far the possibility of such an event has had no discoverable effect upon European financial and commercial affairs. In this country the matters most commented upon are money situation and the continued large purchases of equipment by the railways. The New York Central Railway has set aside a fund of $15,000,000 for the purchase of equipment, and one car company is said to be figuring on contracts for $20,000,000 worth of its output. Orders have recently been placed by the roads for 1,500,000 tons of rails. The price is $33 per ton against $18 and $20 a year ago. In cotton prices are firm though in some lines business has been restricted somewhat by recent advances in price. The same is true of oats and hay. Wheat continues to drag in price. Stocks everywhere are abundant and increasing, and it is now evident that the world's crops the past two years have been excessive, and the supply has gradually accumulated in the hands of speculation until it is trying the capacity of the speculation organism. Corn has shown strength and the general tone has been strong. The supplies of old corn are well exhausted and a confirmation of the prediction we have repeatedly made in this column, that the year's crop has all along been greatly overestimated is gradually becoming recognized. The husking has revealed a disappointing yield. The money market continues strong. The last bank statement was at the moment very superficially regarded as favorable in that it showed an increase in reserves. Loans and deposits were still further reduced, however, and the interest rate in Wall street to-day reached 40 per cent. The situation at the moment in that quarter is critical, inasmuch as it finds a public loaded up with all sorts of securities, at high prices, with no relief from high interest rates immediately in sight.

THE special attention which has been attracted to Venezuela within the last few days, by reason of events transpiring in that Republic, lends interest to a statement just prepared by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, showing the commerce of the United States with Venezuela during a term of years, and the growing popularity of goods from this country, as testified to by the British minister to Venezuela. Venezuelan imports now amount to nearly 15 million dollars annually, having grown from $4,058,609 in 1870 to $12,053,502 in 1887, and $13,241,000 in 1897. The United States furnished in 1870, 37.24 per cent. of the imports of Venezuela; in 1887, it furnished 30.42 per cent., and in 1897, 26.95 per cent.

The Defense of Champigny

This masterpiece by M. Jean Baptiste Edward Detaille represents one of the most stirring scenes of the Franco-Prussian War. It is hung in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, Central Park, New York, having been presented by Judge Henry Hilton, 1887, and valued at over $60,000 00. It is well placed, being opposite the great painting "Friedland 1807," by M. Jean Louis Ernest Meissonier, which was purchased at the auction sale of the A. T. Stewart collection for $66,000 00, by Judge Henry Hilton, and also presented to the museum, 1887. The "Defense of Champigny" covers a canvas 85 x 48, and was, previous to being purchased by Judge Henry Hilton, exhibited in the Art Salon, Paris, producing an immense sensation.

This is the greatest work of Rosa Bonheur, representing life-sized horses at a market. It at once secured for the artist a world-wide reputation, and is well-known to every child, by means of photographic reproductions and engravings. This picture was first exhibited in the Salon, and in 1855 formed the chief attraction in the French exhibit of pictures in London. It was brought to this country in 1857 by W. P. Wright, of Weehawken, and sold to the late A. T. Stewart for $40,000 00. It was bought for $55,500.00 on March 25th, by Samuel P. Avery, for Cornelius Vanderbilt, who the next day presented it to the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Sick Room Comforts

HOT-WATER bags of rubber are invaluable, but few homes boast of more than one. Large flat bottles of thick glass and curved sides are very useful in this respect. They then are to be filled, if set in a pan containing a little warm water; boiling water may be poured into them without cracking; and if the water is allowed to run over, the cork will suck tight in its place with no fear of leakage. Small bags may be made to cover these bottles, or in case of sudden need a stocking may be utilized. These fit closely, and may be pinned together, leaving the bottle trim and neat. A half dozen of these bottles can be interchanged, keeping the nurse always well manned with heating power.—Woman's Home Companion.

A TRAINED nurse furnished the following hints: She swept the sick room every morning without a broom. She had a pail filled with coarse towels wrung out of cold water, and with these she rapidly wiped the carpet. She made an oatmeal gruel by using the coarse oatmeal, pounding it, and then putting it into a bowl filled with cold water. This was stirred and allowed to settle before the water was carefully poured off, three different times. This water made the gruel, after being boiled for about one quarter of an hour, seasoned, drained, and mixed with a small teaspoonful of hot cream. Serve with oblongs of toast, crisp and brown and hot. No light-screen being at hand, she used an open umbrella to protect the patient from air at one time, and from the light at another. She made a plate of ice-cream in ten minutes in a pint pail and with what seemed to me a handful of chipped ice. Of course she put coals on the fire in paper bags, and when we did not have a piece of board that exactly fitted in the window to permit ventilating without a draught, she accomplished the same purpose by raising the window from the bottom about five inches, and tacking a strip of flannel to the sill and sash with thumb nails.—N. Y. Evening Post.

USEFUL HINTS TO NURSES.—Never let your face reflect your feelings. The patient is not more keenly watched by the nurse than the nurse by the patient. He watches every change in the face. Therefore it behooves us, when taking care of sick people, to be careful on no account to show surprise or alarm at any fresh symptom of the disease. Invalids do not like to be watched; indeed, many are extremely sensitive on the point. When talking to a patient, do not stand behind him, but place yourself where he can conveniently see you without straining his eyes. When talking to him, sit by the bedside; do not stand, for the patient feels more at rest if his nurse is resting too. Do not whisper, or speak in an undertone, and do not talk to the doctor or any one else outside the door, just out of hearing. Invalids are very sensitive, and are sure to think that they must of necessity be the cause of discussion. In dress, be scrupulously neat and fresh in appearance. Never wear anything that rustles or jingles, and do not wear thick or creaking boots. Remember that illness renders a patient's nerves exceedingly irritable, and what we think idle fancies and whims, to him are real discomforts, and must be treated as such.—Worthington's Magazine.

A DOCUMENT OF GREAT IMPORTANCE, and which will have an effect in molding sentiment, was presented to President McKinley last week, being the preliminary report of the Philippine Commission, consisting of J. C. Schurman, Admiral Dewey, ex-minister Charles Denby, and Dean Worcester. The effect will be more reaching, as the Commission is non-partisan, and was appointed in order that the public might be advised of conditions actually existing, and from a reliable and impartial source. The main conclusions are that, having assumed responsibility, the United States can pursue no other course than restore the islands to peaceful conditions, and bring the rebellious factions under complete subjection, that American control stands alone for peace, order, and progress; that the Filipinos are incapable of self-government. Aguinaldo is declared to be an unscrupulous leader, ambitious for self-advancement, not a patriot and champion of freedom. While the Filipinos are capable of development, this is declared to be possible only under the administration of a sovereign power.

SOME OF THE PROBLEMS WHICH are encountered in the formation of a plan for the future government of Cuba, are assuming different phases in an unexpected manner. The race question has been a source of trouble. Negroes who took an active part in the insurrection, and fought valiantly for Cuban independence, were a most valuable adjunct to the white Cuban forces, and their services demand recognition; yet, if the right of franchise be granted to all male adults, the whites will be in the minority in many sections, and object strenuously to negro domination, particularly as the negroes hold little property, and will bear but a small portion of the burden of taxation. Another phase is the steady influx of Spanish emigrants who are arriving by thousands, and the majority of whom are laborers. The Cubans realize that without emigration the danger of negro domination is increased, but at the present rate the dominant class will be Spaniards.

EXPERIMENTS RECENTLY CONDUCTED by a new process, have demonstrated that coke can be produced from Illinois and Montana soft coal at a much lower cost and of a superior quality to the Pennsylvania product. Heretofore no process has been discovered by which Illinois coal could be successfully coked, and if recent demonstrations are accepted as final, the ultimate result on the iron and steel industry, particularly in the West, will be of importance. Coke cannot be shipped by water, owing to danger of spontaneous combustion, hence the importance and economy of locating iron industries near the centre of production, thus saving heavy freight charges. The new discovery may have an effect of building many iron furnaces in the vicinity of the Illinois coal fields.

ENGLAND IS HAVING FULLY AS much trouble with its army, in some newspapers, as did the United States during the process of Spanish expulsion from Cuba. The crop of military critics, experts, and other men who make wars but take no part in the fighting, is unusually large, and the dearth of South African news affords these gentlemen a fine opportunity to speculate and tell the newspapers that if General So-and-So had only followed such and such a plan, the result would have been different. How easy it is to criticize and point out the possible errors of another, and how much safer to fight a battle from a club or editorial room than on the firing line! Less criticism from stay-at-homes would not do any harm, and is out of place until it has been amply demonstrated that there exists just cause, in which eventful and free criticism would be of value.

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN NORWAY and Sweden are widening, and, it may be, will eventually result in complete separation of the two countries. The radical party in Norway, in gaining recognition of the flag of that country, has encouraged agitation along other lines. At the forthcoming elections, the radicals have laid out a programme: A separate Norwegian ministry for foreign affairs, and a separate consular service; the establishment of a court of arbitration and neutrality; and insurance against incapacity to earn a livelihood, to apply to the whole of the Norwegian people. Should these measures be declared for by the election, the King of Sweden would be the only bond between the countries, a tie by which a declaration of the Norwegians to form a republic would be easily broken. The Swedes would then have to decide whether or not to adopt forcible measures to preserve the union.

AT ITS FORTHCOMING SESSION, Congress will be asked for a liberal appropriation to cover the expense of extending the rural free delivery service. For years, the inauguration of this service was bitterly opposed, but eventually a small appropriation was made to test the plan. In his report, which has just been made public, First Assistant Postmaster General Heath shows that the test of the system has been a gratifying success. It has been demonstrated that the average cost to the population served in the country is only 84 cents per capita annually, whereas in cities of 5,000 population having free delivery, the annual cost for each inhabitant served is $2.80. The new system has been opposed by inn-keepers, village merchants, and others who have profited whenever the farmer "came to town," but this loss is as nothing compared to the benefits derived by the farmers. On July 1st, the routes extended over 8,930 miles, covered an area of 7,567 square miles, served a population of 273,604, and had handled 212,927 pieces of mail.

RECENT TESTS APPEAR TO HAVE demonstrated the utility and practicability of the principle of Marconi, the Italian inventor, in wireless telegraphy. The system is already well known, through descriptions in the magazines and daily press, but its successful operation under severe and unusual conditions has been a matter of conjecture. While the international yacht race was in progress, Signor Marconi, in a vessel closely following the race, transmitted messages accurately to the receiving ship, similarly equipped with his apparatus, conditions of the test being at times severe. Since the yacht race, tests have been conducted by the Navy Department, ample demonstration being made of the practicability of the system in naval maneuvers. It is now stated that arrangements are being made to put the system to commercial use in the Hawaiian Islands, where cable communication is impossible, owing to currents and coral reefs.

WEIGHTY MATTERS IN CUBA AND the Philippines have served to attract attention to an extent that the Ladrões, situated in a lonesome part of the Pacific Ocean, where the Occident ends and the Orient begins, have been temporarily lost sight of. They are brought to mind, however, by a communication from the United States authorities in effect that all is well. The colonial problem would be simple of solution if no greater difficulties were encountered than was the case in the Ladrões. The Island of Guam is the place of chief importance, and thither the Navy Department dispatched Captain Leary, as Governor-general, and a ship of war with a cargo of colonial requirements and a brass band. The natives of the islands are a simple people, harmless and inoffensive, if not stirred up, and all that was necessary to gain their allegiance was a display calculated to win their respect, and a few patriotic airs from the band to soothe the savage breast.

THE PASSING OF THE THREATENED crisis in France has rather strengthened than weakened the Republic. While it may be that the conspiracy cases will not result in effectual suppression of those who sought to undermine the government, yet this will have little effect. France seems to have escaped her greatest danger, militarism. When the new Cabinet was formed, and General Gallifet, an old royalist, made Minister of War, a peculiar condition existed. The military, which should be subservient to the civil power, virtually controlled affairs and dictated to the government. The first assertion of civil power in France was the Dreyfus revision; then followed the removal of a number of generals who were seditious, and the last step to restore to the ministry the power of making army promotions. General Gallifet has handled matters with a firm hand, and shown no mercy to the disaffected ones.

The Church in Africa

Among the consequences entailed by the war with the Transvaal and Orange Free State, we must not forget the distress which it will produce, and has already produced, in some dioceses of the Province of South Africa. The Church people of Bloemfontein, besides mourning at the present moment the death of their Bishop, are in the awkward position of being in a State which is at war with England and therefore unfriendly, if not hostile, to an Anglican mission. In Pretoria, the Bishop, not for the first time a sufferer through the outbreak of hostilities between England and the Boers, remains at his post, after having sent away his family to a place of safety. In Cape Town, the Archbishop is doing his best to dissuade all whom he can influence from acts of indiscretion or disloyalty. His Grace appears to have taken a line as admirable for courage as for tact. For the time being, we fear, the cause of the Church in one part of the South African Province will receive a check. But we look forward with hopefulness to better times for the Church, when the Imperial government shall have extended its methods of law and justice to districts where belated ideas of civil rule have hitherto prevailed with deplorable results.—The Church Times.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Board of Missions

The Massachusetts Branch

The 22d anniversary was observed Nov. 2d, in Trinity church, Boston. Bishop Lawrence celebrated the Holy Communion, and made an address. At the meeting in the chapel, Mrs. Edward Abbott, of Cambridge, gave an interesting account of her missionary trip in the far East. The Rev. W. D. Powers, D. D., described the needs of the work in Brazil and Cuba. A paper was read, written by Miss Woodruff, a missionary in Alaska. The luncheon was served at the Hotel Brunswick. At 3 p. m., in Trinity church, the Rev. Dr. E. Winchester Donald, D. D., made an able address, considering the missionary work from two positions: How is the work being done, and why ought it to be done at all? The Rev. J. A. Ingle, of China, gave in detail, an account of his work at Hankow, and explained the difficulties of reaching the women, and the need of women helpers. Bishop Wells, of Spokane, expressed his thanks to the auxiliary for their continued assistance, and described his large field and lack of clergymen.

Archdeaconry of Dutchess

At the annual meeting just held, addresses were made at the opening session by the Rev. E. Walpole Warren, D. D., of New York city, on "What more can we do for missions that we have not done as yet?" Miss Alice Sandford, of Pelham, N. Y., on "Latest news from Miss Thackara and the Navajo Mission Hospital," and a Persian, Mr. Paul Shimon, on "The Assyrian mission." The Ven. Archdeacon Edwards presided at the business session, at which reports from 13 branches were presented, and also from the Juniper Auxiliary, the Babies' branch, and the Church Periodical Club. The amount in money and boxes given during the year amounted to $3,080.63.

The Delaware Branch

The annual meeting was held at Newcastle, Oct. 12th. The Holy Communion was celebrated by the Bishop, assisted by the rector of Immanuel church, the Rev. Dr. Munson, and Archdeacon Hall. Addresses were made by the Rev. Dr. Spalding, on behalf of the new church at Delmar; by the Rev. A. D. Gring who described the character and religion of the Japanese, and gave an account of the work being done by our Church in Tokio; and by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Johnston, Bishop of Western Texas, who spoke particularly of the importance of educating the colored people as a preparation to their conversion. After luncheon, the delegates assembled in the Sunday school room. The treasurer reported that $607.78 had passed through her hands this last year. A resolution was passed relative to the death of Mrs. Tuttle, of the Missouri branch. Pledges were made for Alfred Lee scholarship; foreign insurance; Japan; China; St. Matthew's colored mission, Wilmington, Del.; the Delmar mission, Bishop Johnston's work, St. Michael's Day Nursery, and Dr. Drigg's work in Alaska.

Semi-Annual Meeting of Chicago Branch

The 15th semi-annual meeting was held in Grace church, Oct. 31st, with an attendance of about 300 officers and members, beside a large number of the clergy. The offices of devotion were said by the rector, the Rev. E. M. Stires, after which he welcomed the Auxiliary to his parish, and spoke of the blessedness of their work; its blessedness to each parish and to the diocese. He expressed the thought which must have been in every mind: "How we miss the Bishop," and that all must wish for his speedy recovery. In closing, he paid a glowing tribute to the president, Mrs. Lyman, for the stimulus and help her sweet Christian womanhood was to all who work with her. The roll call showed about 43 parishes represented. The subject presented was Utah, or the missionary district of Salt Lake. Miss S. J. Elliott, of Moab, Utah, gave interesting description of the efforts being made to reach the children of this Mormon land, and to give them such education as will help them to fight the evil of their State, polygamy. She told of Bishop Leonard's school, Rowland Hall, and the great need of a chapel for this school, and of a church in her own little town of Moab. A great effort must be made to save the children. They want education, and we must give it to the girls especially, and thus save the homes. The Rev. Ellis Bishop, rector of St. Paul's church, Salt Lake, spoke of missionary work in Salt Lake City and the surrounding towns. Through the work of an associate mission, he is endeavoring to reach the young men, and he needs money to help pay salaries to three men in this field. A hymn was sung, and then Bishop Leonard gave a most interesting account of the missionary work done in the various parts of his jurisdiction, and dwelt especially on the successful work done by Mr. Bishop in Salt Lake City. He spoke of Miss Elliott and the treasure she was in his work; of the great need of the chapel she wished to see built at Rowland Hall, a place where God can be shown to those Mormon people and worshiped as He is, and not as the God depleted to them by Mormon preachers. The Bishop spoke of his work among the Ute Indians in the eastern part of Utah, and of an infirmary started there, which is still unfurnished for lack of money. The interest of the audience was shown by the goodly pledges offered for these various objects. The president told the Auxiliary that she had made a pledge to send $100 to the mission work at Sendai, Japan, which the branches will be asked to redeem. She urged the members not to forget the mission work at the cathedral, with its need of coal and money for expenses. The offering was taken, and amounted to $50 for missionary work in Utah. Supper was served in Grace parish house. A resolution was offered of love and sympathy for the Bishop, with an earnest wish for his speedy recovery, and it was sent to the Bishop's residence by a special messenger. At the evening missionary service, in which part of the choir of Grace church assisted, the first address was by Bishop Edsall who made an eloquent appeal for aid to enable him to go forward with his work. The Rev. Dr. Dudley Powers, general secretary of the American Church Missionary Society, spoke on "Our new possessions," which he felt would better be presented as "Our new responsibilities." After a few words on our duty in the Philippines and the Hawaiian Islands, he dwelt especially on our work as begun in Cuba, and its needs. There are 250,000 orphan children in Cuba. One school belonging to our Church has been started, with 15 pupils, all the society could care for without more funds to carry forward the work. Dr. Powers spoke eloquently of the need of our Church realizing her duty to these neglected people. The Rev. Mr. Stires urged the people to bear in mind this urgent appeal, and to take such true interest as will push forward the noble work and enable us to realize our responsibilities. The offering of the evening was devoted to the general missionary fund of the Auxiliary. Many members of the Auxiliary expressed their appreciation of the programme for the day as arranged by the president, and many assurances were given of its being one of the most interesting missionary days in the Chicago branch.

Eastern Deanery, South Dakota

At the meeting of the Woman's Branch of the convocation, held at Yankton, Oct. 3d and 4th, there were present 25 delegates from eight different parishes. Mrs. Robert Doherty, of Yankton, was elected chairman, and Miss Carlotta East, secretary. Miss Diana Peabody, of Sioux Falls, read a paper on "The right inspiration of our work in the Sunday school." Miss Weare, of Sioux City, Iowa, by special request, presented the work of the Junior Department of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions. She said that in Sioux City each class in a Sunday school selected a missionary jurisdiction to which offerings should be sent; and that half of the classes selected South Dakota, because they had seen Bishop Hare. The next popular one, strange as it may seem, was Bishop Ferguson, of Africa, because the children knew that he was a black man. There is also a birthday box, into which each child on its birthday places a penny for each year of its age, and the children choose once a year the object for which the united offering shall be used. When St. Elizabeth School building burned down, every child wanted to give something towards rebuilding it; they knew where the school was, and what work it had been doing, and so were deeply interested. In the afternoon the branch met the convocation in joint session, and took part in hearing and discussing papers on "How to interest people in the Church," "The difference between the Church and the societies of human origin," and "Sunday schools." Mrs. George, of Sioux Falls, read a paper on "Reasons for being interested in Christian missions," which was followed by a paper written by Miss Mary B. Peabody, on the practical work of the branch of the Woman's Auxiliary in South Dakota. After a full discussion of this subject, it was unanimously agreed that each delegate should write an account of the missionary work in her own parish, and that these reports should be sent to all the parishes engaged in the work. Wednesday there was a discussion upon the object and purpose of the Woman's Auxiliary; another, upon subscribing to the Spirit of Missions, and a joint meeting with the convocation, at which the Sunday school was again thoroughly and profitably discussed.

The Sunday School

The latest lecture in the course under the auspices of the Sunday School Commission, of New York, was delivered Nov. 4th, at St. Bartholomew's church, by Bishop Hall of Vermont, on "The preparation of the Sunday school teacher."

Association of the Atlanta Archdeaconry

The fourth quarterly meeting was held in St. Luke's church, Atlanta, Oct. 16th. The afternoon session consisted of Evensong, followed by a solemn intercession for God's blessing on Sunday school work and workers, conducted by the Bishop. This was followed by an able and suggestive address on "Bible class work," by Burton Smith, Esq., of Atlanta, which led to a general discussion. The night session was presided over by the Bishop, and its chief feature was a witty and effective address by the Rev. Frederick F. Reese, on the important question, "How to interest our Sunday schools in missions." A business meeting followed, in which it was decided not to organize a general class for the preparation of teachers for their work, but to leave this matter to the rectors of parishes. The attendance at this session was large and representative.

Diocese of New Westminster

Bishop Dart who was so seriously ill on his return from England, is getting better, though the improvement is very slow. A new church at Central Park, Vancouver, has been built during the summer. The Rev. J. B. Haslam has gone to Vancouver, to assist Mr. Clinton at St. James' church.

Diocese of Nova Scotia

Bishop Courtney consecrated the new church at Canning, Oct. 1st. A mission service to deaf-mutes was held in St. Paul's parochial hall, Halifax, lately, by the Rev. M. Stanley Searing, of Boston. The fourth biennial missionary conference of the diocese was held at Lunenburg, Oct. 4th and 5th, the Bishop presiding. A large number of subjects were brought before the conference.

Diocese of Ontario

The work on St. George's cathedral, Kingston, is going on rapidly. The framework of the dome has reached an advanced stage. The average of $1,000 per parish, for the diocesan special fund, is keeping up. There are 60 parishes, and so far 18 have contributed $18,119. The envelope system of collecting is proving successful in St. James' church, Kingston.

Work on the new church in Ottawa, on Theodore st., is being pushed on rapidly. The tower is now completed and the roof on. It was hoped that the church might be used by the end of November. Dean Lauder is in bad health. He has been at work in Ottawa for 42 years. When he first went to the city there was only one church there, now there are 16. The Bishop has been making a stay at Banff.

A new church is being built at Sprucedale, which it is hoped will be ready for use by December. The Bishop has been making a trip through the district about Fort William. The desirability of separating West Fort William from East Fort William was discussed at a conference with the Bishop and the congregation of West Fort. The Rev. D. A. Johnston has been removed from Mid Lothian to Powassan.

"This diocese," writes the Bishop, "stands furthest west of the eight dioceses comprised in the Province of Rupert's Land. Till recent days a purely missionary one for the behoof of the Indians, it has now changed its character, and needs fresh resources to meet the wants of a rising colonial district." There are as yet only two missions exclusively for the use of the miners, St. Paul's church, Dawson, and St. James' mission, Forty Mile. These are supported by the Colonial and Continental Church Society.

In the absence of the Bishop of the diocese in England, the Bishop of Ottawa held an ordination in St. Matthew's church, Quebec, to admit to the diaconate Mr. J. S. Brewer, of Magdalen College, Cambridge, who has been appointed curate of St. Matthew's. Bishop Dunn returned home the second week in October, and arranged to hold Confirmations in the townships from Oct. 24th. He was to consecrate the new church at Dennistown, Me., under commission from the Bishop of Maine, on the 26th. The diocese of Quebec has sustained a great loss in the death of Senator Price. His great and constant liberality to every branch of Church work was widely known. A united service was arranged for Thanksgiving Day, to be held in the cathedral, Quebec.

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

Waterman Hall, Sycamore, is comfortably filled with its 65 resident pupils.

The Rev. C. E. Taylor, recently from the diocese of Fond du Lac, has charge of the Douglas Park mission, in conjunction with St. Michael and All Angels's, Berwyn, where he resides.

The usual monthly choir festival in the church of the Epiphany drew a very large congregation on the evening of the 5th.

The Lord Bishop of Niagara is spending a fortnight with his son, the rector of St. Peter's; preaching in that church both morning and evening on the next two Sundays. He is accompanied by Mrs. Du Moulin.

The sum of $600 has recently been expended in improvements on the church building at Dixon, and the rector, the Rev. John Sage, has hopes of a rectory in the early future.

The new parish house of St. Paul's, Kankakee, is now plastered, and will be ready for occupation in about three weeks.

The Rev. F. W. Keator left the diocese last week, to assume his new duties as rector of St. John's, Dubuque, Ia.

Wednesday, Nov. 1st, having been a very inclement day, the lecture on Genesis and Science, in the Scripture course being given in St. Peter's, was postponed; but, not to disappoint the dozen parishioners who had faced the elements, Prof. Hall repeated the substance of his lecture on "The communion of saints," delivered on the preceding evening in All Saints' cathedral, Milwaukee.

St. Luke's Hospital

The Rev. Dr. Clinton Locke, honorary president and chaplain, writes as follows:

On entering the chapel of St. Luke's Hospital today, I was much gratified to see a beautiful tablet on the wall, put there by the president, Mr. Arthur Ryerson, to the memory of his mother, Ellen Griffin Ryerson, whose long and faithful devotion to the hospital so many of us remember. The long time of her service on the hospital board of directors is stated, and then follow those touching words from the Litany: "O God, we have heard with our ears, and our fathers have declared unto us the noble works that thou didst in their days, and in the old time before them." This work of art is a well-deserved tribute to a noble woman, one of a faithful band to whom St. Luke's owes much of its present prosperity. Some still remain, but many are in Paradise. May perpetual light shine upon them.

Special Convention Called

Last week the Bishop sent notice to every clergyman and parish of the diocese, of a special convention to be held in the cathedral, on Tuesday, Jan. 9th, 1900, for "the consideration of a request from the Bishop for the election of a bishop-coadjutor, the election of said coadjutor, and the enactment of such legislation as may be made necessary by said election."

Annual Meeting of the Church Club

Held in the club rooms, Nov. 2d, the president, Mr. Geo. S. McKeynolds, in the chair, and a goodly number of members present. After the opening prayer by the Rev. Dr. Delafield, the president's address congratulated the members on the satisfactory condition of the club at the commencement of this, its 10th, year. The meetings, 10 general and eight executive, had been well attended. There had been delivered by bishops of the Church, under the auspices of the club last Lent, in Grace church, Chicago, an interesting course of lectures on periods in Church history, the series having been arranged with the co-operation of the Minneapolis club. But the chief event of the year was the conference in February, in which 10 clubs were represented, and during which Chicago had not been lacking in hospitable reception of the visitors. The proceedings of this conference, including all papers read at it, have since been published in pamphlet form. The report of the treasurer, Mr. E. H. Buehler, showed the club to be out of debt, after an expenditure for the year of $2,857.70, with a balance on hand of $3.80. The report of the secretary gave last year's members as 220, of whom 18 had dropped out, and one (Mr. C. R. Larrabee) had died; 74 new members had been received, making a total present membership of 275; a net gain of 55. The Committee on Programme reported, with the suggestion of a meeting of the Endowment Committee this month, and club dinners in January and February. On behalf of the Committee on Nomination, Mr. D. B. Lyman presented a report; Mr. J. F. LeMoyné having declined re-election, Hon. Jesse Holden's name was substituted, and the following were unanimously elected: President, F. B. Tuttle; vice-president, Joseph T. Bowen; treasurer, E. H. Bushler; secretary, Taylor E. Brown; directors, Messrs. E. P. Bayley, W. J. Bryson, Charles M. Fay, Jesse Holden, M. R. Cavanaugh, G. S. McReynolds, W. C. Niblack, D. B. Salisbury, and C. A. Street. The secretary suggested the propriety of an increase to the library by donations from the members on Thanksgiving. The Rev. E. M. Stires gave an interesting epitome of the proceedings of the late Missionary Council at St. Louis. The Rev. W. C. De Witt also mentioned a few incidents connected therewith. The Rev. John Henry Hopkins spoke of the impression made upon him of the immensity of the mission field, and work of the Church in it. After a few remarks from Mr. Hoag, the Rev. C. P. Anderson moved a resolution of sympathy with the Bishop in his indisposition, and, after light refreshments, the meeting adjourned.

The Endowment Fund

At 2 P. M. of Monday last, on the call of the executive committee on the endowment fund, between 50 and 60 of the clergy of the diocese met these prominent laymen in the Church Club rooms. The Rev. Dr. Little was called to the chair, and the Rev. C. P. Anderson elected secretary of the meeting. Mr. Edwin Walker, chairman of the committee, made a very clear statement as to the progress in the insurance scheme for obtaining a permanent endowment fund of $250,000 at the expiration of ten years, with prospective annual income averaging $3,000 meanwhile; $300 had already been paid to the committee on the policies representing $40,000 already taken out. But, as the speaker added, the insurance plan was not to be the sole reliance, for there were always individuals who would give cash in preference to insuring their lives. Mr. D. B. Lyman pleaded for a united, earnest effort to raise the endowment, or a considerable portion of it, now, so that the coadjutor to be elected in January should not be hampered by financial considerations; and he appealed to the clergy to co-operate with the committee to this end. The Rev. W. Toll stated that, having submitted this very matter to his vestry last Sunday afternoon, they had expressed their willingness to raise their fair share of the endowment now, provided that an assurance be given that this action would release them from further assessment. In reply to a question Mr. Walker stated that the New York Life and Equitable Insurance companies were willing to give policies as favorable as those issued by the Michigan company. On motion of the Rev. Dr. Stone, a resolution was passed, pledging the diocesan clergy to active support of the sub-committee, and requesting that committee to call a mass meeting of Churchmen for the evening of Nov. 15th, with a view to vigorous presentation of the plans for endowment of the diocese.

Trinity Parish, Chicago

At Trinity there has been organized, pioneer of its kind, a branch of the Girls' Friendly Society, for deaf-mutes. On the 22nd the services in the present edifice, built after the destruction of the church on Jackson street by the great fire, will have been held just a quarter of a century. At the first of them the officiating clergyman was the Rev. Noah Hunt Schenck, D. D. There are now six Sunday schools in this parish. At the Rouse Settlement there is now a circulating library, and a girls' club with a membership of 40. "The cathedrals of France" was the subject of an illustrated lecture last month in Trinity parish house, by the Rev. C. Scadding, for the entertainment of St. Barnabas' guild for nurses.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

At the pro-cathedral, the Rev. Prof. Henry S. Nash, D.D., of the Cambridge Divinity School, has just conducted a Quiet Day.

At the recent conference of Church Workers among the Colored People, resolutions were passed condemning the recommendations made by the Commission for Church Work Among the Colored People, that the standard of education be lowered for colored candidates for Holy Orders; and favoring the highest education—liberal and theological—for such candidates.

General Theological Seminary

The matriculation of the new students took place at the chapel on All Saints' Day. The preacher was the Rev. W. W. Battershall, D. D.

Relief of Destitute Children of Seamen

The 53d anniversary of this society took place at the home at New Brighton, Nov. 2nd. The exercises were conducted by the Ven. Archdeacon Johnson, D. D.

St. John's Church, Willmot

At the 40th anniversary of the laying of the corner-stone, just held, the Ven. Archdeacon Van Kleeck, D.D., officiated, and the Rev. Edward H. True made an historical address.

Memorial Windows

At St. Matthew's church, New York, a memorial window, on the theme, "Our Lord calling St. Matthew," was unveiled Sunday, Nov. 5th, in memory of the late Timothy Hogan. On the same day at the church of the Ascension, Mt. Vernon, a window was unveiled in memory of Bessie Dorothea Van Schaick, who died June 30th.

A New Charity

By the will of the late Henry Chauncey, Jr., a new charity is created, to be known as the Emily Howland Chauncey Trust Fund, and to be used to give the children of the poor of New York city summer vacations in the country. The fund will be administered by the rector of the church of the Holy Trinity, Lenox, Mass., and two citizens of this city.

Girls' Friendly Society

The secretary, Miss Paddock, has undertaken a second missionary journey, having in view the stirring of increased interest among branches of the society in the Western and Southwestern States. A movement is making to arrange permanently for a traveling secretary, as the results of the former journey of Miss Paddock have been found eminently satisfactory.

Church Army Work

During the past 12 months the Church Army has held a number of open air services, at several of which vested clergy have officiated. It has also held 241 indoor meetings, with an aggregate attendance of over 13,000. It has provided work for many men and women, temporary shelter for homeless women, and has sheltered and fed more than 1,000 homeless men out of work.

St. Luke's Hospital

At the annual meeting of the society, just held, the reports of the past year were presented, and vacancies in the management were filled by election. There were 2,703 patients under care during the past year, of whom 507 fully paid for treatment, 334 paid in part, and 1,832 were free patients. The cost of maintaining the institution reached $167,910.53. Of this, $133,164.74 was expended in strictly charity work. The endowment fund was increased by $237,750. The meeting took action appropriate to the recent loss by the death of the chairman of the executive committee, Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, and also referring to the loss of one of the medical staff of the hospital, Dr. Wm. C. Campbell.

Memorial Windows at St. James'

At St. James' church, the Rev. Dr. C. Walpole Warren, rector, a fine new window was unveiled on All Saints' Day, in memory of his father, the late Samuel Warren, D. C. L., Q. C., and author of the well-known book, "Ten Thousand a Year." At the same time three other memorial windows were unveiled, the gifts of private individuals. Two more will soon be in place—one of them commemorating the union between St. James' and the former church of the Holy Trinity. The oak carving in the chancel and mosaic tiling in the church, already noted in the columns of THE LIVING CHURCH, has been completed.

Bible and Common Prayer Book Society

The report announces that the new German version of the Prayer Book is being pushed forward, and that the Prayer Book in the Spanish language is being put into good shape for use in our new colonies. Copies of the Prayer Book in the Portuguese language have been printed for Bishop Kinsolving's work in Brazil. The Society has aided in the completion of the Prayer Book in the Japanese and Chinese languages. The year just closed has also been marked by the issue of a Prayer Book in Dakota Indian and of a Psalter for the blind. The society has sent some Portuguese Prayer Books to New England and the West for persons of that nationality desiring them. It has distributed a total of 70,000 Bibles and Prayer Books in various languages.

Daughters of the King

The fall local assembly was held at St. Agnes' chapel, on the Feast of SS. Simon and Jude. The Holy Eucharist was celebrated at 11 o'clock; the sermon preached by the Rev. Mr. Nicoll. Luncheon was served in the adjoining parish house. The afternoon was devoted to a very interesting conference, opened by the Rev. Dr. Olmsted, vicar of St. Agnes'. The following officers were elected for the coming year: President, Mrs. C. J. Holt, of Fordham, N. Y.; vice-president, Mrs. D. O. Haines; secretary-treasurer, Miss M. D. Ryerson. Reports of the various chapters were given, all showing good and efficient work. About 85 members were present. A paper was read by Miss Morand, of St. Augustine's chapter, Trinity parish, "Thoughts for the coming year, or helps toward reviewing the year past." Deaconess Pattison addressed the Daughters on the subject of Bible classes. The Rev. Dr. Olmsted made a few kind remarks, and a closing devotion and adjournment followed. The winter conference will be held at St. Matthew's church, New York city.

Pennsylvania

Ozi William Whitaker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

In the will of Leonard J. Reilly, probated 30th ult., is a bequest of $1,000 for the endowment fund of Grace church, Philadelphia.

A one-story stone addition, 23x15 ft., is to be erected at St. Alban's church, Olney, Philadelphia. It will have a slate roof and galvanized iron cornice.

A generous contribution of $1,712.30 was received by the treasurer of St. Timothy's Hospital, Roxboro, from the employees of the Pen-cord iron works.

Marriage of the Rev. J. G. Bawn, Ph. D.

On Oct. 24th, in Grace church chantry, New York, the Rev. John G. Bawn, Ph. D., was married to Mrs. Mary A. Ryerss, widow of the late Robert W. Ryerss, Esq., both of Philadelphia.

Improvements of St. Stephen's Rectory

Alterations and additions, at a cost of $2,500, are to be made to the newly acquired rectory of St. Stephen's church, Manayunk, the Rev. E. J. Perot, rector. These include a one-story side addition, a reception hall, large colonial porch, remodelling of the staircases, two bay windows, steam-heating plant, etc.

Memorial of Rev. T. P. Hutchinson

On All Saints' Day, at Calvary Monumental church, West Philadelphia, a handsome tablet, in memory of the Rev. Thomas Poole Hutchinson, for over 20 years rector of the parish, was dedicated by the Rev. F. M. Taitt. The Rev. Jesse Higgins has tendered his resignation as rector, to take effect on or before Jan 1, 1900.

Memorial Services

At the church of the Holy Apostles, Philadelphia, the annual memorial service of the Sunday school (preceding All Saints' Day) was held on Sunday evening, 29th ult. On the same evening a special service, "In memory of the faithful departed," took place in St. Luke's church, Germantown, the rector, the Rev. Dr. S. Upjohn, officiating.

All Saints' Church, Philadelphia

On Sunday, 29th ult., harvest home festival services were held throughout the day. The interior of the church was adorned in novel designs formed of grains, fruits, leaves, etc. Whole trees were used with good effect; the varied tints of autumn leaves gave many colors to the whole. The Rev. Robt. A. Tufft, the new rector, preached.

Parish Reception at St. Mark's

At the parish house of St. Mark's church, Philadelphia, the Rev. Dr. Alfred G. Mortimer, rector, a reception was given to the members of the congregation on Tuesday evening, 31st ult., marking the opening of the golden jubilee of that parish. Notwithstanding the very unfavorable weather, there was a large attendance.

Corner-Stone Laid at Somerton

On the 26th ult., the corner stone of the mission chapel of St. Luke's memorial church, Bustleton, was laid at Somerton, by the Rev. Dr. J. DeW. Perry. Addresses were made by the rector, the Rev. S. F. Hotchkiss, Mr. J. C. Lewis, lay-reader, and Dr. Perry. The lot was the gift of Mrs. Reath, and funds are assured for the chapel's erection. A brief notice of this new mission appeared in THE LIVING CHURCH of Oct. 29th.

St. Elisabeth's, Philadelphia

The patronal feast of this parish was observed on Sunday, 5th inst. At 7:30 A. M., there was a solemn dedication of the parishioners to the love and service of Jesus Christ, which was followed by a general Communion. At a later hour, there was a second Celebration, and at 10:30 A. M., a solemn procession and a third celebration of the Holy Eucharist, at which Stainer's Mass in F was sung. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Canon Newton, of Colorado. In the afternoon the children had their service; and at the evening service, there was a solemn procession, with a sermon by the rector, the Rev. Wm. McGarvey, on "The state of the saints in glory."

Old Christ Church, Philadelphia

A fine memorial window has just been put in, the first of a series related to the history of the Christian Church, and particularly to the Anglican part of it, leading up to the organization of the Church in the United States, which took place in this very building. The execution of these windows has been entrusted to Messrs. Heaton, Butler & Bayne, of London. Each window has an endowment of several thousand dollars, as a perpetual memorial. The Wainwright-King window just erected, represents as a central scene, the Ordination of the Apostles (St. John xx: 19-24). The figure of our Lord is a striking original production. It is the triumphant Christ of the Resurrection, standing with outstretched hands slightly raised over the group of kneeling Apostles whose many-hued robes contrast with the ethereal purity of His spiritualized body and glistening raiment. In a sub scene is represented the Apostolic Succession, connecting the Anglican and American episcopate with the Catholic ages. Beginning on the left is portrayed St. Paul, with St. Timothy beside him; and then in order, SS. Ignatius, Athanasius, and Gregory the Great. St. Columbo is an heroic figure in the centre, and next is St. Augustine, of Canterbury. The Norman period is commemorated in St. Anselm, and that of the Reformation in Cranmer. Behind him is the first in the American succession, Bishop Seabury. On one of the supporting columns of the Renaissance border are the words: "The glorious company of the Apostles praise Thee," and on the other, "The Holy Church throughout all the world doth acknowledge Thee." Two other windows of the series, soon to be placed in the church, will have for themes "The Conversion of Constantine," and "The Council of Nice."

Death of the Rev. T. L. Franklin, D. D.

The Rev. Dr. Thomas Levering Franklin, for over a half century a priest of the Church, and an energetic worker in the City Mission, entered into rest eternal on Sunday, 29th ult., in his 80th year. He was born in Philadelphia, April 10th, 1820, received his academic education at Engle's Classical Institute, and, evincing a desire for the ministry, was sent to Trinity College, Hartford, where he graduated in 1841. Immediately thereafter he entered the Theological Seminary at Alexandria, Va., was ordered deacon in 1844, and a year later was advanced to the priesthood. In 1871 the degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon him by Hobart College, Geneva, N. Y. His first parish was Trinity, Moorestown, N. J., after which he went to Boston. Later on he was in charge of St. Ann's, Amsterdam, N. Y., and then went to Mt. Morris, in the same State, where in 1886 he founded the Jane Grey School. Three years later he became rector of Christ church, Madison, Ind., after which he was rector of the church of the Evangelists, Philadelphia. Upon relinquishing the latter, he became identified with the City Mission, and remained active in that work until about a year ago. He was greatly interested in prison reforms, and spent much time and labor among the criminal class. For six years Dr. Franklin was editor of The Episcopal Register, and contributed largely to various Church publications. The funeral services were held on the afternoon of All Saints' Day, at Trinity church, Southwark, of which parish his father's family were members, and in whose cemetery their mortal remains repose.

Golden Jubilee of St. Jude's, Philadelphia

The celebration of the 50th anniversary began on Sunday, 29th ult., and included All Saints' Day. On Sunday morning the rector, the Rev. Charles Logan, preached an historical sermon. In February, 1848, with $6,000 in hand, the parish was organized, and the Rev. Daniel S. Miller was elected rector. The corner-stone of the church was laid July 1st, 1848, by Bishop Alonzo Petter, who also consecrated the edifice Sept. 18th, 1849, and preached the first sermon. A curious fact about the organization of the church was that it was built and paid for (and consecrated) by a few prominent laymen, before there was practically any congregation. In 1887 the rectory was purchased, and is now unincumbered. In 1894 annual collections for the endowment fund were begun, which now amounts to $1,000. The offerings at all the jubilee services were devoted to this object. After the sermon, a few remarks were made by the Rev. Joseph H. Smith, of Hamburg, N. J., who was present when the corner-stone was laid. In the afternoon the Rev. Dr. H. L. Duhring addressed the Sunday school. In the evening, the Rev. Dr. J. N. Blanchard made an address on the many changes that had taken place in the half century, and the great expansion in the American Church. He was followed by Bishop Whitaker who told of the part St. Jude's had taken, both in the neighborhood and the diocese. On Monday, 30th ult., after Evening Prayer, it was announced that the offerings at the Sunday services amounted to $3,889.10. The Rev. E. P. Miller, son of the first rector, made the first address, and was followed by the Rev. W. H. Graff, rector for 17 years. The Rev. J. R. Moses, another former rector, made the closing address. On Tuesday evening, 31st ult. several prominent laymen spoke, among whom were Messrs. Ewing L. Miller, G. Harry Davis, and Lewis H. Redner. The jubilee closed on the evening of All Saints' Day, when the Rt. Rev. Dr. Coleman, Bishop of Delaware, preached a sermon appropriate to the feast.

Quincy

Alexander Burgess, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Bishop's Birthday

On Oct. 31st, Bishop Burgess completed his 80th year, and the event was duly celebrated at St. Mary's, Knoxville, where for a time he is a guest. At the breakfast-table he found 21 roses, suggesting the 21 years of his episcopate. There were also other gifts; among which was a box in which "sweets compacted lie." At Matins there were hymn, Psalm, and lesson, with special collect, appropriate for the day. During the day the Bishop was the recipient of several tokens, among them, flowers from St. Alban's Academy and from the clergy in Galesburg. At the tea-table was the dazzling surprise of a birthday cake holding 80 lighted tapers. At the reception in the evening, an address was read by the chaplain, the Rev. Dr. Rudd, after the presentation of a silver candelabrum, and followed by felicitous remarks by the Bishop.

Southern Virginia

Alfred M. Randolph, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Convocation of Southwest Virginia

Commenced its fall meeting in St. John's church, Roanoke, Oct. 17th. An essay on the subject, "How to bring the distinctive features of the Protestant Episcopal Church to the thoughtful consideration of the people," was given by the Rev. J. S. Alfried. The subject was discussed by the Rev. Messrs. A. P. Gray and E. W. Hubbard. The Rev. Dr. McBryde spoke on "The possibility and work of the Church for missions." An address was made by the Rev. Dr. Logan, on the convocation's "field of work, the need of the field, its resources, and our responsibilities." The Rev. C. C. Randolph spoke on the missionary work in the country districts. St. John's church has recently instituted a vested choir.

Chapel for Colored People in Portsmouth

To be known as St. James', was formally opened on Sunday, Oct. 15th. The Rev. James S. Russell, archdeacon for work among the colored people in this diocese, conducted the services, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Z. S. Farland. The chapel is a frame building, very Churchly in appearance, and was erected at a cost of about $450; the work of construction having been done entirely by colored workmen, nearly all of whom were members of the congregation. The offering amounted to nearly $200.

Central Pennsylvania

Ethelbert Talbot, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Bishop's Visit to Reading

Bishop Talbot spent several days among the Church people at Reading, being the guest of the treasurer of the diocese, Capt. P. R. Stetson. The Men's Social and Beneficial Club of St. Barnabas' parish gave a dinner in honor of the Bishop, to which 60 sat down. He expressed his gratification that such a splendid body of laymen was to be found in this parish, and he made an eloquent speech, on "The Church for men and men for the Church." The rector, the Rev. John F. Nichols, acted as toastmaster, and speeches were made by the Mayor of Reading, by the Rev. Dr. Orrick, of Christ church, the Rev. E. A. Gernant, Thos. P. Merritt, Dr. Murray Weidman, Ira W. Stratton, Hunter Eckert, and others. On Saturday the Bishop conferred with the vestry of Christ church. On Sunday he administered the Holy Communion, preached in Christ church, and addressed the Sunday school in the afternoon. Later he addressed a men's meeting in Y. M. C. A. hall, and at night preached in St. Barnabas' church.

Western New York

Wm. D. Walker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Death of the Rev. Dr. Francis Lobdell

The Church people of Buffalo and the whole community were shocked and saddened when they heard that the rector of Trinity church, the Rev. Francis Lobdell, D.D., LL.D., was dead. Dr. Lobdell had occupied his place in the chancel on the Sunday previous, and attended the weekly meeting of the clergy on Monday. It appears that the doctor had been suffering from insomnia for some time, and on Tuesday administered to himself a dose of laudanum to induce the much-needed sleep. The effect was only to aggravate other disorders from which he suffered, medical skill was unavailing, and death ensued about 4 A. M., Oct. 26th. The funeral services were held in Trinity church on Sunday afternoon. There was a celebration of the Holy Communion in the morning. The casket containing the mortal remains of the rector was borne by the field and staff officers of the 65th Regt. N. G., of which Dr. Lobdell had been chaplain for 10 years, but from which he had received honorable discharge last summer. Bishop Walker read the Burial Service, the lesson being taken by the Rev. Cameron J. Davis, and the choir rendering the musical portions. The body was interred in Forest Lawn Cemetery, the Bishop and Mr. Davis officiating at the grave.

Connecticut

Chauncey B. Brewster, D.D., Bishop

The Bishop's Visit to Huntington

Oct. 15th, before service, the Bishop blessed a new set of altar linen, a new chalice and paten, and a set of cruets which had been presented to the church. At 10:30 a class of five was presented by the Rev. Dr. F. C. H. Wendel for Confirmation. The Bishop preached a very helpful and edifying sermon. At the Eucharist the Bishop celebrated. Both minister and people are encouraged by the progress made since Quinquagesima, when Dr. Wendel took charge, and also by the Bishop's kind words of appreciation and encouragement.

Michigan

Thomas F. Davies, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Rev. Dr. Briggs will visit Detroit soon, and be given a supper by the Church Club, Nov. 16th. He will preach in St. John's church, Detroit, the Sunday following.

Bishop Worthington, of Nebraska, in Detroit on business, gave an excellent talk to the St. John's Woman's Auxiliary in the parish house, Nov. 3rd.

Christ church, Detroit, has a new assistant in the person of the Rev. J. A. Chapin, and the Rev. Mr. Quinn, of Toronto, has recently come to occupy the same position in the church of the Messiah.

The Rev. F. S. White, for two and a half years past first assistant in St. John's parish, Detroit, has accepted work in the Associate Church Mission, Omaha, and left for his new field. Mr. White has been very successful in his work in St. John's, and leaves there many friends and well-wishers.

Mrs. B. C. Whitney who has long been an active and successful worker in St. Paul's parish, Detroit, has been elected president of the International Order of the King's Daughters, a position she will fill with capability and dignity.

A Chapel Opened in Delvay

The very successful missionary work in Delvay, a manufacturing suburb of Detroit, begun only a few years ago, has led to the building of a neat chapel, which was opened Sunday, Oct. 22d. The new work is called Zion church, and has been placed in charge of the Rev. O. R. Tarrant who also serves the Epiphany mission in Detroit.

St. Luke's Hospital and Church Home

The usual service was held in St. Luke's chapel on St. Luke's Day. There was a good attendance. The Rev. Dr. W. D. Maxon preached the sermon, and the Rev. W. F. Jerome, chaplain of the hospital, took the service. Afterwards a light lunch was served in the Church Home.

The Bishop's Anniversary

St. Luke's Day, Oct. 19th, was the 10th anniversary of the consecration of the Bishop. At a meeting of the clergy and some few laymen in St. Luke's chapel, it was resolved to take some formal action on the event, at the diocesan convention, which will meet in St. John's church, Detroit, Nov. 15th, the time of meeting having been changed by vote of the last convention.

Funeral of Col. J. T. Sterling

The funeral service was held in Christ church, Detroit, Nov. 3rd, at 11 A. M. The Rev. Dr. Maxon conducted the services, the Rev. Mr. Charles reading the lessons. The Loyal Legion acted as an escort, and many prominent men were present at the funeral. Col. Sterling was a brave officer in the war for the Union, and held a high position in business and social life. He was active and efficient in the mission work of the city, mainly in the later days of Bishop Harris. The work of St. Barnabas' church in its palmy days was conducted by him. He was a diocesan trustee of Kenyon College, where he graduated.

Albany

William Crowell Doane, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Rev. Dr. John Wesley Cracraft died at Saratoga Springs, Oct. 31st, of paralysis, aged 72 years. He was ordained at Gambier, in 1855, by Bishop McVaine, and rector of churches at Mansfield, Ohio; Peoria, Ill.; Ascension, Chicago, and Epiphany, Philadelphia. He was also at one time rector of the church at Gambier, and chaplain of the college.

Long Island

Abram N. Littlejohn, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

St. George's, Flushing

This parish is erecting a handsome chapel, to be called St. John's, at the highest, and also one of the most pleasant, points in the town, south of Broadway, at Murray Hill. On the Feast of the Transfiguration, at five o'clock in the afternoon, the corner-stone was laid by the rector, the Rev. H. D. Waller, assisted by the other clergy of the parish. The material for the chapel is stone up to the base of the windows, timbers in picturesque arrangement, and plaster from the base of the windows to the eaves, and shingles for the roof, with a roof-rider spire. The parish chapter of St. Andrew's Brotherhood, which has owned the property for some years, made a deed of the lot, 117 by 118 ft., to the parish proper, it being the policy of both that the right to all parish property should be vested in the parish corporation.

The New St. Mark's, Brooklyn

The foundations are to be laid at once, and the work rapidly advanced. The church will cost about $150,000, and is to be built on a lot having a frontage of 150 ft. on the Eastern Parkway, and extending on Brooklyn av. to Union st., a distance of 220 ft. Its length will be 139 ft. by 97 feet across the transept. The plan consists of nave and aisles, transept, and south transept aisle. The north transept is screened off by a glazed partition, which may be opened into the church, and will be used as a chapel. It will be fitted up, as far as possible, with the furniture from the old church. The end of the chancel is semi-circular, and is surrounded by an ambulatory on the outside, connecting the choir rooms and vestries on the south side with the north chancel aisles and chapel sanctuary. At the east end of the south chancel aisle there is a small sacristy. The great piers at the crossing carry the lantern tower, surmounted by a pyramidal spire. In this lantern will be placed all the chief memorial windows from the old church. The top of the cross surmounting this spire is 123 ft. above the ground. The choir portion of the chancel will be seated for about 40 singers and six clergy, and is separated from the nave by a low screen. The altar is to be well elevated, and, including the choir platforms, will be nine steps above the nave floor. The baptistry will be at the west end of the north aisle. The parish house will front on Union st. A bell turret, rising from the east end of the north chancel aisle, will contain the bell from the old church. The chapel will accommodate about 100, and the main part of the church 700 more.

Ohio

Wm. Andrew Leonard, D.D., Bishop
Cleveland Convocation

The autumnal meeting was held at St. Paul's church, East Cleveland, Oct. 31st. The Holy Communion was celebrated at 9 o'clock, the rector, the Rev. E. E. Esselburne, being celebrant. At 10 A. M. was held the business meeting, after which the subject for discussion was taken up; i. e., "The Brotherhood of St. Andrew: 1. Its achievements and possibilities," presented by Canon Orville E. Watson; 2. "The value of a chapter to the spiritual life of the parish," a thoughtful paper read by the Rev. Edward W. Worthington, replete with practical suggestions. In the afternoon Mr. G. K. Shurtleff read a paper upon "Brotherhood work in Cleveland"; his words called forth a brisk discussion. The Rev. Edward S. Doane made a helpful address, upon "The relation of Brotherhood men to the Sunday school, and to the Confirmation class." The work of the boys' department was set forth in an interesting paper by Mr. John Nuss. The Very Rev. C. D. Williams, as one of the delegates to the Brotherhood convention, at Columbus, gave a report bringing out some of the best points in that assembly. Evening Prayer was said at 7:30; the Rev. Geo. H. McGrew, D. D., preached, and the Rev. Chas. H. Schultz gave an address. Altogether, the convocation was considered one of the most suggestive and inspiring gatherings of the year. It adjourned to meet for its next session, on Jan. 16, 1900, in St. John's church, Cleveland.

South Dakota

Annual Convocation of Eastern Deanery

Held at Yankton, Oct. 3rd and 4th; all the clergy belonging to the jurisdiction were present, also lay delegates from two parishes. At 9 A. M. Tuesday, the Holy Communion was celebrated by the Bishop, and a portion of the Bishop's annual address was read. Officers were elected: the Rev. H. N. Tragitt, secretary; John T. Coxhead, treasurer. The Bishop announced appointments made by him: Standing Committee, the Rev. Messrs. J. H. Babcock and W. H. Sparling; and Messrs. Robert W. Folds and George W. Lewis. Rural Dean, the Rev. W. H. Sparling; Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, Miss Mary B. Peabody. Reports were read, and referred to the proper committees. In the afternoon there was held a joint meeting of the convocation and the Woman's Auxiliary, at which papers were read and addresses made as follows: "How to interest the careless and irreligious, and thereby increase our numbers and the influence of the Church," the Rev. Messrs. Tragitt and Sparling. "The Church and social organizations of human origin (lodges, clubs, etc.); the Church, within its sphere, unique and exclusive," the Rev. John H. Babcock. "Sunday schools: how to assure attendance, how to conduct them, course of instruction," the Rev. A. T. Morgan and Miss Eunice Peabody. At 8 P. M., Evening Prayer was said, and addresses made by the Rev. Messrs. Morgan, Gould, and Sparling, subject, "The training of our boys and girls in the home and the Church." Oct. 4th, the Holy Communion was celebrated by the Bishop at 9 A. M., after which there was another joint meeting of the convocation and the Woman's Auxiliary. At this session the Rev. T. C. Eglin related the manner in which he conducted the Sunday school in Watertown; and that subject was fully discussed by the clergy and lay delegates, both men and women. The Rev. Dr. Doherty read a paper upon "The training needed by candidates for the ministry in our Western field." Convocation then adjourned, to meet at Vermillion, 30 miles distant by rail, in the afternoon. The Bishop's address, the addresses of the clergy, the papers read, and the discussions at the several sessions on this day, were pointed, suggestive of thought, interesting, and very profitable. At Vermillion the Bishop and clergy discussed the Sunday school fully and thoroughly in most of its aspects, attendance, teachers, parents, text books, catechising, etc. At 8 P. M., a short service was said in both the English and Dakota languages; the Rev. H. N. Tragitt leading in English, and the Rev. William Holmes who is in charge of the Santee mission in the Niobrara deanery, repeating in Dakota. Mr. Holmes also sang the canticle, "Praise the Lord, O my soul!" and the hymn "From Greenland's icy mountains" was sung by him and the congregation, each in his own tongue in which he was born. The Rev. Messrs. Doherty, North-Tummon, and Durant made addresses upon "The possibility and obligation of stirring up the heart to take hold of God." The attendance at the services in each of the places where convocation met was large. Oct. 5th, the Holy Communion was celebrated by the Rev. Dr. Doherty, after which convocation adjourned. The clergy, accepting the courteous invitation of the president and faculty of the University of Dakota, located in Vermillion, attended the morning service in the chapel. Dr. Doherty read a lesson and offered prayer, and Mr. Holmes sang "The Missionary Hymn" in Dakota. The cathedral chapter holds in trust five acres of land near the university. It is hoped that at some day not far distant, there may be erected on this land a building with rooms and board for the students, especially for those who belong to the Church and those who are pursuing their academic studies in preparation for the ministry.

During the past year there have been some accessions to the clergy: The Rev. A. F. Morgan has become vicar of the cathedral at Sioux Falls; the Rev. T. C. Eglin, rector of Watertown; the Rev. F. A. Gould, curate of Redfield and Groton; and the Rev. North-Tummon, curate of Elk Point.

Washington

Henry Yates Satterlee, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

A harvest home festival service was held on the afternoon of Sunday, Oct. 22d, at the church of our Saviour, Brookland. The decorations of fruits, flowers, and autumn leaves were very beautiful. The sermon was by the Rev. Dr. Devries. This parish is at present without a rector, but the services are maintained by Mr. Warren Young, lay-reader.

Girls' Friendly Society

A general meeting of the Washington branch was held at the guild rooms of Epiphany church, Oct. 24th. Representatives of the various parish societies were present, and the adoption of the "Penny Provident" system was discussed, and decided upon with a view to encouraging the girls to save small sums from their earnings.

Central New York

F. D. Huntington, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Fall Convocation of the Second District

Was held in Trinity church, Camden, Oct. 24th and 25th. At the opening service addresses on the Sunday school were made by the Rev. Messrs. J. J. Burd, Wm. Cooke, and John Arthur. On Wednesday the Holy Eucharist was celebrated by the Rev. E. H. Coley, at 7 A. M., and by the Rev. Oliver Owen, dean, assisted by the rector, at 11 A. M. After Morning Prayer at 9 A. M., a thoughtful and edifying devotional paper, on "The pastoral office" was read by the Rev. A. L. Byron-Curtiss. The Rev. J. E. Ramsdell preached on "The observance of Sunday" at the 11 o'clock service. At 2 P. M., a joint meeting of the convocation and Woman's Auxiliary was held, when interesting reports were made by the dean and the officers of the Auxiliary. The convocation then held a business session, followed by answers to questions previously placed in a box, by the Rev. Messrs. J. R. Harding and J. K. Parker. The Woman's Auxiliary held a separate meeting and heard addresses by Miss L. C. Watson, district president, and Mrs. E. L. Knickerbacker, diocesan president. At 5 p. m., the clergy and auxiliary ladies dined together, and were served by the ladies of the parish. An evening service and addresses on "The work to be done for the support of missions," by the following, closed the convocation: The Rev. Messrs. W. G. Bentley, M. B. Bennett, and A. W. Allen.

Georgia

Cleland Kinlock Nelson, D.D., Bishop

Emmanuel Church, Athens

Has been so far completed that it can be used for divine service, and was formally opened by the Bishop on the 20th Sunday after Trinity. There were also present, and took part in the service, the Rev. Dr. Rede, of Atlanta; the Rev. J. J. P. Perry, of Brunswick, and the rector, the Rev. Troy Beatty. The sermon was preached by the Bishop. The church is built of Georgia granite, cruciform, 125 ft. in length by 75 ft. in width, and in architectural style is early English Gothic. The roof is open timbered, with ceiling of Georgia pine, finished in oil, and the wainscoting of the walls is the same. The chancel and choir furniture, which are not yet provided, will be of oak, as also the pews in the nave. A fine pipe organ, from the factory of J. Brown & Sons, of Wilmington, Del., has been erected. In the chancel has been placed a large window from the old church, representing our Lord in the act of benediction, and entitled "Emmanuel." The large west window represents SS. Luke, John, and Paul, in memory of Dr. Moore, Prof. Wilcox, and Prof. Morris, each of whom had been long identified with the parish. There are also several other beautiful windows in the nave, mostly memorials.

North Dakota

Samuel C. Edsall, D.D., Bishop

Walshville

Bishop Edsall paid a visit to this district on the 10th ult., this being his second visit since last spring. In the evening he held service at Forest River, the church being well filled; the Bishop announced that he had appointed the Rev. J. P. Lytton, of Dickinson, to take charge of the mission in connection with that of Grafton, and expected he would enter upon his duties immediately; a ladies' guild was also formed, with Mrs. Thomas Graham as president. Next morning the Bishop, accompanied by the Rev. D. Munro, drove to Walshville, a distance of 17 miles, and held service there at 10:30; and administered the rite of Confirmation to two candidates, and formally admitted another into the fellowship and communion of the Church. The Bishop delivered a helpful, suggestive address, and expressed his satisfaction at the state of affairs in the parish. In the afternoon the Bishop returned to Ardock, and held service in the M. E. church at 7:30 p. m. At the close a consultation was held as to maintaining services. The want of church accommodation was seriously felt, and as there are few Church people in the town, an attempt to have regular services was doubtful of success.

Southern Ohio

Thomas A. Jaggard, D.D., Bishop
Boyd Vincent, D.D., Bishop Coadjutor

In response to the appeal issued by Bishop Vincent for offerings for the sufferers in Puerto Rico, the sum of $210.91 was raised, and the amount sent to Puerto Rico.

The Rev. Charles E. Oswald, a former Presbyterian clergyman, has been confirmed, and has applied for Priests' Orders. For a short time he attended lectures at Bexley Divinity School, Gambier, Ohio. At present he is acting as lay-reader at Trinity mission, London.

Church Services in West Union

A brick church being for sale in this place, Miss C. C. Griswold, of Evanston, Ill., purchased it, and offered it for the use of the diocese. Archdeacon Edwards found three communicants living in the village, and decided to commence work there by holding a service once a month until such time as the work might warrant more frequent services. The village contains a population of about 1,200, and is situated ten miles from any railroad.

Gift to St. Peter's, Delaware

A beautiful black walnut altar, with re-table and brass altar cross, has been given as a memorial of the late senior warden, George W. Campbell, by his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth L. Campbell, and his daughters, Mrs. Charles W. Brennan, of Cincinnati, and Mrs. George H. H. Butler, of Mt. Vernon, N. Y.

Massachusetts

William Lawrence, D. D., Bishop

John C. Roper, the historian of Napoleon Bonaparte, and a vestryman of Trinity church, Boston, was buried from that church Oct. 30th.

A slate roof costing $250 has been placed on the parish house of St. Mark's, Adams.

A beautiful credence and chancel chair have been given to St. Stephen's, Westborough.

The Bishop's Visitations

NOVEMBER

12. P. M., St. Paul's, North Andover; evening, St. John's, Lawrence.
19. A. M., church of the Redeemer, South Boston; evening, Emmanuel church, West Roxbury.
24. Evening, St. John's Gloucester.
26. A. M., St. Thomas, Methuen; P. M., St. James', South Groveland; evening, Trinity church, Haverhill.
29. Evening, Christ church, Needham.

The Eastern Convocation

At the 288th meeting, which took place in Emmanuel church, Somerville, on All Saints' Day, the preacher at the celebration of the Eucharist was the Rev. Fr. Osborne, S. S. J. C. The Rev. J. W. Hyde gave a review upon "The true limits of ritual in the Church." The Rev. Edward Abbott, D. D., made an address upon "The religious aspects of the East."

St. John's Church, Fall River

The Rev. Herman Page is carrying on an aggressive work among workmen. The present accommodations in the parish house are inadequate for the requirements of the organizations of this parish. It is now proposed to raise the present building and give the basement to the Men's Club, which is composed of 50 men. The improvements designed will cost about $3,500.

Cambridge Theological School

At the service of matriculation of students on All Saints' Day, the sermon was preached by the Rev. F. W. Baker, of New Haven, Conn. Fifteen new students have entered. Addresses at the dinner following the service were made by Mr. Robert Treat Paine for the trustees, Arthur Gilman for the board of visitors, Prof. Max Kellner for the faculty, Prof. Ashley, of Harvard, and Messrs. Parker and Dexter, for the students.

Consecration of Christ Church, Hyde Park

On All Saints' Day, by the Bishop, in the presence of a large and grateful congregation. Mr. Henry S. Burton presented the instrument of donation. The junior warden, Mr. S. F. Gridley, read both lessons. The rector, the Rev. Samuel G. Babcock, and the Rev. W. T. Cheney assisted in the service, and the Bishop preached. Among other things, the Bishop said in his sermon: "Intensity of thought is the great essential to Christian worship, and if every Christian were to put the same intensity into his worship that he puts into his temporal affairs, the Christian world would be a great deal richer thereby." He deprecated the tendency of the times to make the Church a social centre. In the celebration of the Holy Communion, the Bishop was assisted by the Rev. E. A. Rand. A large number of the clergy were present. After service the parishioners and clergy met in the parish house, which is the old church building, remodeled and refitted, and enjoyed a social time. Old Christ church was consecrated in 1863, and 31 years after, the present building, built of stone, and upon the old site, costing $20,000, has been consecrated. Bishop Brooks encouraged the building of the new church by a personal gift of $500, a lady gave $6,000, and the remainder was made up by the parishioners and their friends. The rector has shown in the building of the church a strong business judgment which has proved most helpful and suggestive in details to the building committee.

Milwaukee

Isaac Lea Nicholson, D.D., Bishop

St. John's Church, Portage

Has just succeeded in replacing the lovely Hook & Hastings organ which was destroyed in the burning of the old church two years ago, by another of that same make. The new organ, formerly belonged to Christ church, La Crosse, was displaced to make room for a larger one, and hence was secured at a bargain by St. John's, a gracious providence for which it is devoutly thankful. It has not been injured by use; with some minor alterations, successfully fitted into the present organ room, although it is somewhat larger than the one burned, to which it is equal in sweetness of tone and much superior in power. The acquisition of this noble accessory to the grand worship of the Church, has, however, imposed an added burden on this feeble but earnest and hopeful people, as they were able by vigorous effort to raise only about half of the purchase money.

Maine

Henry Adams Neely, D.D., Bishop

Death of the Bishop

The venerable Diocesan entered into rest, on Tuesday, Oct. 31st, aged 69 years. The funeral was on the following Friday. Henry Adams Neely was born in Fayetteville, N. Y., May 14, 1830, graduated at Hobart College, Geneva, N. Y., in 1849, and was tutor in that college from 1850-52. He was ordered deacon, Dec. 19, 1852, by Bishop De Lancey, and advanced to the priesthood by the same Bishop, June 13, 1854. He was successively rector of Calvary church, Utica, and Christ church, Rochester, and chaplain of Hobart College from 1862 to 1864. He then became assistant minister in Trinity church, New York city, with charge of Trinity chapel. In 1866, Hobart College gave him the degree of S. T. D. He was consecrated second Bishop of Maine, Jan. 25, 1867. For six years, the longest time permitted by law, he was chairman of the House of Bishops, a fact indicating the high place he held as a bishop, a scholar, and a parliamentarian. He was a man of inflexible honesty, not hesitating to express his views, whether popular or otherwise, a quality invaluable in these days. Only three bishops whose date of consecration precede his, survive him. May he rest in peace!

Iowa

Theodore Nevil Morrison, D.D., Bishop

Trinity Church, Muscatine

Sunday morning, Oct. 15th, the Rev. W. Parry-Thomas, rector, made an earnest appeal for support in the new work he has undertaken at All Saints' mission, East Hill, in behalf of boys and young men. He is getting gradually but surely a strong hold on these young men, and those who have not attended a place of worship for many years, are now coming to listen to some straight, manly talk. The young women who form the evening choir at Trinity church appeared vested for the first time—the work was a labor of love to Mrs. Parry-Thomas and her sister, Miss Rogers; the money for the same was cheerfully given by the members of the church.

Editorials and Contributions

The English Church Congress

THE Church Congress was this year, for the first time, held in London. The place of meeting was Albert Hall, which has seats for about eight thousand. For various reasons, the holding of the Congress in so large a city was felt to be something of an experiment. Amid a population of five million even so large an assembly attracts comparatively little attention. In the daily papers it does not become the principal topic for the time being, but has to divide public interest with other subjects of importance to the London world. At this particular time, moreover, there was some possibility that a meeting in London might be made the occasion of renewed demonstrations of the Kensit order. In point of numbers there is no question of the complete success of the Congress. The attendance was much larger than on any previous occasion. Moreover, the Bishop of London, as president, won golden opinions from all sides. But in point of intrinsic interest, the proceedings hardly seemed to reach the level of former occasions, and leading organs of opinion are inclined to pronounce some of the sittings as distinctly dull. This criticism, however, would not apply to the occasions when questions now exciting the liveliest interest in religious circles came to the fore.

ON the opening day of the Congress, Oct. 10th, the proceedings began, as usual, with an address by the president, on the relation of the Church to civilization and society, and especially the position of the Church of England and its responsibility to the English people. Some fault was found with this discourse, as suggesting the idea that those features of the Anglican Church which are peculiar to itself are of more value than those which it possesses in common with the Holy Catholic Church of all times and places. But such criticism may be overdrawn. The first subject of discussion was "The Church in London in this Century," in which "The West and the City," "East London," "London over the Border," and "South London" were successively dealt with. The various papers, taken together, gave an instructive view of the Church in London during the nineteenth century, its progress, with its successes and failures, and its present needs. Notwithstanding the amazing number of churches which have been erected since 1836, the increase of population has been so rapid and so vast, that even now the average to each parish is larger than ever. The account of East London, with its devoted and heroic clergy, and the eighty new churches, with vicarages and schools, founded within the last fifty years, was most interesting. But this district contains one million inhabitants, and its needs are limitless. "South London" is over the Thames, in the diocese of Rochester. Here, amid a population of two million, eighty new churches have been erected in twenty years, besides the enlargement and restoration of many old ones. Nowhere is the work of the Church more zealous and aggressive. There are large numbers of Church schools, college and public school "settlements," an institution for deaconesses, and an association of the "Grey Ladies."

Add to this, the expenditure of $450,000, by which the noble church of St. Saviour's, Southwark, has been converted into a cathedral, where a chapter has been constituted on a new and effective plan. The words of the speaker to whom this field was assigned glowed with enthusiasm, as well they might. Yet he was far from any idea that the responsibilities of the Church in that district were fulfilled, or that her servants were entitled to rest upon the work already achieved.

"THE Church and the Laity," an unfortunate mode of expression, as seeming to distinguish the "Church" from the laity, was a subject which brought to the front a question of pressing importance. We fear that it would have filled Dr. Pusey with troubled amazement to find men who profess to be of his school claiming a place for the laity in the councils of the Church. The first speaker, Mr. George W. E. Russell, a layman of the most advanced wing, came out flatly in favor of such a departure, taking his starting-point from what he esteemed to be fundamental principles; and Canon Gore contended that in the early and mediæval Church, the laity had a far larger place in the government of the Church than they have had in later days. He thought that the modern representative system must be applied in order to adapt the Church to the conditions of our age. The Canon even went so far as to include women in his scheme on equal terms with men. On the whole, we observe that his position seems to be regarded by the Church papers as much too radical to find acceptance. Those who are familiar with the trend of public opinion in England, however, cannot doubt that the time is coming when the laity will have a recognized place in the government of the Church. Canon Gore was careful to say that, according to Holy Scripture and the whole tradition of the Church, the maintenance of the essential Catholic rule of faith, worship, and discipline must be reserved to the bishops.

DISCUSSION, on the second day, on "The Church and the Evangelization of the World," corresponded closely to the average missionary meeting, with a little less of spontaneity. The Rev. M. M. Ben-Oliel made a brief speech on the position of the Jews in the modern world. Mr. Ben-Oliel is himself a Jewish convert, though he has been thirty-nine years in Holy Orders. He reminded his hearers that there were five million Jews in Russia, and two million in Austria, not to speak of the very large number in some of the Danubian principalities. These are precisely the countries where they are subject to the heaviest oppression. In the entire British Empire, there are only one hundred and fifty thousand. He drew the inference that the Jews prefer the lands where they are persecuted. In Russia, they increased a million in ten years. "If you wish to keep Jews away from your empire, you have only to proclaim to them the perfect rights of citizenship. They will never come to claim them." The Jews in the sixteenth century numbered three million. There are now eleven million. They are already spoken of as the seventh great power of Europe. It is impossible, the speaker said, to suppress the Jews. As in Pharaoh's time, the more they were suppressed, the more they multiplied and grew, so it is now. Our duty is not to suppress, but to evangelize, them.

ONE of the most interesting papers read during the Congress was that of Archdeacon Diggle, on "Speculation and Gambling." He classed gambling with illegitimate speculation, and while he would not commit himself to the indiscriminate lumping together of small bets, small stakes, lotteries at bazars, and the like, with the baser proceedings of gambling tables and gambling hells, yet he thought that "the Christian arithmetic should not be a curious calculation of how far down it is safe to go, but an enthusiastic reckoning of how far up it is possible to rise." Therefore, though a lottery at a bazar might be innocent, he would rather "placard before his people the Christian ideal of almsgiving, and wait in patience the result, than snatch a church or charity suddenly out of debt by the dubious expedient of a lottery." On the very serious subject of "Sunday Labor," an excellent paper was read by a layman, Mr. Geo. Livesey, chairman of the South Metropolitan Gas Company, who gave some reason for hope of improvement in the conditions affecting that most important matter. "Needless Sunday labor," he said, "in manufacturing industries appears to be slowly—too slowly—diminishing. In employments that minister to recreation and pleasure, a rapid increase is apparent." It is on this side, then, that Christian people are specially called to consider how their own influence and practices are affecting the welfare of others.

PASSING over several topics of interest, upon which, though ably treated by Churchmen of the first reputation, it can hardly be said that anything very new was brought to light, or any striking point made, we come to the subject in which the interest of the Congress reached its height; namely, that set for the third day, "The Church and Her Services." The Bishop of London, in the chair, remarked that he was told that it was a subject on which there exist differences of opinion, and earnestly exhorted the immense assembly not to turn "a discussion into a demonstration." He hoped all expressions of approval or dissent would be reserved till the close of each paper. He reminded them that they had just sung—

"The world without may rage, but we Will only cling more close to Thee."

He trusted they would not reproduce the world, and walk in its ways. The great throng evidently desired to be virtuous, and kept itself well in hand for awhile. But when Lord Halifax rose, he was greeted with a tremendous outburst of cheers. His paper, "On the Principles of Ritual," of course touched the most sensitive point. There was, however, nothing in the least degree explosive, or even irritating, in the remarks of his lordship, except so far as the subject itself may be considered to be of that character. This could not be said of the expressions of Prebendary Webb-Peploe who took part in the same discussion. When this gentleman had made the usual charges of Romanizing and superstition, he proceeded to characterize certain features of ceremonial as "fetich worship," or "the standard of the false prophet," upon which the audience seems to have fairly risen and howled, until the president came forward and succeeded in commanding silence. At the close of the session, the Bishop said that the assembly had behaved so well he could not help wishing they had behaved a little better. Of the discussion, he remarked that "they had heard many opinions, and in his view some of them were wiser than others."

THE Congress had its usual accompaniments. Sermons by distinguished preachers in the great metropolitan pulpits; mass-meetings for men, for women, and for girls; a "Christian Conference," at which Professor A. Sabatier, of the French Protestant faculty, was the chief speaker; a meeting of the Church of England Temperance Society; an Ecclesiastical Art Exhibition, which is said by The Guardian to have attained the highest point of excellence; and last, but not least, the great meeting of the Church Union, held just before the opening of the Congress, were among the attractions of the week.

"Traditional Interpretation"

THE irrepressible Dr. Briggs who has lately returned from a trip abroad, preached at the church of the Holy Communion, New York, on the 21st Sunday after Trinity. According to published reports, he claimed for "Higher Criticism" the credit of having rescued the Bible from false interpretations. "The weak and incapable defenders" of Holy Scripture, he said, "covered it over with traditional interpretations, which were not unfrequently perversions of its meaning. Incapable of understanding its deep spiritual truth, they explained its meaning away by false methods of interpretation, reducing them to their own limited comprehension and moral ability." Setting aside the supreme arrogance of such an utterance, we are led to ask what is referred to as "traditional interpretation," and who are these weak, incapable, and unspiritual interpreters? It appears to be a sweeping and contemptuous arraignment of all the great commentators of the Church, and of the system they pursued. Origen, Chrysostom, Theodoret, and their followers in after ages, are set aside with a wave of the hand. They were "unspiritual," "men of limited comprehension and moral ability."

WE have not been accustomed to look for any spiritual unveiling at the hands of the higher critics. In fact, we have not been able to read the volume on which the present notoriety of Dr. Briggs chiefly rests, without many shocks to reverent feeling, and, certainly, we did not rise from its perusal with any consciousness of deeper spiritual insight. Higher Criticism, at the best, is only concerned with the outer setting of the Word of God. It may carry on its investigations to its heart's content into the sphere of names and dates, of composition and literary characteristics; but all that cannot touch the method of interpretation which Our Lord instituted, and His Apostles followed as the Holy Spirit guided them into all the truth; and which the great interpreters of the Church have humbly endeavored to pursue. It was unquestionably a spiritual and mystical method of exegesis. We have only to examine the way in which the Old Testament is quoted and explained in the New to see this. The words of Christ Himself, the quotations in the Gospels, the preaching of the Apostles at Jerusalem, the Epistles of St. Paul, and, not least, the Epistle to the Hebrews throughout, all testify to this. "That the Catholic Church," says Dr. Elmendorf, "followed in the steps of the Apostles in this matter of understanding spiritually the Old Testament, is so notorious that it is actually made a reproach. She took an 'allegorical' a 'mystical' view of her own sacred books, and did not know what they really meant until our modern critics appeared and showed it to her." Can any one assert that there is a deeper "spirituality" in a method which insists upon the literal meaning, and the literal meaning only, from first to last? It is a method which strips away the Christology of the Old Testament, except in the most vague and general sense, which denies the Messianic character of passages in which, from the days of the Apostles, the Church has always discerned that character; which rejects the significance of the Old Testament types and symbols; which refuses to see in the Psalms anything further than the personal experiences and feelings of the men who wrote them; and which will not allow to the Prophets the predictive gift, but insists that their view was bounded by the circumstances of their own times, and that their utterances have no wider significance.

THE Church believes the Old Testament because it believes in Christ. Strip it of that Christian significance which He first, and His disciples after Him, attributed to it, and its value is gone. The Church as such is not interested in the Bible as a book of antiquities or a collection of ancient literature. There is no manner of doubt that whatever discoveries of fact the antiquarian investigators may make, and whatever inferences they may choose to draw from such discoveries, the ancient traditional method of interpreting the Scriptures will persist. All this critical work does not and cannot affect it. The supposed facts might all be true (though that is an extreme admission), but there is quite another light in which they may be viewed from that which the critics generally are inclined to follow. It is the light which is shed upon them by the conviction that the Bible is the Word of God, and that we are not at liberty to treat it as we would treat "any other book." We are dealing with the things of a divine, a supernatural, sphere. If this be esteemed as evidence of "limited comprehension" and narrow "moral ability," the Church will nevertheless pursue the even tenor of her way. She will continue to employ that "traditional" interpretation which Dr. Briggs seems to scorn, but of which we suspect he knows but little, without being daunted by charges of weakness and incapacity.

THE Bible discloses to us behind the veil of phenomena something more than sovereign law, something more than absolute being. It may for long ages be silent as to the future, but from the beginning to the end, it is inspired by the eternal.—Bishop Westcott.

Children's Services

BY THE REV. J. H. HOUGHTON

THE allusion to St. Mark's, Denver, in THE LIVING CHURCH, has brought many inquiries, and the following particulars may encourage those who are interested in Church children. St. Mark's does not depend on any one service or school to make its Church life interesting to the young, but rather on the old mother Church idea that the house of God is the centre of its religious life. It is no uncommon sight to see fifty in a day come into the church and pray as they go to school—older boys down to youngest children—they believe God lives there, and all their services have this idea as a root from which beautiful devotion springs.

The leaders in this are the young communicants, of whom there are over 200 in the 650 communicants of the parish, ranging from 13 to 20 years of age. Before their first Communion they have from three to five months' weekly instruction, and particular care is paid to the training of them in rules which their life is to follow. Once a month all come to a meditation, and they are asked publicly whether they have prayed twice daily, have read the Bible once each day, have been twice on Sunday at church, and once at prayers in the week, have practiced abstinence on Friday, have given a tenth of wages, and have had someone in mind they are trying to bring to Christ. They have no hesitation in rising to these inquiries in a body, and they never fail on the last one. Here is a great secret with the young heart—get the child interested to save somebody else. Our Baptisms are from 80 to 100 each year, our Confirmations from 50 to 70.

The idea of worship is carried first into the Sunday and then into the week day. Each Confirmation class is assigned to a particular morning, so that in a parish where on Christmas, 1892, only six came at 7:30 A. M., each early Communion now numbers from 45 to 75 the year around; 400 at the four Communions on great festivals. After each early service a breakfast is served of coffee and rolls for five cents, and the rector always goes down to help sing the "Grace." At 9:15 the first Sunday school is opened by shortened Morning Prayer; one of the superintendents leads, assisted by a teacher, and a choir of young people fill the chancel; 100 to 150 will be at this service, and if on time during the year, they receive a silver cross with the word, "Worship" on it, as being the first to sing a hymn to Christ in Denver Sunday mornings; then the session of the school follows until 10:20, graded just as the public schools. New scholars are simply asked what grade in school, and are classified at once. The 250 children go home at 10:40, not because they want to, but because there is not room in the church for them and the 11 o'clock adult congregation. After this service, a second Sunday school comes, gathering the "country" children from a distance, and at 2:45 a third school comes, gathering the scholars to whom the morning hours are unsuited. All these schools, together with a mission school at St. Philip's House of 100, follow the same Blakeslee system, and are examined every three months by written papers. At the parish church the children to the number of 300 and 400, come for Evensong at 3:45; the boys sit on the right, the girls on the left; the junior choir of 16 surpliced boys leads the processional, and there files into the chancel at the same time a choir of 20 girls, and an orchestra of ten pieces. The service never changes, save in Lent, when the "Story of the Cross" is sung. At the offertory the orchestra plays a selection. Once a month this offering goes to missions, with a tract distributed on the work; the rest of the time the money goes to some local want. Then a hymn and a "continued story." The rector began with Jones-Lines' Stories on the Collects seven years ago, and had thirty at the first service. As the number grew, he followed a line of historical subjects connected with the Church, and is now telling "The Scourge of God," by Burton, as showing the struggle of the Huguenots. Even if a little bad weather comes the following Sunday, each of the 300 to 400 children wants to hear the next chapter. This service is followed by birthday blessings, and once a month by a meditation for communicants.

In the week time there are hours for daily service, which the children are expected to support, and they run the whole year through with from 25 to 60; these have almost as many boys as girls, and are short-est Prayer Book services, with plenty of singing, and a familiar comment on the Scripture read. During the week also they have a weekly appointment at guild meetings, and attend in their locality where centres are established. The first meeting in the month is for business; the second, literary; the third, missionary, and the fourth social, when games, plays, etc., are produced. Each guild has from 10 to 40 members, and standing committees visit each week the hospitals and sick in houses, and distribute garments to the poor. Each, too, has a day to care for the chapel altar, which in summer is covered with flowers. It might be added that through the entire parish the clergyman always has a "curtesy" from the girls, and a "hat off" from the boys. At St. Philip's House, in one corner of the parish, the same system prevails, having about 100 in Sunday school, in sewing school, and in cadet company, and the whole work is conducted by St. Andrew's Brotherhood and ladies of the parish. By the side of the church, on rented lots, "Browne Park" is enclosed, where, amid flowers and grass, are swings, rings, bars, etc., to attract and protect St. Mark's children.

The clergy who read this will say: "Well, the rector of that parish must have help, money, and buildings galore!" We therefore enclose extracts from St. Mark's Weekly Leaflet, which shows that any priest has the means at hand, with love in his heart, to accomplish a similar work.

Some Common Mistakes

BY THE REV. FRED'K S. JEWELL, D. D.

FIRST. It is a mistake of the gravest character to regard the Church as anything other or less than a divine institution. If it is not that, it has no exclusive, no absolute, no unassailable authority in the religious world. If it has not that authority, it is unequal to the lofty and far-reaching purposes of true religion; it will be powerless to hold its own against the sinful passions and religious conceits of men; unable to supply the faithful with a sure, stable, and abiding ground of trust. If it has not that, its attributes and accidents will be dominantly human; for whatever institutions and laws are of human origin, it is within the power and province of like human agencies and authorities to change and overthrow. Hence, Jehovah gave Moses on the mount the precise pattern of the things which concerned His Church under the Old Dispensation; and Jesus supplied the complement and authoritative completion of that example for the New Dispensation, by both declaring, "On this rock I will build My Church," and by speaking to the Twelve during another memorable forty days, "of the things concerning the kingdom." Their function consisted only in setting in order and putting in operation the things which they had received from Him; and their authority to do this was derived directly and alone from Him as the divine Head of the Church.

SECOND. It is a mistake to assume that a so-called Church is a divine institution because the men who devised and ordered it claimed to do that on the basis of the Bible as a divine authority. For this is not at all a divinely originated and authorized Church of God. It is only a human simulacrum of one, fashioned according to men's notions of the divine method; and the Protestant world is proof that those notions are uncertain, diverse, and even contradictory. But it is of the very nature of the divine and divinely ordered, that it should be above such infirmity.

Again, supposing such a Church to be founded upon the Bible, the foundation does not of necessity determine either the nature, use, or merits of the superstructure. The world has seen few things wilder, more absurd, and more productive of evil, than many of the religious movements and schemes which have been ostensibly based upon the Bible. Under the rule of private interpretation, the best things of the Bible have often been the worst abused. Moreover, this use of the term "divine" is mere juggling with words. Our Lord was a divine Being, not merely as having a divine mission nor as teaching divine truth. He was divine as having come from God, and as having in His twofold Being a distinctly divine Nature. And so with the Church; it must have come from the fashioning hand of God, and must have received directly from Him its authority and power.

Letters to the Editor

PRAYER BOOK "RIGMAROLE"

TO THE EDITOR OF The Sun.—Sir: Dr. Briggs has dared to tell at least a part of what he thinks, and to stand by it on all occasions through thick and thin. If, because he "trims" a little or "beats around the bush" somewhat, you call him a "coward," what ought you not to say of those who, holding his, or similar, opinions in secret, keep their tongues between their teeth on all public occasions and use him as a scapegoat to bear the burdens of their own reproach?

The hymns, prayers, Bible readings, and sermons of all "orthodox" Churches are constantly affirming belief in old dogmas and conceptions which are no longer credible to an intelligent mind, and are privately disclaimed by many of the officiating clergymen. The Protestant Episcopal Prayer Book is cumbered from beginning to end with words and phrases which bind it to the Biblical and traditional errors which Dr. Briggs and his fellow-critics are so irrefutably pointing out. Its rubrics require all clergymen to read, and all worshippers to hear read, in appointed Lessons and Psalms, portions of the Bible which are inhuman, indecent, and false.

Thousands who read, and tens of thousands who hear, know that they are no part of the real Word of God, and yet the rigmarole goes on, with hardly ever a lifted voice to protest or to demand that the Prayer Book be revised. Again I ask, if you call Dr. Briggs an "intellectual coward," what strong enough word have you left for those who hide behind him without courage of conviction enough to open their lips?

M. K. SCHERMERHORN,
A clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

New York, Oct. 24th.

To the Editor of The Living Church:

Anent your editorial remarks this week regarding the Prayer Book, I enclose a letter printed in The New York Sun of this date. The "Arian conspiracy" grows apace. The Prayer Book, of course, is a formidable barrier to the new gospel of the "Higher Criticism." It is the book of the people from which they learn the old Faith, and shall it be allowed to stand? Not if the prophets and peddlers of a progressive Pantheism can help it! If Holy Scripture itself is not safe from the ruthless and destructive hand of a self-satisfied criticism which denounces all as fools who do not agree with its peculiar conclusions from unverifiable and unverifiable hypotheses, is it to be supposed that the Prayer Book, which is built upon Holy Scripture, can long abide? When a bishop of the Church asserts that the statement of the Whitsunday Proper Preface is merely a sixteenth-century interpretation of the fact of the Pentecostal Gift, which is not binding upon those enlightened by the ignis fatuus of nineteenth-century criticism, is it not time to ask what next? The attack upon the Prayer Book in the assumed interest of Christian unity is at heart a blow aimed at the truth taught by the book.

There is another alternative than that suggested by the writer of the enclosed letter. Ordinary, every-day honesty, if not that kind taught by "Higher Criticism," would suggest that when a man does not believe in the Prayer Book statements any more, it is time he withdrew and gave up his commission. Instead, these choice spirits boldly give the Church warning that they will do nothing of the sort. They openly proclaim their rebellion, challenge reproof, avow their disloyalty, and notify the Church which has commissioned them as teachers, that teach they will, but whatever they like, too; they will not be bound by ordination vow or any other solemn compact. More than this, they declare their purpose to do all they can to destroy and pull down and wreck the fabric of the old household of faith. It is sometimes objected that the pious intentions of these declared truth-seekers and honest men, as they think themselves, ought to shield them from being dealt with as offenders. That might be all very well if the Church were not charged by her Lord to feed and tend the lambs and sheep of His flock. If the shepherds would think a little more about the danger of the sheep, and less of how they may escape encounters with the wolf, perhaps the wolves would not be so bold. It seems as though it were time that something were done by the clergy themselves to resent the imputation of the above letter, that they have not the same courage of conviction as the writer, and the implied charge that they have as little faith left as himself.

ALBAN RICHEY.

New York City.

THE FINANCES OF THE BROTHERHOOD
OF ST. ANDREW

To the Editor of The Living Church:

May I call your attention to an inaccuracy in your otherwise excellent report of the recent convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, in Columbus? The statement is made that the treasurer's report showed a deficit of about $10,000. This is calculated, I fear, to give a wrong impression concerning both the financial and spiritual condition of the Brotherhood. As a matter of fact, the treasurer was able to report cash in hand to the amount of $2,957.32.

Your reporter was evidently misled by the statement of liabilities attached to the report. These did amount to something over $10,000, but it should be noted that most of the items included in this amount represented not indebtedness actually incurred, but amounts which the council desired to raise during the year, in order that the general work of the Brotherhood among the chapters in the United States, among the young men in Japan, and among the soldiers in the Philippines, might be maintained on its present scale.

JOHN P. FAURE, Treasurer.

New York, Oct. 28, 1899.

"STEALING A CHURCH"

To the Editor of The Living Church:

Will you kindly permit the correction of a wrong assumption in your editorial, entitled "Stealing a church," in your issue of Oct. 28th.

The so-called "Quadrilateral" figured in the matter only as being taken for a desire on the part of the Protestant Episcopal Church for Church unity. There was no concession asked of or made by Bishop Davies in the matter of the use of the Prayer Book, nor was it expected that the canons would be defected by a hair's breadth in favor of the new parish. It was distinctly understood, however, between the parish and the Bishop that no sacrifice of principle was contemplated or to be required. It was only upon this distinct understanding that the parish voted to apply for admission to the diocese.

The members now recognize their mistake. They find both the parish and the Bishop powerless to carry out the understanding in face of a vicar who coming to them as a professed Evangelical, soon proved himself the exact opposite, and who even at the request of the Bishop has refused to resign.

The old members have for one reason or another been stricken from the church rolls, a new lot of members not in sympathy with the principles for which the Church stood have been installed, and at the last annual parish meeting every vestryman not an adherent of the vicar was displaced, even to the senior warden at whose sole expense the church had been built.

The writer in The Episcopal Recorder was in error in assuming that there was any conspiracy involved in the matter, but none the less has the congregation for whose use the church was built been dispersed, and an entirely new one of different views installed in their place of worship.

A Tribute

TO THE COLUMBUS CONVENTION OF
ST. ANDREW'S BROTHERHOOD

BY J. HENNING NELMS

'Tis work like yours
That makes the brotherhood of man
A living truth—a splendid plan
To work out God's redemption scheme,
And build a fire whose radiant gleam
Shall light the world, that men may learn
To see the truth, and quickly turn
To walk the path the Saviour trod
That leads through glory up to God.

'Tis work like yours
Whose power divine will lift the soul
Of man toward the blessed goal
Where love of God shall cast aside
All selfish thought of power and pride;
And haste the day when love alone
Shall change His footstool to a throne;
Before whose light thy life will shine
With new and holier glow. 'Tis thine
To do thy part. Leave all the rest
To Him by whom each deed is blest,
If prompted by a motive true
Of nobler, higher life in view.

'Tis work like yours
Will lift the heart to live above
The ills that blight. 'Twill kindle love
Within; and thou be kept apart,
Above, beyond the slanderous dart
Of foe or faithless friend. 'Twill build Thine armour strong. Thy hope 'twill gild
With lustrous and with living light,
To guide thee through the darkest night.

'Tis work like yours
Will keep the body undefiled,
The temple pure; from sin beguiled
By noble thought and word and deed
To help the weak who so much need
A brother's hand, a brother's love
To lead them to the Light above.

Oh, may this work engender now
A finer faith—a stronger vow--
To crown thy life with gentler deeds,
A nobler power than human creeds;
Thy heart to make both true and strong
To fight life's battles 'gainst the wrong;
And place upon thy crown above
That priceless pearl--the pearl of love.

Pen-and-Ink-lings

IN reporting the opening service at the Missionary Council, a St. Louis newspaper, referring to the celebration of the Holy Communion, made the following intelligent announcement:

An epistle was then read by Bishop Doane, of New York, and the Gospel service was conducted by Bishop Tuttle, of Missouri.

A WRITER in Harper's Weekly has discovered, to his dismay, that even Egyptian antiquities will not last forever. He says:

The news that nine columns have fallen in the Hypostyle Hall of the Temple of Karnak is very vexatious, especially to persons who as yet have been unable to get to see the temple and its famous hall. If we must hurry to see the Temple of Karnak before it falls, then, indeed, there is no such thing as deliberation on this earth. Egypt and its antiquities have been used to be regarded as things that would keep, but here go nine columns at Karnak to sudden destruction, like so much canned beef. We must hurry. There are one hundred and twenty five columns, or thereabouts still left in the hall, and the place is said to be very well looked after, but evidently it is subject to accidents as well as to immeasurable delay. What brought the columns down is left as yet to surmise, but it appears that they have a recognized propensity to crumble at their bases. The columns are sandstone; the bases are sometimes under water in time of flood, and there is nitre in the surrounding dust, which impregnates the water and makes it eat into the columns, and when the process has reached the effectual point, down they come.

A VACANCY recently occurred in the rectorship of an important Eastern parish. More than sixty candidates made application therefor, over two hundred letters were written, and the committee made nine visits to various parishes to see and hear different candidates.

SPEAKING of the "dead line" in the ministry, Professor George P. Fisher well says that "the sight of a minister's library will sometimes indicate the day he froze out." The man who has come to a standstill intellectually when his mind should be active and intent upon the great things pertaining to his vocation, is at the "dead line," whatever his age may be.

HORACE WALPOLE tells a lively story of an old porcelain vender who had an exceedingly rare and valuable jar on which he set an almost fabulous price. One hot summer a slight volcanic shock jogged his house about his ears and split his porcelain vase. To an ordinary mind the accident would have been calamitous, but the china seller rose superior to fortune. He doubled the price of the article immediately, and advertised it as "the only jar in the world which had been cracked by an earthquake."

AT a reception in New York to the Very Rev. Chas. W. Stubbs, of Ely Cathedral, the dean, in his brief address, said he was a Christian Socialist. He was aware that a Socialist had been defined as one who was "yearning to share what you are earning," but the Christian Socialist was something different. "I went to call on a deaf old parishioner of mine once," he said, "and the old man said to me: 'Sir, I hear that you are a Christian Socialist. What may that be?' 'Well,' I shouted in his ear, 'there are two kinds of Socialists. One kind says: 'What is yours is mine,' the other kind, the Christian Socialist, says: 'What is mine is yours.' 'Well,' said the old man, 'I've seen a great many of the first kind, but I never saw one of the second kind--before.'"

SEVEN hundred years ago, the church at Littledean, England, was built by Richard Braine, on land presented by Arthur Inghram. Now, centuries after, the two families are united by marriage in the persons of Mr. and Mrs. Heber Walsh, of Holland, Mich., Mr. Walsh being a son of Miriam M. Braine, and his wife a Miss Inghram. Such an occurrence after so long an interval is almost unprecedented.

AN American intent upon a day's outing in England, says Collier's Weekly, wanted to hire a dealer's best horse and trap, but not knowing his man the dealer demurred at trusting them in his hands. Determined to have his drive, the American offered to pay for the horse and the vehicle, promising to sell them back at the same price when he returned. To that the liveryman saw no objection, so his customer's wants were supplied, and off he went. He was back in time at the stables, his money reimbursed according to contract, and he turned to go.

"Hold on!" exclaimed the dealer. "You have forgotten to pay for the hire."

"My dear sir," was the cool reply, "there is no hiring in the case. I have been driving my own horse and trap all day."

And he left the Englishman to his sorrowful reflections.

Great Britain and the Transvaal

THERE seems to be so much misapprehension in the mind of the public in the United States in regard to the attitude of Great Britain toward the Boers, in the crisis that has arisen in the Transvaal, that I venture to give a few facts in regard to it, that may possibly give a different complexion to the matter than the one generally entertained in this country, notwithstanding that some Americans who are conversant with the state of affairs in Africa have expressed themselves in favor of England's position being quite justifiable, as do all others who are familiar with the subject.

The facts, all of which can be readily verified, are as follows: In 1820 the Dutch settlers at the Cape were friendly to the British rule. The first great division between them (i. e., the British and Dutch) was similar to that which divided the North from the South of America; namely, slavery. The Boers, under the Dutch government, were permitted by law to take as slaves the surrounding Kaffir races, and the life of the slave was absolutely at the mercy of his master. In 1834, the British government abolished slavery by Act of Parliament, paying $15,000,000 to the Dutch as compensation for the loss of their slaves. Slavery was righteous in their eyes, however, and in accordance with the Word of God, and, no matter what the British government might do, they determined that slaves they would have; so they and their slaves trekked north, first to Natal, and when that was declared British property, to the Orange Free State, and, lastly, to the Transvaal.

In 1848 troubles arose between the British and Dutch settlers in the Orange Free State, and the Boers determined to drive the British out; war was declared, and the Boers were badly defeated, and many then passed the Orange River, and the Transvaal was settled for the first time. The natives are stated to have received them hospitably, but were repaid by being made slaves.

In the course of years, the harshness and cruelty of the Boers to the natives brought the great and warlike tribe of Tzulus against them. At this time (in 1876) the state of their finances was going from bad to worse, and after the fighting with Schukuni whom they failed to subdue, they found that they were on the verge of bankruptcy, their treasury empty, and heavy claims against them on all sides. Then, in their difficulty, the Boer government, under President Dr. Thomas Burgers, called for aid from the British government, who sent Sir Theophilus Shepstone, armed with the necessary authority, to annex the Transvaal. This was done in 1877, 17th of April, and Great Britain fought the Tzulus and drove them back to their country, forcing them to make peace. This was a costly war and prolonged, costly both in lives and money. Then the British government assisted the Boers with the settlement of their financial difficulties, and in order to pay back by degrees the money which the British had expended and advanced, a tax was imposed as a war tax; but finding that the people of the Transvaal had really little or no money to pay taxes with, Sir Theophilus Shepstone, with the sanction of her Majesty's government, issued a proclamation suspending the law of taxation, and that all payments already made toward this tax should be looked upon and treated as an advance on account of ordinary taxes, thus practically abolishing, with a stroke of the pen, all the debt which they owed to Great Britain. But now, that the Boers had got all that they wanted, the outlying farmers, under Kruger and Joubert repudiated the annexation, which they declared was not in accordance with the wishes of the people. These views were greatly supported by the Midlothian speeches of Mr. Gladstone, and the speeches of others in the Liberal party, who turned the question to one of political advantage. Thus encouraged, in 1880, on the 20th of December, Lieutenant-colonel R. F. Anstruther, of the 94th regiment, with Headquarters companies, band, and colors, was escorting a convoy from Lydenberg to Pretoria, two hundred miles, when at Bronkhorst Spruit, he was treacherously attacked by the Boers. No declaration of war having been made, many officers and men were killed, as the affair was one of ambush. Then came the shameful murder of Captain J. M. Elliot who, with Captain F. R. H. Lambart, of the Scots Fusiliers, had been taken prisoner while traveling peaceably through the country.

Thus the first war began. Then followed the battles of Laing's Nek and Majuba Hill, in both of which the British troops (small detachments) were attacked in force by the Boers. Eventually peace was declared.

The first clause of the terms of peace is this: "The Transvaal recognizes as suzerain the ruler of the British Empire." That peace has been described by excellent authority as a hideous mistake, as the British then had troops passing to the front under General Sir Evelyn Wood, sufficient, probably, to put an end to the war forever.

Three years later, 1884, gold was found to exist in considerable quantities at Witswatersrand, and there was the usual mining rush. English, Americans, German, and French poured into the country, and for some years were welcomed by the Boer government, for as the mining increased so did the profits of the Transvaal government. Revenue increased enormously, and from about £120,000 (or say $600,000) per annum in 1893, the revenue rose to somewhere about $6,000,000 (or $30,000,000) in 1897.

The number of Outlanders increasing, the Boers began to be afraid of the country being overrun with them, and they began to put every restriction in their way. Government monopolies were imposed, such as the dynamite monopoly, dynamite being the most necessary article requisite for mining in the hard rock bed of the Rand. They also soon began to impose prohibitive conditions on the freedom of the Outlanders—thus twelve years' franchise, and then only for the Lower Raad, which has really no influence on the legislature of the country. Scholars would only be taught in the Boer language; they had no rights as citizens or as burghers; the police are Boers; the municipalities and mayors are Boers; but the Outlanders paid about nineteen-twentieths of the taxes. The magistrates are Boers, and can order an Outlander to be expelled the country for any trifling offence, or even none at all, without trial. Latterly, the Supreme Court, which exercised a certain justice, has been abolished, and a few months ago the police, while ostensibly arresting an Outlander for a crime of which he was perfectly innocent, shot him dead; also a woman was shot in the same manner by the police in the streets of Johannesburg.

The taxes are exorbitant, as are the duties on everything which comes into the Transvaal for the Outlanders. For the Boers, things are practically free. The municipal administration is a mere name; the streets are ill-paved, of drainage there is none. Water supplies are likewise wanting; the schools are few and far between, and only the Boer language is allowed to be taught. The police who are Boer, have no discipline, and are brutal. Boers only can sit as judges, and invariably decide in favor of their own countrymen; in short, the Outlanders are treated as the Boers treated the Kaffirs, or the natives.

Great Britain has appealed again and again to the Boers to improve their treatment of the Outlanders, but has been always received with the same answer: "If we grant what you ask, remove the question of suzerainty." What, from the foregoing experience, would be the condition of the Outlander were the suzerainty question removed, and the Boers allowed a free hand?

The Convention of 1884 is merely an amendment of that of 1881, in which the suzerain question is distinctly laid down, and was not intended, in any way, to repeal the Convention of 1881.

The British government are contending with the Boers for exactly similar freedom for the Outlanders that the American colonists revolted against England for; viz., taxation without representation.

Book Reviews and Notices

The Reformation Settlement: Explained in the Light of History and Law. By the Rev. Malcolm McColl, D. D., Canon of Ripon. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Pp. 563. Price, $2.50

This is the most solid contribution which has been made, or which is likely to be made, to the literature of the present crisis in England. Its learned author is abundantly qualified, probably beyond any man of our times, for the treatment of his subject. His exposition of it is so lucid and masterly that we do not see how the force of his argument can be evaded by any fair-minded man. Indeed, it may be asserted that it has made itself felt more directly and practically than any book of this decade. Although it has hardly been published six months, four editions have been sold, and it is reported that since reading it, some forty members of Parliament have felt forced to change their votes. It is seldom that such results are produced by a book. We are well within the bounds of moderation when we say that no American Churchman can form a sound and sensible opinion upon the great questions which are convulsing our mother Church until he has carefully studied this book. It possesses a vital interest for us, both because of our close relationship to the ancient mother Church of England, and because we know not at what day these questions may cross the ocean and confront us. The subjects discussed by Canon McColl are: "The Reformation and its Results," "The Presence of Christ in the Eucharist," "The Eucharistic Sacrifice," "Sacerdotalism," "The Reformation and Auricular Confession," "The Intermediate State," "Ecclesiastical Courts and the Ornaments Rubric," "Anglican and Roman Orders," and "The Prisoner of the Vatican." This last is a most interesting and important expose of the inner history of papal intrigue and ecclesiastical politics, such as but few men could write. It furnishes the key to many mysteries insoluble to the uninitiated. We bespeak a wide circulation for this important book in America.

The Great Appeal. By James G. K. McClure. New York and Chicago: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, 75 cents.

Dr. McClure has added to the list of valuable works on God's relations to man. He treats of God's appeals to the intellect, the heart, the conscience, the memory, the imagination, the self-interests, and the will. The subjects are handled with great reverence, careful thought, and deep insight into character. The excellencies of the essays are so many that the few faults are dwarfed into insignificance. We wish the book could be placed in the hands of every business man, and every searcher after truth who may be tempted to sneer at Christianity, for we feel sure the results would be most beneficial. Dr. McClure's knowledge of men, gained in the university of which he is president, has given him a power that makes these essays most valuable.

Legend-Led. By Amy LeFevre. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. Price, $1.

The outward appearance of this book, like the mechanical execution of its making within, is artistic. The legend by which the three merry little Thurstons—Claud, Eleanor, and Donald—were led, is the beautiful tradition of the Holy Grail. Their childish minds missed the loftier meaning, and sought only the outward symbol. The various adventures through which their quest leads them are sometimes funny, sometimes pathetic, but they learn the truth at last. That dear little Gypsy accepts it, is shown in the prayer with which the account of her childish struggle closes: "I've been trying to find you, Lord Jesus, but my heart is going to find you now. Please come in and keep there."

The Pioneer Preacher. By the Rev. Sherlock Bristol. New York and Chicago: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, $1.25.

As an autobiography, this is the most egotistic work of the kind we remember ever to have read. That the author had a severe struggle for his education for the ministerial life, is witnessed in nearly every page describing his youth. That he was in a special manner chosen by God to be a preacher, he takes for granted. That he had marvelous experiences in the development of his own religious character, and in converting others, he does not fail to inform us. Why he did not confine himself to this work instead of engaging in storekeeping in California, and afterwards leading emigrants across the country to Oregon, we have been unable to discover. The author fully realizes his own goodness, and does not fail to tell us the fact. We find nothing in the book to commend it to our readers.

A Mountain Europa. By John Fox, Jr. New York and London: Harper & Brothers. Price, $1.25.

Here we have another of the author's Kentucky stories. Clayton, the hero, voluntarily exiles himself from a home of luxury and refinement in New York, to help retrieve the family losses by looking after some claims owned by his father. While in the mountains, the threads of his life become entangled with those of various mountain folk. The title of the book is due to the circumstances under which Clayton first met the heroine—a wonderfully beautiful mountain girl. His marriage is followed by the latter's death, at the hands of her drunken father. The various distinct mountain types are well depicted, and the story, as regards incident and description, an entertaining one. The book is well printed, and has exceptionally wide margins.

Evenings with the Sacred Poets. A Series of Quiet Talks about the Singers and their Songs. By Frederick Saunders, A. M. Page Illustrations, 12. Octavo. Price, $2.

Salad for the Solitary and the Social. Reddressed and Compounded, with Sundry Esculents, Succulents, and Condiments. By Frederick Saunders. Second Improved Edition. Fifty Illustrations. Octavo. Price, $2.

New York: Thomas Whittaker.

The richness in literary qualities and polite acumen of which these two volumes are possessed, can hardly be overpraised, and many readers of refined tastes will be happy to greet them both again in the new and improved editions. Mr. Frederick Saunders, their author, and late librarian of the Astor Library, New York, will long be remembered for the literary fullness and nicety of judgment with which his works are adorned. Every taste can be gratified and improved in an half-hour given to the perusal of one of his varied and fascinating chapters.

Nannie's delightful childhood was spent in two worlds—that of real things—pleasant real things,—and the other in a dream world, one of charming fantasies woven in her own nimble brain. "She grew, mentally and bodily, as only children grow who depend for companionship upon wise grown folk, and wiser Mother Nature." The "wise grown folk," in Nannie's case, were her grandmother and grandfather, and her lovely older sister, named respectively, The Good Old Queen, The Good Old King, and The Princess. Brown Pink is the other child in the story. His life is later interwoven with the characters known to Nannie. When the reader meets him, he is a lonely little fellow of six, living in the city with his lame Aunt Debby and the maid. In sharpest contrast to Nannie's are his surroundings. He is shut up in a narrow city street, with its "limited vegetation and unlimited restrictions." But he is a philosopher, and a cheery one, quite unaware of the pathos of his lot. He "waited 'most six years for a rose," so he is not impatient at the slow coming of good fortune, which does finally give him more than he had dreamed existed in the world. This is a noticeably sympathetic and delicate study of child life, in all its phases, and could be written only by one who had a marvelous power of reading the inmost heart and soul of a child.

Both author and publisher have conferred a benefit on the public by issuing this most charming and instructive work. The late war brought forth a revival of interest in our own national songs. These are given in full, with the history of their origin and many delightful anecdotes and descriptions of scenes connected with them. Capital illustrations of the writers enhance the value of the book. The author treats also of the national songs of England, France, and Germany. He calls special attention to the ignorance of Americans of the words of our patriotic odes, and then points to the fact that Englishmen, Frenchmen, and Germans, can and do sing the whole of their songs frequently in large gatherings. He pleads for a greater prevalence of this spirit among us. We are sure our readers will find the book very well worthy of perusal.

With God in the World. By the Rev. Charles H. Brent, of St. Stephen's church, Boston. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Pp. 144. Price, $1.

The contents of this book originally appeared as a series of papers in St. Andrew's Cross. We are glad to see them in more permanent form, and hope they will find many readers. They are singularly straight-forward, manly, and helpful in tone. They deal with questions of living interest, and abound in practical suggestions for the conduct of life. The chapters are short and right to the point. The great idea of Christian fellowship with God and man is worked out into a fresh and original form, and brought home in a most effective way. We strongly recommend the book for general devotional reading, and especially for use at meetings of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and the Daughters of the King. It is beautifully gotten up, and in binding and typography is one of the handsomest volumes of the year.

Square Pegs. By Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.50.

Mrs. Whitney's new book is not strikingly unlike her nearly two dozen preceding volumes. There are several love stories interwoven—a theme, as all readers know, always treated by the author with dignity and sweet seriousness. The pretty cover of the book, its good type and paper, make it a suitable gift for girls.

Strength and Beauty. By J. R. Miller, D. D. New York: T. Y. Crowell & Co. Price, $1.

This is a collection of twenty-five addresses on various subjects, taking its title from the first. "Strength and Beauty" is one of that numerous class of religious books which, while not of great intellectual value, appeal to many people. These addresses will be found helpful, and indeed, will give comfort, for they deal with the troubles, the temptations, sins, sorrows, etc., of everyday life, and in a hopeful way, apply some of the great blessings of the Gospel.

Bible Study by Periods. By the Rev. Henry T. Sell, A. M. New York and Chicago: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, 60 cts.

There are many useful points in this book, and a good deal of valuable information. The Bible-class teacher will find it a capital assistant in getting up dates and facts without having to spend much time in research. The plan of the book will doubtless commend itself to many Biblical students.

We Four Girls. A Summer Story for Girls. By Mary G. Darling. Boston: Lee & Shepard. Price, $1.25.

This is another sweet, natural book for girls who are not old enough for novel reading, nor young enough for fairy tales. For various reasons, four girls from different families are sent for the summer to stay in the country home of a charming, sensible woman, Miss Forrester who likes and understands the ways of girls. Each selects her own room, which is quaintly named. One selects Patience, another Humility, the third Generosity, and the fourth Courage. How the four, besides having a good time, gain just what they especially need, is pleasantly told in this very readable story.

MESSRS. T. Y. CROWELL & Co. are letting their light shine to illuminate the juvenile world, in "Sunshine Library," the last issue of the series being entitled "Strawberry Hill," the name of an ideal farm. Pleasant scenes are given of the life there, and some exciting adventures give spice and variety to the tale.

"CHATTERBOX," the children's favorite annual, makes its appearance early in the season, and puts in a strong claim to be first among the popular Christmas presents for the little ones. Its illustrations, as usual, are bright and spirited and numerous. Every page has something of interest for young readers. [Boston: Dana, Estes & Co., 212 Summer street.]

CASSELL'S NATIONAL LIBRARY (new series) is issued weekly, at $5 per year, each number containing some standard literary work. The subjects of some recent numbers are: "Hero Worship," by Carlyle; "Francis Bacon," by Lord Macaulay; "As You Like It," Shakespeare; "Wordsworth's Poems," Selected. The series is edited by Prof. Henry Morley.

MR. THOMAS WHITTAKER, No. 2 Bible House, New York, has purchased the entire stock of the American Prayer Book Fund, including the electrotypes of its cheap edition of the Prayer Book; and he will continue to carry on the work undertaken by the society in supplying a cheap Prayer Book for parochial use and for gratuitous circulation as a tract. The Prayer Book of this edition, printed in clear and legible type on superfine paper, and bound in durable and attractive cloth covers of various styles to suit the taste of purchasers, will continue to be sold at the low price of fifteen to thirty cents per copy, according to style.

MESSRS. D. APPLETON & Co., New York, are publishing a very helpful series entitled, "The Library of Useful Stories." These present, in an interesting and popular way, various branches of useful knowledge, by writers of authority in their various departments. A recent issue of this series is entitled, "The Story of the Living Machine," by H. W. Conn, Professor of Biology in Wesleyan University. It presents a review of the conclusions of modern biology in regard to the mechanism which controls the phenomena of living activity. There are about fifty illustrations, helpful to the understanding of the text. As to the choice of the word "machine," by the author, though he attempts to justify it by the ingenious comparison of the body to a machine, one can hardly feel satisfied to having his physical being classified in this way. There is something "fearful and wonderful" about the living body which does not enter into our conception of mechanics. The author's suggestion that the ultimate living substance may have arisen from chemical evolution, is offset by the confession, which all honest scientists must make, that we know nothing whatever about the origin of life. The disclosures of the modern microscope, the writer says, have complicated, rather than simplified, this problem. "We are comparatively as far from the real of the natural explanation of life, as we were before the discovery of protoplasm."

Periodicals

With the November issue, Little Folks begins a new volume. It is an illustrated monthly magazine for youngest readers, and with it have been incorporated Our Little Ones and The Nursery. The work is well done and well adapted to its use. Mothers would almost "cry for it" if they knew how nice it is to help them in interesting the little ones. [Published by S. E. Cassins, Boston, Mass.]

In the November Forum, ex-Minister to Spain, Hon. J. L. M. Curry, contributes a valuable article on "Spain, Living or Dying." The author contends that there is a prospect, under wiser counsels, of a new Spain. With universal education, fidelity to engagements, economy and honesty of administration, freedom of religion, more liberal commercial regulations, reliance on intelligent and skilled labor, Mr. Curry holds that Spain may yet take a high and honorable place among the nations of the earth.

The Fortnightly Review for October contains two good articles on the Dreyfus case, and another important contribution on "Australasian Federation—From the Inside," by Harold G. Parsons. To a Churchman, however, the cream of this number is the article on "The Lambeth Decision," by Canon Malcolm MacColl who, in his trenchant style, shows the weakness of the archiepiscopal "opinion," and this is followed by a very fair and temperate paper, "The True Meaning of the 'Crisis in the Church,'" by "An Oxford Tutor." Whoever this tutor may be, he is a vast improvement upon the "Four Tutors" who led the attack upon Newman over fifty years ago. It is well to think of this.

The New England Magazine for November contains a graphic account of "The Great Boston Fire of 1872," written by Mr. Robert G. Fitch, of the Boston Transcript, and illustrated with excellent reproductions from photographs. Mr. A. F. Weber's paper on "American Economists of To-Day" attests the value of our schools of economic and political science, paying tribute to those who have done notable work in these fields during the last decade. Mr. W. Henry Winslow's chapter on John Ruskin is a careful and critical estimate of Ruskin, especially on the side of his art interests. The Editor's Table takes up the subject of the true teaching of patriotism and good citizenship in the schools.

If Mr. Swinburne cannot write any better poetry than his sonnet, "After the Verdict—September, 1899" (and some other of his recent effusions), he would be well advised to go into a state of placid restfulness for a season. This effusion is on the first page of The Nineteenth Century for October. "The Situation in South Africa—a Voice from the Colony," by the Rev. C. Usher Wilson, ought to be read by those many Americans who think the Boers are a nation of saints, and the British a horde of tyrants. Mrs. Humphrey Ward persists in her plea that the Established Church should embrace Unitarians and Turks, heretics and infidels in general. The best articles on Church subjects are "The Church Crisis and Disestablishment," by the Rev. Dr. Cobb, and "Lambeth and 'Liberation,'" by Mr. Geo. W. E. Russell, and the latter is very slashing and hits hard.

Albert Robida is the subject of an appreciative article by M. Octave Uganne, in the November number of The Magazine of Art. In concluding an enthusiastic review of Robida's work, the writer says: Robida has just come to the front as an architect; it is he who has planned the "Old Paris," which will be one of the wonders of the International Exhibition of 1900. Here will be restorations of the most curious buildings of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries—dungeons, towers, barbicans, posterns, streets reminiscent of Rabelais—all the work of this strange artist, embodied, constructed, vitalized. Near the Pont de l'Alma a broad stage may already be seen supported on piles, and extending along the shore over the Seine. There, next spring, will rise the buildings chosen for reproduction to give us an idea of "old Paris," and there lords and citizens in costumes of the past will meet the visitor as he enters by the Porte Saint-Michel, and do the honors of the Pre-aux-Clercs, the Pont-au-Change, the old Louvre, the Grand Chatelet, and what not more. [Cassell & Co., New York.]

Booker T. Washington whose pre-eminent leadership in the affairs of his race is universally admitted, opens the November Atlantic with "The Case of the Negro." Apropos of the Philippine troubles, Hugh Clifford, British resident at Pahang, Malay States, contributes a valuable article, "A Lesson from the Malay States," based on the knowledge derived from his long experience among Malay tribes. Charles A. Conant discusses the question, "Can New Openings be Found for Capital?" showing the wonderful and innumerable changes that have taken place during the present century, which continually demand new and more extended fields for business. In "The Good Government of an Empire," William Cunningham furnishes a brief, but sharply cut, exposition of the management of great colonial empires. He points out for American benefit what he conceives to be the duty of the future for all those who believe in the extension of civilization. Elizabeth Robins Pennell discusses the rank of Van Dyke as a painter. Rollin Lynde Hartt treats of the Ohioans in an entertaining vein of fact and fun, description and criticism. Miss Johnston's "To Have and to Hold" continues to be a most remarkable novel.

The cover design of The Century Magazine for November includes a portrait of Cromwell, printed in four tints; while the frontispiece—also in tints—is a wood-engraving by T. Johnson, from Cooper's painting of the Protector in Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. The illustrations in John Morley's study of Cromwell, and the drawings and marginal sketches for "The Biography of a Grizzly," are also in color. There is a hitherto unpublished poem by the late James Russell Lowell; the adventures of a boatload of castaways on the Pacific are told by Mark Twain; Governor Roosevelt writes with characteristic forcefulness of "Military Preparedness and Unpreparedness"; a poem, "The Golden Crown Sparrow of Alaska," by John Burroughs, is the mellow fruit of a recent travel trip to northern latitudes; and a humorously gruesome piece of realistic fiction, by Dr. Weir Mitchell, is "The Autobiography of a Quack." In the life-story of a farmer and 'longshore sailor living near his summer home in Maine, President Eliot, of Harvard, resumes his occasional contributions on "The Forgotten Millions." Captain Slocum continues his "single-handed" cruise around the world. Short stories and verses complete the issue.

HARVEST FESTIVALS.—From many quarters we hear of dreadful atrocities committed by well-meaning but misguided people in this season of harvest festivals. One informant vouches for the truth of his statement that last Sunday there were to be seen on either side of the altar in his parish church, baskets filled with coal. Doubtless the local crop is the vegetable growth in question, but we never heard of a harvest time for that product before. We have read in sacred allegory of the living coal upon the altar, but we fail to see any symbolism in this grimy offering. When such things are actually perpetrated, is it any wonder that the following incident should be a true one? A local baker, the other day was asked to send a contribution to the harvest festival. He willingly consented, and on the appointed day his boy appeared carrying a large consignment of jam tarts, mince pies, and slices of cake. But if eggs and coal and dolls, and suchlike gear, are considered fitting "ornaments of the Church" within the meaning, but without the sanction of the act, why not the "rollicking bun and the gay Sally Lunn"? Oh, for a saving sense of the ridiculous! —The Church Times.

SANKEY MODEL, STYLE 431.

Known abroad as the Empress Model.

More than two hundred thousand organs were made in our factory before this instrument was perfected. It is the result of great experience in making for all purposes for everybody.

The missionary's tent in the jungle and Westminster Abbey, the humble cottage and the king's palace contain a Mason & Hamlin Organ. The self-taught amateur and Franz Liszt, Saint-Saens, Theo. Thomas, George W. Chadwick, Emil Paur and scores of great musicians have written words of highest praise for Mason & Hamlin Organs.

The Sankey Model (so called because it was designed for and is used by Ira D. Sankey) is suitable for churches, lodges, schools and homes. Cash with order price, $150.00. Other organs $27.00 to $2,400.00.

We have accumulated organ information for 45 years. Write us about organs if you are interested.

THE DISTINGUISHING CHARACTERISTIC OF THE VOCALION IS ITS EXQUISITE TONE

ORGANS BUILT on the Vocalion system are pre-eminently fitted for church services. They have a full, rich, diapason tone and a peculiar delicacy in the string registers, which make them of inestimable value as an accompaniment to the human voice.

The method of tone production is radically different from all others. It gives the pitch as a fixed quality, free reeds being used for the purpose. In connection with each reed there is a pipe or chamber through which the tone passes and which determines its quality. By this means the reed is given a smooth, flute quality of tone as well as resonance and remarkable power.

The distinctive features of the Vocalion are

Tonal superiority;
Compactness of form in proportion to capacity.
Variety of registration;
And price.

We wish to call the attention of all church societies contemplating the purchase of an organ to our Style 22, a full description of which we shall be glad to furnish upon application. Send for Catalogue G.

Vocalions range in price from $275 upward.

The Household

To and Fro

A LOVE STORY

BY MRS. NEIL MACLEOD

From The Quiver

THE great mail steamer, bound for Australia, was cutting steadily through the dancing waves, under a cloudless sky. The stern mountainous coast of Crete lay to the left, with the snow shining here and there on the brown hill-tops. The days of sickness and misery were over, and the passengers had formed themselves into those little groups, or cliques, which indicate so curiously the laws of human affinity. One of the last among the travelers to find companions had been a young nurse, in a pretty, flowing uniform of dark blue. She was too serious and gentle to quite suit the fast, vivacious young people on board; while she was at the same time too youthful herself and of too strongly marked a character to be altogether at home amongst their elders. She seemed also to be a little set apart by the fact that she was going out to India as a medical missionary.

"I really feel that I hardly know how to approach her, her manner is sometimes so still and reserved," remarked even good-natured Mrs. MacNab who knew everybody on board; "but she is so sweet and pretty, poor dear, that I can't help looking at her."

During the last day or two, however, the girl had ceased to be a solitary figure. Her new acquaintance was an active, muscular young Scotchman, sandy-haired, gray-eyed, and of a forcible type of countenance. He had deserted the little knot of young men who had been his first companions, and now these two paced up and down the deck with rapid vigorous steps, talking busily.

At first they only spoke of the countries along whose shores they sailed—of Gibraltar, Malta, Italy, Greece; of soldiers and sailors, and of life in the far colonies—for Kenneth Grant, the young man in question, was going to New Zealand.

Before long, however, their talk began to be more personal and confidential. They ceased to walk about, but sat quietly together on their low deck chairs, seeming to deprecate any attempt to add to their company. They had a subject of overwhelming interest to discuss. This subject was their future—the life and career which each had chosen—and they did not agree at all in their views of the matter.

"I think it is a great mistake of yours, this going to India, you know," declared the young man boldly, one day, when they were ensconced side by side in a cosy corner, under the deck awning. "How do you suppose you will stand the climate, for one thing?"

May West smiled slightly, though her eyes were grave, and she was visibly a little shocked by his sudden speech.

"Oh, I'm very strong," she said presently; "but I never thought much about it. I don't mind heat in the least."

"That's because you don't know what it is," returned the other. "Besides, as to nursing and teaching sick and ignorant people, isn't there plenty of such work to do at home, if any one like you ought to do it at all?" he added, with a ring of jealous discontent in his tone.

"But if you thought that this was the very thing you must do, that you were drawn—called—to it?" The girl's voice was low, and had a thrill of awe in it. Her eyelashes drooped; she looked very sweet and grave; but her companion felt that she was provokingly far away from ordinary views and considerations.

There was a minute's silence, then he demanded somewhat aggressively, "What's the idea, now? What do you think that you, specially, are going to achieve amongst these miserable native folks, for instance?"

"How can you speak so? You know nothing at all about them," she responded indignantly, with a sudden flash in her large gray eyes.

"Do you?" was the quick retort. "Well, well, I won't press it; only it seems to me that you look at all this business through a haze of rose color. You imagine a gorgeous, dream-like land, where the sun is always shining, and there are domes, and minarets, and palm trees—all that sort of thing. Then you fancy yourself coming like an angel amongst a lot of black and yellow women and children, who'll love you to adoration, and do whatever you bid them, until they are as good as you are yourself."

"Indeed, indeed, I don't; you put it quite unfairly," protested the young girl, with glowing cheeks, but with a slight tendency to laugh at the relentlessly expressed fraction of truth in the young man's picture.

"Yes you do," insisted he. "I gather it from what you say yourself; and you cannot in the least realize the heat and exhaustion, the unhealthy places you will go into, the selfish stupidity of the low, inferior people you will work amongst, the sin and misery of it all."

Another little pause followed; then May West said gently, but in a tone that expressed settled resolution: "These very things—the sin and misery—are just what make me want to do this work. If the people are what you say, they need the help I can give them all the more." In a lighter vein she added: "Of course I expect plenty of disagreeables."

"Disagreeables in the abstract," put in her friend pertinaciously.

"Don't you think I am tolerably patient with disagreeables in the concrete?" she asked demurely, measuring him up and down with her soft yet courageous glance.

He started to his feet. "After such a pungent sting as that, I may as well go and have a smoke," he remarked; "but I meant well, Miss West, and I wish some cleverer person had said the same things to you before now."

May only smiled. "It would have made no difference," was all she answered.

After this skirmish the two young people rather avoided each other for a little while. Kenneth feared that he had spoken too unreservedly, and had perhaps even lost the delightful new friend to whom it was so mysteriously easy to say exactly what he thought. He was an idiot, he told himself. She was embarked on her venture; why should he damp her sweet enthusiasm? He would apologize, if she would only give him a chance. But May West had not heeded what he said much; she had been principally struck by his manner, his personality. He interested her, and she felt more solitary than ever, now that she was once again thrown back upon herself.

"After all, though, I must not mind being lonely," she thought. "I shall often have to put up with that when I am out in India."

It was evening, and she was standing at the vessel's side in the soft, warm darkness, watching the phosphorescent light that gleamed on the water. "God will take care of me," she murmured simply, half as the expression of a consoling idea, half as a sighed-out prayer for protection against unknown future sorrow. Suddenly she

IN your experience with White Lead have you ever been troubled with cracked, pulled or alligatored surfaces, or have you ever heard of such trouble in the use of White Lead?

Never; and these conditions were never known until the introduction of zinc white, "combination lead," and ready-mixed paints, the two last composed largely of zinc, barytes, whiting, etc., very little lead, if any.

started, for some one had paused beside her, laying a hand on the rail close to her own. It was Kenneth Grant, of course.

"I hope you are not very angry about what I said the other day," he pleaded, in a subdued, friendly tone. "Your aims are so much higher than mine, your life so much nobler, I had no right to speak at all on the matter."

"Oh, no; I did not mind very much," she answered quickly; "but I should like to ask you just one question."

"Ask anything you like," he returned fervently.

"Well, did you really mean what you said—was it your actual thought?"

"Yes, it was," came the decided response.

"Only I was an ass to express it; besides, possibly I was quite wrong. After all, you will live two lives, as it were, by seeking new work in a new country—satisfy your curiosity—widen your experience—" He stopped, checked by the curious little smile which played about her lips, as she turned slightly, and the electric light flashed upon her face.

"You almost seemed to be speaking a foreign language just now," she explained. "What you say is so totally unlike my own way of thinking about my work. Shall we walk up and down a little?"

They turned and paced the deck. The night breeze was blowing, the waves raced past the ship. The smoke, the stars, the light clouds—all seemed to be flying from them like the moment's opportunity.

"You haven't asked your question yet," he reminded her presently.

"Yes, I have; but I want to ask another. You criticise me severely; now what do you mean to do in New Zealand? What is your great idea? I think I ought to have my turn at criticism."

"I want to make money," was the prompt reply. "It doesn't sound very pretty, and yet that is about the whole scheme."

"Why?" Such a soft, innocent, quietly spoken monosyllable, yet Kenneth was strangely taken aback by it.

"I must get on," he answered, recovering himself. "Every man has his way to make in some shape or other. I hate a life of routine and sitting still. I like outdoor work, and I don't mind roughing it; but I'm quite practical, I've no romance."

She bit her lip. "But you would like to be useful?" she questioned, rather timidly.

"I don't know—perhaps, if it came in by the way. I am fighting for my own hand, you see. I must go ahead."

"Not at the expense of others?"

"Sometimes, no doubt. It's the way of the world. Nearly everyone is selfish; if I don't take advantage of circumstances, somebody else will, and I don't propose to sit down and watch their game."

"There is just one thing not to be lost sight of." May spoke softly, though her breathing quickened.

"What is that? My precious character, talents, and so on? They must take care of themselves!"

"Not exactly. It is just that you must not lose sight of what you are intended for—what God intends for you."

He made no reply, and when she could bear the silence no longer, she said suddenly, "Good-night, Mr. Grant, I'm rather tired this evening," and fitted from him into the companion way.

"It had to be said," she whispered when alone in her cabin; "but, oh! why are we so near in one way and so far, far apart in another? I will keep away from him—he hurts me. I forget my work, and I lose hold of my hopes about it; all seems to grow dim and unreal. Never mind; it will soon, soon be over!"

If this last idea were intended to afford solace, it did not appear to be very successful, for she broke down and sobbed bitterly. Then she dried her tears, with inward self-reproach, and lay down, never dreaming that the great tide of human love was stealing warmly round her heart.

May awakened early one morning to find the steamer stationary. Instead of the throb of the engines, a chorus of chattering cries filled her ears. The air was very hot and still down below, so she hastened to dress and go on deck. A scene as novel as beautiful met her eyes. It was Colombo, the place of parting, and they were anchored in the harbor.

"And how do you like your first sight of India?" inquired Mrs. MacNab, a determined looking but kindly old lady in spectacles, who was one of her principal friends on board.

"Oh, it is beautiful! I never dreamed it could be half so lovely. I long to see more of it."

"We must go ashore together," said Mrs. MacNab. "I want to buy some things and have a drive, but I should never muster courage by myself, the natives are so troublesome."

Nothing, however, could spoil her enjoyment of this wonderful day. They seemed to have stepped into fairyland. The tropical vegetation, the gorgeous scarlet and yellow blossoms, the pungent, spicy odors, and the sight of the beautiful, dark-eyed native children—all entranced the unaccustomed English girl. The heat was intense, and the sunshine a fierce, blazing down-pour of light, from which they hurried to escape. After their drive through the cinnamon gardens, they were glad to find themselves in the cool, shady native bazaar, with its glittering piles of tissues, film-like silks, strange toys and ornaments.

"I want to see some stones," whispered Mrs. MacNab. "I am told you can sometimes get wonderful bargains at these native bazaars—sapphires, diamonds, moonstones—such opportunities! They don't know."

"Don't they?" queried May dubiously. She glanced at the tall Cingalese who stood obsequiously near; he was draped in a flowing linen garment, and his black hair was arranged in a kind of "bun," fastened with a tortoise-shell comb. He looked solemn, watchful, impassive—a quite incalculable quantity.

A moment or two more and he had bustled forward. Trays of moonstone ornaments set in silver were shown. Little papers of single unset gems—or what looked like them—were displayed. May could not suppress an exclamation of delight as a glittering, transparent, amber stone struck her eyes. "How very pretty! What is that, I wonder?" she said, not noticing that her companion had moved away a little.

"Tourmaline! ver' fine, only eighteen and sixpence," responded the merchant. May hastily drew back, but her fate was upon her. "Now, lady, dat for you. Dis is New Year coming in; you shall bring me de goot luck with dat stone! I wish you have it, I see it yours. You shall take it. Tourmaline! Bring goot luck, sixteen shilling! Twelve, eleven! Now, lady, now. Oh, yes. Never mind money. You show it at hotel and pay manager if it all right. I want de goot luck for New Year from you. Nine shilling? seven, six?" But May had lost all faith in the tourmaline from hearing this rapidly sliding scale of prices, and indeed had no wish to expend any of her slender store of money on either glass or precious stone. Blushing, she tried to escape, and just then up sailed Mrs. MacNab, the happy possessor of two "sapphires," wrapped in a morsel of tissue paper, also a pair of good-sized ebony elephants, one under each arm, and an unmanageable basket composed of porcupine quills. "Shall we be going now?" she asked.

"Oh, yes," cried May, relieved; but the wily owner of the tourmaline accompanied them into the street. He reiterated, pressed, persuaded, and half threatened, clinging to them like a burr. They dived into the nearest hotel to escape him, and partook of a mysterious and costly "tiffin," in order to give him plenty of time to get away. Then they peeped out of the front windows, between the great plants of maiden-hair fern, to see if the coast were clear.

No! Exactly opposite, sheltered by a Japanese umbrella, motionless as fate, stood the Cingalese, waiting for them to come out.

"What shall I do? However am I to get back to the steamer, with him pursuing me?" asked May nervously.

"Who is annoying you?" asked a friendly, masculine voice behind her, and Kenneth Grant came to her side. "Is it that fellow? What does he want? Shall I go and settle him?" The ladies explained, both together,

"Are his things pretty?" inquired the young man.

"Very," answered May, with enthusiasm. "The tourmaline was the prettiest of all; but the moonstones are like snow in moonlight—or ice-water—anything cool and delightful."

It never entered her unsophisticated head that, when Grant strode up to the immobile merchant, and both disappeared under the hotel parapet, he would plunge into the bazaar and secure both the tourmaline and the prettiest set of moonstones he could find.

Ere long he hastened back to them with a radiant countenance, and took them out to a wide, cool veranda, where they could rest and watch the lazily breaking waves and lengthening shadows.

It was only when they reached the steamer once more that May remembered how she must pack to-night, and to-morrow be transferred to one of those other vessels which looked so foreign and unfriendly, because they represented division and farewell.

"We've enjoyed ourselves so much, Mr. Grant," declared Mrs. MacNab before they parted company. "Haven't we, Miss West?"

"Very much," echoed May, with a sigh she could not repress. But she did not linger, and Grant remained alone on deck, watching how

"The sun's rim dips, the stars rush out—

With one stride comes the dark."

As he listened idly to the laughter and chattering in the catamarans below, he wondered why he had suddenly grown so heavy-hearted, and why he could not make up his mind to show his little friend, the nurse, the moonstones and the tourmaline, begging her to keep them in memory of a happy day.

Perhaps he feared to say too much, perhaps he would not risk a repulse; at any rate, he could not, and he did not, show them. Next day they parted with a simple handshake, each carrying on his and her lonely way a memory which they hardly knew whether to call a pleasure or a pain.

SHE QUIT COFFEE

And Got Well in Common-Sense Way.

"When I left off coffee, it seemed that was the thing hardest to drop. I had been put on a diet for stomach trouble, had a good appetite, but no food would stay on my stomach. I was compelled to leave off one thing after another, but never suspected coffee. When I decided to leave off the coffee, however, my stomach trouble ceased entirely, also my nervousness, and I can again sleep well. But a new trouble then arose. How was I to get along without my coffee? It was a great temptation when I saw it on the table in the morning. One day a friend who knew of my case sent me a package of Postum Cereal Food Coffee. After it had been prepared, I had great misgivings about using it, for it looked so much like fine coffee that I feared it would have the same effect, but I soon found it to be free from all injurious properties, and its use has been of great benefit to me.

"I have never had any taste for coffee since using Postum Cereal Food Coffee. My children derive great benefit from using Postum. We all enjoy it very much, having discarded the old-fashioned coffee entirely." Alice Lawrence, Bowen, Mont.

Postum Food Coffee is sold by all first-class grocers at 15 and 25 cents per package. the moonstones and the tourmaline, begging

A GENTLEMAN was ordered some ordinary chlorate of potash lozenges for a sore tongue, and for convenience he kept them loose in his waistcoat pocket. He also bought a box of Swedish safety matches, and these he placed in the same pocket. To prevent matches going off of themselves, the makers separate the ingredients, putting the phosphorous on the box and the chlorate of potash on the matches. While bending down to pick up something on the floor, the lozenges rubbed against the friction paper on the outside of the box. This set the entire box alight, and the heat kindled all the matches in the box. The heat generated decomposed the chlorate lozenges, and the oxygen set free intensified the combustion tenfold. The result was the gentleman was instantly wrapped in flames, the combustion being of explosive violence. Had not a pail of water been thrown over him instantly, the result must have been fatal, as the combustion was inconceivably violent.—The British Medical Journal.

Dyspepsia

One of the many causes of dyspepsia is the use of cereal foods improperly prepared. People fancy that grain food is simple, and consequently healthful. Whole grains, wheat, oats, etc., contain quite largely an element as indigestible as wood and no more nutritious.

being entirely free from indigestible matter is peculiarly adapted to such as require an easily digested diet.

CHAPTER II.

ALTHOUGH only a short time had passed since that day when Madge and Tony had stood on the station platform, and watched the train disappear that bore the little mother far away from them, the affairs of the Excelsior Club and St. Dorothy's Sisterhood had undergone quite a change. As Virginia had told Mollie, the school duties took away some of the fervent zeal that had belonged to the long, idle summer days, and there was less of a common purpose among the boys, and more of the looking after the aims and needs of the individual.

The Sisterhood still met regularly at the nest, however, and the spirit of good comradeship and loyalty was ever present. It had grown to large proportions now. There were over fifteen members, and when they all responded to the roll call, the magazines had to be lifted from the top of the bookcase, in order to provide seats for them all. With the episode which had nearly cost Virginia her life, there had passed from the club the last remnant of that exclusive spirit that Mollie hated so, and now there were many poor girls who wore the S. D. S. badge of honor, and who were treated with the same loving cordiality as any of those who happened to bear a name that was a power in the little town.

Apart from the social meetings in the nest, the girls had laid aside that phase of their purpose, and had devoted themselves with real, hearty earnestness to the cause for which Mollie had pleaded so eloquently long ago. But after all, there was not so very much to be done in Ottawa. Strangers were few, and there was no chance for any kind of an active crusade against "the world, the flesh, and the devil," so that, beyond helping Miss Pugsley in all manner of little loving, thoughtful ways, and being right-hand aid to the rector, Mr. Stanley, whenever there was a sick person to show attentions to, or some shy, little girl who needed brightening up, the Sisterhood girls were in danger of letting their swords grow rusty for lack of a cause to draw them, as it were.

"We haven't quarreled among ourselves since last fall," Mollie was saying, while she sipped her chocolate. "And there really isn't anything grand or splendid to do. We just slide along day after day, and 'have' ourselves, as Bobbie says, and that's all. Wish we had some great, glorious work that we could rush at, and work at like sixty, and make a success of."

"We made caps and aprons for the old ladies at the poorhouse, Mollie," Madge said, gravely. Mollie's shrewd, merry gray eyes looked at her quizzically. She never knew exactly whether to take what Madge said in earnest or not. While the making of caps and aprons might be a very good and worthy occupation in itself, Mollie's soul was not to be satisfied with such outlets for its zeal.

"We must think up something for the summer work," Virginia remarked, slowly. "I have had lots of ideas, but none of them were for anything that we could all have a hand in, as the boys say. When spring comes we will hit something that will be right. Nell is sure to have a plan."

There was silence for a moment, and then Mollie exclaimed, with one of her sudden startling bursts of irrelevance:

"Bobbie Cheritt's going to race for the turkey."

The ginger cookie in Virginia's hand dropped to the floor, and she leaned back her head for a laugh. Even Madge's dimples showed, and her sober, dark eyes lightened with mirth.

"But he's so little and funny," said Virginia, when she could speak. "And only the older boys, older than Dave, even, are going into the race, papa said."

Mollie nodded her red curls decidedly.

"I know," she replied. "I've told him just how comical he'll look, and that he doesn't stand a ghost of a chance, but he only winks one eye and stands on one foot like a sick bantam, and won't answer; so what can you do? He says he wants the turkey for something special."

"Miss Pugsley has taken more solid comfort out of that turkey this winter," Madge said thoughtfully. "She named it Benjamin Franklin, and talks to it exactly as if it understood. I hope whoever gets it won't just cook it and eat it."

"Well, there's no knowing what Bobbie is ever going to do with anything," and Mollie sighed as she laid her emptied cup on the table. "Dave and Art won't tell whether the boys are in the scheme or not, but Jerry Edsall said they might buy it of Bobbie to use in the initiations with the skeleton, to keep it company. That would break Miss Pugsley's heart, after she has petted and loved it all winter."

"So she did the others, too," returned Madge. "Every one of the four turkeys that she raised. The first three went at Thanksgiving, and Tony and I saw her cry over them, and she kept Benjamin as long as she could—until now she needs the money."

"We said we'd buy it from her for the Sisterhood, and then give it back," Virginia put in; "but she would not do that. She said it wasn't fair. When is the race?"

"Saturday, if the ice holds good," Mollie rose and reached for her cap and cloak. The light at the window was growing dim with the early twilight of winter, and it was a long way down the bluff road, home to the Rookery. "Mr. Hardy says you and Madge will come down, and we'll all follow the race on Dave's iceboat."

"And pick up poor Bobbie when he falls behind," laughed Virginia. "Good-by. Don't let any of the girls forget the meeting Monday after school."

Neither Madge nor she spoke until after Mollie's whistle had died away on the stairs. The shadows in the little room deepened, and as the light faded, the fire seemed to grow brighter and prettier, and bestir itself to make a special effort at beautifying the room.

Virginia lay for some time watching the pale, serious face bent towards the glow of the flames, and catching some of its rosy tint. She did not always understand this little maid who had come into her heart and home. She was not at all like any of the other girls in her ways. There was a quaint, old-fashioned motherliness about her that had amused Virginia at first, and then gradually she grew to love it and the gentle protective air with which Madge devoted her self to her comfort and happiness. It was as if she had transferred all the tenderness and care that used to be lavished on the little sick mother to Virginia, and to the latter it was wonderfully welcome. Years pass slowly when one is forced to adopt an unnatural mode of living, and although it was long ago since that day when she had tried to ride Sultan, still Virginia had never ceased to rebel within herself against the fate that made her different from other girls, and forced her to lead an inactive life. Naturally she was so full of life and energy, so fond of all the pleasures of life, that it made it doubly hard to lie on a couch for hours at a time, or else take such easy, passive exercise as was possible.

Her father was gentle and pitiful with her, willing to follow out any caprice or wish of hers which she fancied might bring a pleasant change in the monotony of her life, but even he did not understand her. She was always only a child to him, and he did not see how she fretted and chafed under her burden. With Mrs. Hardy it was different. She was like Virginia had been—quick, active, keen, and impulsive, and loving life, she was fond of change and travel; and while full of sympathy for her daughter, she had little patience with her little whims and troubles and rebelling.

"It is done, Virgine, dear," she would say, firmly. "You ought to accept it after all these years, and make the best of your life. It does no good to lie and fret, and be peevish and cross to those about you. You must be brave and resolute."

And Virgine would turn her head over on her pillow, and be silent, while hot tears would steal from between her lashes, and her heart would ache with a pain that would not be stilled. But since the coming of Madge Ferrall, her life had changed. The first taste of the new element in it had come in a queer way. It was one night shortly after New Years'. She had not been sleeping, as her hip pained her just enough to be uncomfortable. There is an awful loneliness tried the new remedy, Gloria Tonic. It cured them so completely that they were anxious that their recovery be published, in order that other afflicted persons may profit by their good fortune. Owing to their advanced age, they considered their condition very critical, especially so after having exhausted every known remedy. They heard of Gloria Tonic, tried it, and the result was glorious indeed, as shown by the following extractions from their letters. Mr. John Mesel, of Okarche, Okla., a gentleman of 70, wrote the maker of Gloria Tonic in a recent letter, as follows:—"I am 70 years of age, and since using Gloria Tonic I feel healthier than I did for many years, for which I am very thankful." Miss Emily Kreuter, of No. 339 North Winchester Ave., Chicago, Ill., expresses herself as follows:—"My mother, who is 75 years of age, was cured through Gloria Tonic after everything else failed." Mr. Michael Muth, of Perrysburg, Ohio, a gentleman 77 years of age, reports equally as favorable, saying:—"My right arm was totally lame, could only sleep two hours a night, and expected to remain a cripple. I could not even dress myself, but thanks to the Lord, Gloria Tonic cured me completely." Mrs. Catharine Muller, of Meggers, Wis., an old lady of 80, declares that Gloria Tonic cured her when all other remedies failed. This remedy enabled her to plant and work her vegetable garden as in former years. In thousands of other instances the results have been the same. It might interest the readers that Mr. Smith had been a sufferer from rheumatism himself, and by a lucky chance hit upon a combination of drugs which completely cured him after his case had baffled every doctor that treated him. Mr. Smith will send a free trial package to any reader having rheumatism who will send their address. His full address is John A. Smith, 516 Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

and desolation about being ill at night, when everybody is fast asleep and unconscious of our pain. Virginia's face was buried in the pillow, and she was sobbing softly, when all at once she felt some one climb up on the bed, and gather her up in her arms closely. Not a word was said, but soft little hands pressed her hair back from her forehead, and Madge's cheek was pressed to hers in loving sympathy. So she held her until the tears dried, and then, with a kiss and a whispered admonition to go right to sleep, she left her. Virginia had never had a sister, and but few girl friends, and the closeness of this new comradeship was very strange and sweet to her.

Studies that had seemed tedious and uninteresting took on a new charm when there was some one to puzzle over them with you, and it was delightful to lie there in the cosy nest, during the long winter evenings, while Madge read aloud in her low voice, some of the enchanting books from the old bookcase. There were old stories of travels and buried treasure, that were odd to find in a girls' library, and then came fairy tales, and even with the dignity of fifteen or sixteen years on one, these sound very pretty and fascinating with the firelight dancing before one, and throwing strange, grotesque shadows on the walls like fantastic genii.

Mr. Hardy fell into the habit of strolling in to smoke a cigar in the nest, and Tony loved to slip in and stretch himself out at full length on the bear rug, so that altogether they were very happy evenings. And Mrs. Hardy would glance in and laugh, as she passed by on her way from a tea, or musicale, or something. For even in the little lakeside towns there is the select little coterie who keep up these polite functions, and Mrs. Hardy was a leader in the one at Ottawa.

To-night, Virginia studied the face framed by the dark, close curls a long time, and she was thinking of how dear this little stranger was growing to her, and of how lonely it would be when she left the big house.

"Madge," she said at last, "are you happy?"

Madge gave a quick little sigh, and glanced up as if the words had recalled her from far away.

"Why, yes," she said slowly, looking first at the pretty, anxious face on the couch, and then again at the fire. "As happy as I can be," she added. "Of course, I think of mamma all the time, and hope she will come back well and strong—for Tony's sake. He will be a better man if she lives than if I raised him."

"How comical you are," laughed Virgine; "you talk as if you were about fifty, and there isn't a year's difference."

"Yes, but I am ever so much older," said Madge seriously. "And mamma left him with me. But I know everything will come right. And it doesn't do any good to worry. You have to take things just as they come, and do what the day brings first. That's what mamma used to tell us. We can't go back to yesterday and change it, and it's no use to fuss over to-morrow, and the only sure thing we've got is to-day. Don't you see?"

Virginia nodded. She was thinking deeply—thinking of how she forgot to-day, and its duties and pleasures, living over the bitterness of yesterday's mischance—and there was a long silence in the room again, until at last she said, with one of Mollie's abrupt impulses:

"I wonder who'll win the turkey," and they laughed together over Bobbie's entering the lists, and went downstairs to dinner, Madge with her arm around Virginia, supporting her.

One Drop of Ink

"I don't see why you won't let me play with Robert Scott," pouted Walter Brown. "I know he does not always mind his mother, and smokes cigars, and sometimes swears. But I have been brought up better than that. He won't hurt me, and I should think you would trust me. Perhaps I can do him good."

"Walter," said his mother, "take this glass of pure water, and put just one drop of ink into it."

He did so.

"O mother, would you have thought one drop would blacken a whole glass so?"

"Yes, it has changed the color of the whole, has it not? It is a shame to do that. Just put one drop of clear water in it, and restore its purity," said his mother.

"Why, mother you are laughing at me. One drop, nor a dozen, nor fifty, won't do that."

"No, my son; and therefore I cannot allow one drop of Robert Scott's evil nature to mingle with your careful training, many drops of which will make no impression on him."

"Animal food, unless mixed with at least four-fifths of vegetable products, is apt to produce irritable temper and chronic restlessness. Wherever experiments have succeeded in accustoming horses to a diet of flesh food, the results were attested by torn bridles and smashed stable doors. Carnivorous men begin to prowl to ease the feeling of gastric discomfort, and if deprived of that remedy, become fretful and vindictive, especially when the causes of nervous derangements have been complicated by other stimulants," writes Dr. Felix Oswald.

Like produces like, therefore the nervous dyspeptic should seek food from the peaceful and nutritious grains of the field.

Finance and Commerce

PUBLIC attention is still centered largely upon the situation in the Transvaal. However sentiment may be arrayed upon the question, the success of the Boers is generally regarded as bearish upon the speculative situation in stocks, and bullish on grain. That it causes more or less uneasiness among holders of English securities is quite rational, and by forcing sales and losses, prices for them also induces selling of our own as a natural consequence. Nothing of a serious character has to a serious degree taken place yet, and both London and New York stock markets have behaved very moderately under the circumstances. Of course, some London selling of American securities has taken place, but the trade has absorbed them with very little visible effort. Why English reverses, however, should advance the price of wheat and corn, is not so clear. It can operate not at all upon either production or consumption, and only to a most unimportant degree upon the distribution of them. If it is the fear of European intervention, it would seem that such an event is more likely to grow out of British success, as European sentiment is almost uniformly against England in the controversy, and hence much more likely to be aroused into active participation through the increased sympathy for the Boers which their defeat would inspire. In fact, to regard the English reverses as a cause for higher priced wheat and corn, is almost purely fiction, and is so regarded by the more thoughtful, and the firmness so imparted to prices has thus far been slight, and the bulge ephemeral. The money market is a more stubborn fact. There is less money, and what amounts to the same thing, less credit, to be had, than demands seem to require. Rates throughout the country are firm. Six per cent., while not exactly hindersome to borrowing in ordinary mercantile, manufacturing, and commercial channels, is still a much higher rate than people are now used to paying. In Wall st., rates have been from 6 to 15 per cent. The stock market has stood it wonderful well. Considering the apprehension that the London situation must keep in the public mind, and the last bank statement, which was positively startling, the result of only a point or so decline followed by immediate standing, was something to be really admired. It shows the unbounded confidence American investors have in American securities. At the moment, it is hard to grasp what the next change in the financial situation will be. Reserves in the New York banks are down to danger line as limited by law. It is approaching rapidly the season when the return flow of currency from this country to the East should begin. In little more than a month Congress will convene. In financial centers hopes are entertained that "Congress will do something." The daily and financial papers are asserting, with much apparent confidence, that it will declare for the Gold standard. Just how this will make currency more plenty, and enable banks to expand their loans, which is what appears to be needed now, they do not explain. Railway earnings and bank clearings are still in excess of the wonderful records of last year. In respect of most standard commodities, the only indication of a halt in the upward swing is a noticeable tendency towards less free purchasing when prices are advanced.

Manufacturers Prosperous

THE manufacturers, in the opinion of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, are about the busiest people in the United States at the present time. Mr. Austin, the Chief of the Bureau, has just returned from a visit to the manufacturing centres of New England and the Middle States, and if their condition is an example of that of the manufacturers of the country generally, as it presumably is, there can be no occasion for complaint that mills and men are lacking employment. Mr. Austin visited the cotton, woolen, worsted, silk, fibre, carpet, print goods, rubber, boot and shoes, hat, pottery, and watch and clock manufacturing establishments, and in no case did he find a lack of orders for the manufacturers, or of employment for men and women desiring employment. On the contrary, the great cotton, woolen, silk, and other textile mills are running on full time and overtime, while the manufacturers of rubber goods, boots and shoes, clothing, and pottery reported their orders far in excess of their capacity to fill with promptness. "Our chief difficulty," said the manager of a great manufactory of rubber clothing, "is to get a sufficient number of employes and sufficient machinery to meet our orders. The crude rubber we can get, though the importations of that are increasing rapidly, and the price advancing because of the increased demand; but the costly machinery and the skilled labor which are to do the work are not so easily had. We maintain constantly a school for the instruction of young men and women in the lines of work required in our factory, and yet, with the constant reduction of our force by the demands upon it from other mills of this character, we are short of hands and unable to keep up with our orders."

Similar statements were made by the managers of other manufacturing establishments. The cotton mills, woolen mills, and silk manufacturing establishments were running at their full capacity, and in some cases over hours, while the great boot and shoe manufacturing establishments were reported weeks behind with their orders, which come from all parts of the United States and of the world. During the last eight months, between two and three million dollars' worth of boots and shoes, the product of American factories, have been sent out of the country, the total for the eight months being double that of the corresponding months of 1898. Of this large exportation of this single product of our factories, the exports to the United Kingdom alone were $477,734, against $263,175 in the corresponding months of last year; to the West Indies, $467,519, against $167,420 in the corresponding months of last year; to British Australasia, $392,439, against $208,783 in the corresponding months of last year; to Mexico, $206,880, against $66,816 in the corresponding months of last year; to Africa, $94,605, against $54,653 in the corresponding months of last year, while shipments were also made to Asia, Oceania, Central and South America, as well as to the great industrial and manufacturing countries of France, Germany, and the United Kingdom.

In the iron and steel industry, the figures of our exports show that the extreme activity of manufacturers extends not alone to the home market, but to that supplied by other parts of the world. The exportation of manufactures of iron and steel in the eight months ending with August, 1899, amount to $68,008,071, against $52,925,082 in the corresponding months of 1898. A still further evidence which our foreign commerce figures show of the activity of our manufacturers, is found in the rapid increase in the importation of materials used by manufacturers.

Our Trade With Germany

TRADE relations between the United States and Germany, which are just now the subject of considerable discussion, do not appear to have been seriously affected up to the present time, if judged by the latest figures of the Treasury Bureau of Statistics. These show that in both imports and exports the commerce between the United States and Germany in the fiscal year 1899 was greater than in 1898, and that the grand total of the commerce between the two countries in 1899 was larger than in any preceding year. The total commerce between the United States and Germany in 1899 was $240,015,074, against $224,737,351 in 1898, and $236,456,652 in 1897, prior to which time the total commerce between the two countries never reached as much as $200,000,000, the 1896 total being $192,136,030, that for 1895, $178,067,818, and $189,429,118 in the phenomenal year of 1892. The exports from the United States to Germany in 1899 were the largest in the history of the trade between the two countries, being $155,772,279, against $155,039,973 in the fiscal year 1898, and $125,246,088 in 1897, prior to which year it never reached the one hundred million dollar line, except in the great export year of 1892, when it was $105,521,558.

Hints to Women
A NOVEL DRESS-HANGER.— To throw a skirt or a wrap over the chair when it is taken off is a very foolish proceeding, as every one knows, for if left lying on the chair, the garment soon becomes wrinkled and shabby-looking. It is not always possible to hang it at once in a closet with other clothes, as it may be dusty, and yet there is not always time to give the needed brushing then and there. A woman who has always been able to have the services of a maid has lately invented a most useful article for the help of women who are their own maids. This is a dress hanger, a most simple appliance, which fits against the wall of any room, takes absolutely no space, and is of inestimable service. Like all clever inventions, it is extremely simple, and consists of a brass rod fitted into a half sphere, also of brass, with a catch which enables it to either hang down straight against the wall when not in use, or to stand out straight from the wall when needed. On this is hung the skirt, cloak, wrap, or waist, as the case may be, as soon as it is removed, the rod being strong enough to sustain the weight of the garment while it is being brushed. When the skirt is brushed and ready to be hung in the closet, all that is needed is to turn the rod, and it falls straight against the wall. In some houses there are two or three of these rods in every room.

In the tight-fitting skirts that are now so much the style, such appliances as these are of the greatest value. The skirt can be hung up at once after it is worn, and there is no danger of its getting out of shape; after being brushed it can be put back into the closet on one of the hangers on which all skirts must now needs hang. Such little inventions as these have far more to do with keeping clothes in order than could well be believed by any one who has not given attention to the subject. To put a skirt away unbrushed means not only that it is likely to be worn again without the dust being removed, but also that the dust will get into the fabric. The silk linings remain intact much longer if the street dust is removed as soon as possible. Hats and cloaks, too, that so soon show the signs of wrinkles and wear, can be kept for a vastly longer time if hung up, brushed, and the ribbons or laces carefully looked after.—Harper's Bazar.

Lime or lemon juice is used to clean and brighten the fashionable shoe of russet leather. Soiled ecru window shades may be freshened by rubbing them with bread crumbs.

The sunburn that is acquired from sea bathing is as painful and serious as any such affliction can be. A physician says it is a mistake to use for this or any burn from the sun's rays, creams and oils. Much better is a free application of witch-hazel, which not only heals but hardens the skin, and thus acts as both curative and preventive.

Summer of All Saints

BY STEPHEN A. HURLBUT

Calmly the tired earth is resting now,
The travail-time of summer is o'erpast,
And trees that drooped each heavy-laden bough,
At length their fruit have cast.

A golden haze is spread o'er field and farm,
A time of musing thought and holy rest;
The grain is gathered in secure from harm,
The sun sinks toward the west.

And through the long and languid afternoon
Still fall his slanting beams of amber light,
Telling the coming of the dark too soon,
The winter's long, cold night.

How rich and fair these late autumnal days
That sweetly linger with the dying year,
Low murmuring a hymn of love and praise,
Of love outlasting fear!

So meet it seems that in these days of calm,
That feast should come more dear than all beside,
When nature sings her peaceful triumph psalm,
Tho' near to Eventide.

For all Thy saints, though lost to human sight,
We raise, O Lord, our prayer of thanks and praise
That Thou wouldst grant to them eternal light,
And peace through endless days.

Here, Lord, would we remember those whose life,
So close to Thine, was still our strength and stay,
Trusting that they who now have passed the strife
For us do ever pray.

O day of sweet communion, blest All Saints!
That comest when the fields are brown and sere,
Thy radiance with a brighter glory paints
The closing of the year.

And taught by thee, we raise our hearts to Him
Who guides by love the changing season's course;
Who, throned in splendor mid the seraphim,
Is still of Love the Source.

Notes of the World's Progress

INDICATIONS ARE THAT UNLESS A compromise be affected, there will be a severe struggle between the Contractors and Builders' Association, of Chicago, and the various labor unions employed by the former. The allegation is made by the contractors that the exactions of the unions have become so great as to embarrass seriously the work of building, as well as to increase greatly the cost; and that the walking delegate industry has taken from the contractors the right to direct their operations and carry on their work in whatever manner they see fit. Having succeeded in regulating the number of hours a day a member is permitted to work, it is stated the unions now prescribe the amount of work a member shall perform, arranging in many instances a schedule which an able-bodied workman should be able to complete in from one-half to three-quarters of a day of eight hours. The unions have taken a firm stand, and, secure in their strength, will make no concessions. On the other hand, the contractors may lock out union men, and a bitter struggle will be thereby precipitated.

FROM TIME TO TIME, INVENTIONS have been noted having as their object the simplification of voting. Their need has been admitted, owing to the multiplicity of candidates at certain elections, and consequent confusion of voters, as shown by the great number of ballots thrown out because of inaccuracies which rendered them illegal. At Buffalo last week, a new machine was satisfactorily tested, which seems to fill all requirements. Names of candidates for each office to be filled were shown, the mechanism of the machine being arranged so that a vote could not be cast for more than one candidate. The votes being counted automatically, there was no delay after the hour of closing the polls before the result was known. In certain districts where charges of a dishonest count are openly made, the voting machine would have especial value.

IT IS APPARENT THAT JAPAN IS taking an increasing interest in the affairs of China, and that this interest does not meet the approval of the Russian government. This feeling is strengthened by the report that Japan is quietly taking measures to checkmate further Russian aggression. The report of the mobilization of a Japanese army on the Russian frontier is probably due to an influx of Japanese, the regulations governing Japanese immigration having been withdrawn. There is little likelihood however of any serious difference arising between Russia and Japan, primarily because of the fact that each government has plenty to do in attending to its own affairs. Beyond a commercial interest, Japan can have no feeling for the future fate of China, and the other Powers interested in the Chinese question will prevent undue aggression.

IN ADDITION TO THE MOVEMENT for the inauguration of a parcels post, Congress will be asked at its next session to add a C. O. D. department to the money order division of the postal service. This is believed to be necessary in rural districts, owing to the rapid growth of mail order business and present inability of mail order houses to transact business expeditiously in sections where there is no express office. Large concerns doing business annually which runs into millions will back the plan and bend their energies to secure favorable legislation. The plan is virtually the same as that now used by express companies to collect on delivery with privilege of examination, and it is urged that if rural postmasters were empowered to make such transactions the revenue of the postal service would be greatly increased.

COMPLICATIONS HAVE ARISEN IN the case of the polygamous Congressman Roberts, whose election has created a strong sentiment against his membership in that body. A warrant for his arrest charging him with polygamy has been issued, and officers are searching for him, believing him to be somewhere in the East. The warrant was issued in Utah, and thither the Congressman will be taken for trial when officers find a clue to his whereabouts. Opposition to Roberts has been organized, and as soon as Congress opens its session a determined, and probably successful, effort will be made to have him ousted. In Utah the Mormons may be able to evade laws and conduct themselves in accordance with their views, but to inflict themselves, particularly in a public manner upon the community, will not be tolerated.

PUBLICITY IS GIVEN TO WELL AUTHENTICATED reports that the great ship-building yards of the Atlantic and Pacific coasts are to be merged into a combine, with a capital stock of many millions. The plan embraces all the yards capable of constructing ships of war. There has never been a period in the history of the country when ship yards were busier than at present. On the great lakes, particularly, contracts for next season on a basis of $1.50 per ton have given a great stimulus to the ship-building industry, as well as enhanced the value of vessels in commission. So great is the rush of work in Atlantic and Pacific yards that the naval programme of the government, which will be submitted at the forthcoming session of Congress, will likely not recommend an increase of naval vessels. Scarcity of steel will tend to prevent immediate work on vessels other than those already contracted for or in process of construction.

THE APPOINTMENT OF A CIVIL governor of Cuba is attracting considerable attention, particularly in view of the fact that there are many competent men who would gladly accept the position. The report which finds most credence is that General Leonard Wood, at present military governor of Santiago, will be chosen, although this would likely be opposed by army officials who are his superiors in rank. Personal fitness, however, will be the most important factor, and if this be the case no one can be found more competent than General Wood. In the transition from military to civil government, the official at the head of affairs must be a man of good executive ability, familiar with the characteristics of the Cubans, polite, and diplomatic. There are factions to be united, and differences to be healed, before Cuba is in a position to be self-governed, and the civil governor will, in a great measure, have to bear these responsibilities.

THE RESULT OF ELECTIONS LAST week is claimed by each of the great political parties to indicate a sentiment in their direction. Just how this is figured is somewhat perplexing to the lay mind, but politicians speak with conviction. It is maintained that the decision of the people in States where an election took place is in favor of the colonial policy of the administration, and from other sources comes the prophecy that the result means positively the nomination of Mr. Bryan for the presidency. Interest in the country at large was fastened on the State of Ohio, where the issue to be decided was practically for or against Senator Hanna. Mayor Jones, of Toledo, "The Golden Rule" candidate for governor on an independent ticket, did not develop the strength expected by many, yet he claims to be satisfied, and that the vote he received indicates a feeling of dissatisfaction with party organization. This statement is somewhat inconsistent in view of the determination of Mr. Jones to carry on the fight, and organize the "no-party" voters into a compact body.

THE CONTENTION BETWEEN THE United States, England, and Germany over the Samoan Islands has been happily solved by their partition between the powers involved. The tri-partite government has not operated to advantage, disputes having been of frequent occurrence, at times even threatening to embroil the three nations. Tutuila, the island which falls to the United States under the division, is fifty-four square miles in area, has a population of 4,000, and incidentally the finest harbor in the South Pacific. Being already possessed of Pearl Harbor, in the Hawaiian group, this country now controls the two chief island harbors and ports of call on that portion of the globe. The interests of the United States in Tutuila began in 1872, when Commander Meade, of the U. S. navy, made a treaty with Maunga, the great chief of the island, by which the port of Pango Pango became the property of the United States, on condition of a friendly alliance being effected.

The News of the Church

The Sunday School

Free Lectures on Church History

The Rev. Dr. J. H. Egar, rector of Zion church, Rome, N. Y., and formerly Professor of Ecclesiastical History at Nashotah, is giving a course of five lectures on Church history, in St. Paul's chapel, Syracuse, under the auspices of the Church Sunday School Institute, of the city, beginning Tuesday, Nov. 14th.

Pay for Sunday School Teachers

At a morning service recently, Dr. Mottet, rector of the church of the Holy Communion, New York, asked his congregation for contributions to lay the foundation for an educational fund, the income of which should be used to pay educators entrusted with the spiritual education of the youth of the parish. Dr. Mottet believes that the teachers of his Sunday school should be fully as well equipped mentally as the teachers in secular schools, and that they should be paid for their services.

At a sectional meeting, held in St. Stephen's church, Olean, Oct. 17th, the whole day was devoted to this subject. In the morning the Rev. G. H. Gaviller, chairman of the committee on Sunday schools, appointed by the diocesan council, presided. Archdeacon Bragdon spoke on "Methods of teaching." The aim should be to build up in the Faith. The Bible and Prayer Book must be the basis of wise teaching. The use of the leaflet has tended towards a neglect of the use of the Bible, and to those Sunday school children who do not attend Church services, the Prayer Book is almost a sealed book. Messrs. Dealey and Richards followed, presenting much the same line of thought. At the afternoon meeting, the question of establishing a Sunday School Institute, similar to that of Buffalo and Rochester, in the southern counties, was considered. The methods and work of these were explained by Archdeacon Washburn and the Rev. G. B. Richards, and a committee to take the matter into consideration and report at the Jamestown meeting in Nov., was appointed, consisting of the Rev. Messrs. Dealey, Ashton, and Brush. In the evening, the guild room was filled with an attentive audience, to listen to papers and addresses on the general subject of the Sunday school. The Rev. Mr. Gaviller read an interesting paper on "The aim and place of the Sunday school in relation to the Church." He traced the origin of the Sunday school, showed its aim to be to aid the child to lead a godly and a Christian life, and that it must not take the place of worship in the Church. In the discussion which followed, the Bible and the catechism were set forth as the only true basis of religious teaching. The rector, the Rev. Dr. Ashton, in closing the meeting, expressed the satisfaction which had been derived from the conference, and urged his hearers to enter more heartily and prayerfully into the work of the religious training of the young, and so secure a blessing on the future growth of the Church.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Board of Missions

The Branches in Duluth

An outline for mission class study has been sent out by the president as a guide for the use of all the branches in the district. This outline has been adopted by 13 branches, and they have been supplied in part with material to help in the preparation of papers for the monthly meeting.

The Virginia Branch

A large and enthusiastic meeting was held in St. Stephen's church, Culpeper, Oct. 20th. Miss Stuart of Alexandria, secretary of the diocesan branch, made an address on the subject of the responsibilities and limitations of the parochial branch. An address was also made by Mrs. T. S. Alcock, of the Junior Auxiliary. The Rev. Preston Nash delivered an address on mission work in general. The church was filled to its utmost capacity.

The Branch in the Diocese of Washington

The opening service was held in St. John's church, Nov. 7th. The Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion and made a brief address. A business session was held in the parish hall, Mrs. Satterlee, the first vice-president, taking the chair, in the much regretted absence of the president, Miss Wilkes, on account of illness. The roll call showed a representation of 20 parishes in the city, and three in the country. Various matters of interest and appeals for aid were brought before the meeting, and it was found that many of the parish branches had already begun upon the winter's work, especially in caring for the comfort of the diocesan missionaries. For the general boxes, which it is the custom to send at Christmas, all the parish societies contributing, the destinations chosen were a mission in Oklahoma, an orphanage in North Carolina, and a colored Sunday school within the diocese. A letter from Hankow, China, was read, returning thanks for a contribution of $20 towards the erection of the Women's Mission House. After joining in the mid-day prayers for missions, the meeting adjourned till the first Tuesday in December.

The Pennsylvania Branch

The 25th anniversary was observed on the 7th inst., at the church of the Holy Trinity, Philadelphia, Bishop Whitaker presiding, who also celebrated the Holy Eucharist. The Bishop welcomed those present, and said their hearts must be filled with gladness and thankfulness. For the first 10 years, the contributions in money and boxes averaged $26,000 a year. For the last 10 years, there was a great increase, it being $43,000 per annum; the total contributions for the 25 years were over $700,000. There are now 127 branches in the diocese. At noon, there was a conference with the clergy in the parish house. Mrs. Irving, honorary general secretary, spoke with special reference to the organization of the Auxiliary in this diocese, and congratulated Pennsylvania for the good work accomplished. Several written questions were read, and answers given by the Bishop, Mrs. Neilson, the Rev. Messrs. J. P. Tyler, C. E. Betticher, W. B. Bodine, D. D., W. H. Falkner, and others. The services were continued at 2:30 P. M., in the church. A telegram of congratulation was read from the general secretary, Miss Emery. An address was made by Bishop Brooke, of Oklahoma, on "Missions to the Indians." In his jurisdiction there are 82,000 Indians, and 32 different tribes are there represented; 70,000 are of the five civilized tribes. The difficulty is that the Indian wants to be taught to come to church; to be bribed to come to Sunday school. An effort is being made to keep him self-respecting. The Rev. Scott Wood, of Virginia, spoke on "Missions to the Freedman." We must resort to the slow educational process to save the negro. The masses of the colored people do not need higher education. We plead for a second emancipation—from oppressive conditions and from sin. The Rev. Edgar Cope pleaded the cause of missions in this diocese. There is a great field that has been untried. Our Church has made no attempt to reach the German population. The work in Brewerytown has resulted in the grand church of the Covenant. In another section of the city there are 40,000 or 50,000 Jews, and only one missionary. The colored population is very well cared for, and the Galilee mission is well worked, but not large enough for its scope. He pleaded for the establishment of pawnshops for the poor who "are being robbed by money-lenders, because the Church will not help them."

The Rev. A. D. Gring, of Japan, spoke on "Foreign missions." It is not the preached word the Japanese want so much as it is the Gospel in the man and in the woman. The Japanese are not a vacillating people. There is every chance in the world of the success of the work there. The church in Kyoto, built by Holy Trinity parish, has been a magnificent power. An address on "The United Offering" was made by George C. Thomas who said it would be impossible to overestimate what the women have done in the way of missions. If the whole Church was as alive to its responsibilities, there would be no difficulty. It is the poor who keep the missionary work going. Some of the gifts of the churches indicate the greatest self-denial. A great many parishes, however, have not done their full duty. Why is there not a "Man's Auxiliary"? It would be hard to carry on the work without the Woman's Auxiliary. The closing address, on "Domestic missions," was made by the Rev. F. W. Tomkins who made an earnest appeal for deeper interest and larger contributions for Church extension throughout the United States. The report of the Woman's Auxiliary shows that during the past year $45,149.94 were contributed to the cause of missions, distributed as follows: Executive, $307.40; "Indians' Hope," $4,819.59; domestic, $21,744.77; foreign, $7,476.63; Freedmen's, $7,221.92; diocesan, $2,366.82; United Offering, $1,363.11. The officers of the board are: President, Mrs. O. W. Whitaker; secretary, Miss Coles; assistant secretary, Miss Catherine K. Meredith; treasurer, Mrs. T. K. Conrad; assistant treasurer, Mrs. Thomas Roberts; treasurer for the United Offering, Mrs. George C. Thomas. During the entire day both the church and parish house were crowded to the doors, large numbers of the diocesan clergy as well as prominent members of the laity being in attendance.

The Girls Friendly Society

The annual services and meetings of the Central Council were held in Brooklyn, N. Y., from Oct. 31st to Nov. 3d, inclusive. At 8 P. M. the Central Council met for organization in Grace church parish house, and notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, the roll-call gave strong evidence of the faithfulness of the workers, for which they were amply rewarded by the kindly words of greeting and commendation by the ever faithful president, Mrs. Thomas Roberts, of Philadelphia.

At the same place on All Saints' Day, the services began with a Celebration at 7:30 A. M. At 10 A. M. the Bishop of Long Island delivered a helpful address. He was assisted at the second Celebration by the Rev. Alfred Evan Johnson, former chaplain of the society, and by the Rev. Fred Burgess, rector of the parish. The musical portions of the service were beautifully rendered by the large vested choir of men and boys.

From 12 M. to 4 P. M., with intermission for luncheon, the meditations of the Quiet Day were given by the Rev. Charles Brent, of Boston, and the unusually large number of working associates who were privileged to attend were inspired with fresh zeal for their work as Christian women—in the world and at home—as well as in the G. F. S.

On Thursday, Nov. 2nd, there was an all-day meeting in St. Mary's parish house, with a bountiful luncheon at 1 P. M. The morning's business was the reading of the president's address, and the reports of various officers and committees. The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Mrs. T. Roberts; vice-presidents, Misses E. M. Hoppin, F. Groesbeck, and Emily Paddock, Mrs. G. S. Fullerton; secretary-treasurer, Miss Eve Alexander. The afternoon session was devoted to making important changes in the constitution and by laws, and there was much lively discussion on matters specially pertaining to G. F. S. workers. At 8 P. M.

the Central Council was gracefully entertained, at the residence of Mrs. Pierrepont.

Friday, Nov. 3d, the meeting of the Council in Holy Trinity parish house was full of interest to the immediate workers. At 1 p. m. the members adjourned for luncheon at the residence of Miss Benson, secretary of the Grace church branch. Honored guests were the venerable Bishop, the rector of Grace, and the Rev. A. E. Johnson. On Friday morning, simultaneously with the closing session of the Central Council, a large and enthusiastic meeting of literature associates or their representatives was held, also in Holy Trinity parish house, Mrs. Fullerton, head of the publication committee, presiding. The educational opportunities of G. F. S. diocesan and branch work were thoroughly discussed, and a plan was agreed upon for further action. This plan is the outcome of the members' conferences and reading unions, which have been instrumental in developing latent power in the members. At the conference of associates in this parish house immediately after the luncheon, papers were read on the following topics: "Branch management, its difficulties and encouragements"—(a) as regards finances, by Miss L. C. Watson, Utica; (b) as regards members, Mrs. Satterlee, Washington; (c) as regards associates, Mrs. R. B. Gregory, Chicago. "Literature for busy girls," Miss Helen Dawes Brown. "Reading as a factor in character building," Mrs. G. S. Fullerton, Philadelphia. The immense room was well filled with associates, and the papers were entertaining.

The conference of members and associates was held in Holy Trinity parish house at 8 p. m.; subjects for discussion, "Faithfulness"—(a) to our Church; (b) to our society; (c) to our work. "Helps and hindrances in the G. F. S. meeting." Papers had been written on these subjects by members from all parts of the country; a few being selected for reading. A meeting of associates for commended members was held on Saturday. This closed a series of interesting gatherings, which, it is hoped, will be productive of much benefit to the work.

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

The Bishop who has been confined to his room for about five weeks, is steadily recovering from his recent painful indisposition, though still somewhat crippled by rheumatism.

Emmanuel church, Rockford, under the rectorate of the Rev. N. B. Clinch, is rapidly reaching an era of prosperity, and the effort to clear off a $500 debt promises success in the near future.

The Rev. G. B. Wright goes to St. Luke's Hospital this week as resident chaplain. The Rev. E. M. Thompson is assisting at Naperville.

At St. James' it is noticeable that the morning congregations on Sunday have been exceptionally large since the vacation, the pews nearly all rented, and the rector's Bible study classes for women at 11 a. m. of Tuesdays, remarkably well filled, the attendance exceeding 100. In others, too, of our parishes much attention is being given to the study of the sacred volume, for instance at St. Peter's, Mr. DuMoulin has arranged a scheme of six classes each week, so that no age or sex can plead absence of opportunity or acquiring knowledge of the Scriptures.

At a meeting of the clergy, held on the invitation of Dean Pardee, in the Clergy House on the 6th, it was resolved to meet from 10:30 a. m. to 12 m., on the 2nd and 4th Mondays in each month, to discuss such questions of "a theological or practical character as may from time to time be suggested." Accordingly, on Monday, the 13th, some 25 assembled at the cathedral to listen to a paper by the Rev. Dr. Gold on "The study of the Bible as the Word of God."

The Eighth Choir Festival

On the afternoon of Monday, Nov. 13th, the executive committee of the Diocesan Choir Association met at the Church Club rooms to perfect the arrangements for the eighth choir festival services on St. Cecilia's Day. There will be in fact three simultaneous festivals at 8 p. m., each having the same programme; namely, in St. James' for the North side choirs, in the cathedral for the West side, and in Grace church for the South.

Church of the Transfiguration

On Sunday evening last the Rev. Dr. Rushton delivered the first of a series of Sunday evening sermons, arranged by the Rev. Dr. Delafield. He will be followed in order by the Rev. Messrs. Luther Pardee, E. A. Larrabee, P. C. Wolcott, Frank DuMoulin, Dr. Stone, Dr. Delafield, T. D. Philipps, C. Scadding, E. M. Stires, C. P. Anderson, T. A. Snively, Dr. Gold, C. H. Bixby, and W. C. Richardson. A pleasing innovation in the church is the introduction of interior chimes placed just behind the organ, and rung at service time.

Church of the Redeemer, Elgin

Just before the opening of service on All Saints' Day, there was blessed, prior to use, a handsome brass alms basin, the gift of Mr. John Hobrough, a faithful parishioner of Dr. Fawcett's, in memory of his mother. Around the upper side of the wide rim in relief is the conspicuous legend, "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord," while underneath, and about the bowl, are the deeply engraven words, "Sacred to the memory of Mary Ann Barnes Hobrough. Born March 3d, 1810, died July 28th, 1897. All Saints' Day, 1899." Almost every article of furniture in this church recalls the memory of some departed one who in life worshiped there.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

A splendid rally was the last quarterly meeting of the local assembly on the evening of the 8th, in St. Peter's, at which 20 chapters were represented by an aggregate of 150 members. For the convenience of those who had to come direct from their offices, to the number of 90, substantial refreshments were provided at 6:45 p. m. in the parish house by the ladies. After a short intermission, the assembly convened in the church, with Mr. Husted Young in the chair. After prayers, by the rector, Mr. Courtney Barber spoke tellingly of the importance of the Junior Brotherhood as a distinctive branch, for it now had 300 chapters, with a membership of 3,200, and these could do better work apart from members who were heads of families. Mr. D. D. Downan, a seminarian, spoke of the personality of the late convention, wherein were present 600 men who were not ashamed to stand up for their cause, who were there to listen, and to learn. Mr. James Houghteling said that whereas at the organization of chapter 1 in St. James', the average age of the members was a little over 16, many of these were now themselves fathers of growing sons, his own then infant being now six ft. three. The question, "Am I then to get out?" he answered by his belief that the universe was big enough for all. So far from the Brotherhood being an organization for young men only, its idea was that of citizenship in a kingdom, and that involved both privilege and responsibility, for it lays upon each his share of duty. The rector said the closing prayers.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The annual meeting of the Society for the Promotion of Evangelical Knowledge, was held at the Bible House Nov. 14th.

At St. Stephen's church a memorial service in honor of the late rector, the Rev. Chas. R. Treat, was held on Sunday, Nov. 5th.

The board of trustees of St. Luke's Hospital have elected as vice-president, in succession to the late Cornelius Vanderbilt, Mr. Wm. Alexander Smith.

At a luncheon recently given to the junior class at the General Theological Seminary, by the Very Rev. Dean Hoffman, an address was made by the Very Rev. Dean Stubbs, of Ely cathedral.

A Free Reading Room Opened

Through the generosity of a young woman who has supplied the necessary funds for a year, a former drinking saloon near the Consolidated Gas Works has been opened as a free reading room, with attendant attractions, under the auspices of the City Mission Society.

Missionary Schools in Japan

A conference of representatives of many missionary societies met, Nov. 10th, to take joint action to meet a new danger which threatens missionary activity in Japan, in consequence of a decree of the Imperial Japanese government prohibiting religious instruction in schools. Bishop Scarborough, of New Jersey, represented the Church. It was agreed to petition the Japanese authorities to exclude from the effect of the decree schools maintained by private funds.

Monument for the late Rev. Dr. Houghton

The remains of the late rector of the church of the Transfiguration, the Rev. Geo. H. Houghton, D.D., have been removed from Trinity cemetery and reinterred in Kensico cemetery, where a fine monument has been placed, the gift of his nephew, the Rev. Geo. C. Houghton, D.D. The monument is a crucifix, 15 feet high, with a Latin cross, the figure of Christ being a beautiful work of art. The monument was executed in Italy, of pure Carrara marble.

Marriage of Rev. R. J. Walker

At St. James' church, Nov. 8th, the Rev. Ralph Jervis Walker, curate of St. Peter's church, was married to Miss Evelyn Clara, daughter of Mr. Ernest H. Luebbbers, one of the prominent laymen of St. James' parish. The ceremony was conducted by the rector, the Rev. E. Walpole Warren, D.D., assisted by the Very Rev. Dean Hoffman, the Rev. Drs. Wm. J. Seabury, John R. Bacchus, and the Rev. O. S. Roche.

Memorial of Rev. Dr. C. F. Hoffman

At All Angels' church, the Rev. Dr. De Lancy Townsend, rector, a plan for the re-decoration of the chancel has been adopted as a memorial of the late rector, the Rev. Dr. Hoffman, carrying out the theme, "Therefore with angels and archangels and the whole company of heaven, we laud and magnify Thy glorious name." The work will soon be entered upon. A tablet has just been placed on the walls, inscribed:

In loving memory of the Rev. Chas. Frederick Hoffman, D.D., LL.D., D.C.L., rector and benefactor of this parish, 1874-1897. Blessed are they who die in the Lord. Even so, saith the Spirit, for they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them.

Columbia University

At a meeting of the board of trustees, held Nov. 6th, President Seth Low, LL.D., announced several additions to the university faculty, and that the interest charged on the remaining indebtedness on the new site had been reduced $37,000. The net debt is now $2,975,000. President Low paid a high tribute to the memory of the late Cornelius Vanderbilt, long a member of the board. He explained that arrangements had been perfected for a summer school, beginning in 1900, and urged the erection of a new building, to cost about $300,000, expressing the hope that some alumnus would give it. During the past year the specific gifts to the university have been $73,794, and the permanent fund has been increased by $490,417.09. President Low called special attention to the need of erecting dormitories for the students, and of establishing a students' club centre on the model of Houston Hall, of the University of Pennsylvania.

St. John's Guild

The 33d annual meeting was held at the hotel Waldorf-Astoria, Nov. 8th. The treasurer's report showed receipts of $161,324.83, and disbursements of $1,259.64 cents less than the receipts. The assets of the guild, including the two floating hospitals, are now valued at $135,000, with no liabilities. The report of the executive committee announced that the guild entered upon the new year better equipped than ever before, but without a reserve fund of any kind, and solely dependent on gifts of friends. The report referred to the gift of an additional floating hospital, at a cost of $32,000. There were carried on the floating hospitals last summer, 62,672 women and children. Of these, 17,184 were given salt baths, and 3,799 were treated in the wards or on the decks. For the first time ministrations were extended to Harlem and Brooklyn, as included in greater New York, and 5,549 patients from East and West Harlem, and 7,601 from Brooklyn, were benefited. At the Seaside Hospital of the guild, 1,790 patients were admitted, and 20,170 days of hospital treatment accorded. The guild now has 668 annual members, and a total of 762 on its roll.

Pennsylvania

Ozi William Whitaker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

During the jubilee services of St. Jude's church, Philadelphia, ending on All Saints' Day, the offerings were $4,568.61 for the endowment fund of that parish.

Three brass alms basons, and other articles stolen from Holy Trinity church, West Chester, in October, were found by a farmer secreted in a corn shock, and restored to the church. A portion of the silver vessels were recovered from a Philadelphia pawnshop recently.

Ladies' Italian League

The 10th annual meeting of this organization was held on the 8th inst., in the mission rooms adjoining the Italian church, L'Emmanuello, Philadelphia. The treasurer, Miss Elizabeth M. Roberts, reported that the receipts for the year just ended were $773.13; present balance, $229.21. Nearly 150 members are enrolled, and by their yearly subscriptions greatly aid the work. Progress was reported in the mothers' meeting and the sewing school, both of which are under the direction of the Ladies' League.

A Tribute to the Rev. Dr. Cooper

At the church of the Holy Apostles, Philadelphia, on Sunday morning, 5th inst., the Rev. Dr. H. L. Duhring, at the request of the vestry, read the following telegram to the rector emeritus:

THE REV. CHARLES D. COOPER, D.D., Cazenovia, N. Y.: We are instructed by the vestry and congregation to convey to you their congratulations on this, your 86th birthday, and their best wishes in every way. As more fully expressing this, please read Numbers vi: 24-26.

GEORGE C. THOMAS,
WILLIAM R. CHAPMAN,

Wardens.

At the close of the reading, all present stood up to testify their affection and approval of the message. Telegrams of similar tenor were sent from the Sunday school in the afternoon, and also from the congregation and Sunday school of the memorial chapel of the Holy Communion.

St. Peter's Guild for Girls

Among the numerous parish agencies connected with old St. Peter's church, Philadelphia, the Rev. R. H. Nelson, rector, is the guild for girls, which is located in the guild house, 823 Lombard st., adjoining the parish building on the west. It exerts a practical influence for good among girls over 12 years of age, and there is a very large membership. For a nominal fee of fifty cents per annum, young women occupied during the day are entitled to the use of a well-equipped library, lectures, weekly summer outings, and select club dancing parties, as well as instruction in dress-making, fancy work, drawing, writing, and classes in literature. In addition to the regular membership privileges, those who desire to pay 25 cents per week are taught German, embroidery, cooking, millinery, book-keeping, and musical instruction on the mandolin, guitar, and banjo. The guild is open every evening, also on Wednesday and Sunday afternoons for social meetings. It is now in its 13th year. The president is Mrs. James Large (nee Page) who is assisted in the good work by other society women connected with old St. Peter's.

Golden Jubilee of St. Mark's, Philadelphia

All Saints' Day, with the octave ensuing, was selected for the observance of the 50th anniversary of the consecration of this prominent church. There were early celebrations of the Holy Eucharist each day, and, at a later hour on All Saints' Day, there was a High Celebration, with a procession. A large number of visiting clergy occupied the front pews. The music was Schubert's Mass in B flat. The rector, the Rev. Dr. A. G. Mortimer, was celebrant. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix who served his diaconate in St. Mark's, 1853-'4; he spoke of the day of small things 45 years ago, and the wonderful expansion since he was an assistant. The offertorium was Dr. S. S. Wesley's "O give thanks unto the Lord," and the "War march of the priests" was rendered on the organ at the conclusion of the service. In the evening the vespers of the dead were sung in the chapel. On All Souls' Day, after two early Celebrations, there was a Requiem Celebration in commemoration of all the departed members of the parish, which was attended by a crowded congregation. The altar was divested of flowers, and the altar cloth and pulpit fall were black. The rector was celebrant. The music was Mozart's Requiem in D minor, sung for the first time in English in this city. The choir numbered 70 voices, including a quartette of noted soloists. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. G. McClellan Fiske, assistant at St. Mark's, 1880-'83. In the evening of the same day there was a special service of thanksgiving in St. Michael's chapel (of St. Mark's parish), when the Rev. F. A. Sanborn, assistant at St. Mark's, 1886-'91, preached the sermon. A similar service was held on Friday evening at St. Mary's chapel (colored congregation), the preacher being the Rev. Frederick D. Lobdell, C. S. S. S., assistant at St. Mark's, 1891-'96. On Sunday, 5th inst., the same ceremonial was observed as on All Saints' Day, the preacher being the Rev. Dr. James W. Robins, priest-in-charge of Christ church Hospital, and Schubert's Mass was repeated. In the afternoon, the children of St. Mark's, and those from St. Michael's and St. Mary's chapels, completely filled the church. The service was chiefly singing, in which the three choirs were combined, joined by the children, producing a grand effect. The rector addressed them. In the evening there was solemn Evensong, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Jos. D. Newlin. It is an interesting fact that Dr. Newlin was baptized, confirmed, ordered deacon and priest in St. Mark's, and was an assistant there 1857-'61. On the 8th inst., octave of All Saints' Day, the third celebration of the Holy Eucharist was a solemn High, the Rev. S. C. Hughson being celebrant. There was a fine rendition of Gounod's 2d Mass, Des Orpheonistes. The director of the choir was the rector, the Rev. Dr. A. G. Mortimer, and the organist was Andrew Wheeler, Jr. The sermon was preached by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Nicholson, Bishop of Milwaukee, who was rector of St. Mark's, 1878-'91. At the night service which concluded the jubilee, there was a procession of the various guilds of the parish, carrying their banners, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. R. E. Dennison.

Western New York

Wm. D. Walker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Mr. David C. Monroe, formerly a Methodist minister, a graduate of Syracuse University, and for 15 years a missionary in India, was confirmed Oct. 2d, in St. Peter's church, Geneva, by Bishop Walker. Mr. Monroe has become a candidate for Priests' Orders, and is preparing at the DeLancey Divinity School.

The Buffalo Archdeaconry

A sectional meeting was held in St. Stephen's church, Olean, Oct. 16-17. On Monday afternoon the clergy met in conference in the guild room. Report were received from the missions of the archdeaconry, and a discussion was held on "the obstacles in the Southern tier, and the best means of overcoming them." In the evening a missionary meeting was held in the church. The service (choral) was admirably rendered by the choir of St. Stephen's. Addresses of force and character were made by the Rev. Messrs. Gaviller, Dealey, Wrigley, and Richards, and Archdeacon Bragdon presented the condition of the missions in the "Southern tier," as affording every encouragement in spiritual growth. On Tuesday the subject of Sunday school work occupied the entire day. Report of the proceedings will be found in the column devoted to Sunday school matter.

Delaware

Leighton Coleman, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Archdeaconry of Wilmington

The fall meeting was held at Christ church, Delaware City, Nov. 1st and 2nd. At the 10:30 service on All Saints' Day, the Bishop dedicated a beautiful marble font, a memorial of Mrs. Maxwell, sister of the wife of a former rector, the Rev. V. H. Berghaus. The subject of the address at Evensong, was "The Church"; (1) A kingdom, by the Rev. Geo. C. Hall, D. D., archdeacon of Wilmington; (2) Her principles and laws, by the Rev. Henry Ward Cunningham; (3) Her call to loyalty, by Mr. James D. Carter, of Calvary church, Wilmington. On Nov. 2nd the business session was held at 9:30 A. M., followed by the Holy Communion at 10:30, the Bishop celebrant. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Robert W. Forsyth. The afternoon session, held in the parish house, was devoted to the consideration of the following topics: "Christian socialism"; (1) What it is, by Chas. M. Curtis, Esq., of Trinity church, Wilmington; (2) The relation of the Church to it, by the Rev. Wm. M. Jefferis, D. D. The discussion on this subject was opened by the Rev. E. K. Miller. "Some misconceptions concerning the Church"; (1) As to repentance, by the Rev. K. J. Hammond; (2) As to conversion, by the Rev. Wm. J. Wilkie; (3) As to sanctification, by the Rev. H. B. Phelps. Discussion was opened by the Rev. P. Owain-Jones. The Bishop presided at these meetings. Evensong was sung at 7:30, and "Some phases of the missionary spirit" were considered: (1) Faith, by the Rev. F. M. Munson, LL. D.; (2) Zeal, by the Rev. John S. Bunting; (3) Sacrifice, by the Rt. Rev. Leighton Coleman, D. D. There was a large attendance of the clergy, and several delegates from the various parishes.

West Virginia

George W. Peterkin, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

A new pipe organ has been placed in Christ church, Clarksburg, the Rev. T. W. Cooke, rector.

The church at Davis, built by Mr. Fish, has been given a pipe organ by a parish in Pennsylvania.

A valuable addition to the hospital of the Rev. B. M. Spurr, at Moundsville, has been completed, and is now ready for patients. The building is to be known as "The Reynolds Memorial," and is the gift of Mrs. Reynolds and her daughter, of New York city. It is most complete in its appointments.

St. Matthew's, Wheeling

The Year Book recently published gives evidence that the parish has done exceedingly well during the past year, the report showing 29 baptized, 27 confirmed, and 118 added to the communicant list, making the present number 444; total contributions for the year, $14,244.

Associate Mission in Charleston

At the recent session of the Kanawha convocation held at Point Pleasant, Oct. 4th and 5th, the Rev. Gerald Cord was appointed to establish an Associate Mission, as a centre of aggressive missionary work, at Charleston. Mr. Cord has already secured the land, and if he can get a house built and three or more earnest young men to work with him, there is every promise of very good results from such work in that locality; $2,000 will be needed for building and maintenance.

Death of the Rev. P. N. Meade

The Rev. Philip Nelson Meade, rector of Christ church, Oswego, died Nov. 9th, of typhoid fever, at the residence of Dr. George B. Reynolds, an intimate friend in Baltimore. The Rev. Mr. Meade was born in Clark Co., Va., Oct. 31, 1844, and was a grandson of Bishop Meade, of Virginia. His early education was received at the Episcopal High School, Alexandria, Va. Afterward he entered the University of Virginia, but owing to the breaking out of the Civil War did not complete his course. He entered the Confederate service in 1862, and served throughout the war as a sergeant-major in a battery of artillery. Afterwards he studied and practiced law at Lynchburg, Va., when he took up the study of theology and graduated from the Virginia Theological Seminary in 1871. Prior to that, in 1869, he was ordained to the diaconate, and assisted the Rev. Thomas U. Dudley, now Bishop of Kentucky, in conducting services at old Christ church, Baltimore, now called the church of the Messiah. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1871, and became rector of Emmanuel church, Laclede, near St. Louis, Mo., and, later, was rector of Trinity church, Atchison, Kan. In 1874 he went to Baltimore as rector of the church of the Holy Innocents. Later, he gave up the charge, and for some time was actively engaged in missionary work in East Baltimore. In 1877 he became rector of Grace church, Elkridge, Howard Co., Md., and in 1882 accepted a call to Emmanuel church, Cumberland, Md., where he remained until 1889. Then he went to Christ church, Oswego, N. Y. He held various positions of influence in the diocese of Central New York, and was dean of the Fourth District. Dr. Meade was a thoughtful writer and speaker, and most diligent in parish work. He delighted to promote a knowledge of the Church, and provide her ministrations for all men. In his consecrated and devoted labors for Christ and His Church he has left an illustrious and impressive example. The widow and six children have the sympathy of the diocese in their sore bereavement.

The funeral took place Friday, Nov. 10th, from Emmanuel church, Baltimore, the services being conducted by the rector, the Rev. J. Houston Eccleston, D.D., assisted by the Rev. Messrs. Thomas E. Pattison and G. M. Foxwell. The music was furnished by the St. Cecilia Guild. The services were attended by many prominent laymen and several clergymen. Delegations from the Loyal Legion and Baltimore Lodge of Elks attended, and accompanied the body to the railroad station. Interment took place in Oswego, Nov. 13th.

Minnesota

Henry B. Whipple, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

M. N. Gilbert, D.D., LL.D., Bishop-coadjutor

Immediately after Evensong on All Saints' Day, the Rev. Dr. Pope, rector of the Good Shepherd, St. Paul, assisted by Mrs. Pope, entertained the parishioners at supper in the rectory. A very enjoyable evening was spent.

The Rev. Harvey Officer is working strenuously to build a church for St. Phillip's colored mission. The Rev. E. L. Schleuter has been appointed to the charge of St. Phillip's.

West Concord will erect a new church this fall, to be known as St. Mathias'.

The vestry of St. Paul's church, Minneapolis, have selected as the location for their new church, the southeast corner of Franklin ave. and Bryant, on Lowry Hill.

Bishop Gilbert's Visitations

Frontenac, confirmed 7; Minnetonka Mills, 5; Kenyon, 2; Gethsemane, Minneapolis, two deaf-mutes.

St. Barnabas' Hospital, Minneapolis

A donation of $200 from Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Bousfield has been received as a year's support for a free bed in the children's ward. The legal settlement of Richard Martin's legacy bestows upon the hospital 180 acres of land in the city suburbs. The annual report shows the hospital to be in a flourishing condition.

The C. A. I. L. in St. Paul

Miss Keyser, of New York, addressed a meeting in the Good Shepherd church, on behalf of the Church Association for the Advancement of the Interest of Labor. At the conclusion, the nucleus of a local branch of the C. A. I. L. was effected.

Southern Virginia

Alfred M. Randolph, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Dr. Lloyd Accepts the Secretaryship

The Rev. Arthur S. Lloyd, D.D., has accepted the position of General Secretary of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society, and in consequence has resigned the charge of St. Luke's church, Norfolk, of which he has been rector since 1885.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

The local assembly, comprising chapters in Norfolk, Berkeley, and Portsmouth, met in St. Thomas' church, Berkeley, on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 29th, with a very large attendance. Reports were made by the delegates who had attended the convention at Columbus, Ohio. Mr. Cole, of St. Peter's church, Norfolk, made an impressive address on "Brotherhood duty," and was followed by Dr. Lloyd, of St. Luke's, who gave some of his impressions of the growing spiritual power of the conventions.

Michigan

Thomas F. Davies, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Rev. Thos. W. McLean, for 12 years rector of the well equipped and strong parish, Trinity church, Bay City, has accepted a call to be rector of St. Mark's parish, Minneapolis. Mr. McLean has been some 16 years in this diocese, held many important positions, is a fine preacher and good worker, with a special capacity of impressing himself and his work on the community in which he lives, and will be a marked loss to the diocese. His resignation was accepted reluctantly and with great regret.

Florida

Edwin Gardner Weed S. T. D., Bishop

Rev. Dr. R. H. Weller's Anniversary

St. John's church, Jacksonville, held a large congregation Oct. 29th, when the Rt. Rev. Wm. Crane Gray celebrated the Holy Communion, and delivered a short discourse on the work of the Rev. Dr. Reginald H. Weller of St. Stephen's, who was that day celebrating the 50th anniversary of his ordination to the ministry. The Rev. V. W. Shields announced the regrets of Bishop Weed who left St. Louis on purpose to be there, but who had missed the connection at Waycross. The Holy Communion service was celebrated by Bishop Gray. Dr. Weller is the son of the Rev. George Weller who was editor of the old Church Register, the first Church paper in the country. He was born in Philadelphia, April 15, 1828. After completing his theological studies in the seminary at Nashotah, he was ordained in Calvary church, Memphis, on Oct. 21, 1849. The early years of Dr. Weller's ministry were spent in Tennessee, Missouri, and Mississippi, during which time he passed through the epidemics of cholera in St. Louis and Jefferson City, Mo., in 1850-'51, and also the yellow fever epidemics in Clinton and Vicksburg, Miss., and in Jacksonville in 1888; having been twice stricken with yellow fever himself while ministering to others, the last time during the epidemic in this city in 1888. In 1869 Dr. Weller was called to the rectorship of St. John's church, Jacksonville, where he remained 20 years, resigning in 1889, and accepting the editorship of The Church Year, which he held until the paper was sold. During his long rectorship in St. John's parish, the old church building was replaced by the handsome church edifice which now stands in St. John's place, and the growth of the parish was demonstrated in the inauguration of the several missions, some of which have grown into independent parishes; viz., the church of the Good Shepherd, in Riverside; St. Andrew's church, East Jacksonville; St. Stephen's church, La Villa; All Saints' church, South Jacksonville, and St. Philip's church for colored people, in the north-west part of the city.

Virginia

Francis M. Whittle, D. D., LL. D., Bishop

Robert A. Gibson, D.D. Bishop-Coadjutor

The Protestant Episcopal Church Home, of Richmond, has been left a legacy of $25,000, which will very greatly add to the efficiency of that institution.

Monumental Church, Richmond

The decorative work in the interior has been completed, and the congregation, which has been worshipping in the Sunday school room since the middle of June, assembled in the church on Sunday, Nov. 5th. The peculiar shape of the church, an octagon surmounted by a huge dome, afforded unusual opportunities for the work of the artists. The side walls are in neutral tints, very rich, yet soft and pleasing. The most striking part of the work is in the dome. It is divided into four arches resting upon pedestals. In the space between is an azure tint, and upon fleecy clouds, are seated the four Evangelists in different attitudes of expectancy for the inspiration to write. St. Matthew over the east end, presents a face and pose of rugged power, while the face of St. John, immediately above the chancel, is of singular beauty and illumined with love. More original and striking are the figures of the four Messianic prophets, standing upon the pedestals—Daniel with arms and face thrown up, as if entranced by a vision; Isaiah in gloomy meditation; Ezekiel exhorting to repentance, and Jeremiah with hands clasped above his head in the attitude of lamentation. The old glass in the lantern above the dome has been replaced by stained glass; above this in the summit is the figure of the Angel Gabriel. In the rear of the chancel is a large mural painting of the Resurrection. The pews and chancel furniture are of rich dark oak. The entire work has been done by Kauffman Bros. Where the church now stands, early in this century, stood the Richmond theatre. On the night after Christmas, 1811, the building was packed by those who had come to witness a great drama; suddenly there came the cry of fire, and when the flames had done their direful work, nothing was left but blackened walls and the remains of 72 human beings, among them the governor of the State. On the Sunday following the dust and ashes of the dead were interred on the spot, and over them was begun the erection of the church. It was completed April 3, 1814. At first it was used alternately by the Episcopalians and Presbyterians, but this not being satisfactory, and the Episcopalians being largely in the majority, the church was turned over to them. Dr. Richard Channing Moore became its first rector, and soon after was made Bishop of Virginia, and on Nov. 10th, 1814, as his first episcopal act, he consecrated the church. From its Sunday school have gone forth Bishops Lay of Easton, Vail of Kansas, Williams of Japan, Dudley of Kentucky, and Polk of Louisiana, and within its walls were consecrated Bishops Johns and Newton.

Massachusetts

William Lawrence, D. D., Bishop

The historic bell of St. Paul's, Newburyport, is cracked, and will be replaced by a new one.

St. John's, Jamaica Plain, has held a successful fair in the famous Linden Hall, at corner of Pond and Centre Sts.

Upon the return of the Rev. Dr. Frisby to the work of the church on the Advent, Boston, after an absence of 12 months, a reception was tendered him by the parishioners.

All Saints', Worcester, has sent chancel furnishings to St. Mark's, Leominster.

At the annual meeting of the British Charitable Society, mostly composed of Churchmen of this city and vicinity, it was voted to send $50 for the relief of widows and orphans of British soldiers killed in the Boer war. The Rev. A. E. George was elected chaplain, a position which he has held for 11 years.

Church Temperance Society

At the last annual meeting, Nov. 3d, in Trinity chapel, Boston, the Rev. Father Osborne spoke of the effects of the liquor traffic upon the natives of South Africa, where in some sections they are demoralized by strong drink. The wine farms are to a large extent responsible for this, as the Boer proprietors obliged their laborers to take a part of their pay in wine. Matters are, however, improving, owing to the efforts of the government officials. Other addresses were made by the Rev. E. W. Smith and the Rev. J. M. G. Foster.

Home for Orphan and Destitute Children

The annual meeting took place at the Home, corner of N. st., S. Boston, Nov. 9th. Bishop Lawrence presided. The report of the secretary, Mrs. Fabyens, was a gratifying one, showing the excellent condition of this charity. Mr. G. H. Richards read the report of the treasurer. The children were catechized by the chaplain, and their answers upon Bible questions and the Prayer Book show the good training they are receiving. The Rev. J. M. Foster made the address to the children. Bishop Lawrence, in a few words expressed himself as delighted with the work, and in a humorous vein entertained the little ones. There are now 74 in this place, and 24 boys at the Stanford School, Topsfield, Mass., their country home.

Nebraska

George Worthington S.T.D., LL.D., Bishop
St. Matthias' Church, Omaha

Bishop Worthington, on his recent sojourn in the diocese, administered the rite of Confirmation to a large class, this being the second class presented by the Rev. J. E. Reilly, D.D., rector, since Easter. The parish has just had its first annual reunion of parishioners, at which 300 were present.

Washington

Henry Yates Satterlee, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

In St. Paul's church, on Oct. 30th, three nurses were received as members of St. Barnabas' Guild, by the chaplain, the Rev. Alfred Harding. One of them was about to sail on a government transport for Manila, and to her, at the close of his brief address, the chaplain addressed a few words of affectionate counsel, and gave a special benediction.

Daughters of the King

At the October meeting of the diocesan council, the president, Mrs. W. G. Davenport, gave an interesting report of the summer work at the Salt Air Home for children at Colonial Beach, established through the efforts of the order. The home has been filled to its utmost capacity during the whole season. An effort is being made to establish a permanent home for such as have no homes of their own, for when the good work of the summer is over, the Church has but one institution which cares for friendless children, and it is always full to overflowing.

The Churchmen's League

Held its autumnal meeting in the Epiphany parish rooms, on the evening of Nov. 6th. There was a large attendance of members; Mr. Lewis J. Davis, president, being in the chair. The opening service was conducted by the Bishop, and followed by routine business and the election of a number of new members. The address of the evening was delivered by Mr. John Henry Peyton, army secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, who gave a vivid account of his visit to the Philippines, and described his impressions of the character and religious condition of the natives, in an interesting manner. At the close, a rising vote of thanks was given the speaker.

The Convocation of Washington

The semi-annual meeting took place in St. John's church, West Washington, Nov. 8th. The Holy Communion was celebrated by the Bishop who also addressed the convocation. A full representation of clergy and laity was present. The archdeacon's report gave an account of his visits to missionary stations, and dwelt particularly on work in the suburban parishes. On the appointed subject, "The place and work of the laity in the Church," the first paper was by the Hon. J. C. Bancroft Davis who spoke of the work assigned to the laity in the organization and early history of the Church, as a model to be followed. The second paper was by Mr. Albion K. Parris who enumerated the various duties and responsibilities of the layman, as shown in the organization of the American Church. Lastly, there was an address by Mr. E. B. Hay who spoke of the work of the laity in a bright and entertaining manner.

Duluth

Jas. Dow Morrison D.D., LL.D., Missionary Bishop

The Bishop recently consecrated the new church at Two Harbors. He has made a complete tour of the Indian mission stations, and has found the work there progressing in a satisfactory manner. During the last month the Rev. John A. Maggrah, an Indian priest from Walpole Island, has been established at Walker. He will hold services at Walker and at Cass Lake (white village) on alternate Sundays, and will give a regular Celebration at Leech Lake. He will, as time permits, visit the Indians at Lake Winnebagoishish. Mr. Maggrah is a graduate of St. John's College, Winnipeg.

The Rev. Knut S. Totterman is at work among the Swedes in West Duluth. He has already gathered a fair congregation, and holds services in St. Luke's church on Sunday evenings.

The prospect of a new building for St. Luke's Hospital, Duluth, seems now very bright. The Duluth people have subscribed generously, and $24,000 has already been raised. The foundations for the first pavilion will probably be laid before winter.

Long Island

Abram N. Littlejohn, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

For the Defence of the Scriptures

On All Saints' Day was organized what will be known as the American Church Bible Institute, with the Ven. Archdeacon Robert Weeks as president, and the Rev. Edwin H. Wellman as vice president. The Institute will begin its operations next month, with a course of lectures, in the church of the Atonement, Brooklyn, on "Modern evidences." Similar courses will be undertaken in other localities, intended to promote the defence of the Scriptures. It is stated that clergy in several dioceses are concerned in the movement.

Memorial Tablet for Rev. Dr. E. A. Bradley

Was unveiled on All Saints' Day in St. Luke's church, Brooklyn. Dr. Bradley was for a number of years rector of St. Luke's, and the tablet is a gift of the people of the parish. The tablet consists of a large brass plate in a frame of white marble, in which are two small pillars of Italian marble. The address by the rector was in special reference to Dr. Bradley. It was during Dr. Bradley's rectorship that the present beautiful and well equipped edifice was built, he having come to St. Luke's soon after the destruction of the former building by fire.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

On Nov. 3d the annual meeting of the Long Island local assembly was held in the chapel of St. Luke's, Brooklyn. The election of an executive committee was succeeded by remarks on the convention at Columbus by W. W. Lord, of Ascension chapter, of Mt. Vernon, N. Y.; A. J. Perrin of Mamaroneck; Dudley T. Upjohn of St. Paul's chapter, of Brooklyn; A. M. Hadden, of Calvary chapter, Manhattan, and President William Braddon. The annual report of the executive committee showed the number of chapters in the assembly to be 28, with a membership of 300. Several new chapters are in contemplation. Of junior chapters there are five, with prospects of new ones. There were 19 parishes to hear from. The need of funds for the prosecution of contemplated work was emphasized. After the benediction, pronounced by the Rev. Mr. Pope, the meeting adjourned, and a supper was served in the parish hall. By eight o'clock there was an open meeting in the church. The service was conducted by the rector, assisted by the Rev. Dr. Lindsay Parker. An address was made by the Rev. Dr. William S. Rainsford, on "The present condition of the Church, and the work to be done by its members."

The Church Club

Held its regular meeting Oct 30th. There was a large attendance. Mr. A. A. Low presided. The short devotional service was conducted by the Bishop of Saskatchewan. The Bishop of the diocese read a paper, on "Some aspects of the Anglican Reformation." Without going into historical details, Bishop Littlejohn treated the subject in a clear and interesting way, impressing his hearers with the importance and lasting results of the English Reformation. The Rt. Rev. Dr. Pinkham, Bishop of Saskatchewan, gave some interesting details of his jurisdiction, which has an area of about 300,000 square miles.

Plans for Advent

On the afternoon of Nov. 1st, in response to an invitation from the Bishop, a large number of the Brooklyn clergy gathered in the rooms of the Church Club for a conference, to arrange for special prayer and preaching during the coming Advent, and to devise some plan for securing concerted action of the clergy for this purpose. The Bishop, who presided, presented very earnestly the object of the meeting, and there followed a general expression of feeling on the importance of awakening more spiritual life in the parishes. On motion the Bishop was requested to appoint a committee to prepare a plan by which daily services may be held in centrally situated churches during the coming season of Advent.

New Parish Building at Mincola

On the afternoon of Sunday, Nov. 5th, the corner-stone was laid in the presence of a very large congregation. The services were conducted by the Rev. Henry B. Bryan, Canon of the cathedral, Garden City, and the Rev. Dr. Samuel Cox, dean, assisted by several other clergymen. The cathedral choir, under the direction of Dr. William Woodcock, choir master, rendered a very fine program of music. The boys of the cathedral school of St. Paul who have taken an active interest in the mission since it was started, were also present. Since its organization the work has prospered to a remarkable degree. Canon Bryan has been in charge, and through his efforts and that of the woman's guild, $1,800 has been raised. The cost of the parish house will be about $2,900, and the difference has been guaranteed. The building will consist of one large room to be used for services and on other occasions, and a robing room. The site for the structure was donated by the Misses Wood, of Baltimore, former residents of Garden City.

New Jersey

John Scarborough, D.D., Bishop

St. Mary's, Colestown, Destroyed by Fire

The oldest church of our Faith in the south of the State was entirely destroyed by fire, Nov. 8th. The old church structure, it is believed, was set on fire, but whether by accident or design, will probably never be known. The fire originated in an outbuilding, and then communicated to the church proper, and the entire building with its historic furnishings, was completely destroyed. Associated with the old structure were many interesting incidents occurring during the revolutionary days. The Rev. R. G.

Moses, rector of Grace church, Merchantville, was also in charge of the old Colestown church, and in favorable weather conducted monthly services in the edifice, celebrating the 148th anniversary of the church in June last. The Rev. Robert Jenney, LL. D., rector of Christ church, Philadelphia, from 1742 to 1762, commissary of the society known as "S. P. G.," preached the opening sermon in 1752 in this church, built at the charge of 30 or 40 farmers of moderate circumstances. The church was 36 by 30 feet, and was crowded when he officiated in it. The Bishop of London, in his chapel at Fulham, June 11, 1772, ordained Robert Blackwell, to whose parents Blackwell's Island, in the East river, belonged, and he returned to America and entered upon his duties at "Cole's church," Nov. 19, 1772. In one of his reports at Easter, 1774, he stated that his communicants were six in number.

North Carolina

Joseph Blount Cheshire, Jr., D.D., Bishop

Silver Jubilee at Raleigh

The 25th anniversary of the church of the Good Shepherd was celebrated Oct. 29th to Nov. 1st. The Rev. E. R. Rich, dean of Trinity cathedral, Easton, Md., who organized the parish in 1874, and was its first rector, preached the opening sermon. In the afternoon, a special service was held for the Sunday school. Richard H. Battle, Esq., delivered an address on its history, followed by the presentation of a memorial credence by the Rev. Dr. Robert Strange who was the second rector, after which the Bishop of Asheville, the Rt. Rev. J. M. Horner, delivered an address. At the night service, Dr. Strange preached, alluding touchingly to Mr. Rich and his early work in the parish. Addresses were made by the Rev. Mr. Rich, the Rev. William Meade, third rector of the church, and the Rev. Dr. I. McK. Pittinger, the fourth and present rector. On Nov. 1st, the corner stone of the new church, "the Lyman memorial," was laid by Bishop Cheshire. It was brought from the wall of the temple at Jerusalem by Dr. Pittinger two years ago. The address of the occasion was made by Dr. Pittinger. Two of the former rectors of the church were present, with large numbers of the clergy and laity, prominent among whom was General William R. Cox, son-in-law of the late Bishop Lyman, to whom this church is a memorial. The design is very imposing, and the church will be built of granite. The foundation is entirely completed. The convocation of Raleigh being in session during the jubilee, its members took part in the exercises.

Quincy

Alexander Burgess, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

After a stay of nearly a month in the diocese, the Bishop will return to spend the winter at his daughter's home in St. Alban's, Vt. He hopes in the spring to make visitations of parishes where Confirmation is desired, and for other official duties. He seems to have been greatly benefited by his visit, both in body and mind, preaching for the first time in 18 months in St. Mary's, Knoxville, and again addressing the school. He preached with his usual earnestness also in Galesburg, and on last Saturday started for Quincy, where he hoped to officiate in the cathedral. From there he was to go East, stopping for a short time in Providence. Many of the clergy and laity called on him in Knoxville, and were surprised and pleased to note his increased strength and cheerfulness.

St. James', Griggsville

On Sunday, Oct. 22nd, special services of thanksgiving to Almighty God for the blessings of the harvest were held. The music and singing did great credit to the organist and choir. The chancel was artistically decorated with corn, fruit, vegetables, and autumn leaves. The morning service was well attended, and the services morning and evening were bright and hearty. The Rev. Charles Wright officiated. This little church has a record of never having been closed for a single Sunday since it was first opened for service, in 1888. The members of the Ladies' Guild are indefatigable workers, and during the present year improvements have been added by them to the interior, which have greatly enhanced the comfort of the worshippers.

The Church League

Composed of Churchmen living in Cincinnati and suburbs, numbering at present about 50 members, many of them being from among the clergy, has been doing an excellent work since its organization, about three years ago. The objects of the league are: The restoration of the Holy Eucharist to its rightful place as the chief act of Christian worship; the increase of personal reverence and devotional practices; the use of fasting Communion wherever practicable; the restoration of the worship of the Church to the standard of the Anglican Reformation; the vindication of the right and privilege of private confession; the restoration of the apostolic rite of unction for the sick; the practice of prayers for the faithful departed; the reverent and charitable care of the dead; the principle of tithing as the basis of Christian giving. The annual meeting of the league was held in St. Luke's church on the evening of Oct. 18th. Evening Prayer was said by the rector, the Rev. Paul Matthews. The sermon was preached by the Rev. C. B. Wilmer. At the business session following, the officers were elected for the ensuing year: The Rev. Paul Matthews, president; Hon. Harlan Cleveland, vice-president; the Rev. William T. Williams, secretary; C. W. Brooks, treasurer.

Memorials for Grace Church, Baltimore

The beautiful marble altar presented by Mrs. Elizabeth A. Innes, as a memorial of her husband and five children, was dedicated on All Saints' Day, Nov. 1st, as were also the memorial gifts for the altar, given by other members of the church. The new altar is of vari colored marble. It was designed by Henry Congdon, architect, of New York, and built at the marble works of Messrs. Peter Thiess & Sons, also of New York. The front is divided into three portions by polished marble columns. On each of these there is a tablet of carved stone, representing a scene from the Old Testament, symbolic of the sacrifice of Christ, the sacrifice of Noah, the meeting of Abraham and Melchizedek, and the sacrifice of Abraham. These are in alto-relievo. The reredos is taken up almost entirely by a representation of the institution of the Lord's Supper, also in alto-relievo, on a solid block of stone, 3½ ft. high and 7 ft. long. The top of the reredos is finished in three Gothic gables, the central one being surmounted by a richly carved cross. The altar and reredos fill the entire space under the middle sanctuary window of the church. The memorial also includes, under the two windows at each side, a delicate marble wainscot, in two tints, reaching up to the windows and continuing around the side walls to the chancel arches, near the Communion rail. The altar is said to have cost $12,000. The memorial gifts for the altar are as follows: Two brass vases, in memory of Mrs. Ellis B. Long who was a devout communicant of Grace church from the day it opened to the day of her death, last spring; six solid silver alms plates, in loving memory of John R. Long; a large and beautiful altar service, with suitable brass desk, a thank offering from Mrs. Anna S. Long, for recovery from a critical illness; a beautiful white silk superfrontal for the altar, and ante-pendium for the pulpit, in memory of Miss Ella Ward; a fine fair linen cloth, edged with lace, worked by Indian women, presented by the Young Women's Guild, in affectionate remembrance of Miss Lily Guest Blackwell. By the generosity of Mrs. Garrett, a large safe, with the latest fireproof and burglarproof protections, was placed in the vestry room recently to contain all the valuable silver and records of the church.

Brass Pulpit for Memorial Church, Baltimore

On All Saints' Day, Nov. 1st, the new brass pulpit was used for the first time, the sermon being preached from it by Bishop Paret. The pulpit is a memorial, the cost of which was contributed by a large number of the congregation. The names of the contributors, together with the names of those in whose memories the contributions were made, have been inscribed in a suitable volume, which will have a place among the records of the church. The pulpit is constructed entirely of brass, and is of the Gothic style, with clover-leaf decorations. The design on the front panel is symbolic of the four Gospels. In the centre of the quatrefoil, there is a double triangle, a symbol of the Trinity. At the bottom of this panel is a broad brass tablet, with the words, "In memoriam," and underneath this the inscription: "Numbered with the saints." It was made by Geissler, of New York.

The Middle Convocation

Convened in Christ church, Denton, Oct. 17th-19th. The topic for Tuesday evening was, "The institutions of religion": the Lord's Day, by the Rev. S. J. French, and public worship, by the Rev. A. Batte. The topic in the evening was, St. Luke: St. Luke, Evangelist—missions, by the Rev. Giles B. Cooke; St. Luke, Physician—Christian culture, by the Rev. George F. Beaven; St. Luke, a Christian man—Christian manliness, by the Rev. Edward Rich. Thursday evening's topic was, "Parables bearing on the Christian life": the parable of the Fig Tree, by the Rev. J. Ogle Warfield; the Two Masters, by the Rev. David Howard; the Vine, by the Rev. Leonidas B. Baldwin. The dean, the Rev. J. A. Mitchell, closed the services with a few concluding remarks.

The Southern Convocation

Held its autumn meeting at St. Paul's church, Marion, in Somerset Co. The convocation opened with a sermon by the Rev. C. D. Frankel, followed by an address of greeting by the dean and rector of the parish, the Rev. S. J. Morgan, to which a response was made in behalf of the clergy, by the Rev. J. G. Gantt. On the second day the Holy Communion was celebrated. Luncheon was served by the ladies of the parish in the beautiful grove adjoining the church. The afternoon service consisted of a missionary service, at which addresses were made on the work of general missions, by the Rev. Messrs. T. C. Page, W. W. Greene, J. G. Gantt, and S. J. Morgan. The closing service was held in St. John's church, Crisfield, and addresses were made by the Rev. Messrs. Adkins, Page, Greene, and Gantt. The business meeting was held the next day in the parlors of the Hotel Marion, at Marion Station, where the clergy were delightfully entertained at dinner by Mr. and Mrs. W. Richard Humphreys.

Convocation of Edenton

The 70th session took place in St. George's church, Hyde County, Oct. 27-29. An essay on the subject, "The need of a new canon on convocations," was read by the Rev. N. C. Hughes, and followed by an address by the Rev. G. M. Tolson. Addresses were also made by the Rev. Messrs. Francis Joyner and R. B. Drane, D.D.

Editorials and Contributions

A FEATURE of the religious situation in England which has probably never appeared before, is the claim which is now made in the frankest manner by the Non-conformists, of the right to take a hand in the management of the Church. Dr. Guinness Rogers, Mr. Alfred Austin, and others, in recently published articles assume this claim as unquestionable. These are people who reject both the doctrine and discipline of the Church as having any claim upon them, yet, though they have long ago shaken off the dust of their feet against it, they assert a right to regulate its ritual and its doctrine. This is on the sole ground that the Church is a national Church and they are part of the nation. This reasoning would hold good not only for Nonconformists, but for agnostics and unbelievers of every description. At this distance such a claim seems to reach the extreme of absurdity. It is as if the Quakers or some other class of people who had obtained exemption from military service, should, nevertheless, claim the right to supervise the methods and movements of the army, and to give orders to the officers in command. It is only in England that this position is taken. In Scotland there is an Established Church, and there are also Nonconformists or Dissenters, but no one has had the temerity to assert that the latter have a right to meddle with the affairs of the former. Any one who knows the Scottish character can readily imagine how such a proposition would be received in that country.

WHILE the disestablishment of the Church of England probably does not belong to the field of practical politics at present, the signs of the times, nevertheless, point to that issue as the ultimate goal of movements now going on. One step after another has been taken during the past century in this direction, and there has been no step backward. Most significant of all, is a fact which has hardly as yet been fully understood, that the religion which now has the most real claim to be called the religion of the State, and which alone is supported by the State, is not the Church of England at all. Neither is it any other of the various Christian bodies. It is a new affair, made, as it were, to order. Its name is "Undenominationalism." This is the religion which has taken the place of the Church in the State or Board schools, supported by taxation, and is therefore the real State religion. It has no existence except in this connection, and represents no religious body. This state of things reminds us strongly of the religious arrangements of the Roman Empire in the earlier centuries. There were many religions, all more or less tolerated, and one of these was the ancient religion of the Roman people. But the government invented a new one, which, while it did not displace the rest, demanded the homage of all loyal subjects. It was strictly "undenominational."

MUCH is said of the improvement in educational methods during the last quarter of a century. We are led to imagine that the young people of this generation are far in advance of their fathers who were trained on older systems. But now and then this impression receives a rude shock. It was so when it came to light that the average examinations for admission to one of the oldest and most famous of American universities disclosed an ignorance of the English language, not to speak of other tongues, far below that displayed by the young students of thirty years ago. Another illustration of the present condition of affairs has just been given in a recent address before the "Central Council of Teachers," by Mr. Chas. I. Parker, principal of the South Chicago High School. From this speech we learn that the time-honored system of "cram" still dominates the life and methods of the schools. The "Gradgrind" view of education which Dickens denounced so many years ago, is flourishing in all its glory. In spite of all that has been said and written to the contrary, the idea still holds sway that education means the imparting of "facts," and the proficiency of the pupil is judged by the number of facts he has taken into his mind, and the accuracy with which he can state them, on the occasion of an examination. This encourages and almost necessitates the practice of "cramming." Mr. Parker denounces the whole thing as "immoral." The chief aim is to obtain high marks at all hazards. Such a system does not educate. It develops only the most superficial powers, but does not teach the art of thinking, which is the real end of education.

IT is discouraging to reflect that such an elementary distinction as that between instruction and education should have had so little effect upon the working system after so many years of discussion, so much teaching of "pedagogy," and so much boastfulness about improved methods. The fact is that, while all enlightened teachers understand the situation and deplore it, it is the "boards of education" which stand behind the teachers and control them. It need not be said that, speaking generally, these boards are composed of men of the "Gradgrind" type. They are "practical" men. To them, to educate means to teach things, and the more things the better. To talk to such bodies of education as the drawing out and development of the mental powers, is time thrown away. They do not understand it. Their idea of the way to advance the standard of education is to add a few more subjects to the curriculum. There is something tangible about that. As a large section of the general public entirely agrees with this view of things, it is hard to see how reform is to be brought about.

Children at Church

"WHERE are the children?" is often asked as one looks over our congregations. Some of us remember when children formed a feature in the congregation, but now they are often conspicuous by their absence.

The reason given is that "they attend the Sunday school." But is this any reason at all? Is it designed that the Sunday schools be to children a substitute for the Church? As these schools are conducted, they do not in any sense fill the place of public worship. Songs and banners and libraries and illustrated papers, and the amusing ways by which young teachers draw together and hold the interest of children, all have their value, but can it be weighed a moment against the solemn impression made upon childhood by the changes of the Christian year, by the gathering together in the family pew, by the dear old familiar prayers, by the holy reverence for the house of God, by the love of public worship formed in childhood, and growing with the years? If these and all the clustering advantages and associations of public worship must be given up for the school, who will not say that the loss is greater than the gain?

Christian parents! send your children to the Sunday school, but do not, on this account, fail to have them at your side in the house of God. In a few years they will go from you into the world, and where will they get a love for the Church, and habits of attendance, unless they acquire them when young? You would have them strongly imbued with the spirit of a Church life, intrenched in the love of its duties, and guarded against the perilous ways of the world; then let their best associations cluster around the delights of the sanctuary.

Says Bishop Kip: "Our Lord lays it down as a proof of our love for Him, 'Feed my lambs.'" The children are the hope of the Church, but with the influences now abroad, coldness at home and skepticism without, what will the next generation become? We believe the day is not far distant when the Church, in sorrow and penitence, will awake to an acknowledgment of the truth that the old paths are best; that the divinely constituted institutions of the Church and the home can only truly train the young for Christian life, and that if for them are substituted the novelties and excitements of this age of experiments, all will prove but a delusion and a snare.

Economics and the Christian Gospel

AT the recent Congregational Council in Boston, the issue was pretty clearly marked between the "new thought" and the old. The discussion was interesting to those who study the signs of the times. It raises the whole question as to what constitutes salvation. The new Gospel proposes to substitute economics, social science, and the like, for the forgiveness of sins, the transformation of the soul, and eternal life. It is assumed, tacitly or explicitly, that this visible world in which we live our earthly life is alone certainly real, and that the improvement of its conditions is the primary purpose to which the Christian minister ought to devote himself. Theology is to be relegated to the limbo of things which have had their day—have had "their day and ceased to be"; and with it that teaching which strove to convince men that the life of this world derives all the importance it possesses from its relation to the world unseen, spiritual, and eternal; and that the adverse conditions and vicissitudes of time are not to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed. The "old Gospel" did not preach athletics or sanitation, or municipal or national reform—it was not dependent upon any of these things—but it took the life of men as it was, and imparted an inward and spiritual transformation. The great marvel of the early ages was that the Gospel conquered the world without holding out the promise of any alteration of material or social conditions. It did not make men revolutionists or rebels, but taught them to take such a view of life that its sufferings, its hardships, its oppressions, became of infinitely little moment to him whose inner life was hid with Christ.

"THE kingdom of heaven," said our Lord, "is within you." Its real power is exhibited in the realm of the soul, and in the strengthening of the kinship of the soul with the unseen world. "My kingdom," He said again, "is not of this world." These great truths are in danger of being disparaged and forgotten by those who, contemplating the poverty and misery of their fellow-creatures are full of schemes for social and material reform. Such schemes may be good or bad. For the most part, they are experiments. It cannot for a moment be admitted that they are substitutes for the Christian religion, or even that they are to be accepted henceforth as an essential and controlling element in the practical work of the Church. The Church is not to be faulted if she continues to prefer the ancient ways of Christian charity, in which the personal element predominates, and there is scope for the play of sympathy and love, to any system of organized work in which cold officialism is prone to come to the front. Nor can the Church be blamed for continuing to adhere to her ancient conviction, which is involved in her very commission, that no material, or even intellectual and æsthetic, advancement can take the place of spiritual development, which is possible without the other. To the Church it is, and must ever be, the soul which is infinitely precious, and those who have eyes to see know very well that spiritual enlightenment has no necessary relation to the outward conditions of life.

The Shekel of the Sanctuary

LAST summer, at a sea-side resort, I was, early one Monday morning, making some purchases in a store, when some one entered with a request for small change. The dealer was sorry not to oblige, but, "it being Monday morning," he was "quite out." Curious to know what occult relation existed between small change and Monday morning, I ventured to inquire, and was informed that on Saturday evening the demand for small coins amounted to a "run"—quarters, changed to half-dimes, in preparation, so the dealer said, for the Sunday "collection" in church.

Perhaps he was mistaken, and that the small change was only to provide for the children's Sunday school offerings. To suppose that Christian people would deliberately plan to offer the nickel in recognition of the benefits done unto them, is to do violence to a sense of probability. I said as much to the store-keeper, but he re-inforced his opinion as to what the Saturday evening "run" on the nickel meant, by stating that he was officially in a position to know the make-up of the Sunday offerings. What these people might do at home (the congregations of which he was cognizant were mostly made up of summer visitors), he was not prepared to say. But the offerings known to him were pitifully small in the aggregate, and the favorite coin of the individual worshiper was evidently the nickel. "At least it was so in P—."

Is it so elsewhere than in P—? Certainly elsewhere than in P—, Sunday offerings are pitifully small in comparison with the number of apparently well-to-do people of whom our congregation are largely made up. Would these offerings be so small were the people mindful that the silver and gold are the Lord's? Alas! is there not but too much reason to fear that elsewhere than in P—, the nickel is the "shekel of the sanctuary?"

Some Common Mistakes

BY THE REV. FRED'K S. JEWELL, D. D.

II.

THIRD. It is a mistake to call one's self "an Episcopalian," or, in making mention of the Church, to use the phrase, "The other denominations." There is no such thing as an Episcopalian Church, and as for the popular term "Episcopal," it neither differentiates the Church from the sects, nor does it really involve the distinguishing marks of the Church. A religious body may be episcopal without being a "Catholic and Apostolic Church."

As for the phrase, "the other denominations," he who uses it as correlative to the term, "The Church," shows that he either does not know the force of our English correlatives, or he is ignorant of the very nature of the Church. To use such phraseology is to unchurch the Church; is to make it a sect or denomination.

FOURTH. It is a mistake to speak of Confirmation as "making a profession of religion," or "joining the Church." This is practically to treat the Church as if it were one of the denominations, and to imply that it has an office and ceremony peculiar to them, one which has grown out of their loss, through schism, of the apostolic rite of Laying-on-of-Hands (Heb. vi: 2), and their eviction of all initiatory force and sacramental substance from Holy Baptism. The membership of the Churchman in the "Body of Christ" and his profession of his faith date from his Baptism, as the sacrament of his adoption by the Father into the heavenly household. He comes to Confirmation as already a member of the Church; as proceeding in accordance with his profession; for the obtaining of higher grace for the fulfillment of his baptismal vows; and to receive the sign and seal of the gift of the Holy Spirit as the Lord and Giver of the "godly, righteous, and sober life."

FIFTH. It is a great mistake—and indeed something worse than that—to make any inconvenience an excuse for not attending a Church service. The act is painfully significant of either ignorance, indifference, or indecision—want of loyalty to the Church, and lack of love for the house of God and holy worship. The real inconveniences which should, and will, distress one are three: First, having no service to attend (deprivation); secondly, where there is one, having a mind full of wandering and worldly thoughts (distraction); and, thirdly, having too little out of which to make fit offerings to God, as expressive of one's grateful appreciation of his "inestimable gift." These are inconveniences to be both deplored and corrected.

Letters to the Editor

A TRUE INCIDENT

To the Editor of The Living Church:

This happened on a recent Friday morning in the parish church of —, whose roll contains the names of five hundred who in Confirmation have renewed the sacred vows of Holy Baptism:

The church bell rang, but not one of the Church's people came. The rector, as is his frequent custom, proceeded to read the service alone.

A man entered, and knelt solitary through the service. At the close, he rose to his feet, and in respectful tones addressed the rector thus: "Excuse me, sir; but I must speak. Your prayers are good; but where are your people? I am a Roman Catholic; a member of St. —'s parish. This could not have happened in my Church. Will you give your people my message? Tell them for me that from what I see I fear they are very poor Christians."

Attention! Churchmen. Was not the Roman Catholic right? X. Y. Z.

ONE OF MANY GOOD LETTERS

To the Editor of The Living Church:

"There is no need of writing," as you print in your bills; but as I have been negligent enough to allow a bill to be sent, allow me the privilege of expressing my thanks for the unfailing regularity with which your good words and Churchly news have come to me, lo! these many years, even from the beginning. I feel it a serious loss if I miss the weekly visit, with its record of Church life and work. I am sure we should have more intelligent, as well as earnest Churchmen and women, if it were more generally read. "Be not weary in well doing," however: And may you live long and prosper, is the sincere wish of

AN OLD SUB.

SUNDAY EVENING SERVICES

To the Editor of The Living Church:

The difficulty "O Tempora O Mores" meets with is the same difficulty that confronts many others. In my first and last parish I had frequently to turn out the lights, for the reason that no one came. In my present parish I have had a new experience—always had an evening congregation.

"O Tempora O Mores" asks for a word of cheer. Don't resort to sensational methods. I believe it is invariably true that when this is done the last state will very soon be worse than the first. People may exist for a time on sensationalism; they cannot live on it. They are gradually being starved to death spiritually.

How to keep the evening congregation and increase the interest in it, is no doubt one of the problems confronting us.

I attended the convention of St. Andrew's Brotherhood two weeks ago. To sum up the experience in a few words, it was a spiritual uplifting. If "O Tempora O Mores" was at the convention, he would hear from one of the speakers, Mr. H. B. Lewis, of Elk Rapids, Mich., what the Brotherhood can do in small towns. I gathered from the paper that the evening congregations average from seventy to eighty; half of them being men. Why not organize a chapter of St. Andrew's Brotherhood, "O Tempora O Mores"? St. A. FEDERATION OF CHURCHES

To the Editor of The Living Church:

For several years there has been much talk touching a "federation of Churches." Briefly, what is meant by this expression is, divide the land into districts so as to prevent the evil of Church "overlapping" Church in its work. If, for instance, in a small village there should be already one "Evangelical" society, no other Church in the "federation" would seek to introduce another, until the proper authority should decide that the increase of population justified the attempt to maintain two congregations. Or, in a large city, the mission field should be divided, and one section assigned to the Methodists, another to the Baptists, and so around, and that each should engage not to intrude upon the others' fields.

Since we first heard of this scheme, we have been impressed with this fact: Its advocates have left themselves without excuse for the maintenance of any sect whatever. For it is evident that if one denomination is as good as another for a block of 10,000 or 20,000 people, then no one of them all has anything which is peculiar to itself that is of any real, vital consequence. If any one out of the scores of denominations may take a town, county, State, or country in charge, all the others voluntarily excluding themselves from the field assigned, every such denomination proclaims by that very act that nothing in the belief or order which makes and distinguishes a sect is of any vital consequence to the individual or corporate Christian life. If it is of real consequence, they have no right to withhold it from a single soul. If it is of real consequence, they are bound to use their utmost endeavors to carry it throughout the world to every creature.

The commission which the Lord gave His Church was to "go into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." If a sect confesses that there is any portion of the world to which it is not bound to carry its sectarian message, it necessarily confesses at the same time that it is not "the body" to which the above commission was given, and admits that it is maintaining a division, which can by no means be justified, in the body of Christ, "which is His Church."

An Apostolic Church holds every truth that is "of the Faith" that is held by any and all sects. No one sect holds all the essential truth delivered to the Apostolic Church. Any Church to which the charge, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," has come in orderly succession as a trust, is bound to fulfill that trust to the extent of its ability and opportunity; and if it should voluntarily contract with any body of men to withhold its teaching from any "creature" or any district of the world, it would so far violate its trust and disobey its Lord.

As among sects, we bid Godspeed to the movement for federation. It is a confession, however unconscious, that no "denominational" belief is a good excuse for the division of which it was, and is, the cause. And the more widely "federation" obtains, the better it will be for the world; for in just so much as divisions are healed, will the sad evils of division be done away and our common Christianity made stronger.

A CORRECTION

To the Editor of The Living Church:

Please make a correction. In connection with the accounts in the Church papers of, first, the corner-stone laying, and then of the opening of St. John's chapel, in the parish of St. George's, Flushing, Long Island, it is constantly said that the chapel property was acquired by "the local chapter of the St. Andrew's Brotherhood." Strike out "local chapter of St. Andrew's," and insert in lieu thereof, "St. George's."

The St. George's Brotherhood is a corporation for missionary and other Church work within the parish or at home or abroad. It was instituted in 1866 by ex Governor Prince, of New Mexico, who is a native of Flushing, and others, among them the undersigned. It is, therefore, much older than the St. Andrew's Brotherhood. It has had its own parochial missions at Bayside, where there is now an organized parish, its Church building having been deeded to it by the St. George's Brotherhood, Murray Hill, now the St. John's chapel referred to in recent articles, and at Fresh Meadows, where it is now building, or planning to build, a chapel, and has conducted at one time or another much other helpful work.

Obituary

IN MEMORIAM

THE RT. REV. HENRY A. NEELY, D. D.

At a meeting of the bishops and clergy present upon the occasion of the funeral of the late Rt. Rev. the Bishop of Maine, the undersigned were appointed a committee to draft a suitable minute. The committee begs to report as follows:

Forasmuch as it hath pleased Almighty God, in His wise providence, to take out of this world, in the 33d year of his episcopate, the soul of our beloved Bishop, his sorrowing clergy desire to put on record their recognition of the loss to themselves and to the diocese entailed by this sad event. An episcopate so long exercised with unflinching self-sacrifice and devotion to duty, could not but create ties of respect and affection, the loosing of which evoke profound emotion.

Endowed with intellectual qualities of a very high order, with a character lofty and pure, with the dignity born of simple but consistent faith, with his gracious bearing and courteous demeanor of the true gentleman, Henry Adams Neely entered upon the arduous duties of his sacred office in a field beset with peculiar difficulties. The years as they passed but developed more and more the manliness and nobility of his character, and impressed all those with whom he came in contact with a sense of his deep spirituality and high appreciation of his responsibilities. As he ever preached Christ, so he also lived Christ. Eminent in the councils of the Church, he was at all times loyal to the Faith. This was peculiarly noticeable in crises of the Church, and through him the influence of the diocese of Maine was made to be felt.

To his clergy he was in the fullest sense a father in God, and none ever went to him with his cares and anxieties but found in him a loving and sympathetic counsellor and friend. His loyalty to them was proverbial, and he held fast their grateful affection. Of all the noble work he accomplished in these long years, the lasting monuments remain in the various missions he established and in the effects of the lives he influenced for righteousness. A useful life—happy, bright, beneficent—is brought to an honorable end, and we can but thank God for this His servant departed from this life in His faith and fear, as we lay the tired body to rest to await the glorious resurrection of the just. God grant him rest eternal and perpetual light.

Resolved: That the heartfelt sympathy of his clergy be communicated to Mrs. Neely.

Resolved: That the clergy, recognizing the devoted attachment existing between the late Bishop and the Very Reverend, the Dean of the cathedra, remembering the unwearied service of the Dean during the Bishop's illness, and realizing the deep personal loss sustained by him, extend to him their warmest sympathy.

A Psalm of Trust

BY IDA BALLHEIM

Highest, Holiest of all!
Thou art near me when I call,—
I so low and Thou so high!
Yet Thou wilt regard my cry.

He keeps the beautiful secret of the color that stains the rose!

His are the gold and silver, and their hiding place He knows;

Before the poet can dream them, His are the poet's dreams,

And the sculptor's rarest visions are but waste of the heavenly gleams.

He knows the intent of the spirit, He knows the thought of the heart;

The grief of the mother grieves Him, when the babe and the mother part;

He pities the small brown sparrow that dies in the winter's chill,

He pities us who are shaping the earth to our sinful will.

But He sees the end of the sinning that has wrought the planet's woe,

It is the God of Battle; besieging Jericho;

And the "scarlet thread in a window" to a mighty cable has grown,

That shall bind to the heart of the Maker a world at the last his own.

Lord of all the universe!
Needs it I to Thee rehearse
Griefs and pains that Thy wise love Knows the happy meaning of?

Pen-and-Ink-lings

LORD SALISBURY has styled the Bishop of London "the busiest man in the world." The Bishop's time is well occupied, certainly, for he receives on an average of two thousand letters a month. His one recreation is walking.

THE country editor is a reliable encyclopedia. A subscriber sent him this query recently: "What ails my hens? Every morning I find one or more of them keeled over, to rise no more." The reply was: "The fowls are dead. It is an old complaint, and nothing can be done, except to bury them."

EX-GOVERNOR L. Bradford Prince, of Santa Fe, New Mexico, a prominent Churchman, owns a large and unique collection of stone idols which were dug up on the sites of ancient Pueblo villages. He has over 1,000 of them. Some are over six feet in height, and some are light enough to float in water. It is difficult to tell the age of the idols, and all the information that can be obtained concerning them is that they were used by the ancestors of the present Pueblo Indians before the Spanish conquest. Agents of the Bureau of Ethnology at Washington have taken photographs of the collection.

I WAS constantly struck, says Colonel T. W. Higginson, in The Atlantic, with the genuine spirit of hospitality among Englishmen towards Americans. I like this none the less for its having its definite limitations as to pecuniary obligations, and the like, including everything in the nature of "treating," all this being, in my opinion, a weak point in our more gushing or more self-conscious habit. I remember to have once been taken by a gentleman on whom I had but the slightest claim, to the country house of another, on whom I had no claim whatever. The latter was not at all literary, and had not even the usual vague English interest in American affairs; yet he gave up his whole afternoon to drive me to Kenilworth, which he had seen a thousand times. But that for which I liked him best, and which afforded me a wholly new experience, was that as we entered the outer doorway, he, going first, looked back over his shoulder, and said simply: "They make you pay threepence for admission here," and then added, speaking to the attendant, "here is my threepence." After all the time and trouble he had given to his stranger guest, he yet left him; to pay his own threepence; a thing which most Americans would not have dreamed of doing. It would have been the American notion of good breeding to save a guest from expense, as it was the English impulse to save him from the sense of obligation. I confess that I prefer the latter method.

A CALIFORNIA Churchman, recently spending Sunday in an Eastern city, reached one of our churches a few minutes before eight, hoping that there would be an early Communion. The front doors were locked, and there was no sign of life. Going around to the rear, the vestry door was found open, and the sexton within. The following conversation took place:

Californian—Will there be service this morning?

Sexton—Yes, of course there will; at eleven o'clock.

Californian—But is there no early Communion?

Sexton—No, there ain't. This ain't no Catholic church.

And the Californian departed, wondering whether what the sexton had said was true.

IT is now almost two full centuries since England and Scotland were united, in 1707, under the name of Great Britain. Yet up to the present time the world continues to employ the familiar terms, English queen, English army, and so on, with no mention of Scotland. This slight has often been commented upon by Scotchmen, but never perhaps more happily than at Trafalgar. Two Scotchmen, messmates and bosom cronies, from the same little clachan, happened to be stationed near each other when the now celebrated signal was given from the admiral's ship, "England expects every man to do his duty." "No a word o' puir auld Scotland on this occasion!" dolefully remarked Geordie to Jock. Jock cocked his eye a moment, and turning to his companion, "Man Geordie," said he, "Scotland kens weel enouch that nae bairn o' hers needs to be tell't to do his duty—that's just a hint to the Englishers."

IT is the "intelligent" proof-reader who comes to the fore now with a most laughable ecclesiastical blunder. In an article in last week's Interior, the word "vesper" is repeatedly used in place of "verger," in describing the officials in the English churches who act as pew-openers or beadles. That proof-reader must be Presbyterian, to the exclusion of all knowledge of everything pertaining to other Churches. It is comical to read: "The vespers in most of the English churches are chiefly remarkable for their illiteracy and their red noses."

The de la Mere Brass

OUR illustration of a "rubbing," as it is technically termed, is reproduced from the great brass of Abbot de la Mere, preserved in the ancient Abbey church of St. Albans, Hertfordshire, since 1877 a cathedral of the "new foundation." This piece of latten brass is the largest and most beautiful specimen of scorpor work known to exist in England.

During the era of the commonwealth, the beautiful sepulchral brasses to be found in almost every collegiate and parish church, were ruthlessly destroyed by the Puritans. It is said that St. Albans possessed almost five hundred, and so great was the destruction, that hardly a score escaped. This brass was wrenched from its matrix—as can be seen by the black portion in the upper left corner, and the fracture across, above the hands—and thrown out, singularly escaping destruction. But friendly hands secured and reverently preserved it, and for some years past it has been kept in Abbot Wheathampstede's chantry, within the precincts of the abbey choir.

About the top and one of the sides, the inscription runs: Hic jacet dominus Thomas quondam Abbas hujus monasterii. It is the tradition that the brass was made, as then frequently the case, during the Abbot's lifetime, and at his death the lettering was not completed. St. Albans' was a mitred house of the great Benedictine order, and therefore the mitre crowns the head, for it had been assumed by the rulers of certain of the great monasteries, as also the pastoral staff, except that the crook of those which these ecclesiastics bore was turned in, showing their jurisdiction to be within their monasteries. The Abbot is clad in full mass vestments, and wears as well the dalmatic and tunic. The albe has an "apparel"—"the ornamented hem" of the Levitical order—attached. Gloves and sandals are worn, the feet resting upon fighting beasts.

Surrounding the effigy is very rich canopy work. Above the Abbot's head is the First Person of the Blessed Trinity, enthroned, with figures of saints on either side, censuring and playing upon musical instruments. Then in order are SS. Peter and Paul respectively, on the extreme left and right. Next below is St. Alban, on the left and opposite St. Oswyn, King of Northumbria, and martyr, whose shrine was at Tynemouth Priory, where de la Mere received the tonsure. Again, below on each side, are six figures; viz.: to the left, going down in order, Daniel, David, and Hosea, and SS. John Evangelist, Andrew, and Thomas; and to the right, in the same manner, SS. James Greater, Bartholomew, and Philip, and Isaiah, Haggai and Joel. At each corner of the brass is a symbol in order of the four Evangelists. The arms of the de la Mere's, on a bend three eagles displayed, are seen upon escutcheons on each side of the border, and on a line with the hands, that from their downward position indicate humility. The central panel has a rich background of diaper work, with heraldic beasts. The amice is worked with griffins, while the chasuble and maniple have a beautiful medallion treatment. The plate measures 52 x 111 inches, and is a magnificent specimen of the beautiful work of the "Decorated" period.

The Most Rev. Thomas de la Mere, Abbot of St. Albans', and Provincial of the Benedictine order in the British Isles, came of a noble family, the first speaker of the English Commons being a near relative, while a sister of the Abbot's, as Prioress, governed the nunnery of St. Mary de Pre. At an early age, de la Mere took his vows, as already indicated, at the Priory of Tynemouth, a "cell" or subordinate house of St. Albans', and was soon elected its Prior. At this time the Black Death had devastated the land, many of the religious houses suffering by its ravages, St. Albans among them. Abbot Mentmore had been taken by it, and the great abbey was in a desolate state when de la Mere was chosen as his successor. Everything was soon brought into order, its great school of painting revived, while the fame of its scriptorium was quickened to become the first in Anglia, as attested by its exquisite MSS., yet preserved. At the time of de la Mere's elevation to the abbacy (1349), St. Albans' took precedence over Westminster, Glastonbury, Tewksbury, Gloucester, Selburne, and other monasteries, all powerful mitred abbeys of the Benedictine obedience, and it held also the powers of life and death. Lord Abbot de la Mere governed this great minster until 1396, or for forty-seven years—the longest reign over any conventual house upon record. During this period the insurrection of Watt Tyler rose and fell, permission being given to fortify the monastery, which was repeatedly attacked by lawless bands. The subject of this monograph was the most distinguished ecclesiastic of his day. He was in great estimation with Edward III., and kings did him homage. To his care was committed the person of King John II. of France, made a prisoner at the battle of Poitiers.

St. Albans', during its existence from the eighth century, has had many famous men among its rulers: Paul of Caen, John de Cella, and William of Trumpington being in its long succession. Mathew Paris was one of its monks, and the only Englishman who ever wore the papal tiara. Adrian IV. took his vows here, and did its penances.

These brasses were first affixed upon altar tombs, which soon became, by their numbers, obstructions, and were then sunk in the pavements, and before long covered every part of sanctuary, choir, nave, aisles, and chapels.

A fine rubbing of this brass is in the possession of the Church Club of New York City; and others, to form a complete group of the ecclesiastics and gentry of the Gothic age, are being added to the Club's treasures. It has also one from the most ancient plate known to exist in England, A. D. 1277—a knight, in a beautiful specimen of full chain mail—that yet rests upon the floor of the choir of Stoke D'Abernon church, Surrey.

G. W. K.,

The Church Club, New York.

P. S.—The writer has been inclined to believe that there are many among the ecclesiastics and intelligent laity of the American Church who value the true and good in ecclésiology, to enable an organization to be formed, having for its objects a care for this general subject. Surely, the various Church clubs of our land must each have some members to whom this proposition will appeal. The several English societies formed within the past three or four decades, have recovered for the Church much that was lost, besides cultivating a correct taste in all details. In this country, Church architecture has gone wild through the lack of any knowledge in general. Are we to let the Renaissance school undo everything in our faith, when true symbolism teaches so much? We cannot afford to let the question drift further, or permit crude artisans to model the ornaments of our worship, if it is to be truly dignified.

Book Reviews and Notices

The Episcopate of Charles Wordsworth, Bishop of St. Andrews. By John Wordsworth, D. D., Bishop of Salisbury. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Pp. 402. Price, $5.

This volume enshrines the record of a long life of strenuous effort for the upbuilding of the Church in Scotland. Bishop Wordsworth was a member of a family highly distinguished in both literary and religious life. His uncle was the poet, the late Bishop of Lincoln was his brother, and his biographer, the present Bishop of Salisbury, is his nephew. Seldom is so much talent concentrated in a single family. His election to the episcopate was peculiar and somewhat unfortunate. He had been for some years warden of Glenalmond College. When the clergy met to elect a new bishop for the united dioceses of St. Andrews, Dunkeld, and Dunblane, it was found that Dr. Wordsworth and Dr. Suther had exactly an equal number of votes. It remained for Dr. Wordsworth to give the casting vote, which, after full consideration, he cast for himself, thus practically electing himself. His tenure of office* was by no means a peaceful one, and his episcopal life was full of controversy. To the Eucharistic controversy, which was then raging, and to the question of the reunion of Scottish Presbyterians with the Church, he devoted the best powers of his great mind. Neither of these problems has been solved, but there can be no doubt that he did much to help on their solution. While we may not agree with him in the grounds which he took, we are bound to admire the learning and zeal which he displayed. These are excellently set forth in this biography, which forms an admirable supplement to his incomplete autobiography, which only covers a small part of his episcopate. It contains many interesting descriptions of Scottish life and scenery, and gives a clear insight into the inner life of the Church in Scotland. Many of the chief men of that time appear in its pages. Bishop Wordsworth was the teacher of Mr. Gladstone, Cardinal Manning, Lord Canning, Bishop Hamilton, and the present Bishops of Southwell and Truro, besides many others hardly less distinguished. He knew intimately most of the eminent men of his day. Of some of them he has left us very interesting accounts. Of Cardinal Newman he says:

Newman's mind was essentially skeptical; but his own disposition, on the whole, was amiable, and his intellectual gifts being of the very highest order, the world is content to regard his skepticism as a recommendation rather than the contrary. Do you know his sermons? They are of real value, and I suppose no other sermons ever written or preached have produced so much effect. And that effect will endure. But I doubt if the same can be said of any of his other works. As to his moral fibre—it was not of the strongest. (You know I think the same of Manning.) He was not ambitious in the same sense as Manning; but he was morbidly sensitive when attacked or not appreciated as his conscience told him he deserved to be; and he allowed himself to act under that irritation—which is not the sign of a truly great man.

This estimate of Newman is singularly acute and exact. His opinion of Archbishop Trench is no less valuable.

Take him all in all, he was one of the most remarkable men of the present century. Everything he did—and he did an enormous amount of work of various kinds—showed great industry and talent combined, and his character in every respect was first rate.

These extracts are enough to give the reader a taste of the sort of things which are to be found within the covers of this book. It is indispensable to any one who would carefully study the religious history of Scotland in the nineteenth century.

Plain Papers on the Doctrine of the Holy Spirit. By the Rev. C. L. Schofield, D. D. New York and Chicago: Fleming H. Revell Company.

It is gratifying to find among the denominations the spirit of inquiry into the doctrine of the Holy Spirit. The Church needs no revelation on this most important part of her teaching. The book before us contains some useful information, but like all sectarians, the writer fails to grasp the true meaning of passages of Holy Scripture referring to regeneration and the Spirit's work in Holy Baptism. There is too much vagueness in what the writer terms Baptism by the Spirit.

Active Service. By Stephen Crane. New York: F. A. Stokes Company. Price, $1.25.

It may be that Mr. Crane has pictured for us as the hero the typical Sunday editor of a great New York daily. If so, it probably explains in many ways the extraordinary things one sees in that Sunday issue. The story is one of a college professor, his wife, daughter, and a party of students who were caught between the lines of the Greek and Turkish forces in the last war. This Sunday editor who has gone to the front as a war correspondent, in the hope of meeting the professor's daughter, with whom he is in love, comes to the rescue. A coarse, vulgar, vindictive, and beautiful variety actress mixes in, and complicates as much as she can the editor's love affair. As a specimen of the conversations, the actress tells the editor to "soak his head," and he answering in kind, says to her: "Your dragoman is a rubber neck, and if he keeps darning, me I will simply have to kick the stuffing out of him." The college youths seem singularly and unanimously profane, and their ordinary conversation is simply astonishing. It is hard work to see any literary ability in this production, but it is filled with Mr. Crane's peculiar humor; crude, but at times refreshing.

Principles of Public Speaking. Comprising the Technique of Articulation, Phrasing Emphasis; the Cure of Vocal Defects; the Elements of Gesture; a Complete Guide in Public Reading, Extemporaneous Speaking, Debate, and Parliamentary Law, together with many Exercises, Forms, and Practice Selections. By Guy Carleton Lee, Ph. D. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. Price, $1.75.

The copious title page gives a sufficiently good idea of the contents of this valuable book. We do not know of any other work giving such a variety of helpful suggestion for improvement in public speaking as the one before us. It is not a manual of elocution, as ordinarily understood, though this department of the work is very satisfactory and thorough. But in addition to this the author discusses with ability the subject of oratory, delivery, conversation, reading, extemporaneous speaking, and debate. There is a chapter on parliamentary law, a very important subject for one who is preparing for public duty, and an example is given of constitution and by-laws suitable for a club or society. The selections for practice are necessarily short and few, but they are very good. The young man who is ambitious to improve himself as a speaker cannot do better than to master the contents of this volume.

Devotion to the Blessed Virgin. By J. B. Bossuet, Bishop of Meaux. Condensed, Arranged, and Translated by F. M. Capes. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Pp. 150.

One of the favorite subjects of this great French preacher was the honor and love due to the Blessed Virgin Mary. He has left to the world some twenty sermons on this single theme. The gist of these has been gathered into this volume, which forms perhaps the best exposition of her teaching upon this subject which the Roman Church has given us. His contention is that devotion to the Blessed Virgin is not merely a beautiful addition to Christian piety, but that it is essential to the full comprehension of the mystery of the Incarnation. The ground which he takes is higher than we can consistently hold, and many of his arguments and interpretations of Scripture might easily be overthrown. But as an interesting and popular statement of Roman doctrine, the book is valuable. Like most Roman writings, it will be very likely to set the intelligent reader thinking how dangerous it is to dogmatize about the great mysteries of the Christian Faith. The attempt to be wise beyond what is written is always, and in this case especially, full of peril.

Beck's Fortune. By Adele E. Thompson. Illustrated by Louis Meynell. Boston: Lee & Shepard. Price, $1.50.

Beck really found two fortunes. The first came to her most unexpectedly, from her miserly grandfather, with whom she lived alone, on a lonely farm. She does her duty by him, and finds her reward. The later chapters of the book, dealing with Beck's life at school, are full of fun and good sense. The school, and its officers will be easily recognized by many readers, in spite of the disguise of slightly altered names. The story is an admirable one for girls, and is worth the attention of older people who need to know, or wish to know, how a girl's possibilities may be developed by the training received in a good school.

Henry in the War, or the Model Volunteer. By Gen. O. O. Howard, U. S. A. Illustrated by A. B. Shute. Boston: Lee & Shepard. Price, $1.25.

The story is from real life, and depicts West Point before the War, the recruiting for the regiments, the advance to the front, the fight at Bull Run and the Peninsula, and other events until the close of the War. The author has striven, as he states, to present only the truth of history in all matters of importance, while attempting to add something to the attractions and inducements which lead boys to become manly and upright men. The book will undoubtedly gratify the taste of boy readers. It is excellently illustrated by Mr. Shute.

Zodiac Stories. By Blanche Mary Channing. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. Price, $1.50.

Twelve varied and pleasing stories are included in this volume. The first tale is of the desert—an old idea in a new setting; the second gives an incident in the lives of two quaint, sweet little Japanese girls; the third is a Rocky Mountain story of a man lost in a storm, and so on. Each narrative is given the name of one sign of the Zodiac, and its nature is determined thereby; hence Leo, the Lion, is one hero; the Scorpion, the Archer, etc., other subjects. The idea of the series is an original one, and excellently carried out.

Under the Cactus Flag. A Story of Life in Mexico. By Nora Archibald Smith. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.25.

The author's bright, entertaining style has been made known to the public through a former book, as well as through her joint work with Mrs. Wiggin. This is a story of how a bright young American girl, barely sixteen, goes to Mexico and establishes a little private school. Incidentally one learns from a vivid pages of incident and description, much of Mexican household and social life. There is no love-making in the story, though readers have a hint that such things may be in store for the heroine when the suitable time shall have come. The book is attractively bound in red and green, with a cover design of the cactus flag.

Jess, Bits of Wayside Gospel. By Jenkin Lloyd Jones. New York: The Macmillan Company. Price, $1.50.

This is a book that every reader will enjoy. Jess was a horse presented to Mr. Jones by his congregation. She was used by her owner for vacation rambles through Wisconsin, Mr. Jones' native State. The story of her life is told in a fascinating manner inculcating at the same time lessons of humanity to our dumb friends of the animal kingdom. Then follow several sermons of instructive lessons drawn from nature during vacation periods. Though Mr. Jones is a Unitarian, there is nothing in these sermons to offend the Churchman, but much that every clergyman might imitate to the great benefit of his congregation. We commend the book highly to our clerical and other readers.

here offered. The present volume includes the photo-reproductions of Murillo's painting, "The Holy Family," now in the National Gallery of London. There are several poems included—Mrs. Browning's "The Virgin Mary to the Child Jesus," Macdonald's "Mother's Hymn," and Spitta's "A Happy Home." The book is delicately bound in gray and gold, excellently printed, and has a rubricated margin.

Osceola, Chief of the Seminoles. By Colonel H. R. Gordon. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. Price, $1.50.

The story is of two boys who meet with many adventures and hairbreadth escapes in the war with the Seminoles. There is the usual weaving of fancy with fact, though in that part of his story which has to do with real characters, the author is strictly accurate. An otherwise excellent tale is marred by the fact that Colonel Gordon, whose knowledge of woodcraft is seemingly evolved from his inner consciousness, enters into explanatory details which are at times ridiculous. We might forgive him for allowing good woodsmen to become lost and walk in a circle, when there are a dozen signs to set them right, but it grieves us when he makes an Indian paddle from the bow of his canoe, "first on one side, then on the other," while his chief sits just behind him with ready rifle! The book is finely printed and well illustrated.

Select Notes. A Commentary on the Sunday School Lessons for 1900. By F. N. and M. A. Peloubet. Illustrated. Boston and Chicago: W. A. Wilde Company. Price, cloth, $1.25.

Several new features appear in the "Select Notes" on the International Series of Sunday School Lessons for 1900. A new harmony forms the basis of this year's study on the life of Christ. A chronological chart in seven colors fixes the dates simply and effectively. The volume is printed from new type made for it, and illustrated with beautiful pictures, maps, and drawings. It excels its twenty-five predecessors, and will be found suggestive and helpful in a study of the life of Christ, although not prepared from a Churchman's point of view.

A TRITE but interesting little book, prettily bound with blue and gold, is "When Love is Lord," by Tom Hall, just from the press of Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York. The verses are clever, sometimes flippant, never very serious. They will do for reading in the silly season and at the silly age; but one would scarcely consent to the "lordship" of such a spirit as chatters in these lines.

MESSRS FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY, Chicago, have added to their "Looking Upward Booklets" a little story by Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, "Lend a Hand." This is not characterized by extreme statements and impracticable theories; yet those in his former works have been productive of good, as holding-up ideals which have been so little regarded. It is full of interest and good things, and, as everything which he writes, is likely to do good.

"THE COPLEY SERIES," now coming from the press of Messrs. T. Y. Crowell & Co., comprises some of the choicest literature, and is most attractively presented. The principal feature in these beautiful volumes is the colored illustrations printed, by a new process. The delicacy and beauty of the colors, the accuracy of the registration, and the charm of the designs, make the reproductions a veritable triumph. The paper on which the books are printed is deckle-edge with wide margins, and the cover designs are very bright and handsome. The titles thus far presented in this series are as follows: "Abbe Constantin," by Halevy; "Barrack-room Ballads," by Rudyard Kipling; "Cranford," by Mrs. Gaskell; "Evangeline," by Longfellow; "Hiawatha," by Longfellow; "The House of the Seven Gables," by Hawthorne; "Lucile," by Meredith; "Prue and I," by George William Curtis. The price ($1 a volume) is marvelously cheap. We hope for a continuance of the enterprise.

Periodicals

The International illustrated monthly magazine for November is a very handsome and interesting issue. From a library, as well as a mechanical standpoint, it compares favorably with any other periodical in the country. The leading article gives an account of the United States Railway Mail Service, a great institution of which our people generally know very little. An article on the Transvaal, illustrated, is timely, the stories are excellent, and the special departments are full of good points. In the pronouncement of current words, it is not possible that there should always be agreement between doctors, but The International is generally correct, beyond controversy. People who intend to visit the Paris Exposition will find Travel Notes "worth the price of the magazine." We are glad to see from the editor's comments that The International is appreciated by its readers and by the public press. Our best wishes for the coming new year.

Opinions of the Press

The Southern Churchman

LACK OF CLERGY.—A short time since a great deal was written in our Church papers on the question as to whether or not there was "room in the ministry," and much said on both sides of the case. Possibly the following, taken from The Canadian Churchman, may help us to see one phase of the matter: "The most pressing claim of the Church in Canada at the present time is not so much for men ready and willing to take Holy Orders, and to work in the populous towns and villages of the Dominion, as for men who are prepared to devote some of the best years of their early manhood working in the scattered hamlets in the backwoods, where, too often, for lack of clergy willing and able to undertake this work, the ground is wholly neglected, or is left to the ministrations of members of other denominations, and the Church is unrepresented where it is most needed." Mark one phrase, "lack of clergy willing and able to undertake this work." Surely, as long as statements such as this can be soberly and truthfully made, no question can be righteously raised as to "room in the ministry."

The Examiner (Baptist)

SELFISH GIVING.—The perversion and degradation of the social life of the Church, by bringing people together with the exclusive view of getting money from them by every sort of worldly expedient, is a capital blunder—or worse—whose ill-effects it would be impossible to estimate. We preach, and rightly, the duty of unselfishness as a supreme requirement of the Lord. The evening after, perhaps, we devote to the education of the selfish spirit, teaching people that for the money they give to the Church and its work, they are to expect and require a mercenary equivalent. We ask for their quarters and half-dollars, not as contributions freely made out of love to Christ and interest in His cause, but—despicable anti-climax—as the price of an oyster supper, a bottle of perfume, or a box of soap! The trickery, stratagem, and vulgarity that mark many of these occasions are offences to right morals and good breeding. If it be said that the motives of those who have recourse to them are good, we should reply that we have no doubt of it. But we are not relieved of the duty of seeing to it that our motives manifest themselves in accordance with Christian principle and propriety.

Experience has taught us that much failure to give on the part of the young especially, results from the quid pro quo expectation to which they are being educated.

The Church Standard

The worst thing about this hazing business is its deliberate brutality. A writer in the New York Tribune quotes a Cornell professor as saying: "I know a fraternity that sends every candidate to a physician before the initiation. Weaknesses of the heart, back, and limbs are searched for, and the initiation is graded accordingly." In other words, the society savages expect and intend to carry their ferocious fun to any point short of killing their victim! Is it any wonder if their ruffianism should sometimes fail to respect the line of life? And when they do not kill, is there any wonder if they have been known to make their victim raving mad, as the same professor states has actually happened? In this latter case, after frightening the poor lad into unconsciousness, they kindly dosed him with whiskey; only, however, "to bring him to life, but not to reason. His mind was utterly gone. A week passed without improvement, and his parents were sent for. The boy was sent to an asylum, and for six months raved constantly. He is now slowly recovering mental vigor." And that sort of thing goes on in American institutions of the higher learning!

The Interior

HAZING.—The fatalities which result from hazing must be expected. The class of boys or young men who will engage in it, by the act demonstrate that they have no respect for the personal rights or feelings of others, that they are cruel, taking pleasure in that which is humiliating or otherwise painful to those they have in their power. Along with these moral defects goes necessarily and always, a spirit of recklessness. It is a part of the character and disposition of such persons. They do not plan to kill, but they do not hesitate to subject their victims to hazard of bodily injury or death. The remedy for this is to hold the institutions into whose care parents commit their sons, responsible. A verdict of $50,000 against an institution in such a case, would put a sudden end to hazing—and it would be perfectly just, under the principles of the common law. This does not imply that boys may not have fun in their society initiations—that they may not indulge in the ludicrous and nonsensical, any harmless thing provocative of laughter. But the pleasure that harmful things gives is the pleasure of savages. It is the gratification of the instinct of the rapacious animal.

A Father's Reverie

BY THE REV. J. HARRIS KNOWLES

O baby mine, my flesh and blood,
My spirit's twin, my better self,
My treasure dear, my chiefest good,
More precious than all earthly pelf.

Teach me to be like thee, a child
With outlook open, ever free.
By present joy from care beguiled,
Simply to be, and glad to be.

To trust that ever near me bides
A father's hand, a mother's love;
That every earthly moment hides
God's love, which cometh from above.

For in that love is father's care,
And mother's love, which never sleeps;
That love which all things earthly share,
And me and mine in safety keeps.

O baby mine, my flesh and blood,
Teach me to be like thee a child;
My treasure dear, my chiefest good,
With spirit pure and undefiled.

Thus shall my life beneath God's smile,
Move on and on toward its end;
O God, my child preserve from guile;
For me and mine, my knees I bend.

A LOVE STORY

BY MRS. NEIL MACLEOD

II.

IT was four years later, and the scene was again the harbor of Colombo. The P. and O. mail steamer bound for England lay at anchor, her coaling accomplished, and a tender had come alongside with the Indian passengers who were transhipped here. They were beginning to swarm on board, bringing mountains of baggage and piles of deck chairs and lounges.

One of the last to come up was a slender young woman in the garb of a nurse. She was evidently recovering from a severe illness, and she walked so slowly and feebly as to appear lame. She seemed, however, to be keenly interested in the sights and sounds of the harbor, for she sat quite still on deck for a long time, watching how the native boys dived and sang and shouted on their tiny rafts, and how queer boats, manned by the strangest figures, came rocking over the water, bringing their loads of pineapples, bananas, and little green limes for the ship.

"It all looks exactly as it did four years ago; it is only I who have changed," she said to herself. Yes, May West was indeed changed, but not so much as she imagined. She showed the signs of long, wasting weeks of fever in her wan, white face, but a subtle, ethereal charm was stamped upon it, which nothing could mar. The large eyes had a softly steadfast gaze, which expressed womanly power—resource, courage, resignation. All sick, suffering, and troubled people would be at home with her at once.

"Here comes somebody who might be Mrs. MacNab herself," she murmured, her lips curving into a smile, "and there—oh!"

She was observing a small craft, rowed by two or three wild-looking dark figures, and containing a party of passengers who had obviously been ashore on just such a shopping expedition as she had herself enjoyed when she was here four years ago. Her attention had been arrested by the figure of a man, who sprang alertly up behind the old lady who might have been Mrs. MacNab. He was still young, and his gray eyes flashed with life and health; but he was bearded, deeply sun-browned, and there were lines about his face that told of hard wear and tear.

The invalid gazed at him with lips apart, as if she had been turned to stone. Surely it was Kenneth Grant himself! The question was decided on the spot, for it happened that their eyes met as he looked up to the ship on rising from his seat.

The start he gave very nearly upset the boat, and tumbled the native lad who was holding it against the ship's side, over into the water. Kenneth paid no heed to this, however, but came springing up the gangway, and in a moment was eagerly making his way to the sick girl on the lounge. She looked dumbly up at him with her pale, pathetic face, and, though she smiled, "the water stood in her eyes."

"Can it possibly be you, Miss West?" he cried, joyfully; "you gave me such a start I nearly went to the bottom."

"You see, I have had rather a bad illness, and it has altered me very much," she said with childlike humility. "I wonder that you recognized me at all."

"Oh, I didn't mean that," he said hastily, as if shocked at such an interpretation of his speech. "I have never forgotten you for a single day. Do you know, I was actually going to India myself? I don't think I shall bother now. But never mind—we can talk about that afterwards; only let us shake hands for auld lang syne!"

They seemed to have dropped into the old, delightfully inevitable friendliness all at once. As their hands met, his clasp strengthened, and they sat together, without withdrawal on either side, for a long moment or two of intense satisfaction. But May was faint with the shock of joyful surprise, and her friend, seeing this, hurried away to find the stewardess, after which he tenderly helped her to rise and go downstairs.

The stewardess was quite struck with his eager excitement.

"It looks like a case of old friends meeting," she observed to a crony; "I've seen such things before. Now, you notice, before she's been at sea a week she'll be another creature."

Kenneth Grant gave up all thoughts of going to India, sent his luggage down below again, and secured himself a fresh berth on the homeward bound ship. Next day, when they were careering over the blue sea, with only a few white birds to remind them that land was near, he and May sat together as of old on deck, and began to speak of what lay nearest the heart of each, and of the interval since they had last met.

"I loved my work," said the girl, "but oh! how little I knew of what life was when we used to talk together! Much of what I saw and went through in India was so strange, so dreadful, so utterly unlike what I could have imagined; and yet it had such queer, humorous turns in it, I could explain it to no one. Then a great deal of what seemed hardest wasn't a bit romantic, and yet, at last, you see, I broke down. I was called away to a fresh fever case just as I finished with another; there seemed to be no time to rest, or eat, or refresh in any way. I had such a long, hot journey, and I remember no more till just before I was sent home to recruit. A bad ending, isn't it?"

"No, not at all! Women like you are lovely souls, the world's best heroines," said her companion, with a sternly repressed quiver in his voice.

May opened her large eyes. "That from you!" she cried, with a happy little laugh.

"Why not?" he answered. "Do you suppose I have learned nothing? I have made the beginnings of a home out there, but very little money, I can assure you, though I worked as I never could have imagined my self doing, for I had quickly determined to follow you to India as soon as I could see my way clear to do so. You remember, I knew your nursing association, so I believed I could find you out. Each year seemed an age, but I was learning to live all the time, and the great event of my life came to me out there."

He hesitated, and May's heart almost stood still. "What was it?" she whispered.

"I found God in the wilderness," he answered her solemnly.

There was deep, sacred silence between them for a little while, then May laid a thin hand gently on his arm. The hand was instantly captured, and held fast between his own. "How very strange," she said, "that we should have been sent back to each other like this, just when we have learned to understand each other better!"

"Yes," assented Grant, with conviction, "and having been sent back to each other, as you say, we must never part any more."

"Do you remember the tourmaline that you wouldn't buy when you were at Colombo?" inquired the lover, after a happy interval.

"Yes, quite well," said May. "I always wondered what you did with that terrible man."

"The simplest thing in the world; I bought the stone. It was pretty, as you said, and I thought it would set well for a ring."

"Or a pin, perhaps," suggested May.

"I preferred the ring. It has been a kind of talisman to me ever since. When I was alone in the bush I would get it out and look at it. It reminded me of you, and of what you had said to me. I always cherished the idea that some day I should be able to show it to you—as I do now."

He drew forth a tiny casket, and opened it.

"How lovely!—but it is a lady's ring," she said, peeping into his hand.

"Of course, what do I want with it? Will you put it on?"

"If you will help me," replied May, blushing; and between them, in time, they accomplished this important task.

May Grant wears the ring still. They never found out whether or no it really was a tourmaline, for Grant did not care, and May would have held it sacrilege to make any inquiry on the subject.—The Quiver.

Cruelty for Fashion's Sake

ANOTHER form of cruelty, which is profitably practised for the sake of fashion, is nothing more or less than the manufacture of real kid gloves, the skins for which come from France, Italy, Spain, Mexico, and South America. In France the cruelty is revolting. Great care is taken in raising the kids, and they are sewed in a cover to keep their skin in a perfect condition of softness. The kid grows, but the cover is not changed. Untold pain is inflicted on the little animals, till they writhe in the torture of the unyielding jacket. France alone makes more than 24,000,000 pairs of kid gloves a year. But, terrible as this is, and abominable as are all of the many revolting cruelties practised to satisfy human vanity and human desires, calling attention to any one of them or to all, does not lessen the shame of the slaughter of birds. Not in any sense as an excuse for the kid-glove cruelty, but rather to show the more forcibly the wrong in the aigrette traffic, it might be pointed out that the kids thus tortured and killed at least never knew freedom as does the heron. Each kid is tortured and dies, and his skin is used and sold. The heron is shot, and a small part of its feathers utilized. A whole family of young ones gasp for food until the breath of life goes out. Added to this, the herons are rapidly becoming exterminated, as are many other birds whose feathers please woman's refined taste. Victor Hugo once said, in a letter to his wife: "I, for my part, think that pity is a law as much as justice, that goodness is a duty as much as probity. Whatever is weak has a claim on the goodness and pity of whatever is strong. The animal is weak because it lacks intelligence. Let us, therefore, be kind and pitiful toward it. Doubtless it was the first duty to civilize man on the side of man. The task is already far advanced, and makes advances every day. But man must be civilized also on the side of nature. Here everything is to be done."—Springfield Republican.

AT Scotch weddings, some years ago, it used to be the custom to batter the hat of the bridegroom as he was leaving the house in which the ceremony took place. On one of those occasions, a newly-married couple, relatives of the bridegroom, determined to carry out the observance of this custom to the letter. The bridegroom heard them discussing their plans, and dispatched a messenger to the carriage, which stood waiting, with his hat, some time previous to his departure. Then, donning the hat of the male relative who had plotted against him, he prepared to go out to the carriage. No sooner had he got to the door than his hat was furiously assaulted and almost destroyed. He walked out of the house amid the laughter of the bystanders, and entered the vehicle. Then, taking the battered hat from his head, he threw it into the hands of its proper owner, exclaiming: "Hey, Mr. Dougall, there's your hat!" and donned his own, amid the cheers of all present. Mr. Dougall was the unhappiest-looking man in Scotland for some time after that.—London Telegraph.

An Unfortunate Inventor

MANY years ago one of Charles Goodyear's friends thus described the inventor: "If you see a man with an india-rubber coat on, india-rubber shoes, and india-rubber cap, and in his pocket an india-rubber purse, with not a cent in it, that is Goodyear." At that time, the idea of being able to turn india-rubber to any practical use—except to erase pencil-marks—was considered an absurd one by all sensible men, and Goodyear's acquaintances regarded him as a monomaniac who was ruining his family and wasting his life. It was in answer to this that the persistent and indomitable inventor dressed himself in the india-rubber cloth which he had made, and which no one believed in, so as to try its durability and advertise it as he went about the streets.

The story of his ten years' struggle with the stubborn material is one of the most interesting in the history of the invention. He was not the first to think of manufacturing india-rubber cloth, for E. M. Chaffee, of Boston, in the winter of 1833, had organized a company and made some extremely good looking rubber coats, caps, shoes, etc. The company, indeed, seemed on the road to tremendous success; but the first warm weather of the following summer, alas! melted the shoes into a gummy mass, while as for the caps and coats, they gave out such an offensive smell that they had to be buried in the ground. The company went out of business promptly, and india-rubber became a byword among the stockholders.

But an obscure inventor, Charles Goodyear, who had bought an india-rubber life-preserver while the new material was in favor, became interested in it, and even its failure did not discourage him. In middle age, without capital, and with feeble health, he devoted himself to experiment with the arduous of a young and strong man. A friend loaned him a little money—Goodyear was fortunate in his friends all through life—and some shoes were made that seemed perfectly satisfactory. Goodyear might have sold them easily enough, but he was too honest to do so before warm weather had tested them. He put them away until summer, when they melted into an offensive pulp!

This was discouraging, to say the least, but Goodyear kept on, nothing daunted. He next tried mixing the gum with every chemical substance that he could lay his hands on. The only one that satisfied him was magnesia. Treating the rubber with this, he made beautiful cloth, but in a month fermentation had set in, and the product was ruined again. Then he removed to New York—first pawning all his effects, and even his wife's jewelry, to pay his debts—and found two friends there, one of whom gave him a workshop rent free, while the other let him have on credit all the chemicals he needed. He now treated the india-rubber with magnesia, and then boiled it in quicklime, and this time the sheets obtained were smooth and firm, and so remained. He won a medal for his discovery—and then, alas! he found that a single drop of acid, even the weakest vinegar or lemon juice, would reduce the india-rubber to gum again.

His next experiment was to use aqua fortis instead of magnesia. His india-rubber now apparently passed all tests successfully, a patent was obtained, and a salesroom opened. Just then the panic of 1837 swept over commercial New York, and he and his partner were absolutely beggared. Goodyear was again reduced to pawning his possessions, but now Mr. Chaffee, of the old company, offered him the use of his abandoned works, and the unlucky inventor gratefully accepted the offer. He next received an order from the government for one hundred and fifty mailbags; but when they were finished it was found that aqua fortis only "cured" the rubber when it was in very thin sheets, and the heavy cloth of the mailbags almost immediately fermented and dissolved. Goodyear was now well-nigh hopeless. His family begged him to abandon his experiments, and his friends refused to help him further. Yet he felt himself so near the solution of the stubborn secret that he could not give up the effort.

Chance, after all, was to make the revelation. One of his workmen had a dream, so he informed his employer, in which he was told to mix powdered sulphur with the gum. He tried it, and showed the result to Goodyear, offering to sell him the idea. Goodyear bought it for a small sum, but found it impossible to mix the sulphur thoroughly with the gum in the mass. While experimenting, he accidentally dropped a piece of sulphur-cured rubber on a red-hot stove, and lo! the secret was discovered at last. A few more experiments proved beyond doubt that the rubber, when mixed with sulphur and exposed to a certain degree of heat, became entirely satisfactory, and would neither melt with heat nor stiffen with cold. The problem of so many struggling years was solved!

But Goodyear's darkest hours were yet to come, for he found that only the most careful, exact, and expensive processes would ensure success, and by this time nobody would believe in his theories, or lend him money. Starvation stared him in the face; yet, at this moment, he resisted temptation as only a noble nature could have done. He received a letter from Paris, offering him a large sum for his aqua fortis process of curing rubber. He answered frankly that he could not sell them a process that might so soon be rendered worthless; for he was experimenting upon a new idea which, when completed, would inevitably supersede this former one.

It was in the winter of this year that Goodyear and his family nearly starved to death, and that he was finally imprisoned for debt. But two capitalists of New York luckily became convinced of the practical working of his last process, and agreed to advance him money for his final experiments, which cost $50,000 the next two years. At last, in 1844, the triumphant inventor produced perfect vulcanized india-rubber, with economy and success, and his struggle was over, though he went on inventing and perfecting, and took out sixty patents afterwards for various improvements.

I wish I could add that he lived to enjoy his successes. But no American inventor (I quote the United States Commissioner of patents as authority) was ever so plundered and trampled upon. Millions were stolen from him in patent rights, especially abroad. He died insolvent, and left his family heavily in debt. His invention has benefited the world and made many fortunes, but all that Charles Goodyear had from it was the hard work, the starvation, the stubborn struggle, and the final victory.

Who shall say, however, that in the winning of that victory the inventor did not gain, after all, that deep satisfaction that comes only from desperate tasks heroically achieved. There must be forlorn hopes, in peace as well as in war, and though a pair of rubber shoes or a waterproof cap do not seem very heroic articles, they are the trophies, in reality, of as hardly contested, agonizing, and gallant a fight as any annals of war can boast.—The Churchman.

For the Old-Fashioned Coffee Was Killing.

"I always drank coffee with the rest of the family, for it seemed as if there was nothing for breakfast if we did not have it on the table.

"I had been troubled some time with my heart, which did not feel right. This trouble grew worse steadily.

"Some times it would beat fast, and at other times very slowly, so that I would hardly be able to do work for an hour or two after breakfast, and if I walked up a hill it gave me a severe pain.

"I had no idea of what the trouble was until a friend suggested that perhaps it might be caused by coffee drinking. I tried leaving off the coffee and began drinking Postum Cereal Food Coffee. The change came quickly. I am now glad to say that I am entirely well of the heart trouble, and attribute the cure to the leaving off coffee and the use of Postum Cereal Food Coffee.

"A number of my friends have abandoned the old-fashioned coffee, and have taken up with Postum, which they are using steadily. There are some people that make Postum very weak and tasteless, but if it is boiled long enough, according to directions, it is a very delicious beverage. We have never used any of the old-fashioned coffee since it was first started in our house. Mrs. L. A. Smith, Blodgett Mills, Cortland Co., N. Y.

IT CAN'T BE DONE.

No One Can Remain Well, No Chronic Disease Can be Cured, Unless the Stomach is First Made Strong and Vigorous.

This is plain, because every organ in the body depends on the stomach for its nourishment. Nerve, bone, sinew, blood, are made from the food which the stomach converts to our use.

How useless to treat disease with this, that, and the other remedy, and neglect the most important of all, the stomach.

The earliest symptoms of indigestion are sour risings, bad taste in the mouth, gas in stomach and bowels, palpitation, all-gone feeling, faintness, headaches, constipation; later comes loss of flesh, consumption, liver and heart troubles, kidney diseases, nervous prostration, all of which are the indirect result of poor nutrition.

Any person suffering from indigestion should make it a practice to take after each meal one of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, allowing it to dissolve in the mouth, and thus mingle with the saliva and enter the stomach in the most natural way. These tablets are highly recommended by Dr. Jennison, because they are composed of the natural digestive acids and fruit essences, which assist the stomach in digesting all wholesome food before it has time to ferment and sour.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold by druggists, full-sized packages at 50 cents. They are also excellent for invalids and children. A book on stomach diseases and thousands of testimonials of genuine cures sent free, by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

CHAPTER III.

"AND don't say anything to let her guess a single thing about it," Bobbie was saying, in the course of many other instructions on the bay shore road, as he and Jerry trudged on through the snow towards Miss Pugsley's. "Just say we've come for the turkey, that's all."

"Tony said she cried over the others. Hope she won't weep any over this one," Jerry remarked mildly. "If you gave her a hint to let her know—"

"If you say a thing, Jerry, any old hint or anything else, I'll give up the whole scheme. She'd tell the girls, and they'd laugh at me."

"They laugh at you, anyway," returned Jerry. "Nell says they all laugh at you just because you're going to race, because you're so little and funny."

"Humph," Bobbie's lips closed tighter, and his round, red face looked fierce under the brim of his heavy fur cap. "Girls think they know more about things than a red chipmunk, and a chipmunk thinks he can give pointers to the president. They won't laugh after its over. It isn't that I want to please the girls, though, Jerry, or to tickle the old lady. It's just because I know those big fellows expect to get it, and have a regular powwow roasting it."

"And you long to save the life of Benjamin," concluded Jerry. "Just so. Bobbie, you're a born philan—I've forgotten the rest of it, but that's what you are."

"Quit calling me names," said Bobbie surlily. "I don't want to get my hands cold snow-balling you. This is the house."

Miss Pugsley was in the kitchen. It was Saturday morning and she had just finished her baking. It was a very modest one. Only a brown delft dish heaped high with rich, brownish red doughnuts, and there were a couple of pumpkin pies, beside the bread, and a mysterious dish filled with something that was carefully covered over.

When the tap came on the back door, she gave a little start, for callers along the bay shore road in winter time were few and far between, but when she saw the two faces, she smiled faintly, and invited their owners to step inside.

"Yes'm," Bobbie said, clearing his throat and seating himself on the edge of the freshly scoured chair, his feet drawn up carefully on the rounds to keep them off the clean floor. "Yes'm, we've come after the turkey."

"Oh, yes, Benjamin," Miss Pugsley answered, moistening her thin lips, and the hand that was laid on the back of the old red rocking chair trembled slightly. "He is a very plump, good turkey," she added, and Bobbie nodded solemnly.

"How do you think you'll carry him," she asked, after an uncomfortable silence, during which the boys stared hard at the doughnuts and pies.

"Tie his feet together and drop him in a bag," Jerry said quickly. "We brought the bag."

"Oh, dear me, no," and Miss Pugsley looked genuinely distressed over such a mode of traveling for her pet. "I—I got out an old shawl that I don't need, and I thought you could wrap it around him, and carry him in your arms, boys, if you don't mind."

"If we only had a baby carriage," Jerry began, without the ghost of a smile on his face; but Bobbie gave him a look that silenced him.

"Yes'm, we'll carry him anyway," he said politely, "and we'll be very careful. He dove into his trousers pocket and produced two dollars.

"Land, child, I don't want as much as that," Miss Pugsley exclaimed, her face flushing slightly as Bobbie laid them on the red and black table cloth, with an air of triumph. "He don't weigh more than twelve or fourteen pounds, and turkeys are down to ten cents in town."

"Well, that's what the boys gave me to pay for him, and they said no change," Bobbie answered with dignity.

Miss Pugsley looked from the money to the two boyish faces, and then back to the money, and from that, somehow, her gaze wandered to the doughnuts, and her face brightened.

"I wonder if you aren't hungry after the long walk," she said. "Tony always is, I know, and he does like my doughnuts so. Help yourselves, boys, while I go out to the coop and get Benjamin."

She took a long, gray shawl from a peg and put it over her head, then paused a moment at the door to look back at the boys as they sat munching the doughnuts. Bobbie caught the look, and with an intuition born of long experience, he said earnestly:

"We won't get crumbs on the floor, honest and true."

After a time, time enough to eat three apiece, she returned with the shawl wrapped about a heavy, bulky object.

"There he is," she said, setting the bundle down with a little gasp of relief. "Land, but he's heavy. Poor, dear Benjamin."

Benjamin Franklin was certainly a well-trained, self-contained turkey, or he would never have behaved so gentlemanly under such trying conditions. He suffered himself to be petted and smoothed by his mistress, and then bundled up again and tucked under Bobbie's arm, without even the mildest kind of a resentful gobble.

Miss Pugsley watched them from the kitchen door, and her last words were:

"Don't squeeze him too tight, and don't smother him in the shawl."

"Are you going to carry him all the way like that," asked Jerry deliberately.

"Yes, sir, all the way," Bobbie replied resolutely. "You may carry the bag."

Even by the time they had reached the long bridge, Benjamin had grown very heavy, but still Bobbie trudged on, pausing now and then to get his breath and arrange the shawl a little more comfortably about the turkey. As a matter of precaution, they tied his legs together, but aside from that indignity, Miss Pugsley herself could not have been more careful of her pet's welfare than the two boys.

The race was to be a very important affair. There were a few of the Excelsior boys in it, but nearly all were from sixteen to nineteen, and very comical little Bobbie Cherritt looked beside them when they all lined up before the starting line Saturday afternoon. Mr. Hardy was there—in fact, it was he and Dr. Sanford who had originated the idea of a race by the best skaters for a purse of five dollars and Miss Pugsley's prize turkey.

Over in Dave Gray's ice boat sat Virginia, Madge, Mollie, and Dave. Tony and Art were to follow the race on skates, and all the Excelsior boys stood around Bobbie just before the start.

"You haven't a ghost of a chance, Bobbie," Mollie said again and again, looking severely down at the plump, comfortable figure in the dark blue reefer and fur cap. "Look at Howard Irving, nearly six feet high. Where do you suppose you'll be when he starts?"

"Mary Gray, don't you know that a graceful, well-rigged yacht will fly ahead of a coal barge?" inquired Bobbie mildly, circling around the ice-boat on his skates. "If you don't keep still you cannot have the wing of my turkey."

"I guess before the race is over you'll wish you had both wings," Mollie retorted scornfully, "tacked right on your shoulders."

Bobbie smiled and waved his hand in a friendly, forgiving manner, and sped off to join the others.

"He's a good little skater," Dave said, thoughtfully. "But the other boys, the ones who don't belong to the club, don't like his being with them. Howard asked him if he would like to sit on his shoulder, and Bobbie said 'No, thanks, he wanted to see the turkey at nearer range than that,' and now Howard says he won't let him through the line once they're started."

"Papa'll see that he has fair play," Virginia told Mollie and Madge, and when the boys stood in line waiting for Dr. Sanford to give the signal, somehow every one was looking at the little figure next to Howard Irving, a little figure that barely came to his waist.

Bobbie pulled his cap further over his eyes, with a half defiant gesture, and grinned over his shoulder at Mollie, when the white handkerchief on the end of the doctor's cane fluttered to the ground, and a dozen or more pairs of skates shot forward over the glittering ice.

Finance and Commerce

BANK clearings and railway earnings continue in excess of the splendid record of last year. Of course the increase, by comparison, is lessening, but still it is an increase, and all trade statistics reveal a highly prosperous condition of business. In iron, all predictions of lower prices heretofore made, have failed of realization. There is every prospect of a large demand throughout the early part of the new year at least, and prices are still strong and tending upward. Steel bars have advanced to \$2.75, and are scarce at that. The weekly capacity of furnaces in blast Nov. 1st, is 288 tons against 278 tons Oct. 1st. Cotton has lost about 50 points from the top. The reaction has been purely speculative, and due to realizing by holders. The government report estimates the crop at $9\frac{1}{2}$ million bales. The demand from mills is good.

Wheat has continued to decline. Stocks in speculators' hands are excessive. In this country they amount to about 75 million bushels, and the world's visible supply is about 200 million bushels. Supplies are abundant everywhere. Argentine has exported about 55 million bushels from the last crop, and still has about 6 million bushels in port stocks. Their growing crop to be harvested in December promises fully as large as the last one. There is every probability that the visible stocks of wheat will continue to increase for weeks to come.

Interest is still centred in the financial situation in Wall street. So far as the Transvaal war is concerned and its effect upon the finances of the world the past week has had no disturbing influence. English confidence in their ultimate success seems unbounded, and London has been a very large buyer of American securities the past week. Even Kaffir mining stocks have had sharp advances. In Wall street money continues firm. Time loans are still 6 per cent., and call loans have ranged from 4 to 15 per cent., with the average probably as high as 8 per cent. The last bank statement was again unfavorable, showing a further small loss in legal reserve. A recent statement shows that net shipments of money and currency out of New York in September and October were 42 million dollars against a net gain of about 6 millions last year. A report has been circulated that the government was about to redeem 50 million of bonds, and thus put into circulation that amount now lying idle in the treasury. The rumor seems to be without foundation. The treasury now holds 289 million dollars. On its recent offer to prepay interest amounting to 20 million dollars, but 2 million has been accepted.

The stock market is, however, a wonder. The investing public doesn't frighten a bit. Through all the critical conditions the market has passed, the last two months' liquidation has at no time become general, and on the whole, prices have lost but little. Buying by London has materially helped the market, and then the result of the recent elections has been generally satisfactory to the monied interests, and tended to re-inspire confidence in the hope that Congress will take steps to fix permanently the gold standard of the country. A sharp selling of foreign exchange and lower rates has also suggested the probability of further importations of gold. It is thought by many, however, that European banks will look with disfavor on any further losses of gold at this time, and will prevent it by an increase in the discount rates.

Canadian Exports

CANADA is becoming, to a certain extent, a competitor of the United States as an exporter. While this relates to comparatively few articles, it affects industries which have brought into the United States, from abroad, many million dollars during the past few years. A recently published statement by the Dominion statistician, the Hon. George Johnson, has just reached the Treasury Bureau of Statistics. It shows that the exports of flour, butter, cheese, and wood, since confederation—that is, from June 30, 1868, to June 30, 1898—amount to 894 million dollars. While manufactures of wood form of course the largest item in this enormous sum, cheese, in which Canada becomes a direct competitor of the United States, amounts to the surprisingly large total of $218,241,262; butter, to $58,471,604, and flour to $61,340,182.

Commenting upon this growth in the exportation of these articles in which Canada competes with the United States, Statistician Johnson says: "The development of the cheese export trade is marvelous. We sent a little over $500,000 worth of cheese to Great Britain in 1868, and in 1898 we sent $17,522,681 worth, thus far surpassing the exports of the United States, which last year, to the mother country, were only $3,267,607. Of the total exports of Canadian manufactures in 1868, cheese only formed 3 per cent. in value, while in 1898 it formed over 31 per cent. of the total exports of manufactures. The exports of manufactures of wood, as is quite natural, occupy the highest place, but they have not increased relatively to the others as rapidly. In 1868 the exports of manufactures having wood as the raw material were 61.7 per cent. of the whole, while in 1898 they were 40.3 per cent. During the 30 years Great Britain has taken of our manufactures of wood over $258,000,000 worth, while the United States has taken $242,000,000 worth, leaving Great Britain the better customer by $16,000,000.

"We have exported since confederation; i. e., from June 30, 1868, to June 30, 1898—thirty one years—of home products, to the value of $2,464,000,000; or to be exact, $2,464,277,239. These products have been of the farm, the mine, the fisheries, the forest, the workshop, and the factory.

"To whom have we sent these products? Our best customer during these thirty-one years has been the mother country. She has taken more than one half of the whole, or $1,260,565,563. Our next best customer has been the United States, which country has taken over $955,000,000, or $805,500,000 less than the United Kingdom. The British West Indies come next with purchases from us, amounting to $9,945,541. Newfoundland has taken $48,807,362; France, $12,190,654; Germany, $9,089,194, and all other countries, $118,640,647. Great Britain began in 1868 by taking about $18,000,000 of our products. By 1872 she had got beyond $25,000,000; by 1882, nearly $40,000,000; by 1892, beyond $54,000,000, after which year her takings increased steadily till, in 1898, they were over $93,000,000.

Suggestions for Christmas Gifts

ONE of the prettiest contrivances, is a small, square box, just large enough to hold two spools of the narrow baby ribbon that is so indispensable nowadays. The box should be neatly covered with sage green linen, and should have a narrow slit in each end, the width of the blade of a lady's penknife. Through these slits the ribbon may be drawn without the trouble of opening the box. One spool should be covered with pale blue satin ribbon, and the other with a delicate shade of pink. A tiny pair of scissors should be slipped into a small sheath fastened to the lid of the box, and a bright bodkin, held in place by a few stitches, button-holed in green embroidery silk, beside the scissors, will render this attractive little box complete.

A SET of plate-shields to lay between the dishes in the china closet. They save fine china a deal of scratching, besides keeping out the dust. Take Canton flannel and cut it into circles of sizes to suit the plates. As it comes quite wide, a half-yard will be ample for a dinner set size of four or six, while a quarter of a yard will be right for the smaller size. One can have quite a variety of shades, for Canton flannel comes in pink, blue, red, gray and yellow. The delicate colors are daintier, but the darker are more serviceable. It is easier to cut a good round from a paper pattern, for the material being thick, it is hard to do it without and get the form exact. If pressed for time, simply bind these shields with cotton tape, the color of the flannel, and let the machine serve instead of hand sewing, but if you wish to make them really pretty, buttonhole the edges with worsted. A dozen large and an equal number of small, will prove a blessing to the housekeeper who takes pride in handsome china.

A SET of doll's furniture may be made from wooden boxes, and draped with an inexpensive silkoline. For the bed take one of the shallow boxes in which condensed milk is packed. Nail on strips to form a frame for the top of the canopy; cover these sticks and the box with silkoline, adding ruffles of the same. The sofa is made of a prune box. Remove the lid and one side. Use the side for the seat, sawing off enough to let the seat slip in easily. Pad the inside of the box. The chair is made of the same sized box as the sofa; one end is taken off for the seat. Remove the lid and end, cut the sides slightly curved, and make like the sofa. The dressing table needs a cube-shaped box. Remove the lid, and it will serve for shelves for the doll's clothes if little cleats are tacked inside. Put a heavy piece of wood in the lower part of the box, to prevent top heaviness. The table is made from a box similar to the bed. Nail an inch stick on each corner, and cover box and sticks with the silkoline.

THE CHURCHMAN

THE WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED DEPARTMENT.—In illustrations and typography the publishers have made every effort to have THE CHURCHMAN stand foremost, not only among religious journals but also among other illustrated magazines and weeklies in Europe or America. Nearly a thousand pictures, illustrating art, ancient and modern architecture, and subjects of general interest are given each year, besides many portraits of men prominent in the life of the Church.

THE CATHEDRALS OF SPAIN will be the subject during the coming year of a beautifully illustrated series of articles. The author has just finished an extensive tour for THE CHURCHMAN through France and Spain, where he has gathered together much interesting matter and many beautiful pictures for these sketches and for the completion of his series on the French Cathedrals, now appearing. Burgos, Saragossa, Valencia, Cadiz, Tarragona, and all the others, with their unique architecture and interesting history, will be taken up in succession and attractively presented.

CHURCH BUILDING, by Ralph Adams Cram, of Boston, is a series of articles in which it is proposed, by original sketches as well as by historic examples of both good and bad architecture, to point the way to the development of a distinctive American Church architecture.

FRENCH CHAPELS, by the Hon. Gherardi Davis.

DENMARK; two illustrated articles by Jacob A. Riis, who writes his impressions of a recent visit after an absence of thirty years.

PORTRAITS OF CHURCHMEN AND CHURCHWOMEN who for the moment are before the public eye, with all notable new churches and church buildings, will be promptly issued.

In short, it is intended that this department shall be an entertaining and instructive panorama not only of the life of the Church but also of all general subjects which may properly appear in a religious weekly.

THE DEPARTMENT OF MUSIC during the season will be equally noteworthy in its treatment of Church Music. Arrangements have been made for articles which are designed to be serviceable to Organists and Choir-masters in a very practical way. Mr. J. E. Borland, the editor of Musical News, London, will contribute on the important subject of "Rhythm in Church Music." Mr. Hugh Syers, of Musical Opinion, London, will write a series of papers, and Mr. G. Edward Stubbs, Professor of Ecclesiastical Music in the General Theological Seminary of New York, will present an article on "The Choral Service in Relation to the Ancient Temple Service." Furthermore, the editor has in contemplation articles on Organ Playing, Choir Formation, Training, and Management.

Notes of the World's Progress

Thanksgiving Hymn

BY THE REV. JOHN POWER

Infinite Truth and Might! whose love
Unmeasured ceaseless bounties prove,
Our Guide and Refuge, Guard and Stay,
Our Light by night, our Shade by day—
Before Thine altar, Lord Most High,
Thy Name we bless and magnify.

Because our fainting souls have fed
On heavenly wine and living bread;
Because our ears Thy Voice have heard,
And in our life Thy Life hath stirred—
Before Thine altar, Lord Most High,
Thy Name we bless and magnify.

For all Thy goodness has supplied,
For all Thy wisdom has denied,
For all Thy love away has ta'en
Of what we counted joy or gain—
Before Thine altar, Lord Most High,
Thy Name we bless and magnify.

If we have said a kindly word,
If we a kindly word have heard,
If we have human woe relieved,
Or human comfort have received—
It was Thy doing, Lord Most High,
Thy Name we bless and magnify.

For private blessing, public good,
For right upheld and wrong withstood,
For strength with present ill to cope,
And for our everlasting hope—
Before Thine altar, Lord Most High,
Thy Name we bless and magnify.

THE STATE DEPARTMENT HAS received assurance that our commercial relations with China will not be disturbed, regardless of whatever spheres of influence may be established. This assurance is the result of negotiations opened some time since with representatives of England, Germany, Russia, and France. Expressions from England are most cordial, as might be expected, and show the determination of that nation to adhere to its well known "open door" policy in the East, by conferring upon Americans the same trading privileges as are accorded British subjects. Germany announces a willingness to follow the lead of England, and Russia states that the United States enjoys, and will continue to enjoy, the fullest advantages at Russo-Chinese ports which have ever existed between nations. The latter country takes occasion to express in strongest terms a friendship for the United States. Although no declaration has yet been received from France, it is likely to be of the same tenor.

ADDED DEMONSTRATIONS OF THE bond of friendship between the English-speaking peoples are being made. Recently Mr. B. N. Baker, of Baltimore, who during the Spanish war tendered the United States government the use of the "Missouri" as a hospital ship, made a tender of the steamship "Maine" to the British government, which the latter has thankfully accepted. American women in London at once undertook to raise funds for equipping the "Maine" for hospital uses, and have already realized approximately $100,000. Many American concerns have contributed stores for the ship, and about forty American young women, all graduates of training schools, have volunteered their services. The British Red Cross society will provide two ships, and English people are showing great enthusiasm in raising money for the sustenance of families whose mainstays are doing duty in South Africa.

—x—

AN OPTIMISTIC VIEW OF THE Philippine situation is taken by Adjutant General Corbin, who predicts that the trouble will be over by Jan. 1st, perhaps sooner, and by that time the entire archipelago will be under peaceful submission to government by the United States. This is a hope which will be universally shared, although it must be taken into consideration that there is considerable distance between an expressed hope and its realization. The fact that the rainy season in the Islands is practically at an end, gives encouragement to the belief that with obstacles to active operations removed, a vigorous campaign will be conducted, and opposition to the authority of the United States speedily removed. The plan at present, to surround the insurgents and thereby force a surrender, is taking definite shape, and may be the closing act of hostilities.

—x—

THE NAVY DEPARTMENT HAS COMPLETED surveys and explorations which demonstrate the practicability of a cable between the United States and the Philippine Islands, thus filling a gap in an electrical system whereby messages could be sent entirely around the globe. The most practical route is via the Hawaiian and Midway Islands, and Guam, a distance of 5,350 miles. The work of the survey revealed several interesting facts, one being the existence of a submarine mountain near the Midway Islands, rising nearly two-and-one-half miles from the floor of the ocean. A great submarine abyss was also discovered, its depth being nearly six miles. It is probable that Congress will take preliminary steps toward laying this necessary cable.

IN HIS OFFICIAL REPORT ON THE Holland submarine boat, Captain John Howe, U. S. N., grows enthusiastic over the subject, elaborates on the value of the invention to the government, and the importance of immediate provision for the construction of several vessels of the type. During the official tests the Holland boat worked satisfactorily to all concerned, diving and reappearing at will, and proceeding under water toward a movable object at a good rate of speed. Torpedoes were discharged by the submarine craft with accuracy, thus demonstrating its value as an engine of destruction in operations against a hostile fleet. Captain Lowe urges the importance of a fleet of submarines as coast and harbor defenders, and holds that possession of such powerful engines of destruction would go a long way towards insuring peace. The French government has conducted experiments with a similar type of vessel, and now has several in course of construction.

—x—

ANTON POLLAK and JOSEF VIRAG, two Hungarian inventors, are out with an invention in telegraphy which, if successfully applied, will revolutionize present methods. By their system it is claimed from six hundred to one thousand words per minute can be sent over a single wire. Tests of the system in Europe have, it is claimed, been successfully made, and the two gentlemen are now in this country for the purpose of giving further demonstrations. In the sending, the Morse code is used, the messages being perforated on a strip of paper, which is run through the machine with great rapidity, and faithfully reproduced at the receiving end. If the system can be applied as easily as the inventors believe, it would be of great commercial value, particularly in the nature of relieving congested wires.

—x—

AT EVERY OBSERVATORY IN THE country last week, astronomers were prepared to make a study of the expected meteoric shower, which, however, failed to arrive on schedule time. A few scattering shooting stars were observed, but no more than might be seen in any similar period. Astronomers admit a possible error in their calculations, and to the lay mind this explanation will prove quite acceptable, as it is somewhat incomprehensible how an event of this nature could be predicted with unfailing accuracy. Had weather conditions been favorable, and the Leonides appeared as expected, records would have been secured by great observatories which would have been of great value astronomically.

—x—

STUDENTS OF DOMESTIC SCIENCE have arrived at what may at least be a partial solution of the servant problem. The plan is to be tested in New York city, and if found to operate successfully, will be at once inaugurated in other great cities. An association will maintain a school for the instruction of young women in different branches of domestic science, and each member, upon payment of a fee of $5, may secure the services of an accomplished worker for twenty cents per hour. This it is believed will be of great benefit to maids, and mistresses who may not require the entire time of a maid.

The News of the Church

Consecration of a Bishop-Coadjutor for West Virginia

On Friday, Nov. 10th, the Rev. W. L. Gravatt, rector of Zion church, Charlestown, West Va., was consecrated Bishop in that church. Bishop Gibson, coadjutor of Virginia, and Burton, of Lexington, were the presentors, the latter preaching the sermon. At the close the Bishop-elect, attended by the Rev. R. D. Roller, D.D., and the Rev. J. J. Gravatt, a brother, was presented for consecration to the acting presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. F. M. Whittle, of Virginia, assisted by Bishop Peterkin, of West Virginia, and Bishop Satterlee, of Washington. There were present about 50 clergymen from different parts of the country. The church had been recently remodeled and handsomely frescoed in the interior, and was used on this occasion for the first time since the improvements were made.

Bishop Gravatt was born in Port Royal, Va., and received his education at the Virginia Military College, Blackstone, and at the Theological Seminary of Virginia, from which he was graduated in 1884. Immediately after ordination he became assistant minister of St. Paul's church, Richmond, and three years later, rector of St. Peter's church, Norfolk, where he remained six years. In 1893 he accepted a call to the rectorship of Zion church, Charlestown, where he was engaged until elected to the episcopate by the diocesan convention which met July 26th, 1899. He is exceedingly popular in his parish, and for the present his home will continue in Charlestown.

In the evening the vestry of the parish gave a reception in the parish building to Bishop Gravatt, the visiting clergy, and the congregation of Zion church, the Bishop being made the recipient of the warmest congratulations.

The Board of Missions

The Board of Managers met at the Church Missions House Nov. 14th, the Bishop of Albany (vice-president), in the chair. There were present six bishops, 12 presbyters, and 11 laymen. Announcement was made of the death, at his home in Portland, on the 31st ultimo, of the Rt. Rev. Dr. Henry Adams Neely, Bishop of Maine, and the chairman bade the Board to prayer.

On behalf of the Committee on Trust Funds, Dean Hoffman reported that all the securities held by them had, in accordance with recent action of the Board of Managers, been transferred to the custody of the Union Trust Company.

The Rev. Dr. John S. Lindsay tendered his resignation of membership in the Board of Managers, because of his inability to attend the meetings with reasonable regularity. It was accepted with an expression of sincere regret.

The New Secretaries

The special committee appointed to notify the general secretary-elect, reported his acceptance, and submitted a letter from the Rev. Dr. Lloyd, in which he said: "Believing this call of the Church to be the command of Him who is the Head of the Church, I have determined to give myself to this service, relying on Him who has called, to give me the right mind to perform it." The vice-president caused to be read a letter from Mr. John W. Wood, accepting his election to be corresponding secretary, and saying: "In entering upon this new work I hope I am acting in accordance with God's plans and purposes. I can make no promise save that I shall try at all times to do my best. In this endeavor I am sure that I may rely upon the sympathy and aid of the members of the Board." Both of these gentlemen will enter upon duty early in December.

Colored Candidates for Holy Orders

A communication was received from the conference of Churchworkers among the Colored People, which was held in New York in October, protesting against lowering the standard of education of colored candidates for Holy Orders, and noting with satisfaction the stand taken by the Board of Managers upon the subject some months ago, with reference to King Hall, Washington.

Election of Bishop of Kyoto

Official notice was received from the House of Bishops, of the selection of the Rev. Sidney Catlin Partridge, of Wuchang, China, to be Bishop of the missionary district of Kyoto. The Bishop of Albany stated, that as chairman of the House of Bishops, he had received a reply by cable from Mr. Partridge, to the intent that if his election should be confirmed by the Standing Committees and the individual bishops, he would accept the office.

News from Alaska

Letters from Bishop Rowe, the Rev. Messrs. Chapman and Driggs, Dr. Watt and Mr. Selden, conveyed news from the whole field. Under date of Sept. 29th, Mr. Chapman, of Anvik, says: "I am glad to be able to write of our welfare here, and that it seems to me that we are in a better position than last year to do a useful winter's work of teaching. * * * There is much to cheer us in the attitude of several of the traders in charge of stations along the river, toward Christianity, and I rejoice to think that the mission is having an undoubted influence upon the new civilization of this land." Dr. Driggs, of Point Hope, writes that his Sunday services have been well attended, and the good results of the mission's work have become apparent this spring, in the gradual breaking down of tribal superstitions. He has a daily average attendance in his school of 41. Dr. Watt reports that he is building a church at Circle City to cost $1,100, and asks for about $1,200 to meet the running expenses of the hospital and mission for 1899.

Domestic Missionary Work

The Bishop of North Dakota sent in a communication, showing an emergency existing in his field, which, if promptly met, would doubtless result in large increase to the Church in the near future. The Board was enabled to meet this by the appropriation from a special deposit in its hands of the sum of $2,700, of which $1,100 shall be payable within the present fiscal year, $900 during the next, and $700 during the third, the appropriation to terminate on Sept. 1, 1902. An appropriation was made of $2,500 from a fund at the discretion of the Board, to assist three Swedish parishes in Minnesota to discharge their indebtedness, under the direction of the general missionary to the Swedes, and a committee of the Board of Managers; and by further resolution the Rev. J. G. Hammerskold, general missionary, was authorized to solicit special contributions for the same purpose; the Board being assured that the parishes concerned will thereafter be self-supporting. Under the Woman's Auxiliary United Offering for 1898, a tentative appointment was made for the hospital at South McAlester, Indian Territory.

Increased Responsibilities

The vice president, as chairman of the General Convention Commission on Increased Responsibilities, submitted a report, and the following resolutions:

Resolved, That a special committee of the Board be appointed to make known the opportunities and necessities for work which shall not only care for our own citizens, civilians and soldiers, in this new possession, and in these new fields of responsibility, but shall also plant the Church in these islands with such strength and attractiveness, as to show to the natives themselves the better way of the Church, which, in the language of one of them, is "Catholic, and not Roman."

Resolved, That the appeal of the committee shall ask for instant and generous gifts, first, towards church buildings in Cuba, Puerto Rico and Manila; secondly, for an increased clerical staff in the two first named places, and for the re-enforcement of the clergy who are now working in Manila; thirdly, for the opening of schools in the three places, and the sending out of Christian women to work in them as teachers, and also to aid in the care of the sick; and fourthly, for a large supply of Spanish Prayer Books.

Resolved, That the Presiding Bishop be asked to appoint the Bishop of Shanghai to take the work in Manila under his oversight; that the Bishop of Chicago be asked to make a visitation to Puerto Rico this winter; and that the Bishop of Pennsylvania, who is to make a visitation to Cuba, be asked to visit Puerto Rico as well, if the Bishop of Chicago is unable to go, the expense of the visiting bishops, in all cases, to be pledged and paid to them by the Board.

The recommendations of the Commission were adopted as resolutions of the Board, and the Chair named as the committee contemplated by them: The Bishops of Pennsylvania and Washington, and the Coadjutor-Bishop of Rhode Island; the Rev. Drs. Greer, Brown, and Antistice; Messrs. J. Nicholas Brown, James J. Goodwin, and Burton Mansfield. On motion the Commission were requested to take into consideration the question of work in the Island of Guam, where from information at hand it was understood there is an "open door."

The Old Testament in Wenli

Bishop Schereschewsky wrote that the American Bible Society's agent in Shanghai had stated to him that the society would like to print at its own expense his Wenli version of the Old Testament, which he would be pleased to have it do with the approval of our Board; whereupon a resolution was adopted, expressing the Board's consent.

The Work in Japan

Very serious consideration was given for the second time to the question of retaining the licenses from the government for two of our schools in Japan, under the circumstances of the new regulation of the educational department of that empire, and much testimony was heard on both sides of the question. It was finally determined by the Board to defer its decision, awaiting additional information from Japan, and a committee were instructed to correspond further upon the subject with the Bishop of Tokyo. The large missionary party who were dismissed from the Church Missions House at the farewell service of September 1st, had safely arrived in Japan, and doubtless those going to China have also reached their destination. Dr. Rudolf B. Teusler, of Richmond, Va., was appointed a missionary physician to Tokyo. He will have charge of a dispensary work in connection with three of the city churches. The resignation of the Rev. Dr. John Davis who has been a professor in Trinity Divinity and Catechetical School, Tokyo, was accepted. His place will be filled by the Rev. George Wallace who had taken passage from San Francisco, Nov. 17th.

West African Mission

The Bishop of Cape Palmas, in reporting a recent visitation of the lower section of his jurisdiction, speaks of 44 Confirmations, and the laying of the corner-stone of St. Paul's church, Rocktown. He also especially mentions the prosperous condition of the work, including that of the coffee farm, in connection with the Hoffman Institute, and the High School in Epiphany Hall, Cuttington. Four of the students have been admitted as postulants for Holy Orders. He adds: "For means for the completion of Epiphany Hall, the erection of a Church edifice, and the adding of a technical department, I must look abroad, and such means are very much needed." To protect the church at Cape Mount from "the rains," he was obliged to borrow $683 before he could safely stop the work. The Bishop was to have an estimate made of the total amount required, as soon as the dry season sets in. The funds raised before her death by Mrs. Maria Louise Irving for the building, are exhausted, and the Bishop appeals for money to complete the edifice, which is to be used for the missionaries at the station, the 180 children gathered there under instruction, and for those who are reached from the Liberian village and native settlements in the neighborhood. Prof. P. O. Gray, LL. B., a native of North Carolina, educated at Lincoln University and the Lake Forest University Law School, in Chicago, has been appointed vice-principal of the schools in Epiphany Hall. It was particularly stated to the Board that two of the Sunday schools in Liberia had each contributed $50 toward the last Lenten offering.

Opportunity for a Great Work

EDITOR OF THE LIVING CHURCH:—I ask of you space for the appended letter because it tells a story which the Church should know, and for the few words which I wish to add.

The plan to which Mr. McGee alludes is the building of a church, and, if possible, the establishment of an orphanage, in Havana. One of these, if not both, is absolutely necessary to success. An upper room, or a cheap chapel in the suburbs, will not appeal to these people. To build a church will cost—Havana is a large city, and property is normally expensive—$50,000. To establish an orphanage, if we are to own the property, will cost for the same reason, say, $40,000. And that money must be spent in this work if we are to accomplish our purpose, under God, and to give these people "the truth as this Church hath received the same."

One denomination has already spent in their Havana work a larger amount, and the others have plans in process of execution for like large investment. If we wait, we had well nigh as well discontinue our efforts in Havana; and then we lose for the second time a splendid opportunity to do what is manifestly God's will in Cuba. Occupancy means everything now. We cannot change the conditions, we can only shape our ends with them. Cuba is ready for this Church of ours, and this is the only way in which we can give it to them. The appeal from there is simply pitiful—strong in its pitifulness. I, therefore, implore the people of this Church, not collectively, but individually, to give us this needed assistance; and if they will, I believe without extravagance we may forecast the most remarkable and rapid work we have ever had in the missionary field. A whole people wait, through the providence of God, our action. And all the plea and all the situation is pathetic and urgent. Two hundred and fifty thousand orphans are ready for Christian care. In God's name, I ask that the Christian folk of God's Holy Church send us these means. Rome now adds to the difficulties by desperately trying to hinder us.

W. DUDLEY POWERS,
General Secretary,
American Church Missionary Society.

LETTER OF THE REV. W. H. MCGEE

MY DEAR DR. POWERS:—The Missionary Council is now a thing of the past, and I am wondering what effect it will have upon the work in Cuba. I have been trying not to build my "castle" in too massive style, in the light of past experience. But I do hope and pray that sufficient missionary enthusiasm was aroused to compel Churchmen to an honest investigation of the situation, for I am sure that must mean the consummation of the plans laid before you in the spring. Already too much valuable time has been lost. Rome has had opportunity to recover from the stupor that followed the defeat of the cause that had her prayers. She is active, aggressive, unscrupulous. With ignorance (not wholly innocent) to give force to the charge, she tells the people that the "Protestants" are Jews, destitute of belief in God, in His Incarnate Son, in anything that concerns that "Faith once for all delivered." And she uses, and will use more and more, the political discontent of the hour to work havoc to the religious efforts these "foreigners" are undertaking. And strange as it may appear, there are many who will listen to her voice; for time is blotting out from superficial minds the dark record of her history in this island. The impetus that prompt action would have given is more or less lost to us; and the time necessary to carry out our plan will prove no trifling disadvantage. In very truth, he gives twice who quickly gives to Cuba. Two points must be borne in mind in connection with these gifts. The first body to adequately present its claims to the Cuban people will fall heir to the land. And the work, as regards Havana, cannot be carried out in any cheap way—literally so as regards current expenses, and doubly true as regards any real accomplishment. Even among those who should know better, the people are densely ignorant of "Protestantism." The Y. M. C. A. is as much a "Church" to them as any that claims the title. There has been absolutely no proper presentation of any Church except that of Rome. Men not of our Communion see the need and the opportunity. I know the crying need on every hand. God forbid that I should divert one penny from its proper channel. It is simply a question of that wisdom which was commended to the twelve. Havana is the key to Cuba. The Church that secures allegiance here—that can prove its Churchly claims to the physical eye—will win the people everywhere, and be the "corner stone" of the future autonomous body, or of the diocese in the coming Church of America. No matter what claim others justly make, Cuba, by the very fact of the relations in which we stand to her, can demand the fulfillment of our promise to the world—release from a spiritual bondage that was infinitely more degrading than her political slavery. Shall the Church refuse what the State had granted? Shall we nurse a pauper mission into life? Or shall we tutor a self-supporting congregation into the recognition of its duties and its privileges in leading to the light its own "kinsmen after the flesh?" That is the question in a nutshell. And in solving it the "words of the wise" have a message for us. "There is that scattereth, and increaseth yet more; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth only to want." May neither ignorance nor blindness prevail to hinder the accomplishment of this pressing duty.

Yours very sincerely,

W. H. MCGEE.

THE REV. W. DUDLEY POWERS, D. D.
New York City, N. Y.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Board of Missions

A MISSIONARY week (the annual Bishop's meeting), under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary, diocese of New York, will be held in the church of the Heavenly Rest, 5th av. and 45th st., New York City, the first week in Advent, Dec. 4-9. There will be a Quiet Day, addresses on missions, and a missionary exhibit.

Miss Julia C. Emery, general secretary, has made a successful tour through Arkansas—starting from Fayetteville on Saturday, the 28th ult., accompanied by Bishop Brown and Mrs. J. B. Pillow, of Helena, the diocesan president of the auxiliary. Their addresses have aroused much interest and enthusiasm in woman's work.

Long Island Branch

The annual meeting was held in St. Ann's church, Brooklyn, on the morning of Nov. 9th. All the churches in Brooklyn, and many others, were represented. At 10:30 the Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion. The address of the morning was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Van De Water who spoke of the discouragements and reason for failure in missionary work. Under the head of discouragements, Dr. Van De Water spoke of the apathy of the members of the churches, which he thought would soon be a thing of the past. For the encouragements, the speaker called attention to the success in the field, its extension through acquiring the Philippines, the secular advantages opening up, and the general agreement as to how the work was to be carried on. The cause of failure in the past was because the Church had emphasized duty. The cure for all troubles would be to emphasize privilege. The report of Mrs. J. Elliott Langstaff, corresponding secretary, was read by Dr. R. Marshall Harrison. The report was the 27th annual one. It reviewed the work in the various fields aided by the Long Island Auxiliary—missions in Brooklyn, Bishop Gray's work in Southern Florida, Bishop Brooke's, in Oklahoma and Indian Territory; the Fannie Paddock Memorial Hospital, Miss Carter's work, and the foreign field, as well as that among the Indians and negroes. The total amount received and expended during the year was $13,842.82. Luncheon was served at one o'clock. The afternoon programme consisted of missionary addresses by the Bishop of Delaware, on "Progress of missions during the century"; the Bishop of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, on "Domestic missions"; the Rev. J. A. Ingle, of Hankow, on "Foreign missions"; the Rev. Dr. Lindsay Parker, on "Diocesan missions," and the Rev. Scott Wood, of Virginia, on "Freedmen's missions."

The Branch in the Diocese of Albany

The semi-annual meeting was held at Walton, Oct. 11th. In spite of the small number of delegates who were able to be present, the meeting was full of interest. The usual business meeting was held, followed by an address from the Rev. Dr. Davis, of Japan, who, fresh from the work there, gave a valuable and suggestive resume of what had already been accomplished, and what was hoped from the future. As an educator, he touched most fully upon the Church schools and colleges established in Japan, and made a strong plea for the more advanced training of women sent to the foreign field. In the evening a stereopticon lecture, on mission work in China, was given by the Rev. Mr. Ingle, preceded by a supper at the parish house. On the morning of the 12th, after a Communion service, the meeting adjourned.

The Maryland Branch

The opening service of the semi-annual meeting was held in Grace church, Baltimore, Nov. 8th, with celebration of the Holy Communion. In his address the Bishop emphasized the fact that Maryland is a missionary diocese, that "wherever in the wide world there is no pastoral relation, there is missionary work." Acknowledging the aid given by the Woman's Auxiliary, he spoke of the need of the Silent Church Fund to sustain and strengthen feeble parishes. The colored work demands larger sympathy and support, lack of which compels Maryland to accept from the Board of Missions $1,350 to carry on this work. An earnest charge was given each individual soul for definiteness in prayer and work for Christ. Archdeacon Gray made an eloquent appeal for diocesan missions. After luncheon the missionary meeting was held. The Rev. Ambrose D. Gring, of Kyoto, Japan, spoke of the great work among a great people, of its difficulties, as well as its bright prospects. A special plea was made for the church at Sendai, and St. Agnes' school for girls, for which aid was promised by the president, Mrs. A. L. Sioussat. The Rev. F. W. Merrill, of Fond du Lac, awakened a lively interest by his bright and graphic account of the mission at Green Bay among the Oneida Indians. Copies of his pamphlet, descriptive of the "People of the Stone," were at once taken, and realized $27. The Rev. J. Addison Ingle, of Hankow, China, gave an illustrated lecture, an object lesson of the growth, the strength, and promise of the Chinese mission, which claims generous support. An enthusiastic meeting, about 400 officers and members present, beside a large number of the clergy, gave inspiration to this branch to do greater things for Christ and His work the coming year.

The Chicago Branch

The regular monthly meeting was held in the Church Club rooms Nov. 2nd. Eleven branches were represented by 16 members. Noonday prayers were said by the Rev. Charles Scadding.

The president, Mrs. Lyman, urged more aggressive work in the Junior Auxiliary, and asked that this department be built up on a strong foundation. She told of the new home for women in connection with the cathedral mission work, a home where women released from the prisons may stay awhile to gather strength to go out and meet the world again. It will be opened at Thanksgiving, and the Sisters will be glad of donations in money, furniture, and provisions. The Sisters have the new school-room ready for the Children's Home, and are much in need of $100, right away, to buy the coal for heating. The corresponding secretary made an appeal to the members to remember the needs of the general fund. The work in this branch has grown larger each year, and the branches should sustain the expenses of the work they have asked the officers to do. The city missionary, Miss Prophet, requested members knowing of women ill in any of the hospitals, to send her a card, so she may visit them. A new branch of the Junior Auxiliary has been formed in the church of the Mediator, Morgan Park. Mrs. Harold Morse is directress, and reports nine members.

The Branch in Michigan City Diocese

At the annual meeting held in connection with the diocesan council, Nov. 13th and 14th, the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. J. H. White; vice-president, Mrs. Albert Cook; financial secretary, Mrs. J. H. Murphy; corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. S. Wheeler; treasurer, Mrs. E. F. Case. Organizer of Junior Auxiliary, Miss Helen Kreidler.

The Pittsburgh Branch

The annual meeting opened in Emmanuel church, Allegheny, Nov. 10th, with a celebration of the Holy Communion by the Bishop of the diocese, who also made an address and presided during the morning session. The speakers during the morning were the Rev. W. M. Partridge, of Sitka, Alaska, and the Rev. Ambrose D. Gring, of Kyoto, Japan. An offering was received for the work of the society. A bountiful luncheon was tastefully served in the Sunday school room by the ladies of the parish, and immediately thereafter there was held in the parish rooms the annual election of officers and business meeting. From the annual report we glean the following interesting statistics: Disbursements through hands of the treasurer, $5,379 98; other gifts to missionary work, $28,800; value of boxes, $2,961.47; United Offering of 1901, $451 98; contribution of Junior Auxiliary, $814 88. Memorial resolutions on the death of Mrs. F. R. Brunot were read, expressive of the great loss the Auxiliary in this diocese, as well as the missionary work of the Church in all its departments, has suffered. Officers were elected to serve for the year: President, Mrs. Ormsby Phillips, Allegheny; vice-presidents, Mrs. Cortlandt Whitehead, Pittsburgh; Mrs. C. W. Mackey, Franklin, for the Northern convocation, to be assisted by Mrs. J. H. B. Brooks, of Oil City; Mrs. E. H. Ward, Pittsburgh; Mrs. F. M. Hutchison, Sewickley; recording secretary, Mrs. Daniel Duroe, Pittsburgh; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Marcellin Adams, Pittsburgh; treasurer, Mrs. Mary Childs, Pittsburgh; treasurer United Offering, Miss J. Cuddy, Pittsburgh; treasurer Babies' Branch, Mrs. G. A. Gormly, Sewickley; treasurer Miss Carter's salary, Mrs. W. H. Daly, Pittsburgh; correspondent Church Periodical Club, Mrs. H. M. Doubleday, Pittsburgh; president Junior Auxiliary, Mrs. M. Byllesby, Pittsburgh; secretary and treasurer Junior Auxiliary, Mrs. Barrett, Pittsburgh. At 4 p. m. the Rev. J. A. Ingle, of Hankow, China, gave a talk on the work in China, illustrated by lantern slides, in the Sunday school room of St. Andrew's church. The sessions were very well attended, many delegates being present from the parishes lying outside of the city and its suburbs. Several of the clergy also were in attendance, and the meeting was a most enjoyable and successful occasion.

The Sunday School

Sunday School Institute of Washington

The monthly meeting was held in St. John's parish hall Nov. 13th. There was a very large attendance of delegates, and others interested, and much enthusiasm manifested. The Rev. Alfred Harding conducted the opening service and presided. Announcement was made of the programme adopted by the executive committee for the monthly meetings, providing a paper on some appointed topic, and the "Question Box" on alternate evenings; questions to be handed in at one meeting and answered at the next. A free discussion is to be part of each evening's proceedings. The appointed papers were then read, the first entitled, "The Prayer Book in the Sunday school," by Col. Cecil Clay, of St. Andrew's parish, and the second, "The meaning of the Prayer Book," by Mr. E. S. Hutchinson, of the Epiphany. They were both exceedingly able. Discussion followed of much interest, though rather general in character. Brief speeches were made by the Rev. Drs. Elliott and McKim, the Rev. Mr. Harding, and others of the clergy and laity.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

At a meeting of the council held Nov. 14th, the general secretary, Mr. John W. Wood, presented his resignation in order that he might accept the office of corresponding secretary of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society, to which he was elected by the Board of Managers some months ago. Mr. Wood's resignation was accepted. Until the appointment of a successor, the administration of the affairs of the Brotherhood is placed in the hands of the executive committee of the council, and the assistant secretary was made responsible for the conduct of the details of office work.

It was decided to accept the urgent invitation of the Brotherhood men of Richmond, Va., to hold the 15th annual convention in their city. The dates selected are Oct. 10th to 14th, 1900.

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

Bishop McLaren has so far recovered that he was taken for a drive on Saturday last. He has issued a circular reminding the clergy that the annual offering on Thanksgiving Day is, by canon, "to be for the Fund for the Relief of the Aged and Infirm Clergy." The officers have likewise issued their appeal, showing that the interest on the funded capital of $5,000 being now "enough to meet the present demands upon the society, all now received in the way of offerings may become part of an invested capital."

On Sunday last the pledges taken in the church of our Saviour, after appeal from the Rev. J. H. Edwards, for the current annual expenses, exceeded by $1,000 the amount pledged for the same purpose last year.

In the Chicago branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, St. Andrew's Day, Nov. 30th, is the regularly appointed annual day of prayer for missions. As it falls this year on Thanksgiving Day, the executive committee kindly request the rectors of parishes to include a prayer for missions in their services for the day.

The Lord Bishop of Niagara preached in St. Peter's, on Sunday morning, an eloquent and inspiring sermon. A national hymn was sung, and the national colors were carried, with the cross, in the recessional.

St. Luke's Hospital

Next Sunday, the last in the Trinity season, is known as "Hospital Sunday." St. Luke's requires about $50,000 for annual expenses. There exists a false impression that this magnificent charity is richly endowed, and therefore not in need of much extraneous assistance. This mistake probably accounts for the fact that from $4,000 in former years, the offerings of our churches came down to $1,400 last year, of which the greater portion was from one parish.

The Church Home for Aged Persons

The managers announce an afternoon reception at 4325 Ellis ave., on Tuesday, Nov. 28th, which being a "donation day," and coming just before Thanksgiving, will, it is hoped, be such an occasion of thank-offering as to gladden the heart of the treasurer of the Board of Managers, Mrs. F. F. Ainsworth, 2505 Michigan ave.

Emmanuel Church, La Grange

On the evening of Dec. 1st, will observe the 25th anniversary of the parish. The rector, the Rev. C. Scadding, and his vestry have invited other clergymen and laymen to join with them in this commemoration. The choir of St. Andrew's will assist that of the parish in the short service at 7:45 p. m., when an address will be delivered by the Rev. W. C. DeWitt, after which there will be a reunion in the spacious parish rooms.

The Deaf Mutes

On Saturday evening the Rev. A. W. Mann, western missionary to our deaf-mute brethren, met his people in a social way, in Trinity parish house, and the following day had the usual monthly services for those of the mission, in the chapel.

The Endowment Fund

Handel Hall was fairly well filled on the evening of the 15th, by representative lay men and women, who met at the call of the special committee of the Church Club to consider the question of the endowment of the diocese. After the opening prayers by the Rev. Dr. Fleetwood, the president of the club, Mr. E. B. Tuttle, introduced Mr. Edwin Walker, chairman of the committee, who, on taking charge of the meeting, entered very fully into a statement of the steps taken during the last 10 or 12 years, but more especially during the past year, when the necessity for assistance to the Bishop became imminent. The need of the fund is now brought pressing home owing to the imperative request of the Bishop for a coadjutor, to be elected Jan. 9th. The trustees of the fund have on hand, and yielding interest, about $26,000. In insurance companies, ten-year endowment policies, with the diocese as beneficiary, to the amount of about $50,000, have within a few months been taken out; already a sum of nearly $1,000 cash has been received by the trustees in the way of commission. It is now hoped to complete this by obtaining $200,000 in additional policies, which total would give an immediate income of $3,500, and at the end of 1909 a capital fund of $250,000. These policies cost $9.30 per $100. But an effort is to be made to raise by the end of the year a cash addition to the fund of $24,000, so that with a total of $300,000, yielding $12,000 a year, not only would the parishes be relieved of their present assessments, but there would also be a considerable sum annually available for mission work. The Rev. Dr. Stone in moving a resolution endorsing the insurance idea, appealed in eloquent terms to the feelings of his audience, saying, "We must raise this sum in order to provide a home for the coadjutor who is so much needed. With this endowment raised we shall be all the better prepared for the extension of our mission work, and by it we shall be judged, and impress more than before the community in which we live." Other speakers were Dr. D. R. Brower, the Rev. W. A. Richardson, Mr. Arthur Ryerson; the Rev. Dr. Little who regretted that so few of the rich gave in proportion to their means; Mr. W. R. Stirling who thought we had been pursuing "a penny-wise pound-folish" policy in using the interest of our $26,000; the Rev. J. H. Hopkins who suggested that groups of five be formed to pay each 20 cents a week, which would soon raise the necessary amount, if 12 per cent. of the Church's 21,000 communicants could be enlisted; Mr. D. B. Lyman, the Rev. W. C. DeWitt; the Rev. Dr. Wilson who thought that a truer designation than endowment fund would be "A self-denying fund"; and the Rev. C. P. Anderson. The resolution so ably seconded having been adopted, Dean Clinton Locke rose to say that it would not be courteous to part without some thought of the distinguished man, of whose common-sense and great intellect all are so proud, and in whose trying illness during five weeks all sympathized. He accordingly moved a fittingly-worded resolution, which, by a rising vote, the club secretary, Major Taylor E. Brown, was commissioned to send to Bishop McLaren.

The committee having requested another conference with the clergy, some 50 of them met at the club rooms on Monday afternoon last. The dean having asked the Rev. E. M. Stires to preside, the chairman of the endowment committee, Mr. Edwin Walker (who is devoting much time to the subject), stated that since the mass meeting last week it had been definitely arranged that the N. Y. Mutual Life should co-operate with the Detroit company in writing 500 policies at $500 each, or their equivalent; that 15 agents were now soliciting, who were also empowered to receive cash pledges, and that it would help the committee if the parochial clergy would furnish it with lists for use. This having been unanimously pledged on resolutions by Dr. Clinton Locke, the meeting adjourned.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

News from the Orient announces the safe arrival of Bishop Potter at Yokohama, Japan, on his way to the Philippine Islands.

The work at the mission chapel of the Holy Cross will at the end of next month pass into the hands of the Rev. John Swords who will work in connection with the Sisterhood of St. John the Evangelist. The Rev. James G. Cameron has resigned.

The Clericus

At a meeting Nov. 13th, the Rev. E. H. Wellman, Ph. D., read a paper on "The Bible and its critics," which was discussed by the Rev. Drs. Peters and Dunnell, and the Rev. Messrs. Hulse and Granberry.

Church Temperance Society

The Woman's Auxiliary held a meeting at the Church Missions House Nov. 13th. A movement is on foot for the providing of a new night van for coachmen, and for the establishment by spring of several new ice water fountains.

General Theological Seminary

A series of interesting missionary events have just taken place, including in succession the reading of a paper by one of the students, on the "Associate Mission system as an aid in solving the missionary problem"; an address on Alaskan work, by the Rev. W. M. Partridge; a discussion on the work of the Society of St. John the Evangelist in South Africa, by the Rev. Fr. Osborne, of that order; an address on Oklahoma needs, by Bishop Brooke, and one on Indian missions, by the Rev. F. Wm. Merrill, of Wisconsin.

Clergyman's Retiring Fund Society

At the annual meeting, just held at the Church Missions House, Bishop Scarborough presided and made the annual address. The Very Rev. Dean Hoffman presented a resolution, providing that the fundamental laws of the society be amended as follows:

All funds shall be invested in bonds and mortgages upon well-located, improved, productive real estate in the city of New York, worth at least twice the amount loaned thereon, and with fire insurance policies as collateral security for the same, or in the public bonds and securities of the government of the United States, or of the State or City of New York. All such securities, and all money in the hands of this committee awaiting use or investment, shall be deposited with, or placed in the charge and custody of, such domestic trust company having its principal office in the city of New York, as the board of directors may designate, as hereinafter provided. Such trust shall, under the advice and direction of this committee, collect and pay over to this committee the income of the securities, invest and re-invest the capital thereof, care for and properly protect the property, both cash and securities, committed to its charge, keep proper accounts for this committee, and hold all said property at all times subject to the order of the committee.

The routine reports showed that the society has made important advance during the past year. The following officers were elected: President, the Bishop of New Jersey; secretary, Mr. J. Van Vechten Olcott; financial secretary, the Rev. Dr. James H. Lamb; treasurer, Mr. Elihu Chauncey; board of directors, Bishop Scarborough, the Very Rev. Dean Hoffman, the Rev. Drs. Torrington, Holley, Anstice and Vibbert, Messrs. Henry C. Swords, Woodbury G. Langdon, J. Van Vechten Olcott, Wm. Bispham, Elihu Chauncey, and Francis M. Bacon. The committee on trust funds was constituted, to consist of the Very Rev. Dean Hoffman and Messrs. William Bispham and Woodbury G. Langdon.

Pennsylvania

Ozi William Whitaker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

On Monday evening, 13th inst., in St. Luke's, Germantown, there was a conference of the Germantown chapters of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Addresses were made by the Rev. Messrs. L. N. Caley and A. D. Gring, of Japan, and also by Mr. C. Elmer Jameson.

The Clerical Brotherhood

Under the auspices of this body, there was a service and conference held at 8 A. M., on Monday, 13th inst., at the church of the Holy Trinity, Philadelphia. Bishop Whitaker was the celebrant of the Holy Eucharist. At 11:30 A. M., in the Church House, Philadelphia, the Rev. Dr. A. G. Mortimer addressed the Brotherhood on "The Archbishops' opinion."

Revisionary Bequest

The will of George W. Rexsamer, probated 13th inst., disposes of an estate valued at $150,000 to $200,000, which, after the deaths of his wife and sister-in-law, is to be converted into money, and is bequeathed to the Episcopal Hospital, to endow a ward or to erect a building, as the managers may deem advisable; either to bear the name of the donor.

Lincoln Institution to be Closed

After an existence of 84 years, this institution, founded in 1865 as a home for soldiers' orphans, and later, in 1883, devoted exclusively to the purposes of Indian education, is to be closed. It has cared for and educated 519 Indian boys and 487 Indian girls, and the great majority of these pupils, it is claimed by the management, have been provided with useful and remunerative employment. Only eight of this large number (1,006), as far as ascertained, have returned to Indian life on the reservations. The reasons for closing the institution and abandoning the work, is the difficulty experienced in obtaining the U. S. Government's subsidy of $167 per annum for each child, and the opposition manifested by a certain class in the community. There are no 103 boys and 108 girls in school, while there are 60 others awaiting admission, but as the managers feel unable to stand the strain longer, they have resolved to close the institution on June 30, 1900, being the end of the "fiscal year," this action being ratified by the Board of Council.

New Epiphany Chapel, Philadelphia

The first services were held on Sunday, 12th inst., the Rev. G. DeW. Dowling, curate-in-charge, officiating and preaching both morning and evening. A full vested choir of 28 voices, under the direction of Mr. W. F. Bailey, of Chester, furnished the music, assisted by Miss Helen Reed, harpist. There was a short organ recital before Evensong, when Mr. Omer S. Fitzgerald sang "The Holy City." Epiphany chapel is the outgrowth of the former chapel of that name, at 23d and Cherry sts., and of the old church of the Atonement, which formerly occupied a portion of its site. To the Rev. Dr. T. A. Tidball, rector of St. Luke's and the Epiphany, and Horace A. Doan, a prominent layman of the old Epiphany, credit is due for the conception of this new enterprise, which now presents an imposing group of buildings—the chapel, parish house, and Sunday school building. All these are inter-communicating, built of gray granite, rough-faced stone work, with fine limestone for all ornamental or carved work. The chapel is a clerestory building, finished in cypress throughout. The columns and arches supporting the clerestory wall, the chancel arch, and pilasters at its side, are of Indiana limestone. The general style is Gothic, of the 15th century. The roof of the chapel is open timber work with hammer beam rafters and paneled ceiling. There are two large western doorways, over which is a large tracery window. The furniture is of quartered oak, including rood screen and pulpit. The altar is marble, and the floor of the chancel, mosaic. The chapel stands at the N. E. corner of 17th and Summer sts.; while the parish house is at the S. E. corner of 17th and Winter sts. In the basement of the latter is a bicycle room, bowling alley, and space for shuffle boards. The first floor has a large reading room and two game rooms. In the second story is a gymnasium containing a running track; attached to this gymnasium are a locker room, a bath room, and a kitchen. The apparatus of the gymnasium is movable, so that the room can be converted into an assembly room for lectures and entertainments. At its east end is a stage fitted up with footlights; two dressing rooms adjoin. Already 150 persons are enrolled for the gymnasium classes. At right angles to the chapel and parish house, to the eastward of both, is the Sunday school building, in front of which is a small lawn. Entrance is effected through two vestibules to the large central room. Between these vestibules is the infant room. There is also a large class room on the first floor, and seven class rooms on the gallery floor. All these latter are separated from the main room by movable glass partitions, so that the classes occupying them can participate in the opening and closing exercises. Financially, the work has been backed by St. Luke's Epiphany church, and the chapel is now included in that parish. The cost of the whole plant approximates $100,000. The chapel seats 500. Its work will be a broad one, aiming to reach the people in their needs, spiritually, physically, and intellectually—a "free and open church."

Convocation of the Central Deanery

The final meeting was held in St. John's church, Lafayette, Nov. 7th and 8th. The organization of the diocese of Michigan City, since the spring convocation, has taken off what was formerly the northern deanery, and the Bishop has announced the division of the present diocese of Indiana into the three deaneries of Indianapolis, Evansville, and New Albany. There will be no more convocations, therefore, of this deanery under its old name, or with representatives of the same parishes. Seven clergy besides the Bishop were in attendance. In the unavoidable absence of the dean, the Rev. G. A. Cartensen, the Bishop presided. Convocation opened with Evensong at 7:30. The Rev. F. C. Woodward preached an earnest and forcible sermon, on "The Spirit of Power." The services on Wednesday began with the Holy Eucharist at 7 A. M., the Bishop celebrant. At 9 A. M. the Bishop conducted a Quiet Hour, and gave a beautiful and inspiring meditation on "The ministry a vocation," treating the subject under the headings, "Messengers," "Watchmen," and "Stewards." Morning Prayer was followed by a clear, logical, strong sermon ad clerum by the Rev. C. S. Sargent, "The Church of the Living God, the pillar and ground of the truth." At the business meeting the Bishop announced that he had appointed the Rev. J. E. Sulger dean of the new deanery of Evansville. The Rev. F. C. Coolbaugh was elected secretary and treasurer. The next convocation was appointed to be held at the cathedral. A suggestive address on Sunday school work was given by the Rev. Mr. Sulger who has the largest and best organized school in the diocese. The address and the discussion which followed brought out many points of value, especially from the Bishop and the Rev. H. M. Denslow. The missionary service at 7 p. m. brought together an unusually large congregation. The Rev. Mr. Denslow gave an admirable account of the Missionary Council at St. Louis; the Rev. A. J. Graham spoke of "The utility of missions from a practical standpoint," and the Bishop concluded with an eloquent lesson and appeal to those who, by expressing a disbelief in missions, virtually declare their disbelief in Christ. A delightful reception was given at the spacious rectory, and the Church people of Lafayette, and a large number of others, including several ministers of other religious bodies, took advantage of this first opportunity to meet and welcome the new Bishop of Indiana. Here, as everywhere, Bishop Francis won the hearts of all, and brought fresh interest and hope to clergy and people.

Pittsburgh

Cortlandt Whitehead, D.D., Bishop

A parish reception was held on the evening of All Saints' Day, at the city hall, Connellsville, in behalf of Trinity church, New Haven, which is practically a suburb of Connellsville. The object of the meeting was to commemorate the anniversary of the incumbency of the Rev. Dr. Cartwright, and to further the organized work of the parish. Addresses were made by the Rev. Dr. Cartwright, the Rev. J. S. Lightbourne, W. J. Diehl, Esq., Mayor of Pittsburgh, a Brotherhood man, and Miss R. E. Byllesby, deaconess. As a result of the meeting it is hoped soon to organize a chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and of the Daughters of the King. Music was furnished by the choir of the church, and others, and refreshments served by the ladies of the congregation.

Daughters of the King

The quarterly meeting was held on All Saints' Day in Christ church, Allegheny, beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion at 10:30 A. M. In the afternoon there was a business meeting, followed by a talk by Mrs. Hammond on her visit to England in behalf of the work of the Church Army, and at 5 p. m., Evening Prayer, with a sermon by the Rev. A. Alexander. At 8 o'clock there was a short service, followed by an address by the Rev. H. E. Thomson. Music was furnished by the vested choir of Emmanuel church. Tea was served by the society in the Sunday school room, and the time between services spent in pleasant social intercourse.

The Clerical Union

Held its monthly meeting and annual election of officers at the Hotel Henry, Nov. 13th, beginning with luncheon at one o'clock. The officers for the season are as follows: President, Rev. E. H. Ward, D.D.; vice-president and chaplain, Rev. T. J. Danner; secretary, Rev. W. B. Beach; treasurer, Rev. Amos Bannister. Owing to the absence, by reason of sickness, of the Rev. J. R. Wightman who was to have read a paper on "The Laymen's Missionary League," of which he is chaplain, the Rev. H. E. Thompson read an article from THE LIVING CHURCH of Nov. 11th, on "Children's Services," which was made the subject of a spirited and interesting discussion.

Death of Rev. Dr. S. C. Roberts

The Rev. Stephen C. Roberts, D. D., rector of Emmanuel church, Chestertown, Md., died Nov. 15th, at the Church Home and Infirmary, Baltimore, of general debility. He was born at Newberne, N. C., Oct. 12th, 1831, educated at the University of North Carolina, and his theological education received at Nashotah Seminary. He was ordained to the priesthood July 26, 1857, and has had these charges: Trinity church, Beaufort Co., N. C.; Grace church, Morgantown, N. C.; Christ church, Smithfield, Va.; St. John's, Columbia, Va.; City Mission, Norfolk, Va. In December, 1871, he accepted a call to Emmanuel church, Chestertown. His life was full of good deeds to the community in which he lived. His sympathetic heart never failed to respond to the needs of the sufferer or distressed without regard to Church or creed. He knew no fear where the needs of others called for help. His remains were taken to Chestertown on Friday. The funeral took place from the church on Saturday afternoon, and burial was in Chester cemetery.

Memorials in St. Michael's, Genesee

The Festival of St. Michael and All Angels' was fittingly celebrated in this parish, the Rev. C. H. Boynton, Ph. D., rector. The completion of the memorials of Mrs. Jones and of Mr. and Mrs. David Shepard in time for this festival was a great satisfaction. Bishop Walker, at the 11 A. M. service, made a helpful, hopeful address, and celebrated the Holy Eucharist. The memorials consist of a tessellated pavement of gray and brown encaustic tiles in the chancel, and an altar rail. In the centre of the pavement is inlaid a cross, the upright of which is six ft. long, and the transverse beam four ft. This is so artistically put together as to give the impression of being raised above the floor level. Inserted near the base of the cross is a brass plate bearing the inscription: "In memory of Sarah Cummings Jones. Born Nov. 17, 1831; died Jan. 9, 1894." The supports of the altar rail are made of cast brass, representing vine branches, leaves, and fruit. The rail is of black walnut, the gate being of brass, telescope fashion. The inscription reads: "To the glory of God, and in loving memory of David and Dolly O. Shepard," and is the gift of Mr. D. Chauncey Shepard, of St. Paul, Minn., in remembrance of his father and mother who throughout their lives were faithful and valued members of St. Michael's parish. The altar stands on a solid slab of marble. The entire work is artistically perfect.

Long Island

Abram N. Littlejohn, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

On the morning of Oct. 10th, the Bishop confirmed a class of six at Grace church, Riverhead, presented by the rector, the Rev. George W. West. In the afternoon, the Bishop, accompanied by Mr. West, drove to Mattituck, where he administered the rite of Confirmation to another class, at the church of the Redeemer.

Archdeaconry of Queens and Nassau

The regular fall meeting was held in the church of the Resurrection, Richmond Hill, Oct. 25th. The Bishop presided. Archdeacon Bryan reported work done since the last meeting. He had presented the cause of diocesan missions in 12 parishes, and in most instances the offerings were devoted to that purpose; had visited and conferred with the committees of 11 missions on financial matters. All the missions under his jurisdiction were in a prosperous state. The mission at Hicksville, under the charge of the Rev. Joseph P. Smyth, Jr., has already shown evidence of the wisdom of establishing the Church in this section. A committee has been authorized to purchase land on which to erect a church at Morris Park. As soon as this is done, and land paid for, a loan will be secured and a church built. Archdeacon Bryan was authorized to start a new mission at Brooklyn Manor, there being no church in that section within walking distance. The archdeaconry approved of the recommendation of the executive committee, that the clergy of the archdeaconry be asked to aid in having the offerings of the Sunday schools during Advent given to diocesan missions. Additional appropriations were made to the missions at Seaford and Hicksville, and $100 appropriated to the work among the colored people in Smithville South. The treasurer's report showed a balance on hand. In the evening a service was held, and an address made by the Rev. William Wiley on Sunday school work. A native Persian, now studying medicine in this country, spoke on the need of missionary work in Persia.

Farewell Reception to Rev. Dr. Morrison

On the evening of the 15th, in the parish hall of St. Matthew's church, Brooklyn. The Rev. Dr. A. A. Morrison has accepted a call to Trinity church, Portland, Oregon, and the reception testified, by its numbers and warmth, the affection felt for him and Mrs. Morrison. Mr. Charles A. Peck, the senior warden, presented the rector with a handsome silver loving cup and a purse of gold, concluding his remarks with the words: "It is indeed a loving cup, and we want it to be a cup to cheer you in the future. It symbolizes your teaching to us—bright, shining, and sterling." Dr. Morrison responded happily, saying that the time he had been connected with St. Matthew's had been the happiest of his life, and that he would carry the pleasantest memories of his 10 years with them to his new home. These gifts were supplemented by that of a handsomely embroidered stole presented by C. B. Demarest on behalf of the altar guild, and a silk cassock, a gift from the choir. The evening closed with refreshments and music. A number of the clergy of the diocese and of Manhattan were present. Dr. Morrison leaves in a few days for Portland. As yet no effort has been made to fill the vacancy caused by his resignation.

Massachusetts

William Lawrence, D. D., Bishop

Mr. Samuel T. Dutton read an able paper upon "Religion in schools," before the Monday clerical, Nov. 13th.

St. Paul's church, Boston, held a sociable, Nov. 17th, in the parish rooms. A musical programme was the feature of the evening. Reports of the various societies and organizations were read by the rector, the Rev. Dr. Lindsay.

Young Travelers Aid Society

In the chapel of Trinity church, Boston, Mrs. Groves gave an interesting account of the work in behalf of unprotected and homeless old women, as well as in the interests of girls and children who arrive at the two railroad stations of this city. The Boston society had assisted only 1,000 less people than had been looked after by the English society in the whole of England. The Rev. C. H. Brent made an address. A fund of $10,000 has been offered to the society upon the condition that it raise $1,000 more.

Vermont

Arthur C. A. Hall, D. D., Bishop

Bishop Hall went, Oct. 10th, to Lyndonville, to administer Confirmation. On Sunday, he visited Holy Trinity, Swanton, and St. John's, Highgate, and on Monday, Grace church, Sheldon.

The Rev. Thomas Warrall, M. A., of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., has gone to Burlington to take up the duties of assistant, under the Rev. Geo. Y. Bliss, rector of St. Paul's church.

Maryland

William Paret, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Bequests of Mr. Geo. A. Reinicker

By the will of Mr. George A. Reinicker who died on Nov. 1st, in Baltimore, is bequeathed a ground rent of $600 to the Theological Seminary of Virginia, and one of $300 a year to Christ church Orphan Asylum of Baltimore. For a number of years Mr. Reinicker was a vestryman of Christ church. He was of a generous disposition, and contributed largely to a number of charities. He purchased for $8,000 the ground rent of Trinity church, and gave it to the church, and in addition he spent several thousand dollars in improvements to the building. He also founded a course of lectures at the Theological Seminary, near Alexandria, Va.

Marriage of Rev. J. P. McComas

The rector of St. Anne's parish, Annapolis, was married to Miss Katharine Carmichael Murray, daughter of pay director James D. Murray, U. S. N., in St. Anne's church, on Nov.

9th, the Rev. J. C. Gray assisted by the Rev. F. B. Howden, performing the ceremony.

The Churchman's Club

Gave its annual dinner at Music Hall, Baltimore, Nov. 16th. Mr. Joseph Packard, Jr., president of the organization, presided. After-dinner speeches were made by Bishop Paret, Mr. John H. Peyton, who recently returned from the Philippines, and the Rev. F. W. Clam- pett.

Central New York

F. D. Huntington, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Clericus at Watertown

The clergy of Watertown and vicinity have organized a clericus for mutual benefit, like those at Syracuse and Utica. The first meeting was held in Trinity church, Watertown, Oct. 16th, when the Rev. Dr. J. Sanders Reed was elected president; the Rev. J. Howell Geare, vice president; the Rev. D. D. Waugh, secretary and treasurer. Meetings will be held on the first Monday of each month at Trinity rectory, Watertown.

Rev. Dr. Brainerd's Anniversary

Completing his 36th year as rector of St. Peter's church, Auburn, was pleasantly celebrated on Sunday, Nov. 5th. The genial Doctor preached a sermon full of interesting reminiscences covering the long period of his rectorship. The parish and rector deserve widespread congratulations upon the event, and also upon the completion of extensive repairs this summer to the handsome stone tower and spire of St. Peter's, which involved an expense of $6,500, now fully paid.

The Utica Clericus

Held its November meeting on the 6th inst., in the parish rooms of Grace church. Eighteen clergymen were present and listened to a vivid description of the travels and experiences of the Rev. C. E. S. Rasay during a three months' tour of England and continental countries.

Albany

William Crosswell Doane, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Rev. Dr. J. N. Shackelford has met with a painful accident which, though not serious, will lay him up for some time.

St. Mark's, Hoosick Falls

On the evening of Nov. 2d, the Bishop of Albany made his annual visitation, and confirmed a class of 21 persons presented by the rector, the Rev. Alonzo Cushman Stewart.

The Albany and Troy Clericus

Celebrated the 25th anniversary of the Rev. Dr. W. W. Battershall's rectorship of St. Peter's church, Albany, with a reception and luncheon given at St. Paul's parish house in Troy, Nov. 6th. Dr. Battershall was presented with a copy of Temple's Shakespeare, a testimonial of the Clericus to its esteemed member. The set, beautifully bound in morocco, was in an enclosed case, also of morocco, and suitably inscribed. The presentation remarks were made by the Rev. Dr. Enos. Dr. Battershall responded in an eloquent and feeling speech. The annual election resulted in the re-election of the president and vice-president, the Rev. Edward W. Babcock and the Rev. Paul H. Birdsall, the Rev. W. F. Parsons declining a re-election. The Rev. John Mills Gilbert was chosen secretary and treasurer.

Anniversary of the Rev. Dr. Battershall

Festival services commemorating the 25th anniversary of the installation of the Rev. Dr. Walton W. Battershall as rector of St. Peter's church, Albany, were held Nov. 4th, attended by about 25 clergymen and a representative congregation. In the evening a reception was held at the parish house, and besides a massive silver loving cup from the vestry, Dr. Battershall was presented with a check for $3,500 from about 200 members and former members of the congregation. He was the recipient also of heartiest congratulations from hundreds of friends. The Bishop officiated at the services at 11 A. M., assisted by Dr. Battershall and Dean Robbins.

Anniversary of the Rev. R. J. Adler

The observance of the 25th anniversary of the Rev. R. J. Adler's rectorship of St. Mark's church, Green Island, took place Oct. 15th. The rector delivered the sermon. Services were also held at 7:30 o'clock Saturday evening. The services of the afternoon were largely attended, many persons from Troy, Albany, Cohoes, and the vicinity being present. The musical programme was unusually interesting. The address was by Bishop Doane. The important improvements and changes in the church were spoken of by the Bishop who said the people of St. Mark's church could not be too thankful to Mr. Adler, or too solicitous for his welfare, as his untiring efforts and persistent work were in a great measure responsible for the success of the parish. The evening service was especially for the societies of the church. The souvenirs distributed among the members of the congregation were of much interest—a number of excellent engravings, including a picture of the building at George and Clinton sts., in which the early Churchmen held their first services on the island. The building was used by Uri Gilbert as a carriage shop, and there on Nov. 23, 1865, an organization of religious people, afterward the congregation of St. Mark's church, was effected. A reception to the rector on Monday evening gave opportunity for hearty congratulations by his parishioners and friends. After Mr. Adler had retired to the rectory near midnight, the members of the choir serenaded him with several songs, and he was presented with a box containing a sum of gold as a token of the good wishes of the choir.

Michigan

Thomas F. Davies, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Sixty-Sixth Annual Convention

Met in St. John's church, Detroit, Nov. 15th. The opening service began with a celebration of the Holy Communion, a stately service, largely choral, and exceptionally well rendered by the choir. The sermon was preached by Bishop Davies, in which he spoke with wisdom and earnestness on divorce, advocating a national divorce law; the Church and the family, and the better observance of the Lord's Day. The business sessions of the convention were held in the parish house, and were well attended, about 50 of the clergy and 67 laity being present. The Bishop read his address, noticing the death of two eminent laymen, Col. J. T. Sterling and Frank S. Sill, a long-time member of the vestry of Trinity church, Monroe, the successful work of the general missionary, and giving the number of Confirmations at 107 for four months when the fewest Confirmations are held at any time of the year. The 10th anniversary of the Bishop's consecration occurred on St. Luke's Day. The Rev. Dr. McCarroll, chairman of the then appointed committee, introduced a preamble and resolution highly appreciative of the Bishop personally and of his faithful administration of the diocese, which was adopted unanimously by a standing vote. The Bishop, with evident emotion, responded briefly. The remaining articles of the revised constitution were adopted, and that work, begun several years ago, finished. The Rev. Dr. Prall, chairman of the committee on Constitution and Canons, has devoted much intelligent labor and perseverance to this subject. The missionary meeting in St. John's church, Wednesday evening, was well attended and highly interesting. The first report of the Rev. Wm. S. Sayers, general missionary, gave a full and intelligent account of his active and zealous work during four previous months. It notes opportunity for enlarged and new work. There are 50 towns of 900 or more population in the diocese where the services of our Church have never been held. Mr. Sayers has visited nearly every parish and mission in the diocese, covering nearly 4,000 miles of travel, and sets out again this week. There are 35 clergy of the diocese receiving missionary stipends, amounting in all to $7,853. At the same meeting Mr. J. B. Haworth, treasurer of the Mission Board, read his report. Before the next convention $1,000 will be needed in addition to the amount already pledged, and the convention adopted a plan of apportionment and assessment to raise that sum.

The old officers of the convention and diocese were all re-elected, except that Mr. James North Wright was chosen a trustee of the diocese to fill the place left vacant by the death of Mr. Hervey C. Parke. The Rev. S. W. Frisbie's election as secretary of the convention marked the 21st year he has been chosen to that position. The convention expressed its regret at the departure of the Rev. Thos. W. McLean from the diocese, with which he has been connected 17 years. In pursuance of a recommendation in the report of the committee on Christian education, the Rev. Dr. R. W. Clark, chairman, the Bishop appointed a diocesan Sunday school committee: Rev. Messrs. William Gardam, Chas. L. Arnold, C. H. Mockridge, R. M. Chamberlain, and J. A. Chapin; Messrs. John Pound, R. W. Humphill, Jr., Hon. James O'Donnell, and Leonard Reed. The next convention will be held in St. Paul's church, Detroit, in November, 1900.

The Detroit Church Club

Gave its annual banquet at the Russell House, Detroit, Nov. 16th. The Rev. Dr. Briggs was the guest of honor. Hon. Otto Kirchner, president of the club, presided, and the attendance was very large. There were four set speeches; viz: The Rev. Dr. Briggs, on "The present crisis in the Church of England in its relation to Church Unity," read from manuscript; "The Churchman in public life," by Prof. H. B. Hutchins, dean of the Law Faculty of Michigan University; "Religion and the Scientific Spirit," by the Rev. Dr. William D. Maxon, and "Spiritual Expansion," by Rev. Thos. W. Maclean. Prof. Keat and the Rev. Chas. L. Arnold also spoke.

Washington

Henry Yates Satterlee, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Parochial Retreat at St. Paul's

Conducted by the Rev. Fr. Field, S. S. J. E., beginning at Evening Prayer, on Nov. 13th, and continuing throughout the next day, closing with the early Celebration on the 15th. The subject of the instruction was "The Christian family."

Choir Festival at Church of the Ascension

The music was well rendered by the vested choir of men and boys. The rector, the Rev. Dr. J. H. Elliot, delivered a discourse on Church music, and prizes were given to several of the boys for punctual attendance and faithful work during the past year.

Michigan City

John Hazen White, D.D., Bishop

First Annual Council

Met in Trinity cathedral, Michigan City, Nov. 13-15th. The first evening was given to the Woman's Auxiliary. An excellent sermon was delivered by the Rev. Ernest M. Stires, of Chicago. The next morning Holy Communion was celebrated at 7 o'clock. At 10 A. M. there was a second Celebration, Bishop Waite being celebrant. The sermon was by Bishop Francis, of Indiana. In the afternoon Bishop White delivered his annual address. The Rev. Walter J. Lockton was elected secretary of the diocese. Much time was taken in considering the report of the Committee on Constitution and Canons. Mr. Walter Vail was elected treasurer of the diocese. Standing Committee: The Rev. Messrs. A. W. Seabreeze, John N. McKenzle, Walter Scott, F. M. Banfil, and E. W. Averill. Delegates to the Missionary Council: The Rev. W. W. Raymond and H. B. Norris. The Rev. L. W. Applegate, the financial secretary, and the Rev. W. W. Raymond, delegate to the last Missionary Council, gave short addresses. After closing prayer by the Bishop, the council adjourned sine die.

Editorials and Contributions

IT is announced that the Rev. Mr. Sheldon, of Topeka, Kas., author of "In His Steps," is about to revise the Apostles' Creed. The ostensible purpose is to render it more intelligible to his people. There is something almost amusing in this. It certainly suggests questions as to the intelligence of the people with whom he is working. It is hard to imagine how great truths could be more simply expressed than in this Creed as it has come down to us from the early ages. We fear some wrong is done to the citizens of a progressive city in a progressive State by the assumption that they are incapable of understanding it. The suspicion arises that something more than simplicity is aimed at in the projected new version.

Authority in Religion

NO doubt, for the most part, the secular newspaper pursues the line of reflecting the average popular opinion, rather than of endeavoring to rectify it. But now and then shrewd American common sense asserts itself, and a clear-headed editor finds himself impelled to sweep aside the sophistries by which people are being misled, and to bring to light the true relations of things. Thus, in recent numbers of the Chicago Times-Herald, we find some pointed remarks on the Congregational Council which met in Boston a short time ago. This paper commented particularly upon the utterances of President Hyde, of Bowdoin, on theological seminaries. President Hyde asserted that "the professor will either be untrue to his conscience because he has signed an agreement to teach according to the Creed, or he will disregard the Creed." It hardly needed the case of Dr. Gregory, the Chicago preacher, with his vilification of the other ministers of orthodox pulpits as not believing what they teach, to prove the position of the Times-Herald, that the utterances of Dr. Hyde are in the language of agnosticism. This paper points out that there must be authority in religion, or the issue cannot fail to be complete unbelief. "In every department of our life activities there is authority of some sort. Without it there would be a kaleidoscopic exhibition of ignorance and inefficiency. Man would become simply an undisciplined animal." In the case of the Christian religion, "whose sanctions and restraints are held to be of divine origin," it is least of all possible. An organization must have authority, and if authority goes, the organization must necessarily go with it. The concluding words of the article upon which we are chiefly commenting, are as follows: "The alternative of an authoritative religion is a weak and nerveless substitute of speculative gossip and sweet philanthropy, which encourages the bolder spirits of anarchy and nihilism in their advocacy of pure selfishness and a gross materialism."

WE have had occasion to say heretofore that the conflict of thought which is now going on in the centre of Christian denominations, is a conflict between supernatural religion and natural religion, the latter often tending to pure agnosticism. In Germany, a century ago, a similar agitation began in the bosom of the Lutheran Church.

The position taken was that Christianity is nothing more than a republication or advanced development of natural religion. The effect of this is obvious. Natural religion, in the first place, is nothing but the recognition of the ineffaceable religious instincts of mankind, and the attempt to give them some satisfying outlet. Rudimentary and more or less gross in its earlier stages, this form of religion is capable of refinement and improvement as time goes on and men become more civilized and enlightened. Expressed at first in various idolatrous forms which develop into traditional cults, it is improved or even transformed in the hands of great men, the religious geniuses of their age, such as Confucius, Buddha, and Zoroaster, or the founders of Greek ethical philosophy. But it is evident that in no form or system can this kind of religion possess exclusive or final authority. It is subject to fluctuation or change as often as a new leader arises. It has no fixed basis, and the very foundations are uncertain, inasmuch as the religious instincts and impulses, the presence of which is acknowledged, are subject to varied interpretations. That the tendency of intellectual people, viewing religion in this way, will be toward agnosticism and indifference, must be clear. This was the case in the higher circles of thought in the Roman Empire at the dawn of Christianity, and it is a widespread tendency at the present day.

CHRISTIANITY claims to belong to a different category. It has from the first been preached as a supernatural, not a natural, religion. That is to say, while it recognizes the inherent instincts which make for religion, and the needs which thus arise, it offers for the satisfaction of this department of human nature no system which rests upon the thoughts and guesses of men, however profound in their conception, or however grand and far-reaching in their intellectual and spiritual range. It offers instead of all these, a system which has come from God, and which has, therefore, an unquestionable authority. It comes by direct supernatural revelation which raises it infinitely above the thoughts and conjectures of men, though they may be men of phenomenal genius and intellectual giants. It delivers truths which are imperishable. The facts upon which it rests are facts which have happened once for all, and which can never give way to later facts. The significance of these divine transactions in the sphere of humanity will, moreover, be the same to the end of time.

IT may be true that this significance is not at all times perfectly apprehended, that a new and larger application may appear, according to the needs of successive ages; but this development of meaning is by way of unfolding that which has from the first been taught, not of casting aside the old interpretation and substituting another. The authority which attaches to supernatural religion is seen in this way to belong not simply to the facts but to the significance which from the first they were shown to have. Corollaries or additional inferences may be added, but they are simply the expression of what was already contained in the original propositions. If the articles of the Creed, for instance, are to be taken as mere statements of facts, with no exclusive significance, the result is to reduce Christianity to the plane of natural religion. The successive statements become merely pegs upon which to hang whatever vagaries of thought any one may choose. The facts themselves are easily referred to the realm of poetic realism. Nothing stable remains as the result of this process, and all claim of authority vanishes away.

AT different periods the same process takes different forms. A century ago the attempt was confessedly to reduce Christianity to the category of natural religion. But at present it is common to meet with a view which is the converse of this. Instead of reducing Christianity to a lower level, it professes to elevate natural religion. It is said that the distinction between the natural and the supernatural is untrue; that, in fact, one thing is as supernatural as another. It is urged that all good thoughts, and all systems which have anything of truth or utility for man, are from God. We hear His voice in the lines of great poets and the utterances of philosophers of antiquity and of all time. His hand is in the various religions which have existed upon the earth. Hence it is argued, while Christianity may be the loftiest and noblest, it is not so because it differs from the rest in its source or in the method of its development. It does not differ from them in kind. It simply exhibits the choicest results of the best thought of all ages. The universal spirit, or, as others would say, the immanent God, brooded over the profound meditations of the wise of every generation, and out of this has been evolved the greatest and most powerful religion so far seen. But disguise it as we may, this process takes away the unique authority of this religion. It is, after all, the thoughts of men with which we have to do, even though we choose to dignify them by another name. There is here nothing absolute or final. The inevitable logic of the position is that Christianity is destined to give way to something more advanced. But Christianity claims to rest, not upon the thoughts of men, even though esteemed to be the promptings of immanent Deity, of the divinity residing in every man; but upon the definite acts and revelations of a Personal God, not God in nature, but God above nature. Christianity is this or it is nothing.

Criticism and Orthodoxy

A PARAGRAPH from The Nation, on the subject of the Church and the higher critics, is quoted in The Biblical World for September, and is called an "acute comment." The Nation tells us that "Biblical studies are now as well and definitely organized as studies in the department of Greek history or Roman law." It proceeds to state, in a sage and oracular style, that there is in each field a recognized body of authorities, and that their weight consists not in the fact that they have a standing in the Church, but in the soundness of their methods. "We never ask," says The Nation, "whether a man is 'orthodox' in his views of the political constitution of Athens, or of the origin of the patria potestas; we only ask if he is abreast of the latest researches touching those subjects. Precisely that is the test which we should apply to the Biblical scholar. Is he in general agreement with the masters of those who know his specialty? If he is not, he may be as orthodox as you please, but he is either belated or eccentric to the extent of making his opinions of no weight."

THIS certainly has an acute sound; but it may be questioned whether it does not rather deserve to be called "smart." It ignores the fact that Biblical critics of the first rank are divided into several "camps," according to their pre-assumptions, and that a scholar's pre-assumptions, no matter whether he is orthodox or not, necessarily affect his methods and his conclusions, and that, too, very frequently, in a radical manner. There is a long list of such critics who deny the supernatural, and even the Personality of God, identifying God with the universe. Is it not evident that this class of scholars will reach quite different conclusions, in a large number of instances, from those who begin with a belief in the supernatural? Will not those who believe that the Bible is inspired in a special manner, so as to become the vehicle of divine truth, reach different conclusions from those who repudiate any such belief? It is vain to persuade the Church that the Bible is simply "like any other book," and that it makes no difference who has the handling of it, provided he is a competent scholar. We make use of the labors of such a scholar, making due allowance for his pre-assumptions and their influence, but it is another thing to recommend his writings in our schools, or admit him to the position of an authorized teacher. We shall desire the best and most advanced scholarship, but we shall insist that its presumptions shall not be foreign to the Christian religion. It is in this way that the question of orthodoxy comes in. It is not that the critic must be required to arrive at conclusions in accord at all points with received opinions, but that his antecedent point of view shall be in harmony with the Christian religion, and that he shall work in the atmosphere of Christian thought.

WE supposed it had now been generally admitted that it is not possible to approach subjects like these with impartiality, or, in other words, without pre-assumptions which must largely govern the process of investigation. Some time ago we quoted the words of David Strauss touching this subject, and they are worth quoting a second time for the frank avowal which they contain: "One often meets," he says, "in the writings of free-thinking theologians the assurance that their researches rest on a purely historical interest. For my part, with all respect to the word of these gentlemen, I regard what they affirm as a thing impossible; and even if the fact were true, I could not regard it as worthy of praise. He who writes on the monarchs of Nineveh, or on the Egyptian Pharaohs" [we might read here, "Greek history or Roman law, the political constitution of Athens, or the origin of the patria potestas"] "may indeed obey the purely historical interest. But Christianity is so living a force, and the question, what have been its origins? contains in it such decisive consequences for the immediate present, that one would have to regard as struck with stupidity the investigator who only brought to the study of this question an historical interest." He then goes on to invite scholars to join with him in "delivering the human mind from the spiritual yoke which has hitherto oppressed it" (i. e., supernatural religion.) Strauss was a great Biblical scholar, "the real thing," we suppose The Nation would call him. He was "scientific," no doubt, and so were the other "free-thinking scholars" to whom he appeals. Are we therefore under the obligation to accept him and his fellows as our guides and masters? It really appears that it is only when the scholar's pre-assumptions are Christian and orthodox that we are called upon to suspect him as "belated or eccentric."

"Stir Up and Get Ready"

"WHAT is the meaning of the name, Stir-up-Sunday, sometimes given to the Sunday next before Advent?" Such was the question asked by a Sunday school teacher of her class of small boys. "Stir up and get ready for Christmas," came the answer from one of the number, a bright, eager-faced lad of nine or ten years. To his mental gaze there were doubtless visions of joys not strictly spiritual associated with the coming of Christmas. Visions of sugar-plums dance through small heads long before slow-footed time brings

"The night before Christmas when all thro' the house Not a creature is stirring, not even a mouse."

"Stir up and get ready for Christmas!" Was there not more in the small lad's answer than he knew? Much stirring up and getting ready for the great day is evident ere Advent dawns. It is a stirring up and getting ready that is to culminate in the giving and receiving of gifts—of parents to children, of children to parents, of brothers and sisters to each other, of friend to friend. Shops are thronged with eager buyers, stirred up to get ready for Christmas. And who would look coldly upon this outward and visible sign of good will, even though it be but the world's semi-conscious recognition of its relation to God's gracious Christmas Gift to man? Only let us keep to the proportion of things. Were it not better to expend less thought upon gifts for the dear ones who already have and abound, and put the more upon how large we may make our offering at the cradle of our King? Is it not pitiable that we find it possible to do so much for them, so little for Him? Is it not true that the offering in the parish church on Christmas Day is quite disproportioned to the lavish bestowal of gifts in the parish homes?

"Stir up and get ready for Christmas!" What lessons are the children learning of Christian giving? Is it not rather one of getting than giving? There should be some way of teaching them the blessedness of giving in the Name and for the sake of God's dear Son. I could never see that this was logically the object lesson of the Christmas tree. Why not leave that—the Christmas tree—to the home, except in mission schools among the very poor?

"Stir up and get ready for Christmas!" Is there not something to be done, something given for the Cause that Jesus loves—the making of His way known upon earth? The weeks that follow Christmas, and the Epiphany, should gladden the hearts of the faithful workers at the Missions' House in New York, by manifold increase of means for doing their work, and ours. The spirit of giving is too confined, too narrow, if it end within the home, the parish, the diocese; for, the field is the world.

Some Common Mistakes

BY THE REV. FRED'K S. JEWELL, D. D.

III.

SIXTH. It is a mistake to assume for a moment that those who object to expending money on foreign missions, on the alleged ground that we have so many at home who are practically heathen, are really concerned about the conversion of the latter, and are always ready to contribute to the cause of home missions. Generally, nothing of the kind. They are not pleading for the home work, but are only opposing the work abroad; under an ingenious and plausible subterfuge, making against both. Their course reminds one of the memorable protest and plea of Judas, "Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred pence and given to the poor?" Honest Judas, benevolent Judas! Flimsy mask! How easily it was torn off! This he said not because he cared for the poor, but because he thought of the purse.

SEVENTH. It is a mistake, and very near an impertinence, to ask and expect the Church to give seceders letters of dismission and recommendation to any of the denominations; for she is not in communion with any of them. All that she can give is a formal certificate of enrollment on the parish records, as a communicant, and of exemption from any known cause for discipline up to the time of application for a letter. A certificate of good standing that is of any value cannot well be granted; for consistent good character as a communicant breaks down when the person resolves to abandon the Church for any other religious body. To do this last is at once to commit the sin of unfaithfulness to vows, and schism against the Body of Christ. In Confirmation the communicant entered into the most solemn vows with both God and the Church, and not with any one of a group of denominations. From those vows the Church alone cannot release him, for she is only one of the parties to the covenant, and God gives no sign of His consent to such a retraction and release. Hence, while it may not be counted in the parish report to the diocesan council, the name of a communicant once on the roll of communicants of the Church, remains there, subject only to the appended notes—deceased, removed, suspended, lapsed, or schismatic. In either of the last three cases, the communicant is not, and cannot be, certified as in good standing.

EIGHTH. It is a mistake, characteristic of little learning and large assurance, to suppose that a rambling, off-hand talk, however fluent, is extempore preaching. The free and easy gamboling of the colt in the pasture is a long way off from a proper trot in the harness, or a finished run in the race course. Few minds are full enough, fertile enough, methodical enough, and self-controlled enough—in short every way intellectually and linguistically masterful enough, to speak wisely and well impromptu, or even extempore. He who without a fair share of these pre-requisites, attempts such impromptu speaking, supposing it to be true extempore preaching, should remember that it is nowhere recorded that the Lord ever opened the mouth of more than one ass in apt and effective speech.

Letters to the Editor

THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH

To the Editor of The Living Church:

It seems indeed time that the priesthood should become alive to the danger of the people through such imputations as those of the Rev. M. K. Schermerhorn, reprinted from a daily paper in your issue of Nov. 11th, with the Rev. Alban Richey's excellent comments.

There can be nothing more contemptible than to steal the good name of any man, and for one with the outward authority of the priestly office to deliberately impugn the honesty of his fellows in such a vague way, and in the public press, has much the appearance of the traitor.

The reflex effect of such suggestions must be one of extreme danger. The doubt of the leader's faithfulness robs the army of courage and confidence. And these whispers of the few whose acceptance and adoption of ancient error instead of ancient truth have led them to condemn all who prefer to adhere to the tested standard of the Faith, not alone hurt the clergy, but disturb the minds of the people.

Thank God! we of the priesthood can stand in solid ranks and still proclaim our unshaken faith in the Church, and in her familiar forms of devotion.

We can believe, and teach as we believe, and find all that we need for ourselves, all that those committed to our care can need, in the established and inspired Word of God, and in the voice of the Church, guiding us through the Prayer Book.

JOHN MILLS GILBERT.

"PRAYER BOOK RIGMAROLE"

To the Editor of The Living Church:

When we consider that the author of an article in THE LIVING CHURCH of the 11th of November, taken from the New York Sun, with the above caption, is the same who has recently sent a prospectus throughout the Church advertising "Renascent Christianity," which claims to foreshadow that of the twentieth century, we need not be surprised at this attack upon the Prayer Book.

In St. Paul's valedictory address at Miletus, which we find written in the 20th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, are these words: "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to the flock over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the Church of God, which He hath purchased with His own blood. For I know this, that after my departure shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them." These words came unbidden to my lips after reading the article referred to, especially in connection with the prospectus which I had received. For whether St. Paul had in mind the false teachers already in the Christian Church or not, certainly his prediction is abundantly fulfilled in our own day, for the ominous characteristics of the unbelief now are that it is within the Church, in the pulpit, and at the very altars. It is not now the bold and defiant foes of the Faith we have to fear, the Ingersolls who openly reject the Bible and God, but the avowed friends of the Bible and the Gospel, the higher critics, so-called, men in Holy Orders, men who have sworn to defend the Faith, yet who by their rash and irreverent criticism are tearing the Bible to pieces, unsettling the very foundations, and destroying the faith of thousands in this Book as inspired of God in the Holy Ghost.

But we may well be amazed at the audacity of this writer, who though a comparative stranger in the Church, goes back on the Bible and the Prayer Book, and assumes to formulate a new Faith for the twentieth century; who condemns the whole House of Bishops for their indorsement of the Sacred Scriptures as the "Word of God," and stigmatizes the Prayer Book as a "rigmarole" of "traditional errors," and in its lectionary selecting portions to be read that are "inhuman, indecent, and false." We might well ask who is this man that arraigns the fidelity and wisdom of the whole Anglican Church? What are his credentials? "On what meat does he feed?" From whence is his source of knowledge and inspiration? Is he a second Daniel come to judgment, or is he the echo of the higher critics of the Briggs stamp?

No book agent can equal the conceit and assurance of the author of the prospectus referred to—his audacious criticism of the Bible and Prayer Book, his sweeping assertions as to doctrines and creeds; his reflections on the honesty of those who hold to the old paths or traditional beliefs; his utter disregard of history and authority; his condemnation of men in the Church eminent for learning, for wisdom and piety, and above all, his ambition to originate a new religion, a new theology, and a new Church which will be better adapted to the twentieth century, better than the old Faith, the old Bible, the old Gospel, which were not originated by man, but given to the Church by the Spirit of the living God. Was there ever seen or heard in the Church before such intolerable conceit and presumption as this?

There are numbers of men and women in the Church who do not now pretend to believe what a score of years ago was supposed to be fundamental truth, and multitudes of others who are wavering and uncertain as to what is true or false in religion. What is the cause? Mainly the so-called "Higher Criticism" of the day. The criticism which tears the Bible into fragments; the criticism which relegates a great deal of its history to the region of myths and fables; the criticism, in short, which utterly destroys its authority as a Divine Revelation. I speak what I know. I speak what I hear on all sides. Only the other day one of my most intelligent parishioners who had fallen away from church attendance, speaking of the indifference and unbelief that prevail, said: "The people do not know what to think or believe when ministers themselves are rejecting portions of the Bible, and the critics make everything uncertain. In such a case what can you expect of the common people?" What indeed can we expect when all this unbelief plays right into the hands of corrupt human nature, which wants to follow its own "sweet will," irrespective of judgment or retribution?

As for the Prayer Book, we regard the writer referred to as either ignorant of its contents or incapable of appreciating its transcendent merits. But when a man goes back on the Bible, how can we expect him to appreciate the Prayer Book, which is fairly saturated with the Word of God? Dr. Adam Clark, the distinguished Methodist commentator, said that "next to the translation of the Bible in the English language, the greatest work of the Reformation was the Prayer Book." And only a short time since the Rev. Dr. Parker, of London, the leading Non-conformist preacher of England, speaking of liturgical worship, recommended the Prayer Book as a model, as altogether superior to any other form of service.

We know what the modern critics claim, that they are only trying to get at the truth. This is all well enough. We all want the truth, and none of us are afraid of the light. But we do not want mere speculations, guesses, and assumptions. It is the sheerest nonsense to say that all the learning and scholarship are on the side of the critics. It would indeed be a very sorry showing if such were the case, for new discoveries in the Eastern archaeological researches are proving almost every day that the Bible is right, and the critics wrong. And some have the honesty to acknowledge it, as Harnack, for example, the foremost scholar of the advanced school of critics in Europe, frankly admits that many of his conclusions were wrong which he held ten years ago; about the time, in fact, when nearly all the higher critics claimed that Moses could not have been the author of the Pentateuch, because there was no literature in Egypt at that time; yet it has been demonstrated since that there was a high state of civilization and culture in Egypt at least a thousand years before Moses. But we suppose the "perverse things" will continue to be said, and that "wicked men and seducers will wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived," for this is precisely what is predicted shall come to pass in the "perilous times" that indicate the last days of this age or dispensation. Still this does not relieve us from bearing witness to the evil, and contending manfully for the "Faith once delivered to the saints." Yes! delivered to the saints of old, and not to theological adventurers and ecclesiastical charlatans of the present day. Do I speak too sharply? If so, I ask pardon. But how can we speak too plainly or too sharply, when the whole Church is arraigned, the Bible virtually rejected, the Prayer Book slandered, and the honesty and sincerity of numbers of the clergy questioned, if not absolutely denied, who are loyal to their vows and faithful to their obligations as ministers and stewards of the mysteries of Almighty God?

THE EVENING SERVICE

To the Editor of The Living Church:

It is not a subject of modern concern which your correspondent complains of. I think I may say we have tried here every possible device to get a congregation in the evening. We have the same service as in the morning, and if music would fill a church, it would be crowded, but we have possibly 300 in the congregation.

Some years ago I felt that the Prayer Book was a hindrance to the strangers who form the majority of the evening congregation; therefore, with the Bishop's consent, we printed a form of evening service only, with eight of the selections of Psalms, and a hundred and fifty of the most popular hymns, and this book we have used for some years, but it is of no avail. The best results have been reached, first, when we had a very capable director of St. Andrew's Brotherhood, who was also director of the Young Men's Christian Association, and through him fully one hundred and fifty young men were added to the evening congregation. Then last year we found that by having vespers at five o'clock, which I considered satisfied the Prayer Book requirements, we had in the evening an evangelical service, discarding the Prayer Book altogether, and singing Gospel hymns out of the Hymnal, with our usual choir, expounding the lessons, and preaching a straightforward Gospel sermon on the Epistle and Gospel for the day. This plan possibly added one hundred to the usual three hundred. This is my experience, and the conclusions that I have drawn are these: First, that owing to the servant difficulty, the parents and children have to remain at home at night, that the help may go out. This has had a great deal to do with establishing the habit of non-attendance at the evening service, for the class which composes the bulk of our Church congregations are the employers of help. What we call the middle class are deterred from coming to our churches, first, by the form we use, and then, alas, the formalism which is usually too evident in the pulpit. They do not comprehend the duty of worship; the sermon or instruction does not arouse them, it is not real enough for either one or the other, and therefore forms no attraction.

Secondly, they dislike to go to a church frequented by a class with which they do not socially mix. They feel uncomfortable and strangers; they denounce the Church as cold, and avoid it. The Methodists and the Baptists attract all of the same class, and have large evening congregations, and I am sorry to say they have not hesitated to stoop to cater to the masses by attempting entertainment rather than instruction and "plowing up the fallow ground."

Another serious cause of absence from public worship at this end of the century, is the effect Higher Criticism has had in discrediting the Bible with that "mixed multitude" which follows God's people. These higher critics have done more harm in discrediting the Bible than Tom Paine and Bob Ingersoll, and all the rest of that ilk. They have put opinion for certainty, and pulled down what was wholesome, and built up nothing. But they have succeeded in leaving upon the popular mind the impression that the Bible is no longer the Word of God, as it professes to be and, therefore, its commands and its warnings they have robbed of their strength. The first step by which the Adversary secured the fall of man, was flinging a doubt upon God's Word. "Yea," said the subtle beast, "Hath God said?" The insinuation opened the door, and sin came.

I see nothing for it, therefore, but personal visiting, direct application to attend, a warm welcome, a hearty, simple service, a practical explanation of God's Word, an earnest appeal, and if that will not secure a congregation, nothing will.

A PUZZLING QUESTION

To the Editor of The Living Church:

I quote from the current number of your paper (folio 616) as follows: "The Rev. Chas. A. Briggs, D. D., has resumed his work of preparing students for the Presbyterian ministry," etc. I ask you, in all kindness and sincerity, to explain this, to me, paradoxical statement. I confess to much ignorance in ecclesiastical matters, being simply an Episcopalian, but interested sufficiently to ask why an Episcopal divine should be "preparing students for the Presbyterian ministry." C. O. WOODHOUSE.

New York City, Nov. 6, 1899.

[We referred to the fact that Dr. Briggs retains his professorship at the Union Theological Seminary, which, unless we are mistaken, is chiefly devoted to the preparation of students for the Presbyterian ministry. Why he should be doing this is a question we are unable to answer. It rests with the Bishop and Standing Committee of the diocese of New York.—ED. L. C.]

Personal Mention

The rector emeritus of St. Paul's, Cheltenham, Pa., the Rev. E. W. Appleton, D. D. (address Ashbourne, Pa.), will make his home in Ogontz Park, near Elkins Station, on the Philadelphia & Reading R. R.

The Rev. R. Heber Barnes has resigned the rectorship of St. John's church, Northern Liberties, Philadelphia, and accepted the appointment as one of the assistants at Old Christ church, in the same city.

The Rev. W. H. Barnes who for six years has been priest-in-charge of St. Paul's church, College Point, L. I., has accepted a unanimous call to the rectorship of St. Barnabas church, Brooklyn, and will enter on his duties Dec. 1st.

The Rev. L. C. Birch has resigned the rectorship of St. Jude's church, Brunswick, Ga.

The Ven. Harry Cassil, Archdeacon of Savannah, should be addressed at Brunswick, Ga.

The Rev. Otway Colvin has accepted the rectorship of Christ church, Cape Girardeau, Mo.

The Rev. James G. Cameron, for six years in charge of the church of the Holy Cross, New York, has resigned.

The vestry of St. Paul's church, Cheltenham, Pa., have unanimously elected the former assistant, the Rev. J. Thompson Cole, rector of the parish. His postoffice address is Ogontz, Pa.

The Rev. H. M. Dumbell, rector of St. Paul's, Brooklyn, has accepted a unanimous election to the rectorship of St. James', Great Barrington, Mass.

The Rev. Thomas Duncan, D. D., has accepted the rectorship of St. James' church, Bedford, Pa.

The Rev. James C. Elliott has accepted the charge of St. John's church, Long Island City, N. Y.

Post-Chaplain John S. Seibold, U. S. A., has been retired from active service and placed on the retired list of the army. His address for the present is, 82 Prospect av., Buffalo, N. Y.

The Rev. Pelham Williams, D. D., has accepted the chaplaincy of the House of Mercy, New York. Address, after Dec. 1st, "Ironwood-on-the-Hudson."

The Rev. Chas. Walkley, chaplain U. S. Army, has been detailed for duty with the 47th Regiment, U. S. Volunteer Infantry, in the Philippine Islands.

Official

The Rev. Alexander W. Seabreeze, M. A., Trinity rectory, Fort Wayne, Ind., is president of the Standing Committee, of the diocese of Michigan City.

THE annual meeting of the American Church Missionary Society will be held at the Church Missions House, New York city, N. Y., at 3:30 P. M., on Wednesday, Nov. 22, 1899.

W. DUDLEY POWERS, General Secretary.

ST. MARGARET'S HOME for discharged women prisoners, Chicago, will be open for Thanksgiving donations on Tuesday, Nov. 28th. This house is connected with the City Mission work of the diocese of Chicago.

JOSEPH RUSHTON, Chief of Staff,
19 South Peoria st., Chicago.

APPLICATION blanks for joint annual clergy certificates entitling the holders to the reduced fares accorded to clergymen by the railway lines operating in the territory of the Central Passenger Association, during the year 1900, are in the hands of the various ticket agents.

The card clergy certificate which has been used for three years will be discontinued, and in its stead will be issued a book certificate of convenient size to be carried in the pocket, neatly bound in leather, containing 100 consecutively numbered orders or requests for clergy tickets, one of which the holder of the certificate will be required to sign and deliver to the ticket agent for each ticket purchased.

The principal reason necessitating a change in the form of the certificate is as follows: Under the old system, the lines constituting the Clergy Bureau have no knowledge of the annual certificates issued by this office, while on the other hand, this office has been unable, without great inconvenience and expense, to obtain a record of the passage tickets issued by the agents on the annual certificates. As a result, it has been possible for unscrupulous persons to counterfeit the card certificate by the photographic process with comparatively little fear of detection. It will readily be seen that this will be impossible under the new plan, as the agent will have a signed and numbered slip for each ticket issued, which slip will eventually reach this office, be compared with our reports, and, if spurious, the fraud immediately detected.

The cost of printing and mailing the book certificate will be many times greater than that of issuing and distributing the old-style card, and it will also be necessary to augment the clerical force of the Clergy Bureau. To meet the added expense, it is deemed necessary to increase the fee required from those applying for the certificates from fifty cents to one dollar. The holders of certificates who exhaust the entire 100 requests and desire an additional supply, may obtain same by sending the covers of the original book to the undersigned, accompanied by a remittance of fifty cents, covering the cost of issuing the new credential.

The annual clergy certificate of this Association will be issued on proper application to those coming within the requirements of the Clergy Rules, residing in Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Michigan, Missouri, Ohio, Wisconsin, W. Virginia, and also in the following cities of New York and Pennsylvania, and points west thereof in the latter States: Allegheny, Pittsburgh, Erie, Suspension Bridge, Niagara Falls, Buffalo, and Salamanca; also at such points in the Province of Ontario as may be authorized by the roads operating therein.

Time clergy certificates, available for a limited period, will be issued to proper beneficiaries residing at any point in the United States or Canada who have occasion to remain more than thirty days in the territory of this association.

Further particulars concerning trip permits may be obtained by application to local railway agents, or to the undersigned,

Ordinations

Nov. 9th, Bishop Walker ordained to the diaconate in St. James' church, Buffalo, Mr. C. E. Byram who formerly served as a Methodist minister most acceptably. For the past six months he has been lay-assistant in St. James' parish, and will now succeed the Rev. John S. Littell as curate of St. Paul's. At the ordination the candidate was presented by the Rev. Chas. H. Smith, D. D., and the sermon was preached by Archdeacon Bragdon.

On Sunday, Nov. 12th, in St. Luke's church, Germantown, Philadelphia, the Rev. Archibald Campbell Knowles was elevated to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Nicholson, Bishop of Milwaukee, who officiated by consent of the Bishop of Pennsylvania. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Henry R. Gummy, and the sermon preached by the Rev. Dr. Samuel Upjohn; both, with the Rev. Messrs. D. I. Odell and W. C. Emhardt, united in the imposition of hands. A very large congregation was present. The vested choir rendered one of Schubert's Masses, with the Benedictus and Agnus Dei from Gounod's "St. Cecilia." The Rev. Mr. Knowles is one of the curates of St. Luke's, and will now become priest in-charge of St. Alban's church, Olney, which parish is an off-spring of St. Luke's.

I Thank Him

BY MRS. FRANK A. BRECK

I thank the Lord for shepherding—
For bounteous table spread,
For joy that can in sorrow sing,
And make me comforted.

For all His many blessings free,—
For love that will not change;—
For sight that can the future see
Beyond my mortal range.

For all the chastening that He sends,
For unfulfilled desire:
For country, freedom, home, and friends,
For clothing, food, and fire.

I thank the Lord for work, for trust,
For every answered prayer;
For love, that knowing I am dust,
Gives strength my cross to bear.

I thank Him for His leading, though
I may not understand
The reason he would have me go
In ways I have not planned.

He knows my heart might often crave
What hides a sting within,
And so denies what if He gave
Would lead my soul to sin.

I thank Him, then, whatever befall,
For good or seeming ill;
Unbounded love runs through it all,
And works His perfect will.

Pen-and-Ink-lings

ANOTHER Californian (we gave an anecdote from one last week), the Rev. B. W. R. Tayler, of Los Angeles, tells a good story, which has the merit of being perfectly true: "I was in San Francisco a few days ago, and went to the Occidental Hotel for my lunch. As I took a seat in the dining-room, I overheard two Irish waiters engaged in whispered conversation as to what particular religious body I represented. 'Say, Pat,' said one to the other, 'is he a priest or a minister?' Pat scrutinized me very closely, but apparently was unable to decide. Again came the query: 'Say, Pat, is he a priest or a minister?' 'Ah,' said Pat, 'be aisy now; sure he is an Episcopal gentleman!'"

BLEAK HOUSE is about to be sold by auction. It is among the best known of Dickens's landmarks, for here during several summers the novelist resided, until, in fact, driven away by itinerant minstrelsy on the beach, in 1849. The real name of the curiously ugly building, perched on its windy cliff-top overlooking the town and harbor, is Fort House, but as "Bleak House" it is always known, and still keeps an unwarranted reputation as being the original of the mansion in the novel of that name, despite the fact that Dickens places it at St. Albans, in Hertfordshire.

THE inventor of the Linotype typesetting machine now in general use, Ottmar Mergenthaler, died in Baltimore, recently, at the age of forty-five. He was born in Germany, and after his arrival in this country, was at first employed as a clock maker.

He was never a printer, but had a knowledge of electrical and other machinery when he began, in 1876, to devise a machine which would set type. Ten years later he produced the first successful example of the machine which was to revolutionize the art of printing. He had been a poor man, and his invention gave him a comfortable fortune.

A RATHER curious sign in Grantham is called the "Living Sign." It is a hive of live bees fixed on a post standing on the pavement; between the post and the inn, there is a board fixed, with the following verse of poetry on each side:—

"Stop, traveler, stop; this wondrous sign explore,
And say when thou hast viewed it o'er and o'er,
Grantham, now two good rarities are thine,
A lofty steeple and a living sign."

MAURICE THOMPSON, in The Independent, considers it without question that "mere literary art never before was quite as perfect as it now is, unless we must except the highest flowering period of Greek poetry." He says:

Note well, just here, that I confine this statement strictly within the limits of verbal style—diction—the art of writing with the effect that may be called literary symmetry. We have perfected phraseology, raised the paragraph to the highest power, refined and purified word-combinations, until what we may call literary color is rarefied beyond the possibility of further rose-misty diffusion. Moreover, our cleverness as logolepts, as rhythmists, as extractors of word essences, could scarcely be carried to a higher pitch, or more perfect results, and we have a plethora of word-music in both prose and verse.

THE same writer goes on to say that "the fact that the art of poetry is falling into a spurious mood, that poets are becoming on one hand more and more mere strummers of fine verbal chords, and on the other hand, mere 'slingers of slang,' presents to the highest critical conscience a task from which any man or woman who values popularity may well shrink." "The permanent criterion can be satisfied in its imperious demand by nothing short of absolute beauty of form, imbued with absolute beauty of spirit!"

PRESIDENT KRUGER is, by his marriage, actually connected with the great Cardinal Richelieu whose name, as everyone knows, was DuPlessis. Kruger was a young man when he met and married a member of the DuPlessis family, the descendant of a French surgeon (the near relative of the Cardinal) who went to the Cape in the seventeenth century, in the employment of the Dutch East India Company. At her death, he chose a second wife from the same family. It was apropos of this marriage that General Joubert made a jest in his imperfect English. The president, he said, was a man of "double duplesity."

ON the exterior of St. Anna's church, New Orleans, there is a marble slab, and on this slab is a quotation from the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds—"I believe in the One Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church." This church being situated in the French Roman Catholic district, the quotation to which we refer has often been the subject of criticism. Its presence, and the criticism it occasions among Romanists, have afforded an opportunity to make clear the legitimate right of the Church to the title as found in the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds. Lately, two Roman Catholic Sisters found fault with the quotation, as not being applicable to the Protestant Episcopal Church, and voiced their adverse criticism in an argument with the sexton of St. Anna's. The sexton who is a communicant, opened a Prayer Book, pointed to the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds, showed them the Prayer in the Visitation office, in which the petition is offered to die "in the communion of the Catholic Church," and finally opened the Hymnal and pointed to verse 3 of Hymn 492. Whether the Sisters were convinced or not, he does not know; but if they were not, this intelligent sexton is not to blame.

A Portrait in Mosaic

AT Pompeii has been found a beautiful mosaic pavement which formed the centre of the flooring of a small bedroom, evidently the room of the mistress of the house. The border of the pavement was made of common flags, then came a rectangle of mosaic-work composed of small squares of different kinds of stones. In the centre of this flooring was placed a beautiful little mosaic picture, framed in a narrow border of travertine, and representing the head and bust of a woman. Undoubtedly it is the portrait of the mistress of the house. She is a young woman, of matronly appearance, and wears her black, wavy hair in a large coil at the back of her head, bound around with a wide black ribbon. In her ears are pearl earrings set in gold, and around her neck is a rich, pearl necklace with a gold clasp set with emeralds. Her dark dress is open in the neck, and shows a white veil or fichu embroidered in gold. Deep, black eyes, full of expression and half-veiled, look out from under long eyelashes; the small mouth, half-opened with a smile, shows white teeth between the red lips. All this is done in very small mosaic cubes. The preservation of this important mosaic is almost perfect, the execution is remarkably good, and, what is of especial value, it is a portrait from life.—Self-Culture Magazine.

The Peasants' War in Germany

THE masses against the classes is a modern phrase, but the fact that the phrase implies is by no means modern; through all history we find examples of the rising of the downtrodden masses against the privileged classes. One of the most notable of these examples was the revolt of the peasants of Germany, in the sixteenth century, against the knights and nobles. It was short, fierce, and bloody, and marked by horrible excesses on both sides. Historians and historical essayists have studied this revolt from all sides, and endeavored to fix the blame. Much has been written on the subject, and there are almost as many views as writers.

The latest utterance on this much-discussed historical question is: "The Peasants' War in Germany, 1525-1526," by E. Belfort Bax, published in London by Swan Sonnenschein & Co., and in New York by The Macmillan Company. It is the second volume of a series of three on the social side of the German Reformation, the first being "German Society at the Close of the Middle Ages," and the third (not yet published), "The Rise and Fall of the Anabaptists." Mr. Bax's sympathies are on the side of the peasants, and he gives quite a vivid picture of their sufferings and oppressions at the hands of the nobility, both upper and lower. He devotes much space to the recital and analysis of the causes that led to the revolt, together with his opinions and deductions therefrom. This leaves him less space for the actual recital of the events than we should have preferred. We care to know more what happened than what Mr. Bax thought about it. Nevertheless, the reader will obtain a very good idea of the course of the revolt up to its final and bloody suppression.

The revolt started in 1524 purely as an agrarian movement, and had it been confined to this, there would have been little but sympathy with it; but, as so often happens, the religious question became involved, so that the struggle finally became one of life or death for the Church. The peasants became divided into two parties, moderates and extremists. The former tried to control the movement, and gain relief from oppressive secular laws and customs for the oppressed peasants, and a number of the lesser nobility joined them with this object; but the extremists defeated this object by their mad attack upon the Church, and, indeed, upon religion in general. Mr. Bax gives numerous examples of the sacking of churches and monasteries, of the murder and robbery of ecclesiastics, and the violent excesses perpetrated by this party of the peasants. Naturally, the better class that had assisted the movement at first, withdrew, and the inevitable result followed. The revolt was put down with cruel certainty. On the side of the classes there were atrocities and reprisals, no less than on the side of the masses. This was inevitable. Mr. Bax makes this perfectly clear, though he tries hard to justify the acts of the insurrectionists while condemning similar acts on the part of the knights and nobles. His account of the horrible siege and massacre at Weinsberg is a good example of his method of treatment. Here eight thousand peasants stormed a walled town, defended by seventy five men, under the command of Count Ludwig von Helfenstein. The latter was a brave young soldier, of twenty-seven years of age, who had already seen fifteen years' service in war. He knew nothing of the refinements of modern warfare, but believed that the first duty of soldiers was to kill the enemy. When the eight thousand had conquered the seventy-five, every one of the latter, including the Count himself, was put to death in the most cruel and degrading manner possible. The Count's wife was held by two peasants so that she had to witness her husband's torture, and one of the peasants flung a knife at her, which struck her two-year-old son in her arms, the blood of the babe spurting up into its mother's face. When the Count fell at last, a peasant woman, known as "Black Hoffman," seized a knife and plunged it into his body, and then smeared the shoes and lances of the peasants with the blood, or "fat," as she called it. Then the town was given up to plunder. Excesses of every kind were indulged in; women carried away the priests' vestments and acolytes' garments, and cut them up for clothes for themselves and their children. This took place on Easter Sunday, 1525.

The result of such excesses as these, was that the forces of law and order took swift and successful measures to suppress the revolt. It fell almost as quickly as it rose, and now the fierce and bloody work was on the other side. Mr. Bax makes much of this, and omits no opportunity to arouse the thrill of horror in the reader, and in reading these horrible details, we are apt to forget the excesses of the other side, until we turn back a few pages and find that the earlier course of the revolt was marked by the same cruelties and ferocities committed by the peasants.

There is an abundance of material in German on this episode in German history, but little in English; Mr. Bax's book is an important contribution to an important subject. It is an interesting book, but the reader must discriminate and bear in mind the point of view from which it was written.

Book Reviews and Notices

Memoir of the Rev. W. Sparrow Simpson, D.D., Rector of St. Vedast's and Sub-Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, London. Compiled and edited by the Rev. W. J. Sparrow Simpson. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Pp. 200. Price, $1.50.

The life of this good man was not an eventful one, but a quiet round of prayer and study, such as many English clergy are permitted to enjoy. Such lives are almost unknown in America. Most of it was lived within the shadow of the great metropolitan cathedral, and in close association with the great men who have made it so tremendous an influence for good in our day. In this biography we see how wisely and patiently he and they worked to revive at St. Paul's the highest type of cathedral life. As librarian, it was his work to gather the materials for the history of St. Paul's, and put them into permanent and readable form. As succentor, he, together with Sir John Stainer, developed the splendid musical services and brought them up to the highest standard of excellence. His was a most useful life, with a character of rare sweetness and light. It would do some of our busy, bustling workers good to read this story of a quiet life.

One of Those Coincidences, and Ten Other Stories. By Julian Hawthorne, Count Leo Tolstoy, Charles C. D. Roberts, Florence M. Kingsley, and others. Illustrated. New York and London: Funk & Wagnalls Company.

A book of readable short stories is always sure of a welcome. The first in this collection is by Julian Hawthorne—a tale of the late Cuban War—and is eminently characteristic of the writer. The reader is assured that, remarkable as it is, "there is more fact than fancy in the narrative." There are other stories, ranging from picnics to fighting; from tales of palmistry and dual existences to love and laundry work. There are eleven stories in all, by as many different authors, and there are eighteen illustrations.

The Tragedy of Dreyfus. By G. W. Steevens. New York: Harper & Brothers. Price, $1.25.

To the man who has for the past few years struggled conscientiously with column after column of Dreyfus news in the daily papers, only to find himself ever more confused by the mass of conflicting details and the statements and misstatements of incompetent, inconsequent, and perfidious witnesses, this book of Mr. Steevens will be heartily welcome. After a brief review of the case in its entirety, the author gives us a dramatic recital of the proceedings of the court-martial at Rennes, and concludes with a very able and thoughtful consideration of the effect of the case and of the verdict upon the French nation. To the main body of the book the author has added an appendix wherein he has collated the most significant facts selected from the mass of reports, depositions, and incidents, thereby aiding us largely to an appreciation and understanding of the trial at Rennes. On the whole, a more timely book, or one more thoroughly satisfactory in every detail regarding the Affaire Dreyfus, could hardly have appeared.

The House With Sixty Closets. A Christmas Story for Young Folks and Old Children. By Frank Samuel Child. With Illustrations by J. Randolph Brown. Boston: Lee & Shepard. Price, $1.

This is not a treatise on domestic architecture, designed to allure the housewife with ever an unsatisfied longing for "more closet room." It is all about a fine Colonial home, built a long time ago, by a good judge who lived in a certain old New England town. When he died, childless, the shabby old home was used for a parsonage—or part of it, for never was a minister found whose family was large enough to use it all. Finally there came a parson who had eight children of his own, and had adopted the seven belonging to his sister. We will let the author himself explain his purpose. He says: "I will first describe the house. Then I will tell something about the people that live in it. After that I will speak of the very strange things which happened there the night before Christmas." The "strange things that happened there" had a permanent influence upon the children who were living in what had once been the home of a great and good man. They felt that they must go forth into the world as his manly and womanly representatives.

This handsome volume is one of the Art Lovers Series; the other titles being, "The Madonna in Art," "Christ," "Angels," "Child Life," and "Love in Art."—six volumes. The author of the work before us is well known by her handbook of "Legendary and Mythological Art." Her present work is well done, in description and arrangement, and the publishers have made all very attractive by their excellent taste. The illustrations are numerous and good, being half-tone pictures from celebrated paintings by the great masters. Following the introductory chapter, which discusses the general features of the subject, we have the following: "The Evangelists"; "The Apostles"; "The Fathers of the Church"; "Patron Saints"; the great Virgins of the Latin Church, and other saints important in art. The appendix gives a helpful explanation of the symbolism proper to representations of the saints. A full index closes a very complete and practical treatise on the subject which never loses its interest to devout readers.

Told Under the Cherry Trees. A Book for the Young. By Grace LeBaron. Illustrated by Amy Brooks. Boston: Lee & Shepard. Price, $1.

The later chapters of this story will be less enjoyed perhaps than the first, both by younger and older readers. The scene is laid in Cherryvale. Most of the interest centres about an old pump, the valued friend of the village folk who use it for a bulletin board, and daily gather about it. There are a certain directness and quaint simplicity about the book that engage one's interest, but the charm wanes after the ninth chapter. The ten and eleventh, dealing with events twenty years after, were better left unwritten, as a very satisfactory and appropriate ending has been reached with the little hero's departure from Cherryvale. Externally, the book is attractive—bound in green, with a cover design of bright red cherries.

The Poetic and Dramatic Works of Alfred Lord Tennyson. Household Edition. With One Hundred and Twenty-seven Illustrations. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Company. Price, $1.50.

More than a quarter of a century ago, the predecessors of Houghton, Mifflin & Company issued their household edition of Tennyson. It included less than half the present number of poems. From time to time, in later issues, new poems were added to the table of contents. It has now been determined to issue a new household edition, on practically the same lines as the original one, though from the text of the Cambridge edition, and with entirely new plates of larger type. The carefully selected illustrations are by American, English, and French artists, Millais, Rossetti, LaFarge, Vedder, and others. The result is the most thoroughly illustrated Tennyson ever offered to the public, one which in a single volume includes the entire body of the poet's works. There is undoubtedly need of just such an edition as the admirable plan of the publishers has provided for the general reader and student.

Christian Life, A Response, with other Retreat Addresses and Sermons. By the Rev. George Congreve. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Pp. 278. Price, $1.50.

Father Congreve is well-known as a cultured and devout member of the Cowley Order. In this volume he has collected some of the fruits of his labors and put them into permanent form. The contents are of the most varied character, ranging all the way from short scraps of advice and instruction, to sermons and addresses of the weightiest sort. Several of the sermons, notably those upon "The Relation of the Human Body, Soul, and Spirit, to the Creator," are of solid value. Many of them are appropriate to the fasts and festivals of the Church. All of them are marked by a high standard of literary and devotional excellence. One of their most noticeable features is the way in which scenes from nature are made to illustrate the movements of divine grace.

Young April. By Egerton Castle. Illustrated by A. B. Wenzell. London and New York: The Macmillan Company. Price, $1.50.

Seldom has one the pleasure of reading as charming a book as this. Mr. Castle's touch is the perfection of delicacy. Each character stands out as clean cut as a cameo, and after the innumerable stories of the stilted doings of people in high places, Mr. Castle blows us a very spring breeze of freshness and originality. He sings of arms and men as well as love, and all with equal satisfaction to his readers. His book teems with the spirit of action and the beating of hearts, and alas! the breaking of one, and is, withal, a situation so entirely new and of such great dramatic force, that it seems a little green literary oasis in the great sandy desert of the ordinary world of fiction. The illustrations by Wenzell were surely done in his happiest mood, and serve to impress indelibly on the eye the artistic effect of the word painting.

Mackinac and Lake Stories. By Mary Hartwell Catherwood. With Illustrations. New York and London: Harper & Brothers. Price, $1.50.

These dozen stories by Mrs. Catherwood are all entertaining in plot, and most attractively told; "The King of Beaver," and "Beaver Lights," are tales of the Mormons. They reveal many facts concerning the Mormon ways of dealing with their own households and those of the Gentiles. "The Mother of Honore" has an enjoyable atmosphere of humor pervading it. "The Blue Man," and "The Indian on the Trail" are far from commonplace in idea and treatment. The book is attractively bound, in two tones of brown and black, and has eleven illustrations.

Deficient Saints. By Marshall Saunders. Boston: L. C. Page & Co. Price, $1.50.

This is a well-told story of Maine and its people. The fabulae personae are chiefly members of a fanatical division of the sect of United Brethren, and the story hinges on the marriage of the son of one of the elect women of this sect to a young society girl, and bringing her to live in his mother's house in a small Maine village. Now come in a dissatisfied young minister and a rich old maid. A readable book, written in a lucid and interesting style.

Our Sisters in India. By the Rev. E. Storrow, formerly of the Calcutta Mission of the London Missionary Society. With thirty illustrations. New York and Chicago: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, $1.25.

This book is the outcome of much careful labor and study, as well as the result of a personal residence in India. It is a compendium of detailed and valuable information regarding the condition of the native women. There are a large number of illustrations. The closing chapters discuss the remedy, and recount some of the efforts made to benefit these women, and the encouragements thereto. Members of the Woman's Auxiliary should not fail to read this book.

Christmas at Deacon Hackett's. By James Otis. New York and Boston: Thomas Y. Crowell & Co. Price, 50 cents.

Christmas at Deacon Hackett's was spent by three city waifs who had enjoyed an outing there the previous summer, through the aid of the Fresh Air Fund. The pictures of the three, Luke, Gerry, and Tom—as they appeared when on their best behavior—adorn the cover of the book.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CHRISTMAS SERVICES

The special editions of the "Evening Prayer Leaflet" adapted for the Sunday School have become very popular.

Three different editions are now made, and numbered respectively as 62, 64, and 66. The latter is new this year. Each contains five carols and an arrangement for short service entirely from the Prayer Book. Samples on application. Those who have used the Services in former years need not hesitate to order the new one at once, as it is fully equal to its predecessors. Price, at the rate of $1.00 per hundred, postpaid. Address THE YOUNG CHURCHMAN CO., Milwaukee, Wis.

THANKSGIVING RATES VIA THE WABASH

On November 29th and 30th, the Wabash will sell Thanksgiving excursion tickets to points within 150 miles of Chicago at a fare and one-third for the round-trip. Return limit December 1st. Ticket Office, 97 Adams st., Chicago.

THE DISTINGUISHING CHARACTERISTIC OF THE VOCALION IS ITS EXQUISITE TONE

ORGANS BUILT on the Vocalion system are pre-eminently fitted for church services. They have a full, rich, diapason tone and a peculiar delicacy in the string registers, which make them of inestimable value as an accompaniment to the human voice.

The method of tone production is radically different from all others. It gives the pitch as a fixed quality, free reeds being used for the purpose. In connection with each reed there is a pipe or chamber through which the tone passes and which determines its quality. By this means the reed is given a smooth, fluty quality of tone as well as resonance and remarkable power.

The distinctive features of the Vocalion are

Tonal superiority;
Compactness of form in proportion to capacity.
Variety of registration;
And price.

We wish to call the attention of all church societies contemplating the purchase of an organ to our Style 22, a full description of which we shall be glad to furnish upon application. Send for Catalogue G.

Vocalions range in price from $275 upward.

Missions in Eden. Glimpses of Life in the Valley of the Euphrates. By Mrs. Crosby H. Wheeler. For forty years a missionary of the American Board in Harpoot, Turkey. New York & Chicago: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, $1.

It has been often said that people would become more interested in foreign missionary work if the missionaries told us of their difficulties as well as their successes, and the personal side of their experiences. Here we have a very interesting and graphic picture of travel and life in Turkey amongst the Armenians, and the receptivity of the people, as well as their faith and courage in the time of trial by the massacres. The Congregational missions are particularly connected with the story, but the account will interest all who read it.

The Enchanted Typewriter. By John Kendrick Bangs. Illustrated by Peter Newell. New York and London: Harper & Brothers. Price, $1.25.

The striking design on the cover of this book, and its straightforward title, prepare the reader for one of Mr. John Kendrick Bangs' whimsicalities. The story is told in the first person, and purports to be an account of the author's experience in holding nocturnal interviews with Xanthippe, Boswell, and other representatives of The Stygian Gazette.

The Miracles of Missions. (Third Series.) By Arthur T. Pierson, D.D. Illustrated. New York and London: Funk & Wagnalls Company. 12mo. Pp. 274. Price, cloth, $1. Paper, 35c.

Authentic records are here given of wonderful results in many fields of mission enterprise. There are stories of thrilling adventure and missionary heroism in the jungles of Africa, and of hardship and danger encountered in the vast forests of British America, each with impressive instances of answered prayer.

"SUNDAY READING FOR THE YOUNG," for the year 1900, comes in good time to take its accustomed place among the Christmas presents. The illustrations and decorations are excellent and abundant. We know of nothing so good in its way as this book, which is intended to furnish attractive and helpful and appropriate entertainment for a Sunday hour every week in the year.

"AMATEUR PHOTOGRAPHY," a practical guide for the beginner, by W. I. Lincoln Adams, has reached its fifth edition, revised and enlarged. It is not only a useful book for young practitioners, but it is also a very pretty book, containing many interesting specimens of the art concerning which it gives much practical and expert advice. The Baker & Taylor Company, New York. Price, $1.25. Paper cover, 75c.

MESSRS. HARPER & BROS. have published a comprehensive collection of "Favorite Songs and Hymns for School and Home," edited by J. P. McCaskey, compiler of the Franklin Square Song Collection. The name of the editor is an assurance of work well done. Four hundred and fifty of the world's best songs and hymns are brought together here, including national, sentimental, and religious songs. There is added a chapter on the elements of music.

THE latest issue of the Oxford Church Text Books is devoted to a history and explanation of the Thirty-nine Articles, by the Rev. B. J. Kidd, B. D., of Keble College, two volumes, 30 cents each. This series is very convenient, and presents subjects of great importance in a compact form, by writers of the highest ability and standing in the Church of England. It constitutes by itself a valuable theological library at small cost. New York: James Pott & Co.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE is gathering so many unstable souls to the worship of its delusion, that we are not surprised to see frequent protests and arraignments by those who have studied its theories, and have discovered their inconsistent and absurd propositions. Among recent publications which are inexpensive and worthy of attention, are "Christian Science and other Superstitions," by J. M. Buckley, LL.D., The Century Company, New York; "Christian Science Examined," by Henry Varley, and "Searchlights on Christian Science, a Symposium," Fleming H. Revell Company, Chicago.

New Music

From the house of Clayton F. Summy Company, Chicago, we have received a well-seeming edition of "Songs and Hymns for the Primary Sunday School," an every way worthy collection for use by the little ones, both as to text selection and choice in musical setting, much of which is by recognized composers fitted for this delicate task; the compilation and arrangement being the work of Frederica Beard; 25c., or $1.8 per hundred. Also from the same, "Christmas Songs of Many Nations," a musical entertainment for children, originated and compiled by Katherine Wallace Davis. Those familiar with the "Cradle Song of Many Nations" need only be told that this new issue is by the same author, but bears its own decided impress of novelty.

tween the British and Boers in South Africa. It is a photographic number almost entirely. Portraits of commanding officers appear on the front page, and the double page contains the most interesting places that figured in the war of '81, as well as the theatre of the present—Majuba Hill, the graves of the British on the battlefield of Amajuba, scenes in Kimberley, Pietermaritzburg, and Cape Town. There is a remarkable picture of Table Mountain, taken at one of the rare intervals when the "tablecloth" of clouds does not cover its top.

The Thanksgiving number of The Saturday Evening Post, in its stories, poems, pictures, and general articles, is the most attractive number of the magazine yet issued. Robert W. Chambers has a seasonable out-of-door story, entitled "The Hunter"—the romance of a poacher's pretty daughter. Other features are: Edwin Markham's latest poem, "The Lyric Seer"; "An Electrical Transaction,"—a tale of the Transvaal War, by Robert Barr; "At Dawn," by Octave Thanet, and "The Minister's Henhouse," a droll story by C. B. Loomis. Two notable articles in this number are "Lincoln as Candidate and President," by his old friend and political ally, Colonel A. K. McClure, and "Our New Prosperity," by Frank A. Vanderlip, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

The leading article, on "The Blue and White Niles," in The Edinburgh Review for October, is replete with information, apparently gathered at first hand about the little known Soudan, and the scene of Gen. Kitchener's operations. The article on "The November Meteors" is more luminous than those singular bodies themselves have proved to be to American observers. The life and work of the late Prince Bismarck are ably treated in a most interesting paper on some recently published biographies of that great statesman. One of the best articles in this number is that on "St. Vincent de Paul," the founder of the Congregation of the Mission of the Lazarists, and of the Sisters of Charity. His is one of the saintly lives that may be most profitably studied by Churchmen of the present day, and, to a large extent, imitated. There is a very good political article on "Great Britain and South Africa" closing this number.

The most notable articles in The Quarterly Review for October are "The Federation of Australia," "Leonardo da Vinci," "Scott and his French Pupils," "Studies of the 'Forty-five'," "The Future Conclave," and "British Supremacy in South Africa." The article on "The Future Conclave," is a piece of ecclesiastical gossip, very well told, about the cardinals of the Roman Church, and the possibilities or probabilities of this or that one being elected to succeed the aged Pope Leo XIII. at the next conclave. It is all very interesting speculation, but not very profitable. "Studies of the '45'" is an account, from several newly published sources, of the last Jacobite rising and the ill fortunes of Prince Charles Edward. The old story is very well re-told.

The Household

Thanksgiving

BY MRS. R. N. TURNER

Gathered here from o'er the seas,
In this land of light,
Where, with freedom's holy joy,
Every home is bright,
Let us render to our Lord
Grateful songs of praise,
And with all-adoring love
Our thanksgiving raise!

Never have our harvests ceased
Nor destroyed our hope,
Since our fathers long ago,
On this Western slope,
Raised their standard up aloft,
"Home and field for God!"
And the love of truth and right
Planted in the sod!

They are gathered to their rest,
But their voices still Speak from every harvest field,
Echo from each hill!
While the rugged mountains stand
Staunch and true and strong,
They will join with us and sing
Our Thanksgiving song!

In our own dear native land,
Voices glad and free
Sing from mountain-top and hill,
Valley, stream, and sea!
All the fields with plenty crowned,
Jubilant with song,
Up the radiant hills to God
Send their praise along!

A Victory Won

BY HOPE DARING

"TO think that such a beautiful, beautiful thing should come to me! It does seem as if it were too good to be true."

Bertha Harris was sitting up in bed. Just in front of her an open window looked out, through a little upper balcony, across the sun-lighted dimpling waters of Little Traverse Bay. The sun was a half-hour high, and the light, low-lying clouds in the east were still flushed with pink and amber.

After a moment more spent in drinking in the beauty of the scene, Bertha rose and went about her toilet.

The young girl was an orphan. Her home was with an aunt—a busy woman burdened with many cares and vexing little economies. Bertha was not dependent upon her aunt, there having been enough of Mr. Harris' property left to care for his daughter and fit her for teaching. Then she must earn her own living.

There was a rich old uncle in the family.

Growing Children

When children are growing they require an excessive amount of food, not only to supply the waste due to their active habits, but to supply constructive material to their growing frames. Cereal foods are among those necessary to the best growth and wheat is the best of the cereals.

CREAM OF WHEAT

is the most nutritious of the wheat food preparation, as it is free from the indigestible husk, contains only a little starch, which is the poorest of foods, and retains all the really nutrient elements.

Cream of Wheat Co., Minneapolis, Minn.

Woman's Best Friend Dirt's Worst Enemy

He was Bertha's great uncle, and had paid little attention to her, so she was much surprised at a letter which reached her a month before that July morning. This letter stated that Mr. Harris owned a cottage at Bay View, in the northern part of Lower Michigan. An excellent assembly and summer university was held there each year. Mr. Harris had rented his cottage, reserving a room for Bertha. She would be nominally under the care of Mrs. Van Tiner, the renter. Uncle Theodore had paid for a full term of vocal lessons for Bertha, bought her railroad ticket, arranged for her to take her meals at a cottage boarding-house, and sent a modest check to replenish her wardrobe.

This was her first day. "The beginning of everything," she said to herself, as a half-hour later she descended the steps.

Bertha's experience was one of the comparatively rare ones in which realization was all, or nearly all, that anticipation had promised. Both Professor Grant, the musical director, and Mrs. Le Vere, Bertha's teacher, were much interested in the young girl who added thorough and conscientious practice to talent of a somewhat remarkable order.

The pleasant intercourse with the girls at the conservatory, the fine lectures and concerts, the waters of the beautiful bay—these were perfect. The only cloud upon Bertha's sky was Mrs. Van Tiner. This lady, notwithstanding that she had consented to it, considered Bertha's presence an intrusion. She wanted the room the girl occupied.

One day, Mrs. Van Tiner's niece, Helene, came from Boston. The ladies were sitting on the porch, when Bertha came down the street. Helene's dull blue eyes scanned the slender figure and piquant dark face. "Who is that?" she asked.

Mrs. Van Tiner explained. Then the conversation drifted to other subjects.

A queer intimacy grew up between the two girls. It was of Helene's seeking. She had no maid, and often asked for the service of Bertha's deft fingers. This service the younger girl was too generous to refuse. Then Helene had received excellent musical training, and had heard many of the best musicians. Bertha was so eager to hear of these things that she was willing to bear Helene's airs of patronage.

The third week of the assembly, the oratorio, "The Messiah," was to be given, with a chorus of two hundred voices. Bertha was to be in the chorus.

"I am glad I have the white organdy," she said to herself, as she was walking from the conservatory to the cottage one morning. "Oh, it is all so delightful. I can never be grateful enough to Uncle Theodore. Mrs. Le Vere said to day that I ought to make music my life work. I wonder if I could earn money enough teaching school to carry on my studies."

She had stopped in the shade of a pine tree, and stood looking thoughtfully across the shining expanse of water that spread out before her. Something of the earnestness of life and labor thrilled the heart of the girl of sixteen.

"I believe I can," slowly. "I will try." Then a sudden light came into her clear brown eyes. "I don't need to worry. I will improve every chance, and if music is the best thing for me, He," with a reverent glance up at the calm blue sky which arched over the smooth water, "will open the way."

She walked on. When she ascended the steps leading to the veranda, Mrs. Van Tiner called out: "Come here, Bertha. Helene wants to know about the 'Messiah.' I think it very strange you have not told her."

Bertha let the implied rebuke pass, and began an enthusiastic account of the coming event. Helene interrupted her pettishly.

"Stupid. As if you could tell me anything about music. I just want to know to whom I shall go to see about entering the chorus. Don't look so surprised. I sang in the chorus last winter in Boston, and my dress was beautiful. I've sent home for it."

Bertha was surprised. Helene went quietly on with the violet she was embroidering on a lunch cloth, as if the whole matter was settled.

"But the places are filled, and—"

"Well," Helene again interrupted, "a place will have to be made for me. Auntie and I will go over after lunch and see about it."

That evening Mrs. Van Tiner called Bertha into the dining-room. "Bertha," she began, a little nervously, as she arranged the oranges and bananas for dessert in a pretty wicker basket, "Professor Grant says there is no place for Helene in the chorus."

"I knew that," Bertha said, adding: "I am sorry."

"Helene feels dreadfully about it. Professor Grant was a little gruff, although he finally said if she could get any one to give her place to Helene, it would be all right."

She paused, but Bertha did not speak.

"I told Helene I knew you would do it. It will be one way you can repay me for all I have done for you," Mrs. Van Tiner went on, polishing an orange.

What had Mrs. Van Tiner done for her? Bertha compressed her lips. "I cannot do it, Mrs. Van Tiner. I—"

She stopped. Mrs. Van Tiner's face was flushed with anger. "Bertha Harris, I didn't think it of you! You ought to be ashamed! I shall report your rudeness to your uncle."

Bertha hurried up to the shelter of her own room. Here she had a good cry, and then tried to forget all about it.

The next day was Sunday. Bertha was depressed. The glory and brightness of the summer day was blotted out for her.

"It was horrid in Mrs. Van Tiner," she kept saying. "Helene has everything; and I never had anything before. I won't give it up." She thought it was settled. Both Mrs. Van Tiner and her niece made Bertha feel that they were displeased with her.

At service that evening, the preacher referred to Christ's statement that He came not only to give life, but to give it more abundantly. "The crying need of the world to-day," the speaker went on, his rugged Scotch face aglow, "is not the need of money, or even the need of charity and philanthropy. It is the need of abundant living. That would solve the problem of the needy. Why should we doubt? Why should we withhold anything that can minister to the happiness of another? Give as freely as you expect. Live abundantly. All the resources of God, material and—best of all—spiritual, are yours."

Doctor Colledge will never know, on earth, what his words meant to one soul. Bertha watched the golden sunlight, which filtered down through the leaves and fell at her feet, grow dim and fade away. All her nature seemed suddenly attuned to the quiet beauty of the scene about her.

Upon again reaching the cottage, Bertha went to the parlor where Mrs. Van Tiner and Helene were sitting.

"Miss Van Tiner, I have changed my mind. You can have my place in the chorus."

"All right," was Helene's reply. "I don't see why you couldn't have said so in the beginning."

"Oh, she wanted to be coaxed," Mrs. Van Tiner said. "It's better for you, Bertha. Your organdy would have looked cheap. Helene's dress is white satin."

Bertha's lips quivered as she passed up the stairs. It was hard to be misunderstood, especially when she had sacrificed so much. All at once a new thought came to her, and at its coming her face cleared. She would still live and give abundantly. She would give charity—the charity that "thinketh no evil."

Professor Grant scowled, and even scolded a little, when he learned of the change made. To Mrs. Le Vere, Bertha told the whole story, and the sweet, womanly sympathy of the teacher was very helpful to the girl.

The morning before the rendering of the oratorio, Professor Grant asked Bertha to remain after her practice hour, as he wished to speak with her. "Miss Harris," he began abruptly, "Miss Gray, our soprano, is ill. I have arranged for all of her parts, save the aria, 'He was despised and rejected of men.' Mrs. Le Vere says you have had much practice upon it, and can sing it to-night."

Bertha gasped. It ended, though, in her doing Professor Grant's bidding. The nervous fear that had at first taken possession of her, died away when Mrs. Le Vere showed her that in cheerfully complying with the Professor's request, she would be again living and giving abundantly.

It was not until she was returning to her place after singing, that she chanced to see her uncle in the audience. Mr. Harris was wiping his eyes. "I hope he was not disappointed in me," Bertha thought.

She did not know that her singing had stirred the old man's heart. The next morning he had a conference with Professor Grant. "I'll do it," Mr. Harris said in conclusion, bringing down his gold-headed cane emphatically. "I'll give that girl's voice the very best training money can provide. She is a genuine Harris, is little Bertha, and I'll take her under my care."

The future is widening before Bertha. Best of all, she is still living abundantly.

SURE TO ASK

The Kind of Coffee When Postum is Well Made.

"Three great coffee-drinkers were my old school friend and her two daughters.

"They are always complaining and taking medicine. I determined to give them Postum Food Coffee instead of coffee when they visited me, so without saying anything to them about it, I made a big pot of Postum the first morning, using four heaping teaspoons to the pint of water, and let it boil twenty minutes, stirring down occasionally.

"Before the meal was half over, each one passed up the cup to be refilled, remarking how fine the coffee was. The mother asked for a third cup, and inquired as to the brand of coffee I used. I didn't answer her question just then, for I had heard her say awhile before that she didn't like Postum Food Coffee unless it was more than half old-fashioned coffee.

"After breakfast I told her that the coffee she liked so well at breakfast was pure Postum Food Coffee, and the reason she liked it was because it was properly made; that is, it was boiled long enough to bring out the flavor. I have been brought up from a nervous, wretched invalid to a fine condition of physical health by leaving off coffee and using Postum Food Coffee.

"I am doing all I can to help the world out of coffee slavery to Postum freedom, and have earned the gratitude of many, many friends." Myra J. Tuller, 1023 Troost Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

CHAPTER IV.

PROBABLY the only disinterested creature at that moment was Benjamin Franklin, guarded by Jerry at the head of the race course. The boys were to skate as far as the curve of the river where it met the lake, turn, and come back to the starting point. There was no wind, but those on the ice-boats had to face a wind of their own making, and bent their heads before its sting.

"I can't see a thing," Madge exclaimed, laughingly holding her Tam o' Shanter closely on her head, to keep it from sailing away.

"Make telescopes out of your hands, and hold them to your eyes," Mollie called from where she crouched. "They're just going to turn, and Howard and Hoyt King are leading."

"Where's Bobbie?" asked Virginia.

"I don't see him at all," Mollie replied, "unless he's behind Howard."

The line of fleeing forms swept in a splendidly even curve around the bend, and formed for the return. There were only six ahead now, and of these Howard Irving and Hoyt King were a trifle ahead of the rest. All at once a short, dark shadow shot forward from the ranks and started towards the leaders with swift, unswerving strokes.

"That's Bobbie!" Madge cried, bending forward over Virginia's shoulder, and no one spoke after that, but held their breaths and watched.

Howard was nineteen and a college boy. Small wonder that he dreaded the humiliation of being conquered by a four by two "kid," as he had dubbed Bobbie. The latter was not strictly true. He was not quite four feet tall, and certainly not two feet broad; but at all events, he was not old enough to win the race, and when Howard saw him close in, he glanced at Hoyt, and they united forces against a common enemy.

"They won't let him pass," Tony exclaimed to Art, as they skated along where they had a clear view. "Every time he makes a break to get ahead they dodge and get in his way."

Art nodded. His breath was coming fast between his set teeth, not from indignation, but from over-exertion.

Mollie saw the trick too, and was frantic, but Madge clasped Virginia's hand tightly and was silent. She loved fair play, and this was hard.

Nearer they drew to the line, and Howard made a sudden spurt forward, when all at once Bobbie gathered himself together as it were, and bent his head low. In a moment he had caught up with the other's flying heels, just as Howard thought he was safe, and was taking a long slide.

"Well, forevermore—" began Mollie, and Madge was waving her tam wildly, as suddenly Bobbie threw himself forward, doubled over as if he were half tumbling, and before Howard knew what had happened, something shot under him, gliding between his knees in the easiest manner possible, and making a bee line to where Mr. Hardy and Dr. Sanford were standing.

It was a wonderfully hearty cheer that rang out when the red-faced hero halted, and even Howard and Hoyt had a laugh over their defeat; but when the purse was handed to Bobbie with a pleasant little complimentary speech, he put his hands in his pockets and laughed.

"Only want the turkey, Mr. Hardy," he said. "It wasn't exactly fair the way I slipped under Howard, and he ought to have the money. But I want Benjamin."

Mr. Hardy looked at the doctor, and the doctor looked at Bobbie over the rims of his glasses, while he stroked his beard thoughtfully.

So the end of it was, Howard was given the purse, and Bobbie received Benjamin, shawl and all.

"Whatever are you going to do with it?" asked Madge, as she and Tony came up to see the trophy.

"Never you mind," answered Bobbie serenely. "Jerry you go tell all the boys. If I tell Madge and Mollie, everybody else will know in about two minutes. I know how Mollie keeps a secret."

Jerry obediently played herald, and passing from group to group, he spread the news that at 6:30 sharp a sleigh would be in front of the Edsall home, and every Excelsior boy, and every S. D. S. girl were to put in a prompt appearance, and join a sleighing party given by Mr. Bobbie Chertritt.

"Shall we have roast turkey, Bobbie?" asked Tony, but Bobbie only smiled mysteriously as he answered:

"Benjamin will be there with the rest."

With the assurance that the sleigh would call for them, the dwellers on the bluff drove home with Mr. Hardy, and he laughed contentedly as he pinched Virginia's cheeks, flushed rosily by her ice-boat ride.

"Happy, daughter?" he asked gaily, and Virginia was about to answer, when a boy's figure on the ice caught her eye, and she gave a quick cry of surprise.

"What is it?" said Madge, turning to look too.

"Why, I thought"—Virginia's hand closed tightly over her father's and she bent towards him eagerly. "I thought it was—papa, did you see him?"

The bright, easy smile had vanished from Mr. Hardy's face as he gathered up the reins in his firm grasp.

Record-Breaking Exports

THE foreign commerce of the United States seems likely to make its highest record of the century in the closing year of that period. The October exports are larger than those of any preceding October, the total for the ten months ending with October is greater than the total for the corresponding period in any preceding year, and it is apparent that for the first time in our history the foreign commerce of the year will exceed two billion dollars. For the ten months ending with October, 1899, the figures of the Treasury Bureau of Statistics show the total exports to be $1,029,242,000, while in the corresponding months of last year they were $987,879,000.

This remarkable increase in exportations is the more surprising because of the absence of the excessive demand abroad for our breadstuffs which characterized the year 1898. In that year the short crops abroad and plentiful supplies of breadstuffs of all kinds in the United States resulted in an abnormally large exportation of breadstuffs, so that the exportation of agricultural products in the present year naturally falls about 35 million dollars below that of the corresponding period of last year. Yet the total exportations for the ten months are, as already indicated, more than 40 million dollars in excess of those of last year.

It is easy, however, to find the cause of this remarkable growth in our total exportations which occurs in the face of the reduction in our exportation of breadstuffs. An examination of the detailed figures of the nine months of the year already accessible, shows that the exports of manufactures in that period were 50 million dollars in excess of those of the corresponding months of the preceding year, and 65 million dollars greater than those of the same months in 1897, while the products of the mine were four million dollars greater than those of the corresponding months of last year, and those of the forest six million dollars in excess of the corresponding months of the preceding year. Thus the year's exportation of agricultural productions will be quite up to the normal, while those of manufacture, mining, and forestry will exceed those of last year, and indeed of any year in our history.

Imports have increased more than exports, for they were unusually low in 1898, while exports were unusually high in that year. The total importation in the ten months ending with October, 1899, is $658,375,000, against $527,734,000 in the corresponding months of last year. This large increase in importations is chiefly in supplies for the manufacturers, whose increased exports are already noted, and in foodstuffs which cannot be produced at home. The increase in importations of material for use of manufacturers, including crude and partially manufactured, was in the nine months ending with September, 50 million dollars, a sum just equaling the increase in exportations of manufactures during that time. In foodstuffs, the increase in importations during the nine months was in round terms 38 million dollars, of which nearly 30 millions was in sugar, the increase in importations of manufactures ready for consumption being eight million dollars, and articles of voluntary use, luxuries, etc., 15 million dollars.

Suggestions for Christmas Gifts

OUT of the long parts of a pair of pale pink gants de Suede may be made a beautiful picture-frame, simply by pasting the kid over a card-board frame (the paste only being put on the back), and then painting on the front a graceful little vine of moss-roses and leaves. A card-case of pearl gray kid is another of the pretty things made out of old gloves. It is entirely covered with the kid, sewed neatly together on the edges, which are finished with small steel beads. On the outside is a monogram embroidered in steel beads, done, of course, before the case is covered. Still another exceedingly pretty thing is a book-cover or photograph-case. This is made of two or three pairs of pale yellow gants de Suede. Cut them into strips of equal size, and where joined sew narrow gold braid. The whole is bound with the same, and the book tied in with a band of corn-colored satin ribbon.

A Dainty little Christmas gift which would be most useful in a sick room, can be made at home by any woman who is at all clever with her needle. It is simply a cover for the medicine glass, but beside its usefulness, it can be made a thing of beauty. Have a piece of ordinary thin glass cut perfectly round in shape, and a trifle larger than the top of a tumbler. Have bored in the centre two tiny holes. Now get a round fine linen doiley a little larger than the glass, and embroider it in any pretty design. An unconventional wreath of small pansies would be appropriate, for every one knows that pansies are for thoughts; or the doily, as it is to be given for a Christmas gift, may be decorated with bright sprigs of holly. In order to fasten the doily to the glass cover, be careful to neatly work in its centre a small buttonhole. This buttonhole must hold a tiny silk-wound ring. Through the two holes in the glass, baby ribbon is run. This ribbon is then tied to the ring and is finished with little bows, and as the ring is fastened securely in the buttonhole, the doily and the glass are thus held close together.

AMONG the attractions for children is a large book, of perhaps eight or ten leaves, each leaf or two leaves opening from each other so decorated as to imitate the inside of a house, and the imitation is done by means of pictures of articles of furniture, women, and children cut from the papers or illustrated magazines. The groundwork is heavy white paper, and pasted across the lower half of every leaf is a strip of wall paper, simulating carpet, and affording an appearance of perspective. The kitchen contained a picture of a gas range, a chef with a poised spoon in his hand, tables, chairs, and other requisites of a kitchen—all being from advertisements. The dining-room has a handsomely appointed table, sideboard, chairs, pictures, and draped windows, as have all the rooms, and a white capped maid in attendance. The drawing room is beautifully furnished, with well-dressed people grouped around. The bedrooms and halls are equally exact, and the whole is a totally furnished house, a delight for grown people to prepare and for children to enjoy. Care is needed to group the figures and furniture naturally and artistically. The cover in red brown tinted paper, represents the outside of the house, with a fence, over which a boy is looking, outside windows, plants, and a front or entrance door. The house will furnish to better advantage if the book is not less than fifteen inches long.

TRAMPING WITH TRAMPS.

By Josiah Flynt. The author of this book has tramped with the tramps of England, Russia and Germany, as well as with the "hobo" of America. Dr. Andrew D. White, U. S. Ambassador to Germany, who contributes an introduction, states his belief that the publication of this book will be of great value and fascinating interest. Illustrated throughout by well-known artists. $1.50.

THE VIZIER OF THE TWO-HORNED ALEXANDER.

By Frank R. Stockton. Mr. Stockton here writes one of his most entertaining stories,—a record of the marvelous adventures of an Oriental office-holder who, several thousand years ago, drank the entire contents of the Fountain of Youth. With illustrations by Reginald Birch. $1.25.

NO. 5 JOHN STREET.

By Richard Whiteing. Mr. Whiteing's great success, now in its thirtieth thousand, has been recognized both in Europe and in America as the most powerful and polished presentment of extreme social contrasts that has been made for many a year. $1.50.

THE CIRCLE OF A CENTURY.

By Mrs. Burton Harrison. Mrs. Harrison's new book contains two love stories, the scene of which is laid in New York, a century apart. Price $1.25.

WHERE ANGELS FEAR TO TREAD.

By Morgan Robertson. A collection of capital sea stories which "tell themselves straightforwardly and well. There is humor in them and they move" (New York Sun). With frontispiece. $1.25.

HIS DEFENSE, and Other Stories.

By Harry Stillwell Edwards. A new volume of Southern stories which takes its title from the most popular tale Mr. Edwards has written since "The Two Runaways." $1.25.

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF LEWIS CARROLL.

That famous book, "Alice in Wonderland," has appealed to old and young for a generation, and a near friend and relative of the author has written a biography, made up as far as possible from Lewis Carroll's own letters, especially his delightful letters to children. It contains about a hundred illustrations, including many portraits of famous people taken by Lewis Carroll himself. Price $2.50.

PRESENT-DAY EGYPT.

By Frederic Courtland Penfield. This book, by the United States Diplomatic Agent and Consul-General to Egypt 1893-97, will appeal to all persons who have made the trip to Egypt and to the still greater audience of those who have it in view as a possibility of the future. Illustrated by Philippoteaux, Talbot Kelly, and from photographs. $2.50.

HUGH WYNNE.

Continental Edition.

By Dr. S. Weir Mitchell.

THE following notice of this new Continental Edition of "Hugh Wynne" appeared in the New York Evening Post of October 19, 1899. It fully describes the work, the third edition of which is in preparation as these lines are written. (In 2 vols. in a box, $5.00.) "The Century Co.'s luxurious edition of Dr. Weir Mitchell's 'Hugh Wynne, Free Quaker,' can have few rivals this season in beauty of manufacture, and will be surpassed by none in appositeness of illustration. Here the taste displayed is faultless. The plates fall into four classes—old prints of buildings and scenes, mostly in and about Philadelphia; facsimiles of drawings and documents; portraits after engravings or after originals; and imaginative designs for the story proper, all by Howard Pyle, whose art is drenched in the history of the Revolutionary period. The harmony thus obtained is in perfect keeping with the typography."

THE MANY-SIDED FRANKLIN.

By Paul Leicester Ford.

THE author of "The True George Washington," "Janice Meredith," and other popular books, here writes a series of entertaining papers upon one of the greatest of Americans, considering him from different points of view. The volume is by no means an ordinary "life." It teems with pictures of remarkable interest. In rich binding, two hundred illustrations. $3.00.

THE FOUR-MASTED CAT-BOAT, and Other Truthful Tales.

By Charles Battell Loomis. A contribution to the literature of American humor, being a carefully selected collection of the author's stories and sketches contributed of late years to the "Lighter Vein" pages of The Century Magazine, and to humorous periodicals. $1.25.

LITTLE JIM CROW, and Other Stories of Children.

By Clara Morris. The author of this book has but recently turned her attention to literature, yet a collection of her stories, published last summer, is already in its second edition. $1.25.

MAXIMILIAN IN MEXICO.

By Mrs. Sara Yorke Stevenson. Mrs. Stevenson spent several years of her early womanhood in contact with the imperial court in Mexico, and here gives her reminiscences of the French intervention of 1862-67. Beautifully illustrated. Price $2.50.

Exquisite little gift books, $1.00 each.

NEW ISSUES IN THE THUMB-NAIL SERIES.

Mr. Joseph Jefferson writes an introduction to the new Thumb-Nail edition of "Rip Van Winkle, and The Legend of Sleepy Hollow." In it he tells what changes it was necessary to make in preparing the story for the stage. With two illustrations, in the beautiful stamped leather binding of the Thumb-Nail series.

Mr. Benjamin E. Smith has selected and newly translated "The Meditations of Marcus Aurelius" for the same series.

THE ISLAND.

By Richard Whiteing. The hero of this book is a young nobleman shipwrecked among the Pitcairn Islanders, whom he finds dwelling in an ideal community that makes the civilization of London seem crude and brutal by comparison. $1.25.

IMPRESSIONS OF SOUTH AFRICA.

By Hon. James Bryce, M. P. The author of "The American Commonwealth" has written the standard book on the subject of South Africa. It contains chapters on "President Kruger and His Policy," "Sources of the Troubles of South Africa," etc., which are of great timeliness and interest. With three large colored maps and index. $3.50.

BOOKS BY RUDYARD KIPLING.

The famous Jungle Books are on The Century Co.'s list, as well as "Captains Courageous," Mr. Kipling's story of the son of the multi-millionaire who was swept from the deck of an Atlantic liner. Every boy should read "Captains Courageous." These books cost $1.50 each.

HOLLY AND "PIZEN," and Other Stories.

By Ruth McEnery Stuart. A new volume by the author of "Sonny," who is one of the most popular of living American writers of short stories. Pathos and humor abound in its pages. $1.25.

For Boys and Girls

THE ST. NICHOLAS CHRISTMAS BOOK.

A selection of a great number of the most striking stories, sketches, poems and pictures that have appeared in the pages of ST. NICHOLAS in recent years, among the contributors being Miss Wilkins, Mrs. Kate Douglas Wiggin, and Mary Mapes Dodge. Superbly illustrated. The Christmas book of the season for boys and girls. $1.50.

PATRIOTIC BOOKS FOR YOUNG FOLKS.

"The Century Book of the American Revolution," "The Century Book for Young Americans," "The Century Book of Famous Americans," all by Elbridge S. Brooks, splendidly illustrated, costing $1.50 each. "Hero Tales from American History," by Theodore Roosevelt and Henry Cabot Lodge, "Strange Corners of Our Country," by Charles F. Lummis, $1.50 each.

PRINCE LITTLE BOY, and Other Tales Out of Fairyland.

By Dr. S. Weir Mitchell. This is a new edition of a delightful book of fairy stories by Dr. Mitchell. With numerous illustrations. $1.50.

THE STORY OF BETTY.

By Miss Carolyn Wells. Miss Wells has written in "The Story of Betty" a capital book for girls. It is issued with thirty-two pictures by Reginald Birch. Price $1.50.

A NEW BROWNIE BOOK. THE BROWNIES ABROAD.

By Palmer Cox. Mr. Cox has not issued for five years one of his popular Brownie Books. This is the sixth on The Century Co.'s list, and their sale has been enormous. The new book contains verses and pictures describing the trip of the Brownies through Great Britain, Ireland and Italy. Boards, $1.50.

THE DOZEN FROM LAKERIM.

By Rupert Hughes. Our young friends of "The Lakerim Athletic Club," whose adventures have been familiar to the public since Mr. Hughes published his first book a year ago, are here portrayed in further chapters which appeal especially to boys. Illustrated by Relyea, $1.50.

BOOKS OF FUN.

Besides the famous Brownie Books by Palmer Cox, of which there are six in all, The Century Co.'s lists include Oliver Herford's delightful "Artful Anticks," Peter Newell's "Shadow Show," "Gobolinks for Young and Old," by Ruth McEnery Stuart and Albert Bigelow Paine, "A Book of Cheerful Cats," by J. G. Francis, etc.

QUICKSILVER SUE.

By Mrs. Laura E. Richards. The author of "Captain January" and other popular books for boys and girls here tells a story showing the effect upon a girl's character of lack of discipline. Illus., $1.00.

Admiral Dewey

ADMIRAL DEWEY is a member of the Church, and the son of a devoted Churchman who was one of the largest contributors to building the church which he attended in Vermont, and on the future Admiral's remarking to him that he must be a very rich man to have given so large a sum, he answered that he was not wealthy, but felt that he owed a very large part of whatever was good in his character to Church influences. The Admiral himself was baptized as a boy, and was afterwards confirmed when on duty at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, by the late Bishop Whittingham, of Maryland. This statement is made on his own authority. During his long sojourn in Washington he was an attendant at the services of St. John's church, a parish which has embraced among its members a very large number of distinguished officers, both in the army and navy. In fact, before his departure to assume his duties as commodore of the Asiatic squadron two years ago, the Admiral is said to have remarked laughingly to a friend, that his ambition was, after his duty in the East had been performed, to return to Washington and pass the plate at St. John's.

The Admiral, having expressed a wish to the rector, the Rev. Dr. Mackay-Smith, to render publicly his thanks to Almighty God for the success that had crowned his arms and for his safe return from sea, came to the morning service at the church for that purpose on Sunday, Oct. 8th. His intention had not been mentioned by the rector to any one, lest it might attract a crowd actuated by no higher impulse than curiosity. The prayers used were the one for thanksgiving for victory in the Form of Prayer to be Used at Sea in the Prayer Book, and also the usual thanksgiving for safe return from sea. One or two slight alterations were made in the first prayer, the words "victories and deliverances which have crowned the past two years," being employed in place of the phrase, "this happy victory," and also expression being given to the fact that it was at the personal request of the petitioner that the prayer was offered. In accordance with the spirit of the Church, no further allusion was made in the sermon or elsewhere to the Admiral's presence. He sat in the front pew, and afterward expressed to the rector the very deep and grateful feeling which had filled his heart as he heard the prayers read.

Allusion has been made to the fact that a long line of eminent officers in the army and navy has been connected with St. John's church in the past. It is an interesting fact that one of the historical occurrences in the history of the parish, suggested by this visit of thanksgiving, connects itself with the name of an illustrious naval officer. On a Sunday morning in the spring of 1862, our service was being read by the rector, the late Dr. Smith Pyne. A messenger came hastily into the church, and summoned the Secretary of the Navy, Gideon Welles, the Secretary of State, William H. Seward, and Admiral Melancthon Smith to leave the church; and, on reaching the door, they were informed of the attack of the "Merrimac" on the American fleet at Hampton Roads. When Admiral Smith, whose son was an officer on one of the ill-fated ships sunk by the Confederate ram, asked whether his son's ship had gone down, and the answer was that it was among the number of those destroyed, the Admiral at once replied, "Then my boy is dead," feeling sure that he would never have deserted his post; and so it was. Both Admiral Smith and Lieutenant Worden, the commander of the "Monitor," were members of St. John's parish, and were buried from its chancel. Vice-Admiral Rowan, the only vice-admiral in the navy, was also a devout communicant, and the parish rolls are never without names well-known in either hemisphere of numbers of gallant officers of both army and navy.

There is no more picturesque group in Washington than that of the old church under the trees on the north side of Lafayette Square, facing the White House on the south.—The Churchman.

Notes of the World's Progress

THE SUCCESS OF BRITISH ARMS last week in the Soudan, in which the Khalifa, as a disturbing element, was forever eliminated, marks the end of aggressive resistance to the march of civilization in Central Africa. The Khalifa, successor to El Mahdi who defeated and executed Gordon, was a power amongst the fanatical Dervishes, continually exciting them to war upon their enemies, the English. His escape after the decisive victory of General Kitchener was the incomplete feature of British success, and his final removal, with the complete rout of his forces, leaves the English in undisputed and peaceful possession of a vast expanse of territory which will now be placed under modern influences. Parts of the Soudan have inexhaustible agricultural resources, which can now be developed. Possession of the territory will also in a measure aid in the projection of the Cape to Cairo railway project.

BROOKLYN IS THE SCENE OF THE bursting of a financial bubble, the majority of sufferers being people not in position to lose any amount of money. The plan, worked by one William F. Miller, under the name of the Franklin Syndicate, offered small investors ten per cent. interest weekly, and operated something after the chain-letter abomination. It is said that an amount estimated at $4,000,000 is involved in the swindle, and the manager, Miller, succeeded in getting away with about $1,250,000, a greater portion of the balance having been returned to investors in interest payments. To those unacquainted with financial operations, the statement of Miller that his ability to earn excessive interest was through private information as to coming movements of grain and stocks, was credible. The only lesson to be deduced from the operation and collapse of the Franklin Syndicate, is that any plan promising more than legitimate returns from investments is in the nature of a gold brick.

TIME WAS, BEFORE THE ADVENT OF the foreign correspondent, when the visit of one monarch to another did not have especial significance. But recent events serve to show the progress of modern daily journalism. Emperor William of Germany chose to pay a visit to his grandmother, Queen Victoria, and correspondence at once unearthed deep political significance. The visit is entirely unofficial, and not marked by official dinners or other demonstrations; yet, according to correspondents whose occult powers are singularly developed, the object is to settle matters in connection with the Transvaal war. While a guest of the Queen, Emperor William, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, spent a day with the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough, at historic Blenheim. As the Duchess was an American girl, we are advised that this call is significant, as indicating a desire on the part of the Emperor for an alliance between America, England, and Germany. Great are the strides of modern journalism.

LAATEST ADVICES FROM THE PHILIPPINES indicate a further weakening of resistance, and a probability that submission to American authority will soon be complete. While the movement to surround the principle body of Filipinos, headed by Aguinaldo, was not entirely successful, since the leader and the majority of his followers escaped through the meshes of the net, it served to demonstrate to the natives the power of the American forces, and will thus have a salutary effect. Statements of prominent native leaders and former officials of the so-called Aguinaldo cabinet, now within the American lines, are in effect that disintegration is at work, and that the opposing forces are broken into small bands, unable to offer united resistance. The son and mother of Aguinaldo have fallen into the hands of the American forces, which is proof of the thorough demoralization of the Filipino army.

FROM BEING A POPULAR IDOL, Admiral Dewey dropped in a day, in the minds of many, to a subject for severe denunciation, and was quickly reinstated to popular favor. The action of a few unthinking and unreasoning writers in hastily denouncing the Admiral for transferring the gift home to Mrs. Dewey, was responsible for a storm of criticism, but subsequent events, of course, exonerated him completely. Critics were hasty, first, in speaking of the home as a gift of the nation, when the reverse was the case. The real gift of the nation was the thanks of Congress, and a handsome sword; the home was the gift or expression of a few thousand individuals. During the process of his transformation into a "hero," Admiral Dewey in no wise relinquished his rights as a private citizen, and whatever his action in regard to his home, there can be no just ground for criticism so long as it is retained for his use.

—X—

THAT THE LIFE OF A "HERO" IS not altogether pleasant, albeit of desirable flavor, is no better illustrated than in the case of Brigadier General Funston. His experience as Colonel of the Twentieth Kansas afforded the opportunity for the man, and universal acclamation followed, as well as an appointment as Brigadier. Now envious friends and politicians spread tales regarding his career which on their face bear the stamp of untruth.

INTERNAL AFFAIRS OF SPAIN ARE drifting toward a climax which may result in civil war. The signing of the treaty of peace in Paris left Spain most impoverished in resources, as well as available cash, and the only alternative was excessive taxation. Catalonia is already in a state approaching revolution. At the close of the war the commercial classes of that province petitioned the government for radical financial reform, and the adjustment of taxation which is now injurious to commercial and financial interests. Commercial bodies throughout Spain endorsed this petition. The Catalonians demand complete self-government and self-taxation, paying a fixed quota into the imperial treasury. At present forty per cent. of the revenue raised in Catalonia goes to sustain a swarm of incompetent and unnecessary officials. Failing to secure the reforms asked, merchants of Barcelona refused to pay taxes, whereupon the government adopted stringent measures, suspending constitutional rights, and proclaiming military law.

CAPTAIN LEARY, NAVAL GOVERNOR of the Island of Guam, one of the least of our newly acquired colonial possessions, is inaugurating an order of things which may well be emulated by those officials who may later be placed in charge of more important stations. The natives of Guam, while docile if tactfully handled, do not possess a high moral code; neither are they characterized by habits of industry. In order to raise the tone of the island, and elevate his subjects to a better appreciation of the benefits they are to derive from becoming an American possession, Governor Leary has issued an important proclamation. Every inhabitant without a trade or habitual occupation is ordered to engage in agricultural pursuits and poultry raising, and those who have no land will be allotted a plot by the government. Polygamy will no longer be tolerated, and to enforce proper marriage relations, a civil officer is detailed to perform the marriage rite, to which the natives willingly submit.

FROM TIME TO TIME, REPORTS have come from Finland of distress and dissatisfaction caused by the Russianizing of the country. From present happenings, it does not appear that Russia is pursuing the most honorable course with respect to the Finnish people. Rather than submit to Russian government, and in a measure sink their nationality into that of Russia, many inhabitants of the country, particularly young men, are moving to establish themselves where greater liberty can be enjoyed. To this end a delegation recently visited Canada, and being satisfied that the country is ready with a hospitable welcome, have arranged for the settlement in a rich, but thinly populated, agricultural section, of a colony which will eventually number many thousands. Canadian officials have shown a disposition to make whatever concessions are necessary for the welfare of the immigrants.

The Sunday School

Public Lectures in New York

The course of lectures on "Christian Knowledge," under the auspices of the Sunday School Commission, has been extended to include a number of additional lectures. President G. Stanley Hall, of Clark University, lectured Nov. 18th, on "The religious content of a child's mind," and on Nov. 25th, Prof. F. M. McMurray, of Teacher's College, Columbia University, took for his theme, "The use of biography in religious instruction." Subsequent lectures will be delivered as follows: On Dec. 2nd, Prof. Chas. Foster Kent, of Brown University, on "The use of geography in religious instruction"; Dec. 9th, the Rev. Dr. Geo. Hodges, dean of the Episcopal Divinity School, Cambridge, Mass., on "The content of religious instruction," and Dec. 16th, Bishop Doane, of Albany, on "The educational work of the Christian Church." The chairman of the commission is the Rev. Pascal Harrower; the secretary, the Rev. Dr. W. Walter Smith, and the treasurer, Mr. Harry H. Pike.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Board of Missions

Eight branches have been established in South Carolina. The work of these amounted last year to about $407.

The Iowa Branch

Under arrangements with the Bishop and the Board of Missions, the diocesan president has just completed a tour of 23 of the parishes and missions, the journey consuming between five and six weeks. Everywhere the outlook was found encouraging, the attendance at all the 23 meetings being at least double, and the interest three times what it would have been some years ago. The work of the Junior Auxiliary in the Sunday schools also received, it is believed, a decided impetus. New work was inaugurated at Albia, Boone, Chariton, East Des Moines, Moorar, Mt. Pleasant, and Oskaloosa, and the branch at Iowa City revived. Dyersville and Grace church, Council Bluffs, have also come into the ranks within the last few months, so that the Auxiliary is now organized in 44 of the parishes and missions of the diocese. The work of visitation and organization will be vigorously carried on through the remainder of the convention year. The influence of Bishop Morrison's missionary zeal is felt and recognized in every part of the diocese.

The Daughters of the King

The 7th annual convention was held in Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 15th-17th. On Nov. 15th, Quiet Hours were held in St. Luke's church from 3 to 5 P.M., conducted by the Rev. Wyllis Rede, D.D. The subject of the addresses were "The King," "The Kingdom," "The Daughters of the King;" silent prayer, meditation, and the singing of hymns between each one, concluding with a consecration to the service of the King. The service was a very solemn and impressive one, and was largely attended.

Nov. 16th, the convention opened with Morning Prayer and a corporate celebration of the Holy Communion. The Rt. Rev. Cleland Kinloch Nelson, D.D., delivered the charge to the convention. He said that this was the first national body of our Church people ever met in the far South, and spoke of the gratification felt by the people of Atlanta in having the convention in their midst. He said "the Order was an inner circle within the Church, whose work was only spiritual, and thus filled a place that no other organization occupies."

At 11:30 the delegates repaired to the Symphony Club House. The roll call showed 14 States represented, with large delegations from all the important cities of the country. Mrs. E. A. Bradley, of New York city, president of the Order, made the opening address, reviewing the work of the past year. She stated that a movement had been started looking toward the organization of a junior branch of the Order, to be composed of young girls who have not been confirmed, with the purpose of fitting them to become members of the older Order. Mrs. Bradley also spoke of St. Luke's chapter in Atlanta, as having furnished a missionary from the Order, Miss Charley Warnock who is now doing missionary work among the girls and women of St. Peter's and Our Saviour parishes in Shanghai, China.

The secretary, Miss E. L. Ryerson, of New York, reported the work done during the past year: 44 new chapters have been organized, and a membership of over 1,000 gained. The Order has now 15,000 members, and flourishes in the United States, Canada, England, Australia, and the West Indies. In England the Archbishop of Canterbury is the patron of the Order, and the Bishop of London is the visitor, and organizes the new chapters that come in. Committees were appointed and reports made. Addresses of welcome were made by the rector of St. Luke's, the Rev. Charles A. Jessup, and Mrs. E. G. Warner, of the Incarnation chapter, Atlanta. The Bishop remained through the entire meeting. Members of the clergy also were present. A delightful luncheon was served in the basement of St. Luke's church.

In the afternoon the subjects discussed were: "The motive of the work," Mrs. Leslie Pell Clarke, Orlando, Fla.; "The method of the work," Mrs. Wyllis Rede, Atlanta, Ga.; "The results of the work," Mrs. John Moncure, Philadelphia. From 5 P. M. to 6:30, an informal reception was tendered the delegates at the episcopal residence, by Bishop and Mrs. Nelson, assisted by the St. Luke's chapter and some of the leading Church people of Atlanta. Refreshments were served. At night there was a public meeting at St. Luke's. The church was crowded. Bishop Nelson presided. In the chancel, besides the rector of St. Luke's and dean of the cathedral, there were eight clergymen. Addresses were to have been made by the Bishops of Florida and South Carolina, but they were delayed in reaching the convention, and their subjects were taken by the Rev. T. C. A. Pise who spoke on "The motive of prayer," and the Rev. Wyllis Rede, on "The coming kingdom." The last speaker was the Rev. Albion W. Knight, dean of the cathedral, whose subject was "The life of prayer and service." The music was beautifully rendered by the full vested choir.

On Friday, the 17th, Holy Communion was celebrated in St. Luke's church at 7 A.M., Morning Prayer with litany at 10 A.M.; at 10:30 convention met in the Symphony Club House. The Rev. Mr. Jessup opened the meeting with prayer, after which the Daughters' hymn was sung. The subject for discussion was: "Our difficulties;" "In country," was presented by Miss Minnie D. Ryerson, of New York city; "In town," by Mrs. William Barnes, of College Point, L. I., and "In city," by Miss Irene R. Smiley, of Atlanta. This was followed by a conference on details of the work, closing with a question box. At 2 P.M., the following officers were elected: Mrs. E. A. Bradley, of New York city, president; Mrs. J. W. Peck, of New Haven, Conn., and Mrs. E. J. Warner, of Morrisania, N. Y., vice-presidents; Miss Elizabeth L. Ryerson, New York, secretary; Mrs. J. H. Kahrs, of New York, treasurer. The council: Mrs. Thomas A. Dudley, Kentucky; Mrs. Thomas L. Jones, Seymour, Conn.; Mrs. David Sisson, New Orleans, La.; Mrs. John B. Falkner, Germantown, Pa.; Mrs. John Moncure, Philadelphia; Mrs. F. P. Wells, Minneapolis; Mrs. W. L. Davenport, Anacostia, D. C.; Mrs. Still, cathedral church, Atlanta; Mrs. Denmead, Baltimore; Miss Minnie Ryerson, New York. Invitations were received asking that Minneapolis and Pittsburgh be candidates for the next convention, Bishop Whitehead writing a personal letter, which was read during the session. A vote was given in favor of Pittsburgh. Addresses by Mrs. W. G. Davenport, of Anacostia, D. C., on "The work for girls," and by Miss Julia P. Morand, of New York city, on "Mission work," closed the convention which was one of the most successful in the history of the Order.

Canada

At the semi-annual meeting in October of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Board of Canada, the important step of organizing as an independent foreign missionary society was taken, severing connection with the old English Society for the Propagation of the Gospel; after much consultation, both with the S. P. G., and Bishop Awdrey, of Tokio, Japan.

A very interesting service was held in the cathedral, Quebec, on the Sunday before the Canadian troops sailed for the Transvaal. They left Quebec in the steamship "Sardinian," on the following Tuesday. Of the 1,000 men, 600 belonged to the Anglican Church. At the morning celebration of the Holy Communion 800 of the soldiers participated, and by special order of the General, none of the men left the church till the Celebration was concluded. The congregation remained also. The sermon was preached by the Rev. G. F. Scott. By order of the General, 500 copies of the sermon were placed on the "Sardinian" for use among the men. The Rev. John Almond, a young man who has been doing good mission work on the Labrador coast, volunteered to go as Church of England chaplain to the Canadian contingent. Mr. Almond graduated at Bishop's College, Lenoxville. The Bishop has given his clergy a choice of prayers for use during the war. He held several Confirmations in the township during the latter part of November, and arranged to consecrate the church at Kinnear's Mills, on St. Andrew's Day. A handsome brass altar cross has been placed in St. Barnabas' church, North Hatley, by Miss Jennie Daves, of Baltimore, Md., as a memorial of her father. The Rev. H. R. Sargent, of the Order of the Holy Cross, Westminster, Md., has been conducting a series of services in St. Matthew's church, Quebec, in connection with its dedication festival.

The Bishop held a Confirmation in Christ church cathedral, Montreal, on the 23d Sunday after Trinity. Land has been given for a new church in the south-eastern suburb of Montreal, which it is hoped will be erected next spring, to be called the Belcher memorial, in memory of the late Canon Belcher, who labored long in that district. There was a large attendance at the meeting of the Sunday School Institute at Shawville, for the county of Pontiac, lately. A number of the clergy were present.

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

It is pleasant news to the diocese to learn that, during the past week, Bishop McLaren has been feeling more like himself than for two months past.

Announcement is made that the annual meeting of the North-eastern deanery will take place on Monday, Dec. 5th, a month later than usual.

On Nov. 18th, the Rev. Dr. Wilson, rector of St. Mark's, read a paper before the Western Society of the Army of the Potomac, entitled, "The associations of the Potomac River." Under the auspices of the local Brotherhood chapter, he is now delivering a course of lectures, in the parish house, on Church history.

The Rev. G. B. Wright was called away to Michigan early last week by the serious illness of his mother.

The Rev. E. M. Thompson has been appointed to St. John's, Naperville; in connection with which is St. Andrew's, Downer's Grove.

A series of talks on the Book of Common Prayer is being given in the parish house of the church of the Redeemer, South Park, on Thursday evenings, under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, by Mr. E. A. Bernays, M. A., of Oxford University, England.

A Greek Church

An event of interest to Churchmen is the recent recording of a deed conveying the property at Johnson and 12th sts., 43 by 100 ft., to the Greek Church; the consideration named being $10,000. The Greeks on the West Side who have now a settled priest, have renamed the chapel Hagia Trias, or Holy Trinity. It will be remembered that the closing of St. Stephen's mission, three years ago, was necessitated by the removal of Church people, the neighborhood becoming a residence district of Greeks and Israelites.

Offering for St. Luke's Hospital

On Sunday last, as directed by the canon. Inasmuch as that taken up in Grace church amounted to $1,300, or almost as much as all the churches of the diocese gave collectively last year, there is ground for expecting a handsome total this year.

The Clerica

The monthly meeting met at the Hotel Metropole, on Monday, Nov. 14th, on the invitation of Mrs. Stires, of Grace church. The gathering was almost the largest in the life of this association which has done so much in bringing together and making known to each other the clergymen's wives. There was a certain fitness in having this first anniversary at the residence of the rector of Grace; for the very first meeting at which the Clerica was inaugurated, was held at Mrs. Clinton Locke's house, then chosen president, whose husband, the esteemed dean, had been for two thirds of a century rector of Grace church.

The Choir Festival

Held on the evening of St. Cecilia's Day in the three churches, and very well attended. In St. James', eight choirs were represented by an aggregate of 300 choristers from Ascension, Atonement, St. Mark's, Evanston; All Saints', Ravenswood; Our Saviour's, St. Chrysostom's, St. Peter's, and St. James'. The combined choirs were under the direction of Mr. William Smedley, with Elias A. Breden as organist. The Rev. T. A. Snively, president of the Diocesan Choir Association, gave an address on the threefold aspect of Church music, as appealing to the senses, as an aid to devotion, and as an accompaniment to worship. At Grace church the Rev. E. M. Stires made a short address; here most of the South-side choirs were represented, the choristers numbering about 300; Harrison Wild presiding at the organ, Gerald F. Stewart acting as choirmaster pro tem. At the cathedral the choirs represented, besides that of SS. Peter and Paul, were Emmanuel, La Grange; St. Barnabas', St. Luke's, Calvary, and St. Andrew's, about 200 representatives in all, with Arthur E. Fischer as choirmaster, and Ellis E. Cham as organist. The dean, the Rev. L. Pardee, gave a short address. This eighth annual choir festival, while not so imposing a spectacle as when some years ago nearly 1,400 choristers sang on the stage of the Auditorium, yields to none of its seven predecessors in the elevating character of its music, or in the solemnity surrounding its rendition.

Conference of the Clergy

Thirty-two of the clergy attended the fortnightly conference in the library of the clergy house at the cathedral, on Monday morning, when the Rev. C. P. Anderson presided, and the Rev. Dr. Little, chairman of the committee on subjects, introduced "Scriptural difficulties," as the topic for discussion, in which several present participated.

Death of Mr. Calkins of Trinity Parish

In the death of Mr. Calkins, Trinity church loses one of its oldest members, for many years a vestryman, the diocese at large a venerable Churchman, and the community a highly respected citizen. Mr. Calkins, who was 76 years of age, was taken ill a few days ago at his summer residence, Lake Geneva. He leaves a widow, one daughter, and four sons.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

St. Margaret's church is contemplating the erection of a church building.

Improvements have been made to the property of St. Stephen's church, Melrose, Greater New York.

Bishop Hare, of South Dakota, will continue to act for Bishop Potter till about the middle of December.

The Church Temperance Society is moving for improved arrangements for the care and reform of inebriates, through means of a State reformatory.

St. Mark's Parish

Has undertaken a new work for women of the East side, to be centred at St. Mark's chapel, under the direction of Deaconess Von Brockdorf. A society known as St. Mark's Society for Work Among Women, has been organized to co operate, with the following officers; President, Mrs. Cornelius B. Mitchell; vice-president, Mrs. Howland Davis; secretary, Miss S. M. Shipper; treasurer, Mrs. Chas. E. Goodhue.

Church Periodical Club

At the 12th annual meeting just held at the Church Missions House, the Rev. Morgan Dix, D. D., D. C. L., occupied the chair. A plan for association with the Woman's Auxiliary of the Board of Missions, was considered. Officers were chosen for the ensuing year as follows: President, Miss Florence Taylor; vice-presidents, Mrs. D. T. Hoag, Mrs. B. W. Strong, Mrs. John Avery, Mrs. A. M. Sawyer, Miss A. H. Laight, Mrs. C. G. Lee, Miss E. P. Getty, Miss E. W. Fanning; general secretary, Mrs. J. L. Chapin; recording secretary, Mrs. George M. Christian; treasurer, Mrs. E. P. Johnson; treasurer of the endowment fund, Mrs. D. T. Hoag. Additional members of the executive committee, Mrs. Frank Shepperd, Miss Agnes Lathers.

Girls' Friendly Society

At the annual meeting of the council of the diocese, just held at Calvary parish house, the following officers were elected: President, Miss E. H. Wesner; vice-presidents, Miss C. E. Marshall, Mrs. G. W. Murdoch, and Miss Ford; chairman of the immigration committee, Mrs. J. S. Day; chairman on the committee on education, Mrs. J. S. Day; members of the council for three years, Mrs. W. L. Bull, Miss J. Du B. Roberts, Miss E. T. Agnew, Miss Campbell, and Miss Amy Rayson. The purchase of the summer house of the society, at Huntington, N. Y., has been secured, and $5,000 is to be raised for alterations and the essential outlays involved. A conference was held at night, at which papers were read on "How should a girl's religion affect her home life?" "What are advantages and objections to domestic service?" "Should reading novels be encouraged or discouraged?"

Pennsylvania

Ozi William Whitaker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

An amateur performance of the "Mikado" was given on Thursday evening, 23d ult., at the parish house of the South Memorial church of the Advocate, for the benefit of the embroidery guild.

Bishop Whitaker, on Nov. 20th, opened the exercises in celebration of "Philadelphia Day," at the National Export Exposition, with prayer, and invoked the Divine blessing upon American labor and commercial activity. There were about 2,000 present in the auditorium.

A Woman's Exchange

St. Mary's Aid of St. Mary's church, Hamilton Village, has organized a Woman's Exchange. Every one is invited to become a consignor.

Sales will be held in the parish building, Locust st. below 40th, every Saturday morning.

St. Paul's Church, Cheltenham

On the 1st ult., the vestry unanimously elected the Rev. J. Thompson Cole, rector, in succession to the Rev. Dr. Edward W. Appleton who now becomes rector emeritus. On Sunday, 19th ult., the new rector conducted his first "Children's Church service."

Italian Church Anniversary

The 17th anniversary of the Italian mission church, L'Emmanuello, was celebrated on Sunday afternoon, 19th ult., in Holy Trinity church, Philadelphia, with appropriate services. The Rev. F. W. Tomkins who preached the anniversary sermon, took as his text, "The stranger that is within thy gates" (Exodus xx: 10), and dwelt on the duty which we owe the foreign element in our country. The Rev. M. Zara who is in charge of the mission, made a brief statement of its activity during the past year, and reported its affairs as being in a very flourishing condition.

The Northwest Convocation

Is endeavoring to erect a parish house for its new mission, at 25th st. and Lehigh ave., Philadelphia, and has about $3,500 on hand for the purpose. The plans were prepared early last summer, but until the balance needed ($2,500) is supplied, the building will not be begun. The Sunday School Association of the diocese has promised one half of its Advent offering, and it is hoped that other funds may be contributed early in the coming year, so that this much-needed building can be erected. The mission is now located in a small rented house, but it needs more room for its work. The neighborhood is rapidly building up, and the site selected is just the place for a thriving church. The Rev. Dr. J. N. Blanchard is now dean of the convocation, in succession to the late Rev. Dr. Benjamin Watson.

St. Clement's Patronal Festival

Was celebrated with great dignity on the 23d ult. There were four celebrations of the Holy Eucharist in the early morning, and the fifth was at 11 A. M., sung by the Rev. A. W. Doran, assisted by the Rev. Messrs. C. C. Quinn and F. D. Ward. The sermon was preached by the Rev. H. H. Oberly, of Elizabeth, N. J. The music was Stainer in A, which was well rendered, the quartet of basses adding greatly to the effectiveness. The service was preceded by a solemn procession around the church, during which the choir sang the triumphal "And O Zion, Blest City," from Gade's "The Crusaders." In the evening, the parish tea was held in St. Clement's Hall.

St. Timothy's Club Anniversary

St. Timothy's Workingmen's Club and Institute, of Roxboro, on Sunday evening, 19th ult., began the celebration of its 26th anniversary by attending services in the parish church. The anniversary sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Elwood Worcester. On Monday evening, at the club house, the Rev. R. E. Dennison, rector of St. Timothy's, and president of the organization, offered prayer, and subsequently addressed the members. He was followed by Messrs. J. Vaughan Merrick, G. W. Bromley, Wm. Johnston, and others. James Christie, on behalf of Henry Manger, a member, presented the club with life-sized water-color portraits of J. Vaughan and Wm. H. Merrick. The secretary reported that the organization had doubled its membership during the last year, and that it is in a more prosperous condition financially and otherwise than at any time in its history. The treasurer reported receipts, $858.22; expenditures, $674.77. Music was furnished by the Primrose Quartette, an orchestra, and by Mrs. Bert Christie on the piano.

Annual Dinner of the Church Club

Was given on Thursday evening, 23d ult., at the Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia. About 160 members and guests were in attendance. The rooms were decorated with chrysanthemums, and the table was arranged in the shape of a gridiron. George C. Thomas, president of the club, acted as toast master. On his right was Bishop Whitaker, and on his left, Bishop Satterlee. A number of prominent city rectors were present. Mr. Thomas delivered the opening address, referring briefly to the work accomplished in Kensington, during the past year, by the Boys' club. Bishop Satterlee followed with a powerful address on missions, and gave some interesting statistics of the Anglican Church. John H. Cole, president of the Church club of New York, spoke of "Indifference." The Rev. Dr. J. Lewis Parks, of New York, made a long address on "The theological situation," both past and present, and was loudly applauded. The Rev. Dr. S. D. McConnell, of Brooklyn, N. Y., followed with an address on much the same lines; and Geo. Wharton Pepper concluded with a discourse on "The ethics of controversy."

Iowa

Theodore Nevil Morrison, D.D., Bishop

Trinity Parish, Muscatine

Nov. 8th, the Bishop visited this parish, the Rev. W. Parry-Thomas, rector, and preached to a crowded congregation. A class of seven received the rite of Confirmation; this is the second class during the year. The Bishop addressed earnest words to the newly confirmed. The new girls' vested choir did their part well. In answer to a fervent appeal from the head of the diocese for funds for diocesan missions, there was a liberal response.

Hope Church, Fort Madison

The Bishop, on the 7th inst., held his second Confirmation in the past year, when a class of 10 was presented, making a total of 26 in 12 months. The Bishop preached an impressive sermon. The music was of a high order, even for this well-known choir. Simper's "Honor the Lord with thy substance," was the anthem, and the Sanctus and Benedictus from Gounod's Messe Solennelle were effectively rendered for the offertory, which was for diocesan missions. The guild of the Royal Cross tendered the Bishop a very pleasant reception in the rectory at the conclusion of the services, which was largely attended. In addition to the offering, pledges were given for about $50 a year to diocesan missions.

St. Paul's Church, Des Moines

During the summer this church was thoroughly cleaned, repaired, and newly frescoed, by direction of the vestry, and a costly velvet carpet for the entire church was presented by the Helping Hand society, the cost of the carpet and frescoing amounting to about $1,200. On the first Sunday of October the annual parish choir festival took place, and $250 was awarded in prizes to the choir boys. The vested choir numbers 75 voices of men, women, and boys, under the general direction of the rector, the Rev. J. Everist Cathell, S.T.D., Mr. James Farmer, organist, and Mrs. H. R. Reynolds, choir director. It is one of the very best choirs of the Middle West, and reflects great credit upon Mrs. Reynolds. On Sunday, Oct. 12th, Bishop Morrison inaugurated in St. Paul's parish a series of diocesan missionary services, to be held throughout the diocese. Addresses were made at the morning service by Bishop Edsall, of North Dakota, Mr. Arthur Ryerson, of Chicago, Bishop Morrison, and Dr. Cathell. At the close young men distributed blank pledge cards, with the result that $1,200 was pledged for the missions of the diocese, payable before May, 1900. It would have been difficult to determine who was made most happy by the result, the Bishop, the rector, or the congregation. At 3 P. M. there was a large gathering of the Sunday schools of the city—St. Paul's, St. Luke's, and the Good Shepherd, led by the choir of St. Paul's. Bishops Morrison and Edsall made addresses full of inspiration. At the evening service Bishop Edsall preached to another large congregation. On the evening before, the men of St. Paul's parish gave a banquet at the Kirkwood House, in honor of Bishops Morrison and Edsall and Mr. Ryerson. This parish has two candidates for Holy Orders, and two postulants, four lay readers, and a large and flourishing Sunday school, of which Mr. Henry S. Nollen is superintendent.

Ohio

Wm. Andrew Leonard, D.D., Bishop
St. Mark's Church, Cleveland

The Oriental opera, "Egypta," under the auspices of the Men's Club, was given at Gray's Armory for three successive nights, to large and appreciative audiences. Over 200 singers are in the cast of the production, besides a chorus of 170 little children. The opera tells the story of the life of Moses, and the music, as well as the costumes and scenery, is beautiful. The proceeds of the entertainment are to go towards paying for the fine organ which has just been placed in St. Mark's church.

Massachusetts

William Lawrence, D.D., Bishop

The debt upon the church of the Good Shepherd, Clinton, has been reduced to $796 from $1,910.

Mr. C. B. B. Bowser, a Congregational minister, has come into the Church, and as lay-reader will have charge of Christ church, Rockdale.

St. John's church, East Boston, is now roofed, but some time will elapse before the consecration, as more money is needed.

A Nurse Honored

A picture of Miss R. H. Walworth, one of the nurses in the Spanish-American war, and a true heroine of that event, has been hung in All Saints' parish rooms, Attleborough, after a short service to her memory, conducted by the rector, the Rev. J. L. Tryon. She was graduated from Vassar College in the class of 1896.

Mission for Seamen

Mr. Stanton H. King, the efficient superintendent of this mission in Charlestown, is carrying on a large work among that class, and keeping them from the many temptations that surround the docks. The mission is open daily from 8 A. M. to 10 P. M., and every sailor is welcome to make the place his temporary home.

The Boston Clericus

Edward Atkinson read a paper on "The fourth dimension in political economy," before the Monday Clericus Nov. 20th. In the paper he took occasion to deny dogma and creed, and scouted the idea of man working out his salvation in this world. He said he could not be an Episcopalian, because of the fallen nature of man taught in the Book of Common Prayer.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

A conference was held in the church of the Good Shepherd, Boston, Nov. 23d. The service was conducted by the Rev. George J. Prescott, the rector. Mr. Jas. L. Houghteling, of Chicago, made an address, and said he had a message of cheer and courage. There never was a time, when the spirit of good was working more mightily in the hearts of men than it is to day. The mission of the Order was to spread righteousness, and this could be done by a spirit of loyalty to the Brotherhood. The need of comradeship was urged. It never followed that because a man simply belonged to the Brotherhood, he was safe. Loyalty to the Church represented and encouraged loyalty to the Brotherhood. A social time was spent afterwards with Mr. Houghteling in the parish rooms.

Girls' Friendly Society

There was a diocesan conference in St. Paul's chapel, Nov. 23d. Representatives were present from all over the State. Miss McIntosh presided. "Some of women's opportunities," were discussed by Miss Olive Dodge, of St. Paul's, Malden. Miss Amelia Bennett, of St. Anne's, Lowell, read a paper on the same topic. "Aesthetic opportunities" were talked about by Mrs. W. E. Gardner, of Swampscott, followed by Miss Mary Ryder of Beverly. Miss Annie B. Ellison, of North Andover, read the first paper on "Educational opportunities," followed by Miss Ethel Preble of Boston. Miss Edith M. Howes spoke on "Economic opportunities," defining the word, opportunity, as a chance to work with God. Miss Elizabeth H. Houghton, of Cambridge, spoke on "Political opportunities" of women, showing what splendid work they are doing in various municipalities "without making any fuss about it."

North Dakota

Samuel C. Edsall, D.D., Bishop

A beautiful little church has just been completed for St. John's church, St. Thomas, the Rev. D. H. Clarkson, priest-in-charge. As the building has been entirely paid for, it is expected that Bishop Edsall will consecrate it in a few weeks.

St. George's church, Bismarck, the Rev. A. A. Joss, rector, has been removed from its hitherto inaccessible location to a more centrally located lot, and is undergoing enlargement.

Gethsemane Church, Fargo

Work has been commenced on the new church building. A fine brown stone foundation has been in place for a year past, and it has now been determined to complete the structure in wood, in order to avoid the burdensome debt which would have been incurred had the original plans been carried out.

Visitations by the Bishop

Bishop Edsall has just returned from a visitation in the extreme western part of the State. He visited St. John's church, Dickinson, of which the Rev. J. P. Lytton recently resigned the charge, and Medora, in the famed "Bad Lands," where he succeeded in establishing a weekly lay service and Sunday school. No other religious body holds service in Medora. Bishop Edsall is anxious to obtain three or four priests at once for various points in his jurisdiction, where a minimum stipend of from $600 to $800 can be guaranteed to an earnest and tactful clergyman.

Nebraska

George Worthington S.T.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Annual Convocation

Held in Grace church, Columbus, on Nov. 13th-16th. On Monday evening, Evensong was followed by a paper on "The differences between the Episcopal and Roman Churches," by the Rev. W. R. McKim. During the session Holy Communion was celebrated every morning at 7 A. M., Morning Prayer was said at 8.45 A. M., Evensong at 7.30 P. M. Papers were delivered as follows: Three on "Casuistry," by the Rev. J. Williams; one on "Parochial assessments," by the Rev. W. A. Mulligan; "Marriage and divorce," by the Rev. C. H. Young; "Is not the Church too worldly and too formal?" by the Rev. I. P. Johnson; "Differences between the Episcopal Church and the denominations," by the Rev. Dr. Reilly; three papers on "Bible instruction," by the Very Rev. Dean Fair; "Need of a diocesan house for educating candidates for the sacred ministry," by the Rev. Canon Silver; "Printers' ink in parish work," by the Rev. A. T. Young. Wednesday night after Evensong, the Bishop-coadjutor delivered a powerful address on "Missionary work." A reception was tendered the Bishop and clergy at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Stires. Thursday afternoon some of the clergy accompanied Bishop Williams to Genoa, where the Indian school was visited. Evensong was said in St. Andrew's church, which was dedicated at that time. Confirmation was administered, and a number of Indians were confirmed and received crosses, given by Bishop Hare of South Dakota, and presented by Bishop Williams. The next annual convocation is to be held at Blair.

Vermont

Arthur C. A. Hall, D. D., Bishop

St. Margaret's Chapel, Middletown Springs

The formal opening of the new chapel occurred on Monday evening, Oct. 9th, the consecration being deferred until its cost shall be fully paid. Bishop Hall officiated, assisted by the present rector, the Rev. G. O. B. Clarke, and the late rector, the Rev. E. H. Randall. This neat and commodious chapel was built by the Ripley Lumber Co., of Poultney, and the architect was Mr. G. H. Ingraham, of Boston, who gave his services; the windows and stained glass being furnished by R. Geissler, of New York. It is a frame edifice, finished with Georgia pine, ceiled, and with a large cellar. Its cost, with the site, was $1,200; the debt still remaining on it being less than $100; the grounds are graded, and the whole is a very ornamental as well as useful addition to the village. At the opening service, the Bishop congratulated the people on the laudable work done, and also expressed his gratitude to those of the denominations who had so kindly and fully sympathized with, and helped it on. At the service, the volunteer choir was re-enforced by two Baptist ministers, and one Congregationalist. Among the gifts, besides those in money, for the chapel, we note the following: A memorial window for a son, by Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Clark; also one for her father, the Rev. John Randall, formerly of Arlington, Vt., by Mrs. Dr. A. C. Norton; brass vases, for her mother, by Miss Roe, of Albany, N. Y.; altar linen, by the present rector; Eucharistic vestments and cotta, by St. Margaret's Sisters, of Boston, Mass.; a cabinet organ, by the Rev. E. H. Randall; a marble font, by Colonel Proctor, of Proctor; an oak lectern, by Mrs. Hickok. Chief credit for the success of this enterprise is due to Mrs. Dr. A. C. Norton, who has worked early and late for it during many years. She has been ably assisted by Mrs. A. A. Clark, and Mrs. Knapp, and others. But for the rector's energy and zeal, as said the Bishop, the chapel could not have been built this year. Under his auspices, some $500 has been raised during the year; in addition to frequent services here, he is in charge also at Poultney (two churches), and at Wells—four stations in all, involving much travel and labor.

Maryland

William Paret, D. D., LL. D., Bishop

A new pulpit has been presented to the church of the Holy Innocents', Baltimore, by the vestry and the Rev. Wm. M. Dame, of Memorial church. The pulpit is octagonal in shape, and is made of walnut, and beautifully carved. It has been placed in front of the column on the left side of the chancel, and adds much to the appearance of the chancel, which was recently improved. The cost of the pulpit was about $400.

All Saints' Parish, Calvert Co.

Miss Elise Chew, of Chicago, has presented handsome brass altar vases in memory of Mrs. Jane Benson Chew, her grandmother. The congregation of the church has decided to build a small parish hall, which is much needed, and work on same will be begun as soon as sufficient funds are raised.

Associated Missions

The Rev. Frank B. Randall, deacon, is doing excellent work under the direction of the Archdeacon of Annapolis. He holds weekly services at Curtis Bay, Jessups, and Glen Burrie, and at each point results are encouraging. In the near future in his visiting, Mr. Randall will take in Annapolis Junction, where the archdeacon is able to give only Sunday services, and where the people need a rector. Mr. Richard C. Norris, lay reader, will take two of the services at Curtis Bay each month, enabling Mr. Randall to add two Sunday services at Savage to the fortnightly services which have been maintained by Mr. Daniel M. Murray, lay-reader. The work of the Associated Missions up to the present time is as encouraging as could be expected.

Springfield

Gen. F. Seymour, S. T. D., LL. D., Bishop
Chas. K. Hale, D. D., Bishop-coadjutor

The Bishop has gone East, to take his duty at Cornell University from Nov. 19th to Nov. 26th, as lecturer on the Sage Foundation.

The Rev. Dewitt L. Pelton, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, of Bloomington, at the conclusion of his review of his three years' pastorate, tendered his resignation, to take effect as soon as it can be accomplished. Mr. Pelton further announced that it is his intention, as soon as possible, to enter the priesthood of the Church. Mr. Pelton has been in the Presbyterian ministry seven years, during four of which he was in charge of a church at Adams, N. Y., and three in the Bloomington church. His congregation is one of the largest and most influential in the State, and his work has been most successful.

Pittsburgh

Cortlandt Whitehead, D. D., Bishop

The Northern Convocation

Met in Trinity memorial church, Warren, Nov. 21st and 22d, beginning with Evening Prayer and sermon by the Rev. J. H. B. Brooks. Wednesday morning, celebration of the Holy Eucharist at 7:30, a short business session, after which the Rev. Dr. H. M. Clarke read an exegesis of St. Luke xxii: 19. A review of "Richard Carvel," by the Rev. James McLaughlin drew a number of ladies to this session. An essay on "Christian Socialism" by the Rev. A. R. Kiefer, brought to the floor a number of speakers in the general discussion. At the closing session in the evening Dr. Morris S. Guth, a layman of the parish, read a critical essay from an expert's point of view, on the "Relation of religion to mental aberration." Dr. Guth is chief of the medical staff at the State Hospital for the Insane at Warren. He disproved the popular fallacy that religion was in any great degree responsible for mental affections, contending that in most cases some prior cause could be found; but inasmuch as religion—the relation of man to his God, the Hereafter, sin, and its consequences—formed so large a part of man's life, it was but natural that such themes should become more or less pronounced after insanity of certain kinds had set in. Dr. Guth's paper was listened to with more than usual interest, and drew forth an enthusiastic discussion.

Bequests to Missions

On Nov. 15th, there was admitted to probate the will of Mrs. Mary Ann Hogg Brunot, widow of the late Hon. Felix R. Brunot, of Allegheny City, who entered into rest on Nov. 2d, in her 78th year. The following are some of the bequests to institutions and missions: St. James' church, Penn. ave., Pittsburgh, $5,000; Allegheny branch of Church Army, $1,000; St. Thomas' church, Oakmont, $2,000; All Saints' mission, Allegheny, $1,000; American Church Missionary Society, endowment for salary of a missionary in diocese of Spokane, $10,000; missions in China, Japan, and Africa, $5,000 each; missions in Cuba and Hayti, $2,000 each; in Mexico, $5,000; Indian mission at Greenwood, S. D., $5,000; Indian missions in South Dakota, at Bishop Hare's discretion, $5,000; missions in Utah and Nevada under Bishop Leonard, $3,000; in Oklahoma and Indian Territory, under Bishop Brooke, $1,000; in Montana, under Bishop Brewer, $2,000; at Defiance, under Miss Thackera, $1,000; in Southern Florida, under Bishop Gray, $1,000; in Laramie, under Bishop Graves, $2,000; in Western Texas, under Bishop Johnston, $1,000; in Alaska, under Bishop Rowe, $2,000; in Kansas, under Bishop Millsbaugh, $1,000; St. Paul's School, Lawrenceville, Va., $3,000; St. Augustine's School, Raleigh, N. C., $3,000; Fund for Aged and Infirm Clergymen, $3,000; Leper's School in China, $8,000; American Church Missionary Society, for Miss Roff's salary for six years, $3,000; Miss Sybil Carter's work among Indians, $2,000; missions in New Mexico and Arizona, under Bishop Kendrick, $1,000; Colored Commission, $5,000. In addition to her bequests to missions and charities, aggregating $123,000, by the death of Mrs. Brunot the will of her husband, Felix R. Brunot, becomes operative, which leaves large sums to charitable institutions in the two cities of Pittsburgh and Allegheny, as well as numerous and generous gifts to the several departments of the Church's work.

A New Church at Braddock

Trinity parish has been worshipping the last few years in a temporary edifice, but is now looking forward to a new church building, to be presented by Mrs. M. E. Kinsey, one of the faithful parishioners, its cost being a gift to her from her son-in-law, Mr. C. M. Schwab, president of the Carnegie Steel Co. Bishop Whitehead is superintending all the arrangements.

Washington

Henry Yates Satterlee, D. D., LL. D., Bishop

St. Monica's League

The first meeting for the winter was held in St. John's parish hall, Nov. 14th. There was a good attendance of members. The Rev. Dr. Mapp who has recently been assigned by the Bishop to the charge of a new mission among the colored people in Southeast Washington, showed the need of such work in that part of the city, and the kind of aid required in the beginning. A house has been selected in which to hold services and Sunday school, for which furniture is needed, and some help for heating and lighting. A grant of money was voted from the treasury, and other gifts added by members of the league which will have a special interest in this mission from the name, St. Monica, having been given it by the Bishop. The Rev. Mr. Pollard, archdeacon of North Carolina, spoke of the work of the Church in his jurisdiction. A grant of $50 was voted, half to be devoted to the work at Littleton, N. C., and the rest to be used at the archdeacon's discretion.

Church of St. Michael and All Angels

On Sunday, Nov. 19th, was consecrated by the Bishop who also celebrated the Holy Communion and preached the sermon. The church was formerly St. John's chapel, till in 1893, a separate parish was formed, and the Rev. Clarence W. Bispham became its first rector. The Rev. W. R. Turner, formerly assistant at the Epiphany, took charge in 1897, and at Easter of last year, the indebtedness on the edifice was paid. The building has been much improved since its erection.

Western Michigan

George De Normandie Gillespie, D. D., Bishop

Arrangements are being made for the celebration of the 25th anniversary of the organization of the diocese in December next.

The Bishop has vacancies in small parishes and in the mission field, with salaries ranging from $600 to $700 per annum.

Church improvements at Traverse City

Grace church has been the recipient during the past summer of several articles of use and beauty. In July, Mrs. James Morgan, of Chicago, placed a fine vocalion in the church, adding a transept and a new window. In addition, she has recently presented the church with an imposing carved oak lectern, and a prayer desk and stall of the same material. Through her generosity, also, a new carpet has been provided for the vestry room. Through the kindness of Messrs. F. Garland and Perry Hannah, the grounds have been sodded and much improved. The church has also been painted. Since the Rev. C. T. Stout has taken charge, nearly $800 has been expended in improvements.

Southern Virginia

Alfred M. Randolph, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Petersburg Convocation

The fall meeting began its sessions in the church of the Good Shepherd, Guns' Hill, Dinwiddie Co., Oct. 31st, and continued three days. The attendance was exceedingly good. Officers were elected for the ensuing year, the Rev. Frank Mezik taking the place of the Rev. Reuben Meredith as secretary, the latter having removed to Nelson Co. All Saints' Day there was a celebration of the Holy Communion. The evening was devoted to a Brotherhood service, the Rev. H. L. Derby and the Rev. John Rideout making interesting and helpful addresses. On Thursday in the afternoon, the usual missionary service was held, when stirring addresses were made by the Rev. John Rideout and the Rev. O. S. Bunting.

Long Island

Abram N. Littlejohn, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Advent Services

At a meeting presided over by the Bishop, and held in the rooms of the Church Club on the 13th inst., arrangements were made for holding special services during Advent in the centrally located churches. Those designated are All Saints', St. Ann's, St. Peter's, Christ church, Clinton st., and Christ church, Bedford ave. At these churches services with address are to be held daily, the Bishop to name the preacher.

Fiftieth Anniversary of St. James, Newtown

This anniversary of its consecration was celebrated on Sunday, Nov. 19th. An interesting historical address from the rector, the Rev. Edward M. McGuffey, extended back to the organization of the parish, nearly two hundred years ago. In 1704 the Rev. William Urquhart was sent from London by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. He officiated alternately at Jamaica, Flushing, and Newtown, the two latter being regarded as parts of the Jamaica parish. After five years of extremely hard work owing to prejudice against the Church of England, Mr. Urquhart died. A memorial of him was erected in the porch added to St. James' church last spring, which bears on its walls in bronze, this inscription: "This porch is erected to commemorate the labors of the Rev. William Urquhart, who laid the foundation of St. James church, Newtown, in 1704, thereby opening the doors of the Church of God to this community." Mr. Urquhart was succeeded by the Rev. Thomas Poyer, in 1710, who was sent from London by the same society. He found that the rectory had been seized by dissenters. Undaunted, he began his labors, distributing books, papers, and tracts, and giving many house-to-house lectures. He was unable, however, to break down prejudice, and in 1718 wrote to the society that the shop keepers refused to sell him provisions, and that the miller sent back his grain unground. In 1731 he obtained permission to return to England, but as he was preparing to depart, was seized with small pox and died. In 1733 the Rev. Thomas Colgan became rector of the three parishes. He had been assistant at Trinity church, New York. His private means, his amiable wife, and his force of character, gave him an advantage over his persecuted predecessors. His congregations increased, and in 1733 he secured a grant of land for a church. It was signed by 100 free holders, and to-day is in a state of perfect preservation. In 1735 a church was erected which is now used for Sunday school purposes. In 1848 the present edifice was built, and also a church in Jamaica, and one in Flushing. Mr. Colgan died in 1755, having conquered in a great degree colonial prejudice against the Church. In 1755 the Rev.

Samuel Seabury, Jr., afterward first Bishop of Connecticut, became rector, and was succeeded by the Rev. Joshua Bloomer. In 1772 he conducted a lottery for the purchase of a church glebe for the Jamaica parish. He died after 20 years of rectorship. After several changes at St. James', the Rev. Samuel Cox, D. D., dean of the cathedral, Garden City, became rector. Under his administration the church was enlarged and beautified. Dr. Cox, in 1888, was succeeded by the Rev. W. H. Burr, who remained until Easter, 1890, and then the present rector took charge. Since then the church has been repaired, and there have been erected an organ, reredos, font, lectern, and church porch. The building has been recarpeted and recushioned. Two memorial windows have been placed. In 1904, St. James' will celebrate her 200th anniversary.

St. James' Church, Brooklyn

The corner-stone of the building which is to replace the old edifice, was laid Nov. 19th. Shortly after four o'clock the procession of clergy, vestry and choir left the little wooden building now being used as a place of worship, and marched to the new site. The service was read by the Rev. Chas. W. Homer, rector of St. James. The stone having been placed in position, and an announcement of the inscription and contents having been read, the Rev. Dr. S. D. McConnell addressed the congregation. Appropriate music was rendered by the vested choir. The church promises to be one of the handsomest in the city, and will cost about $70,000.

Los Angeles

Joseph Horsfall Johnson, D.D., Bishop

There are several vacancies in the missions of this diocese, and one important parish is without a rector.

The mission of the Messiah in Santa Ana, the county seat of Orange Co., has been for the past eight years under the charge of the Rev. W. B. Burrows who has ministered also to congregations at Tustin, El Toro, and one or two other places. Mr. Burrows had a serious illness some months ago, and for change of air spent the summer at Denver. He returned recently much better, but will give his throat a prolonged rest. He will make his residence in Los Angeles. Mr. Burrows has discharged the duties of secretary of the Board of Missions with great interest and efficiency, from the time of the organization of the diocese in 1895, and he will doubtless retain that office.

The Rev. J. H. McCrackan, of the mission of the Ascension, Sierra Madre, has gone to Germany, on account of the death of a relation who had resided there for several years. He will probably be absent about a year.

The parish of Christ church, Los Angeles, has been vacant since the beginning of June, by the resignation of the Rev. Alfred S. Clark. The Rev. George T. Dowling, D. D., is at present engaged temporarily to officiate and preach on Sundays.

Southern Ohio

Thomas A. Jaggard, D.D., Bishop
Boyd Vincent, D.D., Bishop Coadjutor

St. Paul's Church, Columbus

Narrowly escaped total destruction by fire on the night of Nov. 11th. Sparks from a defective smoke-stack fell upon the roof and ignited the shingles. The roof of the west side of the chancel was burned off, and the flames made their way through the south end of the nave to the yellow-pine ceiling, which was so damaged that it will have to be replaced by a new one. The chancel furniture, the pews, and the carpets were seriously damaged by water. The entire loss is covered by insurance. Repairs on the church had just been completed, at a cost of about $2,000. The official boards of neighboring Methodist, Presbyterian, and Baptist Churches offered the use of their chapels, but St. Paul's parish house will accommodate the congregation until the church can be repaired.

The Columbus Deanery

The autumn meeting was held in St. Luke's church, Marietta, Nov. 13th and 14th. The subject for discussion after Evening Prayer on Monday was, "The essentials of missionary effort"; subdivided, the Rev. W. H. Hampton urged the importance of "The missionary spirit"; the Rev. J. D. Herron spoke of "Knowledge"; the Rev. F. W. Bope, of "Prayer"; and the Rev. John Hewitt, of "Giving." On Tuesday morning occurred the ordination recorded elsewhere. At the afternoon session the Rev. Dr. S. N. Watson read an able paper on the subject, "Who shall confer jurisdiction on the clergy, the Bishop or the vestry?" Dr. Watson argued for the conferring of jurisdiction by the Bishop, under certain statutory limitations. The subject was quite generally discussed by those present, since it had a bearing upon a canon proposed by the Bishop at the last annual convention of the diocese, and which will come up for action at the next convention. A committee appointed at the preceding meeting of convocation, reported a canon which looks to the re-organization of the missionary work of the diocese on a plan which gives each deanery the power to disburse its own funds, and also confers increased powers upon the deans of convocations. This canon, after full debate, was adopted and ordered printed for general distribution in the diocese, as it will be presented to the next convention. A special committee reported resolutions of regret on parting with the dean, the Rev. Geo. P. Torrence, who goes on Dec. 1st to begin duty as archdeacon in the diocese of Michigan City, with headquarters at Marion, Ind. The Rev. Dr. Watson was recommended to the mission committee of the diocese to fill the vacancy created there by the resignation of Mr. Torrence. The Rev. John Hewitt was elected to succeed Mr. Torrence as dean.

North Carolina

Joseph Blount Cheshire, Jr., D.D., Bishop

The Charlotte Convocation

The regular meeting was held Oct. 24th and 25th, in St. Paul's church, Monroe. Reports were made of the work in the various parishes. The Rev. Charles Fetter spoke on "The mission work of the convocation, and its support." "At the night service the dean held a conference on "The spiritual life." Addresses were made by Messrs. Hoffman, Fetter, and Parkman. There were celebrations of the Holy Communion each day, and sermons.

Arkansas

Henry Niles Pierce, D.D., LL.D., Bishop
Wm. M. Brown, D.D., Bishop-Coadjutor

Board of Missions

An important meeting was held at Little Rock, on the 7th inst., in the parlor of the Capital Hotel. Bishop Brown presided, and made the important announcement that he made application to the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society, at its October meeting, for an increased appropriation of $3,000, which was granted. This, with the $1,500 which the diocese has been already receiving from the general Board of Missions, would make a total of $4,500 from that source. In order to secure so large an appropriation, the Bishop was obliged to undertake the raising of $4,500 from this diocese, and from his friends North and East. In this connection, the Bishop announced his intention of placing two general missionaries, with the title of archdeacon, in the field at once. One of these will reside at Little Rock, and the other at Fort Smith. The Rev. Charles H. Lockwood and the Rev. R. W. Rhames have been offered the appointments, respectively. In addition to the two archdeacons, a general missionary will be placed in the field in the near future.

First Services at Atkins

The missionary at Morrilton, the Rev. I. M. Merlinjones, held the first services of the Church a few weeks ago at Atkins, a town on the Fort Smith branch of the Iron Mountain railroad.

and a very important cotton centre. Services were held in the Methodist church, and were well attended. At the morning service, an infant was baptized. This was the first time that dozens of those present saw either a Baptism or a clergyman in robes. The first services have left good impressions, and some of the people are thinking. Services will be held once a month.

Michigan City

John Hazen White, D.D., Bishop

Under the auspices of St. Andrew's Brotherhood (lately organized), the rector of St. Paul's, Hammond, has arranged a course of lectures on "The Church." The Diocesan delivered the opening address Nov. 8th, on "The Authority, Origin, and Development of the Church." It was a clear, yet simple exposition. The next address will be delivered in December.

Virginia

Francis M. Whittle, D.D., LL.D., Bishop
Robert A. Gibson, D.D. Bishop-Coadjutor

Bishop Gibson, assisted by the Rev. Messrs. Meade, Jones, and Ellis, recently consecrated the Green Springs chapel, near old St. John's church, Louisa Co., which was begun a number of years ago, during the rectorship of the Rev. Robb White. The sermon was preached by the Bishop.

The anniversary of all the Sunday schools comprised within Henrico county, was held in Richmond on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 12th. As no one church in the city of Richmond can hold all, Holy Trinity and St. Paul's were crowded from chance to doors. Addresses were made in Holy Trinity by the Rev. H. M. Dohring, of Philadelphia, and in St. Paul's, by the Rev. Dr. Niles, of Sing Sing, N. Y.

The Davis Memorial Tablets

Nov. 8th, the tablets placed in St. Paul's church, Richmond, by Mrs. Jefferson Davis, to the memory of her daughter, and by her daughter, Mrs. Hayes, to the memory of her four brothers, were unveiled with simple, yet impressive, ceremony. A fine address was made by the Bishop of West Virginia. The organist, Prof. Reinhardt, played the funeral march composed by him and first played when the remains of Mr. Davis were brought from Mississippi for re-interment in Hollywood cemetery, Richmond.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

Nov. 16th, the Richmond Local Assembly gathered in large force in the Sunday school room of Grace church. The Rev. Dr. Niles, of Sing Sing, N. Y., made a splendid address. The assembly discussed the subject, "What are the needs of the Brotherhood for better work in 1900?" There were a number of speakers, and in the course of their remarks, changes in the rule of service were proposed and discussed at some length. Mr. John W. Wood, the general secretary, announced that at a special meeting of the National Council, held in Philadelphia on the 15th, it was unanimously decided that the National Council for 1900 should be held in Richmond. The announcement was received with a tumult of applause.

Tennessee

Thomas Frank Gallor, D.D., Bishop

Church of the Advent, Nashville

Evensong was solemnly sung by the vested choir, with a solemn procession, for the first time in the history of the parish, on All Saints' Day. Bishop Gallor visited the parish Nov. 12th, and held a conference with the congregation relative to filling the existing vacancy in the rectorship. The rite of Confirmation was administered to three persons, presented by the Rev. E. J. Batty, an English priest occupying a chair in the city High School, who has been conducting the services for the past five months. This parish, which has always been noted for its strong Churchmanship, is a struggling one, and if any parish has any old "ornaments of the Church, or of the ministers thereof," to dispose of, they will be most acceptable; violet Eucharistic vestments being just now especially desirable for the coming season of Advent.

Central New York

F. D. Huntington, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Rev. C. H. Mockridge, D. D., rector of St. Paul's church, Watertown, N. Y., has been appointed acting dean of the First District, in the absence of the Rev. Dr. Herrick, who has gone for a prolonged visit to California on account of illness.

Bishop's Appointments for December

5. P. M., Forestport.
6. A. M., Oriskany Falls.
8. P. M., Fulton.
13. P. M., Aurora or Cayuga.
15. P. M., Cleveland.
17. East Syracuse.
19. Evening, Auburn.
20. A. M., Moravia.
24. A. M. Manlius; P. M., Fayetteville.
27. Evening, Baldwinsville.
28. P. M., Pulaski.

St. Paul's Church, Watertown

Under the guiding hand of its rector, the Rev. C. H. Mockridge, D. D., is increasing largely in membership and financial power. A circular was issued recently by the vestry to the congregation, setting forth the improved financial condition of the church, and its encouraging outlook for the future.

Western New York

Wm. D. Walker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

St. James' Mission, Tonawanda

A lot has been bought on the corner of Delaware and Minerva sts. by the members. A temporary structure is being erected, which it is expected would be ready for occupancy early in November. The mission is in charge of the Rev. L. F. Scofield and the Laymen's League.

Church to be Built at Perry

Steps have been taken towards its immediate erection. Plans have been submitted by Mr. F. W. Brown, architect, of Buffalo, and a suitable lot has been secured. The building will be part of stone and part of wood, and will present a very attractive appearance when completed. The services are in charge of the archdeacon.

Albany

William Crosswell Doane, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Anniversary of Christ Church, Herkimer

The 10th anniversary of the consecration of Christ church was celebrated Nov. 7th. An early Communion service was conducted by the Rev. C. C. Edmunds, former rector of the church, and at 10:30 and 7:30 services were held with elaborate musical programmes. At the 10 o'clock service the Bishop preached a sermon on Christian citizenship, and in the evening, the Rev. Mr. Edmunds preached the anniversary sermon. The following are interesting figures of the work done in the parish since 1855: Total number baptized, 881; confirmed, 491; marriages, 242; burials, 352. The record for the past ten years follows: Baptized, 210; confirmed, 159; marriages, 69; burials, 105. The present strength of the parish is 126 families, or a total of 505 persons, of whom 204 are communicants. During the past ten years, offerings have been given amounting to $31,345 80, which includes $8,000 of the cost of Church property, and $800 for diocesan missions. After the evening service an informal reception was tendered to Mr. Edmunds at the parsonage. The offerings at the anniversary service amounted to over $700.

Memorial to Rev. J. Livingston Reese

At St. Paul's church, Albany, at the morning service, Sunday, Nov. 12th, the handsome new window erected in memory of the Rev. John Livingston Reese, D.D., was unveiled. Dr. Reese had been rector of the parish for 27 years, and when his death occurred last year his friends in this city thought it befitting that a window should be erected to his memory. The subject is "The Good Shepherd." In its construction over 3,000 pieces of glass are used.

St. Stephen's Church, Schuylerville

A beautiful brass pulpit was dedicated on Sunday, Oct. 29th, presented by Mrs. Avonia A. Tilford. The memorial tablet bears this inscription:

To the glory of God and in thankful remembrance of His inestimable blessing vouchsafed through His Church to His servant, Herbert W. Tilford, born 1859 died 1899.

Mr. Tilford entered the Church in this parish, and for a number of years was one of its most devoted members and a working member of the vestry.

Oklahoma and Indian Territory

Francis Key Brooke, D.D., Missionary Bishop

St. Philip's Church, Ardmore, I. T.

The parish school opened its second term Oct. 16th, with a good attendance. Most of the pupils are poor white children who have no free school advantages, and pay very little for tuition or books. It is doing good work among a class of people who know absolutely nothing about the Church and her ways.

St. Mary's, Paul's Valley

The first services in the new church were held Sunday, Nov. 5th. Choral Morning Prayer was sung at 10:30, by the Rev. H. B. Smith, of Ardmore, minister-in-charge, assisted by the Rev. Frank C. Smith, of Shawnee, Okla., and a vested choir of 20 voices. A Sunday school was organized in the afternoon with 25 members. Choral Evensong was beautifully rendered by the large choir, at 7:30. This church is the result of a year's work by the Rev. Henry Smith, being ably assisted by the hard-working Church people of the place. This bids fair to become one of the best missions in this section of the missionary jurisdiction.

Minnesota

Henry B. Whipple, D.D., LL.D., Bishop
M. N. Gilbert, D.D., LL.D., Bishop-coadjutor

The ladies of St. Clement's church, St. Paul, cleared $150 by the sale of their Recipe Cook Book.

The St. Paul Clericus met at St. Clement's church. After the celebration of the Holy Eucharist, several papers of an interesting nature were read.

Board of City Missions

Closed its fiscal year with all outstanding debts paid off, and a small surplus in the treasury to begin afresh. Reports from the outlying missions show they are doing good work, and are in a flourishing condition. Several new missions will, in all probability, be opened up this coming year.

St. Paul's, Winona

The new guild house, presented by Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Youmans, is completed, and will soon be formally dedicated. Mr. Youmans has expended about $18,000 in the erection of this building. It is constructed of Winona stone; is located in the rear of the church, and corresponds to it in architecture. The first floor is given up to the auditorium and chapel which are so arranged that they can be thrown into each other, the former being 54x40 ft. in size. A class room and kitchen and serving rooms are also on this floor. In the basement there is a large drill hall, game room for the children, and a choir room. On the third floor is the rector's study, a room exclusively for the use of the men of the parish, kindergarten room, ladies' room, and two class rooms. The whole building is very complete, and the generous gift is greatly appreciated by the members of the parish.

Editorials and Contributions

WHEN the Life of Cardinal Manning, by Mr. Purcell, was published, it caused a good deal of agitation in Roman Catholic circles. It was not contended that the writer was not true to the facts, but rather that it was highly indecorous, not to say reprehensible, to expose the inner workings of various transactions with such unvarnished frankness. Mr. Purcell, however, seems to have stood ready to defend the positions of his book against all comers. It is well known that he was afterwards entrusted with the work of preparing a life of Cardinal Newman. Unfortunately, as he was completing this labor, Mr. Purcell became ill, and shortly after, passed away. It was announced that the biography was ready for publication, and it has for some time been eagerly looked for. Now it leaks out that it has been withdrawn. Such is the method of the Roman authorities. But it is a policy which in a large measure defeats itself, for the suspicion immediately arises that there are strong reasons for such a suppression—that there are facts which will not bear the light. The policy of suppression arouses distrust rather than allays it.

AT the recent synod of the diocese of Dublin a debate took place upon a matter which, in the Irish Church, comes under the head of "Ritualism," and is regarded as one of solemn importance. It appears that a certain Mr. Hunt, in examining the tablet erected in Christ church cathedral to the memory of the late Archbishop Plunket, was startled and shocked to observe that the deceased prelate was represented as wearing a "ritualistic and illegal vestment." Accordingly, he introduced into the synod a resolution requesting the alteration of the monument. So far as can be discovered from the discussion which ensued, the offensive vestment consisted of a stole with crosses carved upon it! There is nothing remarkable in the fact that a member of the Irish Church should feel called upon to object to the cross under any circumstances, but considering the character and weight of the assemblage on this occasion, one could hardly look for the kind of reception accorded to Mr. Hunt's complaint. Instead of a burst of laughter, he was listened to with the most solemn gravity. Every one concerned acknowledged the seriousness of such facts, and from the Archbishop and dean, down to the canons and other clergy, regret was expressed that such a thing should have happened. Though the design (drawn precisely after that of Archbishop Trench's monument) had been submitted to them, none had noticed those dreadful crosses. The dean promised to have them erased, if it could be done without injury to the tablet, and that henceforth the greatest care should be taken to guard against the introduction of such superstitious emblems. The wonder is what becomes of the Irish sense of humor on such occasions?

MR. CARROLL D. WRIGHT, United States Commissioner of Labor, finds the problem with which he has to deal a very embarrassing one. He considers the various solutions which have been offered, and the experiments which have been tried, and dismisses them all as inadequate. While he has faith to believe that sometime and somehow a solution will arrive, he confesses his failure to discern on what lines a settlement will be accomplished. Meanwhile, he is of opinion that the nearest approach to a panacea is the "decent treatment of employes." Perhaps it will be found that this is not only a "near approach," but that it is the panacea. It is only necessary that "decent treatment" should be defined—scientifically defined, to use the language of the period. We think it is indisputable that in the majority of cases, where trouble occurs, apart from outside interference, between employers and their men, it is owing fully as much to the arrogant and overbearing attitude of the former, or their representatives, as to grievances arising from the wage scale or the conditions of work. Men do not want "charity," in the ordinary sense of that word, but they do want to be regarded as men and not as beasts of burden or as mere machines; that is, they want, as Mr. Wright says, "decent treatment." This is, in reality, to come back to the Christian standpoint and the golden rule. It appears, then, that the wisest investigators of the evils of society, after many experiments, are forced back to the old fundamental principles for which religion stands, human sympathy and consideration. Those who have the destinies of others in their hands are bound to endeavor to understand what it means to "put yourself in his place," and to act upon the principle of human brotherhood. The Christian preacher may take courage. After all that has been said, and in spite of the temptation to which he has, perhaps, sometimes yielded, to hail some new scheme as a universal panacea, he finds himself brought back to the simple teaching of our Blessed Lord.

Adopting the Church's Methods

WE have been much interested by a letter in a diocesan paper from the rector of a prominent parish in a Southern city. He informs his brethren that he had been accustomed to administer the sacrament of Holy Baptism after the congregation had dispersed, and only in the presence of the interested few who remained for the occasion. But not long since, moved by some weighty remarks of his bishop on the dignity of this great sacrament, and the obligation under which the minister lies to administer it in the face of the congregation either at Morning or Evening Prayer, after the second lesson, he "finally made up his mind to follow the Church's directions." He administered Holy Baptism at Morning Prayer, presumably on a Sunday, for "as the day was remarkably fine, the church was well filled." The result must be told in his own words:

The congregation, to my surprise, not only rose in a body as soon as the first word of the Exhortation was uttered, but joined most heartily in the entire service.

But greater still was my surprise when members called upon me for the special purpose of expressing their gratification. One wished me to understand "that it was most instructive." Another came to tell me "that it was the first Baptisms he had attended for ten years," and so on. The result was a revelation to me, and came as a further refreshing proof that he who follows the rubric will ever be found on the right side and in true sympathy with the large majority of his congregation.

This must have been as gratifying as it was surprising to the priest who had at last conformed to the Prayer Book in this particular matter. But the good pastor proceeds to give a bit of advice to his brethren of the clergy, and says, with delightful naivete, "I volunteer this experience for what it is worth. If any of my brethren of the clergy who may read this statement, have not yet adopted the Church's method in this matter, I respectfully suggest that they give it a trial."

WE are not criticising our reverend brother personally, or his action or advice, when we say that unconsciously he uncovers the secret of much of the weakness of the Church. How can any priest, we venture to ask, be satisfied with himself or his position ecclesiastically and morally, if he has not "adopted the Church's methods" in this and other matters pertaining to his priestly ministrations? He may possibly be not quite well-informed in regard to the Church's methods, through defective instruction, or prejudice, or carelessness; but if his ordination vows mean anything, and if he esteems his commission as a bishop, priest, or deacon as a reality, he must know that he is sent forth by authority, as an officer of the Church, to do his work as a minister of Christ, and "so to minister the doctrine and sacraments, and the discipline of Christ, as the Lord hath commanded, and as this Church hath received the same, according to the commandments of God; so that he may teach the people committed to his care and charge with all diligence to keep and observe the same."

WE venture to say that most of the criticism—not always gentle—that has been inflicted upon clergy who were strict observers of the rubrics of the Prayer Book, and who earnestly endeavored to ascertain their legal and historical interpretation, would never have been uttered if their critics had themselves tried to "adopt the Church's methods." The manly acknowledgment of the clergyman to whose letter we have referred, will lead many others, we earnestly hope, not only to make the successful experiment of "adopting the Church's methods," but of going a long step further, that of reaching the conscientious conclusion that they are not, and never have been, at liberty to adopt any but the Church's methods, wheresoever she has definitely prescribed them, as good Churchmen surely ought to do.

Some Common Mistakes

BY THE REV. FRED'K S. JEWELL, D. D.

IV.

NINTH. It is a mistake for a Churchman to call himself, or allow himself to be called, an Episcopalian. The Church gives him no warrant for the use of the term, and there is, in fact, no Episcopalian Church. Besides this, to call one an Episcopalian, is to class him as a sectarian, and treat the Church as a mere sect. Like a score of other religious denominations in the Protestant world, it is sectarian in both form and designation. What is more than this, like those sectarian names, it is altogether partial in its differential force. For example, so-called churches are Congregational or Presbyterian, according to their peculiar tenets as to Church government. The Church is neither solely nor chiefly differentiated from these other bodies by its form of government. She is One, Catholic, and Apostolic, and Episcopal only as she is Apostolic. In short, her grand distinction is that she is the Church. The only proper name, then, for those belonging to her communion is Churchman. Only that will her intelligent and loyal members call themselves.

TENTH. It is another of these both Church and self-belittling mistakes to make use of the term, "this Church of ours." This is again to reduce the Church to the level of a mere sect or denomination. "This Church of ours," and "that Church of theirs," run quite parallel as only different species of the same general kind. The use of these possessive terms is consistent enough where a body of people frame a Church according to their own notions or choose its connection because it suits their prejudices or preferences. But the Church does not belong to us, we belong to it. We neither made it, chose it, nor became possessed of it. We have no proprietary rights in it, and may neither alter, barter away, nor abandon what belongs to it. Neither have we any right to make our connection with it, nor our continuance in it, a matter of mere personal preference or convenience. As divinely instituted by our Lord, set in order by the Apostles, and by God Himself providentially kept to our times, it is simply our duty to accept it, conform to it, and maintain it, whether we altogether like it or not.

Sunday Observance

FROM THE CONVENTION ADDRESS OF THE RT. REV. WM. N. McVICKAR, D. D.

I BELIEVE that no earnest, faithful Christian can observe the drift and tendency of the times without the most anxious apprehension as to results in the growing non-observance of this holy day. That there is this drift there can be no doubt. One has but to recall the situation of thirty, twenty, or even ten years back, to be sadly convinced of it. And the saddest thing about it is that this drift is not confined again to the world around us, but is as marked, nay, one might almost say, more marked within the Christian Church itself. The tendency to curtail the time devoted to God's worship, to compromise on a single service, and that of the shortest and most meagre character, and often not even this, while the rest of the day is given over to selfishness and festivity, suggests an awful contrast to the quiet and happy Sundays that our childhood's memories bring back to us, with their precious opportunities of spiritual growth, and the cultivation of the cognate graces of family life.

"Sweet day, so cool, so calm, so bright,
The bridal of the earth and sky."

How it stands out among the sweetest memories and influences of our lives! And if all did not prize alike its proffered privileges—at least a sense of decency and propriety prevented the open violation of its holy hours. It was considered a piece of vulgarity for people to show in any way a public disregard for what others held so sacred. How changed all that is now! When the very members of the Church themselves not only neglect their opportunities, but lead the way for others who cannot be supposed to care as they should for them, in the day's secularization. We are not Puritans, we do not plead for a negative Jewish Sabbath, albeit we recite at God's altar its Jewish demands, and pray that "our hearts may be inclined to keep" them. We recognize the blessed liberty with which Christ has made us free; but it is not a liberty to be used as an excuse simply for self-indulgence, or to strike at the dearest and most precious of God's gifts to man. One thing is certain—that with this day and its keeping in some sense sacred and apart, is bound up not only the interests of religion, but the very life of man's highest nature. Secularize it, give it over to mere enjoyment, make it simply a holiday in place of a holy day, and it will not be long before the spiritual nature to which that day is the supreme opportunity, will grow feeble and die. Every other faculty has its chance of exercise and growth through the long week, and hence is strong. The higher nature and its capacity demand one day at least, that it may live and not die. The reason, I am sure, why in the most critical hours of life men find their spiritual powers, their faith, their hopes, their grasp on God, so weak and unavailing, is due to the paralysis which comes from non-use and exercise. And can there be a more fatal calamity for any one than this? Whatever excuse there may be for the poor, tired men and women whose week-day life is one long, unbroken grind, to take part of Sunday for free exercise and fresh air in the country,—and I would not deny them—surely it is mere wanton indulgence on the part of others who are masters of their time, to snatch that right for themselves. More than that, it is a piece of pure selfishness, when their pleasure necessarily binds extra burdens for those who must serve them. Here again there is a call for Christians, and I urge it with all love and sincerity, to take their stand and lift their ideals before the world. Make Sunday again what it was a quarter of a century ago, as we once knew it, a happy, bright, lovely day, because first of all a holy day, devoted primarily to thoughts of higher things, to communion with God, and then to the cultivation of the simple enjoyments of family life.

Advent and Epiphany Appeal

BELOVED BRETHREN OF THE CLERGY AND LAITY:—The plea and the appeal to the Church this year for a quickened and deepened interest in her missionary work, have in them the two great facts—ability and opportunity—out of which comes, as never came before, the plain and positive call of duty. Never has wealth poured into the places where men store their treasures on the earth, with more startling abundance than in this year. "The floors are full of wheat," and "the vats overflow with wine and oil." The ventures and enterprises of business find millions of money poured into them, to swell the increasing accumulations of gain. The ingenuity of men is well nigh exhausted in the effort to find channels for the almost endless expenditures of money, in investments, in amusements, in luxury, in display. And even the insatiate greed of covetousness is content and satisfied. Is it not time for us to pray that God "will pour out His Spirit upon all flesh"; "upon the servants, and the handmaidens," upon "the old men, and the young men," upon "the sons, and the daughters," that they may "dream the dreams" of higher spiritual possibilities, and see the visions of the splendid opportunities that lie before them?

First of all, are the open doors into which we have already entered. There can be no withdrawal of support, no lessening of energy, no lowering of interest, as to any one of all the undertakings for which this Church is responsible to God. Africa and China and Japan, with their teeming populations, touched with the new life of a civilization which must be evangelized if we would win these nations to Christ, have so far only centres, here and there, of Christian influence, which cry out for the increase and extension and enlargement of their life. It is no longer merely the call to make haste to save the souls of men; no longer the plea to bring to humanity, everywhere, the news of that blessed power of the Incarnation which lifts all human nature up toward God. It has become now, especially in the great Empire of Japan, the simple question whether we shall allow a mere veneer of pagan polish to call itself civilization, or whether we shall teach them the ethics of the Gospel and the religion of the Cross. In our own land, Ethiopia lifts up pleading hands to God, asking, in the name of humanity and of the closer brotherhood in Christ, that we shall care for the enormous number of colored people (one-tenth of our whole population) whom we have endowed with the responsibility of freedom, and whom we must set free from ignorance and superstition, lest they become or remain "the servants of sin." The ever-extending population, crowding to the farthest Territories, has its close claim upon us, to take to those stray sheep the folding and the feeding which the Good Shepherd charges us to give to all His flock.

There is no city without its slums. There is no diocese without its mission stations. There is no lessening demand of duty to the Indians. We have made ventures, that must be maintained in Mexico and Brazil. And now, with a sudden surprise, we are compelled to deal with what are well called "The Increased Responsibilities;" since Puerto Rico is our very own, and Cuba in close relation to us as a people, and since our gold has bought, and our armies are occupying parts of, the Philippine Islands. It sounds like Isaiah's prophecy fulfilled: "Pathros and Cush and Elam and Shinar and the islands of the sea."

What shall we do? The spies bring back, as of old, the double story of great opportunities and great difficulties. Shall we side with the brave men or the cowards? Taking faint-hearted counsel with our fears is not the way of Christian men. The very difficulties are but encouragements to greater energy. Aiming at the farthest point, reaching for the remotest places, so, and so only, can we accomplish our undertakings and achieve success.

They struck two keynotes in the Missionary Council in St. Louis, which ring clear and true as the voice that cried in the wilderness: "Every opportunity for the spread of Christ's kingdom means the duty of immediately taking up the work." "Every new work undertaken by the Board of Managers will be supported by the Church." Not now, then, the missions in twenty-two missionary districts, and in the forty-two home dioceses; not now the Indians and the colored people; not now Africa and Japan and Mexico and Haiti and Brazil; not now the twenty-two bishops and 1,600 other missionary workers, the hospitals and orphanages and schools—not these only now, but, besides these, and in order to rouse ourselves to care for these the better the broader outlook, and the farther reach and the fuller effort to do our duty as preachers of a pure Faith and teachers of a pure morality, in the countries where the decay of morals has followed upon a corruption of the Faith. Our armies of occupation will not fulfill their mission if they open the way only to trade, only to power, only to wealth. We are not in these new places by God's will, unless we are there to "make known His way upon earth, His saving health among all nations."

The Board is pleading for more money and more men. It is pleading still more earnestly for the high motive behind these gifts. Pitiably disproportionate as are the men that give themselves and the money that men give to the needs and demands, pitifully disproportionate as both are to the men that give themselves to earthly aims and ambitions and the money that is spent on the perishing and passing interests of time, still more pitiable is the disproportion between the eagerness of our devotion to selfish concerns and our feeble indifference to the cause of missions, which is the spirit of the Church's breath and the blood of her life. We are as blind men, with clay upon our eyes, sealing their sightlessness into total blindness, until we go and wash in that "pool of Siloam, which is by interpretation, Sent." "Let us go, therefore"—for this is the type of the Messias—to Christ; "let us go, therefore, and wash, and come, seeing."

By order and in behalf of the Board of Managers.

Letters to the Editor

BASELESS AND INJURIOUS ASPERSIONS

To the Editor of The Living Church:

The imputation so wantonly cast by the Rev. M. K. Schermerhorn upon the honesty and good faith of the rank and file of the clergy of the Church, merits an indignant rebuke. A story told of Bishop Wilmer, of Alabama, I think, seems apropos. On one occasion while traveling, his train was wrecked. As the good Bishop extricated himself from the car, a drummer who was doing likewise, exclaimed: "We all came mighty near going to the devil that time!" Quick as a flash the Bishop retorted: "Speak for yourself, sir! Speak for yourself!" Comment is unnecessary.

"IRREFUTABLE" CRITICS

To the Editor of The Living Church:

"The Protestant Episcopal Prayer Book is cumbered from beginning to end with words and phrases which bind it to the biblical and traditional errors which Dr. Briggs and his fellow-critics are so irrefutably pointing out." So writes the Rev. M. K. Schermerhorn, a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and a member of the American Unitarian Association. Now, Mr. Editor, I take strong exception to the affirmation of the above writer as to biblical and traditional errors "which Dr. Briggs and his fellow-critics are so irrefutably pointing out." The higher critics (so-called) with Dr. Briggs, etc., have not yet, so far as I have read, "irrefutably" pointed out any errors in the Scriptures. They claim to have done so, but they have so far failed to substantiate that claim. They, like the late Mr. Ingersoll, have used the word of God deceitfully; they misquote their opponents of the conservative school, and then with a flourish of trumpets tell the religious world they have irrefutably pointed out errors in the Holy Scriptures, and some clergymen believe them. Let me give you a case in point: A recent writer of the Dr. Briggs' school of interpreters states, quoting Prof. Green from Hebraica, 1889, vol. x, p. 140, "The critical partitions of Genesis have been gradually elaborated during more than a century by a succession of scholars of the greatest eminence, who have expended upon it an immense amount of learning, ingenuity, and patient toil, until they have at length brought it into a shape in which it is accepted with substantial unanimity by European critics of widely different schools of thought and very various grades of belief and unbelief." Such is the quotation from Prof. Green, seemingly on the side of the higher critics; but the vital part of Dr. Green's statement is purposely left out by the writer very ingeniously. I give here Prof. Green's concluding words from same paragraph: "Nevertheless, it is not the weight of authority, but the force of the arguments, which is decisive. And the fluctuations of critical opinion in the past, and particularly the rapid and extensive changes which have taken place in the most recent times, caution us not to regard its present state as one of permanent equilibrium." He adds elsewhere: "Able scholars in Germany, France, Holland, and Great Britain are lifting their voices in opposition to the general critical drift, and it would seem as though a reaction had already begun." This Dr. Green wrote me, Jan. 3, 1897.

In view of such an authority, I respectfully ask my clerical brother where the word "irrefutably" comes in? The data from which the higher critics work is arbitrary and imperfect, and the conclusions false. I would urge my good brother to look up a recent issue of THE LIVING CHURCH, and he will find a very able article applying the principles of interpretation used by the higher critics to a well-known short poem of Burns, which principles give to that poem three authors. An argument that proves such an absurdity with one of Burns' poems, cannot very much affect the Holy Scriptures. With our late lamented Bishop Neely, of Maine, I believe that "the Bible is the Word of God."

WE DO STAND IN SOLID RANK

To the Editor of The Living Church:

I suppose there is not a priest in the Church who read the article headed "Prayer Book Rigmarole," in your issue of Nov. 11th, but was highly indignant, and readily repudiated this Rev. M. K. Schermerhorn and his statements. Your issue of Nov. 25th is before me, and it is with a feeling of considerable comfort that I have glanced through the articles of the Rev. Mr. Gilbert, and the Rev. Dr. McKnight. Permit me to add my voice of approval to these, and to repeat the refrain of my brother, John Mills Gilbert, "Thank God, we of the priesthood can stand in solid ranks and still proclaim our unshaken faith in the Church, and in her familiar forms of devotion."

Ordinations

On Sunday, Oct. 15th, Bishop Morrison ordained the Rev. Milton Sherk Runkle to the priesthood, the rector presenting the candidate and the Bishop preaching the sermon. The Rev. Messrs. A. C. Stillson and George Gibson assisted in the ordination. Mr. Runkle is rector of the church of the Good Shepherd, Des Moines, Iowa.

The Rev. F. C. Walton, recently a minister in the Reformed Episcopal Church, was ordered deacon, Nov. 14th, in St. Luke's, Marietta, S. Ohio, by Bishop Jaggard, to whom he was presented by the Rev. Dr. J. F. Ohl. The Bishop preached the sermon which was a plea for the revival of the diaconate of the Primitive Church, and was assisted in the service by visiting clergymen.

On Sunday, Nov. 19th, in Trinity cathedral, Cleveland, Ohio, Raymond H. Edwards, formerly a Presbyterian minister, was ordained deacon by the Rt. Rev. William A. Leonard, Bishop of Ohio. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Canon Watson. The Preface to the Ordinal and the Epistle were read by the Rev. Canon Hall. The sermon was preached by the Rev. George H. McGrew, D. D., and the service was directed by the Rev. H. L. Gaylord, curate. Mr. Edwards is appointed to serve at the missions of the Redeemer and the Atonement, in Cleveland.

The Judgment

BY C. N. HALL

The pride of wealth must come to naught,
The pride of place must fall,
When God shall ask, "What have ye wrought?"
On that last day of all.

Then he who, rich, had haughty grown,
And he with pride of birth,
Their souls must come before the Throne
To tell their deeds of earth.

"The wealth, the place, I gave in fee,
But did ye feed My poor;
And did no debtor go away
Despairing from your door?

"The helpless, friendless and alone,
Oppressed by the strong;
And did ye make their cause your own,
And toll to right their wrong?

"And were ye strong with gentleness,
Was Justice still your guide;
And did ye honor Truth no less,
When by the world denied?

"Were there no children poor on earth,
To whom your wealth could bring
A childish laugh, an hour of mirth,
Relief from suffering?

"Go hence! The wealth was only Mine;
The place, by Me bestowed.
Ye should have made them gifts divine.
Ye did make them your God."

The Benedictus

EXCEPT Magnificat, we have nothing so beautiful and appropriate for daily use in the daily offices, as Benedictus. The tremendous and entrancing theme of the Incarnation, as foreshadowed "by the mouth of His holy prophets," as shown forth in the light that lightened the Gentiles, is nowhere else so grandly treated. One might be glad to attend Matins at some inconvenience every day in the year, if only to join with two or three met together, to sing or say this magnificent hymn, yet the American Church, for a hundred years out of it all but four verses, while it cast out the Magnificat altogether (the explanation was weak enough: "All generations shall call me blessed," could not apply to us, and we could not say it with sincerity!). Now we have both these grand Gospel anthems; but permission is given to cut the Benedictus as before, except on four days in the year. A letter in The Churchman, from Mr. F. M. Burgess, states the case admirably:

The fact that the Church seems to allow this mutilation, and prints it with a break after the fourth verse, which I could never understand, ought not to weigh for an instant with any one who appreciates the blessed significance of the Incarnation. That one is not obliged to do a thing is a mighty poor reason for leaving it undone. We are not required by the Church to make our Communion but three times a year, yet what earnest Christian would be satisfied with that? The "Benedictus" is not long enough to offer any excuse for omitting more than half of it, and that the most beautiful and helpful part. Why not break up the Te Deum and the Benedicite? They are much longer, and in point of inspiration and Scriptural authority, there is no comparison with the Benedictus. But what right have we, anyway, habitually to cut to pieces such an inspired hymn? Besides, what a poor and ineffective climax is made by the words, "from the hand of all that hate us," when compared with these: "To give knowledge of salvation unto His people for the remission of their sins, through the tender mercy of our God, whereby the Dayspring from on high hath visited us, to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, and to guide our feet into the way of peace." If it is too much effort for the choir to sing it, let it be read. I cannot feel that this is a matter of indifference.

Pen-and-Ink-lings

OUT of 2,186,800,000 letters that passed through the British post-office last year, there were as many as 8,500,000 which the officials managed not to deliver. In those opened at the dead letter office, property of the value of $3,600,000 was found.

THE Lutheran World is credited with the following: "When a man goes after an astute editor, he should be sure to have his spelling-book along. Recently, in one of the papers I read, the editor was addressed thus by some well-meaning brother of the pulpit, whose exegesis, it is to be hoped, is better than his orthography: 'Doctor Editor, allow me, with all due deference, to ask whether it is the mule or the ass or the fool or the nave that is in you.' In true architectural invective, the editor comes back at his assailant, and tells him that he is a transept, denounces him as a cathedral, and, to make certain that he has got even, says that he is St. Peter's piled on top of St. Paul's."

ECCLESIASTICAL reporters have lately distinguished themselves by the following statements: "The services opened with the requiem chant, followed by other lauds and matins for the dead. Then came the pontifical high mass for the soul of the departed." And again, in describing a new church, one of the ornaments was "a brass relief of the Lord's Supper."

VISITORS in the Presbyterian Cemetery at Dover, Del., found in a distant section of the cemetery, some forty feet apart, graves of three young women. They are the wives of Alexander McClyment, a former assemblyman and well-known citizen of the early part of this century. On the slab of Sarah who died in 1811, aged twenty-one, is inscribed: "O Monster! My heart is torn asunder by this ghastly wound." In 1816, Elizabeth, the second wife, died, aged twenty-two, and her tomb contains words even stronger: "Insatiate Archer! Would not one suffice?" But in 1825, when Elizabeth, the third wife, died at the age of twenty-five, the sorrow-stricken husband wrote: "Thy shaft fell thrice; and thrice my peace was slain."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"WOMEN, as well as men, can ride on the cars"—such is the translation of paragraph number two in the rules, or notice to the public, prepared by the Korean president of the Seoul Electric Railway Company. The introduction of this trolley line is "the first step towards civilization in the 'Hermit Kingdom.'" Formerly women were not allowed on the streets in the daytime, but a curfew-bell was rung at eight o'clock in the evening, after which hour the men were required to remain in-doors, while the women took their exercise.

THE work of building an electric railway from the Governor's residence, outside the West Gate, through the heart of Seoul to the new tomb of Empress Min, beyond the East Gate, was begun last year, and completed in May of the present year. Japanese were employed as motormen, and native Koreans as conductors. For several days in May the cars ran over a portion of the route; the service was liberally patronized, and the enterprise appeared to be well established. On the 26th, however, when the president of the company and a few guests were en route to the imperial tomb, the first accident occurred—the child of a native was caught under the wheels and killed. But it so happened that the population of Seoul had for weeks been indulging in somewhat unscientific speculations as to the cause of a drought which afflicted the land, and now they either thought or pretended that the cause had been discovered. To quote from the Korean Repository: "The electric wires, some say, cut off the influence of Heaven; others affirm that as the power-house is built on a sacred spot, there can be no rain until the obstruction is removed." The people lost their self-control, stoned the company's employes, battered the car to pieces, and threatened to destroy the power-house; but the authorities gained control, and order was restored.

GOD'S ANSWER

The cry of man's anguish went up unto God,
"Lord, take away pain!
The shadow that darkens the world thou hast made,
The close-coiling chain
That strangles the heart, the burden that weighs
On the wings that would soar—
Lord, take away pain from the world thou hast made,
That it love thee the more!"

Then answered the Lord to the cry of His world,
"Shall I take away pain,
And with it the power of the soul to endure,
Made strong by the strain?
Shall I take away pity that knits heart to heart,
And sacrifice high?
Will ye lose all your heroes that lift from the fire
White brows to the sky?
Shall I take away love that redeems with a price
And smiles at its loss?
Can ye spare from your lives that would climb unto mine
The Christ on His cross?"
—Julia Larned, in The Independent.

An Athletic Papyrus

BY WILLIAM C. WINSLOW, D. D., LL. D.

MUSCULAR Christianity will be glad to learn that one of the papyri discovered by the Egypt Exploration Fund, and but just pronounced upon by our experts, is a detailed list of the winners in all the thirteen events which formed the Olympian games for a series of about seven years. Its essential value is, that no complete list of all the events for even a single Olympiad has hitherto been found, or is known to be extant.

But this fact is enhanced by the circumstance that the papyrus covers the time when Pindar and Bacchylides were composing odes, yet extant, in honor of the Olympian victors, and that it furnishes independent testimony for assigning accurate dates to these famous compositions. Thus, Odes IX, X, XI, of Pindar are now shown to have had wrong dates. It will be remembered that some twenty of the poems of Bacchylides were obtained in 1897 from a unique papyrus and edited by Dr. Kenyon who has been of service to our scholars in their critical study of papyri. By this papyrus of the Olympian victors, Bacchylides receives an extension of sixteen years of literary activity.

Nor is this all. Chronology in Greek plastic art is aided. Pausanias, the topographer, states that near the close of our second century, many statues at Olympia bore the names of victors and sculptors, which the German explorers at the site confirm. Our papyrus fixes the year of a victory, and consequently of the sculptor whose plastic art commemorated it. To illustrate this point: Polycleitus, of Argos, is now shown to have flourished only a little later than Phidias, and Pythagoras appears to have continued his work down to about the same period.

The American Negro*

IT is no exaggeration to say that Booker T. Washington to-day is the best-known Negro in the world, and one of the greatest workers for the uplifting of the black people. A man born in slavery, without any advantages of birth, position, or wealth, who in eighteen years can from nothing build up a Normal Industrial School of a thousand students, with property to the value of $300,000, with influence felt throughout the whole South, is an inspiration to all, whether white or black. The man who has done this, and more, is the author of this book—"The Future of the American Negro." Such a man deserves to be heard, and his ideas are worthy of serious attention.

Mr. Washington's book is in part a collection of papers on the Negro problem, written at various times for the magazines. Naturally, perhaps, there is repetition, and we also fault his style at times. These are minor defects. We have here a book which ought to be read by every student of this problem, and by every worker in the field. Mr. Washington passes in quick review the history of the Negro, from the introduction of slavery in 1619. From fourteen slaves then brought to this country, the number has grown to nearly ten millions—almost, if not quite, one-tenth of the whole population. This fact alone compels us to realize the seriousness of the problem, for "for better, for worse," these people are with us, and must influence the whole of our American life. In the State, as in the Church, it is true that we are all members one of another.

The author dwells with pleasure on the fidelity of his race, both during the civil war and in the Spanish-American. It is with pardonable pride also that he points to the progress the Negro has made in the thirty-five years since the war ended. Mr. Washington is large-minded, a man of wide experience, and is consequently able to look at the subject fairly. He is not blind to the faults and weaknesses of his people, which he rightly ascribes in large measure to 250 years of slavery. Neither does he shut his eyes to the fact that the white people are influenced for good or ill by the presence of this multitude of blacks. "I know that wherever Negro life touches the life of the nation, it helps or hinders; that wherever the life of the white race touches the black, it makes it stronger or weaker. . . . I know that only a few centuries ago they went into slavery in this country pagans, that they came our Christians; they went into slavery as so much property, they came out American citizens; . . . they went into slavery with the chains clanking about their wrists, they came out with the American ballot in their hands."

The Negro problem is one that must be solved—for the sake of whites as well as blacks. There can be no peace until it is settled; something must be done. Some have thought that education would do it, and large sums of money have been spent in teaching Negroes Latin, Greek, Hebrew, philosophy, history, etc., etc., and the results in many cases have been disastrous. A race just out of slavery had not the capacity for such education; there was no foundation on which to build. It is not strange, therefore, that a disinclination and dislike for manual labor were begotten, and that ability to commit crime was increased. For while the intellect was cultivated, heart and conscience were but slightly touched.

Others again have advocated the removal of the black people to Africa, that there they might work out their own salvation apart from whites. But, aside from the enormous difficulty of transporting ten millions of people to a foreign country, Mr. Washington points out this insuperable objection—there is no place in Africa for them! That country either belongs to, or is under the influence of, the various European Powers, who would not permit such an occupation. In the opinion of the author, and others, the place for the Negro is in the South. He knows the South, and the people there know him, and have more sympathy with him than others. Mr. Washington thinks that the salvation of the Negro lies in his being rightly educated. He would therefore have the Negro educated industrially, religiously, mentally. The schools should teach him in many cases the very simplest elements of cleanliness of person and home; how to work, and to the best advantage; to be saving, and so learn the value and power of property. With this, his religion should become more rational and less emotional—more practical. The intellect would not be neglected; and so being truly educated, the Negro would take his place in the South, and show what was in him. Not politics, but character, will enable him to make his way with the whites. As a race, the Negro is in his infancy, and possesses the weaknesses and faults of such a people, consequently he must not expect to be received at once as one of the favored race. It is Mr. Washington's judgment that "during the next half century, and more, the Negro must continue passing through the severe American crucible. He is to be tested in his patience, his forbearance, his perseverance, his power to endure wrong,—to withstand temptations, to economize, to acquire and use skill,—his ability to compete, to succeed in commerce, to disregard the superficial for the real, the appearance for the substance; to be great and yet small, learned and yet simple, high and yet the servant of all. This,—this is the passport to all that is best in the life of our Republic; and the Negro must possess it or be barred out."

The book ought to produce good results. With the knowledge of that which is being done at Hampton, Tuskegee, and other places, workers in this field everywhere should be encouraged, and feel that their efforts are being crowned with success.

OLIVER CROMWELL, by THEODORE ROOSEVELT, will not be the history of a mere student, compiled with much research, but with little experience of affairs. It will show a man of action in history as viewed by a younger man of action to-day. It begins in the January Scribner, and will be completed in six numbers. THE ILLUSTRATORS include F. C. Yohn, E. C. Peixotto, and Henry McCarter, also Seymour Lucas, R. A., the well-known authority upon the Cromwellian period, and two other well-known English illustrators, Frank Craig and Claude E. Shepperson. There will also be portraits reproduced from the famous English collection.

ERNEST SETON-THOMPSON

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS will continue to be a prominent and frequent contributor both of fiction and of special articles. More specific announcement will be made from time to time.

THE RUSSIA OF TO-DAY, by HENRY NORMAN, author of "The Real Japan," "The Far East," etc., and the expert on foreign politics and colonial policies. Six articles, all illustrated.

OMDURMAN AND THE SUDAN, by Capt. W. ELLIOT CAIRNES, the well-known English military critic. The first inside view of the actual state of things along the borders of the Sudan—the system by which this district is being reclaimed from savagery, the life in the Egyptian army, etc., illustrated by Captain Cairnes's own photographs.

WALTER A. WYCKOFF

A TRIP TO GREENLAND, AND OTHER ARTICLES, by WALTER A. WYCKOFF, author of "The Workers."

THE CHARM OF PARIS, by IDA M. TARBELL, illustrated by an extraordinary group of artists, including Lepere, Marchetti, Jeannot, Steinen, Huard, and McCarter.

J. M. BARRIE

THE BOER WAR will be dealt with in Scribner's (like the Spanish War) with vivid, complete descriptions by eye-witnesses—accompanied with the best photographs. The first articles will be by H. J. Whigham, who has already reached the front.

SENATOR HOAR: "Harvard Fifty Years Ago," and paper on the Massachusetts Bar in the days of Choate and the other historic legal giants.

ERNEST SETON-THOMPSON, author of "Wild Animals I Have Known," will contribute to early numbers of the Magazine a notable group of stories—all illustrated by himself.

HENRY VAN DYKE
From a Photograph by
L. A. man, New York.

HENRY VAN DYKE is writing stories of wilderness types—full of the charm of outdoor nature. WALTER APPLETON CLARK will continue to be his illustrator.

"O'CONNOR," William Maynadier Browne's famous Irishman, will appear in several more stories.

LOUIS C. SENDER will contribute a group of Railroad stories, "Train Fourteen," "Without Orders," "In Time of Need."

OCTAVE THANET: stories dealing somewhat with questions in regard to modern woman's sphere.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR — One encouraging sign, at least, is the prevalence of amenities in the interchange and care of prisoners. Such a fact emphasizes the regrettable nature of this war from a religious and racial point of view.

Indeed, a splendid confluence of historic sympathies is seen represented by the men who fought at Dundee and Elandslaagte. The ancestors of each dealt heavy blows to the power of Spain, and the Huguenot strain in the Boer blood stands for religious liberty perhaps even more impressively than either British or Boer. Here the parallel ends. Fighting is going on now because in this off shoot of the Dutch race these symthies have been made powerless by arrested development, and so the chasm remains unbridged.

FROM TENNESSEE:—"I do believe THE LIVING CHURCH grows better and better every week. Nos. 26 and 27 seem to me the best I have ever read. The accounts of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew's convention, and of the Missionary Council, are so very, very interesting. I wish I could circulate a thousand copies among people who are of the Church, but not for her."

Book Reviews and Notices

SOME CHRISTMAS BOOKS

MESSRS. FREDERICK A. STOKES COMPANY lead the procession of gift bearers for the holiday time. To their taste, enterprise, and skill the public is indebted, every year, for some of the choicest specimens of illustrated and richly-bound holiday books. The following are among the attractions they offer for the present season:

"CUPID AND THE FOOTLIGHTS," by James L. Ford, is a unique production, in which the course of true love is traced in reproductions of autograph letters attached to alternate pages, and faced by spirited pen sketches by Archie Gunn. We are not quite sure of the relation the "footlights" sustained to Cupid, but we can see that the mischievous urchin is busy on every page. Price, $1.50.

"THE GOLF GIRL" has her innings in these days, and a prettier tribute to her grace and skill can nowhere be found than this book, with its colored illustrations by Maud Humphrey, and verses by Samuel Minturn Peck. Price, $1.25.

"SOLDIERS AND SAILORS" is a book which will be most interesting for the little boys and girls who like to play going to war, fighting battles, and nursing soldiers. There are numerous full-page, colored plates, after paintings in water color, by Maud Humphrey, and illustrations in black and white, with stories and verses by Mabel Humphrey. Price, $1.25.

The best of all seems to us "LITTLE INDIAN FOLKS," with numerous full-page color plates, and other illustrations, by Edwin Willard Deming, and stories by Therese O. Deming. It takes one into the every day life of the Indian family. We play with the children, and become familiar with the scenes and stories of their strange world. The illustrations are striking and good. We have not seen anything in the way of bright books, in a long time, better than this. Price, $1.25.

MESSRS. E. P. DUTTON & Co. have brought out a choice holiday book, bound in blue, with silver decorations, entitled "Outside of Things. A Sky Book." Verses by Alice Ward Bailey; pictures by Annita Lyman Paine. Verses and illustrations are pretty and striking. The "Sky Book" is a book for all seasons, and all phases of weather. It breathes the poetry and charm which come out of the sky in sunshine and in storm, in summer and winter, in the glimmer of moon and stars. Through it all is a vein of cheerful humor. Price, $2.

"LITTLE FOLKS AT BROOKSIDE" is another publication of Messrs. E. P. Dutton & Co., not especially a gift book, but intended for easy reading for the little ones in all seasons. It is written by Mrs. D. P. Sanford. Illustrated by Harriett Roosevelt Richards. Price, $1.25.

"AMONG THE FARMYARD PEOPLE," by the same publishers, is a story well adapted for boys and girls, giving both entertainment and instruction. A charming book, from the design on the outside of the cover to the last chapter, which tell how "the oxen talk with the calves." Clara Dillingham Pierson is the author, and the illustrations are by F. C. Gordon. Price, $1.25.

Now that we are speaking of Messrs. Dutton & Co.'s recent books, we should note "THE LIFE SAVERS," a story of the United States Life Saving Service, by James Otis. This is one of the best books of this season, or any season, well illustrated by half-tones from photographs. The cover design is striking. The book is well made, and the subject is one of intense interest. The life-saving service to which it relates is a great and noble work, the extent and value of which, perhaps, few understand.

MESSRS. J. P. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, Philadelphia, make their contribution to the enjoyable books of the season, in a notable edition of MOTHER GOOSE'S NURSERY RHYMES, with 250 pictures by Frederick Burr Oppen. It may be described as Mother Goose adapted to grown folks. Mr. Oppen calls it "the eighty-year plan," and thinks it will furnish diversion to anybody not much past that age. We pity the man who has outgrown the capacity to enjoy his droll sketches. It should be kept within reach for hours of depression, and where it will also be handy for the amusement of the young ones during the children's hour.

MESSRS. HARPER & BROS. issue a handsome volume of PETER NEWELL'S PICTURES AND RHYMES. Perhaps the artist is best known by his illustrations of "The House-Boat on the Styx." His style is original and unique. He imitates no one. It is a queer blending of caricature, realism, and fancy. His rhymes are as piquant as his pictures, and the combination is irresistible. Yet, perhaps the best thing in the book is Mr. Bangs' introduction, which is very forceful and funny.

The Fun and Fighting of the Rough Riders. By Tom Hall. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company.

Lieutenant Hall has told the story of the Rough Riders from a rather different standpoint than that of other writers who have found the subject attractive. After reading the book we have a less clear idea of the individual characteristics of the men who composed that now famous regiment, than we gain from Governor Roosevelt's work, but we know perhaps better the organization as a whole and its outside relations. The author is one of those fortunate individuals who can see the humorous side of things, and this quality, always in evidence, together with his excellent literary style, has aided in producing a most readable book. The author has endeavored to present to his readers the brighter side of the shield, not dwelling upon the more sad and pathetic incidents, yet in many instances we are led to read between the lines, and our impressions of the sufferings of the regiment are not the less strong that they are not more emphasized. Altogether, the book stands well to the front in the literature of the recent war.

The Marble Faun; or The Romance of Monte Beni. By Nathaniel Hawthorne. With Forty-eight illustrations. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $3 a set.

There is but one criticism to be brought against these two beautiful volumes—that the print is finer than the edition otherwise warrants. It is in all other respects admirable. The books are bound in white and gold, with a loose, protecting paper cover of brilliant red, and they are enclosed in a neat case of the same color. There are twenty-three illustrations in the first volume, the frontispiece being one of the most satisfactory portraits of Hawthorne. The second volume contains twenty-five fine illustrations. All of them are reproductions of famous buildings or groups of sculpture associated with the story. As is well known, Hawthorne introduces in this romance extensive descriptions of various Italian objects, antique, pictorial, and statuesque. That is one reason, besides its immortal charm, why in choosing books for the young, this old favorite should not be overlooked.

The Lively Adventures of Gavin Hamilton. By Molly Elliott Seawell. Illustrated by H. C. Edwards. New York and London: Harper & Brothers. Price, $1.50.

Well may the adventures of Gavin Hamilton be termed "lively." A dashing figure is the hero, and the reader follows him through his many and varied experiences with breathless interest. The author states, in an introductory note, that she has taken few or no liberties with history or chronology. Relieved from this apprehension, even the most conscientious young person will readily surrender to the charm of this story of world-famous camps and courts. The exterior of the book is as gay and dashing as the incidents within are picturesque.

Camping on the St. Lawrence; or On the Trail of the Early Discoverers. By Everett T. Tomlinson. Boston: Lee & Shepard. Price, $1.50.

When Dr. Tomlinson's name appears upon a title page, the book is assured a hearty welcome from boy readers throughout the land. The present volume sustains the author's reputation, ABRAHAM LINCOLN: The Man of the People.

By NORMAN HAPGOOD, author of "Literary Statesmen and Others," "A Life of Daniel Webster," etc. With portraits and facsimiles. Crown, 8vo, cloth, gilt top. $2.00

MR. HAMILTON W. MABIE says: "I know of no other life which takes hold of Lincoln as a man, and keeps him so steadily in a clear light; and this is done without in any way sacrificing the man's greatness or native dignity of character." Judge MELLIN CHAMBERLAIN says: "It is a remarkable book. Mr. Hapgood has truly presented Lincoln as a man of the people. No one could have done this better, and few so well. I feel sure that it will live in literature."

approaching closely the ideal in juvenile literature—a book which a boy would first choose for himself, as well as one which his parents would choose for him. The story is of four clean, manly boys who go into camp for a summer on the St. Lawrence. Their days are filled with sport and adventure, not always unmixed with anxiety and peril, and a most pleasant, and at the same time profitable, season passes all too quickly for them. The fine illustrations and general make-up of the book add to its attractions.

The Golliwogg in War. Pictures by Florence K. Upton. Verses by Bertha Upton. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Pp. 65. Price, $1.

The Golliwogg whose adventures at the seaside and elsewhere have amused multitudes of children, has caught the fever of war, and ventured upon the tented field. Attended by his faithful retinue, he boldly confronts the enemy, with most disastrous results. His thrilling experiences in camp and field are vividly pictured and told in this book. The patriotic children who feel so keen an interest in the warlike doings of these stirring days, will follow his fortunes and misfortunes with ready sympathy. The book will make an excellent birthday or Christmas gift. Its bright colors and piquant humor will at once arouse their interest.

Historic Americans. By Elbridge S. Brooks. New York and Boston: Thomas Y. Crowell & Co. Price, $1.50.

Mr. Brooks calls these admirably told stories of historic countrymen, "snap-shots"—glimpses of our grandest Americans. They are not intended to furnish the dry bones of history, but rather do they create anew the flesh-and-blood character, showing to the young readers who have been taught to reverence each one, the man "in his habit as he lived." The chief incident or impulse which led each one to the share he had in the forming or shaping of the Republic, is made the pivot of the story. No one is better fitted to interest young readers than the author whose enthusiasm and literary skill in this department have met with wide recognition. The volume is a large, substantial one, handsomely printed and bound, and includes twenty-six stories and eight illustrations. The subjects range from Governor Winthrop to General Grant.

A General Survey of American Literature. By Mary Fisher. Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co. Price, $1.50.

In this admirable general survey of the field of American polite literature, the author has done the reader and the student real service. It is a fascinating as well as a stimulating piece of work. The aim has been to give a critical and biographical estimate of our national literature as a whole, and at the same time to teach the young student, especially, the principles of good taste in literature.

The Madonna in Legend and History. By Elizabeth C. Vincent. With an Introduction by the Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent, Bishop-coadjutor of Southern Ohio. New York: Thomas Whittaker. Pp. 104. Price, $1.50.

This handsome volume is sure to be a favored selection for the Nativity season. Its ten illustrations are of a high order: The Virgin and Child with Angels (frontispiece), after Filippino; the Angel Appears to Anna and Joachim, Bernardino Luini; the Education of the Virgin, Murillo; the Presentation of the Virgin, Titian; the Marriage of the Virgin, Raphael; the Repose in Egypt, Merson; the Death of the Virgin, German School. The volume's typography is old-fashioned, fine, and dainty.

vellum, the pages are rubricated, and the frontispiece is a beautiful sepia print of the Blessed Virgin and Child, after Defregger. The text-work, in smooth and musical verse, opens with the Angelic Salutation of the Blessed One, and proceeds in vision-recital through all the earthly life of God's Incarnate Son as spoken by His Holy Mother, closing with a happy rendering of her song, Magnificat.

A Year Book of Colonial Times. Compiled by the Rev. Frederick S. Sill, D.D. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. Price, $1.25.

The compiler of this handy book has spent a great deal of time in getting together the facts noted. The book is a calendar of the year, giving some prominent colonial event on each day, accompanied by an apt quotation. Only one side of the page is printed, leaving the opposite page for notes. The book would make a capital compendium of dates and facts for the student of colonial history. It will be found useful by many others as well. It is neatly gotten up and is attractive in form.

The Martyrs' Idyl, and Shorter Poems. By Louise Imogen Guiney. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.

Besides the first long poem, which gives its name to the volume, a dramatic narrative of the imprisonment and death of St. Didymus and St. Theodora, there are twenty-three shorter ones included. The collection is really a reprint from the various magazines, Harper's, The Century, and others, in which they first appeared. The longest poem was published in 1898, in the Christmas numbers of Harper's; the others are all of earlier date.

The Young Master of Hyson Hall. By Frank R. Stockton. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company. Price, $1.25.

A good story for boys, which was published as a serial some time ago in one of the papers. It is now issued in revised form, with a changed title. There is a lost uncle, a sunken wreck, a steam-boat fire, a wicked cousin who plays the part of the villain, and a final clearing up of all difficulties, even of the wreck. The story ought to have a new lease of life in this revised form, as it is the kind of story that boys generally like.

The Sowers. By Henry Seton Merriman. With illustrations by Charles Mente. New York and London: Harper & Brothers. Price, $1.50.

A new edition of Henry Seton Merriman's intensely dramatic story of Russian life has been recently issued. Upon its first appearance, several years ago, it speedily won the approval of readers, through its cleverness of incident and its epigrammatic style. One has but to open the book at random, to be amused by some repartee or caustic bit of worldly wisdom. There are some good folk, too, among all the clever worldlings who help to make brilliant the pages of this very entertaining novel. Chief among these is the hero himself—a man of unselfish purpose and lofty ideals.

The Bishop's Shadow. By I. T. Thurston. New York and Chicago: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, $1.25.

It would be difficult to find a book for boys more appropriate than this. The hero is a Boston newsboy, homeless and friendless, beginning life as a criminal, but by the good influence of a girl and a baby, led to a better course of conduct. His struggles to master his faults and to earn an honest living, his noble attempts to uplift those of his class, and his self-sacrifice, are told by the author in a charming way. There is no cant in the religious tone of the book, but a strong, vigorous manliness. The boy receives his title of the Bishop's Shadow from Phillips Brooks. Injured by a runaway, the boy was carried by the Bishop himself into his own house and nursed till he recovered. He saw some of the secret kindness of the good Bishop, and determined to imitate him. The book is very finely illustrated, and attractive in appearance. It is just the book for a birthday or holiday present, and it will delight all its readers.

Loveliness. By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.

"Loveliness was a little dog; a silver Yorkshire, blue of blood and delicately reared—a tiny creature, the essence of tenderness." Between the lame, lovely little daughter of the Professor and her pet, there existed an attachment so strong that it was recognized as one of the higher facts in the family life. The little dog is stolen, and falls into the hands of those, in the Professor's own college, who inflict torments upon dumb animals, in the name of science. Mrs. Ward has made her passionate appeal against vivisection effective, by infusing into it the warmth and the feeling for which all her stories are remarkable.

Cleared For Action. A Story of the Spanish-American War. By Willis Boyd Allen. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. Price, $1.50.

Mr. Allen has written several very popular stories for boys—his best, dealing with the life of the cadets at Annapolis, was "Navy Blue." This book is a sequel, following the young ensigns through our war with Spain. Some of the cadets go to Cuba, and others are with Admiral Dewey at Manila. They have varied and interesting experiences, and finally get home in time to keep Christmas with their dear ones. The story is well told, and, though it jumps about somewhat, it is a pleasant way in which to fix the events of the late war.

The Wreck of the Conemaugh. By T. Jenkins Hains. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company. Price, $1.25.

A sea tale which introduces several wrecks, and, incidentally, the Spanish-American war. The story is a copy of the hero's diary, which is picked up at sea after he has considerably put himself in the way of removal from a combination where he was very much of a nuisance.

The House of the Wizard. By M. Imley Taylor. Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co. Price, $1.25.

This is a charming story of the days of poor Anne Boleyn, the second wife of Henry VIII.

EDITED BY MARY MAPES DODGE

Boys and girls enjoy serial stories, but sometimes a month seems a long while to wait between instalments. So ST. NICHOLAS will have serial stories in the new volume, and also Ten Long Stories, Each Complete in One Number.

Among them are the following:

HAPPY PICKANINNIES.

By RUTH MCENERY STUART, the famous author of so many capital stories of Southern life.

THE KID.

By ELIZABETH B. CUSTER. A story of army life on the frontier, by the widow of General Custer.

FROM PIER TO PYRAMID.

By MARY MAPES DODGE, author of "Donald and Dorothy," etc., etc., and editor of ST. NICHOLAS.

A BOY OF GALATIA.

By SAMUEL E. SCOVILLE, Jr. A thrilling story of an athletic contest of ancient times, by the author of "The Making of a Mascot" and "Training for Boys."

CHRISTMAS ON THE HOME STATION.

By ANNA E. ROGERS, author of many delightful stories of U. S. naval life abroad.

THE DOUBTFUL MEMBER.

By the late MARY E. BRADLEY. A charming Christmas story of a girls' club, touching closely the social life of to-day.

Further stories will be announced later.

These are only a few of many good things which ST. NICHOLAS will have for its readers in 1900. Probably you know about the magazine. If not, let us send you the attractive illustrated booklet which tells "The Story of ST. NICHOLAS." Free

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE LITURGY

and

AN AID TO ITS DEVOUT USE.

By the late

Rt. Rev. A. Cleveland Cox, D.D.

Bishop of Western New York.

Revised and Enlarged by

RT. REV. CORTLANDT WHITEHEAD, S.T.D.,

Bishop of Pittsburg.

16mo. Cloth, 370 Pp. $1.00.

Extensive revisions throughout and one hundred pages of new matter, have brought up to the latest development of Church Life and Worship this best of books on her services. The hold which the original volume by Bishop Cox has had on the public is attested by its large and continuous sale, and now that it has been brought into accordance with the revisions of the Prayer Book by one of the foremost Bishops of the American Church, it comes before Church people with the value of a new work added, to the authority and respect given by years of active service.

The whole has been reset throughout in new type, and is most appropriately and attractively bound.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent postpaid on receipt of price by the publishers.

The Living Church,

The story is well told, the plot a very good one, the interest is sustained throughout, and the insight into the manners and customs of that period of English history is entertaining. The hero wins the bride after many adventures, and she brings to him an unexpected dowry.

Periodicals

The Christmas number of Scribner's appears in a very richly colored cover, and within are other illustrations in elaborate color printing, from four to nine impressions being required to complete the effect desired. The result is very fine. One of Chas. Dana Gibson's characteristic series of pictures appears in this number, entitled "The Seven Ages of American Woman." Short stories form the principal part of the reading matter.

Literature, a weekly international gazette of criticism, published by Harper Brothers, maintains its high standard of excellence. It addresses only a limited class of readers, so limited that we feel sure the periodical cannot be a source of profit. The number for Nov. 17th contains a spirited article on style, entitled "Ars Prosaica," a perfectly delightful French paper by Coubertin, a short but pointed study of Erasmus, and very many pungent reviews of current books. We are thankful to find the usually poor short story omitted; $4 00 a year, or 10 cents a copy.

The Thanksgiving number, American edition, of The Quiver has for the frontispiece a bright colored plate, "Choosing the Wedding Gown," from the painting by Wm. Mulready, R. A. Another full-page picture is the "Sistine Madonna." The first of the "Stories of the Abbey Precincts," by Agnes Gilberne, gives promise of a very interesting series. Another serial is begun, "The Lady of the Manor." There is a story also of Thanksgiving Day. All these, and others, are handsomely illustrated. "Children's Memorials" gives description and illustration of interesting monuments to the young. A complete story by Lilian Quiller-Couch, is short and sweet and touching. Scripture Illustrations, etc., furnish serious and helpful reading. [Caswell & Co., New York. $1 50 a year.]

A recent issue of The Living Age quotes from Nineteenth Century a reply to the criticism on the Woman's Congress, a portion of which was re published in our columns. It is written by the president of the National Council of Women of the United States, and deals briefly but forcibly with some of the points made by the critic. We cannot, however, concede that it is a satisfactory answer, on the whole. The same issue of The Living Age contains the first chapter of a story by Rene Bazin, translated from the French: "The White Man's Burden in China" (contemporary review); "The Country Parson of 1799 1899" (Macmillan); "China Bowl" (Temple Bar), and as many more fine papers, besides the new department of "Readings from New books." [The Living Age Company, Boston].

The Nineteenth Century for November contains only two articles on the South African conflict, but one of them, "After the Present War," by Edward Dicey, C. B., is based upon the assumption of that sweeping British victory which has not yet begun to be very discernible. "The Battle of Trafalgar; an Unpublished Narration," is a most interesting account of that famous action, by an officer who was then lieutenant, or first officer on the "Bellerophon," and afterwards, captain. "The Intellectual Future of Catholicism" (meaning Romanism as distinctly papal), by W. H. Mallock, strikes us as the shallowest article we ever happen to have read on the subject of the relation of Rome to its religious opponents. An article that ought to attract wide attention, is that on "The Plague in Oporto," by A. Shadwell.

Our English cousins have a sublime assurance which compels a sort of admiration, not to say respect. In the leading article in The Fortnightly Review for November, as in The Nineteenth Century, the political future of South Africa is settled before the British troops have achieved one important victory—in fact, before they have

Four Helpful Hints

1 The Vestry and Guild Room of every Church, and the home of every Churchman, ought to have a Church Calendar hung up for reference and instruction. Here is one that is beautifully gotten up at moderate cost. It contains the proper lessons for every day in the year, gives the liturgical colors for the various seasons, and has a selection of reading matter relating to the history, doctrine, and ritual of the Church, making it a valuable educator and reminder for Church people. Single copy, fifty cents (send postage stamps in payment.)

2 Another annual of an indispensable character is Whittaker's Churchman's Almanac for 1899. It contains full Parish and Clergy Lists, the Table of Lessons for the entire year, information respecting the Institutional Work of our Church in every Diocese, Complete Statistics, and much other useful information for communicants. It does not contain gratuitous judgments on controversial matters, nor is it filled with minute details respecting things non-essential. It is the old reliable Churchman's Almanac, familiar and well-known for forty-six years. Send 25 cents in stamps for a copy.

3 A third hint suggests your looking up Mrs. Elizabeth C. Vincent's beautiful new book entitled The Madonna in Legend and History, with an Introduction by the Bishop-Coadjutor for Southern Ohio. It is an unusually appropriate volume for the Christmas season, being in beautiful binding, and having a number of famous pictures reproduced in fine half-tone style. Our hint is to order the book early, as the edition is sure to be sold out early in December and remain out of stock for several months. Price, $1.50

4 The last hint is to send for Whittaker's Book Catalogue, a suggestive price-list for those wishing to save as much as possible on their Christmas purchases, either personal or for others. Books at prices that will attract attention. Calendars, Cards, Toy Books, Current Literature, Standard Works, Bibles, Prayer Books and Hymnals, and many other suggestive things for Holiday Gifts. Send a postal card request and a catalogue will be promptly mailed to your address.

fairly begun to extricate Gen. White's beleaguered forces from their difficulties at Lady Smith. There are three articles on the war in this number. "John Donne," by Arthur Symonds, is a fine review of Mr. Gorse's "Life and Letters," of that famous dean of St. Paul's. "France Since 1814," is continued, and this series of really valuable papers will be an important contribution to the history of France during the nineteenth century. "The Venezuelan Award," is an extended glorification of British diplomacy, with a liberal number of thrusts at ex-president Cleveland, and of flings at Venezuela. But the fact remains that the controversy was submitted to arbitration, which is a fact of some importance to us, anyway.

New Music

From the house of Novello, Ewer & Co., New York, there have come to us the following late compositions, by well known writers of the Church of England, for use at the approaching Feast of the Nativity: "The Word is Made Incarnate," a carol-anthem for Christmastide, by Thomas Adams, to the exquisite words of the late Dr. John Mason Neale, which the music fits with an interpretative charm. [4 pp., 8 cts.] "It Came Upon the Midnight Clear," by Sir John Stainer, in F, opens with bass solo, followed by soprano and alto chorus, very soft, as in the distance, the lines to "Peace on earth, good will to men, etc.," and there is a pleasing variant distribution amongst the voices, that lightens and brightens the work on to its close. [8 pp., 6 cts.] "Christians, Awake!" the unfailing favorite from age to age, is very cleverly set to music in pastoral anthem form, by Mr. H. M. Higgs. [10 pp., 15 cts.]

"Behold, all the Earth Sitteth Still," is an attractive, although rather lengthy, anthem for the season. The message of the angel, "Fear not, for behold," is assigned to a soprano voice in solo, and followed by the Gloria in Excelsis of the heavenly host, arranged in chorus for three parts, two trebles and alto, the invitation of the shepherd succeeding, "Let us now go," by tenors and basses. Then comes "Lo, This is Our God!" to be taken religioso, set for the same voices in four parts, and succeeded by full chorus, "Sing, O Daughter of Zion!" etc., the theme being precented by sopranos, in tempo allegretto, and the whole composition, which is striking in effects, closing with "The Lord hath taken away thy judgments," etc., "Sing, O Zion!" [16 pp., 15 cts.] Mr. John King, of Melbourne, contributes this year a melodious composition which will please and interest the choirs, "While All Things Were in Quiet Silence"; it is happily conceived. [16 pp., 15 cts.]

The Household

Little Saint Perpetua

BY ELIZABETH L. STURGES

I CALLED her so at first because she bore the name of that eager young martyr; then as I came to know her better, I saw the halo round her faded hair, and recognized her for the saint she was. She, too, middle-aged and weary, prayed the prayer of the young Perpetua, a prayer for "patience under corporal pain." How often she prayed it none knew, for her face was as serene as a summer sky, and she did not talk of the vagaries of her vertabræ, as she brightly expressed it, but out of her mouth proceeded words of the sweetest submission and bird-like notes of gentlest joy.

She sat at her window above the noise and dust of the city street, and watched the world from this point of vantage. That there are advantages in a "sick" view of things, a rudely healthy person will probably most stoutly deny. I am one of these, and Miss Perpetua rebuked me times without number for my murmurings on her account.

"Do you not remember," she said to me once, "what Emerson tells us? 'For everything you have missed,' he says, 'you have gained something else.' Dear, nothing is truer. You see in me a little chair-ridden invalid, denied the delights of the story book of out-door nature 'thy Father has written for thee,' and for all the upright ones of earth. You look at me with pity. 'Oh, the monotony of her days!' you exclaim. 'No walks or riding, no golf, wheeling, or tennis, no full breaths of pure, keen air, no bounding joy of life. Yes, I miss much, but this I have gained, and I believe God gives the knowledge more fully to His shut-in children because they need it the more—I am learning how should be read the human chapters in the nature book. What you read in stones and running brooks, I get from the postman and the newspaper boy. Epictetus says that a lover of wisdom should train himself to become a spectator of God and His works. We stay-at-homes are better prepared than you to philosophize thus."

"Yes, dear saint," I said, "but the reaching the point where one can philosophize."

Miss Perpetua smiled a trifle sadly.

"Ay, there's the rub," she answered.

"I know I could never do it."

"Oh, yes you could. God does not require of us the impossible. I was very impatient at first, very rebellious, I am so ill at times. This is one way I take to cure myself." She took from the table a fat little manuscript book. "Here is where I think on my marcies," she laughed. "Sweetheart, if you ever become a shut-in, you will understand the comfort of a book like this. The first pages of mine are not fit to read, they are so bitter and rebellious. That was when I first became ill, and had not learned that there were any mercies to reward. I have not destroyed them, for they are my stepping stones, and it does me good to look back and see what progress I have made. Now I am accustomed to the quiet of my days. I find interest in everything. This outer world you tread on is my most fascinating study. I love to look from my window at the hurrying swarm in the street below, and observe from this eminence the ways of the busy hive."

"Of the wasp's nest, you mean." Oh, little petticoated Teufelsdröckh, what seest thou from thy high watch tower?"

"Sweetheart," Miss Perpetua loved to use the dear Southern pet names, "the world is not a wasp's nest. That is one thing I have discovered. There is far more of honey making than of poison brewing, if you could but see it. Don't be cynical, dear. It is a silly habit young people think themselves bound to acquire. The older one grows the more that verse from the Psalms appeals to one: 'Whereas the goodness of God endureth yet daily.' Oh, no, there is no room for cynicism in God's world. There now, 'if I philosophize any more, may I be hanged.' Play me my Goetz Sonata, and then we will read the 121st Psalm together. They will put us both in excellent tune I think."

Miss Perpetua was more than fond of music, it was to her God's voice. A small piano stood in one corner of her sitting-room, and on it she would have me play all the sweet low sonatas and andante movements that I knew. Mendelssohn, Haydn, and many of the lesser German masters were more to her than all the sermons that ever were written or preached. She loved books, too, and read much, for she was learned in the "Humanities." She seldom let a day pass without a quiet hour with Shakespeare, and middle-aged woman as she was, always read her Iliad in the original. She studied the Greek and Roman philosophers a good deal, but would put them down with a sigh.

"Oh, my dear, so near, so near to the eternal truths; only a little more light. What a pity they had to spend their lives in groping and almost touching."

Of the moderns, Robert Louis Stevenson was her favorite. She would pat his books with a friendly hand, and say: "A good man and a brave. He was sick and continually in the prison of his bodily pains, yet he knew it not, or regarded it not, so hopeful, true, and buoyant was his soul."

There were many pictures on Miss Perpetua's walls, prints of the old masters, most of them, with an occasional water-color of some hauntingly lovely bit of nature's soul. I asked her one day which of her treasures helped her most. She pointed to Guido's Mater Dolorosa. "She knew what sorrow and suffering was, and bore them without faltering. What are we that we should grumble at our petty ills?"

This is only a glimpse of my dear little saint. I wish that a larger part of the world could have known and loved her. "I am such a weakling, such a cumberer of the ground, I can do so little for my fellows," was her constant cry. But indeed I think she accomplished much more than she knew, for when she slipped away, there were many in her street who missed the pale face at the window, which used to smile so cheerfully down upon them all. Miss Perpetua always made me think of a bunch of English violets, so modest and small to look at, yet so far-reaching in their fragrance. Ah, dear saint, you can see now, can you not, that you left our dingy street the sweeter and holier for your presence among us? Surely, no ignoble life's work; surely sheaves enough for you to take to the Master of the vineyard.

We miss her sorely, but could not bid her linger, since all her spirit longed to be away. Sweet saint, she too had her vision of the golden ladder. And then I think her pure and violet shining was seen by God, and that He needed her, and so she was "tae'en by Him to deck His Paradise."

After Miss Perpetua left us her little Book of Mercies was given to me. Here are a few extracts from it. If they are of help to any, I know my little saint will be glad of heart.

This is written towards the front of the book:

"'Tis all men's office to speak patience.' How their senseless babblings anger me. If they were scourged as I am, would they cry peace, peace, when there is no peace, no, nor never can be for such as I. Why God, if there is a God, permits this pain-racked, useless thing I know not, unless he be a God of blood and sacrifice, and I supply another victim for His altar. 'A cripple for life!' What would you say my snug patience preachers, an that knell were rung in your ears? Kill yourself, perchance, if you did not fear a worse beyond."

This next is selected at random from about the middle of the book, and is one of many such.

"A warm, sun-flooded autumn day. What a joy to merely be alive! In the fields and woods I know the golden-rod is beckoning with its feathery arms. Oh, to respond to its sweet invitation, to gather great armfuls, to crush it to me, and smell of its spicy breath. And the purple iron weed standing so royally beside its golden neighbor, it too would bow its plumed head and welcome me. Ah, well, what use to sigh for nature's gaudy ornaments when there are the perfect flowers of holiness and love to strive for? And by and by I hope that God will let me see the purple and gold of His royal palaces for autumns without end."

"Remember your mercies, Perpetua, for they are many. How good of God to give me books and pictures and music to help my quiet life. And my friends, the people in the street below, I wish they knew how fond of them I am. There is the morning sunshine on my floor, and the little sparrow sitting on the housetop yonder. How kind of Him to place that tree just where its swaying branches can tap, tap on my window pane. Its gentle fingers take away half the loneliness of my wakeful nights. But this is the best and greatest and most wonderful of all my mercies, that God, through Christ, is teaching me and leading me to a wider knowledge and a deeper faith in Him."

"A sunny garden flower, with no room for its roots, and too much sunshine for its head. This is what I would have become in the old life, the life of ease and careless, rosy health. How much faster I am growing in the quiet shade, how clearly can I sometimes hear God's voice walking in my garden in the cool of the day."

"March 7th, St. Perpetua's Day. I her namesake hold it in grateful remembrance for this one thought of hers, and it is all the excuse for being that she will ever need. It has helped, and is helping, me more than I can say. 'Nothing will happen,' she said,

'but what pleases God, for we are not at our own disposal.'"

These are the last words written in the book, written with a tremulous, feeble hand the day before God took her:

"I think the spring is long in coming this year. My little birdie and his mates are here full soon for sunshine and swaying leafy boughs. Oh me, I am tired, tired! I too 'wait my springtime and am cold like these.'"

A CHICAGO hotel manager employed a handy man, going by the name of "Bill," to do his window washing. One morning Bill, instead of doing his work, was amusing himself by reading the paper, and, as bad luck would have it, the manager looked in. "What's this?" he said. Bill was dumb-founded. "Pack up your things and go," said the manager.

So poor Bill went to the office, drew the money which was owing to him, and then went upstairs and put on his good clothes. Coming down, he went to say "good-by" to some of the other servants, and there he happened to run across the manager who did not recognize him in his black coat.

"Do you want a job?" asked the manager.

"Yes, sir," said Bill.

"Can you clean windows?"

"Yes, sir."

"You look a handy sort of fellow. I only gave the last man five dollars, but I'll give you seven."

"Thank you, sir," said Bill; and in half an hour he was back in the same old room—cleaning the windows this time, and not reading the paper.

"THE doctor said he'd put me on my feet again in two weeks." "Well, didn't he do it?" "He did, indeed. I had to sell my horse and carriage to pay his bill."

SLUGGISH INTELLECT

Caused By Coffee.

"Careful inquiry in the school-room developed the fact that those children who are habitually given coffee to drink have sallow complexion, are nervous, more or less irritable and very sluggish intellect, or an overwrought and abnormal imagination, results of extreme nervousness. My own experience with coffee drinking kept me afflicted for some years with severe and constant headaches, with extreme nervousness at times.

"I was compelled to abandon coffee altogether, and was quickly relieved of the headaches and other troubles. I was fortunate enough to secure a package of Postum Food Coffee, but my first attempt at making it was a failure. After another trial, and following directions (which are very easy, by the way) I secured a delicious drink, far superior, in my mind, to coffee. I have continued to use it from the start, and my improvement has been steady, with no ill effects at all."

The above was written by a school teacher, Miss E. Barnard, of Oxford, Kan.

It is an easy matter to leave off the coffee habit, if Postum Cereal Food Coffee is used in its place, particularly when attention is given to its proper preparation. The whole secret of the preparation is in allowing the Food Coffee to boil long enough to bring out the taste and food value.

All first-class grocers sell Postum.

HEART DISEASE

Some Facts Regarding the Rapid Increase of Heart Trouble.

Heart trouble, at least among the Americans, is certainly increasing, and while this may be largely due to the excitement and worry of American business life, it is more often the result of weak stomachs, of poor digestion.

Real organic disease is incurable; but not one case in a hundred of heart trouble is organic.

The close relation between heart trouble and poor digestion is because both organs are controlled by the same great nerves, the Sympathetic and Pneumogastric.

In another way, also, the heart is affected by the form of poor digestion which causes gas and fermentation from half-digested food. There is a feeling of oppression and heaviness in the chest, caused by pressure of the distended stomach on the heart and lungs, interfering with their action; hence arises palpitation and short breath.

Poor digestion also poisons the blood, making it thin and watery, which irritates and weakens the heart.

The most sensible treatment for heart trouble is to improve the digestion and to insure the prompt assimilation of food.

This can be done by the regular use after meals of some safe, pleasant, and effective digestive preparation, like Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, which may be found at most drug stores, and which contain valuable, harmless, digestive elements in a pleasant, convenient form.

It is safe to say that the regular, persistent use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at meal time will cure any form of stomach trouble except cancer of the stomach.

Full-sized package of these tablets sold by druggists at 50 cents. Little book on stomach troubles mailed free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

CHAPTER V.

IT was a splendid sleigh. Back in the autumn days it had been a hay wagon, and rumbled back and forth with its sweet-scented loads from field to barn, but now instead of wheels it had broad, smooth runners, and rows of seats on top, with warm blankets, and straw and Buffalo robes in plenty. Virginia was given a place of honor between Eleanor Edsall and Mollie Gray, while Madge sat beside Tony up in front. There were four horses, the old white Cher-ritt team, and Mr. Edsall's bays, and they started off through the moonlit town with steady, even trot, keeping time to the jingle of the bells.

"Where are we going, Bobbie?" asked Madge, her eyes brightening as she sleigh whirled through the main street, and around the corner that led to the railroad bridge.

"Going to have some fun," shouted Bobbie, standing up on his seat and waving his cap. "Keep your feet off the baskets underneath the seats, girls, and Jerry, don't squeeze Benjamin too tight."

Jerry sat on the front seat with the driver, holding something carefully in his lap, and all he did was nod and wave one disengaged hand.

The horses drew near to a little, low house down by the marsh, and Madge's eyes filled with happy tears as a great cheering and blowing of horns went up in honor of the little green house that had been her home for so long, and then they hurried on down to the bridge, and over to the bay shore road.

When this was reached, Mollie gave a quick cry.

"Oh, now I know!" but a well-aimed snowball from Bobbie checked further utterance.

"Just keep your information to yourself," he said sternly, or you may go sit on the edge with Jerry and hold Benjamin."

By the time the solitary light in Miss Pugsley's window came in view, more than Mollie had guessed Bobbie's mission, and when the steaming horses drew up before the little white gate, it did not need his urgent injunction to make them keep quiet. In front marched Bobbie and Jerry, carrying the turkey between them, and when Miss Pugsley's tremulous voice asked, in response to their knock, who was there, the former replied promptly:

"Benjamin Franklin."

The door was opened cautiously, and Miss Pugsley peered out over the lamp she held, one hand shading the light, and her face was anxious and puzzled. The boys raised the bundle in the shawl, and Benjamin stuck his long neck out and blinked sleepily.

"We've brought him home," said Bobbie cheerfully, "and there's a whole lot of us, and we've brought some things to eat, and if you don't mind, we'd like to have a surprise party on you."

"If she didn't mind" The old lady's cheeks flushed happily as she set down the lamp and threw open her door and heart for the merry crowd to enter.

After it had all been explained by Bobbie, and Jerry had made the presentation speech, and Benjamin Franklin had been received back into the bosom of his family, the girls helped Miss Pugsley unpack the baskets of good things to eat, and there was a feast fit for a king, and far better and happier than many a king has enjoyed.

Towards the end of it Bobbie was seen to approach their hostess, and talk to her privately. She demurred, but he persisted, and finally turned and rapped on the floor for silence, with a pine stick from the wood-box.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he began. "Boys and girls, and Benjamin, Miss Pugsley is going to make a speech."

"Speech! Speech!" called Tony and Art, and Miss Pugsley smiled nervously, and took off her spectacles.

"I haven't anything special to say," she said softly, "only I want to thank you all, and to tell you what dear boys and girls you are, for my own sake and for Benjamin's sake, too; for when you're old and all alone, dears, sometimes even a turkey may be precious to you."

"Rah for Benjamin!" cried Tony, and the girls joined in the shout, too, until the little house rang with the merry echoes.

"It's the best thing we've done for a long time," said Dave emphatically, on the homeward journey. "Bobbie, you're a brick. I'm afraid since it got too cold to meet in the barn, that the Excelsiors are a back number."

"But you musn't be this spring," Mollie added hastily. "The older we are the more we can do, you know. And I think that this year we ought to combine forces, and do something really great; not just be good, but do something!"

"Hear! Hear!" came a fervid response from the corner where Jerry and Bobbie sat. "You girls think up a scheme and we'll help, if its starting an orphan asylum, as long as you behave yourselves and do as we say."

It was a careless word said in jest, but Eleanor caught it, and her eyes looked thoughtful and happy the rest of the way home. When the sleigh stopped at the Edsall home, she stood in the snow-covered pathway, and said:

"I've got an idea!"

"Stick a pin in it," advised Bobbie, calmly. "They die easy that way."

"Now, don't, Bobbie," replied Eleanor seriously. "This is earnest. When the Sisterhood meets on Monday afternoon we will talk it over, and if it can be done this summer, then we'll send Tony after you boys, and let you into the secret, too."

"What is it, Nell?" called Mollie, her curiosity fully aroused.

"Something like Bobbie's orphan asylum, without the orphans," answered Eleanor laughingly, and not another word would she say, but said good night, and ran up the path with Jerry.

"I wonder what it is," said Madge, later, when she and Virginia paused a few minutes in the nest to get thawed out before going to bed.

"Something good. Nell's ideas are always good," replied Virginia decidedly. "Only I don't see how she is going to start anything really great here in Ottawa."

Madge seated herself on the rug, her hands clasping her knees. The book which she had been reading aloud that morning was open on the floor beside her, and she was looking at the inscription on the flyleaf, written in a large, firm hand:

"Dick Hardy, Christmas, 1898."

"Who was he, Virgine?" she asked suddenly, and a change came in the tired, listless face above her.

"He was my brother," Virginia said proudly, her eyes bright, but with a half-sorrowful expression in their gray depths. "Older than Tony, almost seventeen now, and he is so strong and brave."

"Why, I never knew you had a brother," exclaimed Madge in surprise. "No one knows here, do they?"

"Not one," said Virginia, slowly; "papa does not wish it known. Dick has not been home for a year, not since we left Chicago."

There was silence for a few minutes, and then Madge broke it.

"Is he at college?" she asked interestedly, but Virginia's eyes were full of tears, and she shook her head.

"I do not know where he is," she said unsteadily. "You must not tell any one, or mention his name before papa. It is late, and I hear mamma's step in the hall. Good-night, and don't think of me or my trouble. You have had enough of your own to bear."

And Madge kissed her and went to her room, but it was long before her wide, brown eyes closed that night, and she wondered why the world was so queer, and even wealth could not bring happiness.

Meteors of 1833

MRS. SARAH P. HALE has a distinct remembrance of the great meteoric display of 1833, and a reference in these columns to that wonderful phenomenon recalled it to her mind. She says that at the time she was a little girl, and was living with her family in Pennsylvania. At 4 o'clock, the hired man who had a room upstairs, alarmed the family by shouting that the whole heavens were coming down. The scene, Mrs. Hale says, was a most impressive and beautiful one. The meteors were coming down as thick as snowflakes. They did not shoot across the heavens like the ordinary meteor, but appeared to come straight down, and not to stop until within a foot or two of the earth, when they disappeared. They descended on all sides about the house. Many thought that the world was actually coming to an end. The Second Adventists had predicted the universal cataclysm for about that time, and they were averring that this was the beginning of the end. Of course, one who witnessed that shower would never forget it.

Everybody Has One Slow Foot

YOU may think this a very silly question to raise, but is it? There is no catch about it. It is a simple, demonstrable fact which you can prove to your own satisfaction in a very few minutes.

If you will take any pavement that is clear of other pedestrians, so that there shall be no interference, and walk briskly in the centre, you will find that before you have gone a hundred yards you will have veered very much to one side. You must not make any conscious effort, of course, to keep to the centre, or you may do it, but if you will think of something, and endeavor to walk naturally, it is a hundred to one you cannot keep a direct line.

The explanation of this lies in the peculiarity of one foot to walk faster than the other. Or, to be more correct, perhaps it should be said that one leg takes a longer stride than the other.

It is well known, for instance, that if one is lost in the woods, the tendency is to walk in a circle and eventually to return to the starting-point. This demonstrates the fact, also, that one foot walks faster than the other.

You can try an interesting experiment in this way if you will place two stakes in the lawn, about eight feet apart, and then stand off about sixty feet, allow yourself to be blindfolded, and endeavor to walk between them. You will find it an almost impossible task, because one foot will go a bit faster than the other, either to the right or left. Now, which one of your feet walks faster than the other?—Pearson's Weekly.

A TEACHER in a north of England boarding school was recently examining a class of small boys in mental arithmetic. She said: "If your father gave your mother thirty shillings to-day, and two pounds to-morrow, what would she have?" And a small boy near the bottom of the class replied: "She would have a fit."—Woman's Journal.

Suggestions for Christmas

A BOOT-BUTTON bag is always a great convenience, and one made from a baby's shoe is an entirely new idea. Select a little bronze shoe with gilt buttons. To the top of the little shoe, when buttoned, sew a little bag of yellow silk, three inches deep, with draw-strings of yellow baby ribbon. Right in the shoe, on the heel, stand a big spool of linen thread. Puncture a hole through the back of the shoe, and pass the end of the thread through it. Pulling this end revolves the spool, and lets out the thread as it is needed. This big spool should exactly fit the little boot top, and comes nearly to the yellow bag, for which the top of the spool forms a bottom. Pour into the bag a dozen or more loose shoe buttons, and draw up the strings. For the needle-case, cut a piece of white eider-down, or plain white flannel if preferred, just the size of the sole of the shoe, and buttonhole it with yellow floss. Fasten this flannel before the spool is put into the shoe, just around the heel of the sole, leaving the front loose. Two needles of the proper size are stuck through the flannel. This makes a particularly appropriate little shoe button bag. The colors can be varied as desired, of course. A pale blue shoe and blue silk bag is very dainty, and a pink one is always charming. The bronze ones, however, are the most serviceable.

AMONG the things that are thrown away are a variety of baskets, varying in shape from the under-sized strawberry basket to the more generous one capable of holding two or three dozen of eggs. A strawberry basket held under running water and scrubbed lightly with a brush may be freed from fruit stains. Having received the freshening, paint the outside with blue, white, or pink enamel, or with any of the metallic paints, applying the latter with their own special medium or with French glue, or thin with mucilage. Line it with silesia, sateen, or India silk. The baskets in which grapes are bought may also be so treated. Various uses for these baskets will suggest themselves, to hold silver, etc. Enamel may be bought in pound cans and applied by almost anybody.

TO MAKE a pillow for the crib or carriage, select two handkerchiefs of the same pattern which will admit of a line of feather-stitching being worked immediately below the scalloped edge. Buy a small down pillow, twelve inches square, also a piece of Italian Valenciennes about three-quarters of an inch wide—the kind which is sold at twenty-five or thirty cents for a piece of ten yards. Sew the lace all around the edge of one handkerchief under the scallops, putting it straight across the scallops rather than following them, as it sets better if plenty of fullness is allowed at the corners. Then feather-stitch the two handkerchiefs together with fine white cotton along three sides, leaving the fourth side open to slip the pillow in. Continue the feather stitching on the fourth side of the handkerchief on which the lace was sewed. Slip the pillow in, baste the two sides together under the line of feather-stitching, and you will have a pillow-slip that can be easily put on and taken off.

IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS FOR SERIOUS READERS.

Henry Drummond, THE NEW EVANGELISM, and Other Addresses

By HENRY DRUMMOND, author of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

After Mr. Drummond's death there was found among his papers material for two books which illustrate in a striking manner the two distinct sides of the great thinker's mind—the scientific and the ideal. One of these, the "Ideal Life," has been published, and gained for itself a well-deserved popularity. The "New Evangelism" is a series of addresses, some of them in the vein of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," and the "Ascent of Man," and others dealing with theological problems of vital importance.

Stories of Great National Songs.

By COLONEL NICHOLAS SMITH. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, with 20 full-page illustrations. Price, $1.00 net.

Brimful of anecdotes concerning the American National Songs, Northern and Southern, with chapters on the National Songs of Great Britain, France, and Germany, in addition.

"Not infrequently we have enquiries in regard to the circumstances connected with the origin of our greatest national songs. We shall take pleasure hereafter in referring such enquiries to the volume called Stories of Great National Songs, by Colonel Nicholas Smith."—The Outlook.

White and Black Under the Old Regime.

By VICTORIA V. CLAYTON, widow of the late Major-General H. D. Clayton, C. S. A., President of the University of Alabama. With Introduction by Frederic Cook Morehouse, Editor of The Church Eclectic, etc. Cloth, gilt, $1.00 net.

Recommended for reading by the recent Richmond convention of the Daughters of the Confederacy, and also by the Georgia State branch.

"Most interesting are the details. . . . We commend it to the kindly offices of lovers of truth in whatever guise she may appear."—Chicago Times-Herald.

"Keenly possessed of the sense of humor, Mrs. Clayton writes charmingly of the ludicrous traits of the negro, interspersing her work with many capital anecdotes. She touches upon nearly every phase of the subject which she undertakes to discuss; and without being too fond of detail, as most writers on similar issues are, she makes her book delightfully instructive from first to last. Nothing better has ever been written within the same compass."—Atlanta Constitution.

An historical story of Bela I., King of Hungary, who, with his two sons, was exiled in Poland, in the eleventh century. A story for boys, dealing with wild times and wilder men.

The King's Message.

A Story of the Catacombs. By the author of Our Family Ways in collaboration with Grace Howard Pierce. Price, 50 cts. net.

"The scenes of this story are laid in Rome about the middle of the third century, and recall to mind the tragic vicissitudes of the Christians of that period, the dim and solemn associations of the catacombs, and also the public and pagan life of the city above ground. . . . Our children will be the better for reading its lessons, and their elders, too, will find its message full of interest and edification. Three pictures of the catacombs help to convey to the reader a more vivid impression of the scenes described in the narrative."—Living Church.

Mother's Home Talks.

Very simple Bible stories, fully illustrated. By the Rev. J. P. T. INGRAHAM, D. D., Rector of Grace Church, St. Louis. Square 8vo, illuminated board cover, 50 cts. net.

Dean Farrar.

TEXTS EXPLAINED. By Rev. Dr. F. W. FARRAR, Dean of Canterbury, author of "The Life of Christ," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

"I have not attempted to write a continuous commentary, but only to call attention to a large number of verses or passages of which the force, the beauty, the correct reading, the exact rendering, and the deep significance has often been mistaken, overlooked, or altogether obliterated."—AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

Rev. F. F. Ellinwood, D. D.

QUESTIONS AND PHASES OF MODERN MISSIONS. By Rev. F. F. ELLINWOOD, D. D., 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

There is probably no one man at the present time better qualified than Dr. Ellinwood to speak upon Missions. He is broad-minded and open to new ideas, though a slave to no theory, and he writes good, clear, even brilliant English. There is order and progress in the arrangement of these papers, and the subjects treated are the live missionary questions of the day. They cover a wide range. Especially interesting are the chapters on the Christian ideas which are to be found in the religions of India, China, and Japan.

Chief Days.

By the Rev. A. W. SNYDER, Author of Chief Things. Price, $1.00 net.

"The Rev. A. W. Snyder, author of Chief Things, Living Church Tracts, etc., has placed the Church once more in his debt by a volume of popular explanations of the significance of various fasts and festivals in the ecclesiastical year, which he calls Chief Days (Milwaukee: The Young Churchman Co.) Each holy day receives about six pages of very admirable, simple, and virile explanation, adapted to set forth the appreciation of the religious value of these days by the great mass of people. It would be hard to find anything better adapted for this particular purpose, nor, indeed, will the value of these contributions to the thoughts that cluster around the historic days of the year be confined to those who are unfamiliar with the Church's ways. Many a parish priest would invite his people to show forth the fruits of good living, under the stimulus of the lives of the Church's Saints, if he would put before them the suggestive thoughts here collected."—The Churchman.

Advent.

Christmas Orders are unfortunately often left to within a week or ten days and then "wanted immediately."

Only experienced and proven-by-test hands can work on these orders; and while we respond to the briefest notice, more satisfactory results are obtained by allowing sufficient time for correspondence.

This admits of submitting samples, suggestions by experienced workmen and the many little details that insure satisfaction.

That handsome Cassock, Surplice, Stole or anything clerical for the Rector can be supplied by us just as cheaply as if made at home—cheaper when you consider the fit, appearance and absence of annoyance to you.

We have spent a life-time in building up a reputation—we shall not lose it by any unsatisfactory service or prices.

Will you write us now—we will probe a wonderful help.

THEOLOGY & PHILOSOPHY

IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS

A History of Ancient Philosophy

By Dr. W. WINDELBAND, Professor of Philosophy in the University of Strassburg.

Authorized translation from the second German edition by HERBERT ERNEST CUSHMAN, Ph.D., Instructor in Philosophy in Tufts College. 8vo, $2.50 net.

DR. WINDELBAND'S work is designed to serve as an introduction to the beginner in philosophy, and so is addressed to the general reader as well as to the student. The work occupies a unique position in that the author seeks to lead the general reader to the history of thought through the history of affairs—a method pursued by none of his predecessors, and one which imparts a lively human interest to the discussion.

A System of Ethics

By FRIEDRICH PAULSEN. Translated and edited by FRANK THILLY, Professor of Philosophy in the University of Missouri. 8vo, $3.00 net.

IT has taken its place as a standard authority on the subject, and its style, moreover, is so fascinating that a subject ordinarily regarded as heavy and didactic is invested with a genuine human interest. We know of no work in which the ethical impulses of Christianity are more clearly described."—New York Tribune.

Can I Believe in God the Father?

By W. N. CLARKE, D.D., author of "An Outline of Christian Theology." 12mo, $1.00.

DR. CLARKE has handled some of the most profound speculations in theology with rare simplicity and force. Unusually lucid and suggestive."—The Churchman.

What Shall We Think of Christianity?

By W. N. CLARKE, D.D. 12mo, $1.00.

THE author is plainly one of the fairest and clearest of theological thinkers, and for perfect lucidity of style and naturalness of method he has well earned the distinction that has already come to him."—Chicago Tribune.

The Moral Order of the World

In Ancient and Modern Thought. By A. B. BRUCE, D.D. (The Gifford Lectures for 1898.) Second Series. Crown 8vo, $2.00.

BROAD in sympathy and free in treatment, Dr. Bruce shows in all his work the spirit of the true conservative, intent upon the things that cannot be shaken."—The Outlook.

The Book of Proverbs

By CRAWFORD H. TOY, Professor of Hebrew at Harvard. (New volume in the International Critical Commentary.) 8vo, $3.00 net.

A CRITICAL and exegetical commentary on the book of Proverbs. In this great international commentary have already appeared volumes by Professors Driver, Moore, Sanday, Gould, Plummer, Vincent, Abbott, and Smith.

Sermons and Addresses

By ROBERT FLINT, D.D., LL.D., Professor of Divinity in the University of Edinburgh. 8vo, $2.50.

A VOLUME of discourses, nearly a score and a half in number, most of which are here published for the first time. Dr. Flint is well-known as the author of "Theism," "Anti-Theistic Theories," etc.

STEPHEN DECATUR By Cyrus Townsend Brady

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN By Lindsay Swift
ULYSSES S. GRANT By Owen Wister
SAM HOUSTON By Sarah Barnwell Elliott
THOMAS JEFFERSON By Thomas E. Watson

THE BEACON BIOGRAPHIES were issued to meet what in the opinion of the Editor and the Publishers was a distinct need in American literature—a series of brief, well-written, readable, and authoritative biographies of eminent Americans, to include, in the end, all whose lives were notably distinctive or typical.

In respect of manufacture, the Publishers have attempted to make a set of "little books" which should worthily compete, in all points of style and workmanlike thoroughness, with any of the well-known series which are made in England. Each volume measures $3\frac{1}{2} \times 5\frac{1}{2}$ inches, and is thus of a size to go handily into the pocket. The cover in (blind and gold on limp blue cloth) is by Mr. Bertram Grosvenor Goodhue, who has done also the standing title-page for the series, which has been engraved on copper. The frontispiece portrait which accompanies each is in photogravure. The paper has been selected with great care, and the type used is a new face specially cut.

The notices of the Beacon Biographies in the reviews have been complimentary to a high degree. Thus, the Boston Herald says: "There is neither romanticism nor realism in the treatment; the effort is always towards the sanest, fairest, soundest reality." "As carefully prepared," says the New York Times, "as if they were so many imperial quartos." "The form of these little volumes," according to the Nation, "and the general tastefulness of the get-up are delectable." "They do more than languidly interest," says the Outlook; "they interest vividly; and their instruction is suprisingly comprehensive." And the Churchman extends "a hearty welcome to this useful little series, which should bring many who shrink from attempting long volumes to better knowledge of the men who have impressed their personality on the history of their country or the character of their countrymen."

Price, 75 cents a volume; or bound in blue lambskin, $1.00.

Studies in Self-Culture and Character.

16mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

"Right to the point, and as good as gold. . . . The author knows how to reason as well as to preach and clothe his thoughts in beautiful forms of expression. The volume is a storehouse of enrichments for the practical and spiritual life, and makes its points with splendor of illustration and cogent reasoning."—The Independent.

Tenth Edition.

The Investment of Influence.

By NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS.

A study of Social Sympathy and Service.

16mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

"With wonderful facility and power the author shows how great and good men help others by their influence on the atmosphere in which they move, by their vicarious lives, and by the exercise of tender, compassionate love. Every chapter is full of inspiration, and no one can read the volume without being stimulated to seek a nobler manhood."—Presbyterian Messenger.

Twelve masterpieces of literature, treated under the title of "Great Books as Life-Teachers": Tennyson's "Idylls of the King," Ruskin's "Seven Lamps of Architecture," George Eliot's "Tito," Victor Hugo's "Les Misérables," Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter," Browning's "Saul." To these are added several studies of recent notable biographies.

"Leaving to others the problem of literary criticism, these studies emphasize the importance of right thinking in order to right conduct and character, and the use of great books as aids and incentives to the higher life."—Preface.

Right Living as a Fine Art.

By NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS.

A Study of the Ideal Character.

12mo, decorated boards, 50 cents.

"To live content with small means; to seek elegance rather than luxury, and refinement rather than fashion; to be worthy, not respectable; and wealthy, not rich; to listen to stars and birds, babes and sages, with open heart; to study hard; to think quietly, act frankly, talk gently, await occasions, hurry never; in a word, to let the spiritual, unbidden and unconscious, grow up through the common—this is my symphony."—WILLIAM HENRY CHANNING

RALPH CONNOR'S TALES OF THE FAR WEST.

Each, 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

BLACK ROCK.

A Tale of the Selkicks.

"Ralph Connor captivates the reader's imagination and touches his heart from the outset by his simple, tender, sympathetic fashion of telling what he has seen and known. We are reminded of Ian Maclaren at his best."—Christian Advocate.

"Not since 'Ian Maclaren' gave us the 'Bonnie Brier Bush' stories has any one produced so moving a series of sketches. 'Ralph Connor' has painted for us a picture of life in the lumber and mining camps of surpassing merit. With perfect wholesomeness, with exquisite delicacy, with entire fidelity, with truest pathos, with freshest humor, he has delineated character, has analyzed motives and emotions, and has portrayed life. Some of his characters deserve immortality, so faithfully are they created."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Bishop Brooks and the Boston Slums.

The Bishop's Shadow.

By Mrs. I. T. Thurston.

With illustrations by M. Eckerson. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

"An interesting study of Boston slum life, fine and good in tone. The book gives realistic descriptions of the struggles the street boys have to make a living, how they rough it when without a home, how they form friendships and political combinations, and generously share their joys and sorrows. . . . One reads on, conscious at the time only of the story; but meanwhile one is getting many valuable suggestions on practical methods for reaching the poor and neglected classes of people. The delightful character of 'The Bishop' is none other than Bishop Brooks."—The Beacon.

By Author of "Chinese Characteristics."

Village Life in China.

By Arthur H. Smith, D.D.

A Study in Sociology.
8vo, cloth, fully illustrated, $2.00.

The author of "Chinese Characteristics," now in its tenth thousand, has, from his more than a quarter of a century's experience, completed an equally unique work. It forms a worthy companion to his initial volume, which has fittingly been described as "the best book on the Chinese people."

"Mr. Smith is evidently a man with that rare gift—racial diagnosis. He is able to discriminate between the fundamental and the merely superficial differences between Western and Chinese civilization. He not merely describes what is behind the curtain; he lifts it, and lets us look in."—The Spectator, London.

THE PEACE CROSS

St. Albans Church and Bishop Claggetts Tomb.

W. S. BAKER

A NATIONAL CATHEDRAL, WASHINGTON, D. C.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY THE GENERAL CONVENTION OF 1898. BY THE HOUSE OF BISHOPS.

RESOLVED, That the members of this House express to the Bishop of Washington their earnest congratulations upon the happy inauguration of his Cathedral project, and their hearty prayers for God's continued and abundant blessings upon this part of his important work.

BY THE HOUSE OF DEPUTIES.

RESOLVED, That this House, mindful of yesterday's noble and most impressive service of the unveiling of the Cross of Peace on the Cathedral grounds of St. Peter and St. Paul, gives joy to the Bishop of Washington for this formal and felicitous beginning of his great Cathedral work, in the success of which the whole Church will share, and in the doing of which the whole Church might well assist, and renders thanks to God that through the influence of the Christian Faith, the old war cross, always a sign of war and desolation, is being more and more supplanted by Christ's blessed cross of peace.

THE CATHEDRAL IDEA.

A HOUSE OF PRAYER FOR ALL PEOPLE

The Temple, the ancient Cathedral of the Jews, was our Lord's favorite abiding place on earth. At the early age of twelve He said: "Wist ye not that I must be about My Father's House?" When His ministry began He drove the buyers and sellers out of the Temple, crying: "Make not My Father's House a house of merchandise." Before the Passover "every day He was teaching in the Temple." And as His ministry ended He proclaimed: "My House shall be called a House of Prayer for all nations." Therefore, Christ's own name for the only Church Building which stood in Gospel times was a House of Prayer for all nations. The Jewish Temple was the one great sanctuary of God to which all the people rich and poor, came for Common Prayer and Common Praise. But Christ's prophetic description was to have a fuller realization in the future history of the Christian Church. While every parish church should strive for this ideal of a Home of Prayer, it is pre-eminently realized in a large city which has a great central spiritual sanctuary free to all the people. And in the Capital of the country we should have a grand Mission Church or Cathedral, where visitors, strangers and temporary residents, from all parts of the United States, may feel that they have a right to come and worship because it is their FATHER'S HOUSE. No parish church can possibly fill this need. The masses of the people will persist in regarding themselves as "outsiders." They want a big Mission Church which they feel belongs to them. Westminster Abbey and St. Paul's Cathedral, in London, and other Cathedrals in lesser towns bear witness to this fact.

A WITNESS FOR CHRIST

While, in the Capital of the United States, magnificent classic edifices are being erected as witnesses for Art, Science and Human Progress, there is no majestic structure which challenges attention as a WITNESS for Christ: No House of God, standing with open doors, for the poor, the visitor and the stranger as their Father's House. A great building always exercises a great influence, as is shown by the Capitol in Washington itself, and a religious building, where services of prayer and praise are daily held, has a proportionately deeper influence.

A WITNESS FOR THE HOLY CATHOLIC CHURCH

The Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, at Washington, will have a national religious influence. It will represent, as its ancient two-fold name typifies, the great Apostolic principle of CHURCH UNITY. It will proclaim the Evangelical Religion of the Gospels, so dear to our American forefathers. It will stand in the Capital of the United States as a present, living witness of what the Holy Catholic Church is, and of what it was in the first three centuries after Christ, before Church and State were ever united; or the Papacy had introduced the novelties of Roman Catholicism.

A CENTRE OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

Church schools for girls and boys, the fathers and mothers of the coming generation, are an especial need of this age—schools in which the building up of a Christian character will go hand in hand with the most complete intellectual education. A Christian child has a three-fold nature to develop—body, mind, and spirit. A Cathedral School for Girls is now being built on the Cathedral grounds. It is the generous gift of Mrs. Phoebe A. Hearst. It will cost $200,000, and will be completed July 1, 1900.

THE CATHEDRAL SITE.

MOUNT ST. ALBAN

The site purchased for the Cathedral is a hill of thirty five acres, beautifully wooded with oak trees, nearly four hundred feet above Pennsylvania Avenue. It cuts against the western sky as seen from all parts of Washington. It stands at the junction of Massachusetts and Georgetown Avenues. The situation is undoubtedly in the future centre of population. It is only twice as far from the White House as Dupont Circle; or the same distance from the Treasury building that Westminster Abbey is from the Bank of England. But it will be in a much more commanding position than the Abbey. It takes its name from the little church built fifty years ago, the history of which five centuries hence will become a hallowed tradition. The land originally belonged to Mr. Joseph Nourse, first Registrar of the Treasury under President Washington. His constant prayer was that a church might some time be built on the spot, and his prayer was realized. In 1847 the Rev. Anthony Ten Broeck re-established St. John's School for Boys on Mt. Alban. In the "upper room" of the school a chapel was fitted up, where the Church folk of the neighborhood came for worship; among them Miss Phoebe Nourse, a granddaughter of Joseph. After her death on March 13, 1850, a box containing forty gold dollars was found among her personal effects, inscribed: "For a free church on Mt. Alban." On May 25, 1855, the church, having been built entirely by free will offerings, was consecrated by Bishop Whittingham—the first free church in Washington. In accordance with a Resolution of the House of Bishops, the body of the Rt. Rev. Dr. Claggett, first Bishop of Maryland, on All Saints' Day, 1898, was translated and re-interred behind the chancel of St. Alban's Church. He was the first Bishop of any branch of the Holy Catholic Church consecrated on American soil.

THE PEACE CROSS

On Sunday, October 23d, 1898, there was raised on the Cathedral site, in the presence of the bishops, clergy and lay delegates of the General Convention of the Church, the President of the United States and thousands of people, an Iona Cross stone, twenty feet in height. This cross was raised not only to mark the foundation of the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, but to commemorate the time of the first meeting of the General Convention in the Capital of the United States and the great events of the historic year, 1898. On the face of the Cross is inscribed: The monogram of our Lord, I. H. S.; the Diocesan Arms with motto, Scriptura, Symbolum, Mysterium, Ordo ("The Lambeth Quadrilateral"); the basis of Church Unity; the Prayer from the Litany for "Unity, Peace and Concord" to all Nations; and on the pedestal, "Jesus Christ Himself being the Chief Corner Stone."

My Dear Bishop:

If our brother Churchmen in every part of the country—especially those blessed with abundant means—could only realize the state of things, as you and I see it and know it, there would be, I am sure, no want of the material resources necessary to carry on the work with all the rapidity of which it is capable.

The Capital of this great nation is necessarily the pivotal point of national religious, as well as political, progress on the Continent. The astute and far-seeing authorities of Rome have seen it, and have established their headquarters at Washington, with a delegated authority that locates an almost dual Vatican in the District of Columbia, and thence conducts its propaganda in every part of the country, and exerts its powerful influence in every direction.

Our Church, the real lineal and historical descendant and successor of the primitive Apostolic Church, seems to fail to see our duty and our opportunity to establish our Protestant National Cathedral Foundation in the same central sphere of influence with the worship, the schools, the theological seminaries and the missionary work that are included in the idea and charter of our Cathedral Foundation.

I do most earnestly hope that our brethren everywhere may be led to understand the very great importance of the work at Washington, and help to the utmost of their abilities to carry it on.

Yesterday has gone; to-morrow is always to-morrow; to-day is the time for action. Very truly yours,

GEO. F. EDMUNDS.

FOUNDER'S CERTIFICATE.

One hundred thousand dollars has been already raised for the land. There remains a mortgage of one hundred and forty-five thousand. One dollar on every five square feet will pay the mortgage and completely free the land. Every subscriber of one dollar or upwards will receive a Founder's Certificate, duly signed, showing the number of square feet of land given, and his or her name will be inscribed in a Book of Remembrance, as stated on the certificate. One dollar donates five square feet of land. Five dollars donates twenty five square feet of land. Five hundred dollars donates 2,500 square feet of land. Certificates may be taken out in one's own name, or by the donor in the name of a friend, or in the name of a child, or as a Memorial. They may also be taken out by parishes and Sunday-schools. Subscriptions of money may be sent by draft or money order to

Notes of the World's Progress

CONGRESS HAS CONVENED AND taken up the task of disposing of much legislation of importance. The Hon. Thomas B. Reed, whose long rule as speaker, made his position desirable or undesirable as the wishes of members were furthered or thwarted, is conspicuous by his absence. It is significant however that the famous rules of the "czar" will govern the Fifty-sixth Congress. His able successor, Congressman Henderson, of Iowa, will consequently wield a great power, provided he be possessed of a personality sufficiently strong to stand against the shafts of opponents. New phases of the colonial question have developed since the last session, and it will be within the province of the present body to determine upon a future policy. As the question of expansion and "imperialism" is likely to be a leading issue in the forthcoming presidential campaign, it will be approached cautiously, and handled with more care than would likely be the case were it divested of political significance.

THE RECENT APPOINTMENT OF COL. G. B. M. Harvey, proprietor of The North American Review, to the presidency of the Harper & Bros. corporation, and subsequent steps taken to place the house upon a firm financial foundation, will, it is to be hoped, perpetuate a business name closely interwoven with the literary progress and growth of the country. It had been surmised that the immense strides of cheaper publications were having an effect of cutting, in a measure, into the revenue of the company. With new life and vigor infused, and a change of policies which have been proven unwise, friends throughout the world of books and literature bespeak for the house of Harper a period of greater prosperity. Condolences are due the J. B. Lippincott Company whose valuable plant in Philadelphia was destroyed by fire last week. The actual loss is incalculable, as the disaster is on the eve of the holiday trade, the harvest time of the year for publishers.

LIEUTENANT MONROE, NOW DOING duty in the Philippines, has in him the making of a great general and a diplomat, as he succeeded in accomplishing by strategy and without casualty that which force could not have accomplished. Lieutenant Monroe, with a force of fifty men, approached Bayombong wherein were gathered 800 armed Filipinos, and entering the place under a flag of truce, asked of the commander the surrender of the garrison, stating that he was the advance guard of an army. The insurgent general promptly capitulated, whereupon Lieutenant Monroe dispatched a messenger to his imaginary army, stating its services would not be needed. The question now is whether his exploit will earn official recognition and promotion. In the report of General Otis, the action does not come under a head similar to that of an admiral who reported: "The fleet under my command," etc.

AN OPPORTUNITY IS AFFORDED the Consumers League to apply its beneficial operations in Missouri and contiguous territory. Girls, to the number of 300, employed by a Kansas City concern engaged in the manufacture of overalls, are on strike, demanding that they be paid more than four cents per pair for making, which is the price allowed by their generous and munificent employers. The girls are cleverly arraying public sentiment on their side, and have secured the influence of the Kansas City church organizations. As the present year is one of unrivaled prosperity, marked by an unprecedented demand for the product of lines of industry in which overalled men are engaged, it would seem that the young women are entitled to full support in their struggle.

AS A MARK OF RESPECT AND ESTEEM for the memory of Captain Gridley who commanded the flagship "Olympia" in the Manila engagement, the President and Admiral Dewey will assist financially a son of the deceased officer in preparing for an examination for appointment as lieutenant of marines, and every opportunity will be afforded him to achieve the result for which he is striving. It having become known that the widow of Captain Gridley is not in comfortable financial circumstances, Congress will be asked to increase her pension to an amount which will enable her to live in comfort. In these days when large pensions are in so many instances unworthily bestowed, it will be a pleasure for Congress to act in a case where there can be no question as to merits.

VOLATILE EUROPEANS DO NOT ACCEPT with American composure either the utterances of public men or newspapers. In America such utterances are considered merely the expression of individual opinion, not as indicative of public policy. Recently Mr. Joseph Chamberlain delivered a speech in which he suggested the benefits to be gained by an alliance for the furtherance of American, British, and German interests, and immediately Europe is thrown into a state of fermentation. A few days later Mr. Joseph Choate, our ambassador to the Court of St. James, delivered an address at a Thanksgiving banquet, in which to a certain extent he followed the lead of Mr. Chamberlain, discussing what to his mind constituted sound policy, whereat the European press promptly goes into hysteria, extremists declaring a belief that a secret agreement exists between the three governments in question, a conclusion which is more than ridiculous. Fortunately no harm can arise from these continental outbreaks.

A GREAT DEAL IS BEING PUBLISHED concerning dissatisfaction said to exist in Cuba over the proposed appointment of a civil governor. If reports are to be believed, the populace is divided into factions, holding sentiments varying from one extreme to the other. Some would forcibly resist an attempt of the United States to institute a civil government, others would recognize such action as a preliminary step towards complete Cuban independence. Still others hold that annexation is the logical and most desirable outcome of the present situation. Until Congress deliberates and decides definitely what plans shall be adopted and put into effect, nothing will be done. At the present time, it is stated officially, the President does not intend to appoint a civil governor, therefore much Cuban dissatisfaction is unnecessary, and argument superfluous.

POSTMASTER GENERAL CHARLES Emory Smith in his annual report, presents matters for the careful consideration of Congress. The business of the department which is an accurate reflection of the general prosperity of the country, shows a great increase in matter handled, and a corresponding decrease in the annual deficit. Radical reforms are recommended, with a view to making this branch of public service not only self-supporting, but a source of revenue. Had the reforms been in effect during the past fiscal year, it is estimated the net revenue would have exceeded fifteen millions of dollars. The subject to which the attention of Congress is directed, is "Abuses in Second-class Matter," and deals with the wrongs which have grown out of what was designed to be a privilege extended to legitimate newspapers and periodicals. More than one-fourth of the entire weight and volume of matter carried is rated as second-class, when, according to Mr. Smith, it should be rated as third-class. This involved an actual loss to the government of an amount exceeding twelve millions.

THE PANAMA CANAL COMPANY, of Paris, which will be prominently before Congress when the isthmian project is up for discussion, has made public its annual report, and from figures presented, the amount required for completion of the waterway is in excess of that estimated as the cost of construction by the Nicaraguan route. Apparently the report is prepared with a view to undermining the latter project, for comparisons are given of the two plans, and comment as to their feasibility. According to the views of Panama officials, the Nicaraguan route is impracticable, owing to earthquakes, which would have a disastrous effect upon stone and concrete work. The multiplicity of projects and routes proposed may have an effect of creating confusion in the minds of some congressmen, and thereby cause delay, and it is presumed the railroad lobby will not be averse to extending such assistance as may be necessary to conserve the interests of employers. It is a safe assumption however, that until the appropriation for surveys and commissions is exhausted, there will be no definite action.

The News of the Church

The Cathedral of Washington

One hundred years ago, plans for the laying out of "The Federal City," as it was to be called, were much under discussion. At the appointment of General Washington, Major L'Enfant, of the French army, a man of no ordinary ability, assisted in laying out plans for the streets and more prominent buildings. Among other things, he urged the erection of a church for national purposes, such as public prayer and thanksgiving, funeral orations over public men, and other public religious functions. "It will be likewise," he added, "a shelter for such monuments as were voted by the last Continental Congress for those heroes who fell in the cause of liberty, and for such other monuments as may hereafter be decreed by the voice of a grateful nation." Assigned to the use of no particular sect or denomination, this church was to be the cathedral of the nation.

The project was abandoned, and abandoned wisely, for Church and State in America must of necessity be separate, and the purpose of a great national cathedral could not be fulfilled by the ministrations of any distinctively Protestant denomination.

The various Christian bodies, however, have long since recognized that the capital of the country is destined to be the centre of a great national religious influence. Accordingly, the Methodists have established in Washington their American University, and the Baptists their "Columbian University"; while the Church of Rome has her so-called "Catholic University," and in the other powerful institutions which surround it, all under the direct and supreme charge of a personal ambassador of the Pope, has laid the foundation of what has been well called a "Dual Vatican."

Our own Church is the last in the field. True to its instincts of worship, it aims to establish in the capital, not a university, but a House of Prayer, for all people. Among English-speaking peoples, no book, next to the Bible itself, brings to human hearts such an overwhelming consciousness of the communion of saints, as that Book of Common Prayer which will be used at all the services of this cathedral. Again, all true Protestant and Catholic tendencies find a united and adequate expression in the life of the Anglican Communion. And just as she herself resists, as by a divine instinct, every attempt, whether from the Catholic side or the Protestant side, to limit her comprehensiveness, so a national cathedral of our branch of the Catholic Church will stand in the capital of the whole country, not as a monument of the spirit of sectarianism, but as a witness for Christian unity, with that Anglican basis for the re-union of Christendom inscribed over its doorway: "Holy Scriptures and Apostolic Creed; Holy Sacrament and Apostolic Order."

A year ago a rare opportunity presented itself of securing for a cathedral a site, not only the best adapted for the purpose within the limits of the District of Columbia, but also one which has been strikingly set apart by its peculiar history, for such a use. On this site stands the little church of St. Alban, giving its name to the surrounding property. Free and without debt from its first founding, consecrated by unceasing services for more than fifty years, it has stood like a sentinel guarding the land from secular and worldly uses. Though the cathedral trustees have in hand less than half the price asked for the land, the chance of securing this site for a great national cathedral could not be lost. Under the conviction that the Church at large will sooner or later not only realize the importance of this Church institution, but give it adequate support, the venture of faith was made, the land was bought, and the first cathedral service held upon the site was the unveiling of the Peace Cross in the presence of the President of the United States and the members of our last General Convention. This at once gave a national character to the cathedral of Washington, and that influence, as all experience proves, is bound to grow. The cathedrals of Europe, which stand with open doors, with daily services of prayer to God, and Eucharistic celebrations each Lord's Day, have ever wielded a mysterious power, increasing with the increment of years and the development of history. It is so in all Christian lands. No other type of building combines so much religious sentiment, national and local, none so warms the heart of the emigrant with the love of home.

The greater the commercial prosperity and the political power of our nation, the greater will be the danger that our heart be lifted up to say: "My power and the might of mine hand hath gotten me all this wealth"; and correspondingly the greater becomes the need of those broad religious influences which centre in a national cathedral in the capital of the country, lest we forget the Lord our God, "lest we forget."

Daughters of the King

The Bishop of Kansas has received lately $173 from the Daughters of the King of the diocese, which is placed at his disposal for missions. Each year they raise a certain amount by free-will offerings, which is called the Bishop Thomas Memorial Fund.

The annual meeting of the Pennsylvania diocesan council was held on Tuesday afternoon, 28th ult., in the parish building of the church of the Incarnation, Philadelphia. In the absence of Mrs. J. B. Falkner, president, Mrs. M. E. Stockton, vice-president, took the chair. The Rev. Dr. J. D. Newlin conducted a brief devotional service. After the roll call, which showed 18 chapters to be represented, some by as many as eight delegates, the treasurer's report was read; balance on hand, $100.63. Reports were received from several chapters, all of which told of progress. The Rev. Mr. Robinson criticised the prayer of the Order, beginning "O Eternal Father," and there was some discussion over it. Mrs. John Moncure saying that the prayer had been frequently criticised before; but that it had become so familiar and so dear to the 16,000 Daughters of the King that it could not be changed very well now. The election for officers resulted as follows: President and diocesan secretary, Mrs. John Moncure; vice-president, Mrs. M. E. Stockton; recording secretary, Mrs. Joseph Wood; treasurer, Miss C. M. Loveaire. In the evening, services were held in the church, the rector, the Rev. Dr. J. D. Newlin, presided, and the Daughters of the King attended in a body. The report of the diocesan secretary was read, and consisted of a full report of the convention of the Order recently held at Atlanta. Addresses were made by the Rev. Messrs. Arthur Rogers, F. M. Taitt, and Leverett Bradley.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

A service was held in Grace church, Petersburg, S. Va., Nov. 25th, preparatory to an early corporate Communion of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in that city. The Rev. O. S. Bunting conducted this service, and was the celebrant.

Meeting in Pittsburgh

An immense gathering in Carnegie Music Hall, on the evening of St. Andrew's Day, took part in the anniversary exercises of the Brotherhood, under the auspices of the Local Assembly of the diocese. The general subject was: "Our responsibility as Christian men in the life of the nation." The Bishop presided. The service began with the Brotherhood Hymn, followed by the recitation of the Apostles' Creed, and prayers by the chaplain, the Rev. H. E. Thompson. The first address was an introductory one, by the Bishop of Pittsburgh. John W. Wood, corresponding secretary of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Church, made a strong and pleasing address, on the topic for the evening. The closing address was by the Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Gailor, D. D., Bishop of Tennessee, who spoke with great power and eloquence on "Personal responsibility." In closing, the Bishop said: "Let us try to make our religion a consecration of everything in life. Let men see that the best Christian is the best patriot. Let us hate and despise the blunder of a selfish life. Give labor its due reward. Let us have the Eternal God for our refuge, and underneath us the Everlasting Arms. And let us have, an unconquerable patriotism in the fear of God."

Washington Local Council

The regular bi-monthly meeting was held in the Epiphany parish rooms on the evening of Nov. 27th. There were 120 men present, being the largest and most enthusiastic gathering ever held by the council. The president, Mr. Frank M. Evans, was in the chair, and after a short business session, introduced Col. Cecil Clay, the newly elected member of the General Council from this diocese, who made a very happy and telling address, on "What is the matter with the Brotherhood?" The Bishop followed, with a strong appeal for self-sacrifice on the part of Brotherhood men. The next address, by Mr. John W. Wood, aroused much enthusiasm, as it touched upon many points of Brotherhood duty and service. There were also brief speeches by the Rev. Mr. Aspinwall, Rev. Dr. McKim, and others. The singing was one of the inspiring features of the occasion.

Corporate Communion at Hollis, N. Y.

On St. Andrew's Day, at 7:45 A. M., there was a corporate Communion of the Brotherhood chapters of Richmond Hill, Ozone Park, Hollis, and Queens, at St. Gabriel's church, Hollis, the priest-in charge, the Rev. R. D. Pope, being celebrant, assisted by the Rev. G. Wharton McMullin, of St. Joseph's, Queens. About 80 men made their Communion, and three boys were admitted to the junior chapter of this thriving mission.

Philadelphia Local Assembly

The 12th annual meeting was held on the 29th ult., in the parish house of Holy Trinity church, Mr. Ewing L. Miller presiding. The Rev. L. N. Caley, chaplain of the Brotherhood, offered prayer, and an address of welcome was made by the rector, the Rev. F. W. Tomkins. The report of the executive committee stated that 10 new junior chapters have been chartered. The active roll in the district now numbers 29 chapters, with a membership of 402 boys. Three new senior chapters were chartered in the past year, and eight dormant or dead chapters revived. The present roll shows 76 active chapters in the diocese of Pennsylvania, with 1,018 men, a net increase of three chapters and 17 men; 27 chapters report condition better, as compared with last year; 46, about the same, and three not as good. The nine sectional conferences held 28 meetings, with attendance varying between 20 and 70. The election resulted as follows: President, Ewing L. Miller; vice-president, J. Lee Patton; secretary, F. H. Longshore; treasurer, C. L. S. Tingley; chaplain, the Rev. Robert W. Forsyth; and an executive committee of 14. A resolution was adopted requesting the executive committee to provide, if possible, a corps of men for work among college students. A conference ensued, John E. Baird in the chair. The question, "What does the rule of service mean? Shall it be re-tated?" was discussed by Messrs. J. L. Patton, E. H. Bonsall, G. Harry Davis, the Rev. Messrs. C. L. Fulforth, J. P. Tyler, and others. Discussion of the topic, "The spiritual side of the chapter meeting," was opened by E. H. Bonsall. A resolution of regret was adopted relative to the resignation of John W. Wood as general secretary. At 8 P. M. the anniversary service was held in the church. The sermon was preached by the Rev. F. W. Tomkins. At 7:30 A. M., on St. Andrew's Day, the corporate Communion of the Brotherhood took place in the assembly room of the Church House, Philadelphia, the Rev. L. N. Caley, chaplain, being celebrant.

Canada

Diocese of Huron

The Bishop made a Confirmation tour in the county of Grey, in the beginning of November. He arranged to hold a Quiet Day in London, on the 30th, for the clergy of Middlesex, that day being the anniversary of his consecration to the episcopate. A large number of delegates were present at the quarterly deanery meeting of Middlesex, on the 7th. There was a very large attendance at the re-opening service of the church at Highgate, on the last Sunday in October. The building has been much beautified and improved. The new Sunday school house in connection with All Saints' church, Windsor, was opened recently. The new building is a very fine one. A service of prayer is held every day at noon in Memorial church, London, to ask for success to the British army in South Africa. The organ of St. James' church, South London, is to be operated by water power. The 18th anniversary of St. George's church, Owen Sound, was observed on the 22nd Sunday after Trinity with appropriate services. The Ven. Archdeacon Davis, of London, preached both morning and evening to very large congregations. The Rev. Arthur Murphy, Huron diocesan missionary, who has spent the last year in England assisting the Rev. Hay-Aitken in carrying on Mission services, has returned to Canada with his family, and started from Halifax, as soon as he landed, on a tour through the Lower Provinces. Among the last Missions he conducted while in England, was one at the second largest barracks in the country, from which many soldiers have since left for South Africa. His first work on his return was a 15 days' Mission at St. James' church, Lower Cove, Fredericton.

Diocese of Ontario

The plan of rebuilding St. George's church, Kingston, by day labor, is apparently resulting in a very high class of work. No inferior material will be found in the new church. The only parts not done by day labor are some masonry work and the manufacture of the steel used in the structure.

At the semi-annual meeting of the rural deanery of Wellington, it was arranged that the missionary meetings throughout the diocese should be held on the 2d Sunday in November. Bishop Du Moulin wishes that the clergy of the diocese should use the prayer, "In Time of War and Tumult," during the present war. St. Thomas' church, Hamilton, celebrated the 43d anniversary of the parish, and 27th of the building, by special services, Nov. 5th. The Brotherhood of St. Andrew arranged for a meeting for men on St. Andrew's Day in Christ church cathedral, Hamilton. Bishop Du Moulin was to preach.

Diocese of Ottawa

Bishop Hamilton was present at the deanery conference at Hawkesbury, in October. The subscriptions to the Mission Fund, of which the list is lately closed, show an advance over last year's contributions throughout the diocese. The offerings at the cathedral, Ottawa, on Thanksgiving Day, were devoted to the Children's Hospital.

St. James' cathedral, Toronto, was filled to overflowing, many standing outside throughout the service, on the occasion of the solemn service for commending to the Almighty Care the Canadian troops who sailed that day, Oct. 31st, for South Africa, to take their share in the defence of the empire. The mayor and corporation of the city were present. The service lasted about 40 minutes. A special hymn was sung, composed for the occasion. The reports read at the council of the Church Boys' Brigade, at their autumn meeting in the Synod office, Toronto, were very satisfactory. Three ex members of the brigade have gone to South Africa with the Canadian contingent, and more are ready when needed. The 52d anniversary of Holy Trinity church, Toronto, was celebrated recently. The new building of St. Hilda's College, in connection with Trinity University, Toronto, was opened at the annual meeting of convocation, in the end of October. The Rev. Dr. Body, of New York, preached the sermon in the college chapel. At the quarterly meetings of the committees of the diocesan synod, in November, the Widow and Orphans', the Mission, and the Alcoma funds were all declared to be in a very bad condition. There are in Toronto, according to the city directory, 84 Anglican churches, though the Synod journal gives the number of 44. Foremost among these is St. James' cathedral which has existed in some shape for nearly 100 years. The present building was begun in 1853.

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

On the last Sunday of the Church's year, the offering at St. James' realized over $1,000 for St. Luke's Hospital.

The sale of programmes of the music used at the recent choir festivals, produced a sum that met the expenses of printing, etc.

Most of the city clergy were invited to act as a reception committee to the Very Rev. C. W. Stubbs, D. D., Dean of Ely, on the occasion of his lecture on "Shakespeare as a religious teacher," Thursday, Dec. 7th.

On the committee of 100 citizens named by the executive of the Civic Federation, "to study the educational system of Chicago, and recommend remedies for defects should any be found," the Rev. T. D. Philipps has been placed. Thus the clerical as well as the lay element of the Church is represented on this committee which met for organization last Saturday.

The Bishop's Anniversary

Bishop McLaren, the 25th anniversary of whose episcopate occurs Dec. 8th, went to Waterman Hall, Sycamore, on Saturday last, accompanied by Mrs. McLaren, for a week's rest. They will be the guests of the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Fleetwood. Of the eight consecrators of the Bishop only three are alive: Whipple, of Minnesota, Spalding, of Colorado, and Gillespie, of West Michigan. Bishop McLaren stands 114 in the list of 195, beginning with Seabury, and ending with Gravatt, of West Virginia. Of the 57 bishops consecrated prior to Dec. 8th, 1875, and then living, only 22 are alive to day; while of the seven consecrated in that year, only Bishop Brown, of Fond du Lac, consecrated a week later than the Bishop of Chicago, is dead.

New Rector for Christ Church

The Rev. S. B. Pond, of St. Matthew's church, Norfolk, Conn., has accepted a call to Christ church, Chicago, and will enter upon his duties the first Sunday in January. Mr. Pond is a graduate of Columbia University, and of the General Theological Seminary.

Death of Voluntine C. Turner

On Saturday last there passed away suddenly, at the age of 76, Voluntine C. Turner, for many years a parishioner of St. James. A resident of this city for over half a century, his name is intimately associated with the street railway system of Chicago, which he organized on the North side 40 years ago. His surviving sisters are Mrs. J. S. Rumsey and Mrs. E. J. Whitney, members of St. James, from which church he was buried by the Rev. Dr. Stone and the Rev. T. A. Snively on Tuesday last.

St. Peter's Parish

The Rev. J. S. Stone preached on Sunday evening last, in St. Peter's, the first of a special course of Advent sermons. The other preachers will be the Rev. Messrs. W. C. Richardson, C. P. Anderson, and Charles Scadding. In this parish the local chapter of the Brotherhood is a very live one, as is evidenced by the considerable attendance of young people at all services. At the annual meeting on Monday evening, the following officers were elected: Director, H. T. Young; vice-director, C. B. Roden; secretary, W. Mason; treasurer, Frederick Ludle; member of local assembly, H. H. Thompson. In announcing the annual sale last Sunday morning, the rector, the Rev. F. Du Moulin, notified his people that on no future occasion would any such announcement of a purely secular character be made by him from the chancel, but that the vestibule might be utilized for such notifications.

Church Home for Aged Persons

The annual reception to friends, on the afternoon of Nov. 28th, was well attended. The visitors were so generous in their contributions, both of money and supplies, that ample provision of creature comforts was made for all in the Home on Thanksgiving Day, and for many weeks beyond; indeed, of some necessary articles no further need will cause anxiety during the winter. The congregations of St. Mark's and Transfiguration set examples of generosity which, if contagious, would soon place the Home on a firmer basis of security.

St. Luke's, Western ave., Chicago

An improvement recently made is expected to contribute very materially towards meeting the annual interest on the mortgage debt of the mission property. This is the conversion of the store which adjoins the chapel into a fine hall to be rented for lectures, etc. The ladies are inaugurating it this week by holding in it the annual sale which is so regular a feature of so many of our city parishes just before Christmas.

25th Anniversary of Emmanuel, La Grange

Was fittingly observed on the evening of Dec. 1st. A large congregation assembled at 7:45, the rector, the Rev. Chas. Scadding, saying the shortened Evensong, and the Rev. W. R. Cross, of Hinsdale, reading the lesson. The choir was assisted by 22 members of that of St. Andrew's, Chicago, whose rector, the Rev. W. C. DeWitt, preached the anniversary sermon. The offering for the building fund having been taken, the Rev. Dr. Clinton Locke pronounced the benediction. Before the sermon a congratulatory telegram from the late rector, the Rev. Morton Stone, was read. An adjournment having been made to the capacious parish rooms adjoining, Mr. D. B. Lyman, in a brief address, spoke of the early struggles of the parish, and of the preacher as Emmanuel's first offering to the priestly office, and then introduced Miss Jennings who entertained the large audience in song, prior to the serving of refreshments. The life of this strongest of suburban parishes is a telling exponent of marvellous western growth in Churchly as in secular affairs. The Church has always been first in this community, not simply because first on the ground, but because of the sound financial principles of its leading laity; always ready to feel their missionary responsibility, and alive to the importance of continued advance. The Church was planted in La Grange by five communicants who met regularly for nine months, with lay-reading of the services. The first church was commenced in 1875 from plans by Bishop Whitehouse, almost his last act. On Dec. 14, 1874, the first rector, the Rev. F. M. Luson, who died about 1891, was called, and remained for five years. The first organization comprised D. B. Lyman and J. Kemper Philo (son of a Canadian clergyman), as wardens, with vestrymen W. Charnley, Franklin D. Cossitt (a Chicago pioneer, and present at last Friday night's service), Otis S. Lyman (still living in La Grange), and A. W. Mitchell. The Rev. E. B. Taylor was priest-in-charge for nearly a year. Then came the Rev. William Fisher Lewis, now rector of St. Peter's church, Peekskill, N. Y., who was rector for about three and one-half years. He was succeeded by the Rev. Morton Stone, now rector of St. Thomas, Taunton, Mass., who remained 11 years. The present rector, the Rev. Chas. Scadding, came to the diocese from Toledo nearly four years ago. The first church, though commenced in 1875, was not roofed till 1878, and then opened uncarpeted, but without debt, having cost between $8,000 and $10,000. The people previously worshiped for two years in the basement. The fine stone rectory was acquired in 1886 at a cost of $6,800, exclusive of price of the land. The corner-stone of the new church was laid in 1894, and was occupied in Dec., 1895, completely furnished, at a cost of $40,000, including the addition of a sacristy and a choir-room, making connection with the old church now converted into a very commodious parish house, and the furnishing of a useful gymnasium. The whole plant, one of the most complete in the diocese, and covering half a block, or 10 lots, with a frontage on three streets of 50 ft. each, in all 250 ft. by 270, has an estimated value of $75,000. All this has been done in a community that boasts no great wealth in its membership, but which has been noted for the hearty co-operation accorded by all to the rector and vestry.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

At St. Matthew's church, arrangements are being made for classes for mothers and teachers.

The American Church Missionary Society held its annual meeting at the Church Missions House, Nov. 29th.

A pulpit and rood screen are being erected as memorials at the church of the Beloved Disciple, at a cost of about $2,000.

The work of Bishop Potter will be taken up and temporarily carried forward by Bishop Talbot, of Central Pennsylvania, after Dec. 10th.

The Church Club and the local assembly of St. Andrew's Brotherhood partook of the Holy Communion in a body at Calvary church, on St. Andrew's Day.

Church of St. Mary the Virgin

The 29th choir anniversary was held Sunday, Nov. 26th. The choir was assisted for the occasion with orchestral instruments.

Service for Hospital Inmates

In addition to ministering to the congregation of the church of the Archangel, now worshipping in the crypt of the cathedral of St. John the Divine, the rector, the Rev. Geo. S. Pratt, is holding Sunday afternoon services at the chapel of St. Elizabeth, for inmates of the General Memorial Hospital.

Confirmations by Bishop Hare

Acting for Bishop Potter, Bishop Hare administered the rite of Confirmation at the church of the Holy Communion, Liberty, Nov. 29th; at the church of the Messiah, Rhinebeck, and the church of the Ascension, Rhinecliff, Dec. 1st, and at St. Paul's church, Spring Valley, and St. John's church, New City, Sunday, Dec. 8d.

Consecration of Chapel at Nyack

Bishop Coleman, of Delaware, acting for Bishop Potter, has just consecrated the new edifice of the chapel of the Holy Angels, Nyack, which has been erected as a memorial of the late Isaac Bell, for the use of inmates of the Bell Home, supported by his wife. The structure, which has a seating capacity of 50, is Gothic, and built of Indiana limestone.

Home for Indigent Christian Females

The new building for St. Luke's Home, at 114th st., just dedicated, has provision for 92 inmates, the present number under care being 68. The edifice has a frontage and depth of 100 feet, and rises six stories. It is substantially constructed of neutral-toned brick, with stone trimmings. An enlarged income will be needed to maintain it. The cost of the building has been $375,000.

St. Simon's, Borough of Richmond

Has taken another step forward, and built a rectory. It adjoins the parish hall, erected 18 months ago, and is close to the church. The triangle of ground upon which three buildings stand is being laid out attractively, making a pleasant sight upon what a few years ago was a dismal swamp and dumping ground. The rectory is from the design of Mr. Henry Otto, architect, of Stapleton, and is much admired both for its external appearance and internal convenience. The Rev. H. Newman Lawrence, the priest-in-charge, under whose care both the parish hall and the rectory have been erected, assisted by his wife and family, gave a housewarming reception on Nov. 28th, when a large and merry party gathered and exchanged mutual congratulations.

Advent Services

At Trinity church, daily n on Advent services for business men began Dec. 4th, the preachers during the week being the Rev. Drs. Geo. R. Van De Water, Geo. M. Christian, Morgan Dix, C. N. Niles, J. N. Steele, and the Rev. Arthur Ritchie. At St. Paul's chapel, Broadway and Fulton st., there are noon-day services for business men, with litany, hymns, and address, on the Fridays in Advent.

Mr. Pierpont Morgan's Generous Gift

Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan has added $350,000 to the $1,000,000 previously given by him to the Society of the Lying-In Hospital, and has also presented the society with two houses adjoining its property in East 18th st., so as to enlarge its site. The new building being erected through his liberality, and already described in the columns of THE LIVING CHURCH, is being pressed toward completion, the pressure of applicants being very great. During the past year the society cared for 2,848 cases at their homes, in addition to those under treatment at the institution. It is remarkable that 2,033 were cases of foreigners. The diet kitchen of the society relieved 681 families. There were 45,340 medical visits made to tenement houses. The cost of maintaining the charity was $32,447 35.

Pennsylvania

Ozi William Whitaker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Dean Stubbs, of Ely cathedral, addressed the students of the collegiate department of the University of Pennsylvania at the chapel service, on Tuesday, 28th ult.

The Advent Offerings

Of the Sunday schools of the diocese will be devoted to Bishop Wells, of Spokane, and to the building fund of the new parish house of the mission of the North-west convocation.

The Theatre Services

Heretofore held in Philadelphia during the winter months, under the direction of the Rev. J. Edgar Johnson, will not be resumed until after the Christmas holidays, when their 19th season will begin. Bishops Doane, Talbot, and McVickar, the Rev. Drs. McConnell, Worcester, and others are among the preachers selected.

The Society of Colonial Wars

At their sixth annual service on Sunday afternoon, 26th ult., at old Christ church, Philadelphia, celebrated the 141st anniversary of the capture of Fort Duquesne by Colonel George Washington. The invited guests included members of 12 patriotic societies, and completely filled the building. The service was under the direction of the rector, the Rev. Dr. C. Ellis Stevens, chaplain-general of the General Society. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins.

Zion Church, Philadelphia

Which has been closed several months for renovation and repairs, was formally re-opened on the 1st Sunday in Advent, and the Rev. Edmund Burk who has accepted the rectorship entered upon his duties. Under the rectorship of the Rev. C. C. Walker, the vestry entered upon extensive preparations for improvements in its interior. The whole building has been re-carpeted, notably the church, which occupies the second story. Finely finished walnut pews have been introduced, and a new set of choir stalls have been arranged in front of the organ. The walls have been richly frescoed and wainscoted in walnut. Eight new stained glass windows light the body of the church, while, on either side of the chancel fine memorial windows have been erected to the memory of former rectors.

Western New York

Wm. D. Walker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Church Club of Rochester

A large and representative meeting was held at Powers' Hotel on Friday evening, Nov. 24th. Among those present, as guests of the club, were several of our clergy, two of the leading Presbyterian ministers of the city, and others not Churchmen. The speaker of the evening was Mr. John Howe Peyton, army secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. The subject of his address was, "Moral and religious conditions and prospects in the Philippines," and it made a great impression on all who heard it. A local paper speaks of it as "able, authoritative, instructive."

Consecration of Trinity, Rochester

The season of thanksgiving was the time chosen for the consecration of this house of worship. There was ripe corn on the altar, and about the church were arranged the ripened fruit and grain. White altar cloths and white chrysanthemums were used in tribute to the festal character of the day, which was one of thanksgiving and rejoicing for Trinity church. A large representation of the parishioners gathered at 9 A. M. for the celebration of the Holy Communion, the Rev. Dr. Webbe, of Irvington, N. J., celebrant, the rector, the Rev. Warren C. Hubbard, assisting. The consecration service was at 10:30. The procession was led by the Bishop who was followed by all the clergy of the city, and many from out of town. Mr. H. W. Davis, senior warden, read the request for consecration, and the Bishop laid the keys of the church on the altar, and offered the prayer of consecration. Morning Prayer followed, the music being appropriate and rendered by a special choir. "Unfold, ye portals" was particularly beautiful, in four solo parts, with chorus of 16 voices. The Bishop preached. A luncheon was given in the parish house at 1 o'clock, in compliment to the Bishop and the visiting clergy. The tables were set in the form of a cross, and the decorations were white chrysanthemums. The Bishop presided. There was no formal speech making. Trinity parish is 54 years old, having been organized Oct. 27, 1845. It is the third parish of the city in point of age. During the rectorship of Dr. Whitehouse, of St. Luke's, afterwards the Bishop of Illinois, a mission Sunday school work had been carried on in a stone schoolhouse. Three thousand dollars had been raised, and the lot upon which this schoolhouse stood had been bought. In 1846 the parish sold the lot on Brown st., and bought one on the corner of Frank and Center sts. A brick church was built, at a cost of about $4,000, the corner-stone being laid on June 14, 1846. The first service was held on Christmas eve of that year. On Feb. 15, 1848, the church was consecrated by Bishop De Lancey. On June 23, 1880, ground was broken for the erection of the present church, and on July 29th the corner-stone was laid by Bishop Cox. The first service was held in the new church just one year later, July 29, 1881. The cost of the church was $22,500. On Dec. 5, 1883, ground was broken for the erection of a parish building in the rear of the church, at the cost of $1,360.

Washington

Henry Yates Satterlee, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Annual Meeting of the S. H. S. H. S. and C. H.

The 16th annual meeting of the Society for the Home Study of Holy Scripture and Church History, was held at the library, 1316 W. st., N. W., Nov. 23rd. The president, the Bishop of Washington, presided, making a brief address, in which he expressed appreciation of the able manner in which the work is being conducted, but regretted that the upper room of the library could not be used, for lack of funds to put it in order, and also that there is not more general use both of the courses of study and of the thoroughly equipped reading-room and library of the society. A report of the work of the past year was read by the director, Miss Sarah F. Smiley. Testimonials were awarded to the 45 students who passed the June examination. Of the 11 graduates, nine will receive the Jerusalem Cross as students of Holy Scripture; two, the Triquetra Knot as students of Church history, and one, having completed eight years of study in both courses, the Canterbury Cross. Few of the successful students were present, the work being done chiefly by correspondence, and the students resident in various dioceses.

Iowa

Theodore Nevin Morrison, D.D., Bishop

Christ Church, Waterloo

Nov. 28d the whole parish surprised the rector and Mrs. Madeira, thronging the rectory, and bearing a feast of good things. The evening was spent in games and singing. Before leaving, Mr. Ansel Humphreys, on behalf of the parish, presented to Mrs. Madeira a superb set of silk damask table linen, saying that it was given with the love of the whole parish, and many were the wishes for the long continuance of the present rectorate. The Rev. E. E. Madeira has been rector of this parish for a little over three years, in which time about 80 have been added to the communicant list.

Alabama

Richard Hooker Wilmer, D.D., LL.D., Bishop
H. Melville Jackson, D.D., Bishop-coadjutor

Trinity Church, Mobile

Of the 12 windows which are to add so much to its beauty, six are in place, the last having recently been erected in memory of John Y. Thompson, a former vestryman of the parish, by a legacy given by the late Miss Philpot. They are of the heaviest opalescent glass, set in copper-plated zinc in steel frames, and built to withstand the ravages of both climate and time. All six of the windows were made in Chicago.

Actors' Church Alliance

The Rev. O. P. Fitzsimmons has been appointed chaplain for the Birmingham theatrical district. It is part of the chaplain's duties to get the local managers of theatres to take an interest in the work of the Alliance, and obtain permission to post in the theatres notices containing a list of the churches and services, and stating that any member of a company can be visited, and any sick who may be left in the town will be looked after and cared for.

Nebraska

George Worthington S.T.D., LL.D., Bishop
Arthur L. Williams, Bishop-Coadjutor

St. Andrew's Church, Genoa

The United States government has a large industrial school for the Indians at this place. The average attendance is about 300. A large number of these Indians are baptized members of the Church, coming, as many of them do, from the jurisdiction of Bishop Hare and Bishop Whipple. A number of them have also been confirmed. But until now we have had no Church building at this place, and only irregular services. Last spring the Rev. C. A. Weed, of Columbus, took steps toward the building of a church at this point. Through the liberality of the Bishop and other friends of the Indians, a lot was secured near the Indian school, in a splendid location, and about $1,200 was secured for a Church building. The contract was let, and work began. The pastor of the Presbyterian body very kindly offered to rent his church to us, at a nominal price, which was gladly accepted. Since the first of last March, the Rev. Thomas Hines, rector of Trinity church, Cedar Rapids, has held service there every two weeks on a week night. The attendance has been good. The number of Indians attending the services has been from 100 to 150, and a few of the white residents of the town have also been present.

On Nov. 16th, the Bishop-coadjutor, in company with the Rev. Messrs. Weed, Marsh, and Tripp, visited Genoa, and administered the rite of Confirmation to 15 persons in the unfinished Church building. Ten of the class were Indians, and five white people. Four of these are connected with the school, two of them being the wife and daughter of the superintendent, and one a white resident of the town. The Bishop's address to the class was very earnest and impressive. After the service Mr. Ross, the superintendent of the government school, and Mrs. Ross, entertained the Bishop and the clergy at their rooms in the school building. Mr. Ross, though not a Churchman, has taken a deep interest in the work and in the building of the church, and has been a great help in many ways. As soon as the church is completed and furnished, an occasional service will be held there on Sunday by the clergyman from Cedar Rapids. The building is paid for, but funds are needed with which to buy furniture.

Central New York

F. D. Huntington, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Rev. W. DeL. Wilson succeeds the late Rev. P. N. Meade as dean of the Fourth District.

Arrangements are under way for parochial Missions this winter in the parishes of Zion church, Greene, the Rev. H. E. Hubbard, rector, the Rev. Mr. Lowe, of Canada, missionary; and in St. John's, Oneida, the Rev. John Arthur, rector, the Rev. Dr. C. H. Mockridge, missionary.

Long Island

Abram N. Littlejohn, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

In the church of the Incarnation, Brooklyn, the Rev. John G. Bacchus, rector, an interesting feature at the morning service on Thanksgiving, was the offering by the Sunday school of 25 baskets, representing the number of classes, each containing a dinner for a family unable to provide for itself.

On Thanksgiving night, the Trinity Club and the Girls' Friendly Society of Holy Trinity church, Brooklyn, tendered a joint reception to the people of the parish at the Hall Memorial House; 200 young men and women, members of the organizations, acted as hosts. A musical programme was rendered, prepared under the direction of Mr. Dudley Buck. The rector, the Rev. Dr. McConnell, and the Rev. D. M. Steele made brief remarks. In the club rooms upstairs, a fine collation was served.

A Quiet Day, in preparation for the Advent services announced in these columns last week, was held in Holy Trinity church, on Monday morning, Dec. 4th.

St. Jude's Church, Brooklyn

The Bishop confirmed a class on Dec. 1st, presented by the rector, the Rev. R. B. Snowden. A junior branch of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew is being organized in the parish. The St. Jude's cadets have resumed their weekly drill, and the organizations are all doing good work.

St. Elizabeth's, Babylon, Consecrated

The handsome Gothic chapel recently erected by Mr. August Belmont, at the Nursery Farm at North Babylon, was consecrated by Bishop Littlejohn, Nov. 26th. The sermon was delivered by the Rev. George D. Sparks, of West Islip. The chapel, which has been already described in THE LIVING CHURCH, is located in the rear of the Belmont villa, and occupies a site overlooking the lake. Services will be conducted as regularly as the attendance warrants, by Mr. Sparks. The chapel has a seating capacity of about 100.

Church of the Ascension, Rockville Centre

A parish house, to cost $3,000, is in course of construction. With other modern accessories, there will be a gymnasium. The church has a plot of ground, 150 by 200 ft., and the new structure will stand at the rear. The Rev. Wm. E. Nies has been in charge eight years, and in that time there has been an important growth.

The amount of $19,000 has been expended in the acquisition and improvement of the present property, and the life of the parish has similarly advanced.

Massachusetts

William Lawrence, D.D., Bishop

Bishop Lawrence preached before the prisoners at the House of Correction, South Boston, on Thanksgiving Day.

The expenses of the general work of the City Board of Missions from April to November, are $14,732.23; receipts, $7,812.03; deficit, $6,922.22.

St. Andrew's, Edgartown

Since the laying of the corner stone of the new church, on Sept. 7th, the work has advanced rapidly, and now begins to present an attractive appearance. The church, which is of brick, consists of porch, nave, baptistry, chancel, and vestry. The mason work (walls, gables, and chimney) is completed, and the first floor has been laid. The work is done thoroughly and well, under the careful supervision of the Rev. Dr. Gray, priest-in-charge, who has had considerable experience in this way. Arrangements are now being made to put on a neat open-timber roof. The building, when completed, will be an ornament in the town.

The Episcopalian Club

"Religion in the country" was the interesting topic discussed at the dinner Nov. 27th. Bishop Hall, of Vermont, the first speaker, said large portions of the country districts in New England are spiritually destitute. He thought the establishment of fixed mission stations one remedy for this condition of affairs. He did not advise the multiplying of itinerant diocesan missionaries, on account of the expense of the system. Parochial centres of fixed influence, to which people from round about would repair from time to time for religious services, was a good expedient. The Rev. F. Palmer spoke of the ignorance abounding in some parts of the country, and termed it astonishing. Present conditions could only be improved by pastoral work. The pastor must go into the homes of the people and be one of them. He advocated the organized work of laymen. Professor Mills told of his experience in sending circulars to country clergymen, asking for information; some of the replies were most encouraging. To carry religious influences where now there are none, required brains and money.

Los Angeles

Joseph Horsfall Johnson, D.D., Bishop

San Buena Ventura County

Nowhere in the whole domestic missionary field is better work being done than in this county. The Rev. Uriel H. Spencer is dotting the country with mission stations. He has an efficient coadjutor in Mrs. Spencer who accompanies him in his long missionary drives, and acts as organist and choir leader. St. Paul's church, Ventura, is the mother congregation. For a long time, Ventura, with a population of about 2,500, and the county seat, was the only important town; but in the rapid growth of some new places, its relative importance has decreased. Oxnard is a new town which has grown up rapidly in the neighborhood of an immense beet sugar factory—one of the largest in the United States. Hueneme is a shipping port for a very large part of the great agricultural and mineral productions of the county. Somis is a new town on the great Rancho Las Posas, through which the Southern Pacific railway is building a new line, a part of what will be its main overland line between the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts. In all these places vigorous congregations have been organized, and Mr. Spencer holds service as frequently as possible. His Sunday work begins with Holy Communion at 7 o'clock, Morning Prayer at 11, both at Ventura; then, driving 14 or 20 miles, he has afternoon service at one of the mission stations; and after that he drives back to Ventura for evening service. A good lot has just been given to the church at Somis by Mr. Thomas Bard, a generous Presbyterian; and the congregation are building a guild hall. Hitherto the services have been held in a school house. A handsome stone font has recently been placed in St. Paul's church, Ventura, a memorial of Mary Bernard Snyder.

South Carolina

Ellison Capers, D.D., Bishop

The Rev. Andrew E. Cornish, of St. John's chapel, Charleston, is endeavoring to arrange a plan whereby the older boys from the Orphanage and the Sheltering Arms, and the mothers of older girls, may learn how to work for themselves. He proposes to rent a farm on James Island, and under the guidance of an experienced farmer, raise vegetables for the Charleston market. To carry out the plan will require about $1,000. Mr. Cornish's plan has been endorsed by several of the best and most successful planters on James Island, as entirely practicable.

Good Physician Hospital, Columbia

It is feared that this hospital will at last have to be abandoned for lack of means, Archdeacon Joyner having now on hand only sufficient means to support it another month, and also because the railroads coming into Columbia are about to build a large union station so near the hospital that it will be ruined for hospital purposes. It seems a pity that this work, the only thing of the kind for the colored poor in a densely crowded colored district, should die for want of means, when, as compared with the maintenance of hospitals elsewhere, the cost is so comparatively small.

Louisiana

Davis Sessums, D.D., Bishop

For some while St. Nathaniel's church, Melville, has been sadly in need of some pews. These have lately been furnished by generous friends.

Chimes for St. George's Church, New Orleans

They are the gift of Mrs. John A. Morris, and are to be of the same type as form the popular Westminster or "Cambridge Quarters," which in origin are attributed to England.

A Veteran Lay Reader

Mr. Jonas W. Bailey, Sr., the senior warden of St. John's church, Washington, was licensed to read in 1871 by the Rt. Rev. J. T. B. Wilmer, the second Bishop of Louisiana. A missionary priest, the Rev. W. S. Slack, visits Washington as often as he has opportunity, and in the interim Mr. Bailey acts as lay-reader. In this way Sunday services are continuous, and the life of the parish greatly fostered.

Arkansas

Wm. M. Brown, D.D., Bishop-Coadjutor

The Rev. Mr. Lockwood and his Parish

The Rev. Charles H. Lockwood, rector of Helena, has declined the archdiocese of Little Rock, offered him by Bishop Brown. Mr. Lockwood is one of the best-known priests of the diocese, and for years has been president of the Standing Committee. His parochial ties are many, tender, and binding. The wardens and vestry of St. John's, upon hearing of his call to be archdeacon, unanimously passed resolutions stating that "for ten years he had served faithfully and well as a pastor. Finding a parish with about 92 communicants, his success is established by the fact that there are now over 250 communicants, and a church has been built.

While we rejoice in the merited honor conferred upon our rector in thus being tendered such a position, we must, in behalf of the vestry and congregation, respectfully request him not, at this time, to leave our parish, where his services are so much needed, and where his efforts have met with such gratifying results."

On Sunday, the 19th inst., in a brief but feeling talk, Mr. Lockwood told his people that the ties that held him there were too strong to be easily broken, and he could not give up his parish, even for the larger field of missionary work offered him. This decision is very gratifying to the many friends of the rector, not only in his own congregation, but in the community generally.

Pulaski Heights

Bishop Brown spent Sunday, Nov. 12th, at this suburb of Little Rock, and conducted morning and evening service in the new public school building. There was a conference, at which it was decided to organize a Sunday school and provide for occasional services by a clergyman. The first session of the Sunday school was held on the 19th inst., when the Rev. G. Gordon Smeade, rector of Christ church, Little Rock, was present, who afterwards read Evening Prayer and preached. The Bishop's services were the first ever held on the Heights.

Pittsburgh

Cortlandt Whitehead, D.D., Bishop

The Rev. H. E. Gilchrist has resigned the care of the church of the Holy Cross, North East, and hereafter that place will be coupled with, and served by, the missionary in charge of Union City. Waterford will be served by the clergyman at Miles Grove, and Conneautville will be connected with Greenville. The Rev. Mr. Gilchrist, on Dec. 1st, entered upon his duties as priest-in-charge of St. Laurence, Osceola; Holy Trinity, Houtzdale; Good Shepherd, Ashcroft; and Our Saviour, Decatur, with residence at Osceola.

On Friday evening, at the Hotel Schenley, a reception was tendered Bishop Gailor and Mr. and Mrs. Wood, by the Church Club of the diocese, giving them opportunity to meet, in a social way, the Church people of the city.

Georgia

Cleland Kinlock Nelson, D.D., Bishop

The contract is let for a rectory for St. Mark's church, Dalton.

The initial steps have been taken for the building of a church in Douglas, the county seat of Coffee Co., where there is a good nucleus of Church people.

The new St. Cyprian's church, Darien, to replace the building destroyed by a cyclone, is progressing nicely. At least $700 is needed to bring it to completion.

Additions to Atlanta Clergy

The Rev. John H. Simons, formerly of Wilmington, Del., who has been in charge of St. Stephen's church, Savannah, during the summer, has been placed in charge of the colored work in Atlanta, and will conduct the services at St. Paul's church and St. Gabriel's chapel.

The Rev. Francis W. Ambler and the Rev. G. R. Micou, deacons, have been added to the staff of clergy in Atlanta. Mr. Micou will be employed in the city missions, and Mr. Ambler will look after the churches along the Western & Atlantic railroad. These, with the Rev. O. R. Bourne who is spending the winter here, make nine clergy now resident in Atlanta, besides the Bishop.

Church Hall for Girls

Mrs. Dodge, the widow of the late rector of St. Simon's Island, has followed the many benefactions of her noble husband, by opening a Church hall for girls in connection with the well equipped and admirably managed Georgia Normal and Industrial College at Milledgeville. This plan is in accord with the earnest request made by the Bishop at the convention of 1898.

Vermont

Arthur C. A. Hall, D.D., Bishop

Bishop Hall went, Nov. 17th, on a two weeks' visitation to Maine, where the Church has been left for a time without a diocesan, through the death of the Rt. Rev. Henry A. Neely. On Wednesday evenings in Advent, the Bishop will, as in past years, give a series of Scripture expositions at St. Paul's, Burlington, taking this year the beginning of St. Matthew's Gospel.

Virginia

Francis M. Whittle, D.D., LL.D., Bishop
Robert A. Gibson, D.D. Bishop-Coadjutor

Dr. R. B. Teusler, of Richmond, who was recently appointed by the Board of Missions to take charge of St. Luke's Hospital, Tokio, Japan, will leave for that country about Jan. 1st. He was graduated in 1894 from the Medical College of Virginia, in which he has been a professor since. His wife, who will accompany him, is a sister of Dr. Edmund Lee Woodward who was lately appointed by the Board of Missions as a medical missionary to China.

St. Paul's Church, Richmond

Has recently instituted the holding of regular meetings monthly, for the congregation to get together and discuss the various branches of Church work, and other matters of special interest. They have been found very helpful in causing unity of action and feeling. At the last meeting fully 700 people were present. Brief reports and suggestions were had upon the Sunday school, the St. Andrew's Brotherhood, the Home for Aged Women, the Home for Children, the Woman's Auxiliary, Domestic and Foreign Missions, the choir, and other of the parish organizations. The Sunday school of St. Paul's mission on the canal, and the erection of a new and commodious chapel, in place of the one not long since destroyed by fire, occasioned much discussion and interest. A more eligible lot has been secured, upon which will be begun at once the erection of a new building, at a cost of about $3,000, of which $1,000 has been raised.

Monumental Church, Richmond

A similar congregational meeting was held Nov. 24th, in the Sunday school room of the Monumental church. Reports were read from the Woman's Auxiliary, Junior Branch, Daughters of the King, and other parish organizations, and also by the superintendent of the Sunday school and the treasurer of the church. These reports were much in detail, and informed those present of the exact condition of the activities of the church, and were very encouraging. Dr. Powers, of the American Church Missionary Society, read selections from his own writings.

Rappahannock Valley Convocation

The fall meeting was begun Nov. 14th, in St. Peter's church, Oak Grove. The Rev. S. S. Ware was elected treasurer. At 7 p. m. a missionary service was held, with an address by the Rev. Preston Nash on diocesan missions. Nov. 15th, after a devotional service, the Rev. W. D. Smith addressed the convocation on the subject of Dr. Gordon's book, "How Jesus Went to church"; later, Morning Prayer was said, followed by a celebration of the Holy Communion, after which the Rev. S. S. Ware delivered an address on "Preparing candidates for Confirmation." The subject, "What can be done to crush the tendency towards Sunday desecration," was selected as the essay for the spring meeting, with the Rev. B. T. Turner as essayist. After a business session, the convocation adjourned.

Kansas

Frank Rosebrook Millsap, D.D., Bishop

The parish of St. George, Wakefield, are to build a rectory for their new rector, the Rev. John C. Anderson, who has just come to them from Maryland. They have already half of the amount in hand.

The church building in Eureka is nearly finished, and when complete will be out of debt.

Medora and Burton, two new missions, have been opened up by the Rev. Arthur Chard, rector of Hutchinson. The Bishop makes a visitation there soon.

Church of the Holy Apostles, Ellsworth

Has in hand the first payment and interest for the church building fund. This leaves only $400 on an exceedingly pretty stone church, built under the direction of Archdeacon Watkins. This is his headquarters, and the Bishop has put him in charge of the work there.

Minnesota

Henry B. Whipple, D.D., LL.D., Bishop
M. N. Gilbert, D.D., LL.D., Bishop-coadjutor

A Missionary Loan Exhibit

Nov. 24th, the clergy and representative women of the various parishes met in Gethsemane parish house, Minneapolis, for the purpose of considering the advisability of holding a Missionary Loan Exhibit, such as was held in Philadelphia about one year ago. After some discussion, it was decided to hold such an exhibit on Jan. 9th, 10th, and 11th, in Gethsemane parish house. The Rev. Dr. Webb, the Rev. George H. Thomas, and Mrs. Hector Baxter were appointed a publicity committee, and a committee of five ladies on management. The various mission fields will be represented, and assignments were made as follows: Philippine booth, St. Andrew's; Minnesota booth, which will illustrate the Indian work, All Saints'; Mexican booth, Gethsemane; Chinese, St. Paul's; Japanese, St. Mark's; Turkish booth, Holy Trinity, and Puerto Rican or Alaskan booth, St. Matthew's. Prior to the opening of the exhibit each evening, a missionary rally will be held, when addresses will be made along the lines of missionary work represented. Church people are taking hold of the work with interest and energy, and its success is assured.

St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis

The Rev. Thomas W. MacLean who has accepted a unanimous call from the vestry, will preach for the first time on the 3d Sunday in Advent, Dec. 17th. Mr. MacLean comes from a field where he was much beloved, to a people known for their loyalty and love for their rectors, and much spiritual good must follow the coming together of such a priest and such a people.

St. Stephen's Mission, St. Paul

The prospect for a new church looks very encouraging. Something like $900 has been subscribed within the past few months, $700 of which came from the East. The little band of faithful colored people connected with this mission are making heroic sacrifices for this object.

Springfield

Geo. F. Seymour, S.T.D., LL.D., Bishop
Chas. R. Hale, D.D., Bishop-coadjutor

St. Mary's, E. St. Louis

The ladies have organized a sewing circle in the Woman's Guild, which meets every Wednesday afternoon at the home of one of the members of the circle. Considerable interest has been taken in the plan, and already a large amount of work has been turned out. The ladies have asked their friends to send their sewing, such as children's and infants' outfits, and table linen for hemstitching. They make a reasonable charge for their services, and the proceeds are placed in the treasury of the church. The parish at present has no home, and the members are forced to meet in a hall in the Lovington Building, East St. Louis, for their regular Sunday services. The ladies determined to assist in procuring a new home for the church, and also a guild room, and for this reason organized the sewing circle. The Rev. J. A. Antrim is in charge of this mission.

Western Michigan

George De Normandie Gillespie, D.D., Bishop
Epiphany Church, South Haven

The members tendered the Rev. and Mrs. Woodford P. Law a reception at Literary Hall, soon after their removal from Grand Rapids. The Congregational minister made an address of welcome. The missionary holds a morning service in the village, and rides out to one of the country school houses Sunday afternoon. The warden of the mission, now in the South, sent a cash donation to the ladies at the time of their annual sale and supper, which has been put at interest as the nucleus of a building fund. Chicago Churchmen who spend the summer at South Haven, will be pleased to learn that, for the first time, South Haven now has a resident minister. The Rev. Mr. Law also holds service in Paw Paw.

Grace Church, Lyons

The Bishop recently opened the new church, assisted in the service by the Rev. Messrs. W. H. Thomas, D. D., and Cyrus Mendenhall. The building, which formerly belonged to the Methodists at Muir, was moved across Grand River to the Church property at Lyons, refitted for our services, and, when about to be opened, was burned. The generous people of Lyons rallied around Dr. Thomas, however, and now have a handsome church. Bishop Gillespie's sermon was a strong plea for reverence in God's holy temple, and for holiness in the individual Christian life.

St. Paul's, Greenville

Under the guidance of the Rev. Thos. Beeson, has been much improved by the placing of stained glass windows and new chancel furniture. Some $300 has been raised by a very few workers to beautify God's house. New pews are needed, but cannot be purchased at present.

Connecticut

Chauncey B. Brewster, D.D., Bishop

Arrangements have been made and are making for addresses on the general subject of Missions, to be given in Advent and Lent by members of the Board of Managers and others, who will speak in the cities and larger towns of the diocese. The Bishop of Albany, vice-president of the Board, and the Rev. Dr. Abbott, of Cambridge, will begin this course of addresses in Advent.

Southern Virginia

Alfred M. Randolph, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

St. John's church, Petersburg, has paid off its total floating debt amounting to $1,000.

Emmanuel Church, Staunton

A series of Mission services were begun on Nov. 23d. Each forenoon there were practical talks; in the afternoon, Bible studies; and at the night services, addresses on the Gospels. An address to men only on the subject of personal purity, was made on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 26th. The Rev. Dr. Clappett, of Baltimore, was the missionary.

Southern Ohio

Thomas A. Jaggard, D.D., Bishop
Boyd Vincent, D.D., Bishop Coadjutor

Anniversary of Rev. J. W. Atwood

A special service commemorating the 5th anniversary of the rectorship of the Rev. J. W. Atwood, of Trinity church, Columbus, was held Nov. 19th. He gave an address showing the advance made during the last five years, after which there was a song service. Among other things, Mr. Atwood said the parish had been founded 82 years, while the church building was erected 30 years ago. During the five years there have been 172 Baptisms, 167 Confirmations, 94 marriages, and 117 burials. For all purposes there have been contributed $56,667. The church has two prosperous missions and 15 societies.

Children's Hospital, Cincinnati

The donation day exercises were held Nov. 23d, at the church of Our Saviour, instead of at the hospital, as it was feared one of the children had contracted scarlet fever. Bishop Vincent presided, and congratulated all connected with the management of the hospital on the fine showing made during the past year. The finance committee reported that the endowment had grown to $81,901.38. It is hoped soon to make it $100,000. The treasurer's report showed: Balance from last year, $3 345; receipts, $9,407.20; expenditures, $9,099.83; balance, $807.37. The report of the Board of Lady Manager, showed that at the beginning of the year there were 47 patients, and that during the year 211 had been admitted; 199 discharged, of whom 41 were much improved and 142 went forth cured. Action was taken that will soon secure a much-needed elevator for the hospital. The building of a ward for contagious cases, on the same lot with the hospital, was discussed, and action taken. The offerings in money amounted to $800.

New Jersey

John Scarborough, D.D., Bishop

Pipe Organ in St. Paul's, Bound Brook

On Nov. 22d a special service was held, and a pipe organ, recently placed in the church, was set apart by the Bishop to the glory and worship of God. There were special anthems by the vested choir, with two solo parts. At the close of the service, several selections were played upon the organ. The church has been enlarged, and is greatly improved by this addition.

North Dakota

Samuel C. Edsall, D.D., Bishop

Bishop Edsall is anxious to secure at once some earnest and capable priests for several vacant fields in this district. The best kind of men, full of zeal tempered by tact, are needed for this Western field. The salaries are not large, but are sure.

Bishop Edsall has sent the "cathedral car" to New Rockford, where a special track has been built, and the car will be used as a church during the coming winter, by the Rev. H. J. Sheridan, the missionary-in-charge. Mr. Sheridan will also hold occasional services in the car at other neighboring points in his field.

Visitations by the Bishop

On Sunday, Nov. 19th, Bishop Edsall visited the missions under the care of the Rev. E. W. Burleson, at Larimore and Northwood, confirming a class of five at the former place. On Monday the Bishop accompanied Mr. Burleson to Mayville, preaching in the evening and addressing the students of the Normal School on Tuesday morning. This was a difficult field, but Mr. Burleson's untiring energy is already accomplishing encouraging results. He has been holding services in the three places every Sunday, which necessitated a bicycle ride of 22 miles. On Nov. 12th Bishop Edsall visited St. John's church, Dickinson, a field now vacated by the resignation of the Rev. J. P. Lytton. The debt on this church was reduced $50 by offerings at the services on the occasion of the Bishop's visit. On Nov. 14th, the Bishop and Mr. Lytton visited Medora, a place near the western border of the State, where no religious services of any kind are held. They arranged for starting a Sunday school and lay services.

The Episcopal Residence

The Bishop hopes to be able to occupy at an early date the new episcopal residence which has been built in Fargo with the proceeds of the fund turned over to him by Bishop Walker. The house is a commodious and handsome structure in the Colonial style, and has cost $8,000. The Bishop is in need of further funds, however, to aid in paying for the house, as he has been compelled to make large advances from his private means, in order to provide the district with this much-needed centre for its work.

Park River, Valley City, and Wahpeton

The Rev. C. E. Dobson has begun encouraging work on the Park River branch of the Great Northern Railway. The Baptist place of worship at Park River has been rented, and there Mr. Dobson holds services on three Sundays in every month. On the fourth Sunday he visits Milton, where a large congregation has thus far greeted him. He also holds week-night services at Langdon and Inkster. The Rev. L. G. Moultrie is meeting with excellent success in reviving the life of All Saints' mission, Valley City. A large normal school is located there, and Mr. Moultrie has already won the hearts of the students by his interest in their athletic sports. He has been organizing and coaching their football team, a game in which he is an adept. At Wahpeton the Rev. Henry B. Easworth is holding regular services, and has inaugurated a promising Sunday school. A class of goodly number is awaiting Confirmation.

Editorials and Contributions

IT is announced that Dr. De Costa has sought a haven of rest by giving in his adhesion to the Church of Rome. Reports from New York intimate that such a step was no surprise to his friends. It represents, however, a very complete revolution, when the fact is recalled that Dr. De Costa formerly belonged to the old Evangelical or Low Church party, and has never definitely owned himself a High Churchman. For the "Ritualists," who are popularly regarded as next door to Rome, he has always professed a strong dislike. Dr. De Costa has been best known in the past for his literary work, especially in connection with American Church history. His edition of the Memoirs of Bishop White has been the standard for many years. Though we regard his recent sweeping attack upon the Church as unjustifiable, applying as it did tests which no working theory of a visible Church could stand in the light of history, nevertheless the secession of a man of such learning and scholarship is a real loss to the Church, and one which we cannot regard as balanced by the accession of quite a different type of scholar at the opposite extreme. It is to be hoped Dr. De Costa will find in his new relations freedom from the difficulties which have troubled him. But if all accounts are true, Higher Criticism has its advocates even in the bosom of Rome. In fact, it originated in that Communion. Every scholar knows that it was Richard Simon, a priest of the Oratory, 1678 to 1689, from whose works the Germans of the 18th century drew the weapons of their critical warfare. So far as we are aware, his works were not condemned, at least when they appeared. It was the French Catholic, Astruc, also, who began the criticism of the Pentateuch. Dr. Briggs has asserted that his work on the Bible which has been received with so much question among ourselves, was warmly endorsed by certain Roman professors.

Mission Schools in Japan

NOTWITHSTANDING the hopes expressed some weeks ago that the action of the Japanese government in reference to education would not affect the mission schools, it now appears only too evident that it has affected them very seriously, and, as the Japan Mail pointed out last summer, such was its intention. By the present regulations, children under ten years of age are not permitted to attend any schools except such as have a government license, and of which the course of study is regulated by law. And now the decree has gone forth that no religious exercises or instruction shall be given in schools holding such license, even though they are private schools and entirely supported by private funds. This inevitably shuts out the mission schools from having anything to do with the training of young children. If such schools retain the State license, they cannot teach the Christian religion, which is the purpose for which they have been founded and supported. If they give up their license, they lose the children. Even in the case of those over ten years of age, such disabilities are imposed as must tend to discourage any but the most devoted converts from sending their children to schools where religion is taught. The whole plan is an ingenious method of stemming the tide of Christian conversions. Though Christianity is not mentioned, it is, nevertheless, the sole object aimed at in these decrees. The non-Christian religions care nothing for schools.

IN some instances an attempt has been made to evade the law by adopting a sort of compromise. Some of the mission schools have undertaken to acquiesce in the government regulations so far as to drop religious training from the curriculum and omit any exercises of a devotional character as a part of the school life, while both are retained as a voluntary matter, and in connection with the house life of the pupils who are in residence as boarders. It is clearly an evasion, for the law appears to be as explicit as it is harsh. It prohibits these religious elements "even outside the regular course of instruction." The mission schools, therefore, which undertake, while holding the government license, to carry on religious instruction as a part of their system, however indirectly or privately, are liable to bring upon themselves at any time the penalties of the law. Moreover, as they hold their license subject to the conditions imposed in it, they lay themselves open to the charge of violating a moral obligation, an accusation sure to be made by such a quick-witted people as the Japanese, and which must be more injurious to the Christian cause than any disabilities which can be inflicted from without.

WE observe that our own school in Tokyo has temporarily had recourse to the expedient above described, and we regret to see that the Board of Managers of our missions, to which the matter was referred at their late meeting, did not see its way to a firm decision. We should think it must be clear that a moral principle is involved. If our schools hold a license from the government, they are pledged to give up religion. But if the schools are to be maintained, religion must be taught in them. Not to carry them on as Christian schools would involve a breach of faith with those who have given the funds to carry them on. There seems to be only two possible courses—either to close the schools altogether, which must imperil the whole mission work; or, surrendering the government license, to struggle on, doing the best work possible under the circumstances, until better times.

The Situation in England

ECCLESIASTICAL affairs in England do not seem to be in the way of assuming a more peaceful attitude. The air, in fact, seems charged with electricity. The tone of the Archbishop of York, in his recent address to his clergy, was so harsh as to have aroused a great deal of feeling. He was understood to threaten severe measures against any of the clergy who would not obey the Lambeth Opinion. This appears to signify a return to the policy of prosecutions which flourished in the '70's. It is reported that the Bishop of London has already taken steps in this direction, by summoning the vicar of St. Peter's, London Docks, and some others, to answer to charges of disobedience. The parishes affected are some of those working among the poorest and most wretched of the people, and long noted for the self-denying character of their work. The particulars have not yet come to hand of the meeting of bishops which was to be held at Lambeth recently, but it was expected that the policy of forcible suppression would be urged by some of the most influential of them. The Church Times lifts up a warning voice, and declares that if this policy is adopted, the bishops will not find it a short and easy method. The archbishops at their sitting claimed to be ruling only by an appeal to conscience. They explicitly disclaimed the character of a court. In their pastoral character they appealed to the clergy to accept their decision. And on this ground a very large degree of conformity has been secured. But if, leaving the softer arts of counsel and persuasion, they have recourse to compulsion, the situation will be entirely changed. In this case, The Church Times, claiming to speak from knowledge, declares that those who have submitted, not because they were convinced that the decision was just, but for the sake of peace, will reconsider their position. If these matters are, after all, to be tried in the courts, then it will be said, "Let us all fare alike."

IT is true The Church Times is classed as a "ritualistic" organ, though no one who has followed its course of late years could accuse it of favoring extremes. The Guardian, on the other hand, is supposed to be representative of the great mass of High Churchmen as distinguished from "Ritualists." But that paper also takes much the same ground with The Church Times on this particular question. The opinion or decision, it says, has been obeyed beyond all expectation, notwithstanding the fact that the grounds on which it rested were widely disputed. "In the great diocese of London, all the clergy but three have obeyed, and in other dioceses the percentage, we believe, is not less." The steady pressure of episcopal counsel would in time diminish still further the number of the disobedient. But if the bishops take up legal proceedings against this minority, it is to be expected that many of those who yielded at first, and, as was generally the case, yielded very reluctantly, will feel that if their brethren whose convictions on the matters in question are the same as their own, have got to face the prospect of suspension or deprivation, they must take their places beside them, and share whatever is in store. This, says, The Guardian, will "usher in a long period of strife and confusion in the Church." And for this, it continues, the bishops will be directly responsible.

SAD it is to think of the contrast all this presents to the state of things which seemed to have established itself since the closing days of Archbishop Tait. He had tried the policy of force, and found it useless for any desirable end. It neither brought about peace nor put an end to the practices which he opposed. On the contrary, the movement which they represented grew and prospered. At last, as his life drew to an end, he gave the word, and that policy gave way to another better befitting the Church of God. There was a nearer approach in the way of sympathy and understanding between the bishops and clergy. The bishops began to try the methods of counsel and persuasion. The old sores were healing. The office of a bishop gained more and more the respect and veneration of the clergy in proportion as its purely spiritual side became more prominent. The effect of this was seen last year when the retrenchment of the additional services which had come into use in many churches was ordered by the bishops. There was very little difficulty. On all hands the clergy hastened to accede to the requirements of their fathers in God. The state of things was full of hope, if only this relation could be maintained.

IT is not necessary to rehearse the steps by which these conditions have been so suddenly changed. That they have changed seems only too certain, and the outlook is far from encouraging. The worst feature of the case is the one-sidedness of the whole business. As The Guardian says, there is "an unfortunate disproportion between the violations of ecclesiastical law which are forbidden, and the far graver violations of ecclesiastical law which are condoned, or left untouched. It is this disproportion more than anything else that has led to the soreness and sense of injustice that prevails among the clergy who have obeyed the archbishops' decision." It calls the things singled out for prohibition, "trifles," which it is proposed to treat as "more heinous than things which involve the essentials of faith or morals."

THE whole situation is curiously similar to that of twenty-five years ago, and certain comments of Dean Church, one of the greatest men the Church of England has produced in this century, upon the events of that time, have a striking application to present affairs. He says, for instance, that the mischief is "that while all sorts of liberties are allowed to parties in the Church, which the public opinion of the hour sanctions, a tight screw is put on one unpopular one, and a grotesquely one-sided and stiff conformity to minute legal interpretations of rubrics . . . is preached and paraded as the crucial test of loyalty to the Church and honest obedience to the law." The great dean characterized this as in his opinion, "unjust, unconstitutional, and oppressive," and "certainly exasperating and impolitic." He declares in one of his letters, that while "the Church is threatened by many things, not the least fatal mischief will be the continuance of this system of vexatious and worrying prosecutions and appeals to law."

DEAN CHURCH was accustomed to face facts as he saw them, without flinching. He contemplated the possibility of the Church of England having "to go forth into the wilderness," and even that there might be a serious "break up." Yet his faith never wavered. Even while he was discussing the dangers which were so threatening in his day, he could still write: "Nothing that has happened has shaken, and I do not think that anything of the same sort could shake, my belief in the present English Church. It has defects and anomalies in plenty, but so has every Church that I know of, or that I ever heard of. And there is a vigor in it, a power of recovery, and an increasing value for what is good and true, which I see nowhere else." And again, "The perplexity is great, and yet there is no more glorious Church in Christendom than this inconsistent English Church, nor one which has shown such wonderful proofs of Christian life."

The Authority of the Scriptures

FROM CONVENTION ADDRESS OF THE
RT. REV. WM. CROSWELL DOANE, D. D., LL. D.

WHAT shall we say of the authority of the Scriptures? The bold rashness of a certain class of students and of critics seems to be bent upon gradually reducing the Bible to the level of many other books, by denying its inspiration, by questioning its age and authenticity, by flinging doubts, yet unsettled, like dragon's teeth, broadcast before the popular mind which has neither time nor ability to solve or settle them; by vulgarizing the very volume itself, until it looks like a county map, with color blotches to distinguish, as though they were defined by absolutely ascertained facts, one author from another in separate paragraphs of the same book. Mr. Moody's protest to a distinguished critic—not one of the absolutely certain kind—is, to say the least of it, suggestive. "Why talk about two Isaiahs," he said, "to people who have not yet found out that there is one!" There is a certain irritation about the dogmatic positiveness of these men who assume, as proven, things that are still sub judice, which provokes harsh language in return. On the other hand, it is easy enough to mistake, in ourselves, what really is bad temper, for a righteous zeal. The quiet assurance of composure and calmness is the right attitude of the confident believer, recognizing and accepting, when they are actually proved, facts that may go against our traditions and prejudices; and sure that, through them all, what we lose is only something in which we were mistaken; and that through them all, God's revelation of His will to men stands clear and sure and true.

What is called commonly conservatism, which means cheerful and indolent indifference to study and observation, is an easy virtue. The old Tory farmer who accused the great English Prime Minister of vacillation and inconsistency, saying: "I haven't budged for fifty years," was fairly answered by Mr. Gladstone: "Neither has this gatepost." So also the Athenian love of the last new thing, which makes men radicals and lovers of change, is easy and convenient, because it helps men to drift without effort, and to assume that false mask of intellectuality whose only evidence is denial or doubt. But the position of the true student, believing and studying, needs more courage and more faith. It is the safety of the anchored ship, fast with a strong cable, to a safe anchorage, with room enough to swing and move. As between the dull determination to change nothing, and the keen relish for something new, there is little to choose in the matter of intelligence.

I believe it is true, too, of the great movements of events in the world, of discoveries in science, of results of criticism, that we must carefully distinguish between principles and fundamental truths, and their varying aspects and relations to present conditions. So there is no lowering of the Church's steadfast maintenance of the impregnable and unapproachable finality of the appeal to Holy Scriptures, if we recognize that some adjustment as to age and authorship may have to be made, some substituted translations may change the bearing of certain texts, and some reconciliations may be demanded between the apparent statements of Holy Scripture and the apparent discoveries in nature, or in the monuments, or in the variant manuscripts of the written Word. Thank God the Catholic Church is uncommitted to any defined or hard and fast theory of inspiration. We are not held and bound, as Rome and certain other sects are, to the confusion between plenary inspiration and mechanical or verbal inspiration. Only we hold that, as in no other written or spoken utterance in the world, "the Holy Ghost spake by the prophets"; that the Church, as witness and keeper of the Word, gives us the canon of Scripture, in which these prophets or teachers "spake as they were borne along by the Holy Ghost." And so we stand, content and confident, between the dogmatists who deny, and the dogmatists who assert, their own personal views; content and confident, I say, that as in the past, so in the future, the sacred volume will pass unscathed through the searching light and scorching flame of all criticisms and attacks, as the final and sufficient revelation to mankind of God's will, as to the faith of God and the duty of man. "The Holy Ghost spake by the prophets."

We are too apt, it seems to me, to be alarmists; to take it for granted that if certain supposed discoveries of criticism are true, then the whole Bible is untrustworthy and false; from which the fairly logical conclusion forces itself upon the indolent man and takes the place of fair-minded study, that because the Bible is and must be true and trustworthy, therefore the critics must be all and altogether wrong; whereas, there may turn out to be no real contradiction between revelation and discovery, but only between traditional and modern interpretations. The thing to be deprecated is the impatience of unthinking denial or the violence of wholesale denunciation. Philip thought himself perfectly within the bounds of traditional Jewish understanding of the Holy Scripture, when he said: "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" And the Pharisees of our Lord's time had reason in their plea: "Search and look, for out of Galilee arises no prophet." And yet the fairer view in fuller light reconciled the discrepancies.

We ought to be more sympathetic with the different temperaments and mental constitutions of men. What is called destructive criticism is more or less dangerous, according to the hands in which it is. A boy's curiosity or an idiot's fury to pull a watch to pieces, spoils the watch; but in the hands of a watch-maker who, having adjusted what was wrong, puts back the pieces wheel by wheel, and screw by screw, the timepiece is benefited by the handling. I plead for the confidence of our convictions, for the maintenance of our principles, for the careful distinction between the fundamental and essential things, and the opinions and theories built on them; above all, for the avoidance of railing accusation; for plain, positive teaching, instead of acrimonious attacks and controversies; for recognition and acknowledgment of the peculiarities of mental make-up, by which faith, which is easy to some men to the very verge of credulity, is difficult to others until they have pursued it along some pathway of discussion and solution, which seems at first to leave, when they have found it, no living substance and no living semblance of the revealed truth.

I cannot look with alarm upon the future and final decision of the leading points of discussion in our modern study of the Old Testament Scriptures. The great desideratum is patience. The great deficiency is the lack of moderation. The assumptions and assurances of the so-called higher critics who, in spite of yesterday's mistakes, are sure to-day of what some of them will disprove to-morrow, have by the principle of counter irritation begotten an undue positiveness and tenacity on our part, who hold to the old positions. I believe that while we "stand in the old ways," we ought also to "walk in the old paths." That is to say, while maintaining the antiquity and authority of the canon of the oracles of God committed to us, we ought not to sit still in mere dogged determination to deny any variation that may disturb the traditional theory of authorship or age or text or interpretation. This was the trouble with the Jews of our Lord's time, who would not let the roll of prophecy unroll itself into the light of its fulfillment. Surely we have no need to fear.

The complete collapse of that old school in Germany which set itself to destroy the value of the fourth Gospel, the constant contradictions and contentions among the critics themselves, the correction to-day of yesterday's most positive conclusions; and the absolute fact that all the research of the revisers failed to find or to suggest a single change that touched one article of the Christian Faith—surely these facts ought to quiet the alarm and moderate the violence, alike of the critics and of the criticisers of the critics, and fill us with the spirit of "returning and rest," of "quietness and confidence." "Stand ye in the ways and see and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls." If we will read the Scriptures, and preach the Scriptures, and urge and encourage our people to read and study them, not to find mistakes in Moses, or a Jehovistic or an Elohist author of the Pentateuch, or two Isaiahs, or which are the post-exilic Psalms, but to find the patience and the comfort and the hope of the Scriptures, to find the unfolding of God's providence, the manifestation of His love, the revelation of His will, to find Christ in them, we shall be built up, and shall build others up, in our most holy Faith, and so all things will minister to edifying.

Some Common Mistakes

BY THE REV. FRED'K S. JEWELL, D. D.

ELEVENTH. It is a mistake as mischievous as it is common, to take a mere feeling of sorrow for sin for true repentance. Feeling bad about a wrong is by no means either making things right or securing them against the repetition of the wrong. Regret, sorrow, and even contrition, are mere feelings, and are ethically nothing except as they impulsively lead to reparation and right actions. Even as thus impulsive, they are like all feeling, fleeting and uncertain at best, and, more likely than otherwise, shallow and deceptive. Allowed to take the place of true repentance, they gradually cloud the reason and stupify the conscience; veil the guilt of sin, and bemire the soul in condoned impenitence. Real sorrow for sin may be its precursor, its preparative, its participator; but it is not repentance. Repentance is an act. It is a revolt against sin. It is a return to righteousness. It is the beginning of a reformation of the heart and life.

TWELFTH. Again, it is a great mistake, and unfortunately that of some Christian bodies, to make highly excited feelings a basis for conversion, and to take the noisy utterances of such feelings as evidences of real piety. Conversion, as the holy transformation of the heart and life, and true piety as its pure, deep, and steadfast result, are far from being a natural and consistent product or concomitant of any ethical or religious spasm. If there is anything in human character or conduct which requires the most intelligent, well-considered, and calmly determined action of the mind and heart, it is the undertaking of the "godly, righteous, and sober life." Of any such rational, righteous, and holy resolution and action, these emotional outbursts are, for the time being, absolutely prohibitory. Cultivated and relied upon, they are only productive of self-deception, instability, and religious impatience and demoralization. No religion is either rational or revealed which is not ethically, as well as spiritually, sound and consistent. But a religion of dominant emotion is necessarily unethical. True morality rests upon, prospers under, and is rightly tested by, principles, purposes, and persistent conduct alone. So far, then, as the promotion of true religion is concerned, violent excitements and effusive emotions are the mere crackling of thorns under a pot.

A Rhyme of "Christian Science"

BY HERBERT M. CLARKE, PH. D.

Dear Christian Science people,
You are a funny folk;
The funniest things you tell us,
And swear they are no joke.

A discovery you've made
Astounding all creation;
Diseases don't exist,
They are just imagination!

Oh what good news you bring,
How much it ought to please us,
That neither ache nor pain
Can any longer tease us!

And yet it's very queer,
And this in you I'm blaming,
That, when there's no disease,
To heal disease you're claiming.

Pen-and-Ink-lings

OUR attention is called to the following very remarkable quotation in Dr. Donald's article in Church Militant for November: "Behold an Israelite indeed in whom is no Jacob." It is manifestly a printer's error, but in quoting the words of Christ, such a blunder is inexcusable.

A COMPOSITE photograph of all the greatest Madonnas painted by the old masters during 300 years, has just been made by Joseph Gray Kitchell, of Indianapolis, after many months' work. The face is marvelously beautiful—perhaps the highest type idealized by man, combining, as it does, all that is supreme in the conceptions of such painters as Raphael, Murillo, etc. As a scientific contribution to art the result is also significant. The first copy has been ordered for the Congressional Library.

MR. THOMAS KANE, in The Interior, takes the stand that any work given merely for the sake of paying wages speedily destroys the manhood of those who accept it. He cites by way of illustration the case of a company of iron miners who were suddenly thrown out of employment and given temporary relief by the city of Chicago in return for cleaning the streets. He says:

The effect upon the men was a lesson in sociology never to be forgotten by those who witnessed it. Most of them were Scandinavians, strong of limb, blue-eyed, clean, manly-looking men; honesty was plainly written all over their open countenances. Day after day on the street cars and sidewalks, I passed through the long line of men at their work. I do not think I ever saw one of them look up or speak to a fellow-worker. Shame and a sense of degradation were clearly visible on every face. "Ashamed of the character of their work?" No, it was not that. "Dissatisfied with their wages?" Not that either. Their reason for shame was that they were doing exactly what our socialistic friends are urging that the State shall undertake as a solution of the labor problem. They were advertising to the world their poverty and personal helplessness by accepting work which they knew was given for the sake of paying wages. True, it was work that needed to be done, but that did not take away the sting and disgrace; it never will. Those men did not remain in Chicago. They went where work is always to be had—to the country. Until they found it doubtless many of them often had to ask for something to eat, and a place to sleep, but private acceptance of food and shelter entails no such loss of self respect and manhood as public employment given for the purpose of paying wages.

WE quote further:

No man can retain his manhood while proclaiming to the world by his employment that he is imbecile; that though possessed of health and strength, he can not take care of himself; that he can not sell the fruits of the labor of his hands or brain in the open market for enough to make a living. The character of the work furnished for the purpose of paying wages would not make a particle of difference. No matter what it is, if the employment is given for the purpose of paying wages, the brand of disgrace will very soon rest both upon the work and the worker. Men may disgrace work and render particular kinds odious; work, per se, if honest and useful, never disgraces men.

MANDELL CREIGHTON, the Bishop of London, has a horror of lending his favorite books, says a London correspondent. The Bishop is a charming wit as well as a great scholar. A fellow-clergyman once visited the Bishop and took a fancy to an old edition of Shakespeare. He borrowed the volume, and did not think to return it for several months. Finally he returned it with a letter saying: "My Dear Bishop:—I have great joy in returning the volume you loaned me." The Bishop answered: "My Dear Brother:—All the joy is mine."

AT the village of Dunmow, England, recently, the ancient custom was observed of presenting a flitch of bacon to each married couple who can swear that "for twelve months and a day they have not repented in thought or any way" of their married state. Several couples were able to pass the ordeal which was strictly enforced. There was a jury of six maids and six bachelors, a judge in scarlet robe and full-bottomed wig, and counsel, both for the couples and for the donors of the bacon. The trial took place in a large tent, and after a searching inquiry as to the verity of their matrimonial harmony, the bacon was awarded to a man and wife "of a marked disparity of age." The rarity of the phenomenon thus celebrated was supposed to be enhanced by the disparity of age.

LADY BROOME in her "Colonial Memories," gives the following amusing instance of the regard for dress and fashion prevalent among West Indian negroes: "I once offered a comely young black housemaid leave of absence to go to her brother's marriage, but she declined, on the score of expense. Now I had seen this girl a week or two before very smartly dressed for friend's wedding, so I said: 'But surely you have still got that beautiful hat and frock you wore at Melanie's marriage the other day?' Aurelia gave me a shocked glance as she answered: 'Oh, lady, me can't wear that!' 'Why not?' I asked. 'All peoples very much offended if I wear same dress to their wedding, must be quite new every things!'" Regard for Mrs. Grundy's opinion seems to be as powerful with these West Indians as in the centres of fashionable society.

IN a brochure issued by the committee on education of the Georgia State Federation of Women's Clubs, it is recommended earnestly to teachers that they should make humor a part of their temperaments, and encourage it in their pupils. This does not mean flippancy and frivolity, but the sense of humor that keeps the spirit cheerful. It is pointed out that the capacity to be merry needs development and training, like any other capacity. The cultivation of humor, says The N. Y. Evening Post, is certainly to be endorsed. It is a gift that may be used every day and all day. It laughs at poverty; it lightens care and worry, and best of all, it presupposes cheerfulness and serenity of temper. To learn to laugh and to see the funny side of things is one of the best of helps towards wholesome and enjoyable living.

THE PARSON'S LIMIT

He'd been preaching and exhorting
For a score of years or so
In a portion of the vineyard
Where the harvesting was slow;
Where the temporal inducement
For his ceaseless diligence
Was a promise of four hundred
For his yearly recompense.

Unrelenting was the ardor
He devoted to the cause,
And though slowly came the dollars,
Still he labored without pause,
Till one day they came and told him,
As he kicked against the pricks,
That they'd raised his offered stipend
From four hundred up to six.

Then the good man sank exhausted,
As he feebly made reply:
"Don't, I pray you, men and brethren,
Thus my patience overture;
For to glean the four you've promised
Hath so warped my vital store,
That 'twould kill me if you taxed me
To collect two hundred more."

Boston Correspondence

NEARLY every Christian denomination in Boston is now reconciled to a liturgical form of worship. By this I mean they have not really adopted it, but they take occasion to praise it, and the old policy of criticising it has been abandoned. At the late Universalist convention in this city, a sermon was preached urging that body to adopt a uniform liturgy and order of public worship. The system of a Church year was also urged. This is all very pleasant, and in contrast to a former disposition which prevailed a hundred years ago, of putting a person into prison for using a liturgical form of worship.

Dr. Edward Everett Hale has been delivering lectures in the Lowell Institute course which have clearly set forth the early voyages and settlements about New England. His listeners were much pleased to hear from him a quotation taken from an entry in an old note of the treasurer of an English king, which reads: "To him who found the New World, £10." But no one knows who earned this reward, and it is still open for claimants.

The curate of a certain Episcopal church in Boston was recently married in a Congregational church, by a Congregational pastor. He has broken the record, and is the first Church clergyman for over a hundred and fifty years who has this distinction.

The Monday clericus is becoming an interesting forum. The discussions this year have been largely secular, but Dr. Abbott's address on his journeys around the world was not merely the observations of a well-disciplined traveler who knows what to see, and how to see it, but was an address which the American Churchman should hear and ponder over. Dr. Edward Abbott is the "Rollo" of his father's famous books, and certainly what he said on Nov. 6th, at the Monday meeting of the clergy, is deserving of wider popularity. One may expect to hear queer things at these gatherings, as after a paper is read every listener has three minutes to assent to it or play battledore or shuttle-cock with the opinions expressed. One ardent thinker made the remark that the State founded the Church!

Summer street has now become a strong business centre for the retail trade. This change must carry back the old Bostonian to the time when Trinity church occupied the upper corner of Hawley and Summer streets. It was a very imposing structure, a basilica of undressed granite. Bishop Eastburn was the rector for some time, and bishop of the diocese as well, and for a neighbor had Captain W. V. Hutchins whose three-story brick mansion adjoined the church. The monument of this worthy man is still on the common, with this inscription (Pope's): "An honest man is the noblest work of God."

In speaking of Bishop Eastburn, one cannot forbear quoting his love for the Church, "which in some degree," says Bishop Clark, "was attributable to its having been imported from England." He was born there, and to the end of his days always drank Her Majesty's health on the recurrence of the Queen's birthday. The early home of Bishop Brooks was not far away from this locality, being on Rowe street, now called Chauncey street. All this neighborhood has changed, and the rattle of traffic over "Church Green" and by the home of Daniel Webster, bears a strange contrast to what was seen fifty years ago.

The return of the Rev. Dr. Frisby to the church of the Advent, after an absence of a year, was an occasion of happiness and renewed interest in the work of this large and flourishing parish. There is no church more true to the teachings of the early Christian doctrine than this parish, not only in its methods of divine worship, but also in its Gospel sermons. Its quiet, regular work, and its unselfish manifestations of interest in weaker parishes striving to emphasize the same teachings in other localities, are no inferior witnesses of its deserved popularity.

The Rev. Dr. Donald made an admirable address at the annual gathering of the Woman's Auxillary in Trinity church. He made a sensible criticism of the methods pursued by not a few mission boards which take great delight in parading, every month, a column of statistics, believing that to be the best way to make a fair show in the flesh. Besides defending missions from the careless remarks of business men, he showed wherein these were not failures in any sense of the term, and altogether made an original and helpful address upon a well-worn topic.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew in this city enjoys good activity under the leadership of Mr. Robert H. Gardiner who is alive to all the opportunities that this organization should have. Lately, through his advice and co-operation, an attempt has been made to increase the spiritual side of the work, which so far has been successful. In one quarter of the city, meetings for men are held every Sunday afternoon in several churches. Mr. Hugh Mulholland, formerly of the Church Army, has shown adaptability in making such gatherings profitable and successful. He is a good organizer, and a consecrated man in every way. But, if one may venture an opinion, the Brotherhood at times shows a secular aspect in many of its projects. This is unavoidable, but with its secular aspect comes its social distinctions and absence of true brotherhood. The Boston local council, so admirably conducted, loses more than it gains in being held regularly in certain parishes without extending its usefulness by meeting in localities where the presence of the council would do much good. This is the opinion of many of its members, and as it is an easy matter to correct, it is hoped that arrangements of this kind may soon be made.

Handwriting of Great Men

THINKING of hand writing as I handled these sermons of Newman, I could not but remark how very beautiful that of the greatest writers usually is. Generally it is small, but not always. At Trinity College, Cambridge, they have the original of Milton's Lycidas; it is like copperplate, small, and the letters perfectly formed. Walter Scott's, as I have already said, was like Newman's; and another hand which I know very well is like these; namely, that of the late J. R. Green, but it is a little larger. Dean Church wrote the same kind of delicate, beautiful calligraphy. Macaulay's was a loose, untidy hand; Kingsley's was something like it, but rather better. Deans Milman and Stanley could write very well, but they didn't. Milman's was almost microscopic in its smallness—at least, in all the specimens I have seen; I believe, in earlier years, he wrote very beautifully. Stanley's was illegible till you got used to it. Thackeray's writing was also very small, and also very pretty and easy to read. Few men wrote a more beautiful hand than Dickens in the ordinary way, but in his late years he took to insert and scratch out to such an extent as must have driven printers half mad. The visitor to South Kensington Museum will be struck with the contrast between the MSS. of his earlier works, like "Martin Chuzzlewit" and his latest, "Edwin Drood." I do not remember to have seen any of Gibbon's "copy," but his biographer states that he used to walk about his room making up his sentences, and when he had done so, he sat down and wrote them, so that there were very few corrections. Dr. Johnson's is a very clear and fine hand. The present and three preceding Archbishops of Canterbury are all to be noted for excellent handwriting. Archbishop Sumner's was wretchedly niggling and difficult to read. The late Bishop Jackson's was worse. I never found any so difficult to read as that. The present Bishop's is very good, and what may be designated as scholarly. It is a good deal like Dean Church's. When Lord Palmerston became Home Secretary in the Aberdeen Government of 1852, he characteristically began his work by addressing a letter to school inspectors, urging them to impress upon teachers that there was of late years a terrible falling-off in the way of handwriting, and the need of reform. Palmerston's own hand was very neat and good. Gladstone's and Sir Robert Peel's were both good and not unlike.—Peter Lombard in Church Times.

Book Reviews and Notices

Life of the Rev. James de Koven, D.D., Sometime Warden of Racine College. By William C. Pope, M. A. New York: James Pott & Co. 1899. Pp. 102.

It was on March 19, 1879, that the Church was thrilled by the announcement of the sudden death of Dr. de Koven, warden of Racine College. He died at his post. He put aside many temptations which came to him from sympathizing friends, in the shape of brilliant offers of place and dignity in other fields of usefulness in the Church. For twenty years he has lain in his quiet grave beside the walls of Racine College chapel, with silence resting upon himself and his brilliant and splendid life. At last that silence has been broken by this memoir, written by an earnest friend. It is not for us to criticize the work of such a friend, but one closes the thin volume with a feeling of disappointment that the genius of de Koven has not had a more proportionate setting than here given. For de Koven in his life-time filled the whole horizon of the American Church. He gave life and motion to the dogma of the theoretical High Churchmen. His vision of the Catholic Church was so vivid that he inspired other souls with a consciousness of what he himself saw.

In all the energy of his youth and the restrained force of gentlemanly training and inherited culture, he ventured into the then almost wilderness of Wisconsin. Around him were men vastly beyond him in learning and scholarship, men of the type of Dr. Adams, of Nashotah, of Hugh Miller Thompson, and others; but they were as children in all that pertains to the art of catching souls, especially of the young, when compared to de Koven. To this company of scholarly ecclesiastics, we must add the laity of the West, men to whom this youthful newcomer must have seemed but a sentimental dreamer.

In these surroundings de Koven's whole clerical life was spent, and it was one of many battles which brought him into conflict with giants. Surely there was ample room for pen portraits of all the actors during this memorable epoch of American Church history. Some of the best men the Church has yet seen, and some of the most important movements for the Church, such as the see system, the cathedral development, the provincial idea, liturgical advance, and the practical realization of the visibility of the Church, had in Wisconsin their inception, their bold development, and their apology.

But in the clash of conflict there were many and cruel blows and heart burnings; and feelings which smoldered long like hidden fires, burst forth from their concealment when de Koven was made a shining mark by his election to the episcopate of Illinois. All this story ought to have been dramatically told, and the actors therein drawn out in line.

The whole life of de Koven was a tragedy, with a fate begotten of early jealousy and struggles, which followed him through his whole life, not daring to strike while he lavished his fortune on Racine, and while his work for the education of youth was such a praise in the land; but which struck, indeed like fate, when, in the helplessness of his lofty silence as a bishop-elect, he could but wait and endure. But in his grave at the Racine he loved he has conquered; and some day possibly the story in all its fullness will be told for the enlightenment of generations to come. Meanwhile, we are thankful for this brief memoir by a friend of one who should never be forgotten by the American Church, James de Koven, warden of Racine, whose very name brings tears now to the eyes of those who knew him twenty years ago.

John Selden and His Table Talk. By Robert Waters. New York: Eaton & Mains. Price, $1.

There are very few people now who have any clear idea of John Selden, though his witty words are often quoted. He left no lasting literary work, though the "Table Talk" shows how great his powers were. Coleridge who was a renowned "Table Talker" himself, says of Selden's little book: "There is more weighty bullion in that book than I ever found in the same number of pages of any uninspired writer." Selden lived in the times of Elizabeth, James I., Charles I., and even Cromwell. He was a conservative Churchman and a loyal subject, but with no absurd views of the divine right of kings. He played a prominent part in the much troubled political arena of his day, and was ever the champion of the oppressed by any party. His learning was immense, and it was lighted up by the most brilliant wit. Once when some Puritan divines were discussing the distance from Jerusalem to Jericho, they settled on seven miles, for the reason that fish from Jericho were sold in Jerusalem. Selden rather upset this conclusion by saying: "Perhaps it was salt fish!" Lord Clarendon, certainly no mean authority, said of Selden: "He was the most clear discusser and had the best faculty of making hard things easy and presenting them clearly to the understanding of any man, that hath been known." This volume contains not only the "Table Talk," so pungent and weighty that we wish there were more of it, but notes on the whole subject of "Ana" and Table Talk, and a rambling life of Selden.

Laos Folk-Lore of Farther India. By Katherine Neville Fleeson. New York, Chicago: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, 75c.

To everything to which, in the kingdom of youth, the name "fairy tale" may be applied, there is a fascination, both for the inhabitants of the kingdom, and for many whom time has driven beyond its barriers. This little book of folk-lore will, therefore, be welcomed, especially as it claims for itself, in addition to the intrinsic merit of the tales, the charm of complete novelty. The Laos country is a part of the kingdom of Siam, and its literature is as yet unwritten, save for a few scattered manuscripts. Until the translator collected the stories of this volume, they had been only orally preserved in the provinces of the Laos country, just as they had been handed down from generations of ancestors. The translator who, as a missionary, has lived intimately among the Laos people for years, has given us the tales just as they are told to day around the camp-fires and in the primitive houses. The book is interestingly illustrated from photographs taken by Dr. Briggs.

Pioneering in the San Juan. By the Rev. George M. Darley, D.D. Chicago, New York: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, $1.50.

The Rev. Mr. Darley's brief preface states that his book is "an attempt to state in simple words the reminiscences of work performed by a Presbyterian missionary in Southwestern Colorado during the great San Juan excitement, with the sincere desire to awaken a deeper interest in home missions. 'Content to fill a little place, if God be glorified.'" After reading, we are driven to doubt whether the quotation be well chosen, for to us the book appears to do service rather as the screen of a stereopticon, whereon the author shows, by the aid of strong light and powerful lenses, many magnified pictures of the doings of the Rev. Dr. Darley. The title of the book is misleading, particularly as many of the chapters are simply sermons delivered by Mr. Darley at various points in the West.

The Boys of Scrooby. By Ruth Hall. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.50.

Had the author used her abundant material for the production of two or three books, instead of endeavoring to condense it to fit within the covers of a single volume, the result would have been more satisfactory to us. In introducing so many scenes and so many different sets of characters, Miss Hall has failed to do herself justice. The characters are well drawn, and the scenes interestingly depicted, but the jumping from the Old World to the New, from Virginia to Massachusetts, in the effort to keep pace with the tale, is confusing to the reader. It would require a Dickens to run the stage for such a story. In spite of this fault, there is

BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG

The Land of the Long Night

By PAUL B. DU CHAILLU

With 24 full-page illustrations by M. J. Burns

Square 12mo, $2.00

THE author's lively story of his journey to the extreme North and back, his many adventures in "Snow Land," his trips on reindeer sledge and on snowshoes, his bear and wolf hunts and fishing trips, will be eagerly followed by a host of young readers. The narrative moves swiftly and is marked by great buoyancy of spirits, having all the stirring quality of adventurous autobiography. The illustrations are numerous and animated, portraying with rare beauty the scenery of these Northern lands.

The Adventures of a Freshman

By JESSE LYNCH WILLIAMS. Illustrated by Fletcher C. Ransom. 12mo, $1.25

THE hero of Mr. Williams's new story is a representatively American young fellow, who comes east to work his way through college. What hazing did for him, what he did for himself, how he was a hero and how he was not, how he failed and succeeded, as student, as athlete, and as a boy full of human nature—is the story.

The Fugitive. By John R. Spears

A Tale of Adventure in the Days of Clipper Ships and Slavers

Illustrated by Walter Russell. 12mo, $1.25

"IT strikes us as an excellent tale of adventure, dealing with the old days of American clipper ships and African slave-trading. The story is told with decided spirit, and while surely stirring enough, keeps on the safe side of sensationalism."—The Outlook.

much that is admirable in the book. The writer is thoroughly familiar with her subject, and she has drawn for us pictures of the early days of our country that could not fail to be of interest, even though they appeared as individual sketches.

The Half-Back. A Story of School Football and Golf. By Ralph Henry Barbour. Illustrated by B. West Clineinst. New York: D. Appleton & Co. Price, $1.50.

Here is a book that will find its way straight into the hearts of boy readers everywhere, and which even rather old boys will find difficult to lay aside. It is the best school story that has been published in years, and by far the most satisfactory addition to football literature that has ever appeared. Mr. Barbour knows golf and football, he knows school and college, and best of all does he understand boys. It is a simple story of school and college life, strong through its very simplicity; and while athletic sports are made very prominent, we cannot fail to see that they hold their proper sphere. The author appreciates the relation between campus and study, and shows how a football may help to the gaining of a scholarship medal, or a golf club aid its owner to "hole out" first in his class in the study hall.

The Young Boss. A Book for Boys. By Edward William Thomason. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell & Co. Price, 50c.

This little tale is of a self-reliant, but modest and upright, young man who took hold of an engineering contract which an accident had prevented his father from finishing, and carried it through successfully. He has all sorts of trials, all of which he surmounts by his tact, energy, and perseverance. It is a very natural and stimulating story, and excellently told.

Dorsey the Young Inventor. By Edward S. Ellis. New York: Fords, Howard & Hurlburt. Price, $1.25.

Mr. Ellis is well-known as the author of boy-books that, by their vivacity and interest, lure the young folk to unconscious absorption of the useful and the earnest. Dorsey, the hero of the present story, is frank, generous, and manly in character, and in his various adventures he always retains the reader's sympathy and interest. The amount of information the author contrives to impart regarding the realm of invention, will appeal to the lad of ingenious turn of mind, and may arouse new ideas in many a careless head. The book is attractively made, and well illustrated.

Concerning the Kingdom of God. By Hugh Miller Thompson, Bishop of Mississippi. New York: Thomas Whittaker. Small octavo. Pp. 48. Paper. Price, 12c.

A brief, direct, and most reasonable argument from Holy Scripture, in defence of the time-long position of the Catholic Church concerning the three orders in the sacred ministry, and their historical relation each to the other, onward from Apostolic days. Our eminent dialectician of the American Church writes here, as always, in popular and clear style, with the simplicity of a true scholar, and his present little work is cleverly adapted to convince ordinary readers.

Reflected Lights From "The Face of the Deep." By Christina Rossetti. Selected and arranged by W. M. L. Jay. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. Price, $1.25.

The compiler of these exquisite thoughts has conferred a great favor on all those who, in the midst of a busy life, desire to have a handy book for perusal in odd moments. One may open the book anywhere and find a gem of thought that will fasten itself on the mind at once and be useful for constant meditation. The book is handsomely illustrated and attractive in appearance.

For Love's Sweet Sake. Selected Poems of Love in all Moods. Edited by G. Hembert Westley. Boston: Lee & Shepard. Price, $1.50.

This charming collection of love poems attracts the eye by its dainty and suggestive dress. It is bound in white, with a design of golden love-knots and blue forget-me-nots. Unless exceptionally widely read in this phase of literature, the reader will find some unfamiliar poems, as the author, in a previous volume, had included the best known ones. It is a very beautiful gift for an intimate friend or a lover, as all moods of friendship and love are represented.

The Herd Boy and His Hermit. By Charlotte M. Yonge, with five full-page illustrations by W. L. Stacey. New York: Thomas Whittaker. Pp. 158. Price, $1.25.

The bare mention of a new issue from the ever delighting and instructive pen of Charlotte M. Yonge, is enough to fill the hearts of all reading youth with pleasurable anticipations, which are certain of fulfillment here.

Historical Memorials of Canterbury. The Landing of Augustine, the Murder of Becket, Edward the Black Prince, Becket's Shrine. By Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, D.D., formerly Canon of Canterbury. Second American, from the Eleventh London, Edition. With Illustrations. Pp. 361. Price, $3.

Historical Memorials of Westminster Abbey. By Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, D.D., late Dean of Westminster. Illustrated Edition. Two Volumes. Price, $3 each.

Philadelphia: George W. Jacobs & Co.

These two magnificent productions of pen, press, and pencil will notably mark the closing holiday season of the nineteenth century. The heart of the Anglo-Saxon race throughout the world is sensible to some thrill of common devotion at mention of Canterbury and Westminster, Americans make their pilgrimage to the world-famed shrines of their old land fathers, and Churchmen stand before them hushed and reverent. The text of these rich volumes in their entirety being written by that full and cautious scholar, Dean Stanley, is the sure guaranty of accuracy at each point, as well as all necessary completeness in the unfolding of whatever ought to be known regarding it in particulars. Every part is full of interest. Each volume is enriched with illustrations in full page, and of the highest reach in the graver's art to-day, over fifty in number. The lowness of cost for each volume of the three, so sumptuous in form, puts them easily within the reach of all tasteful book lovers, and the gift of both or either of the sets will be "a gift indeed" at the holidays.

The Prince's Story Book. Edited by George Laurence Gomme. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Pp. 392. Price, $2.

We advise all those who are looking for Christmas gifts for the young to put this book upon their list. It belongs to the highest order of literature, and consists of well-chosen selections from the best historical novels, illustrating the reigns of the English kings, from Harold down to Victoria. They are taken from a wide range of authors, but naturally Scott contributes

The Red Book of Animal Stories. Selected and edited by Andrew Lang. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Pp. 379. Price, $2.

This is an altogether delightful book, handsomely bound and printed, beautifully illustrated, ably edited, with widely varied contents of a highly interesting character. Its literary style, though not even, is of a high order, and there is nothing in it which could offend. The young people will be fascinated by it, and it will find many readers amongst children of a larger growth. We confess to having read it through with extreme interest. It would make a most welcome Christmas gift. Happy the household into which it finds its way.

Young Robin Hood. By G. Manville Fenn. Illustrated by Victor Venner. London: Ernest Nister; New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.

The author of this dainty and beautifully illustrated story ranks among the chief writers of children's books. He has lost none of his skill in the work before us. The little hero was the son of the sheriff of Nottingham. He was accompanying his father's servants on a journey from his aunt's house, in Nottingham, when he was captured by the famous Robin Hood's men and kept by them at their retreat

YOU cannot afford to take chances in painting when, by exercising a little care and common sense, the use of mixtures of unknown composition and questionable value can be avoided and the best materials (and, as you will find, by far the cheapest) can be obtained.

"THE HONEY MAKERS," by Margaret Warner Morley, not only gives an account of the structure and habits of bees, but also goes into the literature of the subject, under such heads as "Honey," "Mead," "In Hindoo Literature," "In Egypt and the East," "In Greece and Italy," "In Christian and Mediæval Times," "Curious Customs and Beliefs." The practical phase of the subject is given in a chapter entitled, "Bee Culture at Present." The Appendix is full of interesting points and explanations. [A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago. Price, $1.50.]

"LITTLE BEASTS OF FIELD AND WOOD," by William Everet Cram, is not only pretty, but also practical. It is a story of personal observation of the characteristics and habits of many small animals, under the divisions of "Little Beasts and How to Find Them; Foxes, Weasels, Swimmers, Squirrels." The author says in his preface: "I have watched the daily life of the wild creatures, having spent as much time in the woods in mid-winter as at any other season." It is a great privilege to go with him in his rambles, as we are permitted to do in these excellent sketches, which are accompanied by many illustrations. [Small, Maynard & Company, Boston.]

"THE BOOK OF KNIGHT AND BARBARA" is a series of stories told to children by David Starr Jordan, president of Leland Stanford Junior University, and is very prettily illustrated by the children. Copies of the stories were given to many children for criticism and illustration, before the publication of this volume. It is surely a very unique work, and a most valuable study of the child-mind. It will be as interesting to scholars and other mature readers as to the children themselves; especially fascinating to teachers and parents. [D. Appleton & Co., New York. Price, $1.50.]

"SNOW ON THE HEAD LIGHT," is the quaint title of a story of the great Burlington strike, by Cy Warman. Few men in the West during the eighties, and still living, have forgotten the great strike out of which the incidents of this story developed. The picture can hardly be overdrawn. It was a time of intense excitement and of wide-spread suffering, not only among railroad employees, but also among many other classes who were affected by the strike. The author is an expert in railroad literature, and is especially fitted to make a good story out of the material furnished by this industrial crisis. [D. Appleton & Co., New York. Price, $1.25.]

"THE SHADOW OF QUONG LUNG," by Dr. C. W. Doyle, is one of the most striking stories of the season, having for its field the Chinese quarter of San Francisco, in which abundant material is found of pathetic and tragic interest. "The best thing to do with Chinatown," says the author in his preface, "would be to burn it down." It is not long since he made a deep impression upon the reading world by his book, "The Taming of the Jungle," which doubtless compares favorably with Mr. Kipling's work. [J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia.]

"AN APOSTLE OF THE WESTERN CHURCH," Memoir of the Rt. Rev. Jackson Kemper, D. D., first Missionary Bishop of the American Church, with notices of some of his contemporaries, by the Rev. Greenough White, A. M., B. D., will be ready, Thomas Whitaker announces, Dec. 15th. Price, $1.50 net.

English Stained Glass Windows

American Mosaic Glass Windows.

Made by John Hardman & Co., London and Birmingham.
Numbers 3, 5 and 7 WEST TWENTY-NINTH STREET, NEW YORK.

The December Forum is not only "up-to-date," but also up to high-water mark in the intellectual merit of its contents. It should find favor with business men and with scholarly men all over the English-speaking world. The Transvaal, Australia, Puerto Rico, Trusts, Fiction, Study of Greek, Municipal Government, Relations with Germany, are among the papers of this issue, from writers of recognized authority in their departments. The paper on Puerto Rico is by a member of the Insular Commission, and gives much valuable information and advice.

The article of most general interest in The Architectural Record, for the current quarter, is "The New York Capitol Building," a good description of which is given by Cuyler Reynolds. Very few have an idea of the solidity and beauty of this great edifice. "Some Designs," by Charles P. H. Gilbert, are given, showing admirable treatment of city houses. A partiality for projecting windows, which we cannot altogether commend, seems to pervade his work. "Stone in American Architecture" is a paper which builders as well as architects should read. In fact, any body who has the responsibility of building houses should study The Architectural Record. A paper on "Electric Lighting in the Albany Capitol," gives several full-page illustrations of artistic effects in this line. Even the advertisements are helpful reading to those who are interested in building houses.

The cover of the December Century is suggestive of the approaching Christmas season. Five tints of yellow and red are harmoniously blended in the printing, the lettering being in black. The opening poem, "The Old Master," is decorated by Edward Edwards, and illustrated by Louis Loeb, in a frontispiece, printed in tints. "The Christmas Dancers," a poem embodying a Saxon legend, is accompanied by several full-page pictures in color. The holiday spirit breathes as well in Jacob A. Riis' story of New York's East Side, "The Kid Hangs up His Stocking"; Dr. Weir Mitchell's poem, "King Christmas and Master New Year"; the reproduction of Alden Weir's, "A Christmas Tree," and Thomas A. Janvier's, "A Provincial Christmas Postscript." In this number Sir Walter Besant begins a series of papers on life in East London. Attention will be attracted to Marian Warner Wildman's poem, "A Hill Prayer," by its decorative designs by Maxfield Parish, and the editorial note that it won the first prize in the Century College Competition this year. Henryk Sienkiewicz, author of "Quo Vadis," contributes a prose-poem, "The Judgment of Peter and Paul on Olympus."

Of St. Nicholas, "The Children Danced Around It" is the frontispiece, and the title refers, of course, to a Christmas tree—one that was used afterwards as the mast of a ship, a bear's cave, and all sorts of things that grown folks would never have thought a Christmas tree fit for. Then there is "The Doll that Santa Claus Bought," "Erme's Christmas Doll," and "Christmas on the Home Station"—a naval story. Marie von Vorst admits us to the home and studio of the "painter in ordinary to children," the extraordinarily clever, and successful French artist, Boutet de Monvel. Many of M. de Monvel's pictures of children are reproduced. In "The Lost Colony" we see the first of a series of colonial story-and-travel sketches by Elbridge S. Brooks. Short stories, verses, and pictures crowd each other in the teeming pages of this magazine, which has been enlarged by eight pages, and will not be diminished in size during the coming year.

With the December number, Harper's Magazine begins its hundredth volume, and enters upon the last six months of its fiftieth year. This Christmas number, by-the-way, ought to be remembered for a long time, if for only one thing; that, is Mark Twain's short story, "The Man that Corrupted Hadleyburg." The majority of readers will probably consider this the best tale Mark Twain has ever written. The series of "Darky Devil Tales," by Virginia Frazer Boyle, which is to run during the coming year, if we can judge from the first of the series,

"Dark er de Moon," will take a distinctive place in darky folk lore. The series will be illustrated in A. B. Frost's weirdest manner. The chief feature of the hundredth volume will doubtless be Mrs. Humphry Ward's novel, "Eleanor," which will begin in the January number and run through twelve months. It is said that it is, in the main, purely a love-story. The scene is laid in an old Italian villa on the Campagna, and the interest centres in the love of an American girl and an English woman for the same man.

Opinions of the Press

The Church Standard

A BROKEN IDOL.—"Well," said Abraham Lincoln, after wading through a prosy and ponderous pamphlet, "for the people who like that kind of reading, that's just the kind of reading they would like." Such a comment might be made on Lord Rosebery's speech on the Cromwell statue. There are people who think it wise, statesmanlike, and broad for a government to indorse all that has been done to effect its destruction. For instance, a government with a Church, a monarchy, and a Parliament, may praise a rebel who overturned the Church, killed the sovereign, and substituted military for Parliamentary control. Lord Bacon'sfield silenced a flippant dean who inveighed against dogmas by saying: "No dogmas, no deans." There would have been no premiers and peerages had Cromwellism become a fixture. It is a very cheap form of clap-trap that flatters agitators by flattering the greatest and most dangerous agitator England ever knew. Cromwell had good traits, no doubt; but his life work may be summed up in two statements—he destroyed the old Constitution of his country, and substituted military despotism in its place. Lord Rosebery would find it no easy task to produce one element of constitutional freedom which his idol did not seek to destroy.

The Churchman

A LONG PASTORATE.—The resignation of Dr. Storrs from the pastorate that he has held with honor for fifty-three years, deserves commemoration. His service is almost unequalled in its length and sustained dignity in modern religious life. Dr. Storrs has been a leading and restraining spirit, not alone in the Congregational body, but in all Evangelical Churches, and he was perhaps the most finished pulpit orator of his day. He is of a family of ministers. His great-grandfather had been a Revolutionary chaplain, his grandfather a pastor for thirty-three years, his father for sixty-three, in less strenuous days than those that are now closing for the son. Dr. Storrs went from college to the law, which he studied with Rufus Choate; but he soon turned to theology, was graduated at Andover in 1845, and in the next year assumed his first and only charge, the church of the Pilgrims, in Brooklyn. For years identified with a religious journal, he has been always an active publicist, and conspicuous in all movements toward higher municipal and national life. He has done his work manfully, and we trust he may live yet many years to enjoy the "honor, love, obedience, troops of friends" that he has so richly merited.

The Passing of Gray Rabbit

GRAY RABBIT was the oldest rabbit in the warren, and he had just waked up in the long, cool grass of the meadow, where he had been lying with his ears shut up and laid along his back, and his nose between his fore paws. It was too hot to go regularly to bed—one of those days, as he said, "when the bedclothes looked as if they had been kicking about all night, and the pillow hasn't had a wink of sleep." So he was going to "lie out" where he was in the meadow. He had already scratched his head on both sides very carefully and sleepily, and had stretched himself out so long to yawn that he looked like a rabbit skin, and he was just wondering whether he should go and have a light breakfast of carrot tops in the garden close by, or stay and pick out the young clover growing amongst the hay, when a strange thing happened. Gray Rabbit heard a whirring noise at the bottom of the paddock. And it did not stop, but went on, whirr-rr-rr-rr. Dragon-flies overhead? Oh, no, for there were men's voices talking to horses. And the noise grew fainter and fainter, and just as Gray Rabbit felt sure it was gone altogether, it grew louder and louder and louder, and came closer and closer and closer. And he squatted down as flat as he could, and kept his ears quiet, and the thing that whirred came past him.

He heard a man talking to horses quite plainly, but he saw nothing. Then the noise died away in the distance again, and Gray Rabbit scratched his head thoughtfully, wondered over the thing that had happened, and was just going to nibble off a tuft of young clover, when—whirr-rr-rr—he heard the thing coming again. And again the sound grew fainter, and again it grew louder, and came closer and closer and passed. And Gray Rabbit saw the top of a man go by; he was high up in the air and moved slowly past, whirring all the time. This was even more wonderful. Gray Rabbit had never, all the number of times he had peered out from among tall grass at men passing by, on foot, on horses, and in carts, seen anything like this man who sat in the air and whirred as he went along. Never!

Just then Madam Pheasant came by with her head bent low. "Chuck! Chuck!" she said nervously, and ten gawky young pheasants, with all their heads down, followed at her tail.

"Whither away so fast?" said Gray Rabbit jauntily, as a man of the world who had seen things in his time, "is the sky falling?"

"Chuck! Chuck!" said the pheasant in an agitated, hurried way, and the last of the ten gawky youngsters disappeared from his view.

"Always was a silly old mollycoddle," said Gray Rabbit, taking a mouthful of grass just to assure himself that he was not getting nervous. "I wonder what she's in such a fright about?"

But he sat where he was. Experience had taught him in all previous dangers, that sitting still until compelled to run was always the safest thing to do. And he heard the noise rising and falling far away, and then it came closer and grew louder, and the man in the air went by again. And this time Gray Rabbit thought he saw the top of a horse in front of the man.

But the thing went away again just as before, and his spirits, as before, began to revive, and the larks came running through the grass past him.

"Whither away," said he quite bravely, "is the sky falling?"

But the larks said nothing; they ran a little further, chirping, so it seemed, very sadly, and then flew up into the sky, and Gray Rabbit saw them flying round and round, but neither of them was singing.

"That's odd," thought he, "for the larks have a nest full of young ones near the edge of the meadow."

And whirr-rr-rr came the thing again, and a young rabbit, nearly out of its wits with fright, came creeping along. And Gray Rabbit felt quite glad of the company, even of so small a bunny. So he said, "Stop, stop, where are you going? What are you frightened at?" And the little one who had great respect for the oldest inhabitant, stopped.

"Listen," it whispered. Whirr-rr-rr came the thing.

"Oh!" said the old one, "that's nothing. I've heard it ever so often this morning, and though it comes it always goes away again. There's a man—" and he suddenly stopped. For this time he could see quite plainly there was a man sitting on something, and driving two horses, who nodded their heads at every step. And Gray Rabbit could see that their manes and tails were long, and looked as if they had been bleached by sun and rain. He saw too, that as the man passed, the hay between himself and the man grew much thinner; indeed, he could see now right across the meadow to the hedge. He heard, too, another sound that he had not heard before, a whispering, lisping sound in the grass that went by with the man.

"There," said he to the small bunny, "I told you it would go away. All you have to do is to lie quite quiet and do nothing, and things will go away—most of them."

And the small bunny thanked him gratefully, and seeing Gray Rabbit scratch his ear with a hind foot—just to show that he did not allow miraculous occurrences to make any difference in his ordinary conduct took heart of grace and scratched its ear, too.

So there they sat, the little rabbit in the shadow of its reverend relative, just behind the big one, and listened to the rising and falling of the sound in the ups and downs of the sloping meadow. And listening, they became aware that it was again coming up to them, and the whirr-rr grew louder and louder and louder. The small rabbit could not, for the life of it, help sitting up just a little and looking at the thing as it came along.

How slowly it moved! and the horses bobbed their heads at every step, and whisked their tails, and, strange to say, the hay, as the horses passed, bowed down and lay flat. The bunny could see that the meadow was all empty in front of it, and still the thing came on, never changing the tone of its voice, and the horses bobbed at every step. It was very solemn, the little rabbit thought, and very exciting.

And Gray Rabbit saw everything, too, but besides the man and the horses he heard, coming along through the grass, the same hissing noise he had heard the last time. He could not understand it, but it was a very suspicious sound, and perplexed him. So he laid his ears flat along either side of his head, and got his feet well up under him, so as to be ready to make his famous jump at the first sign of danger. And the hissing noise came nearer and nearer and nearer. How thin the grass was getting! how—Something touched his fur! And the little bunny saw its great-grand sire make a motion as of jumping, when blip!

Gray Rabbit's head went off all by itself! And the hay bowed down and lay flat, covering up its body.

And a great fear, out of all proportion to the size of its little person, seized upon the bunny, and it fled. What had happened to Gray Rabbit it never knew, for before next hay time it died from a sudden attack of Bang-Bang, and so it never had another chance of seeing a hay-making machine.—The Contemporary Review.

Adopting Children

THERE is at least one woman in New York to-day who does not believe in heredity. She believes that human nature does not depend so much for its development upon antecedents as upon surroundings; that mankind holds the secret of its destiny in its own hands. She draws her optimistic conclusions from long and careful observation of some 5,000 children, all of whom, to use the Napoleonic phrase, have been their own ancestors. They all had ancestors at one time, in most cases drunkards, thieves, or murderers, but very few of them—to be specific, only ten per cent.—show any indication of that early disadvantage. Ninety per cent. are educated, refined, law-abiding, and prosperous. The larger number have children of their own who, in spite of all modern theories of heredity, show no resemblance to the grandmothers and grandfathers now in Potter's field. To come to the point at once, these 5,000 men and women belong to that peculiar class known as adopted children; and the woman who watches their career with such a benevolent eye, has spent the better part of her life as matron of a public institution that makes the adoption of children its special care.

"No," she says, "I suppose the average New Yorker has no adequate notion of the great number of children adopted in this city every day—of the antecedents of these poor, homeless waifs, of the homes into which they fall, and of their subsequent careers. And yet it forms one of the most useful and hopeful chapters in the contemporary history of this great city. In ninety cases out of one-hundred, I am willing to take the child of the most abandoned parents, and, providing I can have the guidance of his childhood and youth, am perfectly willing to assume all the responsibility for his career.

"There is a large number of people who agree with me, as is proved by the fact that thousands of children of these homes of vice are adopted by progressive and cultured people every year. It is a great revelation, the readiness with which these men and women take into their homes the little degenerates, adopt them legally as their own daughters and sons, and show them every attention and care.

"One of these cases comes to mind now—that of one of the most famous American statesmen of the past thirty years. He was childless himself, and it was to supply this void that he applied to us. I shall never forget the afternoon that Mr. — and his wife appeared at the home to select the child they were to make their own. They intended to take only one child; but just as an experiment, I showed them a pair of twin-girls that a few days before had been rescued from the slums. My visitors were so delighted with them that they decided to adopt the little girls forthwith. They were not permitted to do this in ignorance, but were carefully informed of the babies' pedigree, that their father and mother were both besotted in sin and crime, and that there was hardly any evil tendency known to science that were not a part of their inheritance. This made no difference to my guests, however; they had faith in themselves, and in the two dainty little creatures before them, and did not waver.

"They have never had any reason to repent their act. In a year or two one of the little girls died, but her sister grew up to be a credit to her distinguished foster-parents. The affection in which she was held is shown by the reply I received to my request for the annual report of the child's progress, a few years after she left the home, which all these foster-parents are obliged to make. 'We do not like to make the report,' Mr. — wrote. 'In every sense of the word the child is our own. These annual reports are only unpleasant reminders of the fact that she is not our own flesh and blood; and we do not wish to be reminded of that.' Inasmuch as Mr. — was then the leading member of a President's cabinet, and one of the foremost statesmen of the time, we acceded to

THE VOCALION is remarkably well adapted for either the church or the private music-room. It is compact in form, occupying about one-third the space of a pipe-organ of equal capacity, and has a full, rich diapason tone-quality, which, together with great delicacy in the string registers, especially fits it to accompany the human voice. We give here a description of our Style 22, to which we wish to call the attention of all lovers of organ music, whose correspondence we invite.

Virginia's Air Castle

A SEQUEL TO "THE GIRLS OF ST. DOROTHY"

BY IZOLA L. FORRESTER

(All rights reserved)

CHAPTER VI.

SUNDAY passed without Virginia again approaching the subject of Dick Hardy, and when Madge tried to lead her to talk of her brother, she grew suddenly reserved, and almost petulant.

"Never mind what I said, Madge," she said, pushing back her hair from her forehead with a quick, impatient gesture. "It cannot be helped now, and I ought not to have told you."

And Madge nodded, and said nothing, but she did a lot of thinking, and Mr. Hardy caught a pair of brown eyes watching him questioningly several times during the day, and wondered what their owner was thinking of so seriously.

After school on Monday the Sisterhood girls gathered in full force in the nest to hear Eleanor's idea. There had been an election of officers held at the beginning of the new year, and Virginia became president by a unanimous vote, with Madge as secretary, and Mollie as treasurer. Perhaps it was this official combination which was in a measure accountable for the close companionship of the trio since the election. Mollie declared that it was her duties alone that called her to the big house on the bluff so frequently, but Dave and Art. held a different opinion, and said: "Cookies and chocolate, and her ladyship's smiles."

There was very little formal business to this Monday meeting; in fact, there never was very much to any of the S. D. S. assemblies. Jerry said that the girls did not know as much about parliamentary law as the Excelsior skeleton did, but Eleanor would always reply, after all, they managed to reach the result as quickly and satisfactorily as any dignified function presided over by Arthur in all his majesty.

"Just call the roll, Madge, and skip the minutes," ordered the president briefly, when all were ready to listen. "We want to hear what Nell has to say."

Madge complied, and when she had finished, the girls turned expectantly to Eleanor. Some way she had seemed from the very first to be the backbone of the Sisterhood. It was her firm, frank advice and never failing practical common-sense which had kept the spirit of contention and restless irresolution out of the club, and many a time when Mollie and Evelyn had plunged into an argument, a quiet word from her had warded off the shadow of a quarrel.

Although she was only seventeen, she seemed older, because of her way of taking herself and the world so seriously. She was not at all like easy-going, indolent Jerry, and he would often say to the boys:

"Wish I was a born regulator like Nell. She just sits and digs up ideas for bait, and then goes fishing with them."

This time, to judge from the happy earnest look on her face, as she prepared to unfold her latest scheme, the idea was a particularly good one.

"It's about our summer work," she began. "What Bobbie said about the orphan asylum made me think of it first. You know how every year the boys go off and camp out during vacation time, and most of us go down for a few weeks at the cottages on the lake shore. Now wouldn't it be splendid if we could arrange it in some way to have a little summer home for poor children and waifs. There are steamers running all summer from here to Chicago, and Mr. Stanley would help us. I think that it would be a great work if we only had two or three a week to look after, and that would be something really worth doing."

"But what could the boys do, Nell?" asked little Alice Jardine.

"Why, I thought that they could help look after the boy waifs, and see that they had a good time, teach them to fish and swim, and all that kind of thing, while we looked after the girls. We would want tents or something right down there among the ravines and bluffs on the lake shore."

There was a moment's silence, and then Virginia's soft, slow voice asked:

"How would Bonnie Castle do?"

"Virgine, you don't mean it!" exclaimed Eleanor, and Mollie nearly tumbled off her perch on top of the bookcase, in her excitement of the announcement of such an offer.

"Of course I do," replied Virginia, laughingly. "You know mamma is going East this summer, and papa and I will be all alone, and he never cares to stay down at the cottage. I know he will give it to me, and then we could carry out the whole plan, and the children could have a jolly time down there."

"Well, I should say they would," gasped Mollie, finding her tongue at last. "It's immense, Nell! Just think of having a lot of poor little crazy tads to scrub clean, and let roll round in the sand, and give them a whiff of real woods. Maybe some of them never saw ravines or fished, or were even clean all at once. Talk about mission work!"

"Yes, exactly; talk about a lot of girls without a bit of experience starting in to civilize a lot of little heathens," and Evelyn's tone was quite grieved over the sudden startling responsibility which threatened the Sisterhood. "Even if we could have Bonnie Castle, how could we look after everything? There you would have to feed them, and attend to their coming over by boat, and go to Chicago to hunt them up, and then maybe get some Italians, or—or even Chinese, who might bring some disease over, and we'd all be down with it. I don't think it's safe."

"Oh, fiddlesticks and shoe strings," exclaimed Mollie. "We can put you into a glass case, Evelyn, and set you on the piano stool, and let you do your share that way. 'Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast.' That's what Art. says when I get angry, and then he sings 'Down on the Swanee River.' How would that do for you?"

"Evelyn could do that if she would," said Eleanor quickly. "And it would help out wonderfully, because children are so fond of music, and I know we could have the little old organ in our back parlor. Mother was saying the other day that it was no good now that the piano is there."

Evelyn's delicate face had flushed at Mollie's words with their little sting of good-natured ridicule, but it cleared up in an instant when Eleanor spoke. If there was one special thing that she loved it was music, and all the girls knew no one in the club could play like Evelyn when she could be coaxed to do so.

"I would like to do that," she said, contentedly, and Mollie smiled broadly, and announced that she would accompany her on the banjo, which was the only thing she could play, and that was Dave's."

"Laying all teasing and fun aside," Virginia began, "we can do that, girls, and we must get to work at it right away. It is the last of February, and we want to talk to Mr. Stanley, and hear what the boys think of it, and whether they will help. And I will speak to papa to-night after dinner. Listen."

The front door shut downstairs, and some one passed through the lower hall, whistling softly.

"It's Tony, home from the bank," Madge said, and she called, "Tony, come on up here a minute!"

Tony obeyed, but when he saw all the girls, his face flushed the same way that Madge's did sometimes, and he stood in the doorway with a comical look in his brown eyes, and his dimples deepening into a smile.

"We want you to tell the boys that we've settled everything, and they are to all go to our house to-morrow, and hear about it," Mollie said hastily. "Tell Dave and Art. I said so."

"And Madge and Nell and Mollie can tell them all about it," Virginia added.

Tony delivered the message faithfully, when he met the boys going skating later.

"That's always the way with girls," Jerry said, reflectively. "They ask you to join in something, and then they go off and fix it all up among themselves, and when it is all cooked, they come and tell you to eat it, and you haven't had a single finger in the pie. If it's an orphan asylum—"

"We'll say bless you, my children, and run," finished Bobbie.

Only A Beetle

BY SYBIL DAWSON

"JACK! What are you doing?" cried Aunt Dorothy, one morning as she looked out of the dining-room and saw her little nephew stamping hard on the sidewalk.

"Oh, nothing, Aunt! I was just squashing a horrid old beetle."

"Come here, Jack, and sit on this bench with me; tell me, if you were to make a very pretty kite, would you like me to take a pair of scissors and destroy it?" asked Aunt Dorothy.

"Why, no! What a funny question!" And Jack laughed aloud.

"But, Jack, do you suppose that God likes to see a little boy willfully destroying a little beetle that He took pains to make?"

Jack looked slightly confused. "It was only a beetle, Aunt. Of course, I wouldn't hurt a cat or a dog or any nice animal."

"But Jack, dear, don't you know that God has a use for all His creatures, even beetles?"

"Why, what use are beetles, Aunt?"

"Well, Jack, beetles are nature's scavengers. You know what a scavenger is, don't you?"

Jack nodded, but said: "I don't see how a beetle could empty an ash-barrel!"

"They don't empty barrels, Jack; but wherever they find a dead animal, a little birdie, or a field-mouse, they begin digging with their flat heads, using them as shovels, all round the little bird. Then they throw the earth up around him, and when he is in a sufficiently deep grave, the beetles climb out, and shove the earth back on top of him, and that is the way beetles are useful; for you know well enough, Jack, that a dead animal is neither pleasant to see, or wholesome to smell."

"Aunt, I'm awfully sorry I killed that beetle, and I'm going to watch and see if I can't see them at work."

"That's right, dear! You see that God has work for every one to do—even a beetle, a horrid old beetle!"

SCHOOL TEACHER

Pulled Down Hill.

"I relied on coffee so much to keep me up, having been told that it was a 'mild stimulant', that I hardly knew what to do when I found it was really pulling me down hill. My sleep was badly broken at night, and I was all unstrung. Am a school teacher, and was exceedingly nervous.

"When it became evident that I was in a very bad condition, I was induced to leave off coffee, and try Postum Food Coffee. Mother made it first, but none of us could endure it, it was so flat and tasteless. She proposed to throw the package away, but I said: 'Suspend judgment until we have made it strictly according to directions.' It seems she had made the Postum like she always made coffee, taking it off the stove as soon as it began to boil. Mother was so prejudiced against it that she did not care to try it again, but I got sister to make the Postum next morning strictly according to directions; that is, allow it to boil full fifteen minutes after the boiling begins.

"We were all amazed at the difference. Sister said it was better coffee, to her taste, than the old; and father, who is an elderly gentleman, and had used coffee all his life, appeared to relish the Postum as well as my little brother, who took to it from the first.

"For a while mother clung to her old favorite, although she was sick more or less of the time. Finally, one morning, she drank a cup of Postum by mistake, believing it to be coffee. We joked her so much about it, because she did not discover the difference, that she finally admitted she had occasionally taken a sip of the Postum Coffee, and from that time she proposed to use it altogether. Her health has been very greatly improved, and we are all strong advocates of Postum. Please omit my name from publication." —, Flagler, Colo. Finance and Commerce

BANK clearings for the country at large still show gains over last year. In fact comparisons with New York show the general productive and distributive business of the country, has gained more in the past year than the business at speculative centres. There are very few complaints. Retailers grumble somewhat about the effects of unseasonable mildness upon the demand for certain classes of goods, but as a rule, business in every line continues satisfactory. In woolen and cotton trades demand is active, and prices firm, and tending up. In iron the demand still presses upon available supplies, and manufactures are contracting well into the next year. The French and Russian governments are in the market for large orders for railway equipment, and it seems more than likely that a fair proportion will be placed in this country. Transportation reports show that although the eastward movement of agricultural products is not large, yet the railway earnings as a whole are up to the capacity of the roads. The holiday trade promises to be the largest on record. In wheat and corn the downward tendency in price continues. In wheat European markets are fully as weak as our own, and no improvement in demand is therefore in sight. In corn an abundance of fall pasturage every where, has not only lessened the actual immediate demand, but has also created a sentimental feeling in favor of lower prices. The money situation continues to be the factor of principal interest, and the one toward which the public attention is directed. The offer of the Secretary of the Treasury to buy twenty-five millions of gold bonds was accepted, to the extent of eighteen millions. The funds thus realized have placed the New York banks in a technically better financial position, but money still remains at about 6 per cent. in Wall street, and it is not clear just what is going to make it easier. The Treasury has extended its offer to buy the balance of seven millions of bonds to Dec. 23d, but stiff rates for money prevailing throughout the country, very much easier rates in New York are hardly probable. The Bank of England increased its discount rate to 6 per cent. the past week, and strict rates for money in London are reactively advanced. In Berlin also the rate is 6 per cent., and in Paris from 3½ per cent. upwards. While the financial situation does not appear alarming, yet it is critical to some degree at least. Just what this ultimate effect of the necessarily large falling off in the South African contribution to the world's gold supply may be, it would be difficult to fortell, but if long continued it would seem that eventually it must prove to be important. The currency bill prepared for and adopted by the Caucus Committee of Republican Congressman, has been made public. It provides primarily for the gold standard, "That the standard unit of value should be as now, the dollar, and shall consist of 25.8 grains of gold, ninety-ninth pure," etc. It provides also for maintaining the "parity" between the government issues of silver and gold; for issue by the National Banks of notes up to the par value of bonds deposited. It abolishes the present tax on circulation, and in place of it substitutes a tax of 1-10 of 1 per cent. on its capital surplus and undivided profits. It also provides against the "endless chain" for withdrawing gold from the Treasury, by directing that notes so redeemed in gold shall only be re-issued for gold. It also provides for the chartering of National Banks in towns of less than 2,000 population. So far it is most criticised because it does not provide some better plan for expanding the currency to meet just such expansion in general business, as at the moment exists.

Suggestions for Christmas

FOR the man or woman who travels much a useful Christmas gift is a football pillow, snugly tucked away in a little linen traveling case. To make the pillow, cut a piece of mull in the shape and size of an ordinary dinner plate, fill it with down and sew together. Cover it neatly with India silk. For the case take an oblong piece of fine linen, hemstitch it all the way round, making the hem about an eighth of an inch wide. Now shirr the ends of this oblong piece, and insert at each end buttons made of cardboard and covered with linen. Neatly whip the buttons on to the linen. The buttons will hold the case out in its proper shape at the ends. The case may fasten together with tiny buttons and buttonholes, or tie with ribbons. If there is time to put any extra work on this convenient little case, embroider "My Traveling Companion," in brown silk.

A GREAT convenience which every traveler will appreciate is a case for the tooth-brush and nail-brush.

This article is very simple to make, though it is hardly necessary to say that the sewing must be done with extreme care and neatness. Its materials are a strip of gray or "art" linen, sixteen and a half inches long and three and three quarters of an inch wide, one end of which is rounded in a curve an inch and a half at the deepest part, and a piece of white rubber cloth fifteen inches long and three inches and a quarter wide, with sufficient tape or silk braid to bind the linen.

Bind the straight end of the linen strip first, then fold it toward the pointed end, making a case seven and three-quarter inches deep, baste the sides together, and, commencing at the top of one side, stitch the braid around the entire case. Put a button-hole in the pointed end and sew a button on the case beneath.

Fold the rubber cloth, together, the rubber part outside. Stitch down both sides, making a very narrow seam, then turn so that the rubber portion is inside, and make a row of stitching an inch and a quarter from one edge from top to bottom. Slip this inside the linen case. Initials may be embroidered on the flap, or the full name wrought in outline stitch along the length of one half the case, commencing at least three inches from the pointed end. It may also be decorated with a row of feather-stitching wrought before it is turned up and bound. Very utilitarian ones are made of the red and blue plaid glass-towelling, bound with red or blue braid, to match the cases for wash-cloths in the shape of an envelope made of the same materials.

SAPOLIO

The Living Church

A Weekly Record of the News, the Work, and the Thought of the Church

The Churchman

The Faith once delivered to the Saints.

In this space on November 4 and 28 we have given a partial list of the contents of THE CHURCHMAN for 1900, which warrant its title of "a weekly magazine." In addition it gives annually 1,000 columns of Church News, more than 300 columns for young people, reviews 1,000 books, notes nearly 1,000 clerical changes, in short, it is up to-date in its treatment of all Church subjects. Giving each year more than twice as much reading matter as the largest of the giant monthlies, it covers the double purpose of the magazine and the weekly newspaper. Such a combination in its completeness is absolutely without precedent in Church journalism either in England or America, and the publishers feel that every Churchman will be interested.

Bishop Potter will write during his extended travels in the Philippines, India, and China on the Mission situation there; the Rev. Edward Abbott, D.D., will write a series of papers on Missions, based upon his observations during a recent tour in the far East.

In Literature and Fiction Thomas Nelson Page will contribute "An Old-Fashioned Sunday in Virginia;" Alice Brown has written an attractive illustrated Christmas story, "The Tree in the Woods;" "Mrs. Gillespie's Revelation" will appear from the pen of Marion Harland, and Octave Thanet has contributed a sketch, "The Revolt of the Elderly." "The Burden of Christopher," by Florence Converse, our present serial just begun, treats frankly, yet judiciously, the striving of organized labor toward fraternal co operation. At its conclusion "Fortune's Boats," by Barbara Yechton, author of "We Ten; or, The Story of the Roses," "A Lovable Crank; or, More Leaves from the Roses," "A Young Savage," etc., will be published serially.

In short we feel that such provision has been made for interesting reading and beautiful illustrations during the coming twelvemonth as will make it unquestionably the "best of all the years."

That all may become acquainted with it the publishers offer to any reader of this who may not now be a subscriber a trial subscription of six months for $1.00, the subscription for a full year being $3.50—$3.00 to the clergy. Subscriptions under this offer made before the close of the year will receive the Art Supplement, issued to our regular subscribers for 1899, of the etching of Rheims Cathedral, printed by hand, on Japan paper, size of plate, 21 x 15 1-4 inches, ready for framing, and also the Christmas Number free.

The Christmas Number will be exquisitely illustrated, besides containing much Christmas reading. Single copies, 10 cents.

Notes of the World's Progress

OF THE NAVAL OFFICERS WHO have rendered distinguished services during the past two years, or performed some especially gallant feat which entitles them to particular consideration, Admiral Dewey is one of the few who have received complete acknowledgment. Many promotions have been made, but others have been delayed, because of a belief in the minds of many that favoritism entered largely into recommendations for reward. This is particularly true in the case of Admirals Schley and Sampson. Whatever the merits, the undisputed fact remains that Admiral Schley was in direct command during the engagement with Admiral Cervera, and entitled to whatever honors can be bestowed upon him by a grateful and appreciative government. The case will receive the close attention of Congress, and as the public has already rendered its verdict, and nothing has occurred to disturb the decision, a just and impartial bestowal of reward may be expected.

—x—

THE PUBLIC LOVES ITS HEROES until the latter by some action reveal the fact that they are of human clay, and not invested with attributes other than are possessed by many who await the favorable opportunity to become exalted. The public is fickle, ready to laud bravery and courage, but equally quick to forget deeds of valor in the face of subsequent actions that cause unfavorable comment. The career of Lieutenant Hobson affords an apt illustration of forgetfulness and injustice. His performance of one of the most gallant acts in naval annals immediately placed him upon the high pedestal of popular favor. His appearances in public created bursts of enthusiasm. But a foolish action which in other than his position would have passed unnoticed and without comment, brings about his head a storm of newspaper criticism, the pedestal is shattered, and the popular idol falls into undeserved obscurity. It is to be hoped that in sifting the matter of rewards, Congress will remember the strength, not the weakness, of Lieutenant Hobson.

PROBABLY THE LONGEST MESSAGE of similar character on record, was that delivered by President McKinley on the assembling of Congress. Unlike some of his predecessors, the President utilized the annual reports of government officials, instead of simply referring to them. The message was a comprehensive statement of opinions and policies of the administration on vexed questions, and presents recommendations as regards a treatment of the colonial problem, which will receive congressional consideration. Territorial form of government is recommended for Puerto Rico and the belief expressed that Cuban relations should not be severed until conditions assure a strong, stable self-government. The right and duty of the United States to uphold and maintain sovereignty in the Philippines is expressed. Altogether, it is a strong and able document.

THE LEGISLATURE OF GEORGIA has by an almost unanimous vote rejected the Hardwick bill, a piece of legislation designed to eliminate the negro vote from politics. The action of the legislature was somewhat unexpected, particularly its unanimity, and shows a laudable desire on the part of the State to give its negro citizens all opportunity possible to vindicate their right to suffrage. The provisions of the Hardwick bill were similar to those which have practically disenfranchised the negroes of Mississippi, Louisiana, and South Carolina, and also like the bill now pending in North Carolina. By its operations no person would be considered competent to vote who could not read, understand, and interpret any clause in the constitution of the State; but such requirement would not apply to one whose ancestors voted prior to 1867. As the "interpretation" of a constitutional clause is a point upon which courts frequently differ, even a fairly educated negro would stand little show.

CONGRESS HAS GRAPPLED WITH the Roberts case, and from present indications the gentleman will journey back to Utah to receive consolation from his several families. By a vote of a majority exceeding 10 to 1, he was not permitted to take the oath of office, his case being referred to a special committee. One interesting feature was the presentation of a protest against the polygamist bearing seven million signatures, gathered by a New York newspaper. Some complications may arise before the affair is finally settled, but they are possibilities rather than probabilities. It is not seriously disputed that Congress can unseat whomsoever it pleases, provided the grounds are considered good, but as there is a vacancy in Utah senatorial representation, owing to a deadlock, the governor of that State could appoint Roberts. As Senator Quay, of Pennsylvania, owes his position to gubernatorial appointment, and will likely be regularly seated, the question is what would the Senate do with Roberts?

WHILE THE WORLD MOVES ON AT its busy pace, New Zealand is quietly engaged in working out a solution of social problems which sooner or later must be faced by nations now too busy to do more than prosper commercially. The government of this island is applying measures which convert tramps into taxpayers, provide the unemployed with employment, and conducts itself generally as an indulgent parent, anxious to inculcate habits of thrift and economy in those who are dependent. Chief among the measures thus applied is the Compulsory Arbitration Court which makes stubborn and bitter contests between capital and labor, which verge on civil war, an impossibility. This bill was conceived at a time when its need was most apparent, and its operations have been a source of great satisfaction. A judge of the Supreme Court is its head, thus assuring impartiality, and its decisions are final. Strikes and lockouts are considered things of the past in New Zealand.

—x—

SHOULD A BILL INTRODUCED LAST week by Congressman Chandler, of New Hampshire, finally become a law, which, however, is hardly probable, baseball, football, and other athletic pastimes will be given an official standing, and become recognized governmental institutions. The Bill as introduced provides for changes in the curriculum of West Point and Annapolis, whereby studies in higher mathematics and languages will be dispensed with in favor of athletics. One section of the Bill provides for contests between the military and naval training schools in the larger cities of the country, and under another clause, railroads would be required to run free special trains for the accommodation of the contestants and their retinues. The sponsor of the Bill holds that the successful men are not those most eminent in their studies, but rather in athletics.

THE BUBONIC PLAGUE HAS AGAIN begun its ravages, and has made its appearance in the Western hemisphere. For the first time in history the United States has been visited, but owing to quarantine precautions there is little apprehension of its spread. Reports come from India that conditions seem to presage a repetition of the scenes and suffering of the past few years, although the British government has not neglected precautions. Lack of proper facilities for sanitation appears to be the chief source of contagion. In native Indian cities, whole districts will be destroyed in order that breeding places of the scourge may be wiped out. Several South American cities have developed cases of bubonic plague, and it was from Santos, Brazil, that ships brought the germs to this country. Efficient quarantine stations will prevent danger at large ports. It is the small ones that must be guarded.

—x—

IT IS A GOOD THING FOR NATIONS that newspapers of the violent type cannot declare war. While it is possible for journals of this class to stir up considerable feeling and unpleasantness, yet the steady and well-balanced element of society values frothy journalistic utterances at what they are worth—very little. The journals of France, with few exceptions, are notoriously corrupt; what influence they possess can be bought for a price, and if a selected victim fails to purchase their silence, he is mercilessly assailed. Papers of this irresponsible class are responsible to a certain extent for the anti-British feeling existing in France. Recently they published cartoons bearing on the Boer war, in which the Queen of England is shamelessly insulted. These provoked a sharp rebuke from Mr. Chamberlain, and the better journals of Paris call him to time for holding the nation responsible.

The News of the Church

American Church Building Fund

At a meeting of the trustees on Nov. 28th, the Rt. Rev. George Worthington, D.D., Bishop of Nebraska, was elected to fill the vacancy occasioned by Bishop Scarborough, resigned; the Rev. Andrew F. Underhill, of Yonkers, was elected to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of the Rev. Dr. Cooper; and Mr. S. Nicholson Kane, of New York, was elected to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt.

The following gifts to complete new churches were granted: St. Martin's church, Jupiter, So. Fla., $150; All Saints', Ronda, N. C., $100; Bristol mission, S. D., $150; St. John's, Ames, Ia., $200; St. Stephen's, Escanaba, Mich., $200; St. Mary's, Lampasas, Tex., $200. Loans were reported as having been made to St. Thomas' church, Holton, Kas., $300; Grace church, Brookfield, W. Mo., $1,000; St. Luke's mission, Horton, Kas., $400.

The counsel of the Commission was directed to take the necessary steps to procure from the courts an enlargement of the powers of the Commission, so that they can entertain applications for loans upon rectories and parish buildings.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Board of Missions

Missionary Exhibit in New York

During the week beginning Dec. 4th, there was a series of services at the church of the Heavenly Rest. Addresses on missions were delivered, a Quiet Day held, and a missionary exhibition representing all the varied fields of missionary activity at home and abroad, including parish missions, work among the Mormons, and in the new possessions. A large number of the articles shown were loaned by Churchwomen of the Auxiliary.

Annual Session at Springfield, Ill.

The two sessions of the Woman's Auxiliary in connection with the synod, were largely attended, and much enthusiasm was apparent. Mrs. O. S. V. Ward, representative of the Chicago branch of the W. A., delivered addresses at the missionary meeting on Tuesday night, and also before the diocesan branch of the auxiliary, which were heard with great interest. The following officers were elected: Mrs. Geo. F. Seymour, president; Mrs. Isabella Laning Candee, of Cairo, honorary secretary; Mrs. Alex. Allen, of Springfield, secretary; Mrs. F. D. Miller, of Elkhart, secretary of Junior Auxiliary; Mrs. M. F. Gilbert, of Cairo, secretary of the Babies' Branch. The following were elected vice-presidents: Mrs. D. W. Dresser, of Champaign; Mrs. H. M. Chittenden, of Alton; Mrs. E. J. Tomlin, of Jacksonville; Mrs. L. B. Richards, of Belleville, and Mrs. Wemyss Smith, of Bloomington.

Washington Branch

The December meeting held in St. John's hall on the 5th, was of special interest, and there was a full attendance of delegates from the parish societies. Mrs. Wetmore, wife of the Rev. J. C. Wetmore, of Asheville, N. C., gave an interesting account of work in that missionary district, dwelling particularly on the good results accomplished through the schools established by the Church. One of them at Valle Crucis, in a region isolated during the winter, when it is also without a public school, is doing an excellent work, and Mrs. Wetmore made an earnest appeal for aid in its support. In response, an impromptu collection was taken up, and something added from the central fund. Another touching appeal came from a Churchwoman in Oklahoma, formerly a member of the Auxiliary in Washington. She told of her loss of Church privileges in her new home, where there is not even a room to be had for services, of an occasional Celebration in her own house, and of her earnest desire for the building of a little church. One parish branch has already made an appropriation for this purpose, and it was decided that all would endeavor to bring an offering for it at the next monthly meeting.

The Chicago Branch

The regular monthly meeting of the diocesan officers and members was held in Church Club rooms, Dec. 7th; 17 branches were represented by 84 members. Noonday prayers were said by the Rev. John H. Hopkins. The president, Mrs. Lyman, requested all branches late in sending in United Offering funds, to attend to it this month. The offering for the day would be devoted to Sendai, Japan, for which a pledge of $100 has been made. The president announced the resignation of Miss Alice B. Stahl, vice-president from Galena, from the diocesan committee. A resolution of thanks for long and faithful service was offered by Mrs. Street, and adopted by a rising vote of the members. The president announced the appointment of a vice-president to fill the vacancy: Mrs. Duncombe, of St. Andrew's church, who will take charge of Junior Auxiliary work, and will be assisted by Miss Grace Fuller, of Glencoe branch. The subject for this meeting was foreign missions, and Mrs. Hopkins was invited to the chair. She made a short address on China. Mrs. Street spoke on St. John's College, Shanghai; Mrs. Lyman, on Bishop Schereschewsky who has done so much for the progress of Christianity in China by his translation of the Bible into the Chinese language. Mrs. Fullerton gave an interesting description of St. Mary's Orphanage, which, from the nature of its work, appeals to women always. Mrs. Hopkins spoke on the mission work in Hankow and Wuchang, and was followed by Miss Gregg who paid a tribute to the work of the Rev. Sidney C. Partridge in the Boone School. Miss Hutchinson spoke on the difficulties and obstacles to mission work in China, all of which are slowly passing away, for these heathen people are asking for education, and the door is open for missions. The president then resumed the chair, thanking Mrs. Hopkins and the ladies who assisted, for the information given on China. The president introduced Miss Enders, of Grace branch, who spoke to the members about the ladies' auxiliary board for St. Luke's Hospital, and the needs of the linen room. The advisability of changing the monthly meeting from the noonday hour, will be discussed and acted upon at the January meeting; all branches are urged to come prepared to give an opinion.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

Chicago Local Council

The following officers for 1900 were elected at the recent meeting in the Church Club rooms, Dec. 9th: Chairman, Heusted T. Young, of St. Peter's; vice-chairman, Courtenay Barber, of the church of the Redeemer; secretary, George W. Waterman, of St. Paul's; treasurer, Hamilton Hall, of St. James. Mr. Barber was placed in charge of the boys' department.

In St. Paul, Minnesota

There was a corporate Communion at 8 A. M., on St. Andrew's Day, at Christ church, the Rev. C. D. Andrews, celebrant. A second Celebration followed at 11 A. M., when the rector spoke upon St. Andrew, his life and work. Saturday afternoon, Dec. 2nd, the Brotherhood reassembled at St. John's church. The Rev. Harvey Officer conducted a Quiet Hour, after which a business meeting was held. At 6:30 P. M. the ladies of the parish served supper in the guild room; 8 P. M. services were held in the church. Wm.

Borland and Arthur Lambert recounted their impressions of the convention at Columbus. Geo. R. Folds, of Minneapolis, delivered an interesting address upon "Our Boys"; F. O. Osborn, of St. Paul, spoke upon "Laymen's opportunities." Bishop Gilbert delivered his annual charge; the work this past year was not up to the average. He urged the members to rouse themselves and take up the work this coming year with renewed vigor and courage. Election of officers: Vice-presidents, Bishop Gilbert, F. M. Beardsley, Mr. Williams; secretary and treasurer, Wm. Langton.

St. John's, Clinton, Iowa

The chapter, organized but recently, is doing effective work. Dec. 6th, under its auspices, a special service of music was given, with an address by the Rev. Wm. White Wilson, of St. Mark's, Chicago, who came to Clinton, for the purpose. Notwithstanding counter attractions the same evening, about 325 persons listened to Dr. Wilson's eloquent address on "The light for every man."

Rochester Local Assembly

St. Andrew's Day and Thanksgiving Day both falling this year upon the same day, were fittingly observed. At 7:30 A. M., the members, 45 in number, took part in a corporate celebration of the Holy Communion at St. Luke's church. Preceding the service, a short address, in the form of a preparatory meditation, was made by the Rev. Hugh L. Burleson. At 8 P. M., at Christ church, a public service was held, which about 1,000 people attended. The service was beautiful and impressive, the procession including the large vested choir of Christ church, the members of the local assembly, and the Bishop of the diocese, with eight of the local clergy, singing the national hymn. The anniversary sermon was preached by the Rev. Warren C. Hubbard. This was Mr. Hubbard's farewell sermon in Rochester, as he went on the following day to take up his residence in Brooklyn. Among other things, he said: "In the eagerness of your enthusiasm you may forget that you are only a messenger; that you are not to be the judge of the fitness of the occasion. Your own thought must be centred in Christ. Do not look too much for results. It is your duty to carry the message; to show its importance, by the pleading of your tongue; to persevere in the most hopeless surroundings; to do your duty. Let God do the rest."

Daughters of the King

In the Diocese of Missouri

The fall meeting was held at the church of the Ascension, in Cabanne. Mrs. George Brigham, Jr., president of the association, was chairman. One of the most interesting features of the afternoon was Mrs. Brigham's account of the national convention, her descriptions of the enthusiasm shown there being made a basis for encouraged effort on the part of the Missouri chapters. Among the examples which she cited was that of an old lady, over 75 years of age, from Washington, D. C., who in one year brought 600 children for Confirmation. Mrs. E. P. Nichols was secretary of the meeting, and reports were heard from all the chapters in St. Louis, and also those in Mexico and Jefferson City. Dean Davis, of the cathedral, gave a talk on the scope of the work of the Daughters of the King, and laid special stress on the spiritual duties of the members, particularly the visiting of the sick and distressed, and the bringing of people into the Church. The Rev. Dr. James R. Winchester made a brief talk, and a few remarks were also made by the Rev. Dr. G. D. B. Miller. Officers for the coming year were re-elected as follows: President, Mrs. George Brigham, Jr.; vice-president, Mrs. J. Funston; secretary, Mrs. E. P. Nichols; treasurer, Mrs. W. P. Nelson.

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

Bishop Morrison visited his old parish of Epiphany last week, preached on Sunday, and spent part of Monday with the Clericus.

On Sunday morning Dean Stubbs, of Ely cathedral, preached to a large congregation in Grace church on "The social aspects of the Lord's Prayer." The evening preacher was Archdeacon W. M. Walton, of Atlanta, Ga. At the same time the Rev. E. M. Stires held the opening service of the new Swedish mission in Englewood, attended by 250 persons.

The annual parish sales were very successful at St. Peter's, Epiphany, St. Luke's mission, and St. Paul's, Wilmette. At the first named $800 were netted.

The funeral service over the remains of the Rev. H. C. Granger's mother who died somewhat suddenly on the 8th, aged 79, was said on Sunday afternoon by the Rev. Frank du Moulin.

At the bi-monthly conference in the cathedral Clergy House on Monday last, nearly 20 were present. The subject, "Difficulties in the Scriptures," was again taken up; Prof. Hall speaking of "The Fall."

Trinity Parish

On Dec. 5th, a movement which has been going on for some time amongst the young people of the parish, took final and formal shape in the organization of a young people's society. A constitution was adopted and officers were elected, amidst great enthusiasm. The new society, which starts off with a membership of 130, and, as the rector explains, owes its inception wholly to the laity, is purely social in character and aims. The South Side directors of the Associated Charities hold their monthly meeting in Trinity House, and now the Anti-cruelty Society, of which Mrs. Theodore Thomas is president, is to hold its semi-annual meeting, Dec. 14th, in the same place; the parish being thus brought into close connection with these public works.

Memorial Window for Christ Church, Joliet

On exhibition at the establishment of Flanagan & Biecenweg, 55 Illinois st. It represents the Resurrection, the left panel contains the figure of the angel, and the right, the forms of the three Marys, the whole in rich coloring. At the top are the words, "He is risen," and below, "To the greater glory of God," and beneath that, "Minnie White Allen, 1876-1893." This fine work of art, costing $500, will be placed in Christ church, Joliet, next week, by Mr. Robert L. Allen, in memory of his daughter.

Address of Congratulation to the Bishop

On the morning of Dec. 8th, the Bishop received the following address from the clergy of his diocese. The committee to draft the address was appointed at the annual meeting of the North-Eastern Deanery on the 5th inst, at which nearly one-half of the clergy of the diocese was present; but immediately afterwards the remaining clergy in the Northern and Southern Deaneries, through their respective deans, Drs. Fleetwood and Phillips, were associated with the originators; thus making the address represent the undivided clerical sentiment of Chicago diocese:

To the Rt. Rev. William Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop of Chicago:

OUR DEAR BISHOP:—We, your clergy, cannot allow the day on which you enter the twenty-fifth year of your episcopate to pass without thanksgiving to Almighty God for the strength from on high which has guided and kept you these many years, and an expression of our affectionate loyalty to yourself.

You have been to us more than is commonly understood by the title, "Father in God." With wisdom and patience, with untiring energy and unflinching devotion, you have led and encouraged your brethren and sons in the sacred ministry; and realizing to-day more than ever the strength and beauty of your character, and the success of your efforts, we send to you this message of love.

We further desire to assure you of our sympathy in your long and severe illness. You are ever in our hearts and prayers. We trust that soon you will be restored to health, and again be enabled to take up your great work for the Church of God in this city and diocese.

Signed on behalf of the diocese, this eighth day of December, A. D. 1899.

J. S. STONE.
E. M. STIRES.
THOS. D. PHILLIPS. } Committee.

The Bishop who returned to the city on Saturday, has replied to this address, expressing his "gratification and thankfulness for the same."

The North-Eastern Deanery

In accordance with long-standing usage, Grace church received the deanery in its annual assembly on Tuesday, the 5th. At the 11 A. M. service, the rector, the Rev. E. M. Stires, was assisted in the Celebration by the dean, Dr. Clinton Locke. At the business meeting following immediately, the chairman introduced the Very Rev. Charles W. Stubbs, dean of Ely, who subsequently addressed the deanery. The secretary reported an average attendance of 43 at the four quarterly meetings of the year. In the absence of the treasurer, his report was passed. The Rev. D. W. Howard and W. B. Hamilton were unanimously re-elected secretary and treasurer, respectively. The invitation of the Rev. Frank du Moulin for the deanery to meet in St. Peter's, was accepted for the Monday preceding Lent. The chair named Dr. Rushton, the Rev. Percival McIntire, and Dean Luther Pardee, of the cathedral, a committee to arrange for the mid-day Lent services. Drs. Clinton Locke and Little, with the Rev. C. P. Anderson, were appointed a committee on subjects, papers, and speakers at the ensuing quarterly meetings; and the Rev. T. D. Phillips, Rev. E. M. Stires, and Dr. Stone, a committee to draft and present an address to the Bishop on the 8th. Dr. Rushton, for Dean Pardee, advocated a mission service, with selected addresses, on the Sunday evenings, beginning with the New Year, to attract non-church goers. The president of the board of directors of the Church Home for Aged Persons, reported the condition of the home to be satisfactory; the generous offerings on the Tuesday preceding Thanksgiving included nearly $100 in cash. The members of the deanery subscribed nearly $120 for the purchase of an organ as a Christmas present to Holy Trinity mission, self denyingly ministered to by the Rev. H. C. Kinney. The Rev. Alf. Lealtat reported his people of St. Thomas' to be trying to cover the expenses of this, our one mission to our colored brethren, without recourse to entertainments, and that it was hoped to build a guild room adjoining the church in the spring. The Rev. P. C. Wolcott made a gratifying report of the mission at Lake Forest, in which a quiet work had been going on for two years; during the last six months, under the Rev. Frank Brandt. This suburb, the seat of a Presbyterian university, had been ministered to by the head of that institution for 20 years, but the recent influx of summer residents who were Churchmen necessitated the opening of Church services, at present held in the Town Hall. Several thousand dollars have been subscribed, and lots obtained, on which in the early future will be erected a stone edifice, with parish house and rectory adjoining. The Rev. E. M. Stires brought up the subject of the new Swedish mission in Englewood, where $400 had been raised for the purchase of a lot; for the support of the services at present conducted by a Swedish student at the seminary, he had guaranteed $20 a month. It was the voice of the meeting that a Quiet Day should be arranged for prior to the election of a coadjutor on Jan. 9th. From 1 P. M. to 2 an adjournment to Grace hall was had for an enjoyable lunch furnished by the ladies of the parish. The deanery heard an admirable paper by Dr. Francis Hall, on "Current tendencies of thought in religion." Short addresses, all complimentary of the professor's lucid paper, were made by the Rev. Messrs. D. W. Howard, E. A. Larrabee, Dr. Stubbs, H. L. Cawthorne, L. Pardee, Dr. W. W. Wilson, J. H. Hopkins, and Dr. Fawcett. The meeting closed at 4 P. M.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

At the pro-cathedral, the Rev. Prof. Chas. A. Briggs, D. D., is delivering a series of Advent lectures on "What the Hebrew prophets said concerning the Messiah."

A service was held at St. Ann's church, Sunday, Dec. 10th, in celebration of the birthday of the rector emeritus, the Rev. Thomas Gallaudet, D. D., the founder of Deaf-Mute Church work in this country.

The new general secretary of the Board of Missions, the Rev. A. S. Lloyd, has issued an address asking for co-operation in his work. He entered upon his duties at the Church Missions House on Dec. 5th.

The Clericus

At the December meeting, the Bishop's secretary, the Rev. Geo. F. Nelson, D. D., gave an address detailing his experiences in his recent visit to Alaska and our missions there.

New Site for Italian Church

The Italian church of San Salvatore has procured a new site for the erection of a church building, on Broome st., near Mott st., very centrally located for the Italian population of the city.

The Church Club

At the last meeting, the Rev. W. Dudley Powers, D. D., Major Gen. Francis V. Greene, and Mr. John Howe Peyton, of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, discussed "The new fields for the Church."

New York Churchmen's Association

At the last meeting, addresses were made by the Rev. Drs. Arthur C. Kimber and Geo. F. Nelson, and the Rev. Messrs. Hutchins C. Bishop, Geo. S. Pratt, and Thomas H. Sill, on the needs and reform possibilities of "the perishing classes."

Association for Church Schools, etc.

The annual service of the Association for Promoting the Interests of Church Schools, Colleges and Seminaries, was held Dec 10th, the Rev. David H. Greer, D. D., preaching the annual sermon. The business session followed, Dec. 11th, in the parish house of All Saints' parish.

Church Temperance Society Work

During the past year over 250,000 meals were served at the restaurant wagons, scattered in different crowded localities about the city. An average of ten cents was paid for each meal. A new van, to be an improvement on the six already in use, is under construction. The profits support the coachmen's night van, now being put into winter use, and the summer ice water fountains of the city.

American Church Missionary Society

At the 40th annual meeting, just held in the Church Missions House, Gen. Wagner Swayne presided. Addresses were made by Bishop Peterkin, of West Virginia, and the Rev. H. P. Nichols. The annual report of the Executive Committee was presented by the general secretary, the Rev. Dr. Powers. The annual election took place, Bishop Gravatt being chosen as vice-president, and vacancies being filled by the election of the Rev. J. Thompson Cole, Messrs. Wm. G. Law, Wm. Waterall, and Geo. W. McCutcheon.

A Roman Priest Received into the Church

The "version" of the deposed priest, Dr. B. F. De Costa, to the Roman Communion, is offset this week by the announcement, in the same Roman diocese, of the coming into the communion of the Church, of a Romanist priest in good standing, the Rev. Theodore McDonald Stuart, D. D., LL.D., a member of the Jesuits. He was formally received at Grace church by the rector, the Rev. Dr. Wm. R. Huntington. Dr. Stuart was born in San Francisco, Cal., in 1867, his father being a general of the Russian army, and a member of the commission which came to the United States to arrange for the annexation of Alaska. He was educated in Europe, and is a graduate of the universities of Munich and Dorpat, receiving from the latter the degrees of Doctor of Divinity and Doctor of Laws. On the death of his father, he returned to America, and entered the Jesuit Society. He proposes study under the auspices of the Church.

Columbia University

The board of trustees have received from an anonymous source a gift of $19,000 for the guarantee fund of the college expenses of the present year, $1,000 for the general fund, and $1,200 for the equipment of the department of geology. The Duc de Loubat who last year gave real estate, valued at $1,200,000, has this year presented a portrait of himself by Madrazo. President Seth Low, LL. D., has turned over to the treasurer bonds of the corporation amounting to $600,000, the last installment of his immense gift for the construction of the library.

Pennsylvania

Ozi William Whitaker, D. D., LL. D., Bishop

A short choral service, with an address to children, is given at 4 p. m. every Sunday, in Christ church chapel, Philadelphia.

St. Philip's church, West Philadelphia, was crowded to the doors at an early hour on Tuesday, 5th inst., when the rector, the Rev. W. H. Falkner, officiated at the funeral services over the remains of J. Warner Goheen, a vestryman of that parish, and a member of Common Council of the city of Philadelphia.

Bishop Whitaker who has been appointed by the Presiding Bishop to look after the Church's interests in Cuba, will start for Havana about the first or second week in January. He will be absent one month, and will probably be accompanied by the Rev. Dr. Powers, general secretary of the American Church Missionary Society.

The Standing Committee

Of the diocese, at their meeting on Tuesday, 5th inst., elected the Rev. T. A. Tidball, D. D., to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the Rev. Benjamin Watson, D. D.

Bishop Satterlee honored

A reception was given on Monday evening, 4th inst., by the Penn Club, Philadelphia, to the Rt. Rev. Dr. Satterlee, Bishop of Washington. Among those present were Bishops Whitaker and Coleman, a large number of city rectors and prominent laymen; besides several ministers of the denominations and members of their congregations.

Church of the Messiah, Port Richmond

On the 1st Sunday in Advent, the rector, the Rev. C. L. Fulforth, preached his ninth anniversary sermon, and stated that during his incumbency there had been Baptisms, 303; confirmed, 67; marriages, 43; burials, 167; celebrations of Holy Communion, 502; sermons, 1,084. The contributions had been over $35,000; permanent improvements over $12,000; but there is still a debt of $4,350 on the parish house.

Church of the Advent, Philadelphia

On Sunday, 3rd inst., observed the 59th anniversary of its organization, and the third of the present rectorate. The rector, the Rev. J. P. Tyler, in his sermon at the morning service, stated that a balance of $3,043.67 remaining after all current expenses of the year had been paid, had been added to the endowment fund. In the afternoon, the Rev. R. W. Forsyth addressed the children, and at the evening service, the Rev. Dr. C. S. Olmsted was the preacher.

Church of the Holy Apostles, Philadelphia

A very large congregation assembled on Sunday morning, 31st inst., to welcome the new rector, the Rev. Nathaniel S. Thomas. Those participating in the service were the Rev. Messrs. H. L. Duhring, D. D., R. N. Thomas, and W. S. Neill. The new rector made a powerful address on the Advent, and concluded by urging his parishioners to work together with him under a motto,

"More light." In the evening the annual service of the Holy Apostles chapter 318. Brotherhood of St. Andrew, was held. After Evensong, the Rev. W. S. Neill, spiritual director of the chapter, read a statement reporting progress during the past year and a large membership at present. The sermon was preached by the new rector.

The Free and Open Church Association

The 24th annual service was held at the South memorial church of the Advocate, on the first Sunday night in Advent. The Rev. G. Woolsey Hodge, of the board of council, preached the sermon, and strongly advocated the principles of the Association. After Evensong the annual meeting of the Association was held in the choir room, and in the absence of Mr. J. Vaughan Merrick, president, Mr. W. Platt Pepper took the chair. The secretary presented the annual report, which stated that 59 dioceses average 83 per cent. of free churches. In 14 missionary jurisdictions, the average is 98½ per cent., and aggregating the dioceses and missionary jurisdictions, 84½ per cent. of the churches are free. The report showed that a large number of churches had adopted the every day open church system during the year. The treasurer's report gave as receipts $254 86, and expenditures, $189. For the ensuing year, Mr. J. Vaughan Merrick was re-elected president; Mr. Charles W. Cushman, treasurer, and the Rev. John A. Goodfellow, general secretary. The members of the executive council were also re-elected.

Death of Rev. Daniel M. Bates

On Friday morning, 8th inst., at the Episcopal Hospital, Philadelphia, where he had been for some weeks undergoing treatment for the lungs. He was a son of the late Chancellor Bates, of Delaware, and was born in Wilmington, Del., about 50 years ago. He received the degree of M. A. from Racine College in 1882, and graduated from the Berkeley Divinity School in 1878. In the same year he was ordered deacon by Bishop Lee, and in 1879 was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Schereschewsky, of China. Mr. Bates was a missionary at Shanghai, China, 1878-'81; and was at Saranac Lake, N. Y., 1882-'85. In the last-named year he became rector of St. Stephen's church, Clifton Heights, Pa. In June of the present year, he was incapacitated from work on account of ill health, and in October last resigned his rectorship. He was the author of "The Apostolic Church," "Translations into Wien-Li," "Christ in Modern Thought." He leaves a widow and three children. There were services at the Episcopal Hospital chapel on Monday morning, 11th inst., and the remains were afterwards taken to St. Andrew's church, Wilmington, Del., where the Burial Office was said.

The Annual Meeting of the Church Club

Was held on Monday evening, 4th inst., at the Church House, with president George C. Thomas in the chair. The election of officers resulted as follows: President, George C. Thomas; vice-presidents, Wm. H. Ingham, Francis A. Lewis; treasurer, Moses Veale; recording secretary, Wm. C. Kent; corresponding secretary, Louis B. Runk; a board of six governors, and seven members as a committee on admission. A balance on hand of nearly $450 was reported by the treasurer. The annual report of the board of governors showed the present membership of the Club to be 218. The greater part of the evening was taken up with a discussion of the proposed club house for the boys of Kensington, a very important work which the Club has undertaken. In March last, president Thomas offered to give a certain lot of ground on which to erect a house for the boys, and $13,000 in cash towards the building fund; the Church Club accepted this generous offer, and appointed a finance committee to raise the funds for the project, and a building committee to have plans prepared; the designs have been on display at the club rooms for some time. The erection of the building is delayed for lack of funds; the amount needed is $20,000. The report of the board of governors states that 1,564 boys are now enrolled. Between 80 and 100 boys are daily visitors to the rooms in winter, spring, and fall, really more than the capacity of the present house justifies. "The benefit which this club has been to the boys in that district (Kensington) is incalculable."

North Dakota

Samuel C. Edsall, D. D., Bishop

A five-days' Mission will be conducted by Bishop Edsall, at Grace church, Jamestown, the Rev. Henry J. Sheridan, rector, commencing Dec. 5th, and concluding the following Sunday. Arrangements are made for a similar Mission, to be conducted by the Bishop, at Grace church, Pembina, the Rev. William Watson, priest-in-charge.

The chapel at Forest River has been painted and repaired during the summer, the expenses having been met by the congregation. The rectory at Bathgate, the centre of the Rev. D. H. Clarkson's field, has been rendered comfortable by the addition of a furnace. This also has been done without outside assistance.

Helpful Gifts

Mrs. Mary S. Wilson, of Philadelphia, has recently given a lot to Calvary mission, Buffalo, the Rev. T. H. J. Walton, in charge, as a site for a future parish house. During the summer the tower of this pretty little boulder church has been erected. A generous gift from Chicago has helped in this work. Miss Cora Wilson, of York, has given a lot for a church at that place, where occasional services have been held for some years by the Rev. Charles Turner, of Devil's Lake. The parishioners of St. James' church, Grafton, have at last succeeded in paying off the debt which has rested for some years on their church, being generously helped by a conditional offer made by a friend of Bishop Edsall in Chicago.

Massachusetts

William Lawrence, D. D., Bishop

The Rev. Dr. Parks, of Emmanuel church, Boston, preached on Dec. 31 a special sermon upon the 21st anniversary of his rectorship.

St. Matthew's church, S. Boston, observed its 83d anniversary, Dec. 31, with special services and sermons by the rector, the Rev. A. E. George.

The Clericus

President Eliot, of Harvard University, upon invitation, delivered an address upon the Episcopal Church, before the Monday Clericus, Dec. 4th. After the address, the subject was discussed by the clergy, and the different points of objection were well sustained by those who had the opportunity to speak. Altogether, the address created more humor than conviction.

Church of the Advent, Boston

The 55th anniversary of the first service held in the church of the Advent, was observed on Sunday, Dec. 3d. There were three celebrations of the Holy Eucharist. The rector, the Rev. Dr. Frisby, preached at the last. The choir sang as a prelude, Whitney's Veni Emmanuel, Gounod's Communion service No. 3, an anthem by Whitney, and Rink's postlude in F. The Rev. C. L. Hutchinson, of Caelsea, preached in the evening.

Consecration of St. Paul's, Hopkinton

By Bishop Lawrence, Dec. 7th. The Rev. A. St. John Chambre, D. D., preached the sermon. The vested choir of Holy Trinity, Marlborough, sang in the morning; that of St. Mark's, Southborough, in the evening, when the Rev. J. M. Foster preached. The offerings were for the organ fund. The altar is in memory of Joseph Walker who died in 1853, aged 92 years. He was senior warden of the parish from 1829 to 1849. It is made of old oak, stained dark, with panels of red and gold. The reredos is carved, and surmounted by a large cross.

A Rectory for St. Andrew's, Wellesley

Has just been erected adjoining the church building. It is a frame building covered with unpainted shingles, and contains ten rooms and a bath, with furnace heat and electric lights. All the floors are finished in hard wood. Mr. F. W. Hunnewell contributed largely towards the expense, and its successful completion is due to the efficient oversight of Mr. R. K. Sawyer, the chairman of the building committee.

Archdeaconry of New Bedford

Met in St. Paul's, Dedham, Dec. 6th. At the celebration of the Holy Communion, Archdeacon Babcock officiated. The sermon was delivered by the Rev. W. F. Cheney. In the afternoon, the Rev. A. E. George made an address upon summer missionary work on Cape Cod. The Rev. Messrs. H. Page, George Walker, and F. B. White made addresses upon their respective fields. The Rev. F. B. White treated the subject of missionary work in manufacturing communities, at the evening session. The Rev. G. W. Miner spoke of missionary work in rural communities, and the Rev. Henry Bedinger followed, with an address upon the mission of the Episcopal Church in Massachusetts.

Iowa

Theodore Nevin Morrison, D.D., Bishop

The ladies of Trinity Guild, Muscatine, the Rev. W. Parry Thomas, rector, have just had a new roof placed upon the church, at a cost of $600. This is only one of the many excellent things they have done for the parish.

Trinity Church, Ottumwa

On the morning of the first Sunday in Advent, Bishop Morrison held a special missionary service in this parish. Addresses were made by the Bishop, by the Rev. J. Everist Cathell, by Prof. Geo. E. Marshall, of Keokuk, and by the rector of the parish, the Rev. J. Holister Lynch. The Bishop asked the people to make definite individual pledges for the missionary work of the diocese. In response to his appeal, 101 pledges were made, amounting to $546.70, for the year. This parish always gives liberally, and supports the Bishop in every effort, but this contribution is extraordinarily large for a congregation of poor people, with less than 300 communicants. During the last two weeks of October, the debt upon the rectory of the parish was reduced $2,000 by cash contributions of the people.

Springfield

Geo. F. Seymour, S.T.D., LL.D., Bishop
Chas. R. Hale, D.D., Bishop-coadjutor

The Twenty-Second Annual Synod

Met in St. Paul's pro-cathedral, Springfield, Dec. 5th and 6th. The opening service was a choral celebration of the Holy Eucharist, the Bishop, celebrant. The preacher was the Rev. L. B. Richards. The synod organized for business by electing the Rev. Chas. J. Shutt secretary, and re-electing Mr. J. J. Cossitt treasurer. The principal business of Tuesday was the consideration of the report of the Rev. Johannes Rockstroh, treasurer of the diocesan missions board, which was most encouraging; and in making provision for the work of missions in the diocese for the ensuing year. The pledges for mission work were full up to those of last year, and there is a prospect that more aggressive work will be done at several points, especially in the region of Southern Illinois known as Egypt, where a devoted and able general missionary, the Rev. George W. Preston, has been at work for a part of the past year. At the missionary meeting on Tuesday evening, held in Christ church, he gave a very interesting account of the work in which he is engaged, and of the needs of the field.

Deep sympathy was felt and expressed for the Bishop-coadjutor, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Hale, whose precarious state of health has necessitated a prolonged residence abroad. He is now at St. Moritz, Switzerland. A resolution of sympathy was adopted by a rising vote, and ordered to be transmitted to Bishop Hale, and a cablegram was also sent him in response to one received from him on Tuesday morning. The good Bishop's physical disability does not deter him from taking the most intense interest in his field, the southern portion of the diocese, and earnest intercessions were offered for his speedy recovery and return.

On Wednesday the Bishop of the diocese delivered his annual address which was a strong presentment of the difficulties with which the Church is now bound to contend, in the assaults made upon the Faith and the Holy Scriptures, in the break up of Protestantism on account of the weakness of "The Bible and the Bible only" being its foundation; and he then eloquently set forth the elements of strength possessed by the Church in withstanding these assaults. The persons who served last year were re-elected to the Standing Committee, as trustees of the diocese, and as delegates to the Provincial Synod, (with only one change), and the board of missions, (with Mr. W. M. Robertson in place of Mr. J. S. Lord in the last named). The treasurer of the diocese presented an encouraging report, with all obligations met, and a small balance in hand. On Wednesday evening, after the synod had adjourned sine die, the Bishop and Mrs. Seymour entertained the clergy and delegates, the Churchmen of Springfield, and a large number of other friends, at a brilliant reception. The fine old mansion in which the Bishop resides was thronged with guests until a late hour, and the occasion was one of the happiest of the Bishop's long and very happy episcopate.

At the meeting of the Standing Committee held on the first day of the synod, the Rev. Wm. Donald McLean, deacon, was recommended to the Bishop to be advanced to the sacred Order of Priests, and Mr. DeWitt Lincoln Pelton, Ph.D., was recommended to be admitted a candidate for Holy Orders. As mentioned in our issue of Dec. 2d, Mr. Pelton was until recently the esteemed pastor of the Second Presbyterian congregation of Bloomington, Ill. He is a graduate of Princeton and the Union Theological Seminary in New York, and held a year's scholarship at Harvard. At the time of his applying to the Bishop to be received into the Church he was the moderator of the Bloomington presbytery, and very highly regarded by his brethren in that body. He was present during the meeting of the synod and was very heartily received by all.

Minnesota

Henry B. Whipple, D.D., LL.D., Bishop
W. N. Gilbert, D.D., LL.D., Bishop-coadjutor

St. Paul's church, Lexington township, has been removed to LeSueur Centre, increased attendance at the services resulting from the change. The Rev. Mr. Jones gives them a fortnightly service.

The Rev. Homer Hood has left St. Paul, and will take up permanent residence in St. Louis, Mo. Mr. Hood's removal is a source of regret to a large number of Churchmen, more especially in Brotherhood circles, in which he was a very enthusiastic and active member.

Bishop Gilbert's Visitations

LeSueur, 1; LeSueur Centre, 4; Eudora, 3; St. James, 15; Windom, 6; Worthington, 2.

St. John's, Lake Benton

The Rev. C. E. Farrar reports his parish as having had a very prosperous year. The attendance at all services is larger than ever before. A commodious ten-roomed rectory has been built and paid for, and a small balance is on hand. A thriving Sunday school, kindergarten, and Bible class meet weekly. In addition, Mr. Farrar looks after the spiritual welfare of Pipestone.

City Missions in St. Paul

On the evening of "Stir-up Sunday," a union meeting of all the city churches was held at Christ church. The rector, the Rev. C. D. Andrews, the Rev. Mr. Holmes, and the Rev. Mr. Schuetter delivered stirring addresses on behalf of city missions. The last-named reported about $1,100 had been subscribed towards a building for St. Philip's (colored) mission. The attendance was quite large. On the following Monday evening, the Board of City Missions held its annual meeting in Christ church guild room, Bishop Gilbert presiding. The treasurer reported about $700 pledged towards city missions for the ensuing year. A committee was appointed to make preparations for holding down-town noon meetings during next Lent, and to co-operate with the Church Club for a course of lectures weekly during Lent. Officers elected: Vice-president, Bishop Gilbert; ex-officio, the Rev. Mr. Holmes; secretary, the Rev. Mr. Ten Broeck; treasurer, Mr. Myers. All the city missions under the control of the Board were reported to be in a flourishing condition.

Arkansas

Wm. M. Brown, D.D., Bishop-coadjutor

A substantial rectory of eight rooms, two-story building, is being completed for the parish of St. Paul's, Newport. It is a very conveniently arranged house, and will cost $1,500, of which $1,000 has been paid.

St. Paul's, Batesville

During the vacancy in the rectorate, the vestry bought a 50 ft. lot adjoining the church property, and when the Rev. Caleb B. K. Weed became rector he strongly recommended the purchasing of the 100 feet adjoining, which could be bought for a trifle more than was paid for the small lot. He immediately put a movement on foot which would pay for it during the year by small monthly payments. When Bishop Brown visited the parish and inspected the lot, he generously offered $25 towards the purchase, provided that the whole amount be raised before Nov. 1st. The idea was very kindly received, and almost everyone gladly gave. The purchase of the lot was made possible by the kindness of J. C. Fitzhugh, Esq., the senior warden, who bought in the lot when it was sold last spring. He not only contributed generously, but also gave the interest on his investment. The parish hopes to build a rectory during the next three years, and it has already begun to raise money for that purpose.

Louisiana

Davis Sessums, D.D., Bishop

Rev. E. W. Hunter's Tenth Anniversary

As rector of St. Anna's church, New Orleans, was celebrated Dec. 3rd. The congregation took advantage of the occasion to testify their love and esteem by the presentation of a handsome gold watch and chain, and some other gifts of worth. On the case of the watch are the words: "Presented to our beloved rector on his tenth anniversary of faithful labor, by the congregation of St. Anna's church, Dec. 3rd, 1899." Mr. Hunter, in his address, furnished these statistics: A handsome rectory on Esplanade ave., a memorial chapel to Bishop Galleher, a hall for social gatherings, and numerous other additions to church and chapel as memorials and otherwise; also 65 Baptisms, 455 Confirmations, 219 marriages, 253 burials, two induced to become candidates for Holy Orders, one educated at the Church School for the work of a deaconess, and one associated with St. Mary's Sisterhood. The dilapidated place of worship that it was when he assumed charge has been transformed into one of the most handsome churches of the Crescent City, and the spiritual work of the parish has developed even more than the temporal prosperity. St. Anna's is a missionary church, surrounded by French Roman Catholics, and there have been many difficulties and hindrances in the work of the parish.

Mississippi

Hugh Miller Thompson, D.D., LL.C., Bishop

Dr. Sansom's Anniversary

On the first Sunday in Advent the rector of Christ church, Vicksburg, the Rev. Dr. Henry Sansom, preached a sermon commemorative of the 34th anniversary of his rectorship. He has kept his parish in good condition; the affection of his congregation is shown by the increased strong membership, while his saintly gentle character and never-ending good works have gained him many friends and admirers throughout the whole city, irrespective of creed or condition or race.

Editorials and Contributions

Mr. Balfour on Ritualism.—I

MR. A. J. BALFOUR, the distinguished English statesman, has an article in The North American Review on "Ritualism." He is in favor of a wide liberty, but considers, of course, that there must be limitations. Liberty and license are not synonymous terms. Mr. Balfour does not charge even the extreme Ritualists with Romanizing, but he does, nevertheless, make a charge which is sufficiently serious, and which is worthy of thoughtful consideration. No doubt it has a more direct bearing upon the circumstances of the Church in England than those of the Church in this country, and there may be a slight touch of insularity in it; nevertheless, translated into somewhat larger terms, it has an application in relation to the Anglican Communion in all its branches. His charge is, in brief, that, among those whom he terms "extreme" men, there is a desire "so to alter, both in its form and in its spirit, the traditional character of the Church to which they belong, as to make it practically unrecognizable by its most distinguished and most loyal sons for three centuries," "and I hold," says Mr. Balfour, "that this desire, however honorable, however disinterested—and I believe it to be both honorable and disinterested—is not consistent with loyalty to the Church of England." In other words, he regards the desire which he thus defines as revolutionary. This would put it side by side with another movement, more aggressive at present in this country than in England, which has for its object the alteration of the Prayer Book, the Creeds, and the doctrine of the Church throughout, in order to bring about assimilation with the liberalism of the day.

THE chief difficulty with Mr. Balfour's utterance is in the meaning to be assigned to the words, "traditional character." As he is speaking of Ritualism, it must be assumed that he has reference principally to the outward presentation of the Church and her services. He seems to imply that there has been, during the last three centuries, something like a consistent tradition in these matters, and that the changes which the extreme Ritualists have introduced, or are endeavoring to introduce, are inconsistent with this tradition. But when we come to examine the troublous history of the Church of England since the Reformation, we find it exceedingly difficult to establish the fact of any uniform and consistent tradition in these matters. In Elizabeth's time, one order of things established itself, but it remained uncertain whether it was that which was intended by the Prayer Book, or such as would legitimately result from the position which the Church asserted in her authoritative documents. The management of affairs was largely in the hands of men who had no real sympathy with the English "Reformation settlement." They were formed in the school of Calvin, and their ideals were not those of the Prayer Book. When the newer generation arose, trained according to the formularies and in the learning of the Fathers to which those formularies referred them, a new era set in. The ceremonial reforms of the Caroline divines seemed to those who remembered the Elizabethan period, as great a revolution as anything that has occurred more recently, and they contended as earnestly as Mr. Balfour, that the "traditional character" of the Church of England was being changed beyond recognition.

IN the present century the changes which have come about since 1830, in the wake of the Oxford movement, setting what is specifically called Ritualism entirely apart, have been so great as compared with the state of things in the Georgian period, that it is certainly true that the clergy and people of the eighteenth century, if they could rise from their graves, would find little or nothing of a familiar character—apart from the Prayer Book—even in the most moderate parish churches. The traditions of that cold time have been almost utterly extinguished. In architecture, in the interior arrangement, and in the manner and accompaniments of worship, all is wonderfully changed. In all the multitude of churches erected in London in the last fifty years, our forefathers could hardly enter one which would not suggest to them the flavor of Romanism. It is, therefore, in the light of facts, extremely difficult to establish any kind of "traditional character" as pertaining to the outward aspects of the Church. The character of the Church edifice, its appointments, the number of services, their order and relative importance, the method of their execution and their ceremonial adjuncts—all are changed. And nobody desires to go back to the walled-up chancels, the whitewashed walls, the square pews, the "three-decker" pulpits, the black gowns, the duet of parson and clerk, and the rare Communion, all of which satisfied our forefathers.

ENEMIES of the English Church have made these changes an argument against her Catholic character. But, in fact, while the phenomena of which we have spoken have presented themselves in the restricted field of the Anglican Communion within a comparatively short period, and at a stage of the world's history when all things are noted and commented upon as they transpire, similar features are stamped upon the history of the Church at large from the earliest ages. Changes equally extensive, if more gradual, are traceable all along. The services of the Roman Order are not now what they were three or four hundred years ago. Notwithstanding the rigid uniformity which is understood to prevail in that Communion, any traveler knows that there is a great difference in tone, and in many observances, between North and South America. The innovations of the eighth and ninth centuries are well known to students. At no period in history, not even the modern period in England, has there been so great a revolution in these matters as occurred in the fourth century. The process of change in England has been owing to more than one cause. Not the least was the endeavor to adapt the Church to her work in the modern world. This, though it might be dimly perceived at the time, was one of the ruling impulses of the Reformation. It was in part the meaning of the great unrest which characterized that period. The accomplishment of this task, with whatever drawbacks, was the most successful achievement of the movement in England. The developments of the present century are owing in very large measure to the overmastering desire to bring the Church home to large masses of people who were drifting away, and who found nothing attractive and nothing helpful in the "traditional character" of the Church services and methods of Church work which had come down from the previous time.

OTHER causes played their part, but the greatest of all in determining the particular line of development in the services themselves, was the fascinating idea of the Catholic Church, an idea which the formularies of the Church and her greatest divines at all times had consistently upheld. It seemed to men that there was more in this ideal than had commonly been perceived or admitted, and that continuity of worship implied the retention of cardinal features of a ceremonial kind which were easily seen to have been universal in the Christian Church for many ages. They were features which were in no way connected with modern Roman tenets, and not necessarily expressed according to the rules of modern Roman ceremonial. They prevailed, and do prevail, in the East, where the papal claims have never been admitted, as universally as in the West. The meanings which they express are fundamental to Catholic Christianity, and some of them belong to traditional religion the world over.

SO far as the ritualistic movement is distinguishable from the Catholic movement in general in the Church of England, we understand it to have had its main-spring in the desire to revive and maintain these ancient and universal features of Catholic worship. Such a desire has no necessary connection with any Romanizing longings or tendencies, as Mr. Balfour frankly admits. It was believed that at the Reformation the connecting link in this sphere of things, as in that of doctrine, ecclesiastical order, and the essence of Catholic worship, was officially preserved, and that it finds expression in the "Ornaments' Rubric." It is for this reason that that rubric has been for so many years the centre about which controversy has been waged without ceasing. At the present time it appears that five of the six points of ceremonial which have been chiefly contended for, have been virtually accepted as proper to the English rite, and it is because of the adverse opinion of the Archbishops in regard to the sixth, that such intense feeling has been aroused in High Church circles.

An Ancient Prayer Book

APPARENTLY there is no end to interesting discoveries adding to our knowledge of the Church of early days. The list would be long of documents of first-class importance which have come to light within the last thirty years, after being buried from sight for centuries. Not to mention such as bear directly or indirectly upon the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, such as the Tel el marna Tablets, the Harmony of Tatian, and numerous inscriptions and manuscripts, we have a number of documents emanating from the Church of the first three or four centuries, which add materially to our knowledge of early Christian literature and the religious traditions and customs of that age. The discovery of the lost chapters of the first century Epistle of St. Clement, and of the "Teaching of the Apostles," is an old story. More recently we have had two documents which shed a flood of new light upon the character of Christian worship in the fourth century. One of these is "The Pilgrimage of St. Silvia," a Gallic lady of distinction, to the Holy Land, about A. D. 380, in which much precious information is given relating to the customs of the Church at Jerusalem at that time. This work came to light in 1884.

NOW a book has turned up which has tranquilly reposed on the shelves of the library of the celebrated monastery at Mt. Athos for unknown years—a book which, to the students of the early liturgies, is of more value in some respects than anything hitherto known. It is the Prayer Book or Sacramentary of Bishop Sarapion, of Thmuis in Egypt, the friend of St. Athanasius and St. Antony. This precious document is dated not later than the middle of the fourth century, about A. D. 350. It enjoys the unique distinction of being the only liturgy to which we have access known to have been both written and in use at that early date. The Clementine, so-called, was written somewhat later, and is not known to have been used. This was written for use, and in it we have the very words which were employed by Sarapion himself in fulfilling the central act of Christian worship. It conforms much more nearly to the model of the Clementine Liturgy and those of St. James, St. Basil, and St. Chrysostom than to those hitherto known as peculiarly Egyptian, which were supposed by our older liturgical scholars to mark an original type, going back perhaps to the apostolic age. It now becomes probable that the peculiarities of the Egyptian type are later than the fourth century. No future edition of the ancient liturgies can omit this, the most ancient of them all. It is much to be wished, by the way, that some enterprising publisher would give us the text of the most important liturgies in the same convenient form with the edition of Dr. Neale many years ago, a book which was vastly useful in its day, but which is now antiquated and long out of print.

How to Teach the Prayer Book

READ BEFORE S. S. INSTITUTE OF DIOCESE OF WASHINGTON

BY THE REV. RICHARD P. WILLIAMS

OF the various ways of studying the Book of Common Prayer, only one seems to me adapted to the work of the Sunday school. The historical and the analytic methods are suitable to divinity students and candidates for Holy Orders. But the devotional method, while it may avail itself of the aids offered by history and analysis, is the one means of inculcating a deep-seated love for the ritual and liturgy of the Church. The historical method will show the growth of the various parts, their liturgical origin, the age in which these several divisions became incorporated into the form of public worship. The analytic method will dissect each service and adjunct of service, and explain its adaptability to its special use, and its correspondence with the true idea of worship, and its appeal to the nature of the worshiper. But the devotional method will go farther back than all this, and show how the Prayer Book has become the only true ideal of Christian worship, and why it has become so. This method will be partly historical, partly analytical, wholly Scriptural.

When we open our Prayer Books, the first thing which strikes us is the title page. There we read that it is the "Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, According to the Use of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, Together With the Psalter, or Psalms of David." Now the first thing which strikes us about this title is the word "Church." Without that organization there will be no common prayer, no sacraments, no other rites and ceremonies. The Church then requires elucidation. What is it? When did it begin? And so, at the very outset, we are sent to Scripture. But to what part of Scripture? Is it to the New Testament only? Of course not. Every intelligent person knows that there was a Church before the Christian Church. Go farther back. Some one will stop at Sinai. There was a Church with ritual and ceremonies, a priesthood, and a congregation of believers. That was the first organized Church. That was the first body which had stated services, with solemn sacrifices, fasts, and festivals, and other adjuncts of a stately worship. But I would go back still farther. For the germ of the Church was the first family. In the Garden of Eden we have the first worshipers, and it was in the infancy of the human race that the first instruction, as to manner of worship was given to men. That this is true appears from the acceptance of Abel's sacrifice, as worthy, and the rejection of Cain's, as unworthy.

It will be quite a natural course, then, in teaching the Prayer Book, for our children to begin at the Book of Genesis. We shall show how God taught His first children how to worship; how they abandoned the ideal which they had learned; how, in order to bring the world back to Him, a visible Church was established at Mt. Sinai. From that we should proceed to show that the Jewish Church was but the precursor of the Christian, keeping alive the belief in the One God, and preparing for the Advent of the Saviour, promised far back when the need of a Saviour was caused by the fall.

But there was no organized worship, no form of public service, until that Jewish Church came into existence. And, having shown that the Church dates back to the beginning of the world's history, we must next try to show why it is that the Church of to-day has the various kinds of service which the Prayer Book contains.

Passing over, for the moment, the lectionary and other preliminaries, we bring our pupils to the Order for Daily Morning Prayer, and of course together with that we should combine the study of the Order for Daily Evening Prayer. But how shall we begin? What is the starting point? Some will be reminded of the daily monastic services, as the basis of our investigations. But they were only a point on the road. We shall have to show from Scripture that the Jewish Church had its daily morning and evening service. We shall not be able to impress upon the young people the necessity for this order, unless we can make them understand clearly the fact that God Himself, at Mt. Sinai, prepared for this regular, unceasing round of prayer and praise. You will trace briefly the history of the race down to the time when God said to Moses (Exod. xxix: 38)—"Now this is that which thou shalt offer upon the altar; two lambs of the first year day by day continually. The one lamb thou shalt offer in the morning; and the other lamb thou shalt offer at even. . . . This shall be a continual burnt offering throughout your generations at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the Lord; where I will meet you, to speak there unto thee." And, in addition, we read in the following chapter, "And Aaron shall burn thereon sweet incense every morning; when he dresseth the lamps, he shall burn incense upon it. And when Aaron lighteth the lamps at even, he shall burn incense upon it, a perpetual incense before the Lord throughout your generations." Add to this the injunction in Numbers (xxviii: 9) "And on the Sabbath day two lambs of the first year without spot. . . . This is the burnt offering of every Sabbath, beside the continual burnt offering," and we have an example, in the earliest organized Church, of the idea of daily offering of sacrifice—the burnt offering—and prayers—the incense—and on the Sabbath a greater offering, signifying what amount and frequency of worship was required of the Jews who had less to acknowledge than we Christians. If God desired and commanded them to have daily public worship twice, and the additional sacrifices on the weekly holy day, what shall we who have a greater share of divine light, the fullness of God's Presence, do to show our recognition of His love and mercy? Here, you have an opportunity of inculcating from Scripture, with the Prayer Book as our text, the meaning of the Order for Daily Morning and Evening Prayer.

Having arrived thus far, the next step will be to show how every part of Scripture has been drawn upon to make up these services. The opening sentences, taken from Gospels and Epistles, Prophets and Psalms, showing how every part of the Bible is available for worship; the exhortation, with its language borrowed from almost every book in the Bible, from Leviticus on; the General Confession, which carries us back to Genesis; the declaration of Absolution, with its marvelous wealth of Scripture illustration, bringing us from Genesis up to the Redemption, and beyond, in its application of God's pardon to man; these, commonly considered as man's production, are shown by the diligent teacher to be nothing but Scripture condensed and applied to our needs. Then, before we rise again to praise, we conclude with our Lord's own words, and burst forth, with heads erect and hearts uplifted, into the melody of the Psalms. Here, again, we have a grand opportunity for Scripture teaching. Here is the place to call attention to the use of the Psalter in the temple, and how its words are now Christianized and suited to our daily wants and hopes.

The Canticles, except the Te Deum, which can also easily be made the basis for Scripture illustration, are taken directly from the Bible. As to the Lessons, we have a magnificent opportunity to show how they are set forth for the purpose of leading us through the Christian Year. We can point out their application to the various seasons for which they are appointed, and then, when Trinity-tide is ushered in, we show our pupils how the Church goes back to the beginning, and tells us of the first works of God, and follows that reference with a weekly account of the most important dealings of God with the world. And while we are doing this with special reference to the Sunday worship, we shall have excellent opportunity to show how we lose so much of the daily study of Scripture by not hearing it read in daily Morning and Evening Prayer, where it is steadily followed from Genesis to Revelation.

If I have made myself understood, it will be needless to show that we cannot possibly call attention to the Creed without showing that it is nothing but Bible reduced to the smallest possible compass. There is Genesis, "God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth"; prophecies fulfilled and Gospels exemplified, "in Jesus Christ, His only Son, our Lord"; Acts of the Apostles and other writings, "in the Holy Ghost: The Holy Catholic Church; the Communion of Saints." Of the prayers, there will be found a most complete compendium of the devotional sayings of the Bible, with innumerable references to the Atonement, and God's manifold promises of blessing to those who unfeignedly love Him. But why continue? Such a course of study would have to take the teacher, with the pupils, back to the birth of the race, and carry them through the varying phases of patriarchal and national life, till they see the light and glory of the Gospel age, with their gradual spread over the world in apostolic times. Let us pass on to another branch of the study.

Unscientific Criticism

IN a recent sermon in Old Christ church, Philadelphia, the Rev. Dr. C. Ellis Stevens, rector, gave some wholesome instruction upon the subject of the so-called "Higher Criticism." "I cannot but disapprove," he said, "certain drift of so-called Higher Criticism. And I disapprove it distinctly, on the ground that it is at variance with the methods of scientific investigation, and of modern historical scholarship. The German scholars, many of them, have become prominent in recent years in this unscientific criticism. They have undertaken to apply it to secular history, but their efforts on secular lines have been ruled out of court by historical scholars, and are not to-day taken seriously in that department of learning. Their Higher Criticism of the New Testament has shared the same fate, and comparatively little remains that they once tried to establish as regards this, the most important part of the Bible. The New Testament portion of the Biblical controversy is practically abandoned ground, so far as they are concerned, and the Church has on all essential points been vindicated in the correctness of her position. But at the present moment a fashion seems to exist for the Higher Criticism of the Old Testament. Some of our English-speaking scholars have been influenced by it."

Dr. Stevens went on to detail what is the Higher Criticism as applied to the Old Testament. He said: "I cannot but pronounce this school of criticism to be largely based upon individual assertion and individual theory. It fails to utilize the whole of the material now available. Despite its somewhat noisy claims, it does not, as a matter of fact, base its conclusions upon scientific methods and requirements. It is, at times, almost ludicrously at variance with the well-established rules of evidence, and cannot seriously be gauged by any canon known to modern historical scholarship. Possibly I shall myself be faulted for making so strong a statement. I make it with no feeling of animosity, and with no wish to be unfair. Higher critics seem fond of calling those who disagree with them 'traditionalists,' a rather misleading designation. Too much of controversial hostility has been displayed on both sides—and no great issues are ever thus settled. In so far as Higher Criticism is really unscientific, it is bound to fail in the same way as regards the Old Testament, as it has already failed as regards the New Testament, and in the field of secular history—and for the same reasons. Good will be done by it in attracting attention to various points involved. The final outcome will be to strengthen the Bible. In any case the essential inspiration of the Scripture is not affected. As one of the leading critics has said: 'Criticism in the hands of Christian scholars does not banish or destroy the inspiration of the Old Testament.'"

Some Common Mistakes

BY THE REV. FRED'K S. JEWELL, D. D.

VI

THIRTEENTH. It is a mistake to add to the Church services—to any religious services, in fact—any extras of a sensational, semi-secular, or purely popular character, pulpitical, musical, literary, or performance-like, as attractions to hold the unstable, catch the Sunday floaters, and thus fill the pews and alms basins. Simply to gain patrons by offering what pleases them, is a mere extension of the principle that churches may be found to suit men's preferences, and that the proper church is the church which pleases the individual. The Church has no place for any such doctrine or practice.

Besides this, to set about making true religion, by these worldly devices, attractive, in order to draw men within its influences; is to cast disrepute on Christianity as growingly empty and decrepit, and no longer able to make progress by virtue of its own divine purity and power. The Church cannot do this without belying her history and stultifying herself. Our Lord practiced no such arts; laid down no rules looking to their necessity and use; but frankly based the hopes and prospects of the Gospel solely on the attractive power of the Cross. The Church may not, dare not, traverse His teaching.

Furthermore, to draw men to the Church by these extraneous and unworthy attractions, is to draw the idly curious, pleasure loving crowd which is in no mood for honest listening, real conviction, or true conversion. The thing is a snare and delusion. "The game is not worth the candle." For the chance one caught, the divine character of the Church is compromised, and the unaffected multitude is, each time, sent away, more fixed in idle levity and unconcern than before. The Church has no right to trifle in this way with her saving agencies and the souls of men.

Besides this, the popular demand for these alien and worldly attractions grows by what it feeds upon. One set of these devices, in time, grows stale and commonplace, and then another must be sought out and brought into play, and each time the struggle after effective attractions becomes more difficult and debasing. The beginning of this strife after attractions "is as when one letteth out water." The service becomes a gap; the rivulet a river, and so on, until the barriers against evil are swept away. The Church as the "city set upon a hill" cannot maintain her divine prestige or build herself up in purity and power by moving down into the realm of miasmatic vapors and jack-o'-lantern lights.

Letters to the Editor

"PRAYER BOOK RIGMAROLE"

To the Editor of The Living Church:

In your issue of Nov. 11, you headed my letter to the New York Sun, which the Rev. A. Richey sent you to be reprinted, with "Prayer Book Rigmarole." In his letter of comment, Mr. Richey speaks of it as a part of the "Arian conspiracy." I am sure that neither you nor the writer of the comments designed to wrongly represent me, but in both phrases you certainly have done so. I used the word "rigmarole" with reference only to the enforced reading over, year after year, of certain appointed portions of the Old Testament, which everybody must admit are, for these days, objectionable. Let any one of our clergymen seriously reflect upon some of these appointed lessons, and I am sure he will agree with me that they ought to be omitted, or else expurgated. To those only did I refer in the use of the word "rigmarole"—as my letter plainly shows.

My reverence for the Prayer Book, as a whole, is too profound to render it possible for me to make such a flippant reference to its devotional uses. That it needs revision as to the lectionary, first of all, and that the new version should be permitted in all Bible readings, is what I designed chiefly to state. There are also collects that should, as I think, be omitted or changed, as that appointed for Good Friday. The entire book should, in my opinion, be modernized in such a sense as to remove those archaisms of word and phrase which are no longer, and never again can be, expressive of intelligent devotion or thought. All this I deem a pressing need of to-day, and to say this with due emphasis was the only object of my letter.

The charge of an "Arian conspiracy" is entirely unjust, so far as any of my writings or teachings are concerned. I deem Arianism a shallow philosophy, inasmuch as it so widely separates God from sons of God. Sonship implies participation of the Divine nature. If Jesus the Christ was Son of God, then he was divine—"very God of very God, begotten, not made, being of one substance with the Father." This I, for one, steadfastly believe as an essential inference from the fundamental postulate of Divine Immanency. Arianism failed to comprehend this postulate, with its inference of the indwelling God—God in Christ. Hence I consider Arianism an issue long dead, and never to be intelligently revived.

In your issue of Nov. 25, I see a long letter from a brother clergyman of Elmira, N. Y., on the same subject, in which he bitterly complains of my agitations, on the ground that I am "comparatively a stranger" in the Church. Sixteen years of unceasing labors, nearly all the time as rector, and with rarely even a vacation Sunday free from duty, ought to entitle me to a voice, as well as a vote. During twelve years, I labored quietly without a word of agitation, and should have so continued had not the Bishops' Pastoral of 1895 compelled me to speak in self-defence. The opposition to the ordination of Dr. Briggs was another and stronger compulsion, and now, the conflict being awakened, I should hate myself as a coward should I remain silent.

I honor your correspondents, and all others who sincerely think as they do, for their zeal in defence of their convictions. By no means would

I be glad to have them "leave" the Protestant Episcopal Church. If they would only return my compliment, I should be satisfied and grateful.

MARTIN KELLOGG SCHERMERHORN.

INSTITUTE FOR BIBLE STUDY

To the Editor of The Living Church:

An impression seems to have obtained currency, probably through the secular press, that the American Church Bible Institute is of very recent origin. Such is, however, not the case. Six months ago the name was changed from the Church Bible Club to its present one; but its object has been the same from the beginning. It was founded the 17th of January of the current year, for the defence of the Faith, and to form a rallying ground for those who would stem the tide of unbelief now seeming to threaten the overthrow of faith and religion in this land. It was thought by those entering into it that the best way to counteract the mischief wrought by the so-called higher critics was to present what can be said in favor of the Church's Bible in the light of modern science, and historical and archaeological discoveries, in contradistinction from the present apparently favorite method of bringing up everything that can be said against it. This end it is proposed to reach by means of papers which will be read at the meetings and afterwards published, and by means of popular lectures to be delivered in centres of Church thought and life. A plan to carry out the latter object is now under consideration, and it is hoped to carry it into effect during the season of the Epiphany.

ROBERT WEEKS,

President of the American Church Bible Institute.

PALMAM QUI MERUIT FERAT

To the Editor of The Living Church:

In your issue of to-day, among the items of correspondence sent by "Bostonian," page 752, we are told that Dr. E. E. Hale pleased his hearers by quoting from an entry of the treasurer of an English king, "To him who found the New World, £10," but that no one knows who earned this reward, and it is still open for claimants. Is this really so? In the first place, I think the entry wrongly quoted. It runs thus: "To hyne yt founde ye neue ile £10." The English king was Henry VII, 1485-1509. The "neue ile" was Newfoundland, or, as it is often found in the early charters, "neue-founde-lande." (Mark the hyphens, ye orthoepists, and let us have no more of new fun 'lnd, or new found 'lnd). The person to whom this sum was paid was John Cabot, and it was given him by Henry on his return from his first voyage. The entry, too, if I mistake not, is in Henry's private diary. This ancient and loyal colony cost in cash something near $500 of our money, a sum about equal to a very moderate "catch" by a single fisherman for one season. We Newfoundlanders think that however plentiful the wolves and Boethuck Indians may have been then, the "bears" were not absent from that piece of real estate.

ACTORS' CHURCH ALLIANCE

The third regular service of the Actors' Church Alliance will be held next Sunday evening, Dec. 17th, at 8 P. M., at the church of Zion and St. Timothy, West 57th st., New York. Preacher, the Rev. Henry Lubeck, LL.D., rector. All members of the Alliance, the dramatic profession, and friends of the theatre, are cordially invited to attend. Per order of the Council.

REV. WALTER E. BENTLEY, Sec'y.

Ordinations

On Sunday, Nov. 26th, the Rev. Scott Wood was ordained to the priesthood in St. Stephen's church, Petersburg, S. Va., by Bishop Randolph. The candidate was presented by the Rev. O. S. Bunting, the Rev. J. W. Johnson preaching the sermon. Mr. Wood is a young colored man who was graduated from the Payne Divinity School in 1898, and has since been in charge of St. Philip's church, Bedford City.

The same day at later service, the Bishop ordained Mr. S. C. Beckwith to the diaconate, in Grace church, Petersburg. The Rev. John Rideout, the rector of Grace church, presented the candidate, and the ordination sermon was preached by the Rev. W. A. R. Goodwyn. Mr. Beckwith was educated at the University of the South, and taught in its grammar school for several years.

Died

BATES.—At the Episcopal Hospital, Philadelphia, on the 8th inst., the Rev. Daniel Moore Bates, late rector of St. Stephen's church, Clifton Heights, Pa.

CONE.—At Christ church rectory, Bridgeport, Conn., on Nov. 28, 1899, Miss Edith Cromwell Cone, only daughter of the Rev. Herbert D. and Helen K. Cone, aged 15 years, 6 months, and 13 days.

DONIHOO.—Entered into the rest of Paradise, at her home in Evanston, Ill., Nov. 24, 1899, Lydia Redfern Donihoo. The Burial Office was read at St. Mark's church.

Appeals

THE DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY, the Church Missions House, 281 Fourth ave., New York. Officers: RIGHT REV. THOMAS M. CLARK, D. D., president; RT. REV. WILLIAM CROWSWELL DOANE, D. D., vice-president; REV. ARTHUR S. LLOYD, D. D., general secretary; REV. JOSHUA KIMBER, associate secretary; MR. JOHN W. WOOD, corresponding secretary; MR. GEORGE C. THOMAS, treasurer; MR. E. WALTER ROBERTS, assistant treasurer.

This society comprehends all persons who are members of this Church. It is the Church's established agency for the conduct of general missionary work. At home this work is in seventeen missionary districts, in Puerto Rico, and in forty-three dioceses; and includes that among the negroes in the South, and the Indians. Abroad, the work includes the missions in Africa, China, and Japan; the support of the Church in Haiti; and of the presbyter named by the Presiding Bishop to counsel and guide the workers in Mexico. The society also aids the work among the English-speaking people in Mexico, and transmits contributions designated for the other work in that country.

The Society pays the salaries and traveling expenses of twenty-two missionary bishops, and the Bishop of Haiti; 1,630 other missionaries depend in whole or in part for their support upon the offerings of Church people, made through this Society. There are many schools, orphanages, and hospitals at home and abroad which, but for the support that comes through the Society, would of necessity be abandoned.

The amount required to meet all appropriations for this work to the end of the fiscal year, Sept. 1, 1900, is $630,000. For this sum the Board of Managers must depend upon the voluntary offerings of the members of the Church. Additional workers, both men and women, are constantly needed to meet the increasing demands of the work (both at home and abroad).

The Spirit of Missions, is the official (monthly) magazine—$1 a year. All information possible concerning the Society's work will be furnished on application.

Remittances should be made to MR. GEORGE C. THOMAS, treasurer.

All other official communications should be addressed to the Board of Managers, Church Missions House, 281 Fourth ave., New York.

Legal title (for use in making wills): THE DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

AN urgent appeal is made for $200 for the chapel fund of the church of St. Thomas and St. Denis, Wando, S. C. This amount will make possible preliminary building operations, and $700 will erect the building. Generous Churchmen are appealed to for aid in this important work. Send contributions to the REV. E. J. WALKER, Lock Box 549, Charlestown, S. C.

Ship of My Life

BY THE REV. R. W. LOWRIE, D. D.

Ship of my life, in thee, long years ago,
I set me sail, nor skies to fear I knew;
Nor if the ocean's face wore smile or frown;
Nor yet if loud or low the zephyrs blew.

Ship of my life, in these revolving years,
Nor swift the current, nor the current slow;
To time, all hours alike; the tide, no sleep;
Nor speed nor yet delay the planets know.

Ship of my life, these long and many years,
If poor the sailing and the ports but few,
No word of censure on thy name shall fall,
As mine the fault, be mine the blaming, too.

Ship of my life, thou ridest yet the wave,
How long 'tis thus, no mortal eye can see;
But long or short, I only ask and pray
Thy Builder still my watchful Pilot be.

Ship of my life, my sail shall soon be o'er.
I see the peaks approach; I soon shall land;
Thou safe shalt leave me on the other shore.
His hand my rudder is, I cannot strand.

THE Rev. Wm. Bohler Walker, rector of Christ church, Joliet, has been granted the usual railroad courtesy of clergyman's half-fare certificate, which was refused him some months ago, on account of some public criticisms made by him as to railroad methods. He filed a complaint with the Inter-State Commission, and the roads concluded to recognize the right of free speech, even at half-fare!

TEMPERANCE is on the increase in the British army. Last year there were 35,983 abstainers within it. Of these, the force in India contributed 22,280, or practically every third man, and the home section, 13,703, a much smaller proportion. Besides these the army temperance association had 5,018 honorary members, of whom 3,342 were in India.

A LITTLE book entitled, "Why Men Do Not Go to Church," brings up a passage-at-arms which occurred between the Rev. Cortland Myers and Gen. Horace Porter at a Washington's Birthday banquet given in New York. The clergyman was called upon for a speech, and getting warmed up in his subject, did not notice the flight of time until he was called to order by the presiding officer. He looked at his watch and saw that he had taken an hour, although the speakers had been limited to fifteen minutes. He apologized to the audience, and remarked: "Over in Brooklyn I am accustomed to speak for a long time to my congregation, and I often take two hours." Gen. Porter was the next speaker, and he opened his address by saying: "The explanation of our reverend friend gives a complete answer to that hitherto mysterious question why Brooklyn people refuse to patronize their churches."

SPEAKING of the modern representative magazine, says a writer in The Independent, as compared with the representative magazine of twenty-five years ago, the noteworthy changes are the disappearance of the travel article, the gain in short stories, but especially the gain in journalistic articles. By this term is meant an article chosen and treated because it is of immediate contemporaneous interest, rather than because it is of interest in itself; that is, the sort of article printed in a newspaper for purposes of general reading. For an example, one may instance, in Harper's, Richard Harding Davis' account of Mr. McKinley's inauguration, and in The Century, "Notes of Tennessee and its Centennial."

DOMESTIC economy is becoming a recognized branch of scientific study in the curriculum of progressive institutions of learning. The schedule of work prescribed in these courses clearly proves, says The Outlook, that domestic economy does not mean learning how to cook. It means the application of science to the daily needs, requirements, and routine of the home, as well as the equipment of a graduate to earn the degree of Bachelor of Science by special work in the profession of teaching. In addition, there are several technical schools maintaining courses in domestic science and art, in which lectures are open to the public. That the need for specific training for home-makers is felt even by those who have had a college training, is shown by the activity of alumnae associations in affiliating with others who are endeavoring to meet the new problems, especially those of domestic service.

WHITTIER held "Gail Hamilton" (Abigail Dodge) in the highest esteem, and the letters that passed between them are really delightful. Here is one of the series now appearing in The Ladies' Home Journal: It was written in 1866.

I must tell thee something droll. Last week the Amoskeag veterans from New Hampshire, and a Massachusetts company, with military bands, came and paraded before our house, and Governor Smyth of New Hampshire, and one or two officers called on me. When they left and I stepped out to see them civilly off, the men in epaulettes got up a grand military salute, with music and three cheers to wind up with! Was ever a Quaker in such a predicament? I did, I fear, somewhat compromise myself by lifting, almost involuntarily, my hand to my hat—but I resisted the temptation and only pulled my hat lower down over my brows by way of testimony.

Cobwebs and Chaffinches

IT is among the keener penalties of "the splendid isolation" of humanity among the powers, greater and less, of the animated world, that we men and women should be no judges of cobwebs.

Of the variety communis vel hortensis we cannot always help taking note in passing, because, as a rule, it stretches across garden-paths on the parallel of the human nose. Another local kind also we sometimes observe; a cobweb that counterpanes a patch of moorland, or a whole meadow, stretching, while they sleep, silken awnings over the small fly-folk who make their dormitories among the roots or on the stems of the herbage. A dismal awakening for them and up-flying the next morning! But of the cobwebs "found-all-over-the-houseous," the cobweb par excellence, everybody's cobweb, we know it only as "cobweb." There are no varieties of it in our gross classifications, nor grades in quality. Here the chaffinch has the advantage of us—as the figurative American has it, "the bulge" on us.

When the chaffinch asks for cobweb she sees that she gets it. She is not to be put off with trash. And while her ladyship turns over its samples, the spinner of the stuff crouches itself out of sight, pretending it belongs to the corner, is, in fact, part of the corner, its extreme angle, and not a pottle-bodied, edible spider.

Nor is the customer "soon suited to her mind." Some threads are too dusty, some have been in stock too long. What she wants, and means to have, too, "even if she turns the whole shop over for it" (and eats the spinner into the bargain), are fresh, sticky strands that will make an invisible cement and ligament for her lichens and moss. So she picks and chooses with most amusing fastidiousness—"pernickity" is, I think, the epithet applied to human beings who are so "fid-faddy"—or is it the other way about? Anyhow, that is what the spider, hiding for dear life, behind a tattered bit of its own arras, thinks she is. "A plague on the hussy; will she never make up her mind and go?" At last she does. Satisfied that she has picked out all the very best of the cobwebs that are to be got, she flits away to her nest.

By-and-by she is back again, and just as "finnicky" as ever—the despair of shopmen and the horror of the shop-walker. Apparently she has forgotten she had been there before. At any rate, she begins making her selections with all the nice deliberation of her previous visit—itself, perhaps, the twentieth or the hundredth—and it is only after she has fastidiously ransacked the veranda that she is content. And with what a little. Packed up in her beak, her laborious collection really amounts to nothing—a ridiculously small parcel at best, for cobwebs crowd up very small. But, after all, it is not altogether becoming in us human beings to make objections to the shoppings of a chaffinch. If the chaffinch considers a bundle of cobwebs that would just nicely cork up a weevil-hole in a nut, to be a fit and proper load for her, and as much as she can handle properly at a time, we may depend upon it that it is. She would be a sorry housekeeper, indeed, who took home more than she could do with.

Oldly enough, the chaffinch never seems to understand that after every visit she makes the residue of the cobweb becomes more and more inferior in quality, for she goes on for several days depleting the edges and corners of the panes, and the woodwork of their web, with precisely the same daintiness of choice as at first. At last there is none left at all, not even any of the "worst worst." She has eliminated it by grades to the veriest dregs, the dustiest and grimest fag-ends and rubbish, and in the end has carried even these off, with just the same affectation of selection.

And now, bare indeed in their chinks and crannies, sit the poor weavers. Thinking to glean where she has already scraped, the chaffinch comes back again, and peering into the untapestried corners, and the cracks beneath the putty from which she has dragged the silken hangings, she descries the spider where he sits, with all his knees cruddled up, and, having stripped its house even to its wall-paper, she now eats the householder. "A dismal thing to do," as the little Oyster said to the Carpenter. Arachne sometimes disconcerts her visitor by making a dash for liberty, and the chaffinch, as the insect scampers over her toes, hops to one side with a chirp and gesture of long-skirted annoyance, very much as a girl might do if suddenly charged by a mouse. But, as a rule, the bird catches the spider, and thus makes a handsome clearance of the premises.

The cobwebs so conscientiously assorted and carried away, are, of course, intended for the fastening together of the materials of the chaffinch's nest—as a rule, one of the most beautiful and instructive of bird-buildings—and as a rule, too, one of the longest in the building. For in her house she is nothing if not tasteful, and the mere outside will take her as many days to construct as it will the greenfinch hours. Moreover, it is "she," as a rule, not "he," that builds the nest.

Well, indeed, has science called the chaffinch Cœlebs. Though it is supposed that the male collects the material and that the hen is the architect, I know, from my own observation, that the hen spends much of her day in getting together not only cobweb to bind the moss and lichen, but the moss and lichen, too. What Cœlebs may contribute toward the building, I am not at liberty to say, for it is extremely difficult to detect him going to the nest.

He is thereabouts all the time, for you cannot approach the spot without his at once beginning from his hiding-place to deplore, in a pained tone of voice, the miserably indifferent taste of your conduct. It is the most elegantly gentlemanly protest imaginable. His finer feelings are wounded, but he is not out of temper. He does not abuse you, as the blackcap does, nor half choke himself in voluble incoherence, scolding you as the whitethroat will. Cœlebs merely repines at, regrets, and complains of, your behavior. He would wish that you had had the advantages of better bringing up, and laments the negligence of your parents, and your lack of refinement.

For himself, he is the very essence of good form, and just now when he has got on his summer suit, his manners are all in harmony with the beauty and exquisite fit of his apparel. You will often see other birds looking as if they had been dressed by a country tailor. Never Cœlebs. A sparrow in a "reach-me-down" suit is not out of order in a hedgerow where blackbirds go about in frumpish frocks. But the chaffinch is always the pink (or "spink," should I say?) of neatness, the glass of fashion, and the mould of form; as dapper as any beau, spark, or gallant in the verses of Pope; as spruce as any fop, coxcomb, or dandy in the prose of "The Tattler." He never leaves "home" until groomed to perfection, and thereafter, like a gentleman, he betrays no consciousness of being thoroughly well-dressed, and goes through his day without any of your finical humors or fantastical Tom Noddy caprices, as comports an elegant little bird of naturally delicate tastes and dainty self-respect. Even when pressed by hunger, when there is famine for the birds in the garden, he never puts himself forward.

It is always, "After you, sir, with the crumbs," to the other birds. As I said, when writing about my small almsmen, what time the snow was on the ground, and food was put out for those in want, "the courtly chaffinches come with a gay step, chirping to each other as if to give and take confidence, but eating nothing, moving obsequiously out of the way of every gluttonous sparrow, and pecking only with apologies." Not that he is a coward in the least. "Even the polite chaffinch, always ready to give place, and never coming forward without a 'by your leave,' gets out of patience at last with the froward sparrow, and dabs it on the scone," elegantly, as if fencing in a court suit, but severely, as one who is master of his weapon.

So that the chaffinches, both Cœlebs and Cœlebs's wife, are self-respecting persons, and, as all such should be, are respected. And when they combine to build a nest, and are themselves satisfied with their work, you may depend upon it that there is but little reason for disparagement. Their "house beautiful" may be long in the building, but when built it is fit for lovers of their art to live in.—The Contemporary Review.

Book Reviews and Notices

Via Crucis. A Romance of the Second Crusade. By Francis Marion Crawford. Illustrated by Louis Loeb. New York: The Macmillan Company. 1899. Price, $1.50.

There is hardly a more romantic period in all history than that covered by the different crusades for the recovery of the Holy Land from the Turks, and it is strange that this period has not been more made use of by the novelists. Scott in his "Talisman" and "Count Robert of Paris" has done something, and it may be that later novelists have hesitated to touch a subject which the greatest of all historical novelists has adorned.

But this hesitation has not been Mr. Crawford's, and in "Via Crucis" he demonstrates his ability as an historical-novelist to the entire satisfaction of those readers who have followed him in his other works of pure imagination almost around the whole world. The story is complex. It is a romance of adventure; a delineation of character, worked out and developed from deep passions and strong emotions; an historical picture of great vividness, and a valuable study of the causes, progress, and results of the second crusade.

Great historical characters are brought before the reader; Eleanor, Queen of France, and afterward Queen of England, is the real heroine, though that position is nominally given to Beatrice Curbol, a creature of the author's imagination. The great Bernard of Clairvaux occupies a prominent place, and is depicted with a keen though loving hand. Kings and emperors, nobles and knights, all play their part in a story which has for its motive the fortunes of a young Englishman, who finds his simple faith and straightforward honesty opposed to the deceit and treachery of courts. That he becomes a knight, and finally wins the lady of his choice, is a matter of course, but before this is accomplished he passes through many adventures in England, France, Rome, Constantinople, and finally in Jerusalem. Treachery and worse meet him everywhere, but his true faith and simple loyalty overcome all his foes and keep him out of the traps set for him.

In "Via Crucis" Mr. Crawford has a theme of the noblest character, and he has risen to the demands of the subject. The book has a distinct charm in addition to and apart from the story. The style is as bright and sparkling as ever, but it combines these qualities with a dignity and seriousness befitting the high nature of the subject. The second crusade was badly directed, and its results were brought to naught, but its motive was noble. The noblest enterprise the Christian could engage in was defeated by envy and jealousy, and to-day the Turk rules the Holy Land, as he has done for a thousand years, because Christians cannot unite on a plan for its deliverance. The chief jealousy that frustrated the object of the Crusade was the Greek Empire. That empire paid the penalty by falling under the assaults of these very Turks, and the Sultan has since ruled in the city of Constantine. The thoughtful reader cannot peruse "Via Crucis" without thinking of this, and involuntarily the question comes to his mind, "Will the walls of San Sophia, the church of Holy Wisdom, ever again echo to the songs of Christian worshippers?" The Turk's power in Europe has been much reduced in recent years, but he is still maintained in Constantinople by the jealousies of Christian nations.

Parson Kelly. By A. E. W. Mason and Andrew Lang. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Pp. 417. Price, $1.50.

The historical novel is just now decidedly in the ascendant. Our best writers are devoting themselves to it assiduously, and are producing important results. The best novels of our day are more or less historical, and some of them deserve to rank very high in the list of such fiction. The book before us is a novel of this type and of the best sort. It has plot enough to sustain the interest, and its literary style is excellent. Its scenes are laid in France and England in the early days of George I. The intrigues of that stirring time are skillfully woven into the story and furnish an abundance of exciting incident. The characters are excellently drawn; that of Lady Oxford is a masterpiece, and well deserves to be classed among the notable women of fiction. The hero, from whom the book takes its name, is a renegade Irish parson, an ardent agent of the Pretender, and a sharer in many plots; not perhaps a model clergyman, but a very lovable fellow and good at heart. Historically, the book is accurate so far as we can judge, and presents a very life-like portrait of those times. It ought to be widely read.

Religio Pictoris. By Helen Bigelow Merriman. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.50.

Quaint old Sir Thomas Browne's Religio Medici evidently gave the impulse to this book. Indeed the author declares as much. Under artistic terms, and from an artist's point of view, we have an earnest, reverent, and able discussion of religion. In the chapter entitled, "The Ensemble" the author brings out in beautiful manner that a person alone, separate, could scarcely be called a person. Only as related to all others and to the whole do we begin to exist, and the fullness of life only comes when in relation to Him who holds all together, even God. For the true artist discovers that "he cannot represent anything aright so long as he disregards the law of the whole, but when he has once accepted its principles he finds that he can represent anything in the visible universe by means of them; the spirit of the whole empowers him, and he feels a sense of infinite freedom and possibility." (P. 46) In speaking of the treatment of details by an artist, where he changes, expunges, parts for the benefit of the picture as a whole, the author brings out the power and value of sacrifice. "Artistic faith lies in the conviction that the opposition of all elements is only apparent, and exists to further the purposes of higher expression. . . . This leads him to rejoice in sacrifice, as he relinquishes a lesser perfection for the sake of a greater one." "We find this to be the law of sacrifice: never sacrifice for its own sake, but sacrifice in view of some greater thing to be attained." So in discussing personality, and our hesitation in entering fully into our relations with God, there is brought out the truth that the only thing in us which has any real value is the eternal, which cannot be taken from us. The advantages and helpfulness of going apart daily and meditating are stated in strong language. "Are we willing to take fifteen minutes out of the best part of our day, and, entering the temple of white light within us, hold at bay all our cares and fears, till they sink into quietness and leave us alone with God?" "Religio Pictoris" would be an appropriate gift to the intellectually and artistically inclined, for it is both stimulating and suggestive. The publishers have done their part also in making it a beautiful book.

Famous Violinists of To-day and Yesterday. By Henry C. Lahee.

The National Music of America and its Sources. By Louis C. Elson. Illustrated. Boston: L. C. Page & Co.

Among the series of books which it is so much the custom of the day to issue, a noticeably valuable and entertaining one is the "Music Lovers' Series." Two recent additions to its list of books are "Famous Violinists of To-day and Yesterday," and "The National Music of America, and its Sources." Both volumes are attractively printed and bound, and admirably illustrated with portraits. In "Famous Violinists," the author, Henry C. Lahee, has set aside his original plan of arranging the chapters according to schools, and has followed the chronological order of birth. Paganini, Ole Bull, Joachim, "Violinists of To-day," and "Women as Violinists," are among the most notable divisions. Louis C. Elson, already known as a writer on musical subjects, is the author of the second volume. The book is filled with valuable and unfamiliar knowledge, covering the history of music in America—its beginnings and its growth. The chapters relating to the history of American National Songs show painstaking research. There is a long list of illustrations and music, in photogravure and fac-simile.

The Trinity Course of Church Instruction. New York: Jas. Pott & Co. Price, 25 cts. net.

The Rev. C. M. Beckwith, of Trinity Church, Galveston, gives to the Church in the United States, under the above title, the method followed by him in teaching Christian doctrine to the young by means of the Book of Common Prayer. The course is divided into four grades, and the amount of work for each division carefully mapped out. The Prayer Book is the exclusive basis of instruction. Leaflets, text books, or any other helps, are ruled out as needless. Part of the scheme is a careful examination, oral or written, at the end of each quarter, of the ground gone over in class. This examination is conducted by the rector. Samples of the questions proposed by Mr. Beckwith are given at length, and enable one to gain a fair notion of the method followed by him in imparting to the Church's children her system of Faith and worship and morals, as contained in the Prayer Book. Clergymen and other Sunday school workers will find valuable suggestions and helps in the "Trinity Course." We commend it to their notice as being simple and practicable.

Peggy. By Laura E. Richards. Illustrated by Ethelred B. Barry. Boston: Dana Estes & Co. Price, $1.25.

A new book by the author of "Captain January" and "Melody" is always sure, in advance, of appreciative readers. The heroine of this story is a wholesome, breezy, honest young girl, whose acquaintance is made as she stands upon the threshold of a new life. An account of her first day at boarding school forms the first chapter. It may be thought by older readers that, for the sake of dramatic effect, the writer has heightened delights and deepened the shadows on her canvas. However that may be, few girls will fail to find the story an absorbingly interesting one, and Peggy a most lovable character.

The Poetry of American Wit and Humor. Selected by R. L. Paget. Boston: L. C. Page & Co.

Besides the highly polished, the witty and effective verse of Dr. Holmes (and John G. Saxe, there are specimens included of humorous poets who may seem to many readers more truly representative of native American humor. One can imagine a Londoner, for instance, reading with great approval certain of these bits of unconventional native verse. "How Sary 'Fixes Up' Things," by Albert Biglow Paine; one of Uncle Remus' songs, or the "Ballad of the Green Old Man," to chose at random, could never be mistaken for the products of any but American soil. The European world no longer laughs at the American; but, thanks to the novel life and the fresh, vivid way of presenting the facts in that life, laughs with the American.

The King's Jester: and other Short Plays for Small Stages. By Caro Atherton Dugan. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.50.

The author of this book of plays for amateurs has had the purpose of filling an obvious want. It is the experience of amateurs and promoters of school entertainments that few plays are adapted to presentation on small stages, even when the words and "business" of the drama are suitable. There are twelve given here, with music, hints for costuming, and careful, minute stage directions. One of the best is "The Flight of the Sun Goddess," a Japanese idea. Others are "Undine," "The Sleeping Beauty," "Cinderella," "The Gypsy Girl of Hungary," "Pandora," "The Queen's Coffer," and "The Apple of Discord."

The Secret of Gladness. By J. R. Miller, D.D. New York: T. Y. Crowell & Co. Price, 60 cts.

Hope and cheerfulness pervade this little work. Nature is beautiful, but the loftier side of humanity—the virtues and kindnesses, the love and friendships—are still more beautiful. All these, perforce, must be carried on and developed in the next world. There are full-page and vignette illustrations, which add to the attractiveness of this little optimistic volume.

Family Prayers. By the Rt. Rev. Ashton Oxenden, D.D., and the Rev. C. B. Ramsden. New York: Thomas Whittaker. Pp. 236. Price, 75 cts.

These well-known family prayers by Bishop Oxenden have the advantage of clear simplicity of language with directness of supplication, and rather more than the usual brevity obtaining in such manuals. They are arranged daily, morning and evening, for four weeks' use, and have an addendum of special forms for "occasional" use.

The Little Fig Tree Stories. By Mary Halleck Foote. With illustrations by the author. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.

These pretty stories of Western life have already appeared in the St. Nicholas Magazine, and are now gathered in this attractive volume, and sold for the benefit of the Children's Hospital at San Francisco. A lovely tone pervades all the nine stories, a deep spirituality moves beneath the outward forms, and any child will be the better for their perusal. The book, in its dainty white binding, is just the thing for a Christmas gift.

Mabel's Prince Wonderful, or A Trip to Storyland. By W. E. Cule. Illustrated by Will G. Mein. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.

This is a charming little Christmas story—one that will make Christmas brighter for every child who reads it—of a little girl who believed all the familiar old tales of our childhood's folklore. In a dream she finds herself in this old world, and all the delightful people live again for her. She is in the Enchanted Castle, and visits with the king, the prince, the Lord Chamberlain, and the rest, till she is charmed. The Fairy Godmothers, the Tin Soldier, Puss-in-Boots, the Three Bears, and many other old friends are there. The stroke of midnight breaks the spell, but The Child—who-believes had enjoyed a happy Christmas Eve, and so will many another dear child in whose hands this tale is placed.

THE publishing house of GEORGE W. JACOBS & Co., Philadelphia, has recently issued the following:

"THE STORY OF THE PRAYER BOOK." By the Rev. Allerton Murch. It is a carefully drawn history of the Book of Common Prayer, in three orderly divisions: First, concerning its Early Origins and Sources. Second, the English Prayer Book from 1549 to 1898, considered in sectional order of historic period, which affected its form. Third, the American Prayer Book, as exhibited in the Book of 1789, and as before us to-day in that of 1892. A clear and thoughtful chapter in conclusion, on the "Advantages of a Liturgy" argues gently, yet convincingly, the general value and public benefit arising from the use of a book with settled forms for worship in the congregation. [Pp 154, 60 cts. net.]

"THE TEMPLE OPENED": A Guide to the Book. By William Hugh Gill, D.D. Third edition. Dr. Gill has cast his instructions on the Word of God in this volume into a general catechetical form, thus treating the historical books of the Old Testament, the chapters on the Moral Law, the Theocracy, the Prophets, the Hebrew Captivities, and also the Books of the New Testament, in a manner which arrests the attention. Whilst the book will be found useful to many, it is not one adapted to continuous reading, but rather a resort for occasional needed study. [Price, $1.25]

"A LIFE OF ST. PAUL FOR THE YOUNG." By George Ludington Weed. This is a sterling and altogether admirable book; it is not written down to the young, but its teachings are couched in the simple and plain language of a scholar, so that none can fail to understand every word and phrase, and it is throughout replete with interest. The book contains over fifty page illustrations, besides two good maps of the great Apostle's missionary journeys. [Price, 50 cts.]

"A GROUP OF OLD AUTHORS," by Clyde Furst, is a capital literary attraction. The several studies, in order, are: "A Gentleman of King James' Day—Dr. John Downe"; "A Mediæval Love Story—Chaucer's Tale of Griselda"; "The Miraculous Voyage of St. Brendan"; "An Anglo-Saxon Saint—Aldhelm," and "The Oldest English Poem—the Beowulf." The contents of this tasteful little volume were originally prepared as academic studies, then adapted and used as lectures before popular audiences, and finally recast into their present form. [Price, $1.]

"A SWEET LITTLE MAID," by Amy E. Blanchard, is a sweet little story, and it has a number of good illustrations. [Price, $1.]

"STEPHEN THE BLACK," by Caroline H. Pemberton, has interest of a sort, yet its quality is not such as might call it especially to a place on the shelves of a Sunday school library. [Price, $1.]

"MASTER MARTIN," By Emma Marshall. With illustrations. This is a bright story of good tone, with life and movement in it that will hold a boy's attention.

NOTWITHSTANDING the great loss which the J. B. Lippincott Company sustained in the destruction by fire of their entire plant, except perhaps the plates, the energy which they have shown is remarkable. They at once secured the building 624 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, where they have furnished handsome offices, their entire clerical force being actively at work. Arrangements are also being made for a new manufacturing building to be occupied during the reconstruction, on a thoroughly modern scale, of the premises they formerly occupied. New supplies of the latest type are being purchased, and the standard of taste and excellence for which the Lippincott books have been famous, will be maintained and developed. Early in the coming year they hope to have ready a full stock of their important books, and they are always open for the consideration of manuscript.

Periodicals

The December issue of The Sanitarian reprints from The Medical News, a valuable paper by Dr. J. O. Cobb, of New Mexico, United States surgeon, on the arid regions of the United States for pulmonary tuberculosis. Information and advice are given which every physician who is called upon for such cases ought to know, and which invalids going to that climate ought to read. Another valuable paper is the abstract of proceedings of the American Public Health Association, recently held at Minneapolis.

The New England Magazine journeys to Old England this month and visits the original Boston, the mother city of the Massachusetts Hub. Canterbury cathedral, as the early home of Christianity, is described and illustrated. There are also some exquisite pictures of Old Brookfield and West Brookfield, Mass. "Boston Street Cries" is the title of another article, some of which the writer has reduced to musical notation. True, perhaps, to its traditions, the New England, except for its cover and one story and a poem, pays scant attention to the Christmas season.

"The Child Brought Up at Home" is the title of a very cleverly written manuscript which The Cosmopolitan Magazine prints in its December issue, as part of its series of Household Organization articles. More than four thousand mothers, scientists, and specialists, have already sent in manuscripts in competition for the prizes, amounting to nearly $3,000, offered by this magazine for articles for this series. A thrilling war story, by Conan Doyle, is one of the features of this issue. Frank R. Stockton, Maarten Maartens, Olive Schreiner, and Edgar Saltus also have stories and sketches in it.

We are always glad to welcome The Living Church Quarterly, an old friend, and indeed a relative of THE LIVING CHURCH, for many years published by the Young Churchman Company, Milwaukee. The Advent issue for 1900 contains in addition to the usual contents, portraits of all the Bishops-elect of the past year, and a very carefully prepared and valuable article on "The Parochial Work of the American Church." The compilation of this has involved a large correspondence, and much expert work on the part of the editors. It is something quite new in conception, and is admirably done. Price, 25 cents a year.

No one nowadays can be quite "up" with that phase of science which is popularly interesting without being a reader of Appleton's Science Monthly. It always has an attractive Table of Contents, but that for December is even more so than usual. One of the best things we have seen anent so-called Christian Science, is President Starr Jordan's "Education of the Neminist." "How Standard Time is Obtained," is an article that will be generally valuable and instructive. "Education in Foreign Countries," "Oyster Culture in the West," "Value of the Study of Art," "The Development of the American Newspaper," are some of the other topics treated. [D. Appleton & Co., New York. $5 00 per year.]

Blackwood's for November opens with a discussion of "Some Maxims of Napoleon," showing that the principles of warfare acted upon by that great military genius have not become obsolete, notwithstanding the improvements of modern days. In "The Far Islands" we have a good short story with a mystical or dream element. "Lord Jim, a Sketch," is continued, and promises well. A recent publication affords an opportunity for a defence of Lord Byron's earlier life. Africa is naturally enough the theme of two articles, one of which, "The Transvaal Twenty Years Ago," is an excellent contribution to the comprehension of the present war. "The Looker-on" deals directly with the war, as also, with his usual superior fashion, with the crisis in the Church. Among the other articles, "Under the Beard of Buchanan" deals with recent fiction. We have found the whole number full of interest.

In the Review of Reviews for December, Dr. Albert Shaw writes on "The School City—A Method of Pupil Self-Government." This is a system now in operation in many public schools throughout the country, by which training is given in the practical duties of citizenship. Gustav Kobbe, the Wagnerian student and critic, gives many curious and instructive facts relative to Wagner's views of America. A supplemental article outlines "The Season's Promise of Grand Opera." Both these articles are illustrated with portraits of the operatic stars of first magnitude. Mr. Horace B. Hudson contributes an account of the movement to establish a national forest park in Minnesota, near the headwaters of the Mississippi. "Guy V. Henry—A Knightly American," is the title of an appreciative character sketch, while the work of General Henry in Puerto Rico is highly commended in an article contributed by Dr. H.

K. Carroll, on "What Has Been Done for Puerto Rico Under Military Rule."

The Critical Review is very largely devoted to recent German productions, with an interesting article also on "Recent Norwegian Thought." A considerable space is devoted to a criticism of Professor Margoliouth's work on Ecclesiasticus, with the promise of a second notice. Parker's work on "Dionysius the Areopagite" comprising a translation and an attempt to defend the authorship as that of St. Paul's convert, is dealt with by Mr. McIntyre who has little patience with such views, though he fully acknowledges the importance of the writings of this unknown author. In a notice of several recent minor theological works, that of Newbolt, on "Religion," is dispatched rather scornfully. Professor Lewis Campbell's Gifford Lectures on "Religion in Greek Literature," is reviewed by the editor, Dr. Salmond, in an appreciative spirit, though not without criticism. To our mind, Professor Campbell attributes far too much ethical value to the Greek cults, but this is not Dr. Salmond's criticism. This Review is almost indispensable to advanced students of theology and philosophy. [T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh.]

The Journal of Theological Studies. October, 1899. Vol. I. No. 1. This new undertaking is likely to be of such importance to the students and clergy of the Church, that it is worthy of more than a passing notice. Under the editorship of Mr. C. H. Turner, of Magdalen College, aided by a committee consisting of some of the most eminent scholars of Oxford and Cambridge, such as Drs. Ince, Swete, Driver, Kirkpatrick, Lock, Moberly, Armitage Robinson, Sanday, Stanton, and others, it gives every promise of success. This initial number already contains articles which every scholar will hail with pleasure. Prof. Sanday treats of "Recent Research on the Origin of the Creed." He considers that the development of the independent forms of the Creed in East and West can be traced as far back as the middle of the second century. This is opposed to Harnack who holds that an Eastern and Western type of creed cannot be distinguished before the end of the third century. It remains true that the primitive Creed, before controversy compelled amplification, corresponded very closely to the Roman type; i. e., what we know as the Apostles' Creed. The Master of Balliol contributes an article on "Anselm's Argument for the Being of God." It is a criticism, and also a recasting, of the ontological argument, on lines which have their beginning in Plato, and such completion as is possible in the idealistic movement in modern philosophy. Mr. Bridge's article, "Some Principles of Hymn-Singing," should be carefully read and digested by all who have to do with the musical features of the Church service. There are two articles on the Acts of the Apostles, the first of which is a collection of all the difficulties which critics are still able to raise against the veracity of the book. Some of them are perverse enough. The second is a "Plea for an Early Date." The writer agrees with Salmon and some others, that it was written at about the end of St. Paul's ten years' imprisonment. This is a view which we cannot but believe will finally gain the day. It appears to be the intention of the editors to devote a considerable space to "Documents," and "Notes." Under the former head occurs the most striking feature of the present number. This is nothing less than the full Greek text of the Sacramentary of Bishop Sarapion, with an introduction and notes by Mr. Brightman who stands first among English liturgiologists. The prayers of the Mass have here been arranged in their proper order, so that the student can at a glance compare the successive forms with those of the liturgies already known. There are many points of much interest to liturgical students, not the least of which is the fact that this liturgy conforms much more closely to the Syrian and Asiatic type, than to that of St. Mark, which has been supposed to represent the primitive Egyptian liturgy. As Sarapion's book is dated about 350, it becomes probable that the peculiar features of the Egyptian rite are a late development, and do not indicate, as Dr. Neale supposed, a primitive character distinguishing the Church in Egypt from that of the East. The "Notes," contain much valuable matter. The most interesting perhaps to the larger number of students, is that on Eusebius of Vercelli who is shown to be the possible, or even probable, author of the Athanasian Creed. This Eusebius was a friend and disciple of St. Athanasius. The title of the creed would thus be abundantly accounted for. The review department deals with the recent Oxford edition of the Vulgate. This is followed, under the head of "Chronicle," by notices of publications on the Old Testament; and an interesting account of recent editions of patriotic works. The number closes with a statement of the contents of the principal theological periodicals, both English and foreign. This review fills a place heretofore unoccupied. Professor Swete, in a graceful preface, hopes it may find readers not among the clergy alone, but also among the educated laity. [The Macmillan Company, New York.]

HIGHER CRITICISM IN THE PULPIT.—An esteemed pastor said to us the other day: "I never introduce questions of Higher Criticism into my pulpit." That is a sound position. However interested the preacher may be, personally, in the subtleties of Biblical criticism, and whatever views he may hold regarding the so-called discoveries of modern investigation, the pulpit is not the place to air them. There may be a bereaved soul in the congregation—a sorrowing widow, perhaps—whose sole refuge from the desolation of despair is in the consolations of the Book; is it the part of a true minister of Jesus Christ to disturb her faith, to suggest distressing doubts, to rob her, in a word, of her only source of comfort? There may be a young man present who, having heard the sneers and innuendoes of the unbelieving world, is hovering between faith and skepticism; is it wise to hint at incertitudes in the Book which may be matters of harmless speculation to the trained mind, but to the immature judgment are proof positive that the Bible is not the Word of God, nor even "contains" it? It will be small satisfaction in the day of account to have displayed a little second-hand learning—which may be all wrong—in the pulpit, when none can answer, at the cost of sowing distress and doubt and infidelity among the weaklings of the flock. Preach the great truths of the Gospel, if you believe them. If you don't, your place is not in a Christian pulpit.

HARPER'S.—One of the saddest surprises for many years, was the announcement that the old publishing house of Harper & Brothers was in financial difficulty. For more than eighty years they have been an honor to the country, and the chief promoters of its literary development and culture. They published nothing that was not of high merit, and absolutely nothing that was not morally elevating. Though the liabilities appear to be surprisingly large, reported at over five millions, it is to be hoped that the old company may be reorganized and reconstructed upon its old lines and traditions, and go down to the future as it has come down from the past. There has never been any reason for complaint, unless in regard to Harper's Weekly; and no just complaint against that journal except because of political antagonisms. The weekly was entirely independent under the management of George William Curtis, and rose to one of the foremost places in the world's journalism; but under Mr. Schurz it has been needlessly angular and aggressive. It is highly satisfactory to learn that there will be no hitch in the progress of the business in any department, under strong and skillful hands.

Annie Elden: A Story

BY S. B. THORNTON

THERE was a great deal of sympathy expressed for James Elden when it became known to his acquaintances that he was losing his eyesight, by cataract. But after the first surprise of it was over, they gradually ceased to miss him and his wife from their circle, and as they moved very shortly into a quieter and less well-known locality, there were few enough to remember them.

They were very poor, that was the worst of it. James had lost money speculating, and now with the misery of his darkened sight, and a generally wretched condition of health, it seemed hard to know where to turn. He said to himself, often, in the dark hours of the night, which he felt to be the symbol of his future existence, that it would be such an easy thing to put an end to it all, and feel no longer the burden and responsibility of living. But there was always an obstacle—Annie. He loved her, he could not leave her. It seemed to him now that the ten years of their married life were but a week, and the first overwhelming happiness of the honeymoon not yet ended. He had been foolish, and now she had to suffer; it was the bitterest drop in his cup.

They had moved into a small house just outside of the city. It was very plain and crude, and he had begun to hate the existence in it.

It was late October, but the air was soft with the peculiar balminess of the South. There was as yet no hint of winter. The windows were open, and the man lay stretched upon a wicker lounge. Near him was a small stand with a typewriter, before which his wife sat.

"Annie!"

"Well?" She did not pause in the rapid clicking of the machine.

"You have on a gray dress, have you not?"

"Yes."

"I can just see it's gray." Then he muttered, "But you haven't had a new dress for so long, I might have known."

She got up and came to him, letting one of her hands rest upon his forehead. It was a white, delicate hand, with long, slim fingers. "It is the one you like, a Quaker dress you called it, James." She smiled as she spoke, a strained smile, in which her eyes took no part.

"You've worn it two years, Annie."

"Well, that's nothing; hadn't I better close the window, you might take cold?"

He caught her hand and kissed it. "Dear patient, loving fingers! When I married you, sweetheart, I never dreamed of this."

"Don't worry," she said. "I've such a good plot, James, in this story, any editor would be mad to reject it; I expect them all to clamor for my services after it comes out."

She resumed her seat, and the click, click of the machine went on. The light shining on the smooth coils of her hair gave to it the look of heavy gold. The soft color of her dress brought out the delicate tints of her skin, but her eyes were tired, with a look of terribly strained intensity in them. Presently her husband got up, and reached for his cane.

"I'm going to the doctor's, Annie; no, don't you come; go on with that plot which is to keep us out of the 'Marshalsea'; it's got to be strong to do that!"

"Let me go with you, the plot can wait." She took up her hat, and slipping her arm through his, crossed the road with him. It was only a few steps to the oculist's house. James went to him there, instead of to his office in the city.

"I'll come back in half an hour," she whispered, as the door opened.

She retraced her steps, with her head somewhat bent; she stopped once to look at a mass of brilliant chrysanthemums which made a gorgeous display in the yard of one of her wealthy neighbors. She had a passion for flowers.

It was five o'clock when she entered the house, and it would soon be time to see after dinner. But what was dinner in comparison with the terrible pain at her heart, the disappointment of it all. She had tried so hard; she worked faithfully, she knew that; she had given her time, her strength, her best effort to the work, and it had been for nothing. Her successes had been so few, her failures innumerable. She got up and crossed the room, glancing at the sheets of manuscript. "I am not original, I do not create; I am merely imitative, that is all."

She stooped and wiped a fleck of dust from the typewriter almost tenderly. James had given her that long ago, when she had taken up writing as a fad, and had been the president of the Woman's Press Club. How long ago it seemed, and what pastime that had been. He had given her everything, he had indulged every whim; had any woman a better right to love a husband than she? and now in his trouble she seemed so powerless, so useless!

The light shifted a little, and there were shadows where the sun had been. In them there was no longer so much gold about her hair, and her face looked more worn, more tired. If only James could go to New York, and have his eyes treated there! But where was the money to come from? It was all they could do to pay the oculist here, and he had not done any good; he was ready to give up the case. She buried her face in her hands. It seemed to her she had lived a lifetime of this trouble already; that past existence, a dream merely.

The half hour went by very quickly, so quickly that in it both dinner and her machine were forgotten. She met her husband coming laboriously towards the house. "What does he say?" She spoke eagerly, with a ring of hope to her voice.

"Oh, the same thing; he wants me to go to New York, or better still, Germany; there's as much chance of one as the other."

"You are not complimentary to my powers, sir." It was wonderful what gaiety she could thrust into her voice, but it was well that her face was all but hidden from him. They were on the little porch, and he put his arm about her. "I know you are a wonderful woman, Annie," he said, and then he went in and sat down heavily; it was an effort now, this little walk.

Annie did not write any more that night; the gigantic plot which was to accomplish so much was left untouched. They sat together talking, the woman trying with her strong, brave spirit to strengthen him. It was a gloomy outlook; there were debts to be paid, there were expenses to meet, and they were very much alone.

"I suppose I could borrow," he said gloomily; "there's one or two men, I know, would lend."

"Oh, don't," she cried, with a little shudder. "We owe so much already."

She lay awake a long time after her husband was asleep, thinking. The moonlight showed itself upon the floor, and she could see the stars plainly through the open window. The calm peace and beauty of the night seemed to bring the peace and beauty of infinity with it. The presence of a strength greater than her own, the strength of infinity, seemed to settle down upon her. There was a rest promised, and the longer the labor the more perfect the rest. She fell asleep, with the moonlight shining on her face.

The next day she went into the city; it was there that she met one of the members of the Press Club. She was a warm-hearted, affectionate little woman, and she greeted Annie effusively. "We miss you ever and ever so much," she said. "We have no one who takes your place, and; she added with a laugh, "we have to have all our typewriting done now, there is no one so accommodating as you were."

Mrs. Elden looked at her pretty, smiling face, and a bold resolve seized her. "I wish you would give it, the work, to me," she said.

The other's face expressed her astonishment.

"Do you really mean it? Why, Annie Elden." Then as the flush slowly covered the other's face, she went on quickly: "Why, of course we will, as an ex-member of the club, you would be most suited to the work, and I'll send you manuscripts, amateur affairs. I have so many friends who are suffering with aspirations, as Kipling puts it."

"The idea," she said to herself, as she turned away. "The idea of Annie Elden doing such a thing." And then she remembered that her husband had had trouble, and a feeling of compassion, mixed with a certain satisfaction that it was not she, swept over her. But she sent Annie the work, and manuscripts, too.

The woman worked steadily. She wondered if she were wrong not to tell her husband to what she had resorted. But how could she! He would never consent to it, and his pride, his faith in her, was so great. And now all the happiness of his life was centred in her.

He lay with bandaged eyes, listening to the sound of her machine. "Read me what you have written, sweetheart," he said now and then. And she took up pages of her own and read. Her strong, truthful soul recoiled from the petty deception she practiced, but a weaker element somewhere blended in her nature, made her shrink from revealing it all to him.

"I ought to be doing something," he said restlessly, but she pleaded with him, "Wait until you are a little stronger, James, until your eyes are better, then we can see to that; for the present we can get along with what we have."

But it was hard to be brave before the trouble; her heart sank, and cried out in fierce rebellion, often. The God to whom she prayed seemed so far off; was He in His heaven at all?

One day as she sat alone, finishing a bit of work, there came a timid, frightened looking girl to see her. Annie was tired, she felt the irritation of the interruption.

"Mrs. McLane sent me," the girl began, as she sat down. "I have a manuscript, a little story, I want copied; can you do it?"

"Yes," said Annie.

She took the manuscript in her hand. "Have you written before?" she asked.

"No, that is, only things for myself. If—if it is not good, will you mind telling me?" A painful blush spread over her face, as she added: "I have not shown it to any one."

After she was gone Annie closed the machine, and throwing herself on the lounge, began to read the manuscript. Such a crude, hopeless style, such a faulty setting, and yet what originality, what ingenuity. Who would have thought that shrinking child capable of it! When she had finished, she laid the sheets down, and a sudden, uncontrollable impulse swept over and took possession of her.

As it was, this pitiful little story, who but herself would have the patience to read into it, through its weak beginning, on to the real merit of the plot. With a few skillful touches, what could she not do with it? She could transform it, it would be good, it would be more than good. It would be far better than anything she had ever done. It could command a place boldly, she knew that. She was a good critic, she had been a merciless judge of her own creations, she was not mistaken now. She sat up and looked eagerly at the pages. How had such a mixture of good and bad, strength and weakness, ever come together. But ah! what could she not do with it. With the bare idea of it, she could gain what she had prayed for, and what had been denied her, success. Her hands trembled as she held the sheets, her eyes were bright, her cheeks burnt with a spot of brilliant color in them. And she was so tired of the discouragement, the dull labor which seemed her portion. With this it might be ended! Her heart beat, her hands tightened on the sheets.

The sunlight came in through the open window, shining on the masses of golden-rod with which the room was decorated. It lay in heavy bars of light upon the floor, it rested in oblique rays upon the face of a pictured Madonna which hung above her desk. A bird's note sounded outside, and somewhere near there was a child laughing.

Her hold upon the sheets loosened. It seemed to her that from afar off the words came to her, like the fluttering of a leaf, like the subtle odor of lilies on a midsummer night, like the sound of music that is almost silenced, "This is not your rest."

The pages fluttered to her feet, she dropped her head upon her hands. She felt a stifling horror of herself upon her, a horror and shame, which made her feel cold, with a sense as of lead weights upon her heart.

Her husband came in a little later; he was very tired, and his voice had almost a ring of despair in it. "Annie, come here, I want you."

She came, putting her arms about him, and pulling his head down upon her shoulder. "You are my strength," he said.

She did not reply, but she was glad he could not see the pain upon her face. Once or twice she looked at the sheets of paper scattered on the floor, and shivered.

She worked steadily with the manuscript; she did more than she had ever done before. She added to it here and there, as the thought suggested. She corrected and revised. When it was completed, she looked at it silently. She had made what reparation she could.

It was scarcely more than finished, when its owner came for it. She sat down while Annie carefully covered the sheets.

"I have made some changes," Mrs. Elden said, her voice sounding hard and odd to herself. Your story would not have done as it was; it will do now. Where will you send it, it is very good?"

"I have a friend who is an editor," said the girl, blushing. "I shall send it to him. You know the house," she mentioned the name; "do you think I am aspiring too high?"

"No," said Annie, "take it there, it will succeed."

She turned away; she did not notice the money the girl held out timidly. It seemed almost impossible to offer this woman money.

"Oh, don't pay me this time," she cried, looking at the other with terribly pathetic eyes. "Next time I copy for you you may. Wait until then."

Perhaps the girl understood her better than another might have done. She fastened her pocket book, saying very gently: "Thank you, you have been very kind," and lifting the manuscript, she went out.

The wind was blowing a little, and the air was chilly; she drew her wrap closer. Inside, Annie stood at her window and watched her. The leaves were falling from the trees; already there was a heap of them across the road. Without doubt the summer was dead.

It was two weeks later that Annie opened the door for the same visitor. "Have you something more to be copied?" she said with a smile. Her eyes were clear and full of light, her face had no longer any pain.

"No." Then she went on to tell her story, how she had told the editor just how it had been, because she had seen herself what the difference meant. "I told him it was not my story at all," she added, with a little laugh. "He needs a reviser and corrector, and he thought any one who succeeded so with that story of mine, must be fully competent. He told me to ask you. The pay is by the month." She mentioned the sum; it startled Annie.

"I hope you do not mind my asking you," went on the girl. "I somehow felt you would understand." She did not add how much her own words and influence had done to secure the office.

"I do understand, I am very grateful to you. I—I hardly know what to say; will you let me think a little?"

She felt that there would be a struggle to gain her husband's consent, but she realized, too, what it all meant to them both, and she relied upon her own strength.

"I have more appreciation than capacity," she told him, "and the training will be so good, it will help me in every way; surely you will not refuse me."

But she did not hold the position which he dreaded to see her occupy, long. When there was money enough from it for the operation, James Elden went to New York and was treated, and with such success that before many months had passed he could look out upon the world again, and better still, upon his wife's face.

With the return of his health and sight he began to slowly struggle back to his old footing.

Annie did not write again, neither was she the president of any woman's club. "I have done with ambition," she told her husband. "I never knew before where it could lead one—to the very brink of dishonor."

"But it was not all ambition," she added to herself, "it was love."

BACTERIOLOGISTS devote themselves to the detection, isolation, and destruction of bacteria, and, strange to say, they do not seem to have given much attention to the danger that lurks in the ordinary articles of household use. For example, the common house broom is both the habitation and breeding place for whole colonies of bacteria, and cases of disease have been traced to this apparently inoffensive article. At Konigsberg, a course, in bacteriology is given by a physician, in which he maintains that the strictest sanitary and hygienic conditions in things pertaining to the house should be inculcated, and in this country in elsewhere, there are many lectures given on the Boston Cooking School, and doubtless bacteriology. The refrigerator is one of the danger spots, for bacteriologists tell us that the minutest organisms may thrive even in melted ice and putrefactive bacteria, once gaining access to the household refrigerator, will breed and contaminate butter, milk, meat, and other food kept therein. Cupboards and closets also afford excellent breeding places for the ever-present microbe, and housekeepers will do well to look to such articles as refrigerators, brooms, dusters, etc.—Scientific American.

Shooting a Grizzly

A QUARTER of a mile farther on and we stopped on a big, flat-topped granite boulder, which barely permitted us a view over the tops of a juniper thicket, an acre or two in extent. It was a warm, sunny nook, open to the south, the bushes unusually large, and loaded with berries.

"They ought to be bear here if any place," said Paystreak Johnson, in a low tone, as we looked over the thicket. "Sst!" and he clasped my arm just as I was about to speak. "See that thick clump off to the right? Watch it close. The wind aint strong enough to shake it the way it was shakin' a minit ago." As he spoke one of the branches was bent down by some invisible force, held for a moment or two, and then, released, sprang back to its place.

"Bear, mebbe; mebbe a lion; mebbe a buck; but I think bear. Now, now, son; don't git in a hurry or you'll git flustered, and that's kin to rattled. I'm goin' to give you the first shot, and the chances is that you'll have hurryin' enough to do; he's busy, so go slow and keeful. Take out your six shooter and leave it here on the rock; you won't need it, and it might handicap you; now loosen your knife. Magazine of your rifle full? Ca'tridge in the breech? All right; now listen. You slip down off of here and sneak around there to the right; when you see him, cut loose, and don't wait to see if you kill, but turn and come for this rock like fire a beatin' tan bark. When you git here, don't try to climb up; you might interfere with my shootin'. Dodge around it. I'll stand here where he can see me, and the minit I shoot you turn and commence shootin', for he'll charge me. Now, don't git rattled, and remember, run straight for the sun. Savey?"

I had gone probably seventy-five yards when I saw him, a huge "he" silvertip; he was possibly twenty five yards ahead, under a tall juniper across a bit of open ground under the bushes. He was sitting contentedly on his haunches, reaching up his great, hairy paws, pulling the branches down and stripping the berries into his jaws. I waited until he reached for another bough, which necessitated throwing his head up and back, then I brought the base of his skull directly between the "hindsights" and fired. For an instant I disobeyed orders, as I thought I had him "dead to rights." I saw him clap one big paw to the back of his head, whirl as if on a pivot, drop on all fours, and with a horrible growl charge for the little smoke cloud. I did not wait any longer; I did the pivot act myself, and ran towards the sun, yelling: "Lookout! Lookout! We're a comin'! We're a comin'! I did not stop to consider either grammar or pronunciation. Somehow my return passage through the bushes did not seem at all difficult, and as I neared the boulder, Paystreak spoke as calmly as if directing one of the miners where to drill a hole.

"To the right, son; dodge around the boulder; he's right after you."

I obeyed. The next instant I heard a rifle shot, and turned just in time to see Paystreak leap off to the left, as the now infuriated bear sprang on the boulder. I fired at his great shaggy flank, and like an echo of my shot came the report of Paystreak's rifle. The bear must have recognized in me his original tormentor, for he jumped from the rock directly toward me; I fired quickly and—ran.

"Dodge around that bush and double back, son; dodge and double back to me," shouted Paystreak, following, for he knew that it was useless to shoot into that shaggy rump. Come to think of it, he acted as if he was a bit excited then, though I didn't notice it at the time. I started to obey, but as I doubled I stepped on a loose, round stone, and down I went, rolling completely over on the short side hill. I had a glimpse of the hairy monster, with gaping, bloody jaws, almost over me; wondered if he could kill me with one blow of that powerful forearm; then something glittered in the sunlight, I heard a "chug," a fierce snarl; then Paystreak's cheery voice:

"Up and shoot, son; up and shoot if you kin!" I revived instantly, and catching up my rifle, scrambled to my feet to see the bear staggering toward Paystreak, who was "backing off," struggling with a refractory cartridge that had become jammed in the slide. I fired, not at any particular spot, but at the bear; he turned on me, and I began backing just as my partner threw another cartridge in the breech. He raised his rifle, aimed quickly, but steadily, and fired; the grizzly straightened to his full height, towering seven or eight feet, swayed for a moment, then crashed down into a bush, quivered a moment, and was still. Paystreak sat on a rock, grinned, wiped the perspiration from his face with his old cotton bandanna, then drew out his old black pipe.

"How did you turn him when he was just on me? I did not hear your shot?" I asked. He arose, walked around to the other side of the bear, and pointed to the buckhorn hilt of a knife between the third and fourth ribs.

"Didn't have time to take another step, jes' had to sock it to him far as I c'd reach; twasn't quite far enough for'ard, but it did the business." I only held out my hand.

"Oh, pshaw; that's all right, pard," he said, as we "shook" heartily. "'Twasn't much to do, though I 'low 'twas sort of squeamish for a minit."

An examination of the bear showed that my first shot had struck him in the fleshy part of the neck. "An inch too far to the left and too low," said Paystreak. His first shot, while standing on the rock, owing to the lunging, lurching motion of the bear, had made only a deep flesh wound in the left foreshoulder, instead of breaking the animal's spine. His second shot, while the bear was on the rock, had broken the lower jaw; his third shot, at the butt of the ear, had settled it. My other shots were all in the paunch and flanks. I had shot to hit the bear, regardless.

"Tain't always a safe proposition to do that, son; a bear like that'll pack away all the lead you c'n put there."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"O, my dear daughter" (to a little girl of six), "you should not be frightened and run from the goat. Don't you know that you are a little Christian Scientist?" "But mamma" (excitedly), "the billy goat doesn't know it!"

CHAPTER VII.

AFTER dinner Mr. Hardy always went to the library to smoke and read, but this evening he had hardly settled himself in the large leather chair before the fire, when the heavy portieres were parted, and Virginia glanced in.

"Well, daughter," he said kindly, laying aside his paper and rising to help her to a chair, "what is it now?"

Virginia seated herself in a low rocking-chair beside him, and leaned her cheek on his hand as it rested on the back of her chair.

"It's Bonnie Castle, papa," she answered, "I want it please."

If she expected him to look startled or perplexed, she was disappointed. Instead he leaned back his head and laughed heartily.

"You, do?" he said teasingly, twisting a yellow curl around his fingers. And whatever is the latest scheme you and Brown Eyes have hatched out up in the nest? And what on earth will you do with Bonnie Castle when you get it?"

So Virginia unfolded the whole plan to him, and he listened more attentively as she went on telling of the hope of a summer home supported by the girls, and of the waifs who were to be brought way across the great lake to have a dash of sunshine and brightness thrown into their lives; and so eloquently did she plead their cause, that Mr. Hardy's face grew grave and earnest, and he looked thoughtfully down at his daughter, not thinking so much about waifs and Bonnie Castle, perhaps, as he was about the great change in his daughter. This bright-eyed, enthusiastic girl, so different from the listless, discontented Virginia of a few months ago.

"Girlie, you could have twenty Bonnie Castles if I had them to give," he said gently, "if they would make you as happy as you look to-night."

"Oh, papa, I am always happy—in a way," she answered with a quick little sigh. "I like to join in the girls' work instead of lying still all by myself day after day, and then, too, Madge helps me to be better. If it were not for one thing—that other, you know, dear—I would be perfectly happy nowadays."

She was sorry as soon as she said it; sorry because she feared it would bring a shadow over their pleasant chat, but Mr. Hardy only rose and crossed the room to the window, where the bright winter moonlight shone in through the fretwork of the silvery frost on the glass, and he was silent for some time. At last he spoke, but without turning his head.

"It was his own choice, remember, Virginia. He made it freely, and must stand by the result, as I told him then. If he loved us as well as we do him, he never would have acted as he did. You must not worry your heart out over him."

"But where is he, papa? Doesn't he ever write to you or mamma?" and Virginia's face was white and anxious as she bent forward in her chair.

"I do not know where he is, daughter," answered her father, and his stern tones trembled ever so slightly, as though he were striving to retain control of himself. "And there has been no word of him the past year."

"It's a year last Christmas," said Virginia, dreamily, "and its harder and lonelier this winter than last without him, isn't it, papa?"

"He made his choice," replied Mr. Hardy briefly, and after a minute he added, as if to dismiss the subject, "When does your ladyship wish the Castle to be ready for its guests?"

"Just through July and August, when there is no school; but you see, it will need lots of preparation to have it a success, so we are going to begin at once and raise money."

For the second time that evening Mr. Hardy had a laugh all to himself.

"Money, money, always money," he said.

"I never saw such a mercenary lot of little misers in all my life."

"Well, we always earn it," assured Virginia, earnestly.

"Yes, get up some fearful and wonderful entertainment, and then beguile all your poor fathers into buying ten tickets-apiece. Never mind, though," as he bent to kiss her good night, "we'll patronize the cause of the waifs, and hope that some one can give them a good time, for the sake of our own waif, eh, girlie? Good night. Bonnie Castle will be ready the first of July, sharp."

It was good news to carry to Madge and Tony waiting anxiously up in the nest to hear the result of her mission to the library, and they at once started in to plan.

Every one in Ottawa knew Bonnie Castle just the same as they knew the big house on the bluffs. It was the prettiest of any of the summer cottages down on the shores of Lake Michigan, and was built right in the heart of the hills and ravines, with a view from its quaint gables of the broad, blue waters below. It had been built especially for Virginia, and at first life had been more of a novelty for her there, but one cannot be happy all alone, and Mrs. Hardy did not care to stay long at the Castle, so it happened that after the first month, it had been deserted last summer.

"The only thing is, as Evelyn says," Madge remarked, "how are we going to do the cooking and housework and everything, and look after the children?"

Virginia's smooth brow wrinkled in a perplexed way.

"We need a matron or directress, don't we? Then two of us or more ought to stay each week, taking turns, you know, and help her, and the rest of the girls ought to be there every spare moment they have."

And how would it do for the boys to have a big tent near," Tony suggested, "and they might come in handy, too."

"Splendid," said Virginia. "You and Madge must tell the whole thing tomorrow at the Rookery, and win them all over to our plan. How we will work this summer, Madge! You and I will go down there and live all the time."

Madge smiled, and shook her head.

"Maybe not all summer," she said. "Mamma said in her last letter she was ever so much better and might come home in the spring. If she does, then I must look after her."

"Unless she is well and strong," added Virginia firmly, when suddenly an idea struck her, and she cried: "Oh, Madge, and if she is she could be our matron at the home."

"And Miss Pugsley to help," put in Tony. "Wouldn't they run things elegantly, though?"

Madge did not speak, but the look in her eyes was enough to show how she felt over this new plan. It did seem as though all the world, her world, were growing brighter and sunnier every day, and more full of promise for the future. After Tony and Virginia had said good-night, she went to her room and read that last letter through again. It was from Palm Beach, Florida, and she kissed the fine, pretty handwriting as if it were the dear hand that had traced it.

"My own dear little girl," it ran, "your letter and Tony's came to me just as I was thinking of you both, and was wishing you were with me. It is very beautiful in Florida, and I am recovering my health fast and sure; but sometimes I feel as if I would give it all up for a chance of seeing my two brownies again, and lying on the sofa in the little old green house down by the bridge. Of course you are both happy, you could not help but be in your new home, and it is best for you, but mother will be home before long, and then we will try life together again, in the spring, I hope."

The spring! Madge wondered whether that would mean March, April, or May, one month or three to wait. She knew so well what her mother meant when she spoke of the longing to be in the old home, in spite of beautiful surroundings. Looking around her pretty room to-night, with its white enameled bed and furniture, its walls with pink rosebuds climbing up airy trellises, and all its dainty pictures and ornaments, she felt that compared to the plain little old home, it didn't, as Tony would have said, amount to a row of crooked pins.

A Touching Incident

A TOUCHING little incident of a birthday celebration of Whittier occurred in connection with the visit of Mrs. Julia Houston West, the celebrated oratorio singer, to the Quaker poet.

After dinner Mrs. West was asked to sing, and seating herself at the piano, she began the beautiful ballad of "Robin Adair," singing it, as she can, with all the longing and heart-break of the words and music in her voice. She had hardly begun before Mr. Whittier's pet dog came into the room, and seating himself by her side, watched her as if fascinated, and listened with a delight unusual in an animal. When she finished, he came and put his paw very gravely into her hand and licked her cheek.

"Robin takes that as a tribute to himself," said Mr. Whittier. "He also is 'Robin Adair.'"

It was true. That was the dog's name, and he evidently considered that he was the hero of the song. From that moment, during Mrs. West's visit, he was her devoted attendant. He kept by her side when she was indoors, and accompanied her when she went out to walk. When she went away he carried her satchel in his mouth to the gate, and saw her depart with every evidence of reluctance and distress.—Christian Register.

COFFEE THE CAUSE

of Heart Trouble

"Three cases of heart trouble that have been relieved by stopping coffee and taking Postum Food Coffee, have come under my notice. First, my own case. I suffered greatly from palpitation and irregularity of the heart. My physician ordered me to leave off coffee, and when I took up Postum Food Coffee in its place, the heart trouble was soon entirely cured, and I find the Postum to be just as the doctor said, 'not only harmless, but very beneficial.'"

"A gentleman friend had much the same trouble with his heart. I suggested that he try Postum. After the first cup at breakfast, he said: 'I don't want any more of it.' Inquiry proved that it had not been properly boiled, so I prepared a cup for him, strictly according to directions, and he pronounced it 'delicious' and 'better than coffee.' Mrs. —, of Paducah, suffered much the same way, and has had the same experience in recovering from heart trouble by the discontinuance of coffee and taking up the use of Postum. For private reasons, I request that you withhold my name from publication." —, Princeton, Ky.

HEART DISEASE

Some Facts Regarding the Rapid Increase of Heart Trouble.

Heart trouble, at least among the Americans, is certainly increasing, and while this may be largely due to the excitement and worry of American business life, it is more often the result of weak stomachs, of poor digestion.

Real organic disease is incurable; but not one case in a hundred of heart trouble is organic.

The close relation between heart trouble and poor digestion is because both organs are controlled by the same great nerves, the Sympathetic and Pneumogastric.

In another way, also, the heart is affected by the form of poor digestion which causes gas and fermentation from half-digested food. There is a feeling of oppression and heaviness in the chest, caused by pressure of the distended stomach on the heart and lungs, interfering with their action; hence arises palpitation and short breath.

Poor digestion also poisons the blood, making it thin and watery, which irritates and weakens the heart.

The most sensible treatment for heart trouble is to improve the digestion and to insure the prompt assimilation of food.

This can be done by the regular use after meals of some safe, pleasant, and effective digestive preparation, like Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, which may be found at most drug stores, and which contain valuable, harmless, digestive elements in a pleasant, convenient form.

It is safe to say that the regular, persistent use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at meal time will cure any form of stomach trouble except cancer of the stomach.

Full-sized package of these tablets sold by druggists at 50 cents. Little book on stomach troubles mailed free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

Finance and Commerce

THE only change in the business and financial situation is, to use a Hibernianism, "more of the same." In all departments business continues active. The weather so far is hardly seasonable, and occasions some complaint among retailers, and if it continues may affect to a slight degree the general holiday trade, but the whole cause of complaint is too slight to be justifiable for it now seems probable that holiday indulgence will be larger and more general than ever before. In the wholesale departments of manufacture and distribution, both volume and prices are being well maintained.

In cotton, for the raw material there has been some reaction in prices. The last advance reached about the same level of previous high mark, at which the force seemed to exhaust, and a steady market at a shade off the tap has prevailed since. Print cloths advanced to 3¼, and advances in other grades of cotton cloth are quite general. In wool there is a large consumptive demand, and prices are tending upward. In iron, preparation for the next year's business are on a large scale, many contracts have been made, and it is thought the entire output of ore will be needed, and will possibly be insufficient. Prices are, however, only barely steady, with possible indications of easing off at some points.

Wheat rallied two cents during the last week, but has lost half of it. There has been a better class of investment buying induced mainly by the decided falling of in receipts at primary markets. They are only about half what they were last year. The winter wheat farmers haven't the wheat to sell, and the farmers in the Northwest are better able to hold their wheat than ever before. Still the world's stocks of wheat which form the speculative load are large, and are quite a burden to the speculative organism.

As we have before called your attention, the world's wheat markets must rise and fall as one, and the two last world's wheat crops have aggregated a large surplus over the world's estimated consumption, and it is this surplus that has been accumulating, and now causes depression. The markets for corn and provisions are about steady.

The financial situation does not improve. Money in Wall street ranges from day to day at from 6 per cent. to 15 per cent. The ratio in London is still 6 per cent.; in Berlin, it is 6 per cent. with fears that it will soon go to 7 per cent. The bank statements continue unfavorable. We see no prospects for improvement until after the disbursements of the January interest and then it is not unlikely that exportations of gold may set in to plague the holders of stocks. Wall street has been quite depressed. Of course the industrialists have felt it most, and have suffered in some instances severe declines, but the whole list has been affected; stocks have been pretty persistently bulled for two years, and have had about all the "prosperity" injected into them that could reasonably be expected.

AMERICAN manufactures are selling to the outside world over a hundred million dollars' worth of iron and steel in the calendar year 1899, or 20 million dollars in excess of any earlier year in their history. The October statement of exports of manufactures of iron and steel, just completed by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, shows for the month of October an increase of over 2 million dollars as compared with October of last year, and for the 10 months an increase of almost 20 million dollars as compared with the corresponding month of last year.

Remodeling a Gown

becomes a pleasing occupation, provided it was stitched on a Singer Automatic. The elastic seam made by this machine is perfectly safe when locked, but can be taken apart in an instant when unlocked. Thus its use is especially desirable for the clever woman who wishes to make over a garment so that it may conform to the changing styles. Whether in the hands of the amateur or the expert, this simple bit of mechanism is the most convenient and effective of any.

Having all the advantages claimed for other "automatic" sewing machines, the Silent Singer has many points of preference that can easily be demonstrated by comparison. Of faultless construction and finish, it is absolutely the lightest-running, the simplest and most compact. It more easily threaded, and its parts are better protected from dust. The broad treadle better promotes the health and comfort of the operator, because it is lower and the position of the feet can be changed at will. These points are worthy careful consideration by those of delicate health or unaccustomed to continuous use of a sewing machine.

Suggestions for Christmas

AN unusual magazine cover is made of two boards $7\frac{1}{2}$ x 10 inches, covered with pink linen and embroidered on the front. The boards are fastened together by two short strips of white elastic painted with pink roses. Down the middle of each board on the inside is another strip of elastic, through which the covers of the magazine slip, and which holds the linen covers on the book.

A portable waste basket is made of fancy paper lined with a plain color, or painted if the maker is an artist. The sides are ten inches at the top, $7\frac{1}{2}$ at the bottom, and $12\frac{1}{2}$ inches high. They are tied into position by eight sets of ribbons—four at the top and four at the bottom. The ribbons and the lining are yellow.

A match scratcher, devised in a very clever manner, is made of an oblong card of water-color paper, to which is glued a piece of sandpaper cut in the shape of an umbrella. The edge in points and curves carries out the resemblance. The umbrella covers the head and shoulders of a country-looking lad and lassie who are standing beside a rail fence. By their position we know they are oblivious to all but each other. A sign on the fence says, "To Matchville." Between the simulated ribs of the umbrella are dabs of black paint for patches, and this couplet designates its use: "For scratching matches, use umbrella of patches."

A suitable gift for an old lady is a triangle knitting-box. It requires a quarter of a yard of silk for the outside, the same for lining, a yard of chenille cord, and a yard and a half of ribbon. Cut six oval pieces of cardboard nine inches long, three for the outside, and three for the lining. When covered, each two, outside and lining, must be over-seamed together. It is prettier to have it lined with one color and covered with another.

A detachable handkerchief pocket is an admirable complement to a lady's toilet, for it is well known that for want of a pocket the fair sex scatter their dainty mouchoirs broadcast. Cut a piece of pasteboard three by three inches, with the lower corners cut off to take away the square look. Cover neatly inside and out with handsome black satin for the back of the pocket; form the front of rings covered with black silk in crochet, filling the centres with lace stitches; fasten these together in the same shape as the back; join front and back with satin ribbon, two and a half inches wide, set in like a puff; suspend with strings and a handsome bow of the same from the side of the waist fastening in place with a concealed black safety pin, or with a pretty gold pin in evidence.

NEWSPAPERS FROM SOUTH AFRICA during the past week has been of a nature to draw attention to the seriousness of the struggle between the British and Boers. While to a certain extent reports may be exaggerated, except those made public by the war office, it is nevertheless the fact that British advances have met with a serious check; so serious indeed as to direct most severe criticism toward those responsible for the conduct of the campaign, and necessitate the adoption of measures which would be used only in most extreme cases. There is, of course, no element of doubt as to the final outcome of the matter, and the feeling of grief over long lists of casualties is fully equalled by a determination that from now on the campaign must be conducted vigorously. It may be that the entire military strength of England will be drawn out, and there is talk of placing the navy on a similar basis, merely as a safeguard against colonial or Asiatic complications.

THE APPOINTMENT OF MAJOR-General Leonard Wood as military governor of Cuba, while perhaps distasteful to those who believe a selection should have been made from the line, rather than the medical branch, gives satisfaction to all who are interested in the future of the island, and is, at the same time, a substantial recognition of signal ability. While in command of the district of Santiago, then as Colonel Wood, he was afforded the opportunity of demonstrating his wonderful executive powers, with the result that Santiago was transformed from a pest hole into a clean, orderly, and well-regulated community. He possesses the full confidence of the Cubans, which will be of great value in perfecting the civil government of the island. General Wood has already departed for Havana, which will be his headquarters, and will at once assume the duties of his new appointment. Confidence is freely expressed that under his guidance affairs in Cuba will be satisfactorily adjusted.

THE PRESENT IS AN ERA OF ADVANCING wages, due to a gradual and hoped, for permanent improvement of business. In the East employes are more generally benefitted, although in the West and South similar conditions prevail to a certain extent. Cotton mill owners of the North have announced to employes an increase, which will mean a disbursement of an additional $5,000,000 annually. This general advance is due chiefly to M. C. D. Borden, of Fall River, Mass., who advanced the wages of his employes 10 per cent, while other manufacturers were considering the advisability of a 5 per cent increase. The action of Mr. Borden was met at once by others. From Fall River, where 28,000 employes were affected, the movement spread throughout New England, so that a total of 140,000 workers will be advanced prior to Jan. 1st. Manufacturers of woollen goods have increased the wages of 20,000 employes 10 per cent, and 8,000 operatives of cotton mills in Augusta, Ga., will be granted an advance corresponding to that made by Fall River mills.

SENATORIAL CONTESTS SUCH AS obtain at the present time afford material support to the movement to have United States senators elected by popular vote. The claim is made, and often fully justified, that the present method of electing by State legislatures does not fulfil the will of the majority. A protest has been made against the seating of Senator Clark, of Montana, a claim being made that the Senator-elect, or his agents, paid $30,000 for votes, which sum was produced in open session of the legislature, and deposited with the treasurer of Montana, where it still remains. The protest against Mr. Clark is accompanied by a statement in effect that Mr. Clark paid a sum aggregating $500,000 for votes. There is but one course for the Senate to pursue. If the charges against Mr. Clark are false, punishment should be meted out to those guilty of the libel. If on the contrary they are true, those guilty of purchasing votes cannot be too severely dealt with.

BY A DECISION OF THE ILLINOIS Supreme Court, city ordinances leveled against department stores and designed to make their existence under present methods impossible, have been declared null and void. The ordinance which resulted in the decision was passed at the instigation of small Chicago dealers whose prosperity has been interfered with by the great marts which supply well nigh everything, from needles to agricultural implements. While it is true that in great cities department stores have caused distress to small dealers, by reason of their ability to purchase great quantities of goods and sell at prices which the small dealers cannot meet, it does not follow that they are evils, although in keen desire to undersell rivals managers resort at times to methods not legitimate. If such abuses, particularly the treatment of employes, cannot be controlled, it rests with the National Consumers League, now doing a good work, to look after department stores as well as manufacturers.

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD Company will put into effect a plan which will strengthen the bond between employer and employe. The plan provides for the retirement, on Jan. 1, 1900, of all officers and employes of the Pennsylvania railroad east of Pittsburgh and Erie, who have attained the age of 70 years, and the payment to such employes of a pension equal to 1 per cent. for each year of continuous service of the average salary for the last ten years. It also provides for the retirement of all officers and employes between the ages of 65 and 60 years who, having been thirty years in the service of the company, are physically disqualified, and the payment to them of a pension computed on the same basis. All officers and employes not yet 70 years of age will be retired and pensioned in the same manner on the first day of the month following their attainment of the maximum age.

RECENT ADVANCES IN THE PRICE of paper, attributed to the so-called trust in pulp, are claimed to be due to the approaching scarcity of spruce timber, from which pulp is manufactured. For several years, or since the utilization of wood pulp in the manufacture of print paper, an immense amount of spruce timber has been consumed annually, and even this great and assured permanent demand from paper makers did not deter lumbermen of New England from cutting and selling spruce lumber at a price which scarcely covered the cost. Paper manufacturers have gained control of the principal remaining tracts of spruce timber, but even now the end is but a comparatively few years distant, and some substitute must be found. A fortune awaits the discoverer of that which will replace spruce.

OF THE ORGANIZING OF MANY "unions" there is no end, the latest having its inception in Binghamton, N. Y., and known as the Farmers' Union. This organization is unique, and judged by the aims of its sponsors, has a future full of possibilities. The object is not akin to the one time powerful Granger society, but rather to govern the disposition of farm products. The union has adopted a label, and agricultural members will dispose of their produce at stores having this label over the door, receiving full market price for the same. The union will seek to become a member of the national labor body, thus ensuring reciprocal relations and benefits. Thus it may come about that with the passing of certified milk and guaranteed eggs, consumers will purchase the product of the hen, cow, and field under a union label; the manufacturer who does not, may have a strike of employes to face, and the merchant who buys non-union hay for his stables may have a scarcity of customers. These though are among vague possibilities.

The News of the Church

Bishop Gillespie's Anniversary

It is given to few men in the ministry to receive more expressions of love and esteem from all classes of people, than those tendered Bishop Gillespie on the 25th anniversary of his election to the episcopate. From the University of Michigan, from civil rulers and ecclesiastics, from parishes and missions, from laymen young and old, as well as loyal clergy, came loving messages by word of mouth, by wire, and by mail. Roman priest and Congregational minister sat on either side of the Bishop at the festive board, and each vied with the other in expressions of love and gratitude that God had given to the State of Michigan so good a man.

At St. Mark's church, Grand Rapids, on Wednesday afternoon, Dec. 6th, the Bishop met his clergy in conference on diocesan affairs. Mr. F. A. Gorham, for 25 years the treasurer of invested funds, gave a history of those funds, and stated that money and real estate now held in trust amounted in round numbers to $89,000. Mr. Jacob Kleinhans, chancellor of the diocese, sketched the history of the present constitution and canons. Mrs. J. E. Wilkinson spoke on "Akeley Institute."

On Wednesday evening occurred the first public service of the "silver jubilee" of the diocese. After Evening Prayer, the Rev. James F. Conover, D. D., of Detroit, formerly of St. Luke's, Kalamazoo, read an historical paper concerning the formation of the diocese, the election and consecration of its first bishop. Bishop Gillespie then spoke for the diocese of Western Michigan. Dr. Prall, of Detroit, in the absence of Bishop Davies, for the diocese of Michigan, and Bishop Williams, for the diocese of Marquette. The offertory anthem, "O pray for the peace of Jerusalem," was specially fine, but all the music was well rendered under the able supervision of the Rev. C. R. Hodge.

Thursday, Morning Prayer was said at an early hour, and a celebration of the Holy Communion took place at 10:30. Bishop White, of Michigan City, made an address.

Thursday afternoon the conference was resumed. The Rev. Dr. Rippey read a paper on "Memorials of the clergy and laity"; the Rev. Dr. Van Antwerp, on "The semi-annuals," and Mrs. T. J. O'Brien, on "The Woman's Auxiliary." A conference of the Auxiliary was held at the same hour in the chapel, with Mrs. R. W. Butterfield presiding.

At seven in the evening, nearly 300 people assembled at the rooms of the Military Club, for an informal reception and banquet. The Rev. Dr. Van Antwerp was toastmaster, and introduced the Rev. Dr. Prall, of Detroit, who was the principal speaker, in response to the general sentiment, "Our diocese and our bishop"; the Rev. Lewis Brown represented the clergy and the Standing Committee. Other addresses were made by Mr. W. R. Shelby, the Hon. Geo. Willard, the Hon. E. F. Uhl, and Dr. Collins H. Johnstone. The sentiment, "Our guests," was responded to by the Rev. Father O'Brien, of Kalamazoo, representing the Roman Catholic Church; the Rev. Dan Bradley representing the Congregationalists; Rev. Henry Tatlock, from the Bishop's old parish at Ann Arbor; and the Bishop of Marquette. Bishop Williams hoped that the State, not the diocese, might be the unit for Michigan Churchmen. "The diocese of Michigan, the salt of the earth; the diocese of Western Michigan, full of the fruits of righteousness, and the diocese of Marquette, rock bottomed, strongly timbered, iron-bound, and copper riveted." Such a combination ought to accomplish much in establishing Christ's Kingdom on earth. New robes, with $75 in gold, from 29 parishes and missions, were then presented to the Bishop by the Rev. J. N. McCormick. In response, the Bishop remarked: "I have heard it said that a bishop was a lonely man, but who would say so to-night?" A silver testimonial was also presented by the Rev. Mr. Tatlock, from the Bishop's old parish at Ann Arbor, and a warm cloak was given the Bishop by his old friend, Father O'Brien, of Kalamazoo. A profusion of roses and other flowers was sent Bishop Gillespie during the week. At the close of the programme, the Rev. Mr. McCormick read from a letter of the Methodist Bishop, W. X. Ninde, offering his personal congratulations on the anniversary. With a heart full of gratitude, and a voice showing deep emotion, Bishop Gillespie dismissed the assembled people with the blessing of peace.

Board of Missions

The Board met at the Church Missions House, Dec. 12th, the Bishop of Albany, vice-president, in the chair. There were present seven bishops, 12 presbyters, and 11 laymen. The vice-president introduced to the Board the Rev. Dr. Lloyd, general secretary, and Mr. John W. Wood, corresponding secretary. The Rev. Dr. Henry W. Nelson, rector of Trinity church, Geneva, N. Y., and Mr. Moses Taylor Pyne, of New York, were elected to membership in the Board to fill vacancies. The Rev. Dr. Nelson has since accepted.

The Board appointed 57 clergymen and laymen and women, as delegates from this society to the General Missionary Conference which is to be held in the City of New York in April, 1900.

In accordance with the suggestion of the Missionary Council and the provision of the constitution with regard to employing agents, it was—

Resolved: That the advisory committee be and hereby is authorized to appoint a clergyman to the position of agent of the Sunday School Auxiliary to the Board of Missions, whose duty it shall be, by correspondence and personal visits, under the direction of the general secretary and the advisory committee, to increase the interest of the Sunday Schools in the missionary work of the Church, especially in regard to Lenten offerings.

One-half the salary of this clergyman was immediately pledged by a member of the Board, and for five years, the other half appropriated from a special fund at the discretion of the Board, leaving as the cost to the Church, of the office, simply the traveling and incidental expenses of said agent.

A further and final appropriation of $250 from a special deposit was made at the request of the Bishop of Chicago for Swedish work in his diocese.

Election of a Local Secretary

A by-law was adopted creating the office of local secretary who "shall have his place for work in the office of the Board, and assist the associate secretary, especially attending to the details and routine of the work in that office." This was considered necessary in view of the increased responsibilities of the Church and consequent increase of work thrown upon the office, and in order that a second man may become familiar with its routine and history. On nomination of the Bishop of Long Island, the Rev. Robert B. Kimber, rector of Trinity church, Seymour, Conn., was elected local secretary.

United Offering Appointments

Under the provisions of the Woman's Auxiliary United Offering of 1898, at the request of the Bishop of North Carolina, Miss Emma D. Manson and Mrs. Moseley were appointed as stipendiaries, and three already in his service were re-appointed for the year, and at the request of the Bishop of Western Michigan, Miss Mary A. Milnes was appointed a woman missionary in his diocese.

Events in China

The Bishop of Shanghai, on Oct. 28th, consecrated the new St. Peter's church, Sinza, being a memorial of Bishop and Mrs. Bedell. Bishop Cassels, of Western China, and several others of the English missionaries, were present. The same afternoon, in the church of Our Saviour, Hongkew, a memorial tablet to the late Rev. Yung Klung Yen, M. A., was unveiled. It was the expression of regard and affection on behalf of all the clergy, native and foreign, of the Shanghai District.

The Mission Schools in Japan

Bishop McKim, recurring to the question of retaining the Government licenses for our schools, St. Paul's, Tokyo, and the boys' school, Nara, writes: "The Minister of Education, in an interview on Oct. 31st, told me that 'Christian instruction may be given in the school buildings before and after school hours.' . . . The Nara school directors have formally notified the authorities of the Prefecture that Christian instruction will be regularly given to the boarding pupils after school hours. This is a long step in the right direction." The Bishop adds: "As for our Tokyo schools, there is more religion taught in them now than for ten years last past." Again he says, in writing upon the same subject, "There is no reason for timidity or concealment," and further on he avers that he would have nothing to do with the matter unless we could have stated Christian instruction without concealment or subterfuge. In connection with this, the Board adopted the following resolutions:

That the Bishop and Standing Committee in Japan be requested to issue in the Japanese tongue a declaration that in continuing to conduct the schools under government license there is no compromise of our religion, and no intention to discontinue Christian teaching out of school hours.

About the middle of November, the Bishop of New York and the Rev. Percy S. Grant were spending a fortnight at Tokyo. The Bishop preached in the cathedral. Eighteen hundred dollars was appropriated for the purchase of a residence for the Rev. R. W. Andrews, the only missionary, other than a French priest, in Mito, a city of 30,000 inhabitants, 80 miles east of Tokyo.

Needs in Africa

The Bishop of Cape Palmas presented a pressing need for the rebuilding of St. Augustine's schoolhouse near Monrovia; besides being entirely too small, the old building is beyond repair; $1,300 was appropriated for the purpose from a special fund. The Rev. Paulus Moort wrote that the congregation and vestry of Trinity church, Monrovia (the stone walls of which recently fell in) had decided to put forth strenuous efforts to rebuild so far as their resources will permit. Meanwhile, they have provided a temporary structure for continuing the services, so as to keep the congregation together. The Rev. Wm. C. Cummings, in charge of a group of out-stations near Cape Palmas, sent an appeal for a communion set, a font, and a small bell for Gbalobo station, "where the prospect is bright for the Church, and where the work is entirely among the heathen." The Rev. Dr. Robert Hope was given permission to withdraw his declination of his appointment, and with his wife he will proceed forthwith to Cape Mount.

Bishop Holly's communication dwelt especially upon the sufferings of the Rev. Mr. Wilson, our missionary in Dominica, and his family, both by reason of cyclone and during the recent insurrection in that Republic.

Appreciation of Rev. Mr. Kimber's Work

Resolutions were unanimously passed, recognizing the most faithful services of the Rev. Joshua Kimber, associate secretary, during the time that the Society has been without a general secretary, and in the extra work devolving upon him in connection therewith, and granting him three months' leave of absence during the year at such time as he may desire to take the same, and the chairman and treasurer were requested to convey the Board's action to Mr. Kimber.

American Church Missionary Society

The Rev. W. H. McGee, our missionary in Havana, is ill with yellow fever. His case, it is hoped, will prove to be a mild one. He is receiving every possible attention.

The Rt. Rev. L. L. Kinsolving, D. D., on Oct. 1st, had confirmed 123 candidates.

The Sunday School

A new course of lectures, under the auspices of the Diocesan Sunday School Commission, will be conducted in New York city in January, by the Rev. Geo. R. Van DeWater, D. D., on the "Life of St. Paul," and by the Rev. John P. Peters, D. D., Ph. D., on the "Life of Christ."

Addresses on Practical Topics

At Christ church, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., the Sunday School Commission of the diocese, in co-operation with the archdeaconry of Dutchess, have just held special services with addresses for teachers and Sunday school workers. The Rev. E. C. Saunders spoke on "The purpose of the Sunday School Commission"; the Rev. Henry Mottet, D. D., on "The Sunday School Organization"; Prof. Winne, on "The public school; what can it suggest to the Sunday school?" President Lawrence T. Cole, Ph. D., of St. Stephen's College, on "The teacher behind the method"; Mr. C. W. Stoughton, on "The child; how can we know him, and how can we teach him?" the Rev. Pascal Harower, on "What should the Church school teach?" and the Rev. Edward L. Stoddard, on the experiences of his parish in Jersey City, N. J. Much interest was shown, and the attendance was large.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

Local Assembly of Wilmington, Del.

The annual meeting was held in Calvary church, on Friday evening, Dec. 1st. After shortened Evensong, the question, "How can we awaken interest in the work of the Brotherhood" was opened by the rector, the Rev. H. W. Cunningham, and discussed by several present. Bishop Coleman spoke of the significance of the coincidence of St. Andrew's Day and Thanksgiving Day, and while thanking the Brotherhood for their past good work in Wilmington, urged them on to still greater efforts. The new president, Mr. Geo. A. Elliott, succeeding Mr. Jas. D. Carter, took the chair at this meeting. There was a large number of men present from the parish chapters, and several not members of the Brotherhood. The Bishop closed the meeting with the benediction.

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

The Bishop, immediately after his return from Sycamore, i. e., on Monday, the 11th, went to New York. This is pleasant news, as indicating his convalescence.

On Sunday the 10th, there was used in Holy Trinity, Stockyards, the new organ, presented by the clergy of the North-Eastern Deanery, as a mark of esteem and respect for the priest-in-charge, the Rev. H. C. Kinney.

The members of the Clerica, to the number of 25, met at 21 Aldine square on Tuesday afternoon, the 12th, on invitation of Mrs. W. White Wilson, wife of the rector of St. Mark's.

The Church Club

The first of the usual winter social gatherings came off on the evening of Wednesday, 13th, at Kinsley's. It was attended by 50 gentlemen, and was quite informal, there being no speeches. Dinner was followed by "a smoker."

Gifts to the Mission at Longwood

This new mission, lately organized by the Rev. Harold Morse, has received the gift of an organ from Mrs. Curtis, and a very handsome brass memorial cross from Mrs. E. P. Hilliard. The mission is growing fast, and proving very acceptable to the people of the village.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

St. John's church, Pleasantville, has just been redecorated, through the efforts of St. Agnes' Guild.

At the Church Club, Dec. 15th, Prof. W. J. Ashley, of Harvard University, gave an address on "The mediæval guilds of London."

At St. Chrysostom's chapel, Trinity parish, the Rev. T. H. Sill, D. D., vicar, the 34th anniversary of founding has just been celebrated.

At a meeting held in New York, of the National Reform Convention, Bishop Doane, of Albany, read a paper on "Our marriage and divorce laws—the danger and the remedy."

Under the new law, a number of Advent elections of vestries have just taken place, the election being by sections. No parishes are obliged to adopt the usage, but it is becoming popular.

Church Temperance Society

The Woman's Auxiliary has asked permission of the Fire Commissioners to dispense free coffee to firemen at serious fires during the coming winter. The matter has been referred to the fire chief.

The Actors' Church Alliance

Held its third public religious service of the present season at the church of Zion and St. Timothy, Sunday, Dec. 17th, the preacher being the rector, the Rev. Dr. Henry Lubeck, who took for his theme, "Expression and inspiration."

Advent Missionary Services

Are being held in the parish house of St. Michael's church, the Rev. Dr. John P. Peters, rector. The themes are: "Alaska and our new possessions"; "The conditions of child-life in the city of New York," and "Missions in China and Japan." The lectures are illustrated with lantern slides.

Confirmations By Bishop Hare

At All Saints', Rosendale, and its attached chapel at Rifton Glen, Bishop Hare, acting for Bishop Potter, has just administered Confirmation to 17 persons, presented by the rector, the Rev. Henry Barker. At Trinity church, New Rochelle, Sunday, Dec. 10th, he confirmed a class presented by the rector, the Rev. Dr. Canedy. Bishop Hare also made a visitation of St. George's chapel, Williams Bridge, on Dec. 6th, and confirmed 11 candidates, presented by Bishop Potter's private secretary, the Rev. Dr. Nelson.

Centennial of the Death of Washington

Was commemorated Dec. 14th by a service at St. Paul's chapel, Trinity parish, where Washington's pew is still preserved. The service was under the auspices of the Society of Sons of the Revolution, and the Society of the Cincinnati. The Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, Chaplain-General of the Sons of the Revolution, the Rev. Wm. M. Geer, and many other clergymen were present; as also the wardens and vestry of Trinity parish in a body. While the service proceeded minute guns were fired at Castle William, where St. Cornelius chapel is under the control of Trinity parish.

The First Russian Church in the U. S.

The Russian orthodox church of St. Nicholas took title, Dec. 12th, to a plot of ground 100 ft. on 97th st. by 250 on 5th ave., paying therefor $36,000. Count Cassini, the Russian imperial ambassador, is concerned in the transaction. The plans for a new church edifice, to be erected on this site, are being drawn in Russia, and it is thought the work on it will begin in February. The building, which will be the first Russian orthodox church erected in the United States will conform to the general style of such buildings in Russia, and will be a picturesque object on this fine site near Central Park, where it can be viewed from long distances. A large dome will surmount the structure. The present Russian congregation, meeting in a private residence on 2nd ave., will be removed to this church. Part of the plan contemplates the putting up of a building for the publication of a Church bulletin.

Church Settlement at the Pro-Cathedral

An appeal has been issued by the pro-cathedral for an enlargement of the Church Settlement work, now carried on in what is claimed to be the most densely populated spot in the world. In a single block facing the settlement, 3,000 people are housed! The workers include several clergymen, a small band of deaconesses, and a number of lay men and women, and the work provides a free library, athletic and social clubs, and lecture courses for men and women; a kindergarten and a day nursery, beside sewing, nursing, and housework classes for girls and boys. It is now desired to give up the present community house to the women workers and their departments, and to purchase and fit an adjoining house for the men, and the clergymen attached to the pro-cathedral. In this house two rooms will be reserved, one for visiting clergymen, and another for appointed delegates from theological schools who may wish to study missionary work among the crowded poor in a practical way. The new venture will cost $3,000 per annum, and the pro-cathedral hopes with this sum to double its usefulness.

Pennsylvania

Ozi William Whitaker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Bishop Whitaker officiated as chaplain at the ceremonies attendant upon Independence Hall chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, receiving their charter from the National Society, which took place on the 13th inst., in the Supreme Court room, Independence Hall. The benediction at the close was pronounced by the Rev. S. E. Snively, M. D. Nearly every member of the chapter is a Churchwoman.

Pelham Mission, Germantown

Plans are being prepared for the new parish, to be known in the future as "The church of the Epiphany of Germantown." The edifice will be of rustic colonial style, and will be erected at Carpenter's lane and the Lincoln Drive, which has been donated for the purpose by the trustees of the property, and is valued at $6,000. The building committee, of which the rector, the Rev. James Alan Montgomery, is chairman, includes three Churchmen and three Churchwomen.

Bishop White Prayer Book Society

The 66th anniversary was celebrated on Sunday evening, 10th inst., at the church of the Holy Apostles, Philadelphia. The annual report of the board of managers stated that during the year 9,858 copies of the 24mo Prayer Book had been distributed in 53 dioceses and missionary jurisdictions, among sailors, soldiers, and public institutions. The receipts (including balance of $1,659 87 from last year) were $15,212.06; present balance, $3,063 67. The purpose of the society is to place the Prayer Book where it is most needed. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. C. S. Olmsted.

Gloria Dei Church, Philadelphia

On Sunday morning, 10th inst, the rector, the Rev. S. B. Simes, preached his 31st anniversary sermon. He announced that the endowment fund was nearing completion; only about $200 of the $25,000 is lacking. When this is in hand, a like sum of $25,000 "handed down by their Swedish ancestors" will be added to it, and the income from the whole amount should, after the bi-centennial (June, 1900), be devoted to practical work. He also referred to the generosity of the late Dr. Charles J. Stille who although not a member of Gloria Dei, stipulated in his will that the old church should receive the income from one-third of the residuary estate. Mr. Simes alluded to his advancing years, referred with feeling emphasis to the aid tendered him by the vestry during the past year, and then urged the congregation to give careful thought to the person who would probably in a short time be called as his successor. In all the 200 years of this building's existence there had been but 15 rectors.

Centennial of Washington's Death

It was observed very generally throughout the city. At the church of the Holy Apostles, Philadelphia, on Wednesday evening, 13th inst., commemorative services were held. George C. Thomas read a portion of Washington's farewell address, and the rector, the Rev. N. S. Thomas, made an address in which he spoke of Washington as a man rather than as a great general or a great president, arguing that a man is great for what he is rather than for what he does. Both the lecture and pulpit were draped with American flags, and to the right of the latter was a large-sized picture of the Father of his country. On the 14th inst., the Rev. Cyrus T. Brady delivered the address before the members of Meade Post, No. 1, G. A. R., at their rooms in the Odd Fellows' Temple, taking as his subject, "The character of Washington." The historic bells of Christ church, Philadelphia, which were tolled at the death of Washington, were likewise tolled Dec. 14th, at the centennial of his death. On Sunday, 17th inst., was held in the church the annual service of the Sons of the Revolution, with representatives of other patriotic societies.

South Carolina

Ellison Capers, D.D., Bishop

St. John's parish, Florence, has grown greatly during the past year, with a material increase in the Sunday school. The vested choir have secured, with the help of the congregation, a new organ.

The Rev. A. E. Cornish, missionary priest in charge of Christ church, Charleston, and rector of the Church orphanage, succeeded in securing a loan from the U. S. government of some of their unoccupied buildings at the quarantine station on James Island, and from a friend, a naphtha launch, and so transported all the pupils and teachers from the orphanage to James Island. Here they had a most delightful summer outing of two months, with no additional cost to their living.

Memorial of Dr. Pinckney

A very chaste and beautiful mural tablet of pure white Italian marble was unveiled in Grace church, Charleston, in memory of the Rev. Charles Colesworth Pinckney, D. D., LL. D., who for 48 years was connected with the church—four years assistant, and 44 years rector. Bishop Capers gave a short address, and the monument was unveiled by two of the Rev. Dr. Pinckney's granddaughters.

Massachusetts

William Lawrence, D. D., Bishop

The Rev. Dr. John T. Lindsay made a striking address upon Washington and his times, before the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, on Dec. 14th.

Emmanuel Parish, Boston

The Year Book which has just been issued, is an interesting account of the great work which this parish is carrying on in its own immediate neighborhood, and through its mission church at the South End. It raised last year nearly $172,000. Its staff of clergy number four, with one deaconess and two lay-readers, and it has altogether 83 salaried officers and 450 volunteer officers. The deaconess, from Dec. '98 to Dec. '99, made 110 visits and gave away 500 garments.

Anniversary of St. Matthew's, S. Boston

The 83d anniversary was observed on Dec. 6th and following days. A social gathering was held in the vestry, at which a number of prominent people were present. Bishop Lawrence was unable to attend, but sent a letter of greeting, in which he stated: "I fully appreciate how the changing constituency has made the question of self-support more difficult to answer each year in the case of old St. Matthew's, but we Americans know that wherever there is responsibility there is greater readiness for work and sacrifice, and I am sure that the longer the people of St. Matthew's feel their responsibility for the full support of the church, the greater will be their interest in the work and their readiness to support it." Archdeacon Lindsay also sent his cordial greetings. After music by the Harvard Club, the rector, the Rev. A. E. George, made an address, and was followed among others, by the junior warden Mr. J. S. Godfrey, who gave a history of the parish, from its founding in 1816, when there were only 16 houses in the peninsular district, which now numbers 80,000 people, mostly Roman Catholics. He referred to the early rectors and assistants, among them being numbered, Bishops Griswold and Howe, of Central Pennsylvania; Drs. Theodore Edson, Em. P. Wells, J. H. Clinch, Coolidge, and Wright. The present rector has accomplished a good work, and has been in charge of this third oldest parish in Boston for 12 years.

Washington

Henry Yates Satterlee, D. D., LL. D., Bishop

Illustrated Missionary Lectures

The first of a series on the missionary work of the Church, was given in St. Paul's parish building, by the rector, the Rev. Alfred Harding, on the first Wednesday in Advent. The illustrations were by lantern slides from the Missions House, and embraced views in Alaska at mission stations among the Indians and in the South, and in Africa. The next lecture will be on missions in Japan, and the third, on China, by the Rev. Addison Ingle, a missionary to that country.

The Bishop's Guild

The Advent meeting was held at the episcopal residence, Dec. 6th. The business transacted was the appropriation of about $700 (raised since the last meeting) to the payment of interest on the cathedral property.

Arkansas

Wm. M. Brown, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor

Christ church, Little Rock, the Rev. G. Gordon Smeade, rector, is the largest church in the diocese, and in all its long and useful history has never been more helpful than at the present time. It has a large and active Sunday school, and many other well organized societies.

A mission was organized on the 26th ult., at Atkins, Pope Co., a very important cotton centre on the Fort Smith branch of the Iron Mountain railroad. The name adopted was All Saints, and officers were elected. The new field will be under the charge of the missionary at Morrilton for the present.

Systematic Giving

Bishop Brown appeals to the parishes and missions of the diocese for a systematic giving for diocesan offerings for the coming year. He has proposed an excellent plan, which has been tried very successfully in several dioceses. Each individual is asked by the rector, or his representative, for a monthly pledge, which is recorded in a book furnished by the Diocesan Board of Missions for that purpose. The collector collects the pledge regularly each month, on an appointed day. If this simple plan were faithfully carried out, it would quadruple the offerings for Church extension work in the diocese.

Maine

Election of a Bishop

The special convention called to elect a successor to the Rt. Rev. H. A. Neely, D. D., late Bishop of Maine, met at St. Luke's cathedral, Portland, Dec. 13th. Dean Sills was elected president of the convention, and the Rev. Chas. Lee, secretary. The resolutions adopted by the clergy of the diocese on the day of Bishop Neely's funeral, and published in THE LIVING CHURCH of Nov. 18th, were adopted by the convention. After much debate, the rules of order were so amended as to allow nominations for the office of bishop without discussion of character. The chairman of the convention then read prayers invoking the aid of the Holy Spirit in the selection of a bishop. The Rev. Mr. Gregson nominated the Rev. Alexander H. Vinton, of All Saints' church, Worcester, Mass. Canon Leffingwell presented the name of the Rev. Robert Codman, Jr., of Roxbury, Mass. The Rev. Mr. Plant nominated the Rev. Dean Slattery, of Faribault, Minn. The Rev. Thos. Calvert nominated the Rev. R. M. Converse, of Rochester, N. Y.

The vote of the clergy resulted as follows: Whole number of votes cast, 29; necessary for a choice, 15; A. H. Vinton, 1; C. M. Sills, 1; R. M. Converse, 4; Dean Slattery, 5; Robert Codman, Jr., 18.

Vote of the laity: Whole number of votes cast, 19; necessary to a choice, 10; A. H. Vinton, 1; C. H. Brent, 1; Dean Slattery, 6; Robert Cutting, 1; Robert S. Codman, 1; Robert Codman, Jr., 9. Second ballot: Whole number of votes cast, 18; necessary to a choice, 10; Dean Satterlee, 4; Robert Codman, Jr., 14.

On motion of the Rev. Mr. Plant, the election of the Rev. Robert Codman, Jr., was made unanimous, and the chairman formally announced him as elected by the joint ballot of clergy and laity Bishop of Maine. The testimonials of the Bishop-elect were then signed, after which the convention adjourned.

The Rev. Robert Codman, Jr., Bishop elect, was born in Boston, Dec. 30, 1859. He was educated in the Boston schools, and graduated from Harvard in 1882. He then entered the school of law, whence he graduated in 1885. His admission to the Suffolk bar was in the following year. After being engaged in this profession for several years, he concluded to study for the ministry, and entered the General Theological Seminary. He became after graduation an assistant at All Saints', Ashmont, which parish he left to become the rector of St. John's, Roxbury, where he succeeded the Rev. Dr. George S. Converse. He is the son of Robert Codman, a well-known lawyer, and the senior warden of the church of the Advent. He is also connected with the Sturgis family, in Boston, and is a nephew of the late J. C. Roper, the historian. He is one of the most prominent members of the Catholic Club, of Boston.

The Board of Missions

Held its second quarterly meeting Dec. 12th, at St. Luke's parish house, Portland. Besides transacting routine business, it adopted the resolutions above referred to, relating to Bishop Neely's decease. At the public service held at St. Luke's cathedral, at 7:30 P. M., the Rev. C. F. Lee gave an address on Bishop Neely as a missionary worker.

Duluth

Jas. Dow Morrison D.D., LL.D., Missionary Bishop

Mrs. T. C. Hudson, wife of the Rev. T. C. Hudson of the mission at New Paynesville, died suddenly on Dec. 4th, as the result of a surgical operation. Sorrow is felt throughout the community, and the deepest sympathy is felt for Mr. Hudson and family. Mrs. Hudson was one of the helpful and cheerful women who are always spreading sunshine and comfort wherever they appear. Mr. Hudson has been in poor health for several years, at times unable to take duty anywhere, and this affliction is indeed hard upon him and his little family of children.

Interparochial Mission Class

Met on Friday afternoon, Dec. 8th, at Gethsemane parish house, Minneapolis, to discuss medical missions in general, and the Student Volunteer Movement. A paper on medical missions was read by Miss Esther Henshaw, and one on the Student Volunteer Movement by Miss Elsie Hardenbergh. The meeting was in charge of St. Mark's parish.

Colorado

John Franklin Spalding, Bishop
Shepherd's Crook for Bishop Spalding

A pastoral staff or "bishop's crook" has just been presented to the Bishop by two priests. The crook part is of polished brass, the staff being ebony with joints of brass. It stands about six feet, six inches, in height. The following is a portion of the address that went with the staff.

NOVEMBER, 1899.

To the Rt. Rev. John F. Spalding, D.D., S.D.T.
Bishop of Colorado:

DEAR REV. FATHER:—Two of your priests, one now not resident in your diocese, but still loyal and full of esteem for you, unites with a resident priest in presenting to you and your successors in office, but especially to you, the ancient symbol and badge of your high and holy office. . . . We are not unmindful, dear Bishop, that you have distinctly said at more than one council, you would accept no such gifts if the offerings towards the missionary support of your diocese were to be in any way lessened thereby. This will not be the case, as two clergymen only have furnished the means for this "shepherd's crook." If others had been asked they would have responded, both clerical and lay, generously. Your twenty-five years in Colorado and portions of other States, from the tremendous physical endurance required for such journeys and episcopal supervision as you were called upon to take, and took willingly, have aged you before the usual time, and in all this hard Western work your mind and heart have been full of anxious solicitude for your clergy and people, more than they themselves have ever estimated, so that often in going in and out to minister to others, and not being ministered to, we have perhaps almost forgotten your individual self, or the reverence due to your great office. This outward sign then may, in the evening hour of your episcopate, prove to you we do not altogether forget the man or his work or his office—an office so venerable, so responsible, and of so much dignity. We extend to you our help, blessing, and prayers, such as they are, for human help, blessing, and prayer is too often poor and maimed. As years go by (for we often see better proportions at a distance than nearby) men will be able to form a true conception of your work and labor of love for Colorado, and many shall say of you as of Thomas à Becket, the martyr of Canterbury: Felix locus, felix ecclesia, ubi vivit Thomæ Memoria.

Virginia

Francis M. Whittle, D.D., LL.D., Bishop
Robert A. Gibson, D.D. Bishop-Coadjutor

At a recent meeting of the Richmond Clericus, the Rev. Angus Crawford, D.D., made a strong address on the subject, "The enlargement of the educational work of the Protestant Episcopal Society of Virginia."

Central New York

F. D. Huntington, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Rev. Lewis T. Watson will conduct a parochial Mission in Grace church, Elmira, the Rev. W. H. van Allen, rector, Jan. 7-19, 1900.

Ohio

Wm. Andrew Leonard, D.D., Bishop

The Confirmations in Toledo were, Nov. 26th, in St. Paul's, 3; in Calvary, Dec. 10th, 11. The rectorship of the Rev. R. L. Harris brings new life to Calvary.

The clericus is holding a Mission service every day in Advent for one or other of the parishes, and planning to provide Mission services wherever practicable in and near the city.

The eight clergy of the Toledo clericus have lately undertaken missionary work, with a view to provide services for all parts of the city. Ironville, a growing suburb, is thus to have a service on every Tuesday evening, and other points are to be opened up as soon as practicable. The clergy have also arranged a union service for every week day in Advent, at which two or more of the ministers themselves are to be present.

In January next is expected the reorganization of the convocation, when the N. W. convocation will be called the Toledo convocation, and comprise all west of Sandusky.

A New Organ at St. Mark's, Cleveland

On Dec. 7th, a handsome two-manual tubular pneumatic pipe organ was opened. Its fine capacity was put to rigid test by Prof. John David Lloyd, F. G. C. M., organist and choir-master of Emmanuel church, and brother of the rector of St. Mark's. St. Mark's large vested choir of nearly 40 voices was supplemented by the choir of Emmanuel church. The sermon, in the unavoidable and much regretted absence of the Bishop, was preached by the Rev. Canon Watson. The Rev. Messrs. F. M. Hall and W. H. Jones assisted in the service; many others of the Cleveland clergy were present, and the large church was filled to overflowing. After the service a reception was held in the parish house, at which a large number of visitors was present.

Georgia

Cleland Kinlock Nelson, D.D., Bishop

After the formal opening of the new church recently erected by Emmanuel parish, Athens, the members of the congregation gave their rector, the Rev. Troy Beattie, a well-earned vacation, and presented him with a purse of money.

The Rev. John Chipman, deacon, was recently inducted by Dr. Rede, chaplain to the Bishop, into the cure of Christ church, Harrisburg. This work will be under the supervision of one of the archdeacons of the diocese.

Prosperity at the Cathedral

The Rev. Albion W. Knight, dean of the cathedral of the Holy Trinity, Atlanta, recently completed the sixth year of his incumbency. During this time the building has been put in thorough repair inside and out, the walls of nave and chancel decorated, new furnaces procured, the chancel tiled, the floors newly carpeted, a fine organ erected, a vested choir introduced, and the church beautified by many attractive and interesting memorials. The material improvement is strikingly apparent, but the spiritual improvement has been still greater. The communicants, the congregations, and the workers in the various societies have been more than doubled, no pew or sitting in the cathedral is rented, and for four years, there has been a daily celebration of the Holy Eucharist. As part of the dean's anniversary, a house warming was given the dean and Mrs. Knight in the new deanery which has been provided.

Delaware

Leighton Coleman, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

At Bishopstead, on Dec. 5th, Miss Paddock, the deputation secretary, addressed a meeting on behalf of the Girls' Friendly Society. Addresses were also made by her at St. Andrew's church, Wilmington, and Christ church, Delaware City.

The Clerical Brotherhood

Met at Bishopstead Dec. 5th. There were 17 clergy present, two from the diocese of Easton. A very able paper was read by the Rev. Dr. Jeffries, on the subject of "Trichotomy," which provoked a very interesting discussion.

Milwaukee

Isaac Lea Nicholson, D.D., Bishop

The Madison Convocation

At the meeting at Grace church, Madison, Dec. 5th and 6th, the first session was devoted to the Woman's Auxiliary. The Bishop presided, and made the opening address. A paper on "Church work" was read by Miss Atwood, of Madison, and its telling points were afterwards made the subject of the Rev. March Chase and the Rev. Dr. Mallett's addresses. On Wednesday there was a celebration of the Holy Communion at 7:30 A. M. The topic, "Is there any room in the ministry?" was discussed by the Rev. Dr. Webb, the Bishop, and others. "The Church not a purveyor of public entertainment," was the subject of a paper by the Rev. Dr. Jewell. "The priest: his different relations," was discussed "socially" by the Rev. Messrs. C. L. Barnes and S. E. Hanger and others. Dr. Webb's speech on this subject was strong, and claimed the close attention of the congregation; "The pastoral" relation was spoken of by the Rev. Messrs. A. E. Gorter and H. E. Chase; "The ecclesiastical," by the Rev. Messrs. F. H. Burrell and H. S. Foster. At the business meeting, the Rev. Mr. Gorter made his report about the missionary work in the diocese, and exhibited a missionary map which showed clearly that he is an artist as well as a first-class talker. The Rev. Mr. Barrington's strong appeal for "Diocesan endowment," and the Bishop's beautiful little speech about the spiritual endowment that diocese had in the memory and faith and prayers of its Kempters, De Kovens, Wells, etc., will not soon be forgotten. The paper on "The St. Louis Council," by the Rev. Mr. Boissier, was an admirable review of the reports of same as they appeared in THE LIVING CHURCH. The closing sermon by the Rev. Dr. Mallett on "The vision power," was an eloquent description of its need and place in the religious life. Besides the Bishop and the rector and his curate, there were some 15 clergymen present. A marked increase at such meetings at all the sessions, indicated a great interest in Church affairs at Madison. Daily luncheons were served in one of the rooms of the guild hall, the splendid memorial of Miss Vilas.

Michigan

Thomas F. Davies, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

St. Andrew's, Ann Arbor

On the last Sunday in November, the Rev. Henry Tatlock stated some facts relating to the work of the parish in the ten years since he became its rector. At that time, the number of families in the parish was 204; received during the period, 488; lost by death or removal, 287; present number, 405. The number of communicants 10 years ago was 361; admitted or received during the period, 1,005; lost, 660 (86 by death, 574 by removal); present number, 706. Adding 161 students, not otherwise included, who are communicants in the parish, makes the total number of communicants at present within it, 867. The number of persons confirmed during the period is 520; of these, 191 were under 18 years of age; 329 were adults, 100 being 30 years of age and upwards, of whom 22 were above 50 years of age. Of the whole number of persons confirmed, 193 were reared in the Church; 327 were received from other religious bodies; 230 were men and boys; 290 were women and girls; and 180 were students in the university. The contributions during the ten years amount to $64,289.60. Of this sum, $39,347.20 was applied to the current expenses of the parish; $1,229.16 to the maintenance of the Sunday school; $10,023.15 to permanent improvements upon the church property; $3,000 to endowment funds; $1,304.06 to the relief of the poor of the parish; and $9,186.03, or one-seventh of the whole amount, to the mission work of the Church, diocesan, domestic, and foreign.

Trinity Church, Detroit

Extensive improvements have been made in the church during the past month. On Thanksgiving Day the new pews were used for the first time. A new lectern and credence table, presented by the Chancel Guild, and a handsome brass pulpit, presented by Emmanuel parish, were also in place, and added greatly to the dignified appearance of the interior. At the time of the transfer from the Reformed Episcopal body, there were about 100 communicants; to-day there are 350. During this period nearly 100 persons have been presented for Confirmation, and about the same number have been baptized. The test of the spiritual life in a parish is largely shown in the attendance at the Holy Communion. It has been emphasized here by a steady and marked increase, often amounting to fourfold the former number. Of the original members, about two thirds are to-day active participants in the work of the Church. The music is rendered by a large choir of mixed voices. The Rev. Walter Hughson is rector.

Editorials and Contributions

HASTEN Thy reign, O Christ our King!
Thy reign o'er all this troubled earth;
So shall Thy people hail Thy birth
As Prince of Peace, in hearts that sing.

IN a valley of Judea there is a hamlet, and near to Bethlehem, a cave or shelter for cattle in winter nights, and in that stable a manger, and in that little bed a new-born Child. God Incarnate is there; the centre of the world, of all worlds, is there; the attention of angels and archangels and of all the company of heaven is there. O Bethlehem! royal city of David, House of Bread, Birth-place of the Messiah, Wonderful, Counselor, the Prince of Peace! Bethlehem, hallowed name, hallowed memory! Empires have come and gone, triumphal arches have crumbled, the languages that men spake when the angels sang Gloria in Excelsis Deo, dead, and buried in books; but the angels sing on, and the stars shine above Bethlehem as of old, and all the worlds and all the heavens listen to the sweet story of the Nativity to-day, as for nearly two thousand years they have listened, and learned how God "so loved the world."

THE Bishop of Stepney is anything but a boastful man, but through an incorrect report of one of his addresses, he has been placed in that offensive class. He was represented as saying that "he was the busiest man in London," as the preface to a description of his work and its drastic requirements, the way in which he was obliged to get up his sermons on the tops of omnibuses and the like. This utterance has been spread over two continents, with appropriate comments. The good Bishop wrote to The Church Times to say that he never was guilty of such egotism. What he really said was, "Although I am by no means the busiest man in East London, yet" etc. He thinks it possible that only a part of this sentence reached the ears of the more distant portion of his audience which was very large. Yet the false version still travels on in ever-widening circles, and meets the eyes of those who will never see the correction. We have just seen the original story in a Chicago paper of large circulation. It is a curious and an unfortunate fact that a blunder or a falsehood affecting a man's reputation, when it has once gained currency, can never be completely met and refuted.

SOME embarrassment exists at Chicago Theological Seminary (Congregational), over a book recently published by the professor of New Testament Exegesis, in which he appears to deny the pre-existence of Christ. He does not deny that this was the belief of the New Testament writers, still less that it has always been held in the Christian Church. But he does deny, apparently, that it has any basis in the authentic life and words of Christ, as edited by the professor. This is so glaringly at variance with all that the seminary stands for, that the severance of Professor Gilbert's connection with it seems to be emphatically in order. But he disowns any intention to resign, and in spite of the manifest results of the position taken in his book, stoutly asserts his belief in the "Divinity" of Christ. This assertion, however, does not reassure his critics. If he uses the expression, "Divinity of Christ" in its orthodox sense, he convicts himself of such a lack of logical capacity as to unfit him to be a trustworthy teacher. If he is not a Unitarian himself, his teachings are pretty sure to make Unitarians. Some of his students will be better logicians than himself. But it is remembered that a distinction has been made between "Divinity" and "Deity." It is also worth remembering that there are those who hold that all men are in a sense "divine." Such persons are able to maintain that Christ is divine, while they strip that word of all distinctive meaning. Thus it will be seen that the professor's assurances cannot be accepted without misgiving. There is a refreshing contrast to this in the conduct of Professor Herron, of Iowa, who felt impelled to teach views upon the subject of sociology and Christianity, which came into collision with the commonly accepted positions as held and taught by the faculty of his college. When it became clear to him that he was out of harmony with the principles for which the college was supposed to stand, he sent in his resignation. There was no complaint on his part of the opposition he had received, nor contempt for his backward colleagues. On the contrary, he exerted all his influence to secure the continuance of the endowment of his chair, which seems to have been given originally on condition that he should enjoy its benefits. Whatever was thought of his views, there could be but one opinion of his character as a man.

PRESIDENT ELIOT, of Harvard University, was invited the other day to address the "Episcopalian Club" of Boston. Exactly why such an association should wish to hear President Eliot discourse on religion is not apparent. Certainly they have no right to criticise his utterances, having invited him. On his part there was no attempt to disguise his views by "good words." There was, for instance, quite a different tone in his remarks from that of his notable address to the Mormons at Salt Lake City a few years ago. On this occasion he spoke out with direct and manly frankness, without reservation or flattery. He told the "Episcopalians" quite plainly that he did not like their kind of religion. Some of it he even characterized as "blasphemous" (we speak, of course, from newspaper reports). He could not accept the doctrine that "man is conceived and born in sin." His knowledge as a scientific man taught him better than that. He also objected to the phrase "in the times of man's innocence." He did not believe there ever was such a time. There seems to be something paradoxical here; but it only goes to show that unbelief has its paradoxes as well as faith. He further objected to a service in which the resurrection was compared to a seed. In this he referred, no doubt, to the fifteenth chapter of St. Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians, which is read in the Burial Service, and it would have been rather more to the point to say boldly that he, like the German professor, did not agree with Paul. Such teaching, in his opinion, was "dangerous to truth." The Ordinal also came in for criticism for giving the power of absolution to a priest. Such power, he considered, like the Pharisees of old, could not be given unto men. Something seems to have restrained him from referring to the passage in St.

John xx: 22, 23, in which Christ bestows this power upon His Apostles. We have said that President Eliot delivered his views with frankness. It may be said that he spoke out "like a man," but it can hardly be said that he spoke like a philosopher, or even as a man of science. His method might seem to imply that it was only to some details of the Christian religion that he took exception. It is easy to see that the bugbear is, in reality, the very idea of supernatural religion. Under such circumstances it seems a rather small thing to haggle over details, as if he might be prepared to accept the rest if these were done away.

Mr. Balfour on Ritualism.-II

MR. BALFOUR'S mode of expression in the article to which we referred last week, has been influenced by a popular view of things, and, as we have seen, can hardly be defended in its literal sense. But there is a meaning in it which is both true and important. We shall take the liberty of expressing that meaning, as we understand it, in terms which will make the real antithesis plain, and enable us to test its value. We take it, then, that what is really meant when such language is used, is something like the following: The Church of England is, on the one hand, a legitimate portion or constituent of the Catholic Church of history; on the other hand, she is Anglican, and as such, she has special characteristics. She has, since her first foundation in the British Isles, borne of necessity this double character; but since the Reformation, the Anglican characteristics have been more marked than before, and some of the most striking among them date from that time. We speak of features which were not introduced casually or as the result of the teaching of parties or schools, without definite authority—features which, sometimes coming to prevail widely and habitually, have often been taken as characteristic—but came in through authoritative action, and were established in the formularies, and fortified by canon, or in other legal ways. To such characteristics of the Church every man who is admitted to Holy Orders is bound in the most solemn manner, in the same way in which he is bound to be a true priest of the Catholic Church. To disregard or cast aside this class of things is evident disloyalty. Here, then, we seem to find the real principle upon which Mr. Balfour intends to insist; namely, that those points which were deliberately embraced in the English system at the Reformation, and in which the differentiation of the Church as Anglican properly consists, shall not be set aside or so altered as to lose their significance. We confine ourselves to the field of worship simply, for the subject is "Ritualism," which has that significance. So far as doctrine is involved, it is only indirectly.

WHAT are these Anglican characteristics upon which so much stress is laid? Are they important simply because we are bound to observe them, or do they possess an enduring value? We answer to this latter question that, as we understand the matter, they have a practical importance of the highest kind. Whatever may have been the failings of the Church in actual operation, the result has vindicated the action of the reformers in these respects. It may even be held that many of the shortcomings of the Church in the intervening period have been due to a lack of thoroughness in giving effect to her own system, and to the adoption in practice of an order not justified by anything in the Prayer Book, and one in which the relative importance of the offices of worship was disregarded. The characteristics which give a special character to the public worship of the Anglican Church are pre-eminently these: Simplicity and intelligibility. To these may be added, freedom from practices which represented too great a complaisance on the part of the Church toward vulgar or popular superstitions in the later ages. Simplicity was secured, as far as possible, by reducing the principal daily offices to moderate limits and, while retaining their fundamental and invariable features, cutting out those elements which unfitted them for "common" worship. Intelligibility was attained by expressing everything in the English language. The value of these measures, simple as they seem, was great and far-reaching. By this means an adjustment was effected suitable to the new age upon which the Church and the world were entering. No other evidence is necessary of the success of this movement than the wonderful influence the Prayer Book has exerted and the precious possession it has proved to millions of souls. Through it the Church of England has maintained her hold upon the intelligent laity to an extent not equalled anywhere in Roman Catholic Europe.

IT is manifest, therefore, that irresponsible attempts to ignore or override these great features of our system are both foolish and disloyal. The services are in the English language. They were put into that language with a great purpose in view, and the act has been abundantly justified in the history of the Church. To adopt deliberately a mode of rendering the service which makes the words unintelligible, is to ignore the whole intention which underlies the use of English rather than an unknown tongue. Likewise to disregard the order of a service as we have it, and by transposition or omission to make it seem like something else, is an act of presumption, and cannot but bring reproach. Ceremonial will be employed. There are many places in the Prayer Book where something must be done, but it is not made clear what, or something is directed, but it is not made clear how it shall be done. In all such cases there is room for a proper ceremonial, but in its formation due deference must be had to the special characteristics of our service, lest it should appear that what is done is not adaptation of the ceremonial to the service, but of the service to the ceremonial. From every point of view the principle stands good, that all that is done must grow naturally out of the service as it stands, or be a natural complement to it. Special services will be used. Our own Prayer Book provides for them and sets certain limitations. Those limitations must be observed. They are somewhat narrower in the case of a priest than in that of a bishop. It must also be considered that no good purpose is served in importing a service from an outside source—from the modern Roman order, for example—without regard to the genius of our people. We have adopted a service for Good Friday from that source, with very general approval, but it is probable that there are others which have no suitableness to our needs or circumstances. That must in every case be the primary consideration.

HOW far "omission is prohibition," is a question that has been much agitated. It is difficult to answer it absolutely. The Archbishops in their recent opinion expressed the view that where the reference, in the form of rubrics or prayers, to a certain ceremony, has once existed and then has been omitted, the ceremony itself is thereby excluded. The rule seems at first sight to have reason, but it evidently is not of universal application. In 1552, all reference to a very important ceremony, namely, the manual acts connected with the consecration of the Eucharist, was omitted from the service, and apparently it was deliberately omitted; and it was not replaced until 1562; yet it would be a bold assertion that such a ceremony was unlawful. It is exceedingly doubtful whether this rule is rightly applied, as the Archbishops applied it, to a symbolical ceremony of world-wide prevalence, and which does not depend for its suitability upon specific directions.

THE sum of the matter is that the influence and progress of the Anglican Church of the future must depend upon the thoroughness and confidence with which, on the one hand, it lives up to its claims as a part of the historic Catholic Church, inheriting the Catholic Faith, possessing a Catholic hierarchy, and maintaining the essentials of a Catholic worship; and on the other hand, as its mission is chiefly with the peoples among whom the English-speaking race dominates, its success will depend equally upon the tenacity with which it holds to those characteristics which adapt it in a peculiar way to the men of that race. Its development must rightly be in accord with the genius of its own system, through which, and through which alone, it can hope to fulfill its mission of reducing those who come within its sphere to a real and enduring subjection to the Holy Catholic Church. If we are justified in translating Mr. Balfour's utterances in this broader way, they will be seen to convey a principle of the utmost practical importance.

How to Teach the Prayer Book

READ BEFORE SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTE OF THE DIOCESE OF WASHINGTON

BY THE REV. RICHARD P. WILLIAMS

(Concluded)

OMITTING minor matters, such as the Litany and Occasional Prayers, which would form an interesting topic in themselves, our class will find itself among the Collects, Epistles, and Gospels. A bright child will ask at once the meaning of them. But we shall have to postpone an answer until we have carried the work into the Communion Service. When that is taken in hand, we shall find our work cut out for us. For, in the first place, we have the Lord's Prayer again, whose appearance there must be explained. Then, there is the collect for purity, whose language carries us straight back to the Old Testament; then the Decalogue seems, as it were, to cement our position among the ancient worthies; but no, we hasten back to our Lord's summary of the Law, and conclude with the collect for the day, and the Epistle and Gospel. How is it possible to teach this office without entering upon a complete Scriptural explanation of the meaning of the service? Of course the structure of the service is to be gleaned only from other services. But the contents are from our treasury. It is Bible through and through.

Even when we consider the place of the sermon, we cannot help being reminded of the numerous exhortations throughout the Scripture, from Moses to the Acts of the Apostles. Moses preached, Samuel preached, Ezra preached, all the prophets preached. And Christ preached. We are apt to think of the sermon too much as a merely Protestant auxiliary, without regard to its ancient place in the history of God's people. A great deal of stress is frequently laid upon the necessity for worship, and the sermon is often treated as a matter of no importance. But with a proper knowledge of Jewish and Christian history, within the limits of the Bible, we cannot be left with any such impression. We shall have a grand chance to impress upon our pupils the wonderful effects of sermons by prophets and others, before the Christian era, and of the results of some marvelous sermons by Christian preachers, as given in apostolic writings. When we investigate the Offertory we are again upon strictly Biblical ground, and once more have a chance to drive a lesson home, from the laws governing the Jews, as to tithes, etc. If this were done oftener, we might escape the church fair and the fancy bazaars, and a few of the other things which make people unhappy and distracted. But I have dwelt so long upon some of these details, that little time is left for one or two matters which are connected with this subject.

In the Office for the Holy Communion, we shall find every part permeated by the words or thoughts of Scripture. Not only have we the actual language, as in the Canon itself, but also in the Prayer for the Church Militant, the Exhortation, the General Confession, the Absolution, the Comfortable Words, the Sursum Corda and Sanctus, the Consecration, and the following prayer, we have either quotations or allusions, which are not to be misunderstood, to passages in the Bible. Both the Old Testament and the New are included. This is self-evident. But the grand opportunity which we have here is the comparison of this service with that which it superseded, the Passover. We are taken in spirit to the night in the Upper Room, and once we are there, we are immediately transferred to the night when all Israel trembled in anticipation of the mighty deliverance from Pharaoh. Think of all that is thus implied. Think of the wealth of sacred history which you can employ in explaining and illustrating your subject. There is not a part of the Bible that cannot be made to do duty in the teaching of this service. The fall of man, the slavery in Egypt, the deliverance, the long hoping for the Messiah, and then the full effulgence of His glory, with the eclipse on Calvary and the triumphant emergence on the first Easter. You can so combine the promises and hopes of the old with the realizations and completeness of the new dispensations that you shall, by means of this service alone, bring clearly before your pupils the whole design of the Revelation as recorded in our sacred volume.

But I wish to call your especial attention to one feature of your teaching which might be overlooked. When we read of the characteristics of the Jewish worship, as laid down by God Himself—I hope I am not treading upon the toes of any higher critics—we cannot fail to discover that their daily worship consisted not merely of prayers, as typified by the incense, but that sacrifice was a necessary part of it. There was a burnt offering, a symbol of renewed consecration to God of all that the Israelite was and had. What is the substitute for this now? The nearest that we can come to it, in the judgment of most of us, is the daily prayers, yet they do not seem to be the best expression of our self-consecration. In this higher and holier dispensation, there must be some nobler way of exhibiting our dedication to the Almighty. We have the prayers, which the Jewish incense represented. So far, we are no better off than they. What remains? This is a question which will bear considering by every one who undertakes to teach the meaning of the Prayer Book services, and especially the significance of the Communion Office. But just here, it ought to be said, and I think it ought to be taught, as a necessary deduction from what we read in the Acts of the Apostles, that no Lord's Day is complete without the celebration of the Holy Communion, and that with such accessories as the devotion of the people can provide to make our observance of that feast as marked in comparison with other days as the Jewish Sabbath was marked above ferial days.

I am painfully aware that this is a very slender contribution to the elucidation of a very great subject. But in the few moments left, let me ask your attention to one or two other services. In considering the round of the Christian Year, it is impossible that we should overlook the great historical events which the services commemorate. With Advent, we are brought into contact with John the Baptist, and we are reminded of the magnificent old prophet whose words are impressed upon us in the lessons. Christmas has its own Biblical teachings, not to be misunderstood by anyone. The other rapidly occurring feasts and fasts are inexplicable without the life of our Lord, and they are wonderfully hinted at in the Old Testament Scriptures appointed for the season. But when we come to Lent and Easter, with the following festivals, we are overwhelmed by the richness of the field before us. The annual festivals of the Jews, their feast of weeks, of tabernacles, their celebration of the first fruits and the ingathering, these all find their place in the thoughts of our people, as they are brought to Harvest Home and other beautiful services provided for by the wisdom of those who gave us the world's best book of devotion. I cannot go on. The temptation to treat all these yearly celebrations in detail is very great. You will see how great, if you will take any one of them and trace its growth from its first observance among our spiritual ancestors to the time when it became embodied in the beautiful words of our English office.

Let me emphasize one thing more. The offices for Holy Baptism, Confirmation, Holy Matrimony, Visitation of the Sick, and finally the Ordinal, will all offer ample temptation to wander with great profit among the many walks of the sacred volume. These seem never to appeal to the curiosity of the masses. The ordination services are seldom heard, except by the members of a few congregations, and these are decreasing with the tendency to limit them to cathedral churches, as in the Mother Church. Unless the Scriptural character of the method by which men are received into the sacred ministry of the Church is more taught than it has been, the respect for the clergy and the recognition of their high office, will continue to diminish as it has done in the past. Naturally, Baptism has no raison d'être outside the Scripture, and Confirmation rests exclusively upon it. And as to matrimony, the very words of the service repeat the fact of its institution among our first parents.

By all means, teach the Prayer Book. You will teach the Bible in no better way. You will not neglect any part of it, and you will bring to bear upon our daily and weekly and yearly services an abundance of illustration which will endear our beloved Book of Common Prayer to our children as it has never been endeared to us.

Some Common Mistakes

BY THE REV. FRED'K S. JEWELL, D. D.

VII.

FOURTEENTH. A very common mistake is that of regarding the most uniformly amiable person in the church as the best Christian. The mistake is very natural, because true Christianity is designed to soften the asperities and bring out the lovelier traits of character. Hence, the unthinking take the presence of that loveliness in the professed Christian to be the work of his religion. But, natural as the mistake may be, it is, nevertheless, as harmful as it is common. It creates false views of what true virtue and real piety are. It encourages people who are naturally very amiable, but who pay no attention to religion, to regard themselves as good enough without it, because they are "not as other men are, or even as this publican" Church member. It causes harsh and unjust criticism of unhappy souls who are differently constituted. It also tends to exalt a standard of worth which to some who are really striving to live "a godly, righteous, and sober life" is disheartening, because unattainable.

Christian people need to know vastly better than they do—better than it is to be feared they ever will in a pleasure-loving age like this—that while good enough in itself, there is no Christian virtue in mere natural amiability. It is a matter of native temperament, early training, and easy circumstances, and not of holy purpose, steadfast effort, and fine self-conquest. Persons of that constitutional make may take things easy, borrow no trouble, and make no trouble. Call it loveliness if you will, sometimes it is next neighbor to easy indifference or laziness; do not accept it as necessarily the gracious result of a supreme faith in the "All in All"; do not set up its possessors as saints par excellence, for it may have cost them no saintly effort. They may deserve neither praise nor blame; they cannot help it; they are made so. The true Christian is called to "glory and virtue," and these are only to be found where there is being waged a manful battle with the evil appetites, desires, and passions within, against the things which make the unamiable and evil, and when, through holy valor and God's grace, the conflict is maintained in spite of defeats, and the final victory is assured through perseverance to the end. In the Christian warfare, then, the less lovely to the outward eye may be to the eye of the All-Seeing the more true, saintly, and deserving.

Letters to the Editor

IS A NEW SELECTION OF TUNES NEEDED?

To the Editor of The Living Church:

Will you permit me to announce in your paper that I have in preparation a new musical setting of the Church Hymnal. Whether it will be published will depend upon the demand there may be for it. From my own experience, and from the experience of others who are interested in the music of the Church, I am led to believe that none of the present hymnals meet the needs of the majority of our parishes. My reason for asking the privilege of this announcement is that I may have the assistance of the people, and that it may be the people's hymnal. I invite correspondence from all who are interested in the matter, that I may know if the need of a new setting is universally felt.

May I give a few of my own reasons for this need? First, in many of the tunes now in use there is a lack of true melody. And I am bold to say that this is true of some of the tunes of Dykes and of Barnby and of Stainer. To illustrate my meaning, take the tune St. Oswald, by Dykes, as set to hymn 257. Ask a Sunday school to sing it, and then let them sing it to Brocklesbury (hymn 207), and note the difference in the effect. Suppose you are having a missionary meeting, and you want to inspire the hearts of the people with missionary enthusiasm by these glowing words of Bishop Coxe. Which tune will serve your purpose the better? Which tune will be taken up by the congregation until, before the last verse is reached, the hymn is rolling in a great wave of song up to the Redeemer's throne?

Second, in some of the tunes now in use, the music is untrue to the rhythm, and sometimes to the sense of the words. We are asked, in singing the hymns, "Hark, the glad sound," and "Hail to the Lord's anointed," to put a bold accent on the article "the," and on the preposition "to." Then, in both of the settings of hymn 203, in the fifth line of each verse, "Then, O my Lord, prepare," it sounds to my ear as if we were asking the Lord to get ready Himself for something. If we will examine this hymn, we will find that it is not an eight-line, but a seven-line hymn, and that the words, "Then, O my Lord, prepare my soul for that blest day," form a single line, and should be treated accordingly. The only correct tune, so far, that has been written for this hymn is by Dr. J. S. B. Hodges, but it appears in none of our hymnals.

Third, for the hymns to be used on week-days, there is need of simpler and more familiar tunes. Suppose you are having a service on the Nativity of St. John Baptist. There are a dozen people present, none of them musicians, and you want to sing the 163d hymn. You will not sing it to St. George, even if Dr. Gauntlet did write the tune. You will sing it to Dennis, or to Boylston, or else you will sing it by yourself. Then why not have Dennis or Boylston set to it?

Fourth, there is a call from the people for the old revival tunes, such as Hendon and Horton, and the old melody to, "There is a fountain." The Church did well in giving us, in the Hymnal, hymns for parochial Missions, but tunes for parochial Missions are few and far between. I yield to none in my admiration of Dr. J. B. Calkin as a tune writer; but his setting to "Love of Jesus, all divine," is not the tune to make that love manifest at a noon meeting of factory hands, or in a schoolhouse meeting of miners. But sing it to the revival tune of Marcus Morris Wells' "Holy Spirit, faithful Guide," and the simplicity of the music will make more plainly felt the simplicity of the Gospel that is to follow. I feel strongly on this point. I feel that if the Church is losing ground with the masses, it is, in no small degree, because we are chilling the fervor of our Gospel hymns with a surplussage of technical music. If it should be objected, on the part of congregations of musical culture, that my proposed new setting would be suited to only one class of people, my answer would be that, while this one class of people is by far the larger class, there is room in the hymnal for both kinds of music, provided the typography and book-making of the new Presbyterian Hymnal be followed. The theory that in a hymnal each hymn should have but one tune, I believe to be neither universally true nor practical. It is no doubt true of some hymns. Jude's tune to the St. Andrew's hymn, "Jesus calls us," seems to stick to it, notwithstanding the efforts of tune writers to supplant it. The same may be said of the well-known tunes to "From Greenland's icy mountains," and "Holy, holy, holy." It is not true of "Hark, hark, my soul," "Lead kindly light," and "O Paradise." You might as well say that the hymn, "Te Deum Laudamus," should have but one tune. Of course in a hymnal there must be a limit; but it is my ambition to construct a hymnal which shall not be sprung upon the Church, but in whose preparation the whole people will have had an opportunity to have a part.

ORGANIZATIONS HELPING AND HINDERING

To the Editor of The Living Church:

In the 1900 edition of The Living Church Quarterly nothing is more valuable for the reading of the clergy than the answers to the question: "Are the general lay organizations working in parishes helpful?"

Of course one would know at the start that everything depends upon the organization, its membership, the parish, and the rector. But it is rather encouraging to feel that if one's own conscientious judgment based upon trying experience leads him to the conclusion that in his parish a chapter or a branch or a twig is not a success, he has fairly good company in his sorrow, and that he will have many to sympathize with him if he drops the chapter, breaks off the branch, or lops the twig; and that he will not appear to be such an altogether incompetent and pitiable idiot to those who hear of it, if he has sense enough to do what the conditions demand.

There is not the least question but that the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and the Daughters of the King and the Girl's Friendly are most excellent organizations. Each one has for its purpose the accomplishment of a particular portion of the obligation that rests on every Christian; and each one suggests a particular way and definite means for its achievement. It is as evident as the day that ways and means which will be successful under the conditions existing in one parish may not be in another, or that in the same parish, conditions changing, success will be followed by failure if the same means continue to be used.

I want to add my testimony to that of the thirty-eight clergymen, out of the one hundred and thirteen cited, who expressed the conscientious conviction that in their parishes the Brotherhood of St. Andrew was not a valuable agency, by saying that I have had a chapter for about ten years. During four years of that time splendid work was accomplished; but one of the best things it ever did was to resolve, about eighteen months ago, to hold meetings only on call, and to give place to a new organization proposed. That organization has about eight times the membership that the chapter had, and is far more useful and effective. Meantime every man that was in the chapter who still lives in the parish is doing as good Church work as he ever did, and only one meeting of the chapter has been called in over a year.

Is it not of the utmost importance that loyalty to an organization within the church or parish should never be allowed to be a hindrance anywhere to the normal development of such resources as exist? Is it not a gross injustice to the clergy—one so common as, I fear, to deter some from timely action—that they should be subject to the censure and suspicion of enthusiastic organization officers when they decline to establish a branch or a chapter, or when they surrender their charters, or suspend meetings that meet to ask why they have met? When an organization becomes a burden to its members and to the rector of the parish, when it accomplishes nothing more than the aggregate of what its members would accomplish without other organization than the Church herself, it is time for the spirit of loyalty to soar higher and mate with common-sense in the cry of endeavor.

The Angels' Song

"Help us, O Lord, to join the angelic song
On this glad day on which we hail the birth
Of our Redeemer King on this sad earth;
With wond'ring love, O may our spirits long
To join the anthem of that angel throng:
Be that the key-note of our Christmas mirth.
Our feast of joy which banisheth all dearth,
That song of right triumphant over wrong,
Glory to God on high, and on earth peace,
Good will to men! Triumphant is the sound,
For He is born who brings the full release
To those who long from sin to be unbound.
Before that manger bed let discord cease,
And love, triumphant over all, be crowned!

The Rev. Epiphanius Wilson, M. A., "Eremita Peregrinus," returned on the "Campania," Nov. 25th, from a literary tour of France and Spain. His address is changed from The Churchman, 47 Lafayette Place, New York, to Bronxville, N. Y.

Official

THE Church Mission to Deaf-Mutes, New York, was incorporated in 1872 to promote the welfare of the silent people after they leave school. The 27th anniversary will be held in St. Matthew's church, West 84th st., near Central Park, on Sunday, Dec. 24th, at 8 P. M.

FAREWELL TO MISSIONARIES

On St. John's Day, the 27th inst., a farewell service will be held in the chapel of the Church Missions House, upon the occasion of the departure for Tokyo, Japan, of Dr. Rudolf B. Teusler and wife, of Richmond, Va. The Holy Communion will be administered by the Rev. Dr. Lloyd, general secretary, and an address delivered by the associate secretary. Mrs. Teusler is the sister of Dr. E. L. Woodward who recently was appointed a missionary physician in China.

Ordinations

On Sunday, Dec. 3rd, Bishop Whittle ordained to the diaconate, in St. James', Richmond, Va., Mr. Edward B. Snead, the Rev. W. M. Clark presenting the candidate. Mr. Snead has been prominent in Church work in Richmond for several years, especially in the boys' chapters of the St. Andrew's Brotherhood.

Appeals

THE DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY, the Church Missions House, 281 Fourth ave., New York. Officers: RIGHT REV. THOMAS M. CLARK, D.D., president; RT. REV. WILLIAM CROSWELL DOANE, D.D., vice-president; REV. ARTHUR S. LLOYD, D.D., general secretary; REV. JOSHUA KIMBER, associate secretary; MR. JOHN W. WOOD, corresponding secretary; MR. GEORGE C. THOMAS, treasurer; MR. E. WALTER ROBERTS, assistant treasurer.

This society comprehends all persons who are members of this Church. It is the Church's established agency for the conduct of general missionary work. At home this work is in seventeen missionary districts, in Puerto Rico, and in forty-three dioceses; and includes that among the negroes in the South, and the Indians. Abroad, the work includes the missions in Africa, China, and Japan; the support of the Church in Haiti; and of the presbyter named by the Presiding Bishop to counsel and guide the workers in Mexico. The society also aids the work among the English-speaking people in Mexico, and transmits contributions designated for the other work in that country.

The Society pays the salaries and traveling expenses of twenty-two missionary bishops, and the Bishop of Haiti; 1,630 other missionaries depend in whole or in part for their support upon the offerings of Church people, made through this Society. There are many schools, orphanages, and hospitals at home and abroad which, but for the support that comes through the Society, would of necessity be abandoned.

The amount required to meet all appropriations for this work to the end of the fiscal year, Sept. 1, 1900, is $630,000. For this sum the Board of Managers must depend upon the voluntary offerings of the members of the Church. Additional workers, both men and women, are constantly needed to meet the increasing demands of the work (both at home and abroad).

The Spirit of Missions is the official (monthly) magazine—$1 a year. All information possible concerning the Society's work will be furnished on application.

Remittances should be made to MR. GEORGE C. THOMAS, treasurer.

All other official communications should be addressed to the Board of Managers, Church Missions House, 281 Fourth ave., New York.

Bethlehem

BY THE REV. JAMES GOODWIN

O night of nights! thy diadem of stars
Flamed forth in splendor all before unknown;
While glory, yet undreamed, flung blinding bars
Of purest light athwart thy purple throne!

O Bethlehem! upon thy hilltop bare,
Where silent slept thy walls and towers white,
What lodging for thy King was ready there,
When suddenly He came that winter's night?

In moonlit, midnight peace He came to thee,
The angels chanted sweet His birthday song;
Naught else beside of kingly pomp had He
Save quiring seraphs blent in glorious throng.

A stable was His palace low and dim;
His royal couch, a manger piled with straw;
His courtiers, shepherds rough, who worshipped Him
All reverently, and kneeled in loving awe.

A tender Babe was He, this mighty King,
His little Body pressed in swaddling bands;
His mother's arms did round Him softly cling,
His mother's lips kissed yearningly His Hands.

In dull forgetfulness the sleeping town,
Unheeding, knew not of her Royal Guest,
Who in a manger lowly laid Him down,
And as an outcast meanly found His rest.

Ah, let us gladly seek the manger shrine,
And at our Saviour's cradle now adore,
That in our willing hearts the Child Divine
May find a loyal shelter evermore!

Christmastide, 1899.

Pen-and-Ink-lings

Then pealed the bells, more loud and deep,
God is not dead, nor doth He sleep!
The wrong shall fail, the right prevail,
With peace on earth, good will to men.

—Longfellow.

THE mistletoe has become so popular as a Christmas decoration in England, that it seems likely to be exterminated in certain places. In others, efforts to propagate it are being taken, and young apple trees can be purchased on which the parasite has become established.

The Christmas chimes are pealing high
Beneath the solemn Christmas sky,
And blowing winds their notes prolong
Like echoes from an angel's song;
Good will and peace, peace and good will,
Ring out the carols glad and gay,
Telling the heavenly message still,
That Christ the Child was born to-day!

In lowly hut and palace hall,
Peasant and king keep festival,
And childhood wears a fairer guise,
And tenderer shine all mother eyes;
The aged man forgets his years,
The mirthful heart is doubly gay,
The sadfare cheated of their tears,
For Christ the Lord was born to-day!

—Susan Coolidge.

A WONDERFUL old man has passed away at West Hanney, Bucks, in the person of Mr. James Bunce, parish clerk and sexton. For sixty-seven years (like his father before him, who also held the parochial offices) Bunce was the treble ringer. He had rung out the old, rung in the new, on as many New Year eves, and welcomed cheerful Christmas in with merry peal upon peal. He rang at the coronation of the Queen, at the Jubilee in 1887, and again at the Diamond Jubilee in 1897. He was eighty-five when he died, and had been for half a century parish clerk and sexton. His funeral was attended by well-nigh every villager, and his fellow-ringers rang a long, half-muffled peal out of respect for his memory.

EDWARD BOK writes, in The Ladies' Home Journal, that "there must be some radical and growing departure from the right and best way of celebrating Christmas, when each recurring year we hear a larger number of men saying: 'Well, I'll be glad when this Christmas business is over.' And they are led to this remark generally by seeing their wives, mothers, sisters, or daughters reach Christmas Day utterly tired out, with the prospect of a siege of illness as soon as Christmas is over. And it must be confessed that this state of affairs exists in thousands of homes. Women themselves frequently acknowledge their satisfaction when the day is over. Now, there is always something wrong when we make a burden of our pleasures. And if one of our sources of pleasure in the calendar's greatest gala day is derived from a feeling of thankfulness that it is over, there is something askew either in the way we prepare for, or spend, the day."

ANOTHER writer says: "The custom of the giving and receiving of gifts has grown to such extreme proportions that it has become in too many instances a mere barter or exchange. The moment we allow a thought of favors received to enter into our plans for gift giving, we debase and cheapen a custom that, in its origin and associations, is a hallowed one. The memory of the Christ-Child whose birth this season celebrates, at once the grandest and freest gift this world has ever received, should plead with us more forcibly than any words to place our giving upon the highest and noblest plane—that of giving for love's sweet sake alone. If give we must, as an acknowledgment and return of gifts or favors conferred, let it be at some other time or in some other way."

"THE Art of Seeing" is well illustrated by that keen observer, John Burroughs, in The Century. He says:

If we think birds, we shall see birds, wherever we go; if we think arrow heads, as Thoreau did, we shall pick up arrow-heads in every field. Some people have an eye for four-leaved clovers; they see them as they walk hastily over the turf, for they already have them in their eyes. I once took a walk with the late Professor Eaton, of Yale. He was just then specially interested in the mosses, and he found them, all kinds, everywhere. I can see him yet, every few minutes upon his knees, adjusting his eye-glasses before some rare specimen. The beauty he found in them, and pointed out to me, kindled my enthusiasm also. I once spent a summer day at the mountain home of a well-known literary woman and editor. She lamented the absence of birds about her house. I named a half-dozen or more I had heard or seen in her trees within an hour—the indigo-bird, the purple finch, the yellowbird, the veery thrush, the red eyed vireo, the song-sparrow, etc.

"Do you mean to say you have seen or heard all these birds while sitting here on my porch?" she inquired.

"I really have," I said.

"I do not see them or hear them," she replied, "and yet I want to very much."

"No," said I, "you only want to want to see and hear them. You must have the bird in your heart before you can find it in the bush."

Christmas

BY THE REV JOHN W. POWER

Out from the radiant regions
With God's own presence bright,
Flash forth in countless legions
The stainless sons of light;
Proclaiming God's salvation
Through His Incarnate Word,
For every tribe and nation,
The herald's voice is heard.

Then rapturously upwelling
To God, from all the throng,
Is heard the chorus swelling
Of the exultant song:
"With tribute for Thy glory
Let highest places thrill;
Let earth in peace adore Thee,
Be unto men good-will."

On all who sit in sadness,
In woe and sin fast bound,
Beyond all hope of gladness,
By gloom and death girt round,
With golden promise dawning
Across the troubled sky,
Ariseth now the morning,
The Day-spring from on high.

To-day, in David's city,
Of Virgin undefiled,
Pledge of God's endless pity,
Is born the Wondrous Child.
Him the prophetic sages
In ancient times foretold;
And all succeeding ages
His glory shall behold.

Till all things serve him, never
His government shall cease;
With His dominion ever
Shall peace and joy increase;
O'er realms by time unbounded
His kingdom shall extend,
For God in Him hath founded
The kingdom without end.

Was Christ Born Under Herod?

BY WILLIAM C. WINSLOW, D. D., D. C. L.

AGAIN the papyri speaks, this time their evidence relates to the statement of St. Luke: "Now it came to pass in those days that a decree went out from Cæsar Augustus that all the world should be enrolled." The Egypt Exploration Fund finds among its invaluable papyri, soon to be published with fac-similes and translations, some that cast new light upon the chronology of the enrollments made throughout the Roman Empire, and, consequently, directly affecting the date of Christ's birth.

It is known that a census, for the purpose of levying a poll-tax, was held at intervals of fourteen years; but we have had no secular evidence of any such enrollment earlier than A. D. 62, in the reign of Nero. Now the papyri show that the census cycle in Egypt absolutely dates as far back as A. D. 20, and they probably prove that the first of these fourteen-year-old censuses was taken in B. C. 10-9, during the reign of Cæsar Augustus.

I cannot here summarize the arguments and notes of my associates, Messrs. Grenfell and Hunt, upon so valuable a discovery, throwing light upon the disputed date of the birth of Christ, for they will fill seven pages in small type of our coming volume (see THE LIVING CHURCH, Oct. 28th). But one of the interesting conclusions is, that we now for the first time, have contemporary confirmation of the words of St. Luke, as quoted above.

A great point is established by such a discovery; viz., that the first census, by order of Cæsar Augustus, took place while Herod the Great was King of the Jews.

Was our Saviour born under Herod? The papyri chronologically support the assertion of St. Matthew, that "Jesus was born . . . in the days of Herod, the King."

Old St. Philip's Church

BY ELLEN FRIZELL WYCKOFF

IN Eastern North Carolina, near the mouth of the beautiful Cape Fear river, and within sound of the ocean, stand the walls of the first church built in the State, and one of the first on the Atlantic Coast.

Straight and true the old walls rise among the tall forest trees. Two hundred years ago a lovely village clustered about the old church, a town that was one of the most important harbor towns on the coast; and back from it stood one of the stately old mansion homes that graced the South in the old days. Not a vestige of the town of Brunswick remains. A slight depression marks the place where the mansion stood. But the solid walls of old St. Philip's stand there with the graves of those who worshiped within, resting in their shadow.

The bricks for the old church were brought over from England, each wrapped separately in paper. They are slightly larger than ordinary brick, and are unusually hard and well made. The mortar is like adamant. For perhaps a century, certainly since before the memory of living man, the walls have been uncovered there in the soft murky atmosphere, and only a few bricks are loosened, and fewer still have fallen to the ground.

The walls are nearly three feet thick, and there are gracefully arched and beautifully proportioned openings that once held heavy doors and stained windows. Pictures taken from a captured pirate vessel adorned the walls. One of these, an Ecce Homo, is preserved still in St. James' Episcopal church at Wilmington, where many of the relics from the older English church are gathered. About the ruins there is no remnant of roof or floor, no sign of even ancient decay, no smallest bit of broken glass, nothing but the four walls of imperishable clay!

And nature has taken these to her mother-heart, and even time has forgotten that the hands of man, whose work must be undone, placed them there. Little vines creep about them; tiny plants find foothold in the crevices; small, shy wood creatures hurry in and out. Where the music of the old organ rolled, there is only the sighing of the wind and the moaning of the sea and the wailing of the storm. Where worshipers once knelt, mighty trees have grown up, keeping pace with those outside, the limbs rising above the ruins and interlacing with those of the forest. Great, whispering pines, graceful ypouns, and sweet breathed myrtles, form curious aisles, and a carpet of fragrant pine straw covers the ground, while the sky, beyond nature's own matchless fresco, covers all.

Outside are the emblems of peace and war, rest and strife: the old graves with their blackened marble slabs and the earth-works that sheltered the gray-coated heroes during the bombardment of Fort Anderson.

The Fort was erected at Orton, a magnificent country seat farther up the river, and enclosed with earthworks the ruins of St. Philip's. Many of the tombs were shattered, but the old walls were left uninjured. It was about this time, in 1865, that the cornerstone was removed by lawless hands, and papers, invaluable to the State, destroyed. During the revolutionary war a battle was fought on the same spot.

One stands within the hallowed walls, and picture after picture rises from the dead past, vague, intangible ghosts of a time long gone. Peaceful worshippers gathering in the solemn stillness of Sabbath mornings, quaint little maidens meeting for Vespers, strong, brave men praying for the blessings that have come to us because of their faith and courage. And another—countryman against countryman, and then brother against brother, in deadly combat! The birth and growth of a city, its life and decay.

On the darkened marble of the tombstones are names that have been the nation's pride—names that belong to men who fill our pulpits and make our colleges what they are; who represent us at the Capitol; grand old names well known to the world. Quaint are the inscriptions upon the slabs, not one of which rests on its strong brick support. Was it time, or war, or human greed, that displaced them? The whispering pines tell no secrets, and far away the ocean moans but tells no story of the past. The broad, laughing river ripples musically on, its waters always new like the tide of human life that flows forever by these solemn monuments of the long ago.

And waiting on the river beach at the rude, seldom-used landing, for the beautiful steamer, the trim little "Wilmington," coming up from sleepy old Southport, one feels that St. Philip's, standing alone in its forest of towering pines, belongs indeed to a long-forgotten past.

Life Insurance Endowment

THE CHURCH PLAN

THE so-called "church plan," which has begun to attract attention in many sections of the country, is destined to open a new field for life and endowment insurance to the benefit of church, educational, and charitable institutions. Incidentally, it offers immense and almost unexplored opportunities for energetic work to the agents of the various companies.

So simple is the plan both in conception and practice, so evident are its advantages, and so capable of solving vexatious financial difficulties, that it is rather surprising the plan has not been appreciated and exploited long ago.

Suppose a parish wishes to build a church or to enlarge its present edifice or pay off a debt. Every one who has had experience in such matters knows how thankless and hopeless a task it is to raise contributions for the purpose. Many members do not feel able to contribute largely, some feel a little embarrassed to contribute very small sums, and others hesitate to encumber their estates by providing for an endowment in their wills. Enthusiasm, cordial at first, soon begins to wane, and fresh efforts must be made continually to keep up interest. Discouragement and lack of a smoothly working system cause matters to limp along, if it does not bring them to a complete standstill. Very often when only half the needful amount has been raised, the building is erected, and burdened with a heavy mortgage, without any adequate provision for paying it off.

Just here, applicable to all these difficulties, the "church plan" steps in, supplies the system, keeps things running smoothly, and affords a safe outcome from the difficulties. The clergyman and trustees get the co-operation of an energetic agent, and the leading church members give their personal assistance. The agent or some committee finds out by personal solicitation how much each member will pay annually to the church for that purpose, the contributions being placed in a separate envelope, and paid in a lump sum yearly or in quite small sums monthly. In this way even the smallest amount is valuable. When the amount promised for each year is known, then short-term endowment policies are taken out for the benefit of the church on the lives of certain young or middle-aged members, the amount and number of the policies depending upon the amount of premiums the pledged contributions will provide. If any of the insured die, their policies of course mature, the church receives the full value of the policies immediately, and the premiums on those policies cease. This alone offsets in a great degree the chance of diminished contributions through the death of certain contributors, a chance more than made up by a prospective increase to the church through new members.

During the last two years there have been a number of important cases where the plan has been tried on a large scale with great success.—The Traveler's Record.

The World's Output of Books

IT will doubtless surprise the book-lovers of this country to learn that neither England nor the United States can claim the distinction of standing at the head of the book-making nations in the annual output of books. An Englishman would naturally be inclined to claim that honor for England, while it is not unlikely that the claim, in the absence of any immediately available statistics, would be promptly challenged by an American.

As a matter of fact, several nations precede the United States in the matter of literary productivity, while the honor of heading the list belongs to Germany. It would seem to be an easy matter to get full and accurate returns of all the books published in the world in a year. But no such returns have ever been compiled under auspices that invite credibility. A contributor to The Bookseller, however, has just made an attempt to gratify the curiosity of the book-loving world by a compilation of book-making statistics, the results of which are important enough to justify extended comment in a recent issue of The Independent. The returns of this collator, Mr. Ronald Smith, are regarded as very reliable.

The compilation, which covers thirteen countries, gives the average total output of books, each being a distinct and separate publication, as 77,250, divided as follows:

Germany.....	23,908
France.....	13,268
Italy.....	9,567
United Kingdom.....	7,249
United States.....	5,815
Netherlands.....	2,863
Belgium.....	2,272
Denmark.....	1,198
Switzerland.....	1,000
Canada.....	735
Norway.....	589
Egypt.....	164

The figures for Sweden are given as 9,122, but it is claimed that 8,346 of these are "pamphlets" and that in the production of what we class as books she would probably rank next to Switzerland. More interesting than this tabulation however, is the compilation with reference to classes of books. It will seem incredible to novel-reading Americans that educational and classical books stand at the head of the list, the total being 11,631 out of the total of 77,250. Novels come second, however, with a total of 7,948.

England produces the greatest number of novels, with Germany second, and the United States third. Germany is the greatest producer of books on education, arts and sciences, belles-lettres, law, medicine, theology, and travel, while France comes first in books of history and the drama, and Italy leads in books on political economy, closely pressed by Germany. For a new country, however, the United States ranks well in all these publications, coming fourth in education, second in law, fourth in science, sixth in medicine, fifth in history, theology, travel, poetry, and the drama.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Book Reviews and Notices

Lights and Shadows of a Long Episcopate. By the Rt. Rev. Henry B. Whipple, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of Minnesota. New York: The Macmillan Company.

This book, with its heavy paper, large clear type, and broad margins will delight the heart of the book-lover. It is like Bishop Whipple himself—built on a large scale! A handsome picture of the Bishop forms the frontispiece, and scattered throughout are photographs of the beautiful diocesan institutions at Faribault. The volume is unique, and one of the most attractive of recent publications. There are few books in which the personality of the author is so striking; to read the book is to know the man. Bishop Whipple's wide acquaintance with public men, his close connection with Minnesota history, his devotion to the cause of the Indians, give him a national reputation; and in consequence his life is of absorbing interest. Now he is battling manfully for the Faith, now ministering to the sick and dying; then traveling through forest and over prairie to prevent an Indian outbreak. Again, he is at Washington interceding for the Indians. Without plan, apparently, the Life goes on in a happy-go-lucky fashion, delighting us in the same chapter with a piece of great statesmanship, a discussion of ecclesiastical questions, touching pastoral experiences, lectures on the preparation of sermons! The faith and the devotion of the Bishop are strikingly real. His theology is simple in the extreme—a fervent belief in the love of God. His work has been wonderfully blessed; his success will give courage to all friends of the Indians. No review can do justice to "Lights and Shadows of a Long Episcopate," but for the lover of good things a feast has been provided.

Dorothy and Her Friends. By Ellen Olney Kirk. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.25.

A delightful lot of sense, fun, and wise nonsense for the little ones. The scene is laid in New England, and the actors are dear good children, with a loving old uncle and lots of nice relations. The adventures are all in the common atmosphere of every day things; but, somehow, all things are, as they really are, wonderful when seen through loving and innocent eyes. "Dorothy and Her Friends" will be a delight to the little folk, and its quaint wit and quiet wisdom will be appreciated by those of riper years.

The Other Fellow. By F. Hopkinson Smith. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.50.

A collection of short stories of that universal genius, F. Hopkinson Smith. Whoever has seen a collection of drawings by this artist will perceive in them the art quality which pervades these tales. Mr. Smith's drawings are full of light and motion, the very essence of the things portrayed. When you look closely at them you will perceive how slight is the material used to produce the marvelous effect. If it is a scene in Venice, a great stretch of the tinted paper on which the drawing is made, serves for the foreground, and a deft touch of solid color, here and there, gives all necessary detail, and there you are, the picture is made; a gondola, some church steps, or a bit of sunlit wall makes up the rest. In some such way as this the same artist works in the literary medium, and each story of the eleven in the book is a finished thing, picturesque, interesting, and full of sparkling life. Like the artist's pictures, these stories of his are worth immeasurably more than their superficial extent or the material used would seem to indicate.

Contemporaries. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $2.

In this volume of sketches and articles gathered by the author from various magazines and other sources, we have a compilation of much interest. A keen observer, a gentle, loving spirit, and an accomplished writer brings us into fellowship with a very academy of illustrious Americans. Ralph Waldo Emerson leads the throng, shining with the mystery and simplicity of his seer-like nature. Our author sums up his estimate of Emerson in this sweet way:

"Of all writers," says Sir Philip Sidney, "the poet is the least liar," and we might almost say that of all poets, Emerson is the most direct and unflinching in his search for truth; to this must be added, as his highest gift, a nature so noble and so calm that he was never misled for one instant by temper, by antagonism, by controversy. The final verdict of posterity upon him must be essentially that epitaph which he himself placed upon the grave of the friend and brother-poet who but just preceded him. On his return from Mr. Longfellow's funeral, he said to a friend, with that vague oblivion of names which alone beclouded his closing years: "That gentleman whose funeral we have been attending was a sweet and beautiful soul, but I forget his name." These high words of praise might fitly be applied to the speaker himself, but his name shows no signs of being forgotten.

Such deft touches as this are constantly to be met with in these word pictures of Contemporaries, charming and interesting from first to last.

The Princess Xenia. A Romance. By H. B. Marriott Watson. Illustrated by F. De Thulstrup. New York: Harper & Bros. Price, $1.50.

This striking story has already appeared as a serial in one of the monthlies. It was inevitable that it should be preserved in this more permanent form. The publishers have printed on the outer cover the suggestion that it is "A Monte Christo story," but the resemblance lies only in the fact that the hero unexpectedly comes into possession of a vast sum of money. As a work of art, "Princess Xenia" is far better and on a higher plane than the sensational "Count of Monte Christo," in spite of the truth that a great name in the world of French letters stands sponsor for the latter. Christopher Lambert, Mr. Watson's hero, is peculiar enough, but he is thoroughly honest and sincere, with no private wrongs to avenge. His attempts to be a sort of Providence for the Grand Duchy of Weser-Dreiburg are logically worked out with a skill that stamps the author as an attractive story-writer of the first class. Though the hero's best efforts fail, as inevitably they were bound to do, yet he finds compensation in the very princess whom he had prevented from marrying one prince, and whom he had almost succeeded in mating with another. The characters of Count Von Straben, the German envoy, and of Katarina, the facile tool, are admirably drawn. We should not be surprised if the "Princess Xenia" were soon dramatized, as there are a number of situations that would lend themselves excellently to treatment on the stage.

Wabeno the Magician. By Mabel Osgood Wright. Illustrated by Joseph M. Gleeon. New York: The Macmillan Company. Price, $1.50.

Readers of the author's previous book, "Tommy-Anne and the Three Hearts," may remember how, when the little brother came to share the home with her, Tommy-Anne divided her name also with him; so, in this volume there are Tommy and Anne. It is Anne's pleasant task to teach her brother to talk with the Heart of Nature, as she had learned to do. Much new, strange lore does Anne learn from Wabeno the Magician. The latter is accompanied by the Dream-Fox who shows sleepers his picture-book, and leads them long journeys through strange countries, all in a minute. The new story is the same rare combination of fantastic imagination and scientific truth that made the first book so weird and delightful. It is handsomely printed and well illustrated, and has a green cover, with an expressive array of natural objects pictured in gold upon it—spider webs, snakes, owls, pine trees, birds, clouds, foxes. It is the right kind of book for the right kind of child.

The Physical Nature of the Child, and How to Study It. By Stuart H. Rowe, Ph. D. New York: The Macmillan Company. Price, $1.

This is a book of the greatest practical value to teachers and mothers. The obstructive conditions affecting the physical growth and the mental development of the child, are clearly indicated, and simple tests given to ascertain facts that will be of great helpfulness in solving individual problems. The suggestions are not so much designed to save work as to prevent worry. Such important subjects as Sight, Hearing, Ability, Nervousness, Fatigue, Growth and Adolescence, Home Conditions, and School Conditions, are ably discussed. The result is a valuable contribution to the important subject of school and home hygiene for children.

The Carved Cupboard. By Amy Le Feuvre. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. Price, $1.

A pious little story, excellent for a Sunday school or a young ladies' seminary library. It is not badly written, and there is a Bluebeard "memory" in a locked cupboard, which the four girls who rent a house promise not to try to open. They nearly die of curiosity, but when it is opened they are so disappointed that it does not contain dead wives, but only musty papers. Three of the girls marry the right men, and leave one to be a nice and deeply religious old maid.

Mr. Jack Hamlin's Meditation, and Other Stories. By Bret Harte. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.25.

This bunch of six stories by Bret Harte has all the well-known flavor of that writer. There are persons of questionable morals, in most picturesque surroundings, who speak lively slang, and do the most meritorious, self-sacrificing, and chivalrous things in the most unexpected manner. The moral that one may find in them is, that no one is wholly bad, and the vilest of our fellow-creatures are well worth our study. The scum of a marsh has its own beauty, and a wilderness can blossom with the rose of sentiment. In such localities, however, it must be said that one may meet with malaria.

Jennie Baxter, Journalist. By Robert Barr. New York: F. A. Stokes Company. Price, $1.25.

"Journalist" hardly describes this young woman. She was a female reporter and a female detective, often unscrupulous, and always smart. She is described as a vision of loveliness, exquisitely gowned. She earns a lot of money, and she marries a first-class lord who cannot afford to keep a carriage. The book is clear, bright, amusing, and will certainly keep you awake. The author forgets to explain why the princess made a row about the diamonds, and how the explosive could possibly have wrecked the treasure chamber, but you overlook that. The scenes at the great ball and in the Russian railway car are very cleverly done.

The Old Pincushion. By Mrs. Molesworth. Illustrated by Mabel and Edith Taylor. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. Price, $1.50.

Perhaps it is not fair to tell—but the old pincushion held a missing will, and "thereby hangs the tale." Mrs. Molesworth is too widely known as a sound and wholesome writer for the young, to need more than an announcement that she has added another book to her library for girls. The present volume is richly and tastefully bound in soft gray and gold.

A Good-Hearted Girl; or a Present Day Heroine. By Emma Marshall. With Six Illustrations by J. Finnemore. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. Price, $1.50.

The title of this book seems hardly to do justice to the character and deeds of Althea Lewison, as "good-hearted" is a term so often misapplied. The heroine is the daughter of a self-made man whose immense fortune has been gained through others' misfortunes. The daughter dedicates her life and her inherited wealth to repairing the wrongs done by her father.

The Chief Things. By the Rev. A. W. Snyder. Second series. New York: Thomas Whittaker. Pp. 195.

It should be noted that this volume forms a second series in study of "The Chief Things," and it will be found every way a meet companion to its predecessor. The several papers contained in it are inscribed, "To that important but much forgotten creature, 'The Average Man'"—one who reads the newspapers and little else save works of fiction, and who ordinarily will not even look at a theological book. Such an one if he but make a start on this will surely finish it, and to his own benefit.

A Pretty Tory. By Jeanie Gould Lincoln. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.50.

The frontispiece is a miniature of the fair Mistress Geraldine Moncliffe, the heroine of the story. Her father is a Tory; her lover, a Whig and a rebel, who has joined his fortune to those of the gallant Marion. The book teaches the patriotic lesson that "love of country is an all absorbing passion, beside which kings and crowns crumble and decay." The tale ends happily for the Pretty Tory, coy and fair,

In whose eyes of heaven's own hue,
Reluctant smiles the rebel blue.

The Archbishop's Unguarded Moment, and Other Stories. By Oscar Fay Adams. Boston: L. C. Page & Co. Price, $1.25.

Here are several stories, quite unlike in character and incident, but similar in their atmosphere of delicious humor. The laity will enjoy them almost in fear and trembling, for they are about very exalted personages indeed, at the very least the hero of each tale being a bishop. Five of the stories have been in print before; "The Discontented Bishop" and "The Trials of a Retired Bishop" are new. The book is richly bound, with a characteristic cover design in black and gold. The demure, but harmless, mischief of the stories will surely delight many readers.

The Sky Pilot: A Tale of the Foothills. By Ralph Connor. Chicago, New York, Toronto: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, $1.25.

The author of "Black Rock," though he writes under an assumed name, does not need an introduction. We know that what he writes will be worth reading, and that its workmanship will be of high and strong quality. "The Sky Pilot," as most people understand, is a preacher or missionary in the far West, and this is the title which he goes by among the rough men in the mine and on the plains. The author gives the clew to the main lines of the story in the following paragraph of his preface: "The story is of how a man with vision beyond the waving skyline of the foothills, came to the people with firm purpose to play the brother's part, and by sheer love of them, and by faith in them, win them to believe that life is priceless, and that it is good to be a man."

The Temple Treasury. A Biblical Diary Compiled with References. Two parts. London: J. M. Dent & Co. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. Price, $2.

This is a dainty little set, beautifully printed in small, very clear type, and rubricated throughout. The plan is simple. One page for each day, and on each page a brief lesson from the Old Testament, followed by a passage from the New Testament, the latter serving as a comment upon, or as an illustration of, the former. In the margin will be found copious Scripture references. The two volumes are bound in limp morocco, and enclosed in a neat box. It is an excellent guide to meditation upon the sacred Scriptures, so far as the suggestion of texts is concerned. This set would be an acceptable Christmas or birthday present.

The Adventures of a Siberian Cub. Translated from the Russian by Leon Golschmann. With 24 original illustrations by Winifred Austen. Boston: L. C. Page & Co.

This romance of bear life is most delightful reading. From one's first glimpse of the baby bear, Mishook, as, with his tiny sister, he nestles at his mother's side in the winter den where he was born, all through his long life of sixty years, the reader's interest never flags. The book is profusely illustrated. It is one of the most desirable selections to make from the excellent series to which it belongs—that of "The Gift Book Series for Boys and Girls."

"CHILD VERSE, Poems Grave and Gay," by John B. Tabb, is a very nice book for the little ones. The beauty of the cover will secure their attention, and the large print and wide margins will win them to read and admire. [Small, Maynard & Co., Boston. Price, $1.]

THE most unique of the novelties offered by Messrs. E. P. Dutton & Co. is "THE SCULPTOR CAUGHT NAPPING, a Book for the Children's Hour," from designs by Jane E. Cook. Price, $1. The designs are modified silhouettes, of white upon a dark ground, or vice versa, having the effect of cameos. They are mainly illustrations of nursery rhymes and tales, made for the entertainment of one little child, many years ago, and now by modern process and artistic revision are made available, at small cost, to the public. The book should be one of the most pleasing and popular of the season.

MESSRS. E. P. DUTTON & Co. have imported, as usual, a number of attractive books and booklets for the holiday present buyers. "THE GEORGE MEREDITH BIRTHDAY BOOK" contains a large number of choice bits from that popular author, with alternate pages for signatures of friends opposite the dates. Price, $1.25. "THE KINGFISHER'S EGG," by L. T. Meade, and other stories by several writers, has a dainty cover of blue and white with flowers and child's portrait in colors, and many choice illustrations. Similar in make-up are "TATTINE," by Mrs. Chas. W. Ide ("Ruth Ogden"); "THE VOYAGE OF THE MARY ADAIRE," by Frances E. Crompton; "HONOR BRIGHT, a Story of the Days of King Charles," by Mary C. Roswell. These are very pretty and very cheap (50 cents each).

A VERY pretty and graceful souvenir has come to our table, entitled "The Church on the Hillside," by Charles N. Hall, of New Milford, Conn. It is to this church that the poem relates, and from which the pretty illustrations are taken. The verses are of unusual merit, and to those who are interested in the local references, they must have exceptional value. The two introductory stanzas we give below:

THE CHURCH ON THE HILLSIDE

Upon the hillside sloping down
Toward the spreading country town,
A church of native granite stands
Surveying miles of pleasant lands.
The valley, stretching southward far,
The river, like a scimitar,
Of flashing silver, cleaving keen
Its way the fringed hills between.

The circling mountains, hemlock crowned,
Which stand like sentinels around
The level plain; the village, seen,
Though half concealed, beneath the green
Of elm and maple; thus o'erlaid
With shifting play of light and shade
From dear New England's changeful skies,
The landscape's varied beauty lies.

Opinions of the Press

The Standard (Baptist)

CHRISTMAS OBSERVANCE.—Either Santa Claus or the Child Jesus in the Sunday school Christmas festival; not both. The combination is always unfortunate, sometimes grotesque. Not that the thought of the Babe of Bethlehem and the sweet and solemn associations of the Nativity are inconsistent with gladness and childish glee, but you cannot mix folk-tales and pretty fictions with the sacred truth of Jesus' birth and not leave wrong impressions on little minds.

Here is a hint for those who are too poor to give many Christmas gifts: write Christmas letters. It is the thoughtfulness and the love that count, not the gift itself. Choose among your acquaintances a dozen lonely ones, whether poor or rich, old or young, and have a letter to each ready to mail in time to reach its destination on Christmas morning. No matter about having any news to write; just good wishes, and a tithe of the good words you will speak about your friend after he is dead. They will warm his heart now, which is far better. It is the season to give; and the only thing at all worth giving is oneself.

The Presbyterian Banner.

CHRISTMAS.—The year keeps its best holiday until the last. Other days may be bright with June skies, or rich with autumn colors; or they may be charged with personal meaning as they mark birthdays or other anniversaries; or they may be big with national significance as they commemorate historic events; but greater than all these is the day we are soon to celebrate. Its skies may be sombre and its leaves all dead, but it marks the greatest event of all time, and hides in its heart the greatest joy. Its meaning is more than personal or national, and its joy overflows all lines, and in some degree floods the globe. It is celebrated on more continents and islands, and by more millions of people, than any other, and rises into the grandeur of a cosmopolitan day. The great world knows deep down in its heart that this day, beneath all its merrymaking, means more for it than any other on the calendar. Christmas is the diamond of days, and it is fitting that the year should bring it forth as its finest gem to sparkle on the robe of its departing glory.

The Household

The Songs in the Night

BY WILLIAM B. CHISHOLM

Sweet voices of the midnight,
Breathe o'er the tapers dim,
Again in High Processional,
The children's carol-hymn.
Again the pomp, the blaze, the swell
Of this, Thy feast, Immanuel.

It is of all the gladdest morn;
Ah, care and pain, depart ye now!
Come hither, tabret, harp, and horn;
Come, wreath and star to twine the Brow
Which, prone in cot of Bethlehem,
Gleamed with no earthly diadem.

If there are sods new-turned on yon
Gray hillside, shall a dream return
Of other Yuletide eves when hearth
Did with the cheerful faggots burn?
Ah, sweetly sad remembrance! yield
All of thy pain and yearning up,
While here the manger stands revealed,
While o'er the uplifted festal cup,
Once more the lowly manger gleams
In starry blaze, while distant beams
Light hitherward the Sages three.
Turn we to such glad company,
Forget we e'en yon snowy hill—
A truce to grief and care until Another gloaming's shadow fall
Upon our dearest festival.
Harp, tabret, lute, resound afresh
The glory of the Word Made Flesh!

Christmas Roses

BY DOROTHY DEANE

LUCK had always seemed to be against Saunders. When Mary died and home became but an empty word, he went to Chicago with his motherless child; but even there misfortune dogged his steps through week after week of discouragement. When at last he found a foothold—albeit a precarious one—in the office of the Phoenix Oil Company, as a sort of general drudge and under-clerk, it was at a salary so small that few pennies were left when Saturday night came round. But Saunders hoped it might lead to something better, and did his work with a faithful care that might elsewhere have been appreciated.

Watson, the manager, never had a word of approval for him, but it was one of Watson's principles never to approve of anybody or of anything, so that it had become a matter of course with the other members of the company to anticipate objections from Watson, and to arm themselves accordingly. Watson had grown up in the oil business. His very person seemed saturated with the greasy product, so that it oozed out at his pores; his fat fingers left a smear wherever they touched a book or paper. Saunders had inwardly loathed his chief from the first; there was something about the small, expressionless eyes and sneering mouth that set his teeth on edge.

Saunders had long since given up trying to find pleasure in his work. No matter how well he did it, Watson always accepted the service with a growl of disapproval and a dissatisfied frown. The scorn on his clerk's thin face did not escape his notice, and he hated Saunders accordingly. Nevertheless, Saunders kept doggedly on, finishing every trifling detail of his tasks with nice exactness. He had a feeling that only by so doing could he come to anything better. It was part of his faith.

Saunders had another reason for working hard, and for picking up tasks that the other clerks shirked; it was that the hours might fly faster, and bring him sooner home to

Baby. She was the one joy of his irksome life. With her in his arms, he could forget Watson and the Phoenix Oil Company, and the whole mad world without. His bare room became a place of peace, upon which the angels looked down and smiled.

She was eight years old, his little daughter, but she was "Baby" still. Perhaps it was on account of her lame foot and her crutch. She had an eerie little face, gray-eyed and sensitive, like her father's; her voice had a plaintive sweetness that brought the tears to one's eyes; but she was a happy lass, and liked nothing better than to go tapping about their two tiny rooms with her crutch, setting things to rights after Saunders had prepared breakfast and hurried off to work.

There was one thing Baby sadly missed in this new city home—it was the flowers. All her life she had loved them with her whole earnest little soul; they had been her playmates, her dear companions. She never complained about it, nor told how much she missed them, but Saunders knew. Sometimes he scraped a few pennies together, and bought her a rose, or a tiny bunch of daisies. That was in summer, when flowers were cheap. Now it was winter, and violets were fifty cents a bunch. Besides, there was coal to buy, and Baby needed something warm to wear. He never minded his own shabby coat, but patched a worn elbow with his clumsy man's fingers, and wore it uncomplainingly.

There was one window where the sunshine came for an hour each day, and Baby had some bits of green things there, growing in tomato cans. Saunders had picked up a slip or two of geranium, and under her loving care they had taken root. In one corner of the window she treasured a bit of growing grass and clover, and she loved it even better than she did the geraniums, often laying her soft cheek against it, and sometimes sighing, ever so softly, for the green fields she had lost. But that was only when Daddy was away.

For nearly a month Saunders had been hoarding pennies and nickels, that Baby might have for her Christmas gift a certain neat little rose bush that blossomed in a florist's window. It bore clusters of tiny roses of the palest, most delicate pink, and Saunders knew with what delight Baby would treasure it, and watch the forming of new buds and their slow unfolding into flowers. It would be company for her while he was away. She had no child companions, for he kept her away from the rough people about her, guarding her jealously from contact with her rude surroundings, and she herself was like a flower in that dingy house.

More of hope had crept into Saunders' heart of late. A light seemed breaking upon his dull horizon. The president of the company had come home from Europe, and with his coming Saunders felt that he had found a friend, whereas before the whole cold cityful had been against him. He had held them all as enemies, and had fought them single-handed—for Baby. But from the moment he turned his hopeless face toward Mr. Merrill, and felt those kindly eyes looking down into his life—those sunshiny eyes, true, steadfast, hopeful—he felt the ice melting from about his heart, the world grew warm and human about him, and he looked out upon it with new trust, almost with joy. Then his work became something more than plodding; he found appreciation, where before there had been but grudging acceptance of faithful effort. Watson's rancor lost its sting, for Saunders felt that he could look beyond Watson.

Not for a long time had Saunders been so nearly happy as on that Saturday before Christmas. At noon he hurried away to the florist's, and bought the rose tree, carrying it to the office with him, carefully wrapped in papers. He set the bundle on the window sill beside his desk, where he might glance at it now and then, anticipating the child's delight.

It was two o'clock when the office door opened softly, and a face peeped in, a lovely young face, that could have belonged to no one but Mr. Merrill's daughter; so like his own it was, so gently proud, so lighted by shining eyes. Saunders caught the fragrance of roses as she whisked past him into her father's office. With her came her dog, a roguish fellow just out of puppyhood, who, finding himself forgotten and left behind when the door of the private office closed upon his mist ess, set out upon a tour of inspection, going from desk to desk, and regarding the clerks with a humorous cock of the eye, and a judicial rise and dip of his delicate ear. He examined the waste baskets with serious attention, and annihilated an offending newspaper with a mildly virtuous air.

Saunders watched the puppy idly for a moment. A week ago he would not have lifted his hopeless eyes from the monotonous trail of his pen, but the world had changed for him. He even found himself regarding his fellow-clerks, wondering, for almost the first time, what manner of men they were, for he had made no friends among them, but had gone in and out, holding himself aloof.

Watson's rasping voice broke in upon his thoughts. Saunders took up his papers and crossed the room to his chief's desk. While he stood there, waiting for Watson's O. K., he could hear the scratch of pens and the pit-pat of the dog's feet. Presently there was a rustling of papers; some mischievous voice muttered, "Rats!" Saunders turned to look—then he sprung toward his desk, toward the precious bundle on the window sill, just as both bundle and puppy went thumping to the floor. When he picked it up, the rose tree was a wreck. The torn papers showed the broken stem, the flowers were crushed, the pretty pot was in a dozen pieces. Saunders swept up the ruin in silence. The light had gone out of the world, and his heart had grown hard and bitter again.

He did not look up when Alice Merrill passed his desk again, unconscious of any mischief wrought. The scent of her roses seemed to fill the room. It stifled him. His fellow-clerks gossiped about her after she was gone, of her wealth and beauty. Saunders felt that he hated her—hated the whole heartless world. Why should she have all the roses, the soft raiment, the luxury, when life was so hard for his own little daughter? Even this pitiful little rose tree, that was to have shared the child's solitary days—even this was denied her. His eyes blurred suddenly, dimming the figures before him.

He went home empty-handed, for the rose had taken his last penny. True, he had his weekly salary envelope, still unopened, but half the money was due for rent, the other half must be saved for next week's living. He would have been glad of even a sprig of the shining holly. He saw the multitudes hurry past him with bright, excited faces, laden with bundles and wreaths of green. He met children hurrying homeward through the dusk, chattering and laughing. He saw other little ones standing before the windows of the shops and about the bakery doors, half-clad waifs of humanity, shivering with cold, wistful-faced, sunken-eyed. Once a small red hand was held out to him, and a shawled figure trotted beside him, begging for a penny. The thing was hardly larger than the dolls in the shop window. Saunders sought absently in his pockets for a coin, then he remembered, almost with shame, that he had nothing to give her. It made his heart ache the more.

As he drew near, he could hardly bear to go on. Baby would not complain, but she was only a child, she would expect some Christmas token, and he had dreamed so long of her delight when he should set the rose before her. Now he had nothing. The world was against him. It had struck at this little innocent child, and dashed away her one treasure. Why should he struggle longer? Why not end it all—for her, and for himself?

Baby heard him coming slowly up the narrow stairs. She opened the door and stood waiting for him, leaning on her crutch, peering downward with a bright, excited face, watching for the first glimpse of him. A sob choked Saunders as he groped his way up through the darkness.

She could hardly wait for him to reach her. "O Daddy! Daddy!" she cried out, as he caught her up in his arms and carried her in, "the wonderful thing that has happened!" Then she clapped her hands at his amazement, for upon the table before him stood a bowl of splendid roses.

"All for my Christmas, Daddy dear, all for my Christmas! A lady brought them this afternoon—such a pretty lady, with the shiniest eyes! She said she was a flower missionary, and her name is Alice. And there was the dearest little dog"—Saunders caught his breath suddenly—"with the softest, darlinest ears that stood up this way, and sometimes they hung down this way, and she made him sit up in a chair and shake hands with her. And she's coming again. I'm to have more, Daddy, more, when these are gone!" She breathed a great sigh of content, and dropped her head on her father's shoulder, with one hand reached out to touch the roses.

Saunders laid his face against her hair. Something sweet and holy crept into his heart as he listened to the loved voice. The world grew warm again, and bright and friendly.

Baby twisted her head around presently, to look at him. "Why, Daddy!" she said, "you's cryin'!"

Saunders caught her closer in his arms. "No, sweetheart; but Daddy's glad, because they've been good to his little girl."

Always on a Saturday night, it was Baby's pleasure to open the salary envelope, and to smooth and count the bills, with a funny, anxious face lest any be missing. So to-night, when they had had their supper, she settled herself in Saunderson's lap, and felt in his pocket for the stout little envelope. Then she snipped off the end with the scissors—

"Why, it's different, Daddy," she said, suddenly. "There's something—another little envelope—inside."

Sure enough there was. It bore a Christmas greeting, and it held a ten-dollar gold piece.

That night after the child was asleep, Saunders slipped away into the busiest of the bright streets. He bought another rose tree, that might have been a twin to the lost one. Then he chose the warmest, brightest of little frocks, and the softest, coziest of little shoes—till it seemed not the same Saunders at all who climbed the dark stairs with his arms full of bundles, and crept in softly lest the child should hear.

So after all there stood in the middle of the Christmas breakfast table the neatest of little rose trees with blossoms of softest, most delicate pink, and Baby, as she hovered about it, was sure that the flowers nodded and smiled at her, and as she leaned to look closer, she heard—though perhaps it was just a fancy—wee, sweet voices calling: "Merry Christmas, little maid!"

Growth of Women's Interests

AT the recent meeting of the Canadian Historical Association, Gilbert Parker, the novelist, spoke as follows: "The world is bound to profit by the broadening life of the woman of to-day. We men are bound to profit, because through the gentle professions of wifehood and motherhood, through their children, their brothers, their fathers, their living energies find other spheres. It was foreordained that the sensitive genius of woman, and particularly the woman of this country, and the sister country at our side, with her keen intelligence, her wisdom, and her interest in all affairs of life, should not by agitation, not by revolution, but by natural inheritance, and the eternal fitness of things, come into her own in good time—and that good time is the end of the century. But I will not stop to consider and compare the position of woman at the end of the last century and now.

"I have said that the home would be benefitted, and is benefitted, by the larger share of woman in the practical, as well as in the finer, concerns of life, but man himself is benefitted. If fear has existed that woman would be unsexed by her participation in public affairs, those fears are conclusively proved to be groundless in this country at least. Man has had too much to do in the world, and sometimes he has done it ill. He has taken to himself every department of public affairs, every concern of public institution, and has administered it according to his own mind. Time was when the work of charities was solely administered by man, when education was entirely in his hands, when all municipal affairs were under his governance. It is not unnatural, perhaps, that he somewhat distrusted woman's power of organization, administration, and government; but in that distrust he discredited himself. Woman had had the advantage of his companionship; an instructive acquaintance for ages; he had invariably discussed before her the great things he was doing, and how he was doing them. Surely, it seems but natural that woman should at least have the capacity to understand the meaning of administration, the organization of affairs, and the true meaning of the issues that affected the life of the country. In the natural course of things, there must always be some limitations to woman's participation in public affairs, but not to her sympathy, and when her capacities are exercised as far as the limit of her opportunities goes, and her sympathies exercised as far as our human aspirations, hopes, labors, and achievements go, we have a new power added to the old power, we have woman helping in the world, and woman blessing us in the home."

The Horse in Battle

A VETERAN calvary horse partakes of the hopes and fears of battle just the same as his rider. As the column swings into line and waits the horse grows nervous over the waiting. If the wait is spun out, he will tremble and sweat, and grow apprehensive. If he has been six months in service he knows every bugle call. As the call comes to advance the rider can feel him working at the bit with his tongue to get it between his teeth. As he moves out he will either seek to get on faster than he should or bolt. He cannot bolt, however. The lines will carry him forward, and after a minute he will grip, lay back his ears, and one can feel his sudden resolve to brave the worst, and have done with it as soon as possible.

A man seldom cries out when hit in the turmoil of battle. It is the same with a horse. Five troopers out of six, when struck with a bullet, are out of their saddles within a minute. If hit in the breast or shoulder, up go their hands, and they get a heavy fall; if in the leg or foot or arm, they fall forward and roll off. Even with a foot cut off by a jagged piece of shell, a horse will not drop. It is only when shot through the head or heart that he comes down. He may be fatally wounded, but hobbles out of the fight to right or left, and stands with drooping head until the loss of blood brings him down. The horse that loses his rider and is unwounded himself, will continue to run with his set of fours until some movement throws him out. Then he goes galloping here and there, neighing with fear and alarm, but he will not leave the field. In his racing about, he may get among the dead and wounded, but he will dodge them if possible, and, in any case, leap over them. When he has come upon three or four other riderless steeds, they fall in and keep together, as if for mutual protection, and the "rally" of the bugle may bring the whole of them into rank in a body.—Buffalo Horse World.

A SEQUEL TO "THE GIRLS OF ST. DOROTHY"

BY IZOLA L. FORRESTER

(All rights reserved)

CHAPTER VIII.

THE roads were in too rough shape from Ottawa to the lake shore during the six weeks that followed for any work to be done at Bonnie Castle, but there were many meetings held at the Rookery and up in the nest, and Eleanor's plan was steadily approaching reality. Tony had told the boys all about it, with the help of Madge and Mollie, and they had willingly agreed to enter into partnership with the S. D. S.

The money raising threatened to be a serious proposition, but Dave and Art. gave excursions on the iceboat every afternoon after school, at five cents fare, and soon had a tidy little sum that formed the nucleus of the Bonnie Castle fund. Jerry and Bobbie puzzled for a week over their share in the work, and finally decided to edit a paper. It was a great paper, that rival to the Daily Sentinel, and strange items appeared in it. They called it the Comet, and Bobbie painted on the top of each copy, a flaming, scared looking comet, with a tail like a fiery serpent, and underneath was a bit of poetry, modestly signed J. E.:

"I am a Comet of burning light,
And though you see me, I'm out of sight.
The S. D. S. keep up my fire,
And my motto is one that meaneth higher."

For fear that the last line might be a trifle vague, Bobbie painted a crown on the comet's head, and on it was written "Excel-sior."

"That is great, really great," Bobbie said the day of the first edition, as he studied the design critically. "Jerry, I think you ought to be a poet instead of an inventor."

"I rather think it is more in my line," returned Jerry modestly, as he sat on the edge of the table and chewed his pencil. "But one never knows what they can do until they try."

The Comet appeared twice a week, and sold for five cents a copy. It was printed up in Jerry's room on a comical little hand press which the boys rigged up themselves, and about twenty copies were sold. The editorials were especially clever, particularly in their delicate little allusions to the members of the two clubs. One that thrilled the reading public and increased the circulation, read as follows:

"Few people realize the lofty cause in the interest of which the Comet is published. The editors have great trust in the public, and feel confident that if they fully understood, the subscription list would be swelled to its utmost limit (which is fifty copies, as the press gives out, likewise the muscles of the editor-in-chief). The Comet represents the union of two important organizations of our honored city.

"Behold, how good and excellent a thing it is for brethren to dwell together in unity.

"True, but far more excellent and difficult a thing is it for brethren and sistren to dwell together in unity. Therefore the Comet is the herald of a great harmonic union of rival forces, and the work which has been fully explained in these columns (see last issue, price five cents, for sale by all newsdealers), is one of the vast possibilities and high ideals. All money received by the Comet goes into this laudable enterprise, presided over by our esteemed fellow-clubbers, Miss Virginia Hardy and Miss Eleanor Edsall. Any person desirous of contributing to this glorious cause, send for three months' subscription to the Comet, and receive special original design by B. C., of comet and poetry (see heading on front page) free as premium. This offer will only last a limited time, unless some kind friend donates some red paint."

The kind friend must have responded, for both premium and paper flourished, and the other boys called Jerry and Bobbie, "Professor."

Among the girls, the task of raising their share took various forms. Laura made tissue paper flowers, and decorated the town with her squash blossoms and sweet peas. Evelyn and Eleanor made a dainty set of embroidered doilies, and had a raffle, that was advertised extensively by the Comet, and netted five dollars.

Mollie and Madge plunged into the candy-making business, and such cocoanut bars and chocolate fudges as they disposed of! Mr. Hardy was very fond of old-fashioned molasses candy, and purchased it from the girls in such alarming quantities that Virginia was startled, until she discovered a hidden hoard in his best Japanese tobacco bowl.

Altogether, by the end of April, Mollie announced that there were fifty dollars in the treasury, the fruit of two months' work, and Mr. Hardy said he would give them fifty more if they would not bother him again during the summer. A delegation, consisting of Dave, Eleanor, Jerry, and Mollie, called on old Dr. Sanford, and asked him to give his services free at Bonnie Castle, and the doctor laughed a little and scolded a little, and at last he said he would look after the broken bones.

The next step was to have a talk with Mr. Stanley, and Virginia and Madge drove down to the rectory in the trap one spring day, to settle this part of the work.

Rumors of the proposed home had evidently reached the rector, for he smiled encouragingly when they told their errand.

"And you wish me to tell you how to get the waifs?" he asked thoughtfully. "You will have a little trouble there, girls. I am afraid the only trouble will be, there will be too many for Bonnie Castle to hold. But at all events it is a splendid work, and I am very proud of my Sisterhood. Now the best and surest way for you to do is to write to Dr. Atwood who is the head of the mission work in Chicago, telling him just what you want to do, and that if he will find the waifs, you will come across the lake for them."

The letter was promptly written to Dr. Atwood, and the reply was most encouraging to the two clubs. He was delighted with the offer to take ten children a week from the great, hot city to pretty Bonnie Castle, and he promised his hearty assistance.

"That's all there is to do now," Madge said, when the letter had been read in open meeting at the Rookery, except to go ahead and fix up the cottage for the children, and we can do that any time during May or June. Have you got a tent yet, Jerry?"

"We've got three," answered Jerry, "and I have been using Mellin's Food for some time and I cannot get along without it, after using nearly all other brands of food and milk, all of them disagreeing with my baby. It is the best food for children I have ever tried. My baby has not been sick a day since I began using Mellin's Food a year ago. When I began using it the baby was sick all the time and did not look as if he could live, but he began to improve at once on Mellin's Food. Now he is the healthiest, strongest baby in town. Mrs. R. "You know where the head of the glen is, Nell," said Jerry, ignoring his fellow-editor. "Well, we're going to camp just around that curve, so the bluff will keep the winds off us when a nor'easter sweeps over the lake. That is a little below the Castle, but only down the glen; and there is the very place for three tents and our boats. And Tony says—where is Tony, by the way. It's after four."

"He went to the postoffice," answered Mollie. "I saw him on Main street when I was on my wheel a while ago."

Madge turned away from the group around the long table in the sitting room at the Rookery, and stood by the window where she could watch the road leading to the centre of the town. She knew why Tony had gone to the postoffice, instead of hurrying on with the rest of the boys to have a good time. The last letter from Florida had been rather a sad one. There was to be a final consultation of physicians, Mrs. Ferrall wrote, and their word would mean that either she could return home, or else remain South until another fall.

The merry, laughing voices in the centre of the room seemed far away and strange as she leaned her head out of the open window, to watch and wait. All at once some one came running toward the Rookery, and when she waved her hand, a cap was waved back and a letter too, and Madge drew back her head with a queer feeling of uncertainty when Tony entered the garden.

"We've sent a copy of the Comet and a premium to Dr. Atwood," said Jerry, when the door opened and Tony came in. His brown eyes seemed larger and brighter than ever as he looked at the circle of faces around the table, and his cheeks were flushed from running.

"It's all right, Dr. Atwood says," Mollie announced quickly, misunderstanding his eagerness, but Tony laughed, and looked over her shoulder to where Madge was standing.

"Catch!" he called, tossing the letter to her outstretched hands. "Mother is coming home."

In Old St. Andrew's

BY EMILIA ELLIOTT

THE wide hall was littered with Christmas greens and merry with the sound of young voices. From the broad side window—across the snow-covered lawn—was a view of a little gray stone church, ivy-covered and quaint, its windows vivid now in the afternoon sunlight. Mrs. Clyde stood by the window, looking out. There was a far-away look in her eyes that Betty, coming for advice concerning a star she was making, was quick to notice. "Grandmother, what are you thinking about?" she asked, and her question caught the attention of the other children.

"What are you seeing, rather?" Helen, the eldest of the grandchildren, asked.

Grandmother's eyes deepened, as she said slowly: "The first St. Andrew's, Helen, as it looked one snowy day before Christmas, in the year 1778."

THE DISTINGUISHING CHARACTERISTIC OF THE VOCALION IS ITS EXQUISITE TONE

THE VOCALION is remarkably well adapted for either the church or the private music-room. It is compact in form, occupying about one-third the space of a pipe-organ of equal capacity, and has a full, rich diapason tone-quality, which, together with great delicacy in the string registers, especially fits it to accompany the human voice. We give here a description of our Style 22, to which we wish to call the attention of all lovers of organ music, whose correspondence we invite. SEND FOR CATALOG G

"One hundred and twenty years ago," Jack interpolated.

"Hush!" whispered Helen. "Go on, grandmother, please."

"It was a plain, little wooden building then, standing, as our St. Andrew's does, in the same yard, snow-covered then, as now, the sunset rays falling on the tiny window panes, turning them into deeper, more wondrous colors than any stained glass ones could show. On the steps, a great bunch of evergreen in her arms, stood a rosy-cheeked little lass, of the age of Betty, watching a group of snow birds gathered about the crumbs she had scattered that afternoon."

Mrs. Clyde stopped speaking; but the children who had gathered around her with eager faces, were quick to respond.

"Who was she, grandmother?" Hal asked.

"Is there a story?" Betty questioned.

"She was your great-great-grandmother Elizabeth, Hal; yes, there's a story, though a very simple one, Betty."

"Little Betty whose father was the first rector of St. Andrew's?" Helen asked.

"Yes, dear."

"Tell us about her," Betty asked eagerly.

"Was she really thirteen, my age, and were the evergreens for St. Andrew's? Did she love it as we do our St. Andrew's?"

"It's the same church, isn't it, grandmother?" Jack questioned.

"I always feel so, Jack. Yes, little Betty of long ago loved it very dearly, so dearly, that I think sometimes that that love of hers has come steadily down through all these years. For, though after several changes from fathers to sons, it passed into strangers' care, as a family, we have always had it in remembrance, and when, fifty years ago, the original church was burned to the ground, my father had this one built at once, in the same place and following the old plan, save that stone was used instead of timber."

"Is that the reason you were so glad when papa came here to be rector?" Betty asked.

"One of the reasons, dear."

"Tell us the story, grandmother, dear," Jack urged. "There'll just be time before tea to hear it and finish these trimmings at the same time."

So, while the children with busy fingers made ready the Christmas decorations for the St. Andrew's of to-day, Mrs. Clyde came to tell them of the more stirring events that had happened about the little church, one hundred and twenty years before.

"It had been a bitterly cold day," grandmother began, "and Elizabeth, or Betty, as she was always called, as she stood on the church porch watching the snow-birds at their meal, thought of the brave men in the army, and wished for their sakes that the long winter was over. For herself, the winter days were full of pleasure, or had been before these days of war and trouble, but especially did she love the Christmas season. Betty's father was far away, serving bravely; indeed, the little village was quite deserted by all save women and children, except for the little home guards and to-day these self-appointed young soldiers were away, drawn by the attraction a small company of men, commanded by Capt. Harlowe, and encamped some ten or fifteen miles away, had for them. But so famed in escaping from all the terrors of war had the little town been, that it had become quite bold and fearless.

"Still Betty often thought about, and dreaded the coming of, the enemy, and, amidst all the misery and trouble that would follow, the harm that might happen to her beloved St. Andrew's was uppermost in her mind. In her father's absence, Betty had a strange feeling of responsibility for it.

"Presently she turned to go in; it was growing late and there was much to be done. There could be no services held to-morrow; but the church must have its Christmas dressing of evergreen and holly. There would be many of the village folk who would come during the day to think about, and pray for, loved ones, in the quiet church.

"Betty's entrance was greeted merrily by three little maids at work around a heap of green in the space before the chancel. 'Verily we thought thou wert ne'er coming,' Prudence Marlowe said.

"'Reggy needed help about the dinner, my mother hath gone to bed, ill with headache,' Betty explained.

"'Art going to give the "poor dinner" as usual?' Polly Arnold asked.

"'Methinks 'tis no time for feasting,' Melissa Arnold said gravely.

"'Not for ourselves, and alas, 'tis far from a feast this year; but at Christmas to make the poor and little children even a little happy, cannot be wrong.' As Betty ended, the church door was thrown violently open, and a lad almost staggered in. 'The enemy,' he cried, 'where be the parson?'

"The four young girls started forward in fear and surprise. 'Art sure?' Melissa asked.

"'Aye. I o'erheard a parcel of them talking in our woods; they are creeping up; there be some riding ahead. I near ran into them but now, and got a shot in the leg as I slipped by on my pretty Bell. She threw me just below, and I thought my game was up. Thou must hide me, and get word to Capt. Harlowe. 'Tis no further I can go.'

"Prudence had run to the door. 'They are coming,' she cried, closing the door quickly.

"Betty turned to the frightened, breathless lad. 'Into the pew there,' she said, 'down on the floor; protect thy face; now,

Polly, thy help here.' A moment later a mass of evergreen filled the pew and strayed out into the aisle. 'Now to our work,' Betty said, as steps sounded on the porch without. The next moment a trooper, entering the church, saw only four little maids busily engaged in hanging a Christmas wreath above one of the further windows. It was a pretty sight. The quiet church, filled with the last bright sunset rays, the evergreen and holly here and there; but prettiest of all was the group of lasses who, with bright eyes and flushed faces, were seemingly intent on their work. Involuntarily the man's hand went to his cap. Perhaps the sight reminded him of a little church in far-a-way England, where, doubtless when a lad he had often assisted in just such work. It may be Betty's face, when she turned, in its frame-work of dark hair roughened by her scarlet hood, which had fallen back, made him think of a little maid at home. At any rate, his voice was respectful enough as he asked: 'Hast seen aught of a country lad, wearing a red cap, my lass?'

"'In a red cap? Surely not,' Betty answered demurely. Poor Bob Harding's cap had been stolen by the wind in his flight.

"'We have been too busy to think of lads,' Prudence said.

"The man came nearer. 'How near is Capt. Harlowe's force?' There was a moment's silence. 'I must have an answer,' the trooper said more harshly. He was looking at Melissa who, never overbrave, was one shivering mass of fear at this near sight of one of the enemy. 'Fifteen miles, good sir,' she said. 'I beg thee to let us go in safety, there is none in this town to fight; naught but women and children, e'en the lads are away.'

"The man smiled grimly. 'All but the lad who passed us—where hath he gone?'

"Betty pushed forward. 'We are not all cowards,' she said hotly; 'would'st have him, find him.'

"The trooper glanced about him—strode up and down the aisle, out into the tiny vestry, shaking his head at last: 'Not here'; then, his glance resting on the tall brass candlesticks on the altar, he stepped forward, reaching out his hands to take them. Betty was before him. The candlesticks had been brought from England, and were the pride of her heart; only that morning she had polished them until her arms ached. 'Would'st steal from the Lord's house?' she asked, her clear young voice full of scorn.

"The trooper hesitated. 'Tis the spoil of war,' he said.

"'Thou could'st not do so base a thing,' Betty pleaded.

"'As well I as another,' was the answer, as the man took the candlesticks and went briskly towards the door, outside of which five horsemen, wearing the enemy's colors, were drawn up. 'The lad is not here, but methinks he hath not gotten far,' the man said to his waiting companions. 'This young maid shall be our guide. But first fetch the key of this building, my maid; 'tis a pity thy companions shouldst not finish their task, and 'twould be well to guard against any interruption.'

"A moment later the church door was locked on the outside. There was little danger of the girls spreading the news or getting word to Capt. Harlowe now. Betty, they would keep an eye on. But wise Betty had her own plans made. Straight home she led them; through the kitchen, where Reggy toiled, and where the very atmosphere was redolent of good things. No fear now that her ruse would fail.

"Twenty minutes later Betty unlocked the church door. It was dark and cold inside. 'To thy homes,' she whispered, 'but perchance 'twere well for Bob to remain in hiding. I am off to tell Capt. Harlowe. Prudence, do thou keep watch o'er our brave Melissa, too ready-tongued.'

"'The troopers?' Polly questioned.

"'Feasting on Reggy's good things, like half-starved creatures. Verily I little thought our dainties would be so disposed of, but 'tis the means to an end. I have turned their horses loose and saddled my own Brownie.' Betty disappeared in the gathering darkness, and the rest, standing huddled in the church doorway, soon heard the rapid tread of horse feet on the frozen road beyond. Betty soon left the village behind and struck out into the open country. Her heart beat fast; often she glanced back, but she need fear no pursuers. The warm room, the well-cooked, substantial, and tempting dainties, the liquors she had brought up from the cellar, had had the desired effect upon the weary, hungry men.

"When, some time later, Capt. Harlowe, with Betty in place of honor at his side, rode with his men into the little village, he found six sleeping troopers ready to be made easy prisoners. He was just in time, however—the enemy had crept up. There was a short, sharp engagement just outside the village, then the enemy were driven back."

"And the candlesticks?" Jack asked, as Mrs. Clyde ended.

"That isn't all?" the Betty of to-day asked. "All of my story, dear. I told you it was a simple one. The candlesticks, Jack—you saw them to-day on the altar of our St. Andrew's. They were easily recovered and returned to their place. Thanks to little Betty, St. Andrew's was unhurt."

"And the boy?" Helen questioned.

"Released when Capt. Harlowe came; and his wound, a slight flesh one, dressed. I presume he was rewarded for his services."

"I'm glad the church wasn't hurt," Betty said.

"So was little Betty, dear. Early Christmas morning she slipped in alone to finish dressing it, and then, as was her wont, sit awhile with folded hands in the still, solemn place; but this morning, before stealing to her favorite corner, Betty knelt before the altar with its Christmas trimmings, and repeated with deeper, truer feeling than ever before, the 'Magnificat.'"

"My soul doth magnify the Lord," Helen said softly, breaking the hush that had followed her grandmother's last words. "We'll remember her to-morrow evening, when we come to that, won't we Betty?"

"Yes, indeed," Betty answered.

QUEEN VICTORIA is very fond of her grandchildren, and their presence with her quite softens her heart toward all sorts of suitors in whom they take an interest. An amusing story, which illustrates this statement, is told by the London papers. One day not long ago the Queen, accompanied by her grandson, the children of Prince Henry, of Battenburg, was driving out of the grounds of Balmoral Castle, when just outside the gate they encountered a man who had a dancing bear, in order to exhibit which he had been waylaying the royal carriage. The boys at once demanded the performance, and the Queen, somewhat against her own inclinations, caused the carriage to halt while the animal went through its paces. When the performance was over, the Queen sent her footman with a sovereign for the man, which she was surprised to see him refuse. Asked what he wanted, the man said: "I should like much better a certificate just showing that my bear has had the honor to dance before her Majesty." The Queen was not at all inclined to grant this somewhat presumptuous petition, but one of her grandsons again intervened. "I don't see," he said, "why a bear should not have a royal patent. In Rome a horse was once appointed consul!" This display of schoolboy erudition delighted the aged Queen, but she wished to test his knowledge further. "Well, well," she said, "tell me the name of the emperor who committed this act of stupidity, and your bear shall have his royal certificate." "It was Caligula!" shouted the Prince. A servant ascertained the name of the bear-exhibitor, and that very evening a messenger brought him a document, sealed with the royal seal, which constituted him "bear-leader in ordinary to her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India." This appointment has already resulted in large profit to the astute owner of the bear.

COFFEE EYES.

Diseased and Weak Eyes Helped by Leaving off Coffee.

"Father would never let his two daughters drink coffee, so until I was married I never learned to like it. When baby came, some of my lady friends advised me to take up tea and coffee, which I did, on their advice. Shortly after, I became extremely nervous, and my eyes began troubling me. This grew until I could neither read or sew and the inflammation and pain was great.

"Our good doctor was baffled, and advised a shaded room. For a month I lived in darkness. My appetite failed; yet to keep up, I still took the tea and coffee. Finally I went to visit in a family that used Postum Food Coffee instead of common coffee. I began to improve daily, and at the end of four weeks returned home, taking with me a package of Postum, and told the cook to prepare it for breakfast, but not one of us could drink the flat, insipid stuff, as served that morning.

"Suddenly we remembered poor Bridget could not read. I had the Postum prepared then according to directions, and found we could make it as well as my friend had. When the package gave out, it was so far from our ranch to the store, that we began to use some old-fashioned coffee we had in the house. At once my eyes began to inflame and pain. I naturally concluded that coffee was the cause of it; just why or how, no one could say, but I immediately discontinued the coffee, and as soon as some new Postum could be secured, began to use it again.

"This was four years ago, and since that time my eyes have given me no trouble but once; then I visited some friends, and rather than appear fussy, drank coffee whenever they did, anticipating no bad results, for my eyes had been strong so long; but in a day the head began to ache above the eyes, and the eyes became bloodshot, and before the end of the week were so bad I was obliged to go home. No temptation since has been enough to make me touch coffee, and whenever I find a listener I sing the praises of Postum Food Coffee. My father, who had been a coffee-user so many years, died while yet in his prime. 'Stomach and heart trouble,' the doctor said. Poisoned by coffee, I absolutely know. Finance and Commerce

SINCE a week ago additional trouble has come to Wall street. Thursday and Friday the market steadied on the better feeling in London on the rumors that the English forces at Ladysmith had been relieved by the joining of the troops advancing towards them for that purpose, but on Saturday came the astounding report of the serious reverses to the army under Gen. Bueller, from which so much had been expected. The shock threw London into a panic. Consols declined almost to par, and securities of every kind broke rapidly. Of course London was a heavy seller in Wallstreet. To a market which was at best but barely able to handle its own such a shock could have but one result. The whole list gave way, and the close was weak at about the lowest point of the day. These conditions serve to impress us with two important facts. First, that the principal money centres of the United States and Europe are not separate and independent, but constitute one financial world; that injury to one, means injury to that great whole, of which that one simply forms a part. By the same cause and effect what benefits one benefits all. This should give pause to the reckless confidence of those who are so ready to welcome, or at least excuse war between two neighboring nations by congratulating themselves that it will benefit us. It has never yet been made quite manifest how reducing the population and impoverishing the rest of the world, can put increased comforts and greater wealth into our own homes. The second fact made clear by existing conditions is, that in Wall street the general business prosperity of the country the past two years has bred a confidence so great that it has taken on its shoulders a load that threatens to crush it. The high water mark on the price of stocks was made almost a year ago. It culminated with transactions of 1-3-4 million shares in a single day on the N. Y. Stock Exchange. We said at that time that it was doubtful if this volume of transaction in a single day would again be reached by a dull market, and that without it those prices could not be maintained. But the speculative confidence, which made these prices, absorbed for the time a mass of securities vast in quantity, many of them most doubtful in quality, which the public now has foisted upon its shoulders, and with which through the street it is struggling. It is difficult to see from whence any permanent relief is to come. The general volume of the country's business is probably as large as it can at this time get to be. Earnings and profits are likely as great.

There is very little prospect of materially easier money. True, disbursements of interest in January will be the largest on record, but against that arises the prospects of large exports of gold which have already begun, about two million dollars having gone out last week. Exports of five leading articles for November were 15 million dollars less, or 20 per cent. less than last year. Bank discount in London remains at 6 per cent., and the trade is congratulating itself that it was not made 7 per cent. the past week. There is, however, a ray of hope in the indications that both the United Kingdom and Continental Europe, growing uneasy over the prospect of a long delay to the culmination of peace in South Africa, and apprehension of compensation which may grow out of the almost universal sympathy of other European countries with the Transvaal Republic, will buy more freely from this country of breadstuffs and provisions. At the moment there is a noticeable inclination on their part to do so. There is a better inquiry all around, and European markets have not been so ready to sympathize with declines here of late.

THE correct construction of a costume according to one's own ideas can best be accomplished at home by one's self. The most convenient stitching mechanism for the purpose is the Singer Automatic, making the single-thread chain-stitch. Its simplicity of parts, easy operation, and the excellence of its work, specially commend its use to the dilettante dressmaker desiring to express her artistic perceptions in the most appropriate form.

Having all the advantages claimed for other "automatic" sewing-machines, the Silent Singer has many points of preference that can easily be demonstrated by comparison. Of faultless construction and finish, it is absolutely the lightest-running, the simplest and most compact. It is more easily threaded, and its parts are better protected from dust. The broad treadle better of the operator, because it is lower and the position of the feet can be changed at will. These points are worthy careful consideration by those of delicate health or unaccustomed to continuous use of a sewing machine.

Suggestions for Christmas

A CONVENIENT writing tablet is designed to fit in a trunk, where it takes up no perceptible space, and fulfills all the requirements of a well-equipped desk. A board 25 by 15 inches is used for the foundation, covered on both sides by a medium shade of green felt. Measuring from the middle to the lower left hand side is an oblong blotting pad, held in place by straps of elastic or ribbon. Halfway between this and the right hand edge is a pocket of felt holding a pad. In the centre, near the top, is a long, narrow strip of felt held in place and divided into loops by small brass-headed tacks. The loops are just large enough to hold pen, pencil, knife, and eraser. A traveler's inkstand is secured to the upper right-hand corner, and in various other places are arranged a pen-wiper, calendar, and stamp case. Two pockets of felt, tacked to both ends of the board, hold a supply of paper and envelopes, and fold over upon the board. The edges of all pockets are pinked, and all fastenings made with the aid of the small gilt-headed tacks.

A CASE for trunk tags was composed of two pieces of cardboard four and a half inches long, rounded on one end, both sides covered with linen overhanded together. These two pieces were joined, leaving the upper end open. One side was embroidered, and the case contained half a dozen tags—and trunk tags in the case of a journey prove very useful. A case of yellow linen had a design of yellow daisies with brown centres, and one of blue bore a sprig of holly.

"A BACHELOR's pincushion" consists of a little china doll, around whose waist a large, round cushion is fastened. The doll appears to be standing waist-high in a cushion. Any color of silk may be used, and a frill of lace might cover the cushion.

AUTOGRAPH SPOONS—A perfectly plain surface, either on the handle or in the bowl of the spoon, is necessary for the autograph etching. Clean the surface thoroughly with silicon or whiting, and dip the spoon into a solution made by melting a little pure white wax in a porcelain bowl set in a pan of hot water; add slowly a little less than one-half the weight of powdered gum mastic, stirring all the time. Drain the solution from the spoon, and when nearly cool and hard dust on some whiting. Upon this white surface any one may write with a pencil. Next go over the penciled lines with a needle bound firmly to a handle, laying bare the surface of the silver or gold. Immerse only the portion of the spoon protected by the wax in a bath composed of one part of nitric acid to three parts of bydrochloric acid, and four parts water, and allow it to remain long enough for the acid to eat into the exposed lines of the writing. By removing from time to time for examination, and rinsing in water, the depth of the etching on the spoon may be determined. After washing well remove the wax with ether, and polish with whiting and chamois skin. Great care must be exercised not to allow the acids to touch the fingers or clothing, as they are deadly poisons, and will burn worse than hot iron. The acids should be kept in glass stoppered bottles, and applied out of doors to avoid accidents. When purchasing the acids from your druggist ask him to tell you exactly how to use them so that all danger from possible accident may be guarded against.

New Year's Eve

THE night is starry, bright, and clear,
With moonlight glimmering on the snow;
And midnight winds, with voices low,
Sing dirges for the dying year.

Old Year, I pray we part as friends!
Sincerely we can say "Adieu!"
And as we welcome in the New
We promise him to make amends,—

We pledge ourselves to nobler deeds,
To loftier thought and purer life,
To be more faithful in the strife
For what our nobler nature pleads.

Remembering all the solemn past,
Its lessons treasured in the heart,
So we will live and act our part
As if this New Year were our last.

Notes of the World's Progress

NEWSPAPERS FROM SOUTH AFRICA THE past week has not been of a nature to cause greater anxiety in England, yet preparations for a forceful campaign are still proceeding, with a vigor indicating a realization that full military strength may be necessarily called into requisition before peace is again proclaimed. Nearly all the colonies of England are tendering men and munitions, and men of every station in life are volunteering with enthusiasm. In Lord Roberts who will be given entire charge of the situation, great confidence is placed. He will call into service bodies of native Indian troops, although it will not be thought wise to reduce seriously the number of troops in that colony. News emanating from Boer sources expresses contentment with the situation, and an offer of peace on Boer terms, which England, of course, will not consider. The real strength and resisting power of the Boers has not yet been encountered, as so far the campaign has been conducted in British territory.

—x—

INCREASING AFRICAN COLONIZATION is leading interested governments into investigations to determine what can be done to overcome unhealthy conditions. In India, Great Britain has partially solved the problem by improving sanitation, and building roomy and airy dwelling places; but in Africa the deadly malaria of the coast regions bars the progress of civilization. Major Donald Ross who had charge of the recent malaria mission to Sierra Leone, reports that the mosquito is largely responsible for the communication of malarial poison, and that these pests can be exterminated by draining pools in which they breed; all of which seems extremely simple and of incalculable benefit, provided the project can be successfully carried out. The German government has engaged the services of Dr. Koch, of "lymph" fame, to experiment and discover, if possible, an anti-toxin that will counteract malarial effects. Dr. Koch is now in Africa experimenting with a number of apes, and seems reasonably certain of attaining his object.

THE NEED OF MORE STRINGENT immigrant laws may be met with Congressional action. Late reports of the Immigration Bureau show an influx of a class of people who do not possess the requisites of good citizenship, and are deficient in qualities which should be found in all who come to our shores to abide permanently. The time has long since passed when European cheap labor should be permitted to come into the country to congest the labor market. The majority of immigrants are below grade in their own countries, and can only reduce the American standard of population. It is true that present protective measures are doing much, but greater restrictions are needed. The question of politics should be entirely eliminated, and the matter faced from a strict standpoint of national good.

A QUESTION WHICH CAN HARDLY be settled by Congress without creating dissatisfaction, is that of regulating traffic between the United States and Puerto Rico. Being now an American possession, the logical conclusion is that there should be no duty on imports from the island, but this view does not meet with the approval of the League of Domestic Producers. In his message to Congress, the President recommends the abolishment of customs tariffs, and free entry of Puerto Rican products to American markets. Should this be done, the interests affected would be principally sugar and tobacco. The question is a broad one, as it may eventually involve Cuba and the Philippines. In the case of the latter, there being little need of protection by reason of industrial conditions, it is held that no tariff barriers need be placed, particularly as discrimination against other nations might result in embarrassment to our trade with China.

—x—

CUBA, PUERTO RICO, HAWAII, AND the Philippines afford a market to the United States, provided this country is able to supply the normal demand for foreign products, amounting to $100,000,000 annually. This estimate is based on their actual consumption in past years, and the probabilities are that the future will greatly increase the trade. The Bureau of Statistics has prepared tables showing that $26,000,000 worth of flour, shoes, leather, flax, woolen blankets, corn, iron, and other leading commodities were sent from Spain to Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines in 1896. During the same period, the exports to Puerto Rico from Spain amounted to $7,268,498, while those to the Philippines were $7,403,047.

—x—

THE BATTLE IN MILWAUKEE OVER the matter of extending the franchise of the street railway company is attracting considerable outside attention. As in other cities, Milwaukee traction officials evidently considered it a legitimate proposition to secure all favors from the city in exchange for as little compensation as possible, and it is said that in an endeavor to achieve this end, money was used in an illegitimate manner. At any rate, a majority of aldermen voted to grant the franchise, and a citizen has now brought suit against city and railway officials enjoining them from entering into the proposed contract. Under a recent decision of the Wisconsin Supreme Court, a tax payer has the privilege of bringing such a suit to protect his rights, and the rights of all other tax payers, when public officials neglect to protect them. This being the first suit brought since the decision, its outcome will be awaited with a great deal of interest.

—x—

A PROPOS OF STREET RAILROADS, the situation in Chicago is unique. At the present time an edifying spectacle is presented of a corporation defying the city authorities, and refusing to pay compensation for the most valuable franchise ever conferred upon a street railway company. The Union Loop Company controls the downtown structure upon which all elevated roads are dependent for reaching the centre of the city. When the Council granted the franchise, the latter contained a compensation clause, and as the city refused to permit the Loop Company to make bridge connections with department stores, the company claims the terms of the franchise are nullified, and will not pay up. But the city bids fair to win out, and may compel the companies to act honorably. The street railway companies of Chicago, with few exceptions, have considered the city legitimate prey, and have resorted to methods which would be shunned by honorable business men.

—x—

A PROPOSITION OF FAR-REACHING importance was presented last week to the Inter-State Commerce Commission, being the result of the proposed new classification of freight rates. Complaining shippers are represented by former Attorney-General Monnett, of Ohio, whose administration was characterized by sharp attacks on trusts. The shippers petition the Inter-State Commerce Commission to request the Attorney-General to bring action against the Official Classification Committee, for violation of the Sherman Anti-trust law. The committee is a body created by about sixty railroads, and it is held that under the decision abolishing the Joint Traffic Association, any agreement as to classification of freight is illegal. Under the proposed new classification, freights would be greatly increased—from $10 to $36 per car between New York and Chicago. On less than carload lots the increase is much greater.

—x—

CONSIDERABLE ATTENTION IS BEING paid by Secretary of Agriculture Wilson to the development of agricultural resources of new possessions, particularly of Puerto Rico. The fact that the United States is a heavy importer of tropical products, leads to a query as to whether or not a great amount cannot be raised in our own territory, now extended over the globe from the Arctic circle to a point three degrees north of the Equator. During the fiscal year ending June 30th, our importations of rubber amounted to $31,875,000, and it is believed this can be successfully and profitably produced in Puerto Rico and the Philippines. The matter is now in the experimental stage. It is the intention of the Secretary to have 100,000 plants started, and push the enterprise with vigor. Congress will be asked for appropriations for experimental stations in Puerto Rico, the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands, which will be under the direction of scientific agriculturists who will demonstrate what can best be produced, and instruct the natives as to the best methods of production.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY, LOS ANGELES,
BY MRS. EUNICE FINCH

THE UNITED OFFERING is an offering of money every three years from all the diocesan branches of the Woman's Auxiliary, to be used for some needed object in connection with the work of the Board of Missions. Mite boxes for this United Offering are distributed throughout the Auxiliary during the three years preceding the triennial meeting, and the collection from these boxes must be over and above all other contributions and work undertaken by the Auxiliary.

As we in our parishes make one great offering each Easter, so once in every three years the Woman's Auxiliary makes one also. It has a service and meeting at the time, and in the city where the General Convention meets, and it is the earnest desire of the Woman's Auxiliary that each and every woman communicant have a part in this great Triennial Offering. Many of our women look at the little blue boxes and say: "Oh! that is such a small way to give. Too small for me. I am interested in larger things." I think the reason why so many women lack interest in this subject, is because they lack knowledge. They know very little about the United Offering, therefore they have no interest. In order to find out just how much there is in this subject, we must look backward for a little time. Let us go back ten years and see what we have done in this line of work.

In 1889, just ten years ago, our United Offering was made in New York city, and amounted to $2,000. One half of this sum was given to build a church at Anvik, Alaska. That little seed that we planted beside the great Yukon River ten years ago has grown to a sturdy tree and is bearing fruit. At Christ church, Anvik, Alaska, they now have a branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, with president, secretary, and treasurer, just as we have here, and last year they sent down from that icy region an ermine bag holding $136 25 in gold nuggets, to be laid on God's altar for missions. The other half was used to send a missionary to Japan.

No one can estimate the amount of good that $2,000 has done, and is doing, in carrying the glad tidings to those who are sitting in darkness in Alaska and Japan. We rejoiced that we had been able to do so much. Yet we were not satisfied; we wished to make a greater offering, so the little boxes were sent out again to gather up the pennies for the United Offering to be made three years later. When we gathered in Baltimore, at the triennial meeting in 1892, to thank God for all that he had enabled us to do, we found that our offering amounted to $20,000, which was given to the Enrollment Fund to be used in the cause of missions. From $2,000 to $20,000 in three years is rapid growth, still we were not satisfied.

It was then decided that the next United Offering, to be presented in 1895, should be used for the endowment of the episcopate in a missionary jurisdiction. This would take $50,000. Could we do it? Could we step from $20,000 to $50,000 in three years? We resolved to try, and again the little boxes were started on their journey all over the country to gather up the pennies. In every diocese throughout the Church earnest Auxiliary women went to work to do what they could to raise this large sum, and as the pennies dropped into the boxes, prayers were said that our work might not fail, that God's blessing might be upon the workers and the work.

October 8, 1895, was the time when this great offering was to be made. As the time drew near, many hearts were anxious, lest we fail to reach this great sum. At 9:30 in the morning, Oct. 8, 1895, a great company of women might have been seen going into Christ church, St. Paul. From East and West, from North and South, came these women, all bringing gifts. After a great united service of praise and thanksgiving, their gifts were carried to the altar to be offered to Almighty God; and when these women saw the great alms-bason glittering with gold and purple and scarlet, heaped up and overflowing, joyful enthusiasm rose high, and fear, discouragement, and anxiety vanished. When the great sum was counted, we found we had given $54,000, the largest gift for missions ever laid upon God's altar. All this came from many self-denials and conscientious systematic giving to secure for all time a missionary bishop for the poorest and weakest and least remembered of all Christ's flock upon earth.

We only stopped for one moment to return joyful thanks to Him who had enabled us to accomplish this great result. Then we turned our attention to our friends, the little blue boxes, telling them that once more they must journey into every diocese of the American Church, glean the pennies for the United Offering of 1898, to be made in Washington, D. C., and to be a gift from the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions, to be used in the training and support of women in missionary fields. This object seemed to appeal to every woman interested in missionary work; so we determined that the offering of 1898 should be, with God's help, much larger than any we had yet made.

However scattered we may be, however separated by land or sea, however varied our ordinary gifts of money or service, once in three years the members of the Woman's Auxiliary feel that they are one in aim and in organization, truly united and drawn together. Each branch may feel itself feeble and isolated, as it struggles on alone through all the three slowly passing years; but when the triennial meeting comes and the United Offering is made, it realizes the strength and unity of the whole body, and goes back again to take up duty with fresh energy and courage, and renewed faith and hope.

Three years had rolled away, and the time had come for the United Offering at Washington. Some of us had the great privilege of being with that throng of women who gathered there five thousand strong with their precious gifts. I am sure all Auxiliary women were there in spirit on that day of days when the great offering was laid upon the altar. This time the golden alms bason, given by Mother England to her daughter America, was not large enough to hold the precious gifts. Many other basons were filled. As the Bishop presented the loaded basons, the choir of vested women joined the great congregation in singing the doxology. It has been said by one who was present that nothing in the history of mission work has excelled the reverent enthusiasm with which the women of the Church presented this largest of all their offerings, the fruit of devoted, consecrated, and self-sacrificing labor for the spread of the kingdom of Christ. It took the united strength of two clergymen to carry the alms out of the church, and it took the treasurer of the Board of Missions, with one man to assist him, four hours to count the great sum, and then we found that we had given $82,000. We now see that the Woman's Auxiliary has given in ten years, $160,000 over and above all other contributions of money and boxes.

Only our Heavenly Father can tell how much good this money has done, and is doing, flowing out into the dark places of the earth carrying the Gospel. And to us who have had the smallest part in this will come a blessing, for we know our dear Lord said: "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

But we must not linger in the past. We now have to do with the present, to make ready for the next triennial meeting, to be held in 1901, in San Francisco, where the next United Offering is to be made. This offering will be divided into equal parts, each of our missionary bishops to receive one part, and one part to be given to the Colored Commission, to be used among the colored people in the South.

In October, 1901, if we look toward the East, we will see a great procession of Auxiliary women, filled with enthusiasm and laden with many gifts, starting from the Atlantic and the Gulf States. As they march westward across the continent, each diocesan branch from the Northwestern, the Middle, and the Rocky Mountain States will fall into line, and they will come marching across the Rocky Mountains like a great army, never halting until they reach this Golden State where they are to present their gifts on God's altar at San Francisco. Then turning our eyes toward the Pacific sea, we will see great ships entering the Golden Gate bringing representatives of the Woman's Auxiliary from Japan, China, Africa, and Alaska, all bearing gifts to lay upon the same altar.

Now the question comes, will we be ready to take our place in that great procession? If so, we must be up and doing. Nearly one year has slipped away, and I am afraid we have done very little. Unless we make good use of the little blue boxes, we will surely lag behind.

Last year our diocesan branch was only two years old, yet how glad and happy we were that we could send $413 to that great offering in Washington. We will be three years older in 1901, and surely on our fifth birthday will give at least one thousand golden dollars. In our young diocese we all know there are few rich women who will be moved to give a large offering to this cause. Most of the women throughout the diocese are just like ourselves here in St. Paul's parish, some very poor in this world's goods, none very rich.

I tell you, my friends, only regular daily consecrated giving can do this great work that is at our door for us to do. If we will take pencil and paper and do a little arithmetic, we will find that if one woman will drop one penny into the little blue box every day for three years, she will have $11, and if one hundred women go and do likewise, we shall have $1,100. If one thousand women will each drop one penny every week into the little blue box, we shall have $1,560. There is great power in the almighty cent as well as in the almighty dollar. You see we can, if we will, carry one thousand golden dollars to San Francisco in 1901, our fifth birthday.

Could every woman communicant in this diocese have a little part in the United Offering to be presented in 1901, what a blessing it would bring to the diocese. Alas! many women do not even know there is to be such an offering. Let us who do know tell them. Let an earnest woman, full of missionary zeal, take the boxes and scatter them far and wide. Let her keep her eye on them, and a prayer in her heart for them, until the time for the ingathering. And every day when the clock strikes twelve, let us all remember to say the midday prayer.

The Sunday School

The December meeting of the Sunday School Institute of Washington was made specially interesting by a lecture on missions in China, by the Rev. J. Addison Ingle, now spending his vacation in this vicinity. It was illustrated by beautiful views, collected by Mr. Ingle in China.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

Baltimore Local Council

The December meeting was held Dec. 5th, in Henshaw memorial church, Baltimore. "Methods of Brotherhood work" were discussed by Mr. H. C. Turnbull, Jr., of Towson, and Mr. R. C. Morris, of Elkridge. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Daniel M. Murray; vice-president, William E. Bonn; secretary-treasurer, Edmund D. Smart; recorder, Harry L. Hyde; executive committee, H. C. Turnbull, W. W. Chipchase, George M. Kimberley, R. C. Morris, Wm. B. Hurst, and Geo. B. Oliver.

St. Paul's Chapter, Washington

On the 28th Sunday in Advent, at the evening service in St. Paul's church, the parish chapter celebrated its 10th anniversary. After choral Evensong, the rector, the Rev. Alfred Harding, gave a brief account of this, the first chapter of the Brotherhood in Washington, and of its faithful work, especially in bringing an increasing number of men to the Church services and to the Bible class. The sermon was delivered by the Rev. R. P. Williams.

Daughters of the King

The Buffalo, W. N. Y., Chapters

A special meeting was held at the See House, on Dec. 7th, to welcome Miss Elizabeth L. Ryerson, the general secretary of the order. Although the evening was a stormy one, about 60 were in attendance. The meeting was opened by singing the Daughters' Hymn, "Lord, speak to me," followed by the Creed and prayers of the order, offered by the Bishop. Miss Ryerson explained the character and aims of the order. It is carrying on the same work amongst women which the St. Andrew's Brotherhood does among men, and with a still greater prospect of success. She spoke of the establishment of the order in England, and of the favor with which it has already been received there. Chapters have also been formed in Australia and the West Indies, as well as throughout the United States and in Canada. The entire membership is now nearly 12,000. The Bishop of the diocese expressed his hearty approval of the order and its work, and his desire that it may be extended in his diocese.

Canada

Provost Welch, of Trinity College, has been appointed rector of St. James' cathedral, Toronto. By the recent census, the membership in that city of the Church of England, is shown to be larger by about 800 than any of the denominations. The semi-annual meeting of the diocesan board of the Woman's Auxiliary was held at Uxbridge. The Rev. W. J. Garton, of Rupert's Land, gave an address. A plan of collecting has been very warmly taken up in St. James' parish, Orillia, by which it is hoped to raise $1,000 for the Easter offering. The organ in St. James' church is being much improved. The congregation of the church at Midland have given up $100 of their grant from the mission fund. A number of Church workers in the city of Toronto, have offered to assist the mission board by visiting country parishes and missions during the winter and pleading the cause of the mission fund. The Bishop conducted the dedicatory service in Toronto, Dec. 10th, when the bronze tablet to the memory of the officers and men of the Battleford column, who fell in the campaign of 1885, was unveiled. Lord Minto, the Governor General, and an immense crowd were present. There was profound feeling when the thousands present joined in the special prayer for protection for the troops now engaged in war.

Bishop Du Moulin held an ordination in St. Luke's church, Hamilton, Nov. 30th, and preached in the evening to the local chapter of St. Andrew's Brotherhood in Christ church cathedral. The new organ in St. James', Guelph, was used for the first time on Advent Sunday. The rural deanery of Lincoln and Welland held a meeting in St. James' church, Merriton, Dec. 6th. The Rev. Robert Ker received a kind welcome on taking his place for the first time as rural dean. The re-opening of the old historic church, St. Luke's, Burlington, after its restoration, excited much interest. The Bishop preached morning and evening. The congregations were so great many had to go away. It is expected that nearly all the debt of $1,000 for the restoration will be paid at once.

Diocese of Huron

The Bishop held an ordination on St. Thomas' Day in St. Paul's cathedral, London, when a number of deacons were advanced to the priesthood. The special services held in Christ church, London, conducted by the Rev. T. A. Wright, of Brantford, were very helpful. The Western University, London, has received a further donation of $50 from Colonel Leys. St. John's church, Preston, has had several improvements made lately. A branch of the Woman's Auxiliary has been organized in connection with St. John's parish, London Township.

In order to obtain the legacy of $5,000 bequeathed to the Widows and Orphans Fund of the diocese, by the late Robert Hamilton, of Quebec, it was necessary within a given period to collect another $5,000. Of this sum $4,500 has already been obtained. Nearly $1,000 was given by Christ church cathedral, and St. George's, Ottawa. Four new branches of the Woman's Auxiliary were reported to have been organized, at the monthly meeting of the diocesan board, Dec. 4th. A good deal of business was brought forward at the last meeting of the Executive Committee in Ottawa. There was a proposal after reading the Widows' and Orphans' fund committees' report, to grade pensions to widows on the basis of the private income. Several amendments to the canons regulating the superannuation fund were proposed. The new church at Vernon is nearly completed. St. Augustine's church at Canterbury was consecrated by Bishop Hamilton, Dec. 3d, as it has been entirely freed from debt.

Diocese of Ontario

Great satisfaction is expressed at the liberal offerings throughout the diocese to the diocesan augmentation fund. In the mission of Roslin $1,249 was subscribed for the purpose. At the meeting of the Executive Committee in November, Archbishop Lewis read a letter in which he expressed his intention of resigning the see of Ontario either at or immediately after the next meeting of synod in May or June. A committee was appointed to consider ways and means of making a provision for the Archbishop after his retirement. He was the first Anglican Bishop consecrated in Canada. The consecration took place in St. George's cathedral, Kingston, in March, 1862.

Diocese of Quebec

The annual meeting of St. Francis District Association took place Dec. 5th, at Sherbrooke. The Bishop was present, and the Bishop of Algoma, formerly rector of St. Peter's church, Sherbrooke, also. The St. Francis deanery board met the following day. Bishop Dunn had a number of Confirmations in the township in December. He presided at the last meeting of the Central Board of the Church society. It was then announced that the legacy of $24,000, bequeathed by the late Hon. E. J. Price to various Church objects, had been handed over free of duty, Mr. W. Price having paid the government succession duty amounting to $2,400. The resignation of the office of principal of Bishops' College, Lennoxville, by Dr. Adams, has been received by the authorities. Dr. Adams, who is now in England, has improved in health, but fears he will not be able to return to his work.

Diocese of Fredericton

There was a Confirmation at Marysville in the new church, by Bishop Kingston, Dec. 2d. On behalf of the children's mission fund a special appeal was read in all the Sunday schools in the diocese on the 1st Sunday in Advent, in which attention was drawn to the needs of the counties of Restigouche, Albert, and Gloucester. Copies of the appeal were distributed to the children.

The new rector of St. Luke's church, Fort Rouge, Winnipeg, entered on his charge on the 1st Sunday in Advent. The ceremony of induction was performed by the dean of Rupert's Land, in the absence of Archbishop Machray. The new church at Pilot Mound was consecrated recently by the Archbishop. Dean O'Meara who has lately returned from a trip in the diocese, reports everything flourishing, but laments the lack of clergymen to fill needed missions.

The Bishop held an ordination in Christ church cathedral, Montreal, on the 3rd Sunday in Advent, when Mr. Day Baldwin, only son of the Bishop of Huron, was admitted to Deacons' Orders, the ceremony thus taking place in the church of which his father was so many years rector. Work on the new organ in the tower of the cathedral, is going on rapidly. The new chancel of the church of St. James the Apostle is nearing completion. The Bishop held an ordination in St. Stephen's church, Montreal, on the 2nd Sunday in Advent, when two deacons were advanced to the priesthood. The Bishop preached the sermon. A very successful meeting was held in Trinity church schoolhouse, Montreal, Dec. 5th, in connection with St. Peter's mission, Lesser Slave Lake, in the great missionary diocese of Athabasca. Trinity Woman's Auxiliary takes a special interest in this mission, and sends every year a splendid bale of groceries, clothes, drugs, etc.

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

In St. James', Chicago, on Sunday next, three deacons will be advanced to the priesthood by Bishop McLaren, Dr. Stone preaching the ordination sermon.

The Rev. D. W. Howard has accepted the call to St. Matthew's, Wheeling, W. Va., and will leave St. Paul's, Kenwood, at the beginning of the year, where he has been assistant to the Rev. C. H. Bixby for two years, his departure being much regretted by his rector and the parishioners generally.

Confirmation by the Bishop

The Bishop returned from New York a week ago, and resumed his visitations, which had been interrupted during three months' disability, by confirming, on the Sunday before Christmas, a class of 11 from Christ, Winnetka, and St. Paul's, Glencoe, presented by the Rev. H. G. Moore. He was unable to be at the cathedral on Christmas, but sent his loving greetings to the congregation.

Christmas Services

The reports from the churches regarding these services are uniformly good. At St. James', for instance, the increase in number of communicants over last year was 100. At St. Peter's, there were over 400 at the three Celebrations, an increase of nearly 15 per cent. At the church of the Epiphany the Christmas services were very well attended. There were three Celebrations, 7, 9, and 10:30 A. M., and about 350 communicants received. The 10:30 A. M. congregation was one of the largest in the history of the parish. The music was unusually fine, and included the opening tenor solos and chorus of the "Messiah" and selections from Gounod, Eyre, and others. Mr. E. C. Lawton is choirmaster, and Mr. Francis Hemington is organist. The annual children's festival was held in the church at Evensong on Christmas Eve. The Rev. Francis T. Hall, D. D., assisted the rector, the Rev. John Henry Hopkins, on Christmas Day. Few, if any, of the country missions were without the ministrations of the Church on their great festival.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

At the church of the Beloved Disciple, the benediction of a new rood screen and pulpit took place the last Sunday in Advent, Bishop Coleman, of Delaware, officiating.

The Church Mission to Deaf Mutes

Held its 27th anniversary at St. Matthew's, on the evening of the last Sunday in Advent. The statement prepared by the general manager, the Rev. Thomas Gallaudet, D. D., noted that the society is now limited in its operations to the dioceses of New York, Long Island, Newark, and Connecticut. Its missionaries hold sign services as often as practicable, in 10 different places; the society owns and maintains a Home for aged and infirm deaf-mutes, in the State of New York, on a farm of 156 acres by the Hudson river. The property is free from debt. The income of its Endowment Fund pays one-half of its current expenses. The balance comes from charitable gifts. There are 26 inmates in the Home, 14 women and 12 men. All have been educated, but have broken down in the battle of life. Three are deaf and dumb and blind.

Bequests to St. Luke's, and Indian Missions

St. Luke's Hospital, and the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Church, have received bequests of $5,000 each, by the will of the late Mrs. Elizabeth C. Judd, of Wilmington, Delaware, widow of Col. Henry B. Judd, U.S.A. Mrs. Judd's experiences in the West as an officer's wife, has caused her to specify that the sum for the Board of Missions shall be applied for Christian work among the Indians.

Home for Old Men and Aged Couples

At the annual meeting just held at the Home, the Rev. Wm. H. Vibbert, D. D., presided. The annual report was presented, and included the gratifying fact that through the payment of a legacy of Mr. Chas. H. Controft, the institution has been freed from debt. The enlargement of current income is needed to meet the increased expenses of the Home on its new site. An address was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Olmsted.

Archdeaconry of New York

At the annual meeting, the Ven. Archdeacon Tiffany, D. D., presided, and annual reports were considered. A movement was set on foot to increase interest in Church Extension. The trustees were re-elected as follows: The Rev. Drs. John W. Brown, Wm. H. Vibbert, David H. Greer, and J. Lewis Parks, and Messrs. G. B. Barney, A. C. Zabriskie, C. A. Clarke, and C. P. Bull. The latter was re-elected secretary, and Mr. James Pott, treasurer.

Church Schools, Colleges, Seminaries

At the annual meeting of the Association for Promoting the Interests of Church Schools, Colleges and Seminaries, held at All Angels' Church, the president, Mr. Hoffman, in the course of his address, disclosed a gift of $45,000 from the Hoffman family to the University of the South. Addresses were made by the Rev. Dr. Cole, warden of St. Stephen's College, the Rev. Dr. Dobbin, Hon. J. V. V. Olcott, and Bishop Niles, of New Hampshire. After the lunch at which the members were guests of Mr. Hoffman, a meeting of the board of directors was held for organization, and the following officers were elected: President, the Rev. S. DeLancy Townsend, Ph. D.; vice presidents, Bishops Coleman and Niles, Dean E. A. Hoffman, the Rev. Drs. A. Toomer Porter and Wm. R. Huntington; secretary, Mr. C. F. Hoffman, Jr.; treasurer, Geo. Zabriskie, D. C. L.

Christmas Services

At the church of the Transfiguration there were four Eucharistic celebrations on Christmas Day, Martin's Communion service being used at the choral Celebration, when the offertorium was "The Birthday of a King," Gounod's "O Salutaris Hostia" being sung at the post-Communion. At Grace church the music at the High Celebration was Lloyd, in E flat; the anthem being Sir Arthur Sullivan's "It came upon the midnight clear," and Robert's, "The whole earth is at rest." At Trinity, the service at High Celebration was sung to Weber in E flat. Thomas' "In the beginning," was sung as introit, and Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Glory to God in the highest," as anthem. At Calvary church there were four Eucharistic celebrations, with use of Stainer's "Mercy and truth are met together," and Handel's Hallelujah chorus. The music at St. James' church was under the direction of Mr. Walter Heary Hall, organist and choir master, and included Garrett's Te Deum in E flat, Gounod's "O sing to God," with Parker's Communion Service in E. A. St. Andrew's church, Selby's Te Deum and Jubilate were rendered, with Adam's Communion Service, and Hayne's anthem, "Lo, God, our God, has come." Mr. G. Edward Stubbs had charge of the Christmas music at St. Agnes' chapel, of Trinity parish, which included Handel's "O Thou that tellest," and Parker's "Calm on the listening ear of night." At St. John's chapel, Schubert's Mass in G was sung, several selections from Handel's oratorio of the "Messiah," and Gounod's "O sing to God," as offertory. At St. Bartholomew's church, the organist, Mr. R. H. Warren, conducted the musical portions of the service, which embraced compositions of his own, and of Berlioz, Mendelssohn, and Gounod.

Pennsylvania

Ozi William Whitaker, D. D., LL. D., Bishop

Dec. 10th is observed by the deaf-mutes as the birthday of Thomas Hopkins Gallaudet, LL. D., the founder of deaf-mute education in the United States. On Monday evening, the 11th inst., a banquet was given by the members of the Cleric Literary Society, at one of the city hotels. Among the toasts was "The clergy," responded to by the Rev. A. W. Mann, and "The world's congress of the deaf," responded to by the Rev. J. M. Koehler. The Dr. Gallaudet referred to is the father of the Rev. Thomas Gallaudet, D. D., founder of Church work among deaf-mutes; and Prof. E. M. Gallaudet, Ph. D., LL. D., founder of the College for the Deaf at Washington, D. C.

Confirmation at Norristown

Bishop Whitaker made his annual visitation to St. John's church, on Sunday evening, 17th inst., when he administered the rite of Confirmation to a class of 34 persons, presented by the rector, the Rev. Harvey S. Fisher.

Rector for Twenty-Two Years

The Rev. L. F. Hotchkin, registrar of the diocese, and rector of the memorial church of St. Luke, the Beloved Physician, Bustleton, completed 22 years of service on Sunday, 17th inst., and preached a sermon appropriate to the occasion.

Commemoration of Washington

Members of the First City Troop, in full dress uniform, were in attendance at Evensong, Sunday, 17th inst., at St. James' church, Philadelphia, when the rector, the Rev. Dr. J. N. Blanchard, made an address commemorative of the centenary of the death of Washington. At old Christ church, the service was in charge of the Rev. G. Woolsey Hodges, chaplain of the Sons of the Revolution. The sermon was preached by the Rev. R. H. Nelson, a member of the society.

A Tablet in Memory of Rev. Dr. Corbett

Was unveiled on Sunday morning, 17th inst., at the church of the Transfiguration, West Philadelphia, during the singing by the choir of the hymn, "For all the saints who from their labors rest." The rector, the Rev. W. H. Bown, made an appropriate address. The tablet bears the following inscription:

In memoriam. Rev. Sidney Corbett, D. D., rector of this church from July 1, 1884, to Feb. 1, 1896. Died December 17, 1897. We give thee hearty thanks for this Thy servant, who having finished his course in faith, now rests from his labors. Erected by his friends.

The Social Purity Alliance

Of Philadelphia, met on the 18th inst., in Holy Trinity parish house, with the president, the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, in the chair. Reports from the delegates to the recent convention of the Social Purity League of the world, held in London, were heard, and the same members, Mrs. William J. Hall, of Swarthmore, and Mrs. Mary Trevilla, of West Chester, spoke on the "White slave traffic." A committee was appointed to discuss ways and means to prevent minors from attending immoral performances at theatres.

Bi-Centennial of St. Martin's, Marcus Hook

The celebration was begun on Monday evening, 18th inst., this date being the 200th anniversary of the deeding of a lot and the purchase of a building in which the first services were held. This building was a cabin near the shore of the Delaware river, and services were conducted there in a very primitive style. From the time of the dedication of the land, Church services have been continuously held there. It was the mother of the Episcopal churches outside of Philadelphia, and the first missionaries sent out from England stopped at this station. The present church edifice was erected in 1845, and was consecrated by Bishop Alonzo Potter, in July, 1846. The present rector, the Rev. R. M. Doherty who recently succeeded the Rev. G. C. Bird, deceased, had charge of the services, assisted by the Rev. Geo. C. Moore, and the Rev. F. M. Taitt delivered the address.

Dr. and Mrs. Rumney's Golden Anniversary

The parish house of St. Peter's church, Germantown, was the scene of a brilliant gathering on Tuesday evening, 19th inst., when several hundred residents of that suburb assembled to celebrate the 50th wedding anniversary of the rector, the Rev. Dr. T. S. Rumney, and Mrs. Rumney. The interior of the large building was beautifully decorated, and a band played during the evening. Refreshments were served. Just before the close of the reception, surprise was given the aged rector and his wife, when the Rev. J. M. Hayman, the curate, presented them with a purse of gold, containing about $1,000, in the name of the entire congregation, as an evidence of affectionate esteem, stating that every one of the members, rich and poor alike, was represented in the gift. With considerable feeling, Dr. Rumney accepted the purse. Dr. Rumney and Miss Annie J. Morrill were married in Christ church, Alexandria, Va., Dec. 19th, 1849, by the rector, the Rev. Charles H. Dana. Dr. Rumney was then lay reader of that parish. In 1870, he came to Germantown and became rector of Christ church; and, in 1878, accepted charge of the new parish of St. Peter's, where he still remains.

Chimes for Christ Church, Germantown

On Sunday afternoon, 17th inst., in the presence of a large congregation, the chime of bells to be placed in the tower was blessed by Bishop Whitaker, assisted in the service by the Rev. C. H. Arndt, rector of the church. The bells rested on a platform in front of the baptistry. On the largest, or tenor bell, is the following inscription:

In memoriam of Edwin Jeffries. Presented to Christ church, Germantown, Philadelphia, Advent, 1899, by his wife, Elizabeth H. Jeffries. Charles Henry Arndt, rector.

On the rim of the bell are the texts from the Apocalypse and St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians: "The Spirit and the Bride say Come," "The fruit of the Spirit is." Each of the other nine bells is named after one of the "fruits": "Love, Joy, Peace, Long Suffering, Gentleness, Goodness, Faith, Meekness, Temperance." The bells were cast in Troy, N. Y., and together weigh about six tons; they cost some $7,000, which does not include $2,000 required to place them in the tower. They are said to be among the finest toned bells in the world, comparing favorably with, if not exceeding, those in the London cathedral. During the service the music was rendered by an augmented choir of 50 voices. Bishop Whitaker preached the sermon.

Parish Missionary Societies for Men

At the monthly meeting of the Church Club of Philadelphia, held Nov. 27th, the members were privileged to bring such subjects as they might see fit for the consideration of those present. One of the subjects thus suggested was the formation of societies of men in the various parishes to collect information respecting the missionary work of the Church, and generally to interest the male members of the parishes in the subject. After full and free discussion, an informal resolution was passed asking the Board of Governors to consider the same; and at the monthly meeting of that body, held Dec. 15th, the following preamble and resolution were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS; On the last "Club Night," opinions were very freely expressed that great benefits would result if the men of the various parishes could be gathered together at stated periods, in a manner similar to that which has been done for so many years by the parish branches of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions, for the purpose of increasing the interest in the missionary work of the Church, therefore,

Resolved; That the Board of Governors of the Church Club of Philadelphia, recognizing the importance of the dissemination of proper information in regard to this most important matter, and desiring, as far as lies in their power, to increase interest in the same, respectfully suggests to the various parishes the formation of societies of men for such purposes.

Washington

Henry Yates Satterlee, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

At a special service for the Guild of St. Barnabas, Dec. 11th, the following clergy were received as priests associate: the Rev. Messrs. R. P. Williams, Charles E. Buck, and C. F. Sontag.

On Dec. 14th, there was a memorial service in the church of the Epiphany, in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the death of Washington. The service was under the auspices of the patriotic societies of the District. Appropriate music was a special feature of the occasion.

All Saints' Mission, Benning

Has recently been placed under the immediate care of the Bishop of Washington who has appointed as priest-in-charge, the Rev. Philip M. Rhineland. The growing suburb in which this mission is situated, has just attained to rapid transit facilities, and the prospect for Church work is bright. There is a chapel, with 80 communicants, and a Sunday school of 70 pupils.

Maryland

William Paret, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Rev. Wm. A. Coale and family left Baltimore Dec. 14th, for Cecil Co., Maryland, where Dr. Coale has accepted the rectorship of North Sassafra parish, in the diocese of Easton. Dr. Coale was for eight years rector of St. Luke's church, Baltimore, resigning on account of ill-health, June 1, 1898.

Mrs. Sarah Jane Barrett, wife of the Rev. John Barrett, a retired rector, died on Dec. 14th, at her home, near Baltimore, in the 57th year of her age. Mrs. Barrett was born in London, England, her family name being Edwards.

A Gift from Chinese Christians

Some handsome embroideries recently presented to All Saints' church, Frederick, by the congregation at Hankow, China, in recognition of the generosity of All Saints' to the work in that country, have been placed in position behind the chancel. There is one large silken banner with two panels surrounded by Chinese hieroglyphics in exquisite embroidery. The centre-piece contains the Lord's Prayer, and the panels, other words in Chinese letters.

Legacies of Mrs. E. E. Rose

By the will of Mrs. Elizabeth Emma Rose is bequeathed the sum of $5,000 to the vestry of St. John's parish, in Baltimore and Harford Cos., for the maintenance of the family lot of the testatrix in St. John's churchyard, and the support of the rector in charge of the church, and $2,000 to the vestry of Emmanuel church, Baltimore, for the benefit of the Sunday school.

Confirmations in St. Paul's, Frederick Co.

Bishop Paret, in St. Luke's church, Adams-town, the Rev. G. W. Thomas, rector, preached, confirmed five, administered the Holy Communion, and made a special address to the congregation upon the need of students for the ministry, and upon the sacredness of the Lord's Day. In the evening, at St. Paul's chapel, Point of Rocks, in the same parish, he preached, confirmed three, and made an address on parish unity and Sunday observance.

Gift to Christ Church, Baltimore

A copy of the decorated limited edition of the Revised Standard Prayer Book of 1892, bound in white vellum, and exquisitely and symbolically decorated in black and white by Mr. Daniel Updike, has been presented to this church. The edition was prepared under the direction of Bishop Potter, Dr. Huntington, and Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, and made possible through the munificent generosity of the last named.

Confirmations in Linganore Parish

On Nov. 20th and 21st, Bishop Paret preached, and administered the rite of Confirmation to a class of five in Zion church, Urbana; two in Grace church, New Market; three in St. Paul's, Poplar Spring, and five in St. James', Mt. Airy. The Rev. David May, the rector of the parish, has these four churches under his charge, requiring much riding and a great deal of visiting over a wide region; and he has proved the possibility of effectively holding congregations together, and having them grow under such circumstances.

Archdeaconry of Towson

The fifth semi-annual session was held recently in Emmanuel church, Belair; 15 clerical and three lay delegates were present, together with four brethren of the archdeaconry of Baltimore. The meeting opened with the celebration of the Holy Communion by Bishop Paret. In lieu of a sermon, the Bishop spoke at length of the scope of archidiaconal system, the need of more clergy or lay-workers, and also for greater zeal in diocesan missions. At the business meeting, the reports of work done were for the most part encouraging, and the archdeacon's report showed that over half of the money asked for diocesan missions had been paid. The archdeacon spoke on missionary work in the archdeaconry, and the Rev. Edw. B. Niver, in a very clear way, presented the duty of conducting diocesan mission work in an intelligent, methodical manner. The Rev. Percy F. Hall read an essay, on "How to care for the newly confirmed," which led to a free and full discussion, after which the topic, "The relation of the Sunday school to the Church," was discussed. Addresses were made by the Rev. Edw. A. Colburn, on "The Church in the home"; the Rev. Edw. Wroth, on "The Church in business," and the Rev. Geo. C. Stokes, on "The Church in society." Those present were tendered a cordial and charming reception by Dr. Kelly and his two sisters, at his new and beautiful residence.

Milwaukee

Isaac Lea Nicholson, D.D., Bishop

A new furnace has been placed in Trinity church, Platteville, and the walls of the church have been re-calclimined.

Trinity church, Janesville, is erecting a commodious guild hall and Sunday school room, made from an unused cellar. The Rev. James A. M. Richey has entered upon his new work here, and the people have given him a hearty welcome.

A new mission has been opened at Palmyra, under the care of the Rev. Dr. Johnson, rector of Whitewater. At a recent episcopal visitation, four persons were confirmed.

A very successful Mission was preached at St. Andrew's church, Milwaukee, Nov. 26-30th, by the Ven. Percy C. Webber, Archdeacon of Madison. A class of four was confirmed by the Bishop.

St. Chad's church, Okauchee, being free of all debt, was formally consecrated by the Bishop in November. The Rev. Dr. Webb and the Rev. Arthur Goodger assisted.

Calvary church, Prescott, has been placed under the care of the Rev. P. H. Linley, of Hastings, Minn., on the opposite side of the Mississippi river.

On Dec. 18th, the Rev. J. Ward Gilman resigned the cure of Holy Innocents' church, Racine, in order to devote his whole attention to the growing work at Immanuel church, Racine.

Racine College School

Seventy boys are now on its roll, and a steady increase is yet apparent. What hath God wrought, in thus showing His protecting care over this noble foundation of the saintly De Koven!

The Cathedral Church

Is undergoing some further improvements. A new flooring in hard wood has been laid throughout the nave; the baptistry has been placed in its proper position near the front doors; the tiling of the front porchway is being proceeded with, and some other betterments. New seats, in light oak, will soon be added, to correspond with the other interior furnishings in the choir and sanctuary. The cathedral will then be about complete in its interior decorations, and will certainly be recognized by everyone as a beautiful and devotional church building, well appointed for the daily worship of Almighty God.

North Dakota

Samuel C. Edsall, D.D., Bishop

Mission at Grace Church, Jamestown

Held by Bishop Edsall. The five days of the Mission were truly days of refreshment and encouragement to those who have been laboring for years to build up and sustain the worship of the Church in this little town. The Mission has not only instructed and encouraged the Churchpeople, but it has placed the Church in a better light to those outside its communion; for the teaching of the Church was put in a keen, forcible, and kindly manner that had its weight, and will result in great good in the future. The last three nights the church was filled, and on Sunday, at both Morning and Evening Prayer, chairs were placed in the aisles. The rector hopes that the holding of a Mission will be an annual custom of the Bishop for the parish.

Long Island

Abram N. Littlejohn, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Bishop visited the church of the Annunciation, Glendale, on the evening of the 20th and confirmed a class of 13 presented by Archdeacon H. B. Bryan.

The Rev. O. W. Snyder, rector of St. Paul's church, Woodside, who has been ill for some weeks, is convalescing.

The 50th anniversary of the founding of the parish of St. Paul's, Brooklyn, fell on Christmas Day, but the celebration will be on Jan. 25th.

Presentation to Rev. Wm. H. Barnes

The Rev. Wm. Henry Barnes who has become rector of St. Barnabas' church, Brooklyn, preached his farewell sermon at St. Paul's chapel, College Point, on Dec. 1st. After the services a solid silver communion service was presented to him, a gift from the congregation. General regret was expressed at Mr. Barnes' departure.

Grace Church on-the-Heights, Brooklyn

The Year Book shows excellent work. During the year just closed, $2,056.82 was added to the endowment fund, which now amounts to $7,638.81. The church has no indebtedness; $10,361.40 was expended on permanent improvements, including the paying of the aisles in mosaic, the money for which was provided by an offering on May 14th. From the special offering of the year, amounting to $22,000, there was appropriated $955.03 to the Church Charity Foundation, $6,323.45 to domestic, foreign, diocesan, and parochial missions, $1,042.83 to the Hospital Saturday and Sunday Association, $1,708 to the endowment fund, lesser amounts to the fresh air fund and other beneficent works in and out of the parish. The Sunday school numbers 233 pupils, 21 officers and teachers. The kindergarten is in a flourishing condition, having 49 gratuitously instructed children. The Baptisms numbered 40; Confirmations, 28; marriages, 10, and burials, 21. There are 700 communicants. At Thanksgiving, dinners for 90 families were sent out from the parish house for the poor of the parish. The Rev. Frederick Burgess is rector.

St. George's, Brooklyn

The Rev. W. A. Wasson, rector, has organized a men's Bible class which meets in the vestry room on Sunday afternoons. The class is growing each Sunday. In his former parish in New Jersey Mr. Wasson was remarkably successful in building up a large Bible class which numbered over 100. A military company has been organized for the young men and boys of St. George's, and promises to be very successful.

The Rev. Dr. J. C. Quinn, of Winn, has been elected a "Fellow" of The Incorporated Society of Science, Letters, and Art, of London, Ltd., and has also been awarded the society's silver medal for his essay on "The progressive development of truth in the Old Testament." Dr. Quinn went to Millinocket recently, held services in the Shiffer Iron Co.'s boarding house, and had large congregations at both services. There is a large opportunity in this new and rapidly growing town for Church work. Bishop Hall, of Vermont, visited St. Thomas' church, Winn, Nov. 21st, and confirmed a class presented by the Rev. Dr. Quinn. The Bishop delivered an instructive address, on "Baptismal vows—what they really mean."

Spokane

Lemuel Henry Wells, D.D., Missionary Bishop

Grace church, Ellensburg, the Rev. Alfred Lockwood, rector, has been built, and a rectory procured at a cost of about $2,500, and there is no debt remaining.

For St. Andrew's church, Chelan, the Rev. Willard H. Roots, rector, a new rectory has been purchased and the old one discarded.

At Waterville the church has been presented with a lectern, the gift of the St. Luke's branch of the Woman's Auxiliary. Although there is now no church building at this place, Church furniture is being provided which will help greatly in the services.

A new rectory is being built at North Yakima, the corner stone of which was laid Nov. 11th. St. Michael's church, the Rev. H. M. Bartlett, rector, now has a vested choir.

Since the coming of the present incumbent, the Rev. H. Norwood, Holy Trinity church, Palouse, has taken another step forward, and the outlook for the future is very encouraging. A junior branch of St. Andrew's Brotherhood has been started.

After an absence of six months, the Rev. J. N. Barry has returned to the jurisdiction, and taken charge of Trinity, Spokane. His reports are very encouraging.

Ohio

Wm. Andrew Leonard, D.D., Bishop

Deaf-Mute Church People

The members of St. Agnes' deaf-mute mission, Cleveland, tendered their pastor, the Rev. Mr. Mann, a reception on his 58th birthday, Dec. 16th. On the following Sunday, the 17th, two services were held in the chapel of Grace church. Holy Baptism was administered to a child of deaf-mute parents. On Monday evening, a special service was held at the church of Our Saviour, Akron, of which the Rev. Mr. Atwater is rector. At the close the silent brethren spent an hour socially in the parish rooms.

Massachusetts

William Lawrence, D.D., Bishop

The Rev. Dr. Arthur Lawrence conducted the Quiet Hour in St. Stephen's church, Pittsfield, on Thursday, Dec. 14th. In the evening, missionary meetings were held in Dalton, as well as in Pittsfield.

The committee having in charge the Monday meetings of the clergy were frankly criticized by the Rev. Edward Osborne, S.S.J.E., on Dec. 18th, for the recent invitation which they extended to President Eliot, a Unitarian, to speak at their meetings.

A window in memory of the late Rev. Isaac Smithson Harley, D.D., rector, has been placed in St. James' church, Great Barrington.

A memorial window, in memory of the late Lorenzo Smith, has been placed in St. John's church, Jamaica Plain. Mr. Smith was sexton of the church for 50 years.

A lot for a church and parish building has been purchased at Sharon. The lot is centrally located, and measures 20 000 feet of land.

Coming into the Church

The Rev. Joseph J. Spencer, formerly minister of the Congregational body at North Brookfield, has become a candidate for Holy Orders. The diocesan paper says: "Mr. Spencer has been using parts of the Prayer Book in his services, and is led into the Church by the feeling that it has a special work to do in the development of Christian unity."

The Phillips Brooks House

At the opening, Bishop Lawrence read a poem written by Bishop Brooks near the year 1859. This house is to be the headquarters of St. Paul's Society, a Church organization founded in 1861, the Catholic Club, the Oxford Club, which is Methodist, and the Y. M. C. A.

Anniversary of Rev. J. C. Tebbetts

The parishioners of St. John's, North Adams, recently observed the 25th anniversary of the ordination of the Rev. J. C. Tebbetts, their rector, and a substantial money token of their good will was presented to him.

St. John's, Franklin

The rector is looking forward towards the purchase of a lot of land for a group of parish buildings; money for the purpose has already been raised. At the last visitation of the Bishop, 15 were confirmed.

Pre-Lenten Mission at St. Paul's, Boston.

Will be held by the Rev. A. S. Crapsey, D.D., of Rochester, N. Y. The clergy of Boston and vicinity met recently in the choir room of St. Paul's and were asked to co-operate with the rector, the Rev. J. S. Lindsay, in his efforts to awaken interest in this Mission.

The New Church at Cohasset

The corner-stone of St. Stephen's church was laid Dec. 8th. The structure, 115 ft. by 40 ft., is to be of Weymouth granite, with Indiana limestone trimmings. The nave is to be built in the Gothic style. The chancel will be 33 ft. deep, and raised three feet above the floor of the church. The roof is to be finished in red oak, and the walls are to be of colored plaster. The altar, which is the gift of the ladies of the town, is to cost $1,000, and is to be of colored marble. The tower, which is to be on the westerly side, will be 22 x 24 ft., and will rise to the height of 75 ft. A set of chimes will be placed in it. A circular driveway curving around the border of the hill will lead to the east entrance. On the west side, a flight of stairs will be carved in the natural rock upon which the church is built.

South Carolina

Ellison Capers, D.D., Bishop

The Rev. Tracy Walsh, rector of St. Jude's church, Walterboro, has just established a mission at Hendersonville, Colleton Co. The services are held in the club house, and although the number of communicants is small, the congregations are large. From the interest shown, it is expected that when the Bishop visits the mission there will be a large class for Confirmation.

Bishop Williams' Visitations

Dec. 8th Bishop Williams commenced his visitation of the south-western district of the diocese, accompanied by the Rev. A. E. Marsh, the district presbyter, and was given a cordial reception by the people of Silver Creek, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Towslee. On Sunday morning the Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion, preached there, and in the afternoon preached at Clark's, driving, after this service, to Central City, where he preached to a congregation which included almost all the communicants of the church. On Monday afternoon, St. Mark's, Palmer, was visited, where, after service at 3 o'clock, the Bishop met the members of the Church and others interested in the work of that little mission. The roads were so rough that the people of the Glenwood schoolhouse mission could not get in, as anticipated. In the evening the members of the Church and congregation in Central City gave a reception to Bishop and Mrs. Williams at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Nash, which was largely attended by the people of the community, including the ministers of the other Christian bodies. On Tuesday the Bishop visited Aurora, and later, York, where service was held. The next day was spent in Harvard, a class of eight being presented for Confirmation by the Rev. A. H. Tripp who has been there only six months, but has accomplished much. The church has had a tower, porch, and vestry added to it, and been repaired and painted, at a cost of over $500, every cent of which was raised in the community, comprising in all about 1,200 people. In the spring they hope to raise a little more, and complete the work, adding a recess chancel. The enterprising mission at Geneva was visited next, where the women of the Church were found busy conducting a sale of articles they had made, whereby they realized over $25 for the parish. They accorded a hearty welcome to the Bishop and clergy with him. After a Confirmation and celebration of the Holy Communion next morning, they left for Edgar, where service was held in the evening, and on Saturday morning, after the usual Celebration, went on directly to De Witt. In the evening the Bishop left De Witt and the field until lately served by the Rev. T. F. Purdue, and preached at Beatrice on Sunday morning, and at Wymore in the evening. Wymore hopes to be able to raise $500 towards the salary of a resident minister, while De Witt offers a small rectory and $240 for a portion of a clergyman's time. On Monday the Bishop returned to Beatrice, and was accorded a largely attended reception at the residence of Mrs. Lewis in the evening. The next day he returned to Omaha, spending several hours in Lincoln, looking for a lot on which to place St. Luke's church, and attending to other business connected with that parish.

Kansas

Frank Rosebrook Millspaugh, D.D., Bishop

St. Luke's church, Horton, worth $1,500, was opened by the Bishop, Sunday, Dec. 10th. It is pretty and complete. The debt of $400 will soon be met, as the people have a will to work.

The new mission church, St. Thomas', Holton, needs an altar, lectern, prayer desk, and font. Who has one?

Kentucky

Thomas U. Dudley, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D., Bishop

The Rev. George Grant Smith, secretary of the diocese, is slowly recovering from a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism.

The Rev. E. W. Hunter, rector of St. John's, Louisville, has instituted a monthly missionary meeting at the houses of various parishioners. Addresses are given by visiting clergymen and others, and papers read. These meetings have elicited good attendance, and considerable interest is manifested in them and the cause of missions. An offering is taken also.

Recent Confirmations

St. Luke's Mission, Anchorage, 3; St. James', Pearce Valley, 3; Advent, Louisville, 3; St. Paul's, Henderson, 3; chapel of Good Shepherd, Henderson, 1; Madisonville, 1.

Advent Sermons in the Cathedral

Bishop Thompson, of Mississippi, preached the third of the course of Advent sermons in the cathedral, Louisville, on Sunday, 17th inst., at Evensong. His subject was, "May not, must not Christian people fight the devil with his own weapons?" Bishop Gailor, of Tennessee, preached the first, on "Our duties as citizens," and Bishop Francis, of Indiana, the second, on the topic, "The Christian's duty in the State." The Bishop of the diocese will preach the last, to show that many evils and corruptions come from the neglect of Christians to their duty as citizens.

Church of the Advent, Louisville

Three handsome memorials were blessed by Bishop Dudley on Advent Sunday: The first, a cross of brass, given by St. Agnes' Guild of girls, in loving memory of the Rev. Thomas Prother Jacob, formerly rector of the parish; second, a handsome oaken font cover, given by Mrs. Chamberlin, in memory of her husband, Wm. Lawrence Chamberlin; and third, a chalice and patten, given in memory of Mrs. Mary Goldsmith Pilcher, by her husband, John V. Pilcher, a member of the vestry. Mr. Chamberlin was also a vestryman, and Mrs. Pilcher's brother.

Gift of a Pastoral Staff to the Cathedral

Another noteworthy memorial is the pastoral staff given by Mrs. Chas. D. Jacob to Christ church cathedral. It is studded with 25 handsome brilliants, and will be carried by the Bishop at the 25th anniversary of his consecration to the episcopate.

The Bishop's 25th Anniversary

The programme for this occasion includes the usual Celebration by the Bishop; an historical sermon by Archdeacon Benton, at Evensong, at the cathedral on Sunday, Jan. 28th; a reception at the Galt House on Monday, 29th, at 3 P. M.; and a banquet at the same hotel on the evening of Tuesday, the 30th.

A Mission at St. Paul's, Louisville

Was held from Dec. 6th to 14th, inclusive, the Rev. Peregrine Wroth, of Baltimore, being the missionary, with gratifying results as to attendance, and otherwise. There were three services daily: Celebration at 8:30 A. M., and preaching services at 11 A. M. and 8:30 P. M.

Michigan City

John Hazen White, D.D., Bishop

The daughters of the late Dr. Congdon have placed in St. John's church, Bristol, a beautiful memorial window. It contains the figure of St. Luke, "the good physician," with the inscription: "Joseph Rollin Congdon, born 1827, died 1889. Junior warden of this parish from 1859 to 1889." It is a fitting tribute to a worthy and useful man, and adds in an unusual degree to the beauty of a beautiful church.

Virginia

Francis M. Whittle, D. D., LL. D., Bishop
Robert A. Gibson, D.D. Bishop-Coadjutor

A new chapel for the use of the mission of St. Paul's church, Richmond, near the canal, is soon to be built. The building will be of brick with stone trimmings and slate roof. Its dimensions will be 47 by 60 ft. This will include a chapel, 30 by 45 ft., to seat about 200, and five small rooms, each 15 by 15 ft., and so arranged that the whole can be thrown into one room.

Commemoration of Washington

Early on the morning of Dec. 14th, the bell of old Christ church, Alexandria, began tolling, and Morning Prayer was said by the rector, the Rev. Berryman Green, assisted by the Rev. C. E. Ball. In this church Washington worshiped, and was a vestryman over 125 years ago. Its interior and exterior have been preserved just as it was in Washington's time. The lesson was read from the Bible from which the lessons were read as Washington sat in his pew, and the closing prayers were read from a Prayer Book used at Mt. Vernon. For an hour before noon, the bell was again tolled. Immediately after the service a procession which included President McKinley and his cabinet, government officials, senators, and representatives, and a large number of citizens, proceeded from the mansion at Mt. Vernon to the old vault, where after a dirge played by the band of the 3rd U. S. Cavalry, Bishop Randolph offered prayer. The procession then moved to the tomb wherein the body of Washington now lies. After tributes had been placed in the vault sent from the thirteen original States, from Canada, England, Belgium, and Nova Scotia, the Grand Master of the Masons of the District of Columbia, deposited the lamb-skin apron; the Grand Master of Missouri, the white glove; and the Grand Master of California the evergreen. After returning to the mansion, President McKinley delivered an oration.

Alfred M. Randolph, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

St. Luke's, Norfolk, which is shortly to have a vested choir, has ordered a new pipe organ, to cost about $10,000.

St. Paul Normal and Industrial School

At Lawrenceville, under the charge of Archdeacon Russell, began this session with nearly 400 students. The institute now owns 600 acres of land, with 30 buildings. There are 14 departments, where the pupils, male and female, are taught various trades. Only the want of means prevents this Church school from being as large and as widely influential as those at Hampton and Tuskegee.

Editorials and Contributions

A MEETING has recently taken place in Chicago, under the name of "The Mid-continent Congress of Religions," which presents some points of interest. Several denominations were represented, including, apparently, the Jews. The broadest liberalism was in the ascendant, and among the most influential factors were such well-known men as Dr. Thomas and Mr. Jenkin Lloyd Jones. Much was said about the "New Theology," and it was generally agreed that it was a great thing, but, judiciously, no doubt, it was left undefined. The practical outcome was the formation of an organization in which theology, whether old or new, is to be left out. The purpose is to open preaching places in various cities for the dissemination of this "independent" gospel. On Sunday, Dec. 17th, two persons were "ordained" to this ministry—one of them being the wife of Dr. Thomas—at a service in which six denominations took part. The Jewish Rabbi Arnold read a chapter from the Bible, a Congregational minister preached, and the Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones "received the candidates into fellowship." He said that they were ordained to a ministry which did not pledge them to belief in "the divine Unity or in the divine Trinity, but in the divine Multiplicity."

Evangelical Religion and Liberalism

IN a recent number of The Interior a despondent note is sounded over the falling off in the number of accessions to the membership of the "Evangelical Churches" in America during the past four or five years, and especially in 1898. Our contemporary fears that very soon the statistics will begin to show "a decline, not in increase only, but in membership." It has nothing else to urge but renewed and vigorous efforts on the part of ministers, and also of the individual members of congregations, to stem the tide and reverse this downward movement; and that, no doubt, is the good old Christian way. But is it not worth while to inquire into the causes of this ominous decline? We know of congregations in large towns which are, to all appearance, very prosperous. The attendance is large both at the principal Sunday services and on certain week-day occasions. As an "institutional church" such a society has its parlors and exhibition rooms where a round of attractions is presented which would certainly have astounded the Puritan forefathers. In fact, it is the centre of the social life of the place, so far as young people are concerned. The question is whether all this has any relation to the purposes for which a Christian organization is supposed to exist? Does it tend, directly or indirectly, to the conversion of souls? Again, the preaching too often exhibits a wide departure from what used to be considered necessary to the character of Gospel preaching. It may deliver the Gospel of to-day, whatever that may be; it certainly is not the Gospel of yesterday. It is doubtful whether it is in any way calculated to arouse the conscience, bring men to repentance, or build them up in the faith of Christ.

AT first sight it seems hard to understand why there should not be large and increasing accessions to these "Evangelical Churches," from the ranks of the young people who are growing up from year to year. We are pointed to the immense numbers who flock into the Christian Endeavor, the Epworth League, and kindred associations, as evidences that religion has not lost its power over the rising generation. But it appears that these organizations are not to any great extent feeders of the denominations which have fostered them. Otherwise, surely, there could be no talk of a decline. Is it not the truth that these bodies of young people are really themselves religious denominations, fulfilling for their members all that is understood to belong to the sphere of a "Church"? At the same time, the obligations are much less. A definite belief is unnecessary. Baptism is not required. The quality of religion, as it is understood by the membership, is purely subjective and sentimental. Nowhere is the distinction which some people are fond of making between "theology" and "religion" more appreciated. The former, it appears, may be disregarded, the latter only is needful. When these aspects of the young people's associations are taken into account, the wonder ceases that they are not seeking membership in the older Evangelical Churches. It would be a wonder if they were. We are told, indeed, on good authority, that the influence of these associations, with their nebulous notions of the Christian religion, is bound to react upon the denominations out of which they have sprung. This is asserted by those who think it a result to be wished for and welcomed. It means that to attract young people these churches must become liberalized.

IN fact, in many quarters it is held that the real antidote to the alarming tendencies of which The Interior speaks, is the adoption of the "liberal" platform. That is, the "Evangelical Churches," in order to maintain themselves in existence, must repudiate everything which made them "evangelical," except, perhaps, a certain pietism or religious sentiment, destitute of any permanent foundation. The trend in such a direction is evident enough in many quarters. Undoubtedly the liberal movement is making great strides in the bosom of the old evangelical confederacy. But is it approving itself as a cure for the evils complained of? Is it arresting the decrease, or filling up the thinning ranks? Alas! what if after every conviction for which the founders of these sects and their leaders in the days of highest success would have laid down their lives, has been flung to the winds; after everything which formerly gave them character and strength has been sacrificed to the one consideration of numbers, the numbers after all, should not come? The plain truth is that liberalism does not tend to the building up of religious bodies, but to their disintegration. Its logical result is to prove them superfluous. It is worth the serious consideration of our brethren in these Churches whether the evils which confront them have not kept pace with the rise and growth of liberalism within their borders.

WHAT we mean by "liberalism" in religion, or, as some phrase it, "liberal religion," will not be misunderstood by our readers. It is not liberality, or generosity, or tolerance, or charity. What it really means is a free dealing with religious truth; or, in other words, the Christian Faith, and a repudiation of the idea that external institutions or observances possess any binding character. All is brought down to the level of individual taste or preference. The idea of a revelation of truth from God coming to men from a realm above nature and from outside the soul which is the recipient, not the originator, must necessarily fade away. If there are no institutions possessing the same divine authority, then must soon disappear all thought of Church and sacraments. Such things are nothing more than the survivals of a superstitious age. In short, in this movement is involved, by a gradual process, it may be, but none the less certainly, the repudiation of supernatural religion, and the substitution of that which is merely natural.

THIS form of religion, if it is to be so-called, takes men back to the position of the thoughtful and wise, before the light of Christ dawned upon the world. For its "theology" we have to read Plato's Dialogues and Cicero on "The Nature of the Gods." It acknowledges the existence of divine forces, but can never be sure that they have their centre in a personal God who cares for men. It acknowledges the existence of sin, but denies its nature. Sin is confounded with ignorance. The sense of responsibility is weakened or destroyed. One thing remains, and is likely to remain, whether it be logical or not, the acknowledgment of the beauty and perfection of the moral teachings of Christ, especially where they do not involve self-discipline, but simply the regulation of conduct in the relations of man with man. If Church organizations do not disappear under the influence of this movement, it will probably be because they will transform themselves into centres of charitable, philanthropic, or social work.

SUCH seems to thoughtful people, within or without the Churches, to be the inevitable result of the liberal movement, so far as it is allowed to gain foothold in the denominations which have hitherto been termed evangelical. The time is coming, if it is not already at hand, when the ministers and other leaders will find it necessary to consider whether the kind of liberality which it is so fashionable to encourage—which began in the exchange of pulpits, and has gone on to the disparagement of "dogma" and of creeds, and finally to the rejection of all authority in religion—is consistent with any genuine form of the Christian religion or belief in a divine revelation.

NOR is this problem one for those denominations alone. It is only too clear that the Anglo-Catholic Church, "known in law" as Protestant Episcopal, has the same tendency to meet within its own fold. But at least we have the strong vantage ground of a perfectly definite creed, of an order and polity which have survived many onslaughts, of sacraments still universally venerated, and of forms of worship which furnish an unsurpassed training in the thoughts and habits of supernatural religion. All these, moreover, are believed and accepted upon the ground of a divine authority inherent in the Church. All this forms an immense contrast to any form of liberalism. With such an advantage, it is hard to believe that these destructive tendencies can ever gain anything more than a fleeting and ephemeral place within our boundaries. The antagonism of such views to all that we maintain, to the whole character of our constitution and formularies, is far too glaring to be glossed over, even for a time. It is a case in which "the lion and the lamb" cannot "lie down together." The conflict may be sharp, but surely it can have but one result.

Summary of Ecclesiastical Events in 1899

THE year 1899 will long be remembered by Anglican Churchmen as one of excitement and anxiety, especially in England; but also, we may thankfully add, as a period of hard and successful work in the mission field, successful beyond most years. The Church of England has consecrated six missionary bishops, and the American Church, eight bishops, four of whom are domestic missionary bishops, while a ninth, the Rev. Sidney C. Partridge, D. D., will probably soon be consecrated for Tokyo, Japan. A new see, Michigan City, comprising Northern Indiana, has taken its place in the constantly increasing galaxy of American dioceses, and has held its primary convention; and we are now thoroughly accustomed to the titles Boise, Sacramento, Laramie. We are stretching our imagination much further, and are trying to utter Honolulu, Puerto Rico, and other names as if they were our own indeed, with American bishops in them; and the Bishop of New York has gone on pilgrimage to the distant Philippines, to discover we know not what in that land of opulent friars and turbulent Tagals. In the meantime, on the 1st of September, there was sent out from the Church Missions House in New York, a larger number of foreign missionaries than had ever before said farewell at any one time. Strange, it seems, too, to record that while in her war against the Boers in South Africa, the English have hitherto met with little else but serious reverses, in her war against heathenism in Western Equatorial Africa and in Uganda, Bishops Tugwell and Tucker, with their faithful soldiers of the Cross sent forth by the Church of England, have brought whole tribes into captivity to the faith of Christ. The American Church is girding up afresh for the mission work, and has at last secured two able men for the two missionary secretaryships, the Rev. Arthur S. Lloyd, D. D., of Norfolk, Va., and Mr. John W. Wood, some time the very efficient general secretary of the B. S. A. The very important Missionary Council held in October, at St. Louis, was a memorable gathering, on account of the deep interest and large attendance, and still more because of the favorable reports made by the Rev. Dr. Edward Abbott on our missions in China and Japan, which have done much to stimulate the efforts of Churchmen to push the work of missions. From one point of view it is gratifying, but from another, it is sad to know that last year the Sunday school children of the Church gave more than one-fifth of all the money contributed to the domestic and foreign missionary treasury. Good for the dear children—but where are the adult members of the Church, and why are they not giving more liberally?

The excitement and anxiety mentioned above has been chiefly in the Church of England. The acrimonious ritual or ceremonial disputes of the past two years seemed likely to be extinguished when the Archbishops of Canterbury and York agreed to sit as a sort of voluntary court of arbitration to hear and determine the disputed questions of incense and processional lights as ceremonial usages, and of the reservation of the Blessed Sacrament. But since the utterance of their "opinion" on the two former matters (that on the latter is yet in abeyance), what looks like a real "crisis" has developed with the resolution of the diocesan bishops to enforce the ruling upon their clergy. The end is not yet, certainly; but it is with the deepest regret and sympathy for hard-worked priests and united congregations that we chronicle the facts of a contest which may involve the gravest and most deplorable issues for the mother Church.

We have had "troubles in our midst," also. The ordination of Prof. Briggs to the priesthood in May raised a storm in the diocese of New York, and caused grave apprehensions in the minds of loyal Churchmen everywhere. Not the man, but the spread of latitudinarian and destructive views and principles in the Church, was the real cause of anxiety. But views and principles will be well sifted, as well as men, in the Church, and sometimes both are sifted out, as was the case with one clergyman who was very prominent in the controversy, and who has sought peace in Rome, the original home of destructive Biblical criticism.

The controversy upon, or discussion of, the burning question of marriage and divorce has continued with unabated vigor, the gains being all in favor of the stricter view of marriage and against the permission to divorced persons to marry. Several bishops have come out strongly on this side of the question, notably the Bishop of Albany. There is hope that the Church will at last take a firm stand against the evil that, more than anything else, is corrupting American society. A notable Declaration on Marriage and Divorce received some 1,500 signatures, many prominent clergymen and several bishops being among the signers.

The usual meetings of the year in England and America have been held—the missionary societies, the C. B. S., the E. C. U., and the Church Congress in England, and the two latter were notable gatherings; and here, the Missionary Council, the A. C. M. S., the B. S. A., G. F. S., C. B. S., the Church Congress, and divers smaller gatherings, the Church Students' Missionary Society, the annual Conference of Theological Professors, etc., all testifying to the increased life in the Church.

The Church of Rome has kept itself well to the fore during the year. The extreme age and physical frailness of the Pope keep the world on the qui vive for the great event of choosing his successor, but this remarkable Pontiff bears a charmed life, impervious at any rate, to the reports and predictions of press correspondents, and he has proclaimed the Holy Year 1900 with which the century closes, granting indulgences and privileges which will make it a comfortable period to those who accept such things. But the Pope has struck the right note in calling Christendom to prayer and watchfulness at the end of the greatest century in history, ushering another age full of even greater promise. The Pope signalized the year by condemning "Americanism," though just exactly what it was that he denounced is not agreed upon by Archbishop Ireland and Archbishop Corrigan. It would have been better to have condemned the attitude of the French and Italian clergy towards Dreyfus, but on the contrary, the Pope and Roman curia approved of it, to the scandal of Christendom. Rome has done us one or two good turns, however. For one thing, she has received the notorious Rene Vilatte into her ample bosom, after he had recanted all his heresies, and she will oblige us still more by keeping him. Then the Roman Bishop of Shrewsbury, speaking before the Catholic Truth Society in England, bluntly declared that the "Catholic Movement" in the Anglican Communion was not a Rome-ward movement—a statement which was evidently lost on Sir William Vernon Harcourt. And Rome has been having troubles, also. The remarkable exodus of French priests from her fold, under the influence of M. Bourriere; and the still more noteworthy Los von Rome, or secession of over ten thousand Roman Catholics in Austro-Hungary, many of whom have affiliated with the Old Catholics; and the utter collapse of Catholic Spain as a world power, are signs of the times.

There has been an exchange of courtesies more marked than usual during the past year, between some of the leading prelates of the Greek Orthodox and Russian Churches on the one hand, and those of the Church of England on the other. Though such a consummation as actual intercommunion is still very far off, yet it is now understood that individual members of the one Communion may avail themselves of the ministrations of the clergy of the other in case of necessity, as indeed such instances have already occurred. This is a little step toward a better mutual understanding.

The statistics of the Church of England for the year 1898 (statistics are apt to be a year or so late in point of publication) show 217,302 persons confirmed. The amount spent for church building and restoration was £40,883, and the amount of voluntary contributions, through the offertory and parochial organizations, £5,919,706; for home missions, £588,919; foreign missions, £929,867. The total of voluntary contributions for all work credited to the National Church, is £7,506,354.

The statistics of the American Church, according to the reports tabulated in The Living Church Quarterly, for the past year, shows 4,903 clergy, 422 candidates for Orders, 274 postulants, and 1,782 lay readers. There were 53,933 Baptisms, 41,791 confirmed, and the communicants number 706,167. There are 45,883 teachers, and 443,443 scholars in our Sunday schools. The total contributions for all purposes were $14,006,897.43. A notable contribution to the study of the work of the Church has been made by the painstaking editor of The Living Church Quarterly in his valuable "Digest of the Parochial Work of the American Church," and we make no apology for calling attention to it here, because we consider it worthy of careful and serious investigation.

Death has reaped his harvest, a large one, during the past year. The American Church lost its Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. John Williams, of Connecticut, who died Feb. 7th, in his 82d year, and thereby the Bishop of Rhode Island, the Rt. Rev. Thomas March Clark, became our Primate. Two other of our bishops have departed this life full of years and honors—the Rt. Rev. Henry Niles Pierce, of Arkansas, and the Rt. Rev. Henry Adams Neeley, of Maine. This year has also witnessed the passing of the Senior Bishop, by consecration and in age, of all Catholic Christendom, the Venerable Most Blessed Pope and Patriarch Sophronius, of Alexandria, who died Sept. 3d, aged 105 years. He was consecrated a bishop in 1839, and had enjoyed the unique experience of celebrating the 60th anniversary of his consecration, and had probably lived more years than the Apostle St. John.

Among the reverend clergy of the Church in the United States who have entered into rest, are many well-known to the Church at large, of whom we may mention the names of Alfred Lee Brewer, D. D., of California; Thomas McKee Brown, of New York; Wm. T. Dickinson Dalzell, D. D., and Wm. Kirkland Douglas, D. D., of Louisiana. Joseph Morrison Clarke, D. D., of C. N. Y.; Robert Brinckerhoff Fairbairn, D. D., LL. D., some time warden of St. Stephen's College, Annandale, N. Y.; Benjamin Franklin, D. D., of New Jersey; John Wesley Kramer, M. D., general secretary of the Church Congress; Francis Lobdell, E. D., LL. D., of W. N. Y.; Yelverton Peyton Morgan, D. D., of Southern Ohio; Charles E. Murray, D. D., of Delaware; John Livingston Reese, D. D., of Albany, registrar of the General Convention; Bennett Smedes, D. D., of North Carolina; Wm. Scott Southgate, D. D., and Stephen C. Roberts, D. D., of Maryland, and Benjamin Watson, D. D., president of the Standing Committee, Pennsylvania. We cannot presume to mention the names of all the distinguished laity of the Church who have entered into rest, chiefly because our knowledge of them is too partial and incomplete for the purpose, but we must chronicle the passing hence of one faithful and generous woman, the fruit of whose good works we often saw in that noble church for the people, Holy Innocents, Hoboken, N. J., Mrs. Martha Bayard Stevens, who died in April, having given much alms in her lifetime, and leaving many benefactions behind her.

"For all the saints who from their labor rest,
Who Thee by faith before the world confessed,
Thy Name, O Jesu, be forever blessed. Alleluia!"

Amid the sound of wars—a bloody contest furnishing a fit sequel to an important universal Peace Conference—and rumors of wars from the nations which are anxious for the ruin of the British Empire, the Church of Christ, the Prince of Peace, enters upon the closing year of the most wonderful century in all history. It is a time for all Christians to watch and pray, to strengthen the things which remain," to "hold fast that which they have," and to "repent and do the first works." Let the mind of Churchmen in this end of the ages be the same as that of the Apostles in the first days of Christ's kingdom upon earth: "But we will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the Word."

Some Common Mistakes

BY THE REV. FRED K. S. JEWELL, D. D.

VIII.

FIFTEENTH. It is a mistake, in phraseology at least, to speak of the pulpit as having "lost its power." It is more to the point to say that the pulpit has changed its character. With that it has, of course, changed its kind of power. Whether this power is as real or effective as was its former power, is quite another thing, and is, at least, a matter of doubt.

The power of the pulpit, as it once was, was lodged in three things: its close adhesion to the Holy Scriptures, the singleness of the preacher's position and character as a religious teacher, and the existence in the hearers of some kind of positive religious convictions. Under those conditions, the preacher spoke with authority, and enforced his teaching with argument both logical and Scriptural. Such preaching had a distinct and decided religious power over the minds of thinking men.

But much, if not all this has been changed in order to "keep up with the times." The pulpit has become largely a hybrid, a cross between pulpit and platform; and, as in the case of a notable domestic animal hybrid, the marks of acquired degeneration are the strongest. It is now largely given to the exploiting of personal opinions on all sorts of popular subjects—economic, politic, philanthropic, socialistic, and, so to speak, catastrophic. A text may be taken to secure a sort of Scriptural toboggan-slide start for a subsequent smart careering over the wide, unfenced, secular field beyond. Hence, to the representative sermons spread before the public in the Monday morning papers, might well be applied the apt description given of an old-time page, "a neat, little rivulet of text trickling between unlimited meadows of margin."

Under this change, the power of the pulpit, so called, must take on itself a correspondingly "broadened," and consequently weakened, character. The utterances of such a pulpit can only have the force of the personal opinions of the preacher—opinions multiform, sometimes conflicting; often the mere voice of non-experts, and always dogmatizing rather than logically assured and convincing. Its power is backed by no original, august, collective authority. It is lodged altogether, and consists only, in the immediate sympathetic agreement of the hearers with the preacher. It is, hence, as narrow as the popularity of the preacher, and as unstable as the notions of the multitude. A pulpit with such power only can hardly be said to have lost power. It never really had any.

The Church in the Home

FROM ANNUAL CONVENTION ADDRESS OF THE RT. REV. F. R. MILLSPAUGH, D. D.

DEAR Brethren of the Laity: Older Christians are apt to think that people were better in generations past; making allowance for this tendency of older folk, can you and I not see certain holy customs in the past which are to-day more commonly neglected, and which certainly would tend to increase spirituality in the home life, and therefore in the community?

I refer to family prayer and the home education of children in the doctrines and teachings of the Church, and Holy Scripture as she has interpreted the same. Can we speak to-day of "The Church in his home," when referring even to a large number of our communicants, when day in and day out there is no such thing as a family altar, or even grace at the table, or a special time, even on Sunday, by father and mother given to catechism instruction? Indeed there are those who permit their children to go to the Sunday schools of different denominations, and then wonder why their children have not followed them in their preference for the Church, and are surprised at their indifference about her doctrine and spiritual things. How can it be otherwise with no Church in the home? In many cases when the children are sent to our Sunday schools for an hour on Sunday, they are excused from divine service by the thoughtless parent, and then we wonder why the child does not imbibe Churchly and spiritual training. The simple reason, beloved, is because there is no spiritual training given, save that which comes incidentally, and who is to blame? Not the children, most certainly—but the fathers and mothers—communicants of the Church—good men and women they are to a considerable degree. They may be seen quite regularly at church and at Holy Communion; they bring their little ones to Holy Baptism—possibly later than they should—but they leave the Church outside their home life, so from Sunday night to Sunday morning, although there may be private prayer at the bedside, as a family there is no recognition of the blessed fact that the head of the family is a priest in his own home, and ought to perform the offices of his high and holy position.

Having said so much, will you permit me, my lay brethren, one word of advice? Will not all our Church families do this much, at least, towards reinstating the Church in the home? It is simply and easily performed, even by the diffident, and I know how frequently this greatly enters into the matter. Will you not at the beginning of the day, when you come to the breakfast table, stand or kneel, and say together the Lord's Prayer, the prayer of all prayers, and will you not train your children in the Church catechism, to be recited in Church or Sunday school? God will bless the families in Kansas who do this thing. Then will family devotion and family instruction, and the Church in the home be a verity. The sweet domesticities of home life will be increased; there will be instilled a deeper spirituality, a greater love for the Church and its work, and a blessed influence upon the community.

Strange Notions

BY THE REV. D. FRANCIS SPRIGG, D. D.

A FEW days ago, I received a letter from a lady in Florida, who said she had sent me two papers, "Leaves of Healing!" She wanted me to do what I could in the way of answering them. Then the question was, "to answer whom?" I cannot hope to convince those who are entangled in their sophistries; they are for the present at any rate, past my power, and I think past the power of man, to convince them of error. All the apostle felt about errorists in his day was, "if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth." Great is our dependence upon God, not only for daily bread, but for repentance and for holding the truth as revealed in the Book. If we have been kept from errors, if we hold the Faith once delivered to the saints, we have nothing to boast of as if we were more worthy than they. "What hast thou that thou didst not receive?" God be thanked if He has given us repentance. God be thanked if we are not living in error and sin.

To what extent the errors of Christian Scientists, Faith Healers, etc., are such as destroy the grace of God and leave them reprobates, is not for us to say, we must let God judge. "Who art thou that judgeth another man's servant." But that the tendencies of these errors is towards evil there is no doubt. Many such tendencies, i. e., towards evil. Not until God takes us from this evil world will they cease. May they cease then; may we be among those who have "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

The object of these papers is to show that sickness can be healed without the use of medicine and by faith. But not more than can be cured by the imagination or by will-power. The statistics have been given by those acquainted with the facts; the power of imagination to effect cures of sickness and disease is simply wonderful. Unless these Faith Healers can show they are more successful than the "imagination healers," we have no right to believe in them or their healing powers. All their powers of healing come through the imagination and not through faith. This then is one reason why the Faith Healers are not to be trusted.

"But disease never comes from God," so these papers tell us. The Bible is a better witness: "The Lord struck the child that Uriah's wife bore unto David, and it was very sick." "Therefore also will I make thee sick in smiting thee." "The Lord smote him with an incurable disease." "The angel of the Lord smote him because he gave not God the glory." We see from God's word that sickness comes from God. This is another reason why we must disbelieve in these Faith Healers.

St. Paul knew more of God's dealings with men than we do; and if sickness could be cured by the process of these men, why did he not in this way cure Epaphroditus who was "sick unto death?" If the Apostle knew nothing of faith healing, we may be certain there is nothing in it but the work of the imagination.

The "divine healing" by these men, they tell us, is opposed to other methods of healing. "Divine healing" is diametrically opposed to these diabolical counterfeits which are utterly anti-Christian. Now, if Faith Healing and Christian Science are anti-Christian, so also is their healing; and this is another reason why we do not believe in them and their teaching.

All churches now in existence, according to these men, are in error, and the only place to find rest is to come to them and get in their ark of safety. At their first preaching of "divine healing" they let members of the Churches remain; but soon they found out this would never do, and now it is, "Come out of them, we are the Church, come and be baptized by trine immersion." So that if these men were to succeed, there would be no Church on earth, the promises of Christ would fail, and the world once more would be without a Catholic Church. With results so appalling, we must reach the conclusion to have nothing to do with them. Satan hindered St. Paul, he will hinder us, unless we strive against his temptations. The same Apostle bid us remember of certain persons, "God shall send them a strong delusion that they should believe a lie." Let us beware, lest He send us a delusion and we believe what these errorists teach.

We need not suppose that widespread error is something new in the Church. From the earliest Christian times it has abounded. It was in the Apostolic Church, in the primitive Church, and in the Churches of all the centuries. This Church of ours was forced, through the errors of the Roman Church, to protest against them, and to this day these Churches are not in communion one with another. We have Christ to teach us, and His Holy Spirit to help us, and the Book to guide us. We need not fall into error. "If God be for us, who can be against us?" But "let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall."

Appeals

THE DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY, the Church Missions House, 281 Fourth ave., New York. Officers: RIGHT REV. THOMAS M. CLARK, D. D., president; RT. REV. WILLIAM CROSWELL DOANE, D. D., vice-president; REV. ARTHUR S. LLOYD, D. D., general secretary; REV. JOSHUA KIMBER, associate secretary; MR. JOHN W. WOOD, corresponding secretary; MR. GEORGE C. THOMAS, treasurer; MR. E. WALTER ROBERTS, assistant treasurer.

This society comprehends all persons who are members of this Church. It is the Church's established agency for the conduct of general missionary work. At home this work is in seventeen missionary districts, in Puerto Rico, and in forty-three dioceses; and includes that among the negroes in the South, and the Indians. Abroad, the work includes the missions in Africa, China, and Japan; the support of the Church in Haiti; and of the presbyter named by the Presiding Bishop to counsel and guide the workers in Mexico. The society also aids the work among the English-speaking people in Mexico, and transmits contributions designated for the other work in that country.

The Society pays the salaries and traveling expenses of twenty-two missionary bishops, and the Bishop of Haiti; 1,630 other missionaries depend in whole or in part for their support upon the offerings of Church people, made through this Society. There are many schools, orphanages, and hospitals at home and abroad which, but for the support that comes through the Society, would of necessity be abandoned.

The amount required to meet all appropriations for this work to the end of the fiscal year, Sept. 1, 1900, is $630,000. For this sum the Board of Managers must depend upon the voluntary offerings of the members of the Church. Additional workers, both men and women, are constantly needed to meet the increasing demands of the work (both at home and abroad).

The Spirit of Missions is the official (monthly) magazine—$1 a year. All information possible concerning the Society's work will be furnished on application.

Remittances should be made to MR. GEORGE C. THOMAS, treasurer.

All other official communications should be addressed to the Board of Managers, Church Missions House, 281 Fourth ave., New York.

Beyond the Hills

BY E. C. D.

I cannot see beyond the hills
Where Thou hast built my home;
I only know that some sweet day
To it I come.

Beyond the hills there wait for me
The dear ones, angels fair,
And when my pilgrimage is o'er,
Lord, lead me there.

I cannot even see the path
Thou hast marked out for me;
I only know it leads through life
To home and Thee.

There is no hand but Thine, dear Lord
That leads me safe and sure;
That pierced Hand to me held out,
Strong and secure.

When sore temptation clouds my way
I need no other light,
A glance at Thy dear Face will clear
My earth-dimmed sight.

I know not where my journey ends,
Thou knowest, that is best;
Ever with Thee, thro' endless days,
Shall be my rest.

And so, dear Lord, I struggle o'er
Earth's pathway, smooth or rough,
Knowing when needed, Thou art near:
It is enough.

A N important national industry of France, Germany, and Belgium, is the cultivation of fruit trees along the highways. The annual revenue derived from the national roads of Saxony planted with fruit trees, rose from $9,000 in 1880, to $42,000. In Belgium, according to the statistics of 1894, over 4 630 kilometres of roads were planted with 741,571 fruit trees, which furnished the almost incredible sum of $2,000,000. In France, the production of fruit trees is estimated at $60,000,000.

I N an article on the admission of women to the Cambridge College degrees, Miss Helen Gladstone refers to the fact that no less than six Cambridge colleges were founded by women for the benefit of men—Christ's and St. John's, by Margaret, Countess of Richmond; Sidney Sussex, by Lady Frances Sidney, Countess of Sussex; Clair, by Elizabeth de Burgh, Countess of Clare; Pembroke, by Marie de St. Paul, Countess of Pembroke, and Queen's, by Queen Margaret of Anjou.

T HE janitor in a neighboring school threw up his job the other day. When asked what was the trouble, he said: "I am honest, and I won't stand being slurred. If I find a pencil or handkerchief about the school when I'm sweeping, I hang or put it up. Every little while the teacher or some one that is too cowardly to face me, will give me a slur. Why, a little while ago I seen wrote on the board: 'Find the least common multiple.' Well, I looked from cellar to garret for that multiple, and I wouldn't know the thing if I would meet it on the street. Last night, in big writin' on the blackboard, it said; 'Find the greatest common divisor.' Well, I says to myself, both of them blamed things are lost, now, and I'll be accused of swiping 'em, so I'll quit."—Huntington (Ind.) Herald.

T HE Critic and other magazines are repeating a story which was told in Devonshire seventy or eighty years ago. It was said that on the occasion of the Bishop's visit to an outlying village, the following gem of English provincial verse was sung in his honor:

Why skip ye so, ye little 'ills?
Why skip! why skip? why skip?
Why? Jez becuz we'm glad to zee
His Grace the Lord Bishop!

Why 'op ye so, ye little lambs?
Why 'op? why 'op? why 'op?
Why? Jez becuz we'm glad to zee
His Grace the Lord Bishop!

A T Yale College the tuition fee at first was twenty shillings a year, which was raised to forty shillings on the settlement of the Congregational faith of the college, and in 1726, twenty-three scholars graduated. During the regime of Elisha Williams (1726-1739), life at Yale was simple and severe. Board cost five shillings a week ($1.25), and every student was required to read the Scriptures daily. Among other rules were the following:

No student shall go into any tavern, victualing-house, or inn to eat or Drink, except he shall be called by his parents, or some sufficient person, y^t ye rector shall except of. . . . No student shall use ye company or familiar acquaintance of a Dissolute person, nor intermeddle with men's business, nor intrude himself into ye chambers of students, nor shall any undergraduate go att Courts, elections, keeping high days, or go a hunting, or fowling [without leave, nor shall any be out of his room after 9 at night, nor have a] light in his chamber after eleven, nor before four in ye morning.

T HE president used to box freshmen's and sophomores' ears in chapel up to 1760, and such was the awful sense of the personal dignity of his presence, and that of the professors, that all undergraduates were forbidden to wear their hats in front of the president's house, or that of a professor, or within ten rods of the person of the president, eight rods of a professor, and five rods of a tutor. Discipline was enforced by means of fines. Thus absence from prayers cost one penny (2 cents); tardiness, a halfpenny; absence from church, fourpence (8 cents); two shillings and sixpence for playing at cards or dice, or for bringing strong liquor into college; one shilling for doing damage to the college or jumping out of the windows.

H ERE is an amusing description by a French writer of a visit paid to the Orphanage of the Holy Infancy, in Hong Kong: "We entered a great hall spread with matting. All the babies who had been snatched from death were crawling about there. They climbed, stumbled, rolled over and stuck together with the perpetual motion of a heap of small humanity and the absolute silence of a bed of crabs. But what faces! You would have said that all the little porcelain monsters, nodding mandarins, hydrocephalous gods, and stone fetiches you ever beheld had come to life and were exercising their limbs."

A CHRISTMAS HYMN

No tramp of marching armies,
No banners flaming far;
A lamp within a stable,
And in the sky a Star.

Their hymns of peace and gladness
To earth the angels brought,
Their Gloria in Excelsis
To earth the angels taught,

When in the lowly manger
The Holy Mother Maid
In tender adoration
Her Babe of Heaven laid,

No rush of hostile armies then,
But just the huddling sheep,
The angels singing of the Christ,
And all the world asleep.

No flame of conquering banners,
No legion sent afar;
A lamp within a stable,
And in the sky a Star!

What Shall We Do?

BY CYRUS MENDENHALL

MINISTERS give a great deal of advice, and of course ought to be willing to take something in that line once in awhile. Sometimes, however, it becomes bewildering, and a poor mortal scarcely knows what to do. In such cases, I imagine, he may be so bold as to use his own judgment, just as common people are supposed to do. He is told not "to scold," but if he does not he is said to be a "time-server," one who only speaks of smooth things. He is cautioned to avoid the folly of "following everybody's advice," but if he dares to call his soul his own, he is supposed to be "big-headed," stubborn, anything but meek and teachable. Some one says: "Do not depend too much on the gospel of shoe leather," and another would have us on the street all the time, and would make the ministerial career a constant round of calls and visits. Here one adviser says: "Do not let the young people run away with us," and to oppose this—"Do not let the bald heads put too many brakes on."

A great English preacher and author said: "Dullness (in a sermon) is a sin against the Holy Ghost." As an offset to too much brilliancy, we see "smartness" spoken of as a crime, or at least a serious mistake, in a minister. If a poor fellow is so constituted that he tells what he knows in a bright, wide-awake manner, he must cultivate a duller strain. If by some blunder he has poetry in his soul, and puts flowers in his sermons, he must become prosaic and clothe his truths in severe and stilted forms. A witticism must not be thought of in connection with religious instruction, lest some one be kept awake or become interested. Another adviser warns against the awful sin of popularity. But tell me, "ye winged winds," is a "popular man," a "popular church," or a "popular religion" of necessity wrong? Of course the man, the church, the religion may be wrong, but must they be? There was a Teacher or Preacher some centuries since who was very popular with the common people; who was not as dull as the accepted religious instructors of His day, and who introduced flowers, birds, and waters into His talks with men.

Then comes the vexed and vexing problem of how long a sermon should be. A great many people consider a long sermon profound; that is, they measure its depth by the time taken in delivery. The Rev. Mr. A. is a wonderful man, he preached two hours. Others advocate concentration, boiling down, and tell us "brevity is the soul of wit." "The long and short of it is," a long sermon may or may not be as deep as it is long; and on the other hand, a short sermon may have but one thing to commend it, it was brief. Measuring lengthwise on sermonic surface will not bring the result. Here, again, if the speaker has common-sense, he could use it to good advantage, where advice is not always "available."

I suppose editors get along fairly well. Anybody can run a paper, don't you know? The reason is because the editor is in a position to receive advice from so many sources. There is this to be said about it: Advice is worth having even though it seems conflicting, and like the individuals in the fable, if you carry the donkey the next man suggests that according to the usual custom the donkey must carry you; and if the old man rides, some one says, let the poor boy ride, the man is able to walk; and again, let the old man ride, the boy should be ashamed to see an old gentleman walk, and so it goes.

Advisers mean well. No one knows so much or is so experienced but that he can profit by advice. Of course if you are ill you cannot afford to buy a "drug store," in order to take all the cures your friends recommend, but you can feel grateful for the interest taken in your behalf. If one in all the departments of life sincerely desires to be right, looking for divine aid, exercising common-sense, his decisions will not be far wrong, and peace and order will come where conflict and chaos seem to be.

The Humors of "Ter-Na-Nog"*

I

ST. PATRICK is said to have banished toads and snakes from the Island of Saints. He did not banish wit and repartee. Yet it is as hard to classify these "gems" as it is to set uncut jewels in fragile filigree. In this paper I merely pass on a few of the humorous sayings and doings I have heard and seen in this beautiful island, during a long course of residence therein.

My dispensary district extends over a wide sweep of moorland and mountain. Hours are long; work hard; pay small. What should I do without a sense of the ludicrous—that sense which can hardly lay claim to being a virtue, but is surely a most valuable possession.

For instance, suddenly to hear this prayer breathed after a gouty old gentleman of miserly habits, "The Lord make your heart as tender as your toes!" quite makes up for a too small check pocketed by his medical attendant. Or a porter's answer, "There is no first train at all at all; they are all evenin' wans here," is almost enough to compensate for a long detention at a way-side station.

Beggars in Ireland carry about with them a lot of change in the matter of small talk. Their pleas are so suggestive.

"Ah, docthor dear! I've nothin' left in this world but the love of God an' two ounces of thread," was one day said to me; whilst the following is not a bad instance of primary "suggestion." "When the gurrils wish to buy me a new bib—(an' I want one badly)—tell 'em to get a blue wan for the summer."

This very morning one of my coterie came up as usual with an empty canister. Biddy Maguire is a connoisseur in the matter of tea, and knows my housekeeper hoards two qualities under lock and key. Hence her request: "Here's me canister, me lady, an' the Lord direct yez to the best!"

These beggars are quite one of the humorous elements in Ireland. Many of them are noble-looking men and women, who divide the country into regular districts, and levy a toll on all its inhabitants. Woe be to any stranger who solicits alms in an unappropriated "pale." The "professionals" rule their benefactors with rods of iron, allow no poaching, and live well on the fruits of their industry. Every Biddy Maguire, as already seen, can stipulate as to the quality of her weekly gift of teal!

It must be remembered that begging is in no way considered derogatory in Ireland. Pat Kavanagh, for instance, carries herrings in his hat, yet boasts of descent from the McMurrough Kings of Leinster, and claims affinity with one of the most remarkable statesmen of our time. The late Mr. Kavanagh, of Borris, recognized this relationship in his own inimitable way: "We are nearly related, indeed," he would say, placing a shilling alongside the fish; "we are both descended from one man—Adam."

"Granny the Thimbleman" is a woman, lives in a ditch, and probably never heard of the feminine utensil signalized in her name. She knits woollies for the "quality," and professes to exist on "cold putaties and point." Granny was once offered, by a courageous English visitor, a shilling to wash herself. "Gould" would have been refused coupled with such an "unnatural" condition.

"I've heerd ov' washin' a corpse, but never ov' washin' a live wan," was her remark as she turned indignantly away.

"Cod the Coach" is another beggar. He earned his sobriquet when mail coaches ran on the wide highway. In those days a long coat, blue stockings, and big buckles occasionally took the place of certain tattered, buttonless garments which bundled on the road after the coach. These latter were Cod's stock-in-trade in his youth, were held in place with a crooked pin and a piece of string, and brought much grist to the mill. Alas! With the Meteor passed away Cod's prosperity. Rags are worn on Sundays as well as week days now, and the "bhoy" borrows all he wants, from a donkey to a pin.

He has begged of me tobacco for his pipe, "trimmin's" for his shirt, manure for his potatoes. But the crown of mendicancy has at last been reached. He lately sent in for "the loan of a knife" to cut his corns with! The sight of Cod the Coach seated on an old slack bucket in my coal-hole preparing to act as a chiropodist was too much for me. I gave that ancient man the knife, bidding him never call again. He rewarded me with a picturesque benediction—taking off his old caubeen and holding it reverently in his shaking hands—"May all the sons of God welcome yez when yez yourself comes to the gates of gould—"

I have tried to shorten my weary professional rounds by decorating Brown Bess with a collar of bells. Whenever the sound of them is heard the people are supposed to know the doctor—God bless him!—is "leppin' an' rarein'" in their vicinity. Then bare legged gossoons are despatched to tell of patients whose symptoms they try to diagnose. How would an ordinary practitioner prepare for "tomatoes in the frote," or "Brown Katum on the stomach?" I carry off my car a tin of linseed, for, acquainted with the people's perversion of Queen's English, I know tonsillitis and bronchitis are meant.

More difficult to understand, however, was a case recently put to me. The man—a stalwart farmer—died suddenly without "help of clargy or docthor." I, as coroner, had to inquire into cause of death, etc.

"Conjecture of the lungs and combinations" was surely an abnormal disease and very hard to translate into a natural cause. Yet I gave great offence by "sittin' on the corpse for a divarshun."

Long-continued absence from Ter-na-nog does not eradicate this innate quaintness of expression. Our vicar once went West for a well-earned holiday, and came across an old Connemara parishioner acting as "hired boy" in California. This lad had been bought, along with a shaggy pony, for very few shillings. He was bright and intelligent, and was taken to Canada by an indulgent master.

"So you have left Mr. Dennis, Larry?" said the parson, shaking hands with the young man. "What is he doing nowadays?"

"He's drivin' the mail coach, your reverence."

"Does he run the coach himself?"

"Oh, no, sir! He have got an antidote," was the quick response, and the vicar smiled. For the wrong word in the wrong place transported him back to his own dear native land in a flash. Soon afterwards nuptial tokens with a silver edge came to an Irish home. Larry, of Croone, had himself got an antidote, and was married to a well-to-do, educated woman.

I also was once obliged by ill-health to go abroad. My hair considerably silvered during my absence.

A "bhoy" of eighty—(everybody is a "bhoy" till he marries)—met me soon after my return.

"An' your honor never got married be-yant?" he asked, looking suspiciously at my white poll.

"Never once, Henry! I'll give my word."

Old Henry lifted his arms thankfully.

"And hadn't you great luck, doctor, dear, that you didn't get yourself implicated with a family?" was his cordial comment, as he shook congratulatory hands with me.

A certain man in our district under the Sugar Loaf had (like John Bunyan) a "nice reticence in speech." This occasionally degenerated into a stammer. I have given instances of word perversion. It is only fair to give one showing how Irishmen occasionally use the best words possible in explaining a thing. What better way could Martin's habit of slowly muttering his syllables be expressed than: "It's a quare sort of a way Martin talks. It's as if he took the words out of his mouth and looked at them before he gives them to yez."

One day I paid a visit to "Biddy the Kid," who lives right in the middle of a rocky valley. "The Kid"—whence she got her name I know not—is reported to have a remarkable cure for the "neuralgy." In reply to a question on the subject, she said: "I believe that between myself and God Almighty we cured Ned Doolan last summer." You will perceive that Biddy modestly credited herself with being the primary agent in this action.

After this fashion is medical work made delightful in Ter-na-nog. Continual cheerfulness greatly aids in the battle of life here. "Tis the Will of God" (spelt with a big W and a capital G), whether in the matter of a mountain mist or the virulent murrain. An Irishman looks back at last week's sunshine when this week is cloudy. He terms the soaking rain "a nice, soft day, thank God," and the grievous, preventable sickness a "visitation."—L. Orman Cooper in The Nineteenth Century.

Religion under the Barons of Baltimore. By C. E. Smith, D.D. Baltimore: E. A. Lycett.

The sub title, "A sketch of ecclesiastical affairs from the founding of the Maryland colony in 1634 to the formal establishment of the Church of England in 1692, with special reference to the claim that Maryland was founded by Roman Catholics as the seed plot of religious liberty," is an excellent summary of this book by the rector of St. Michael's and All Angels' church, Baltimore. We set down the following extracts as representing the historical theses (so to speak) that Dr. Smith undertakes to defend:

A careful and impartial inquiry into the origin of the expedition which Leonard Calvert led to Maryland, will show that neither the odium and the disabilities of political ostracism, nor even the rigors of religious persecution, had anything whatever to do with the expedition. Sufferings for conscience sake contributed nothing to the issue either immediately or remotely. Had England been as much a stronghold of the Roman Church as is Spain to-day, the Calvert expedition would have sailed to Maryland.

And again: "Sir George Calvert's appearance as a seventeenth century preacher of religious toleration can only be regarded as a pleasant fiction," as also is the claim that Maryland was "founded as a refuge for men persecuted for conscience sake, and as the seed plot of religious liberty." Dr. Smith fully realizes the difficulty of his task, and has given much time to the study of the origin of Maryland, and has consulted many historical documents and papers, among which he mentions those recently brought to light by the efforts of Maryland Historical Society. In chapter II the rise and fall at the court of James I. of Sir George Calvert is very clearly narrated, and his shifting and religious changes are pointed out. We need not follow in detail Calvert, now Lord Baltimore, in his settlements in Newfoundland and then in Virginia, and his subsequent death, but pass on to the first settling of Maryland. But first we must place before our readers Dr. Smith's estimate of George Calvert: "He was neither sage nor philosopher, pilgrim father nor public benefactor, but politician, merchant, adventurer, whose creed and life alike were no better than the creed and life of many thousands of other Englishmen who lived in his own age."

Shortly after the death of Lord Baltimore, the charter for the new province of Terra Mariae, was issued, with the name of Cecilus substituted for that of the elder baron. Dr. Smith discusses at length a clause of the charter which directs that churches and chapels were "to be dedicated and consecrated according to the ecclesiastical law of England," and contends that the erection of places of public worship, except those of the Church of England, was virtually prohibited, and cites as evidence the fact that the Jesuits who came out with the first settlers built no church at all, and that they had no substantial church edifice until 1661. "Manifestly all understood that the Church of England was to be the Church of the colony, and all public worship was to be in accordance with her standards." Dr. Smith thinks Cecilus Calvert was the very man Maryland needed, as he was a clear-headed man of affairs, and gave his chief attention to business rather than to religion. While not an irreligious man, the second Baron Baltimore was not dominated by strong religious influences, and as far as any public record shows, never contributed anything to the building of a church or schoolhouse in his colony. He must have been a broad man politically and religiously, since he and his colony remained on good terms with Charles I., with Oliver Cromwell, and with Charles II. In fact, he had an eye to the main chance, and lost no time or opportunity of furthering that chance.

Of course all this dispels the halo of glory round the early days of Maryland that Roman Catholics have so carefully fostered, but the truth must be told, at least that is the wish of Dr. Smith. Cecilus Calvert's aim was to induce men to go out to Maryland and settle. The first fruits of his labors in this direction resulted in about three hundred persons offering themselves for transportation to the distant colony. It has been claimed that Roman Catholics flocked to Maryland, but notwithstanding the fact that eighteen months had elapsed since the granting of the charter, and all England canvassed, less than fifty Romanists were found willing to embark. We have this also on the testimony of one of the two Jesuit priests who sailed with the first emigrants. Three-fourths of the voyagers were non-Romanists, hence Lord Baltimore who remained in the mother country, gave strict charges to his deputies, and enjoined them to "cause all acts of Roman Catholic religion to be done as privately as may be, and that they instruct all Roman Catholics to be silent on all occasions of discourse on religion . . . and this to be observed at land as well as at sea."

This is extracted from the Calvert papers, and shows that in the mind of the Lord Proprietary of Maryland, the interests of his religion and his colony were not identical, and that Maryland was not founded as a place of refuge for persecuted Romanists.

It is not our purpose to follow further the history of Maryland, or the religious struggles and intrigues in which the Jesuits took a leading part, not certainly as laboring for peace and religious toleration, but rather as laboring for the contrary purpose. Dr. Smith has undertaken a bold task; viz., to show how purely legendary and baseless is the currently accepted history of the early days of Maryland. We shall await with interest the verdict of the younger school of American historians who are doing so much to write real history, on this contribution to American religious and political history. Whether or not Dr. Smith has entirely proved the whole of his case, at least this much is certain, that Roman Catholics will have to abate very considerably the lofty claims they make for their co-religionists in the early days of the colony of Terra Mariae. Historical documents now in the hands of the historical student render necessary a re-writing of the early history of Maryland. Dr. Smith has made a good beginning in this direction. We commend his book to the attention of the student of American history.

Our Foes at Home. By H. H. Lusk. New York: Doubleday & McClure Company. Price, $1.

This is an earnest discussion of the causes of the widespread social and industrial dissatisfaction in our country, and an attempt to suggest remedies. It is a timely book, for no one can view with equanimity the growing opposition between classes. The author has had legislative experience in dealing with similar problems in another country. Mr. Lusk is an Englishman, and for eleven years was a member of the New Zealand Parliament. Very early in the history of that colony troubles began to arise from the holding of land, the tendency being to concentrate large quantities in corporations and wealthy men for speculative purposes. The reformers determined to meet these difficulties at once, and boldly. The result was the enactment of laws restricting individual ownership to not more than three hundred and twenty acres. Owners of larger quantities were to be so heavily taxed that they would be compelled to sell to the government. To the public ownership of land was added that of railways, telegraph, and telephone lines. It was predicted that these measures would bring financial loss and ruin to the colony. So far, the results have surpassed the expectations of the reformers. Population has increased, the comforts of the people have been multiplied, excellent and cheap service is secured from railways, telegraph, and telephone lines, and the deposits in the savings bank have doubled. Mr. Lusk believes that our troubles are due to the lavish disposal of the public lands, and to the growth of grasping monopolies. Public lands have gotten into the hands of powerful corporations and wealthy individuals who hold them for speculative purposes. And the question of street franchises, etc., is one most prominently before the American public to-day. All these are creating a condition of affairs which is hostile to the idea of the American Republic. The remedy proposed is State ownership, as illustrated by the experience of New Zealand. It is not unknown here, for the postal service is carried on by the general government, and we have municipal ownership of water and light plants. The New Zealand experiment sounds Utopian, but is attractive.

The Ceremonial of the English Church. By the Rev. Vernon Staley. London: A. R. Mowbray & Co. New York: James Pott & Co., Importers.

Like all the author's previous books, "The Catholic Religion," and others, a large amount of valuable information will be found in this little treatise, closely packed and well arranged. The book is divided into three parts, treating, 1, of the Moral Principles of Religious Ceremonial; 2, The Regulation of English Ceremonial, and 3, Ornaments and Ceremonies of the English Church. We have here, in short, a commentary in detail upon the famous Ornaments Rubric in the English Prayer Book, which prescribes the retention and use of "the ornaments of the Church and of the Ministers," which were in use in the Church of England in the second year of King Edward the Sixth, Jan. 28th, 1548, to Jan. 28, 1549. The many vexed questions which arise under this proposition are being warmly controverted in the Church of England now, as they have been at several periods since the days of the early Puritans. Mr. Staley, we need not remind our readers, writes from the standpoint of the Catholic Churchman. The instructive part of his book to many will be the foot-notes which will reveal to them the fact that his interpretation of the Church's law of ceremonial is sustained by so many and such great divines of the English Church, and by such a constant tradition. Some bishop once made the assertion that the Puritan party sadly lacked two things, learning and love. This may sound quite severe; but after all, an impartial review of the long and bitter ceremonial controversy in the Anglican Communion must lead to some such conclusion, for while the Church has always been generous in tolerating the defections and defections of the Puritans from her standard of ceremonial and even of doctrine, they have ever strenuously opposed those Churchmen who faithfully endeavored to conform to that standard.

Mr. Staley's book has one singular mark of present controversy; viz., an absolute silence upon the subject of incense and its ceremonial use. On p. 78, however, he quotes with approval a comment of Bishop Cosin's, written in 1640, to the effect that "those ornaments of the Church (are legal) which by former laws, not then abrogated, were in use by virtue of the statute of 25 Henry VIII., and for them the provincial constitutions are to be consulted, such as have not been repealed, standing then in the second year of King Edward VI., and being still in force by virtue of this rubric and act of Parliament." This would seem to legalize the ceremonial use of incense. But we confess that it takes more ingenuity than that of a Philadelphia lawyer to untangle some of the legal mazes of the Reformation period.

The Mind and Art of Poe's Poetry. By John Phelps Fruit. New York: A. S. Barnes & Co. Price, $1.25.

The author's two-fold aim is to explicate the mind and the art of Poe's poetry. It seems to him worth while to lay stress upon the fact that Poe was not utilitarian; that his supreme pleasure in the beautiful made him indifferent to the theme, caring only for its treatment. Though he declared that poetry was with him "a passion," it is well known that Poe was singularly cool, and even mathematical, in the development of his subject. His method was to choose the effect that he desired to produce; this, in turn, determined the choice of topics, and, finally, its treatment. Poe was a master of verbal artifices. He employed working rules for their use. Not without reason has he been declared a "mixture of poetry and mathematics." The recent revival of interest in Poe makes this volume exceptionally valuable and timely.

The American in Holland. Sentimental Rambles in the Eleven Provinces of the Netherlands. By William Elliott Griffiths, L. H. D. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.50.

It is to be hoped that many Americans will read this book, and be persuaded to ramble in the queer old Dutch country of which the author writes, and learn to love the Dutch country and people for their solid worth. For the average tourist, he says, "the elect route is from Rotterdam to Amsterdam"; but he finds more delightful days in far off places, and his hope is that his fellow-countrymen will discover that in Queen Wilhelmina's realm there are nine other provinces besides the two Hollands. "Yes, even a North, a South, and an East, as well as the narrow strip between the two Dams, of cities by the sea." Dr. Griffiths is a member of the Netherlands Society of Letters, and has represented the American Historical Association in the International Congress of Diplomatic History.

A Young Savage. By Barbara Yechton. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.50.

Anything by this author hardly needs an introduction to young readers, her previous books having established for her a permanent place in their affections. A young girl born and bred in the "wild West" among mining camps comes to live in the home of a gentle and cultured family. She is herself a diamond in the rough, and proves, under the new and refining influences, a jewel of a girl, with a loving heart and a sweet, simple nature, loyal and true.

Pike and Cutliss: Hero Tales of Our Navy. Written and illustrated by George Gibbs. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company.

We never tire of hero tales, and those relating to the wonderful work of our navy are perhaps the most fascinating. The old stories are told here with new instances and illustrations. We have, in addition, some excellent sketches of the more recent work of our navy. The chapter on "The Passing of the Old Navy," with the description of the old ships and the new, is especially interesting, and gives information which is not easily found elsewhere.

The Log of a Sea-Waif: Being Recollections of the First Four Years of My Sea Life. By Frank T. Bullen. With eight illustrations. New York: D. Appleton & Co. Price, $1.50.

From an author who has had high praise from Kipling, the great story-teller, much is expected, and one will not be disappointed in this "Log" of his first four years at sea. He writes from his own observation and experience, and with a skill which few writers have been able to command in descriptions of the sea and of sea life. Being for fifteen years a seafarer to nearly every port and on all the oceans of the world, and with exceptional literary ability and success as a writer, he has produced one of the most intensely interesting books of the year, and has done for British lovers of the sea what our own Dana has done for us in his "Two Years Before the Mast."

The True Estimate of Life and How to Live. By the Rev. G. Campbell Morgan. Chicago and New York: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, 30 cts.

This is a series of addresses delivered by Mr. Morgan at Northfield. They are of the usual order of revivalistic sermons. There are some good and suggestive thoughts. He portrays that form of Christianity which takes no account of the Sacraments. Churchmen will find greater helps for holy living in the sermons and addresses of our leading preachers and writers.

Great Books as Life Teachers. Studies of Character Real and Ideal. By Newell Dwight Hillis. Chicago, New York, Toronto: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, $1.50.

It should be noted by the reader that Dr. Hillis approaches his subject from the view-point of one interested in literature as a help in the religious life, not as a critic of literary problems. There is a finely appreciative chapter on Ruskin, and a study of the principles of character building as illustrated by the "Seven Lamps of Architecture." Other thoughtful and discriminating essays are on George Eliot's "Romola"; Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter"; Victor Hugo's "Les Misérables"; Browning's "Saul"; and Tennyson's "Idylls of the King." Included in the volume are five separate chapters, also studies of character, the subjects being respectively Henry Drummond, Lord Shaftesbury, Frances Willard, Gladstone, and Livingstone. The volume is attractively bound in olive green, with a chaste ornamentation in gold.

How Much is Left of the Old Doctrines? A Book for the People. By Washington Gladden. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.25.

There is in this courageous book an evident desire to preserve the spirit of religion, while at the same time there is also an evident willingness to throw overboard any uncomfortable orthodoxy which might be troublesome to defend. The devil gets a short shrift in one chapter, and is summarily disposed of. The great tenets of the Faith, the dogma of the Trinity, the operation of sacraments, the relation of human sinfulness and its cure, are all treated in a bright, colloquial manner, with many quotations from interesting sources, and the uniform result is to soften down all theological statements into a form or a sentiment which can offend none who would lay claim to any orthodoxy whatever. It is a useful book, as showing exactly that emasculated form of Christianity which a faithful priest of the Church should ever oppose.

Sunbeams and Moonbeams. By Louise R. Baker. New York and Boston: Thomas Y. Crowell & Co. Price, 50 cts.

This is a story of the good times and good deeds that resulted from the formation of two clubs among the girls and boys of Lovetsville. The girls worked during the long vacation days, and the boys on school evenings. The tale is told with much humor and vivacity, and will convince any reader that it is a very good thing indeed to be a "Sunbeam girl" or a "Moonbeam boy."

An Unknown Patriot: a Story of the Secret Service. By Frank Samuel Child. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.50.

One does not doubt that such a book has a certain interest because of the revolutionary epoch in which its scenes are laid, and one would wish that the style of the narration was as animated and intense as the incidents require; but this is not the case. The story is heavy in its relation, with a verbosity supposed to be in keeping with the manners of the period, slow, formal, and stilted. It ought always to be remembered that the narrator of history or historic fiction should be as modern as possible in his descriptions of scenes and characters, using the language of the period only when giving the utterances of those who then lived and spoke. Despite the dullness of style, however, the work has certain attractions. The stirring story of the early days of the Revolution are conscientiously depicted, and the numerous illustrations are charmingly conceived.

My Lady Frivol. By Rosa Nouchette Carey. Illustrated by Bertha Newcombe. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company.

"My Lady Frivol" is aptly named. It is even more justly applicable to the style and substance of the book than to the heroine. The plot is a variation of the old, familiar one, first used by Charlotte Bronte. The grim woman hater changes his nature by the simple process of falling in love with his ward's governess.

Miss Vanity. By Amy E. Blanchard. With illustrations by Bess Goe. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company.

That the writer has studied girls and their ways, may be known by her devotion to them as the subjects of all her stories. As in her previous books, "Two Girls," "Girls Together," and "An Independent Daughter," this new tale has chiefly to do with girls and boys under twenty. The story is pure in tone, and may be safely put into the hands of young girl readers.

THE CRITICISM OF ADMIRAL DEWEY. — The whole episode raises serious questions: First, concerning the wisdom of public men accepting gifts from any source; second, concerning a too common disposition in this country to judge our public men without adequate presentation or study of data; and third, concerning the penalty of undue publicity which fame inevitably brings to those who serve their country well. The word grows that we find as many competent and honorable men as we do to serve us, so vulgar and cruel often are both our adulation and our condemnation, so intense is the limelight of publicity which we cast upon every act and word.

THE QUEEN'S CHRISTMAS GIFT. — It was a gracious idea of the Queen of England, and characteristic of her Christian womanhood, that she should have arranged to give a Christmas present to every soldier on active service for the Empire, a package of chocolate in a case that can be kept as a memento. An hundred thousand Christmas presents in one year is a goodly number, and the choice was a happy one, for soldiers, like all men who take much violent exercise, appreciate sweet things keenly. It is pleasantly suggestive of the season that The London Times should suggest that if there happen to be any "overs," they should be given to the Boer wounded and prisoners as an earnest that England has no wish to make Outlanders of them in her all-embracing empire.

THE MEANING OF CHRISTMAS. — Is there not danger that the spiritual element will drop wholly out of our holidays, that Thanksgiving Day will become dedicated to dinner and football; Christmas to gift giving and social reunions; Easter to flowers and music? But surely this is not all. Each of these days has also its sacred significance: Thanksgiving celebrates the God of nature who giveth us all things richly to enjoy; Christmas, the God incarnate who for us men and our salvation came down to earth, to interpret the heart of the Infinite to us, by showing us the "human life of God"; Easter, the risen Christ, and so the "living God" who ever dwells on the earth, and in his indwelling brings with him the gift of life. . . . The birth of Christ was the advent of the Son of God, and the gift of a new and divine life to the children of men. "We have seen, and bear witness, and declare unto you the life, the eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us." This to the Christian believer is the sacred significance of Christmas. This is the message of the Christmas bells, this the meaning of the Christmas music, this the inspiration of the gift-giving, this the sacred source of all its innocent merrymaking. Let us not forget it.

Dean Howard's Christmas Sermon

BY MARY A. DENISON

IT was Christmas morning.

Two middle-aged people sat in a neatly furnished room. They were very quiet now, but they had been discussing things not often talked about in this humdrum world of ours. For instance, the woman had dreamed a dream, and the man had seen a vision, he called it, and the dream and the vision had been the topic of their conversation.

It was perhaps half-past ten of the preceding night that Eleanor Howard, the dean's wife, was awakened by the violent beating of her heart, caused by a dream in which her only daughter, departed this life six years before, appeared to her, not in angelic garments, but in a very pretty blue merino dress trimmed with brown, a dress in which she had always looked, as the familiar saying is, as sweet as a picture! She stood at the side of the bed, tying the dainty ribbons under her chin in a bow, and pulling them out and patting them into shape, as she had been wont to do in life.

"Are you going out, my dear?" her mother asked, in her dream.

"Yes, mother, presently," was the answer, "but first, I have a little message for father."

"Leave it with me, daughter" was the pleasant reply, while all the time the mother was wondering how her daughter had returned to earth, and full of joy at sight of her.

"Tell father," said the girl, still toying with her bonnet strings, "not to preach the sermon he has written for to-morrow. Say that I request him to look for the sermon he preached the Sunday before I went away. Do you remember the text? I do. 'Herein hath He shown how He loved us.'"

"I'll tell him, my dear," said her mother. "But sit down and talk with me a little while. How did you come here? You have made me so happy! Tell me—" but she was talking to empty space. The beautiful face, the pretty hands that had fingered the blue ribbons so deftly, were all gone, and the full moon shown on the place where the vision had just stood.

Suddenly the woman wakened. Her heart was beating furiously, and she felt a little uneasy about herself and her dream. How like reality it must have been, to fasten itself upon her memory, and to cause her pulses to beat with such rapidity!

Leaving the bed, she went to the window and looked out. Every object was beautifully clear in the moonlight, the long, white roads, the outlying hills, the farms, the broad stretch of the further country.

Still the mysterious vision seemed to follow her. She felt vaguely the influence of her dream. Turning to a table on which lay newspapers and two or three magazines, she lighted the lamp, and sat down by the foot of the bed to read, and so relieve her mind of the strain the dream had put upon it.

The dean still slept on, and as she busied herself with the papers, she noticed that he breathed hard, and presently began to groan. She touched him gently, but he only seemed the more distressed. Finally she shook him out of his stupor. He opened his eyes, gasped, and cried out, "O Jenny, don't go, dear, don't go. Wife, has she gone?"

"Who do you mean, husband?" his wife asked, softly.

"Our Jenny, our little one, grown, as when she left us. She stood here right before me. Oh, I saw her so plainly! She wore that pretty dress, that blue one with the brown ribbons, and she came in tying the strings of her cottage bonnet, and don't you remember her way of patting them into shape? Well, she, was doing that, and she looked so sweet, so natural!"

"Well, what else, father?" his wife asked.

"She told me I must not preach the sermon I wrote yesterday, but the one I preached the week before she left us—'Herein doth he show how He loved us.'"

"Are you sure, dear?" his wife questioned, astonished.

"As sure as that I see you. I will get that sermon early to-morrow. It is in my sermon stand in the December niche for that year. I could lay my hand on it now, but I will wait. Dear child! I am sure it must be for some good purpose. Are they not ministering angels?" he murmured under his breath.

"Father, listen," said his wife; "as you have told me of your vision, as you call it, I will tell you my dream. Jenny came to me, dressed just as you have described, and pulling and patting her bonnet strings in the way she did when here. She told me exactly the same thing she told you, that you were not to preach the sermon you had intended to, but that same text you preached on the week before she left us. That is why I am not in bed. I was not exactly frightened when I waked up, but I felt strangely, so I sat here reading to collect my scattered senses."

"It is certainly remarkable," the dean exclaimed. "Why should she want me to use the old sermon?"

"Heaven knows," was the response, "and sometime we shall know why she came in our dreams. Let us trust in God's promises and rest."

Early in the morning the dean and his wife were talking over the subject, and waiting till breakfast should be served before looking for the sermon. Naturally, the broad glare of daylight had dissipated the shadows thrown over them by their visions, as the dean called them.

"That is a good sermon I have just written, I am conscious of it," said the dean, touching the manuscript that laid on his desk. "It seems to me admirably fit for the occasion. I shall hate to give it up."

"But, my dear, you can preach it some other time," said his wife.

"Yes, true, but then doesn't it seem like yielding to superstition? Now if—"

"You will surely do as the child requested, John," his wife said in quick alarm. "Remember she came to us both, delivered the same message to both of us."

"Yes, yes," he said hesitatingly. "But we are so curiously constituted, we poor humans, and dreams are but dreams. If I could but know why she wished me to deliver the old sermon, when my new one is so much better. However," he added quickly, "though the idea seems born of superstition, I'll get the old sermon and preach it, so be easy on that score."

The breakfast table, set with shining silver and spotless glass and china, stood near the window, where the dean and his wife looked out upon a beautiful blending of garden, field, and hill. Presently Mrs. Forster who served as housekeeper, and who had been with them in that capacity for over a score of years, came in with the coffee.

She was a middle-aged woman, slight of figure and neatly dressed, but her face wore a look of care, as if some unbearable sorrow had eaten into her heart. She exchanged salutations with the rector and his wife, and placed the chairs at the table, then asked to be excused and went out of the room.

"Poor soul," said the dean's wife, "she seems to feel so badly over her niece. She says the girl is sick again."

"I wish she would confess and have done with it," said the dean. I should feel differently, even towards poor Becky, who I know in her heart thinks the girl is guilty; but such resolute stubbornness for so many years repels me. She won't tell even her mother how she came by all that finery. She must have seen that people would draw their own conclusions. However, that's an old subject and a sore one. We won't think of it in this season of rejoicing. To-day is Christmas, and I am glad whenever it comes on Sunday. It is emphatically a Church day, a celebration to gladden the soul. After I am through with my other duties, I will get the old sermon and look it over. I can at least do that, though, understand, there is no superstition about it. I suppose it is but natural, being so in sympathy as we are, that we should both dream the same dream. It has occurred before, I think, has it not?"

"Once or twice," his wife responded, smiling.

Mrs. Forster and Molly—an under servant—had cleared the breakfast table and set the room to rights, when there came a telegram for the housekeeper. She put in an appearance a few moments later, her cheeks alternately paling and flushing.

"Letty seems sinking," she said, her voice faltering. "Mrs. Davies, the woman she is staying with, sends word that I had better come at once."

"Oh, I'm so sorry," said the dean's wife, "I hope she's not really worse. I think you said she always had nervous spells."

"Yes," the woman said, pinching her apron unconsciously, "but there's danger in 'em now, leastwise the doctor says so," she added in a trembling voice.

"Dear, dear," said the dean, looking up from his Church paper. "Go, of course. Mary"—alluding to the under servant—"can do very well alone for a day," and his voice, after the manner of deans and men who have seen little but prosperity all their lives, had a touch of mingled authority and patronage in it. "Don't hurry back, if there's any danger. I do hope it won't be a black Christmas to the poor woman," he further said in a lower voice, as Becky turned away, "and if the poor child doesn't confess now, well I shall be very much surprised. In my private opinion that's what she wants to see Becky for."

"Poor little Letitia, I always liked the child," the dean's wife said, musingly, moving in her own graceful way toward the window. I never could quite believe her guilty."

"And I as absolutely believe that she was," the dean responded, in the please-don't-contradict-me style which the man of decided will sometimes assumes, whether he be dean or doctor, and the dean's leaning was oward austerity. "Where did she get her finery all at once? And then remember that her antecedents were unfortunate. Her father was a profligate—her mother seemed a good enough woman, but the man deserted her. But let us talk of pleasanter things; pray, pray, at this festival time, let us dismiss the unhappy subject. It makes me decidedly uncomfortable. Suppose Becky doesn't come back, what are you going to do?"

"Oh, I can get along," and she laughed—a musical little laugh it was, and carried the dean back a good many Christmas days, for it was on a Christmas Day he first met her, and was captivated by her sweet voice. "You don't remember," she went on, "the old happy days when I did my own work. But everything is prepared, the plum-pudding baked, and the turkey ready to go in the oven. Molly can get along without any help from me. She never grumbles over a little extra work."

"All right," was the dean's reply, "and now I'm going to get that sermon. But, my dear, you have not the least idea how much better the new one is. I felt quite proud of it when I had finished."

"Oh, dean!" said his wife with an expressive little gesture.

"It was purely spiritual pride," said the dean hastily.

"That's worse than any other," his wife responded.

"Well, perhaps it is," was his rejoinder. But I'll tell you what I will do. I'll read them both to you, there's plenty of time, and you shall judge."

"A good idea," his wife said, as she took up the paper. "I shall listen with pleasure."

A few moments after the dean was reconnoitering the square, book-like folios that lay each in its appointed place for every month's installment, and the manuscript in his hand, went up to his wife's room.

"It looks fresh, yet," he said, laying it on the table to pull out his spectacles, "but—"

His hand was arrested by an exclamation from his wife.

"What's this?" she asked, "some notes, I suppose," and she pulled at a paper, started, stepped back, held the paper before the dean's eyes with a look untranslatable, and there it was, the missing Bank of England note for fifty pounds—that had been hidden for six years; and looking as fresh and innocent as if its vanishment had had nothing to do with human happiness, or threatened even human life.

"Oh John!" his wife cried out in a muffled voice, and it sounded very much like a sob—"and perhaps that poor girl is dying—you wanted her to confess!"

The dean stood like one stupified. His face had changed to the pallor of death. "I cannot believe my eyes," he said.

"But there it is, and it was in your study while you were writing that sermon an English gentleman gave you that note for the Church hospital—don't you remember? You came in and told me. Oh John," she went on tearfully, "that poor girl was innocent! That's the reason my heart has so pleaded for her. Only think, she may be dying. She lost everything, her character, her lover, her place, her health—and here is the note. Oh what shall we do? She may be dead, John."

"She may, she may," said the dean bewilderedly. "My dear wife, I don't know what to do. The services must go on; it is impossible for me to neglect them; and what is done must be done quickly. I—I am humiliated, distressed beyond measure. How shall I ever get through the day? What steps shall I take? I shall not enjoy one moment of Christmas till I know—" he choked a little. "God grant the child may live—to—to forgive me for my hasty judgment."

There was silence for a moment, then his wife spoke up.

"I know what to do," she said, "and beyond a slight tremor of voice and manner, she was quite calm. "I will go at once to the city and see the poor child myself. It may be God will spare her—at least till—till," her voice broke, "till she knows we have found the note."

"That is best," her husband said, "you are so quick to get at things. Perhaps you'll be back in time to hear the sermon—the new one, you know. The purpose for which this one is found is served. I don't think daughter would insist upon my preaching the old one."

"Oh, John, dear," his wife said, "she distinctly told the text and wished you to preach from it—don't you remember?"

"Well, well—perhaps it will be best. I can at least get in a few thoughts from the new sermon appropriate to the occasion"; and the wife went up stairs and left him poring over the manuscript.

Suddenly his brow cleared; he had found it appropriate.

The congregation, the staid old vestrymen, and the wardens, all wondered at the dean's sermon that day, at the graciousness of his manner, the fervor of love which seemed to dominate his speech, and when at the close of his sermon he said: "I wish my people who are all acquainted with the facts of the case, to know that this morning, on this blessed Christmas Day, I found the fifty pound note that was lost six years ago, folded in the old sermon to which you have just listened, thus proving the innocence of a young, Christian girl who was brought up in the Church, and was wrongly suspected, and consigned to the not too tender charity of this congregation and the world. I herewith publicly ask pardon of my God and of this church, that, although there seemed sufficient proof of her guilt, I made no effort to shield her reputation, as I now feel I should have done as a minister of Christ; but because she would not confess, cast her off as a pariah. This blessed day of the Church and the Christ, I hope, if she be living, to atone to her for all she has gone through, and to treat her as the lamb of the Church who has innocently suffered. I do this as I hope to receive mercy from God," astonishment, wonder, every shade of surprise, appeared in the faces of the congregation.

Away back in a pew near the wall, a strong, rather handsome-featured young man sat and listened in pained bewilderment. Then his massive frame shook, and involuntarily he bowed his head, hiding his face in his hands. The love that he had so long kept in leash burst forth and surged over his heart with a power like the rush of many waters. He, too, felt a humiliation too deep for words. Though he had loved her as his life, in conscious superiority, feeling himself a man proud of inherent honesty, he had turned away from the girl whose life was bound up in him, and set himself to tear her image from his memory. But he had not succeeded. Now, added to his self-abasement, was the fear that she, in her new found liberty from a cruel bondage, would never forgive him, and a deep, strong sob sounded in the strained ears of the congregation. He could not bear the listening silence, he could not bear the weight of his own misery, and with flushed face and tear-stained cheeks, he sought the door nearest to his pew, and went out almost broken-hearted.

It was a strange Christmas day's experience. Men discussed the matter with the turkey and cranberry sauce; women felt their hearts glow and were glad; even the little children talked it over.

The dean went silently, almost reluctantly, home. His Christmas dinner might possibly be eaten with bitter herbs, certainly with bitter remembrances. He felt as he had never felt before the beauty of Christ's tenderness towards the erring. He had never seemed to himself so humbled, so resentful towards his own shortcomings. Had it been unyielding integrity, the pride of the flesh, or the justice of Holy Church that had animated him in the case of this poor girl?

"I fear," he murmured to himself, "it was the world, the flesh, and the devil," and then he shuddered as he thought, "how near we all are to the evil that works, not by force, but by suspicion, insinuation, and self-righteousness, to wreck the souls of men."

Arrived at the rectory, he found his wife standing at the door, smiling and important.

"Well, my dear, what of the sermon?" she asked.

"Oh—er, the sermon, why I haven't thought of it," he said, a little confusion visible in voice and manner. "Other things drove it clean out of my mind after it was delivered. The fact is, I never thought so little of sermon and self as I did this morning. And I am sure nothing serious has happened, or you would not be looking so happy."

"On the contrary, when the poor child knew that we could prove her innocence, new life seemed to come to her, and it was wonderful what a change happened. She had just been telling her mother what she believed was a dying confession, that her father gave her the finery she had, and extorted a promise from her that she would never tell. He met her in some way and overcame her scruples; besides, she loved him, poor child, and she was faithful to her word, as you and I taught her to be. In less than an hour she was able to be dressed, and I brought her home with me, weak as she was, to spend Christmas. Come in and assure her of your faith in her, for she is longing to see you. Two happier people than she and Aunt Becky I never saw. It is indeed a wonderful Christmas day."

And so the dean acknowledged when later a few friends came in to pay their respects to him. Among them was a tall, sun-burned young fellow, who looked as if the weight of the world had bowed his shoulders, but when he saw the sudden lighting of a pair of sweet blue eyes, the quick flush of two pallid cheeks, and the outstretched hands that expressed a child's eagerness, the burden rolled off, never to make him sorry or ashamed again.

And the dean, after repeating for the twentieth time that he never should know how the note got into his sermon, as he laid his head on the pillow that night, his eyes seeking the pictured face of the woman-child he had lost six years before, confessed that he never, in all his life, had enjoyed a happier Christmas.

The Sleep of Children

"Not so much noise, my lords. Sweet prince, sleep low; the king, your father, is disposed to sleep."

LIFE must have neared its goal, the busy years must have taught their strong lessons, before we can realize what sleep means, in the estimate of the great factors which make the sum of human existence. Perhaps the young woman first learns to recognize the beneficence of its ministry when an ill child, tortured and tossing in the pain which it is so desperately hard to watch, closes its gentle lids, relaxes its round limbs, and breathing softly, sleeps at last.

There is a picture of Sasso Ferrato's in the Louvre, called "The Sleeping Jesus," in which we see the utter abandon of lovely infancy in dreamless sleep upon a mother's breast. The painting is so delightfully real that it seems as if no hand but a woman's could have painted it, no eyes but those of a mother could have been so familiar with each tender detail. Maternal solicitude seems necessary to such knowledge of childhood. Two reverent cherub faces look down with affectionate tenderness at the miracle of unconscious repose in love's safe guardianship, so freshly wonderful each time that sleep calls the spirit to lose its hold on earth. We stand in affrighted awe before that long, long sleep when life's end closes the eyes, yet count it nothing when a weary brain ceases to retain its connection with its surroundings, and aching lids shut out the world, and a man is lost to life in a deep slumber, about which science peers and babbles in vain. Yet when sorrow and long nights of anxious watchfulness have taught a loving heart to ache with desire to see a sufferer forget pain in sleep which will not come, then comes also the true understanding of the value of the mystery we cannot solve.

To young children sleep seems to be as useful as food, to be in some sort a sustenance as well as a conservor of strength. They absolutely seem to grow in those long hours of motionless slumber, out of which they wake to stretch their dimpled arms and smile. Irrksome as the restraint seems to the noisy and thoughtless youngsters of the household, yet it is little less than a sin to let any disturbing, startling noise awake an infant suddenly. But it is also quite possible to accustom a healthful baby to be undisturbed by the ordinary sounds of daily life so as to be entirely unconscious of them.

With a reasonable effort to choose the least noisy place for the sleeper, and the least disturbing spot for the piano, there ought to be no reason why the evening is curtailed of its usual delightful music. Baby will learn that the distant sweet sounds are part of its lullaby. All the nursery rights can be maintained without tyrannizing over the rest of the family. There is always a way possible to this, as to the other essential requirements of family life, if we manage to think of both sides of the question. The trouble lies in being able to think of but one duty at a time, and so of sacrificing the parlor to the nursery.

Much of the difficulty which is so frequent a trial in every family of young children, the insuring of a quick, sound sleep after bedtime comes, lies far away from the sleeping chamber. We have but to apply our own grown-up experiences to the study of our little ones' necessities, to find ample reason why these restless, trying hours which tax mothers and nurses, and weary the child, so frequently follow the apparently cheerful going to bed. An exciting conversation, a very thrilling story, exercise which has set every nerve tingling and roused every perception, never fails to keep us awake yet when baby has been tossed in her father's strong arms until she screams with delight, or after little Tom has heard a good-night story about lion hunting, we are puzzled why they lie awake until nine o'clock.

After the early, light supper, about which all doctors agree, nothing should excite nervous interest or rouse attention to an earnest point. The sleeping room for all human beings, old and young, should be cool, and at most, very faintly lighted; the theory of total darkness does not always prove best for highly sensitive, nervous temperaments. I have known a grown person, able to express her feelings, complain that she got "so tired trying to see." To children, the impenetrable blackness is often a fertile source of dreadful fancies. The uncertain yet generally sufficient light which comes from an uncurtained window is really the most satisfying and restful illumination, but this is often impossible for reasons of one sort and another, and then a shaded taper is the least exciting, as well as the least deleterious, source of light which we can have. I think that children or feeble old people should always be able to tell whether "the shadow on the wall really moves," or to discern what looks so large in the far corner. The early awakening caused by the entrance of outdoor light is very troublesome sometimes; nature is hard to accommodate to our artificial lives. The primeval purpose that man should sleep under night's veil, and rise with the coming of the sun, is a wofully archaic theory in our days.

And when the child goes in suitable condition, digestion not overtaken, brain unexcited, into this fresh and dimly lighted room, where the outer air is quietly and steadily admitted, moral control should next take up the task of fitting him to enjoy it. Not for any reason except real illness should he be allowed to expect further attendance; no singing, no reading, no rocking, no one to sit in the same room. That he should realize that help is near in case of need, is only a tender concession which we would be slow to deny; to lie awake afraid and imagining things is torture. In the case of specially nervous children, where the system is not in a normal state, it is even wise to go into the room apparently for other purposes, that he may feel that he is remembered, but to have any process which is called "putting a child to sleep," or that permits the sacrifice of a grown person's time and pleasure, by sitting in the darkness unable to sew or read, or to give up hours to some contrivance which takes the place of the firm conviction, on the child's part, that bed is a place in which to go to sleep, and that he is to consider it his duty to close his eyes and be done with amusement, is to injure the health and to weaken character.

Being afraid to be alone, in natural surroundings with which there exist no evil memories, is the result of some error in training. It surely is possible to teach a child really to love his little bed, to be happy in going to rest, and to have sweet thoughts of repose allied to laying his head upon his pillow.—N. Y. Evening Post.

Slips of the Tongue

TO few of us is it given never to make a slip of the tongue. On the contrary, most people have some unpleasant memory or other of some dreadful mistake they have fallen into, and even although years may have been passed since the fatal moment when their lips betrayed them, they are still unable to recall the circumstances without again experiencing the agony and their cheeks displaying the blush which followed upon the first discovery of the slip. Take a few examples to illustrate what we have advanced. It was but a very small and even insignificant change of a letter which rather spoiled the impressive eloquence of a preacher who, warning his audience against idolatry, in place of "Bow not thy knee to an idol," made a false step, and said, "Bow not thine eye to a needle." In the same way the young clergyman, with the correct Oxford pronunciation, in giving the hymn, "Conquering Kings," merely stumbled over the first vowel, but being unable to save himself, was hurried over the precipice, and startled his congregation with the announcement, "The hymn to-night will be 'Kinquering Congs, Kinquering Congs.'" Much the same was the pitfall into which a reverend gentleman walked when, in place of saying, "Behold the fig tree, how it withereth away," by a simple transposition of two letters, he asked his audience to "Behold the wig tree, how it fithereth away."

The best of all the many instances of slips of this kind is perhaps the classical instance of the preacher who, describing conscience, and desiring to get his listeners to recognize the promptings of its inward voice in the half-formed wishes of the mind, appealed to them whether there was one there who at one time or other "had not felt within him the effect of a half-warmed fish." After this the instance of the parson who, devoutly reading the lesson in solemn tones, announced, "He spake the word and cattleshoppers came and grasspillars innumerable," seems almost commonplace. So, too, does the mistake of the priest who assured his congregation the other day that "it was easier for a rich man to pass through the eye of a needle than for a camel to enter the kingdom of God."—London Tablet.

Virginia's Air Castle

A SEQUEL TO "THE GIRLS OF ST. DOROTHY"

BY IZOLA L. FORRESTER

(All rights reserved)

CHAPTER IX.

FOR a few days Bonnie Castle was forgotten entirely under the new excitement. Mrs. Ferrall said in the letter that she would be home the first week in May, and although Virginia pleaded hard to have her own way in the matter and keep Madge and Tony with her, their hearts were with the little green house, and finally it was decided to make it as pretty as possible for the arrival of the little mother.

Mollie insisted upon joining in the work of cleaning up, and she and Madge donned old dresses and big aprons, and went to work with a will, while Virginia moved to and fro on her crutches through the rooms, putting a picture here, or a bow of ribbon there, until the place was quite transformed.

Such a scrubbing and cleaning of floors and paint, and such fussing over how she would like this, that, or the other, and finally, the very day she came, they all, Excelsiors and the S. D. S. girls, tramped off for a May-day picnic in the woods along the bay shore, and came home laden with wonderful spoils of forest treasures.

There were great loose clusters of violets tucked in every possible nook about the house, and narcissus nodding its starry blossoms on the dining-table. The boys brought whole branches of wild cherry blossoms to stand in odd corners, or cross over the tops of pictures on the wall. And besides these, there were all manner of dainty little spring flowers, and saucy Jack-in-the-pulpits, or Johnny Jump-ups, as Bobbie called them. It was a veritable triumphal progress home that afternoon over the bridge and on to the little house, and when all had gone save Virginia and Mrs. Hardy, the table was set with a delicious supper, and Tony and Madge drove alone to the depot to meet their mother.

It was just sunset. They walked up and down the platform, waiting for the bit of smoke to curl up over the trees beyond the bend of the track, which should announce the coming of the train.

Madge was happy, gloriously happy. She felt as if she could have taken Tony's hand and raced down the track on a full run to meet the train half way, so slow it was in coming. Tony whistled gaily. His hands were deep in his pockets, and his face full of gladness. But they did not say much to each other; only walked back and forth with one eye on the track's far-off narrow perspective, and the other on the clock in the telegraph office, until the red glow faded from the distant pine-crested hills, and at last, far, far off, like a strange, new bird call, came the whistle of the engine.

"Stand where she'll see us the first thing," Madge said excitedly, as the long, slim, dark line of cars hove in view, and glided towards the station. "And—and Tony, dear, don't squeeze her too tight, because she may be tired."

Two pair of eager, anxious brown eyes watched the cars when the train drew up at the platform, and all at once Madge gave a quick, glad cry, and was off like a flash to where the conductor was helping a little slender lady in black off the car.

"Can—can we squeeze you, mumsie?" Tony asked anxiously, when his turn came, and Mrs. Ferrall laughed as she laid her hand lovingly on the curly, boyish head.

"Indeed you can, my brownies, just as much as you want to. I've come back well and strong after all."

There was so much to tell when they drove back home behind the cream colored ponies, that it did not seem any time at all before the old familiar turn of the road came in view, and there was the long railroad bridge, and the little green house nestled down by the river bank.

"You left a light burning, Madge," said Mrs. Ferrall, at sight of the cheery gleam from the windows, and Madge only laughed, and reached up for the ninety-ninth time to kiss the dear face so near her own.

Then came the surprise when the door was flung wide open, and Virginia and Mrs. Hardy stood on the threshold waiting to welcome her home.

"But we're not going to stay," Virginia said, when the greetings were over. "I only thought it would be nice to have the house all lit up, and the supper ready, when you came. Good-night. Don't love her to death, Madge."

Madge laughed happily as she ran out to the gate with them, and watched the ponies start for home; then back again to the old kitchen, and there on the sofa was her mother, lying in the same old way, with Tony beside her on the floor, his head leaning on her arm.

"Just a little tired, dear," Mrs. Ferrall said, when Madge bent over her with anxious solicitude. And so the little green house became home once more, and this time there was no shadow to darken its happiness.

Virginia missed her friend and comrade more than she could tell. The nest was lonely and desolate nowadays. She missed the long talks and daily companionship. The books seemed like keys of a piano which had no player, and it was queer to go to sleep at night without that last glimpse of a white-robed form at the bedside, the good-night kiss, and two brown eyes smiling back at one as the door closed.

The ponies, Lad and Lassie, had not received such active and constant exercise for many a day as now fell to their lot.

"Off again, daughter?" Mr. Hardy would say when he saw her come down stairs ready for a drive. "Don't tire yourself."

"It's so lonesome up-stairs, papa," Virginia would reply, wistfully. "I miss Madge and Tony more every day, and I can't stay all alone. I get the blues and cry, and everything."

"Dear, dear, what about," he asked teasingly, taking her face in his hands, as he

Nourishment or Food

Are you sure that your baby is getting enough nourishment? We do not say food because a baby may get lots of food but get little nourishment. Mellin's Food is nourishment. It contains the elements of nutrition that a baby needs in order to satisfy his hunger and make him grow and attain that complete development, which is so much desired by every mother. Mellin's Food babies are healthy babies, and well developed babies.

Mellin's Food

Our little boy, George Frederick Wilham Critchley, was such a frail and sickly baby that we despaired of his life. Nothing seemed to nourish him and he did not grow or thrive at all. We commenced feeding him with Mellin's Food and his improvement was immediate and continuous. At 6 months he weighed 24 pounds and is as healthy a child now as need be. loved to do, and raising it up to look into her eyes.

"Just the same—Dick," she said, almost in a whisper, and the smile would fade from his face, leaving it stern and sad, and she would slip away with an ache in her heart, and her blue eyes full of tears, and the ponies would take their own time on the way to the green house.

But as the days passed, and June came in all her sweetness of bud and blossom, preparations at Bonnie Castle were started in good earnest, and the editorial staff of The Comet were kept busy reporting the important daily occurrences and sessions of the clubs. Even the closing of school, with all its attendant excitement, could not compare with the grand opening of the summer home. Mrs. Hardy and Mrs. Ferrall had a long talk together, and the result was a visit to the bay shore road. After that it was officially announced in The Comet that the directress of Bonnie Castle would be; "The beloved mother of our esteemed fellow-clubbers, Madge and Tony Ferrall, assisted by our valued friend, Miss Eunice Pugsley, whose knowledge of the delicate mysteries of the culinary art has been tried most satisfactorily by the editorial staff of THE COMET (especially doughnuts). It is also understood that Miss Pugsley's famous and sagacious bird, Benjamin Franklin, will keep her company in her summer home."

Dr. Atwood had been written to again, and July 1st set as the day for the opening of Bonnie Castle. School closed the 26th of June, and the night of the 28th, Mrs. Ferrall, with Eleanor and Dave, as the two eldest members, took the steamer "Majestic" for Chicago, and crossed the lake to bring home the first ten waifs, while the Excelsiors and S. D. S. girls gathered in full force at the Castle to meet them.

Master of Himself

A MERCHANT needed a boy and put the following sign in his window: "Boy Wanted.—Wages, $4 a week; $6 to the right one. The boy must be master of himself."

Many parents had sons who were interested, but the latter part of the notice puzzled them. They had never thought of teaching their boys to be masters of themselves. However, many sent their sons to the merchant to apply for the situation. As each boy applied, the merchant asked him, "Can you read?"

"Yes," was the frank reply.

"Can you read this?" asked the merchant, pointing out a certain passage in the paper:

"Yes, sir."

"Will you read it to me steadily and without a break?"

"Yes, sir."

The merchant then took the boy into a back room, where all was quiet, and shut the door. Giving the boy the paper, he reminded him of his promise to read the passage through steadily without a break, and commanded him to read. The boy took the paper and bravely started. While he was reading the merchant opened a basket, in which were a number of lively little puppies, and tumbled them around the boy's feet. The temptation to turn and see the puppies and note what they were doing was too strong, the boy looked away from his reading, blundered, and was at once dismissed.

Boy after boy underwent the same treatment, till seventy-six were thus tried and proved failures to master themselves. At last one was found who, in spite of the puppies playing around his feet, read the passage through as he had promised. When he had finished the merchant was delighted and asked him, "did you see the puppies that were playing around your feet while you were reading?"

"No Sir."

"Did you know that they were there?"

"Yes, Sir."

"Why did you not look to see what they were doing?"

"I couldn't, sir, while I was reading what I said I would."

"Do you always do what you say you will?"

"Yes sir, I try to."

"You are the boy I want," said the merchant enthusiastically. "Come tomorrow. Your wages will start at six dollars, with good prospects of increase." — Reformed Church Messenger.

The Lion Hunting With Other Beasts

A LION, a heifer, a goat, and a sheep once agreed to share whatever each might catch in hunting. A fine fat stag fell into a snare set by the goat who thereupon called the rest together. The lion divided the stag into four parts. Taking the best piece himself, he said: "This is mine, of course, as I am the lion"; taking another portion, he added: "This is mine by right—the right, if you must know, of the strongest." Further, putting aside the third piece, "That's for the most valiant," said he; "and as for the remaining part, touch it if you dare."

ROSY COLOR

Produced by Postum Food Coffee.

"When a person rises from each meal with a ringing in the ears and a general sense of nervousness, it is a common habit to charge it to a deranged stomach.

"I found it was caused from drinking coffee, which I never suspected for a long time, but found by leaving off coffee that the disagreeable feelings went away.

"I was brought to think of the subject by getting some Postum Food Coffee, and this brought me out of the trouble.

"It is a most appetizing and invigorating beverage, and has been of such great benefit to me that I naturally speak of it from time to time as opportunity offers.

"A lady friend complained to me that she had tried Postum, but it did not taste good. In reply to my question, she said she guessed she boiled it about ten minutes. I advised her to follow directions and know that she boiled it fifteen or twenty minutes, and she would have something worth talking about: A short time ago I heard one of the children say that they were drinking Postum now-a-days, so I judge she succeeded in making it good, which is by no means a difficult task.

"Tom O'Brien, the son of a friend who lives on Bridge St., was formerly a pale lad, but since he has been drinking Postum has a fine color. There is plenty of evidence that Postum actually does 'make red blood,' as the famous trade-mark says." Jno. Chambers, 9 Franklin St., Dayton, Ohio.

HEART DISEASE

Some Facts Regarding the Rapid Increase of Heart Trouble.

Heart trouble, at least among the Americans, is certainly increasing, and while this may be largely due to the excitement and worry of American business life, it is more often the result of weak stomachs, of poor digestion.

Real organic disease is incurable; but not one case in a hundred of heart trouble is organic.

The close relation between heart trouble and poor digestion is because both organs are controlled by the same great nerves, the Sympathetic and Pneumogastric.

In another way, also, the heart is affected by the form of poor digestion which causes gas and fermentation from half-digested food. There is a feeling of oppression and heaviness in the chest, caused by pressure of the distended stomach on the heart and lungs, interfering with their action; hence arises palpitation and short breath.

Poor digestion also poisons the blood, making it thin and watery, which irritates and weakens the heart.

The most sensible treatment for heart trouble is to improve the digestion and to insure the prompt assimilation of food.

This can be done by the regular use after meals of some safe, pleasant, and effective digestive preparation, like Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, which may be found at most drug stores, and which contain valuable, harmless, digestive elements in a pleasant, convenient form.

It is safe to say that the regular, persistent use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at meal time will cure any form of stomach trouble except cancer of the stomach.

Full-sized package of these tablets sold by druggists at 50 cents. Little book on stomach troubles mailed free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

Helpful Suggestions

Stairs may prove a blessing instead of a detriment, if women will learn how to go up and down them without fatigue. The majority of persons, especially women, climb the stairs. To avoid the difficulty and reap the benefits, do this: Incline the body forward, but do not bend at the waist-line. Do not stoop. Keep the chest raised and fixed. Ascend as it were from the chest, and no matter what may be your weight, your touch of the foot on the step will be as light as that of a child. Touch only the ball of the foot on the step. Close the mouth and keep it closed when ascending the stairs and until the breathing is quite normal. Every inhalation should be felt at the waste line. In going down stairs, keep the body perfectly erect; touch only the ball of the foot to the step, yielding at the knee.—Ladies' Home Journal.

A WORD of caution is in order regarding the use of Canton flannel and outing cloth. Both make warm and serviceable sleeping garments and wrappers for persons of all ages, yet they need to be handled with care. Whether the danger comes altogether from the light, downy surface, or whether, in addition, some chemical is used in finishing them, it is a lamentable fact that these goods are exceedingly inflammable.
Touch a match to a small piece of either, and you will see the fire run over the surface with inconceivable rapidity. On a small bit it is easily extinguished, but when once the flame has gained headway, there would be little help for the victim. Within a few weeks three cases have come to my knowledge, where as many women, by presence of mind alone, have saved themselves from terrible catastrophes. Once, the head of a match flew off and caused the fire.
A second time, and the person, wearing a wrapper of outing flannel, reached her arm over a lamp chimney, while a third approached too closely to a stove. Each time the burning garment was torn from the person in time to save life. Children and adults, too, if venturing near a fire when clad in cotton of any kind, stand in great hazard.—Good Housekeeping.

VELVETEEN is a boon and blessing to mothers.
It has always been known as a serviceable, long-wearing fabric, and now we learn (from The Weekly Scotsman) how to wash it. Make a lather of soap and water (as hot as for colored flannels), dip the velveteen up and down in the lather a short time, repeat the process two or three times with fresh lathers, and then rinse through warm water without soap. Hang out on the line (without wringing) to dry, and while still damp, iron in the following way: Let some one hold one end of the material, while with the left hand you hold the other end, right side uppermost. Take a hot iron in your right hand, and run it quickly along the wrong side of the velveteen. The steam sets up the pile beautiful y, and makes the material quite like new.
